In 1869 Mr. Lyon was married to Lavinia Bucher, a native of Pennsylvania, and to them have been born nine children: James F., married Marie Gambert, and is employed in the surveyor-general's office at Sacramento; Rosa, who lives at Manhattan, Kans., became the wife of A. B. Heddington, and has a family of four children; Molly V. became the wife of Frank May, by whom she had five children, and at the age of twenty-nine years was accidentally burned to death; John C., a carpenter by trade, married Mamie Hill, and they with their two children live in Los Angeles; Edward H., a motorman in Stockton, chose as his wife Vera McClain; Lloyd O. is a barber in Eureka; Roy is a conductor on a street railroad in Sacramento; Arthur and Glayds complete the family. Mr. Lyon is a prominent member of Colonel Harper Post No. 126, G. A. R., at Arroyo Grande, in which he occupies the office of quartermaster, and of which he has served as commander for four years. Mrs. Lyon was president of the Woman's Relief Corps of the same name for two terms and also served as department aid. Mr. Lyon is also a member of the Central California Veterans' Association, holding the office of commander in that organization. In politics he is an ardent Republican and at one time served his party as delegate to the Republican State Convention, doing valuable work in that capacity. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JOHN MAC GILLIVRAY. Representatives of almost every country in the world by their citizenship in California give to the state a cosmopolitan variety blended in an harmonious element of loyalty and devotion to their adopted land. Not the least conspicuous among the rugged characters that have brought strength to the citizenship may be mentioned the Scotch residents with their energy, thrift and irreproachable integrity, and John MacGillivray is one of the men possessing the attributes eminently characteristic of the Scotch the world around. When he came to the Pacific coast in early manhood he settled in Santa Barbara county and now superintends seven thousand acres in Los Alamos valley. Of his large ranch five hundred acres are sown in grain, while the balance furnishes abundant pasturage for the eight hundred head of stock cattle kept on the farm as well as for the horses raised for the market.

Born in the north of Scotland September 23, 1859, John MacGillivray is a son of a Scotch farmer bearing the same name as himself. Both the father and mother were natives of Scotland and never left that country, where the former died at seventy-three years and the latter at sixty-five years. They were the parents of six children, of whom John was the fifth in order of birth. When a boy he attended the schools of Scotland and early was trained to make himself useful in the world by developing habits of perseverance and industry. At the age of twenty years he left the home farm and crossed the ocean to Canada. A year later he removed from that country to Pennsylvania, where he was employed in the oil business about twelve months. During 1880 he came to California and settled in Santa Barbara county, where he secured employment on the Laguna ranch under Dr. Shaw, remaining in the same place for six years. From that position he came to his present farm as manager for John Wigmore & Sons, and about 1894 he started out independently, since which time he has carried forward large agricultural undertakings with a fair degree of success.

Reared in the faith of the Presbyterian Church and trained in its creed, Mr. MacGillivray always has been devoted to its interests. Since becoming a voting citizen of the United States he has supported the Republican party, but at no time has he been a candidate for official honors. In fraternal connections he holds membership with the Knights of Pythias and the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Los Alamos. With his wife, who was Serena Voogt, a native of Ohio, and whom he married January 3, 1901, he holds a high place in the esteem of the people of his locality and is favorably known among those who give character and integrity the highest value in the citizenship of the county. Prior to his present marriage he had been married to Miss Annie F. Henderson, who was born in Scotland November, 1868, and died in California, March, 1897, leaving three children, Maryetta Ann, Barbara M. and John F., all now living in Los Alamos, Santa Barbara county. During the year 1906, Mr. MacGillivray purchased seven hundred acres at Los Olivos, called the Glen Olivos ranch, where he intends to build a residence and make his home.

FRANK JAMES MARTIN. Early records concerning the Martin family disclose the fact that ancestors for several generations flourished in the Quaker state, the name being especially well known in Jersey Shore, Lycoming county, where the grandfather, James Martin, closed a long and active career. There too occurred the birth of his son, Richard Martin, a saddler by trade, who in young manhood removed to what was then considered the frontier, settling in Rising Sun, Ohio county, Ind. There as in Pennsylvania the name was destined to come into prominence through the large and varied business undertakings of Richard Martin, who became the proprietor of two harness shops and a tannery, also owning a livery business in connection with which he ran a line of omnibuses He lived to see the frontier push its way to the Pacific coast, but was content to remain in the country that he had practically grown up with, his death occurring in Rising Sun. His wife, formerly Ann C. Turner, was also a native of Pennsylvania, her ancestors also having been early settlers in the vicinity of Jersey Shore, Lycoming county. She too died in Indiana.

Five of the seven children born to his parents are living, and of these Frank James Martin is the oldest. He was born in Rising Sun, Ind., July 29, 1852, and as his parents appreciated the value of an education no pains were spared to give him the best opportunities that their means would afford. An apt pupil, he made steady progress in the common schools of his home town and later pursued a business course in Indianapolis Commercial College. Subsequently he returned to Rising Sun and began an apprenticeship at the saddler's trade under his father, and after he had mastered it removed to Vevay, Ind., and established a harness shop of which he was the proprietor for three and one half years. Thereafter, having closed out his business in Vevay, he returned once more to Rising Sun, this time taking up farming, which he followed continuously for nine years. In the mean time plans had been formulating in his mind to come to the Pacific coast country and in fact he had begun to make preparations for the trip, but the death of his father in 1875 brought them to a sudden close, and instead he remained in Rising Sun and looked after his father's varied interests as well as continued the care of his own farm. Twelve years later, however, he closed out his affairs in Indiana and the year 1887 found him in Pomona.

Purchasing the stock and accessories of Charles Sollars Mr. Martin engaged in the ice and soda manufacturing business on Main street, where he carried on a wholesale and retail business for about three years, when he sold the plant to John Weber, and re-invested the proceeds in the harness business then owned by J. C. Robertson, on the corner of Second and Main streets. Subsequently he added a line of carriages. For a time he continued at the original stand, but finally, in February, 1903, removed to his present commodious quarters, No. 160 South Main street, which he owns. The building has a floor space 40x65 feet, is two stories in height, and is in every way suited to the business in which he is engaged. All of the finest and most dependable makes of the lighter road vehicles are carried in his spacious repository, including the Brockway and Flint buggies.

In Vevay, Ind., Mr. Martin was married to Miss Laura J. Rutherford, who was born in that city, and one child, Helen A., has been born to them. Fraternally Mr. Martin belongs to the Woodmen of the World and formerly to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His political sympathies place him in the ranks of the Republican party. As one of the oldest settlers and business men of Pomona Mr. Martin is secure in the esteem of the community in which he lives, not alone for what he has accomplished from a material standpoint, but rather for the high principles of honor and integrity which have actuated all of his undertakings.

CHARLES SUMNER MERRIFIELD. For more than twenty years Charles Sumner Merrifield has been identified with the business interests of Elsinore and has taken an active part in the development of that section of Riverside county. He comes from old New England stock, his parents, Augustin Washington and Cordelia (Burnham) Merrifield, both having been natives of Bangor, Me. The father, who was a carpenter by trade, became an early settler of Wisconsin and purchased and improved a farm on the edge of the prairie near Janesville. Later he removed to Fulton, Rock county, Wis., reared his family there, and there passed the remainder of his lifetime. Both he and his wife died there many years ago.

The sixth in order of birth in a family of twelve children, eleven of whom are still living, Mr. Merrifield was born June 21, 1858, near Janesville, Rock county, Wis. His boyhood was spent on the farm and his preliminary education was received in the public schools of that county, after which he attended Milton College. Upon the completion of his studies he apprenticed himself to a Mr. Price, who lived in the vicinity of his home, and learned the carpenter's trade. He followed the occupation of builder and contractor for a time in his native state and in 1885 came to Elsinore, Cal., and continued in pursuit of the same industry. He built up a large business, superintended the erection of the first Lake View hotel, as well as many other building improvements at that place, and has been continuously active in this work ever since, with the exception of two years which he spent in Los Angeles. Business slackening up somewhat in 1898 he began carriage and wagon making, and gradually worked himself into the blacksmithing trade and now has a blacksmithing and carriage shop which he conducts in addition to his business as contractor and builder. He is also sole agent for the remedy known as Hanford's balsam myrrh and has quite an extensive trade in that specific.

The first marriage of Mr. Merrifield occurred in San Bernardino and united him with Miss Berdella M. Dewey, who was born in Delaware. At her death in Elsinore she left one child, Althea Berdella. His second wife was Miss Ida Wall, a native of Ohio, and to this union two children have been born, Zorah and Leslie. That Mr. Merrifield has always been especially interested in educational matters is evidenced by the fact that he has served as a member of the board of school trustees for ten years, being at one time clerk of that body; is a member and ex-clerk of the high school board of trustees in Elsinore, and is also a member of the city board of trustees. Fraternally he affiliates with a number of orders, among them being the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; is a charter member of the Knights of Pythias, serving as chief clerk of that order four different terms, also being past district deputy; was made a Mason in Milton Junction Lodge No. 161, A. F. & A. M., and is now a member of Elsinore Lodge No. 289, F. & A. M.; with his wife he belongs to the Order of Eastern Star, of which he is now (1906) secretary. He is a man of broad and independent views on social and civic questions and in national politics votes the Socialist ticket. He has been instrumental in securing many beneficial enterprises in his town and was one of the chief influences in securing the electric light plant here. His position as president of the Elsinore Promotion Club gives him prominence in all development interests and as a public spirited citizen, as well as an energetic and successful private business man, he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

THOMAS REECE McMICHAEL. In 1892 Mr. McMichael came to California and since that time has acquired a position of financial independence among the walnut growers of Los Angeles county and at the same time has built up for himself a place among the representative citizens, respected alike for his personal and public efforts in the upbuilding of the country. He is a native of Bloomsburg, Columbia county, Pa., born November 14, 1868. He is the fifth in a family of six children, all of whom are living, he being the only one in California. His parents, J. K. and Elizabeth (White) McMichael, are both natives of Pennsylvania, the former born of Scotch ancestry, the latter of German. The paternal grandfather, James McMichael, was the Scotch emigrant, who first located in Pennsylvania and later in Rock Island, Ill., as did also his son, J. K. The latter laid down his farming implements to answer the call to arms in 1861, enlisting in a Pennsylvania regiment. He and his wife are now living in Rock Island, Ill.

Thomas Reece McMichael received his education in the public schools of Rock Island, after which he took up the work of a stationary engineer, following this until 1892, when he came to California, and in Whittier entered the employ of the East Whittier Light & Water Company in a similar capacity. He later established the plant for them at Bassett and pumped the first water. In the meantime he had become interested in the horticultural possibilities of the section and had purchased a walnut grove, and seven years later he resigned from his work as engineer to look after these interests. He continued to add to his land until at the present writing he owns thirty-five acres located a mile and a half from El Monte, just off the San Bernardino road, all devoted to walnuts. He has built a comfortable residence, barns and out-buildings, and has surrounded his home with every possible comfort and convenience.

In El Monte Mr. McMichael married Miss Anna Maxson, a native of Santa Ana, Orange county, where her father, B. F. Maxson, a pioneer, located in an early day. Subsequently he made his home in the vicinity of El Monte, where he set out the first walnut grove, and here his death occurred. He participated in the Civil war as a member of Company K, Thirteenth Wisconsin Infantry. Mr. and Mrs. McMichael are the parents of one child, George Dudley. Mrs. McMichael is a member of the Presbyterian Church, which Mr. McMichael liberally supports in all its charities. He is associated fraternally with the Modern Woodmen of America, politically is a stanch Republican. He belongs to the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association.

JACOB P. THOMPSON. The success achieved by Jacob P. Thompson is entirely the result of his own efforts, for with nothing but his native qualities of courage, energy and ability he faced the world and has won a competence. His inherited traits of character are from southern birth and lineage, his parents, Robert S. and Margarette (Surbaugh) Thompson, both being natives of West Virginia. They eventually removed to Illinois, where the father gave up his trade of tanner, which he had hitherto followed to the exclusion of other pursuits, and became interested in farming, owning a fine farm where he spent his last days. He died at the comparatively early age of forty-five years, while the mother passed away when about forty-three.

The fourth in a family of seven children, Jacob P. Thompson was born in Greenbrier county, W. Va., April 2, 1845, and while a child was taken by his parents to Kane county, Ill., where he received a common school education. After the close of his schooldays he learned the trade of gunsmith. All his plans were interrupted in 1863 when he enlisted in Company K, Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, and served until the close of the Civil war, participating in many important engagements and with Sherman marching to the sea over the necessarily devastated state of Georgia. He was with the force that captured General Johnston, after which they marched to Washington to participate in the Grand Review. Mustered out at Louisville and honorably discharged from service at Chicago, Ill., Mr. Thompson returned to his old home in Kane county, and there remained for a few subsequent years. Going then to Plainfield, Bremer county, Iowa, he engaged in a general merchandise enterprise, after two years sold out, and in 1870 came to California for the first time. He located in Gilroy, Santa Clara county, and followed a mercantile business for the period of six years, and in 1876 came to Santa Ana, Orange county, and took up his old trade of gunsmith, which he followed for seven years. He came to the vicinity of Norwalk in 1883 and here purchased the property which he now owns, consisting of one hundred and thirty-two acres of entirely uncultivated, unimproved land. He has since changed it into one of the best ranches in this section, erecting a fine residence, substantial barns and outbuildings and every possible equipment for successful ranching being added. He devotes the land to alfalfa, hay and corn, and also has a fine dairy herd of twenty cows, and also raises cattle to some extent. He is a very successful rancher and in the matter of progress and enterprise has no superior throughout the country.

In Santa Ana, in 1881, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage with Miss Minnie J. Brown, a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Settle) Brown, natives of South Carolina. They came to California in 1872 and eventually located on a ranch adjoining Mr. Thompson. Mrs. Thompson was the second eldest of seven children. Their father died on the old homestead in 1888, at the age of sixty-four years, the mother still surviving and making her home with Mrs. Thompson. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson have one son, Robert S., who is located at Newport. Mr. Thompson liberally supports the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which his wife is a member. Fraternally he is a member of the Odd Fellows lodge at Gilroy, a member of the Knights of the Maccabees at Artesia, and is associated with the Grand Army of the Republic, holding membership with the Dan Bidwell Post No. 140, at Norwalk. Politically he reserves the right to cast his ballot for the candidate he considers best qualified to discharge official position. He has served as school trustee and takes an active interest in the advancement of educational affairs.

CHARLES EDWARD GREASER. Since coming to Pomona in 1895 the record of the life of Mr. Greaser has been intimately associated with the history and development of the city. For about ten years, or until he retired from business in 1905, many sales and transfers of city property were made through him, and he also laid out a number of subdivisions. One of these was the ten-acre high-school tract which he subdivided and laid out into lots with S. N.

Curry. Aside from caring for his own property he is no longer actively interested in the real-estate business, although he still retains his interest in the Pomona Abstract and Trust Company, in which he is a director and also in the Deibert-Greaser Company (Inc.) of which he is president. The latter is a furniture and undertaking business in Ontario, San Bernardino county, and as it is the leading business of the kind in the town it is a financial success.

Mr. Greaser is a native of Ohio, born in Enon, Clark county, the descendant of German ancestors on the father's side. From Wurtemberg, Germany, where he was born, Michael Greaser came to the United States and settled in Pennsylvania during young manhood, and still later crossed over into the adjoining state of Ohio and settled in Clark county on a farm. In response to the country's call for able-bodied men he became a member of Company C, Sixteenth Ohio Heavy Artillery, serving from 1861 until his discharge in 1864, during which time he saw much hard service but was mercifully spared from any serious injury. Returning once more to his farm in Clark county, he continued to farm there for a time and later removed to Springfield, same county, and from there in 1869 he removed to Topeka, Kans. In the latter state as in Ohio he continued to carry on a farm for a number of years, but finally retired from active work altogether. Some time later he removed to Denver, Colo., and there his earth life came to a close when he was in his sixty-seventh year. His war service made him eligible to the Grand Army of the Republic, and no comrade in Lincoln Post, of which he was a member, was held in higher esteem than Michael Greaser. His widow, formerly Barbara Baney, was born in Pennsylvania and now makes her home in Florence, Colo.

Of the seven children originally comprising the parental family six are now living and Charles E. is next to the oldest. He was born November 29, 1859, in Enon, Ohio, and was therefore about ten years old when the family removed to Kansas. After completing his education in the schools of Topeka he apprenticed himself to the carpenter's trade under Millard Updyke and after mastering the trade secured a position with the Santa Fe road, in the bridge and building department.

From work at the carpenter's trade he latter branched out into contracting and building, following this in Kansas until 1889, in which year he located in Denver, Colo., and associated himself as supervising architect with the firm of Coe Brothers. Owing to an injury which he had received in a street-car accident he gave up his position in the fall of 1895, and in the same year he came to Pomona. When sufficiently recovered he began to deal in realty and during the ten years which he followed the real-estate business was known as one of the most energetic and thoroughgoing business men in his line in Pomona. He owns considerable valuable property which he has accumulated from time to time, and aside from looking after his own interests in this line he is practically retired from business.

The pleasant family home at No. 702 North Garey street is graciously presided over by his wife, formerly Ida Wizer, who was born near Topeka, in which city their marriage was celebrated. Two children have been born to them, Arthur L. and Helen. In Manhattan, Kans., Mr. Greaser was first married to Miss Alice Kneeland, a native of Waitsfield, Vt., her death occurring while on a visit to her old home in that state. Mr. Greaser is a stanch member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving his congregation as steward, and he is also a firm believer in temperance principles. His membership in the Board of Trade is a proof of his interest in his home city, and in the discussions in that body his opinion carries considerable weight. His fraternal affiliations ally him with the Odd Fellows, belonging to both the lodge and encampment, and also to the kindred order of Rebekahs. Another organization of which he is a member is the Heptosophs.

LYMAN O. CALKINS. Enterprising, practical and progressive, Lyman O. Calkins holds an assured position among the leading merchants of Inglewood, where he is carrying on a substantial mercantile business and is also serving as postmaster. A son of the late Nathan O. Calkins, he was born August 8, 1877, in Bagley, Grant county, Wis., where his grandfather, Lyman Calkins, was a pioneer settler and a farmer of prominence.

A native of New York state, Nathan O. Calkins was but a child when he was taken by his parents to Wisconsin, where he grew to man's estate. Soon after the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in Company D, Thirty-third Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the conflict, being first lieutenant of his company. He afterward followed farming in Bagley, Wis., until 1878, when he removed with his family to Elm Creek, Buffalo county, Neb., where he was employed in mercantile pursuits for ten years. Going from there to Kimball county, that state, he was there engaged in business as a furniture dealer for about seven years. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1895, he was engaged in farming at Inglewood, until his death, in 1903. He was a man of sterling traits of character, highly respected by all. In politics he was a Republican, and socially he was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the Masonic fraternity. His wife, whose maiden name was Jennie C. Eastman, was born in Ohio, and is now a resident of Inglewood. Her father, Reuben R. Eastman, removed from Ohio to Wisconsin, thence to Michigan, and is now living retired from active pursuits in Inglewood.

The third child and oldest son in a family of seven children, Lyman O. Calkins was but a year old when his parents settled in Buffalo county, Nebraska, where he acquired his rudimentary education. He afterward attended the Kimball county high school, from which he was graduated in 1895. Coming very soon after that important event to Los Angeles county, he followed farming for about two years, subsequently serving three years as a clerk in the store of Carr & Stevens, at Los Angeles. In December, 1904, he, in partnership with H. H. Zillgitt, engaged in business on his own account, and as one of the proprietors of the Inglewood Mercantile Company, has built up a substantial and profitable trade. The building occupied by this enterprising firm is 30x100 feet, and is well stocked with a fine line of goods, the ambition of Messrs. Calkins and Zillgitt being to supply the demands and to please the tastes of their many patrons. In January, 1905, Mr. Calkins was commissioned by President Roosevelt postmaster of Inglewood, and as such is performing the duties devolving upon him with ability and fidelity.

A stanch adherent of the Republican party Mr. Calkins takes an intelligent interest in political matters, and is a generous supporter of all beneficial projects. He belongs to the Inglewood Commercial Club and is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

ALFRED B. COMSTOCK. The family represented in Ventura county, Cal., by Alfred B. Comstock, is one prominently named among the substantial citizens of the middle west, a son of A. J. and Adelaide (Binns) Comstock, the former residing on the farm that was entered from the government by his father. A. J. Comstock was born in Ohio, but was taken by his parents to Iowa while still a lad in years, and in that state he was married at Oskaloosa, his wife being a native of England, but was brought to New York City when four years old, and finally to the Hawkeye state. When only seventeen years old A. J. Comstock manifested his loyalty and patriotism to his country by enlisting for service in the Mexican war, fighting gallantly for one year; in 1862 he again gave his services to his country, enlisting in Company C, Thirty-third Iowa Infantry, and as captain serving three years. At Tyler, Tex., he was severely wounded and but for the devotion of one of his men who stayed gallantly by him on the field he would probably have died. The two were taken prisoners and after three months' incarceration Mr. Comstock was paroled and later discharged, and on the home farm in Iowa he once more resumed the duties of civic life. Mr. Comstock is to be named, also, with the pioneers of California, for in 1852 he came to the Pacific coast by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and after landing in San Francisco went at once to the mines in the vicinity of Sacramento, Marysville, Dutch Flat, and Gold Hill, where he remained for two years, when he returned to Iowa. His father-in-law, Thomas Binns, also crossed the plains to California in 1852, and in San Francisco engaged at his trade of brick mason, returning two years later with Mr. Comstock by way of the Isthmus of Panama.

Alfred B. Comstock was born in Mahaska county, Iowa, August 3, 1854, and in the public schools of Oskaloosa received his education. Young manhood found him occupied as a hardware merchant in Fremont, Iowa, where he remained until 1886, in which year he disposed of his interests and coming to the Pacific coast located in Ventura county. In the city of Ventura he engaged as clerk for one year, when he purchased land on Ventura avenue and entered upon ranching pursuits. He remained in that location for seven years, when he came to his present property, eight hundred acres of raw land, entirely devoid of cultivation or improvements. He bent every energy and effort toward the development of that which is today appropriately named among the most valuable ranches in this section of Ventura county, adding a good residence, comfortable and substantial barns and outbuildings, good fences, and setting out a large orchard of apricots and walnuts. He devotes considerable of his time to the raising of stock, in which line he has met with uniform success, for he combines with ability a steadfastness of purpose and unlimited energy which could only result in successful termination of his plans. At the same time he has not allowed his personal affairs to engross his attention entirely, but has given thought and effort toward the advancement of the best interests of the community, being accounted one of the substantial and enterprising citizens of Ventura county.

Mr. Comstock established home ties through his marriage in Oskaloosa, Iowa, May 6, 1882, with Miss Anna E. Ellis, a native of that state. Mr. Comstock has served as school trustee and in other like positions since residing in this community and takes a strong interest in educational matters. He believes in advancement in whatever line a man engages, and holds that the development of one's own personal property is the surest way to increase the value of property throughout the section. He is at present contemplating the sinking of an artesian well to be five feet in diameter, and thirty feet deep before any drilling is done, the supply of water to be used for irrigation purposes. He has just completed a twelve-inch well and has also recently added other valuable improvements to his ranch. He breeds the best stock and works for the best crops that can be produced in this section of California, counting no effort lost that brings his work to a higher grade.

ROBERT B. EDMONDSON. The agricultural interests of Ventura county are well represented by Robert B. Edmondson, one of the most successful ranchers in the vicinity of Oxnard, and a man of public spirit and energy, who is alive to the best interests of both state and county, giving his best efforts to the advancement of all movements of a progressive character. Descending from a long line of southern ancestors, his immediate progenitors were of good old Virginia stock, and he himself was born in Virginia July 4, 1867.

On the old family homestead in Washington county, Va., where his son was born on Independence day, William B. Edmondson carried on general farming until the close of his brief life in 1876, when he was only thirty-seven years of age. He was a son of Col. R. B. Edmondson, who won his title for meritorious services in the Revolutionary war. The wife of William B. Edmondson, who before her marriage was Fannie C. Dolin, is still living, and makes her home in Saulsbury, Tenn.

The early boyhood years of Robert B. Edmondson were closely associated with the paternal farm in Washington county, Va., and in the nearby public schools he was one of the most diligent of students. He supplemented this training by a course in Emory and Henry College, located in Emory, Va., and in fact has never ceased to be a student, for the broad school of experience has enlarged his scope of knowledge, as well as the reading of carefully selected literature. After leaving college Mr. Edmondson carried on farming in his native county for a time, but he soon began to chafe under the restrictions by which he was bound and longed for broader fields upon which to develop his ideas along agricultural lines. Removing to California in 1887, he came direct to the Santa Clara valley and for four years lived on rented property. His residence near Oxnard, Ventura county, dates from the year 1891, at which time he purchased his present home ranch, comprising one hundred and forty-one and one-half acres. Seventy acres of this are in a walnut orchard, of which thirty acres are in bearing condition, and in addition he has one hundred acres in lima beans. He has brought to bear in his ranching the habit of study and penetration which has characterized everything that he undertakes, and as a result he enjoys a substantial income from the plentiful harvests yielded.

November 16, 1898, in Oxnard, Robert B. Edmondson and Mrs. E. J. Crinklaw were united in marriage, the latter being a native of North Carolina. By her first husband, James L. Crinklaw, four children were born, Leslie, Charles, Ruth and Mitford, and by her marriage with M. Edmondson she become the mother of two children, Fannie and Robert B., Jr. All of the family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and are identified with the congregation at Oxnard. Mr. Edmondson's personal interests do not prevent him from enjoying the amenities of fraternal intercourse, and many of his pleasantest hours are passed in the Masonic and Odd Fellow lodges of which he is a member.

THOMAS TOMPKINS. One of the earliest pioneers of the state of California was Thomas Tompkins, now deceased, who arrived in San Francisco in 1846 and in spite of the trials and privations of a frontier existence had a long and successful career in this state. He was of English birth, the city of his nativity being Lincolnshire, where he was born August 15, 1817. When but eleven years old he was brought by his parents to America, the family settling in New York state, where the mother's death occurred shortly after their arrival, the father living there until he had reached the advanced age of eighty-four years, when his death occurred. There were ten children in the family. Thomas Tompkins received his education through the medium of the public schools of New York, his home being about nine miles from Rochester. After school days he engaged in agricultural pursuits in New York, and in that state occurred his marriage to Miss Jane Rollins, a young lady of English parentage who came to America with her father and mother on the same ship that brought the Tompkins family, the vessel being a sailing craft that required three months to make this trip. Of this union were born two children: Amanda who became the wife of B. F. Garner of San Bernardino, and is now deceased; and Jane E., now Mrs. Hunter of Los Angeles.

In 1846 Mr. Tompkins and his family boarded the ship Brooklyn, which had been chartered by three hundred Mormons, and was bound for San Francisco via Cape Horn, visited the islands on which Robinson Crusoe lived, and arrived at its destination June 3, 1846. Soon after landing he took up government land and engaged in ranching, and when gold was discovered a couple of years later he was one of the few who kept his head throughout the excitement, and instead of rushing off to the mines he found his gold mine in a hundred and fifty acres of potatoes and other vegetables and grains which sold at almost fabulous prices. He also owned and operated the first threshing outfit that was ever run in that part of the state. He with his family made a visit and spent some six months on the Society Islands. In 1852 Mr. Tompkins, thinking there were still greater opportunities for the ranchman in San Bernardino county, brought his family here, purchasing the present ranch which is a part of the original purchase from the Mormon elders of Salt Lake City. Later, in 1858 he sold out his holdings and removed to Salt Lake City, but not being quite satisfied with the entire workings of the Mormon faith there he soon returned to San Bernardino county and was fortunate in being able to buy back his original purchase, and this place is now held by his widow. His first wife died in San Bernardino county and in 1865 he married Miss A. F. Perry, a daughter of Jeremiah and Jane (Merrick) Perry, all natives of Tennessee. When quite young she was taken by her parents to Texas where they died, and when thirteen years old she and her three sisters came to the northern part of California, living in that section for a number of years, later came to Los Angeles, and finally in 1864 settled in San Bernardino. By this union Mr. and Mrs. Tompkins became the parents of seven children, namely: Perry, married Miss Zora Avery, lives in Berkeley, and has one child; Henry, married Miss Lelia Patton, lives in Los Angeles; Walter, married Miss Lula Alexander, lives in San Bernardino; Birdie; Daisy; Violet; and Mabel at home. Politically he was a strong advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. His death in January, 1885, at the age of sixty-six years, removed a most successful, honorable and highly respected man. Mrs. Tompkins who survives him is an active member and liberal supporter of the benevolences of the Unitarian Church. She owns a fine ranch of eighty-five acres, devoted to the raising of hay and grain, and lives in a very comfortable home thereon.

JOSEPH PERRY SYLVA. In the United States it is a matter of pride that a large portion of the best and most prominent citizens in the different walks of life have risen to distinction solely through their own efforts, unaided by wealth, influential family or circumstances over which they have no control. A notable instance of the sterling worth which overcomes obstacles and creates its own opportunities is presented in the career of Joseph P. Sylva, formerly a merchant and the postmaster of Wilmington, and one of the most honored men of the county.

On the Isle of Pico, one of the Azores, which belongs to Portugal, Manuel and Isabelle Sylva were born, and there also they reared their family and spent their entire lives, the father living to reach his eighty-seventh year, while the mother was in her seventy-fourth year at the time of her death. Born on the Isle of Pico August 24, 1845, Joseph P. Sylva was reared under the sunny skies of his native land until he reached his nineteenth year, prior to which time he had received a fair education in the common schools of that country. At the age mentioned he left home and friends and was a sailor on the high seas for the following two years. Touching at the port of San Francisco in 1866 he was so favorably impressed with the prospects which he foresaw that he determined to remain in the United States. Before he could make much headway in a strange country, however, it was necessary for him to learn the language of his adopted countrymen, and he therefore lost no time in seeking out and joining a night school. During the year thus spent in school he paid his expenses by working at any honorable employment that he could find. July 27, 1867, marks the date of his arrival in Wilmington, where he first worked as a laborer. As he became more familiar with the language and customs of the country he naturally sought more responsible and remunerative employment, and from the time he became an employe of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company his advance was steady and well merited. During the years which he was with the latter company he was enabled to lay by considerable money, and on February 1, 1877, he invested his means in a small grocery store which had been established here, and with the determination which had characterized all of his former efforts set about to convert it into one of the leading enterprises of the town. His efforts met with success from the start, and it was not long before he had built up a large trade. Misfortune, however, overtook him in 1882, his store and stock being totally destroyed by fire that year. Phoenix-like he erected upon the ashes of his former prosperity a substantial brick store which stands today in the heart of the business center of town. After conducting a grocery in this building for about twenty-three years he was obliged to give up business on account of failing eyesight, and is now living retired, finding sufficient occupation in caring for his property. Besides the building just mentioned he owns two buildings in San Pedro, which are up-to-date in every particular and bring him in a good income.

Mr. Sylva was married in Los Angeles, November 7, 1870, to Francisca Villa, a lady of Spanish antecedents, and six children came to bless their union. Ida is the wife of John S. Thomas, and they make their home in Wilmington; Joseph, who is his father's namesake, is assistant cashier in the State Bank of San Pedro; Isabelle is principal of the schools at La Ballona; Martha is her father's housekeeper, the mother having died October 20, 1897; Lillian is attending high school at Wilmington, and Carl is at home. Ever since 1872 Mr. Sylva has given his vote and support to the Republican party, and was school trustee of Wilmington for seven years, three years of this time being clerk of the board. From 1897 until 1904 he served as postmaster of the town, giving entire satisfaction to those who had secured his appointment, and is now serving as one of the town trustees. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Wilmington Lodge No. 190, F. & A. M., and formerly belonged to the chapter at Los Angeles, but has lately had his membership transferred to San Pedro. He also belongs to Bohen Lodge No. 138 I. O. O. F., at San Pedro, and to Lodge No. 55, A. O. U. W., at Los Angeles.

WILLIAM T. GILLIS. A man of excellent financial and executive ability, progressive in his ideas, with a strong personality, William T. Gillis is one of the representative men of Los Angeles county, holding a noteworthy position in business, fraternal and social circles, his influence being felt through the community. Coming from a long line of thrifty ancestors, he was born and reared in Nova Scotia, receiving his education in Pictou, graduating when young from the Pictou Academy.

As a young man, Mr. Gillis began his active career as a druggist, for three years owning a store in Pictou. Coming to Santa Monica in 1887, just after the close of the great boom, he opened a drug store, which he managed a number of years. Subsequently settling in Redlands, he was there employed in the drug business for six years, being successful in his operations. Returning to Santa Monica in 1901, he has since been a resident of this place. Becoming identified with the Pacific Land Company in September of that year as vice-president and manager, he assisted in developing Sawtelle and the surrounding country between that place and Santa Monica. Recently this company has purchased stock in the Santa Monica Land and Water Company, which owns thirty thousand acres of land in this vicinity, including Santa Monica canon, and also owns the water system. The company to which Mr. Gillis belongs also organized the Palisade Investment Company, which recently acquired title to fifty acres of most valuable land, known as the Palisade. Having improved three-fourths of the tract, they put it on the market, readily disposed of it at advantageous prices, and the remaining fourth has just been put on the market by the Alta California Land Company, of which Roy Jones is president.

Mr. Gillis is likewise identified with other enterprises, being vice-president of the Santa Monica Investment Company, which during the past year built thirty houses, varying in cost from $1,000 to $4,000, for the special benefit of the laboring class of people, who enjoy owning their homes, but are unable to build them without help. He is a stockholder and a director in the Bank of Santa Monica, and is treasurer of the Santa Monica Savings Bank, of which T. H. Dudley is president. Mr. Gillis was one of the organizers of the Sunset Brick and Tile Company, which was later merged into the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company, still retaining his interest in the latter, and he is also identified with the Southwest Warehouse Company, which has a large warehouse in Santa Monica, on the tracks of the Southern Pacific & Electric Railway.

Politically Mr. Gillis is a straightforward Republican. Fraternally he is prominent in Masonic circles, being a member and past master of Santa Monica Lodge, F. & A. M.; a member of Los Angeles Commandery, K. T.; and a member of Al Malaikah Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Los Angeles. He is likewise a member of Santa Monica Lodge, B. P. O. E., of which he is past exalted ruler, and from which he received a handsome jewel as an appreciative token of services that he rendered the organization; and of Redlands Lodge, K. of P. Mr. Gillis has one son, Robert William Gillis.

ASHBY C. VICKERS. Conspicuously identified with the best interests of Ventura county is Ashby C. Vickers, an extensive and prosperous ranchman, living on the Schiappa Pietra ranch. He owns one hundred and three acres of fine land, and rents a large tract, being engaged principally in the raising of beans. By industry, energy and wise management he has improved a good home, which, with its environments denotes the supervision of an intelligent farmer and capable business man. At the same time he has proved himself a useful member of the community, and one well deserving the esteem and confidence so generously accorded him by the people. A son of William Vickers, he was born, December 25, 1861, in Cape Girardeau, Mo., of Virginian ancestry. Born and brought up in Virginia, William Vickers became a pioneer settler of Missouri, living there until 1862, when he removed to Sangamon county, Ill., where he spent the remainder of his life, dying in 1879, at the age of fifty-six years. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Derry, was born in Virginia seventy years ago, and is now a resident of Illinois.

Educated in the public schools of the Prairie state, Ashby C. Vickers remained in Illinois until 1884, when he came to Ventura, Cal., where he resided two years. He was subsequently engaged in the livery business at different places, being located Santa Paula a year, at Los Angeles two years, at Pleasant Valley a year, and at Hueneme two years. Purchasing then one hundred and three acres of the Schiappa Pietra ranch, he has since been actively employed in ranching, at the present time renting adjoining land, and making a specialty of cultivating beans on about three hundred acres, an industry which he is carrying on most successfully.

In May, 1888, at Santa Paula, Mr. Vickers married Addie Holden, a daughter of Thomas Holden, who, in 1876, came from Michigan to California with his family, and is now a resident of Los Angeles. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Vickers four children have been born, namely: Josephine M., Gladys G., Mattie E. and Vesta E. In his political affiliations Mr. Vickers is a sound Democrat, and fraternally he is a member of Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., and of Oxnard Chapter No. 86, R. A. M. He is liberal in his religious beliefs, attending the Universalist Church of Santa Paula, and is contributing his full share toward advancing the intellectual and moral progress of the community.

GUY W. MAHAN. Numbered among the bright and enterprising young farmers of Ventura county is Guy W. Mahan, who is located in the vicinity of Somis and engaged in general ranching pursuits which have been productive of large financial returns. Inheriting the industry and perseverance which have thus early distinguished his efforts, he was born of pioneer ancestry December 31, 1876, his parents, William Samuel and Emma (Sisson) Mahan, both being natives of California. The paternal grandfather, John Mahan, who is written up at length in another part of this volume, was one of the early pioneers of the state and one of its upbuilders in the locality in which he settled. Ventura county has been the scene of all the efforts of Guy W. Mahan, his parents now residing near Somis, although in his boyhood they lived on the Los Posas ranch, where he attended the public school. This preliminary education was supplemented by a course in Kanard College, of Ventura, where in the commercial department he received a practical training which has been of material assistance since. The most important part of his training having been along agricultural lines it was but natural that he should seek this means of a livelihood, although for a year he was occupied with his brother, George Mahan, in a grocery store in Santa Paula. He is now the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of fine farm land, upon which he has placed all the improvements, and in addition to this property he rents three hundred and thirty acres, of which two hundred and fifty acres are devoted to the raising of beans and hay. Thus far he has met with unqualified success in his work and bids fair to rank among the representative farmers of this section.

In Camarillo, Ventura county, Mr. Mahan was united in marriage with Miss Ethel Glenn, on the 23d of December, 1900. She is a daughter of George Glenn, of Camarillo, for further information regarding whom refer to his biography which appears on another page of this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Mahan are the parents of two children, Oris and Vivian. The Baptist Church of Somis receives the support of Mr. Mahan in both attendance and financial matters. Fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, of Santa Paula, and Knights of Pythias of the same place, and is also a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood.

LOUIS FRANK DIEDRICH. The rich agricultural resources of Ventura county have been developed and advanced by the many live, energetic and persevering farmers who have labored industriously and are now meeting with their due reward. Prominent among this number is Louis F. Diedrich, who lives near Oxnard, where he owns a part of the old Schiappa Pietra ranch, and also leases a large tract of land. Beginning life with no other endowments than strong hands and a courageous heart, he has steadily worked his way upward, gaining experience and business ability as the years have passed, and now, in manhood's prime, is exceedingly prosperous. A native of Germany, he was born, September 30, 1859, in Hanover, where he obtained a practical common school education. His parents, Louis and Margaret (Bemeke) Diedrich, spent their entire lives in Germany, the mother dying in 1866, at the age of forty-seven years, and the father in 1870, aged fifty-eight years.

Living in the Fatherland until after attaining his majority, Louis F. Diedrich became familiar with the many branches of agriculture on his native soil. Immigrating to the United States in 1882, he spent a very brief time in New York City, and then started for the Pacific coast, coming by rail to Los Angeles, and from there to Ventura county by stage. For several years he was employed as a wage-earner. Enterprising and thrifty, he saved his money, and having accumulated considerable capital purchased his present ranch in 1901, and at once began its improvement. He owns one hundred and twenty-four acres of good land, and on this he has erected a modern house, an excellent set of farm buildings, and these, with their attractive surroundings, add materially to the appearance of the estate, and to its value from a financial point of view. He rents additional land, farming about three hundred and twenty acres, two hundred and fifty acres being planted to beans, and the remainder devoted to the raising of barley.

February 20, 1887, Mr. Diedrich married Elizabeth Reiman, who was born in Germany, came to the United States in 1880 with her parents, the late Joseph and Elizabeth (Schnider) Reiman. Her father died in 1903, and her mother now lives near Oxnard. Mr. and Mrs. Diedrich are the parents of six children, namely: Louis, Laura, Tillie, Robert, Mary and Morris. Politically Mr. Diedrich is an independent Democrat, voting with the courage of his convictions for the best men and measures. Religiously he and his wife are members of the Catholic Church at Oxnard.

J. J. SUESS. The mercantile life of Redlands has in J. J. Suess a prominent and upbuilding factor and one who has made his efforts for a personal success parallel with those for the upbuilding of his adopted city. The sturdy qualities of character he has displayed are an inheritance from Swiss ancestry, his birth having occurred in Zurich, Switzerland, August 22, 1862; his father, John, was born there, as was also his grandfather, John, the records of the family tracing the ancestry back to 1532 and earlier. John Suess, Jr., was a blacksmith and viticulturist, the farm he owned in Switzerland still being a part of the family estate. He brought his family to America in 1868 and located at Fort Madison, Iowa, where he conducted a blacksmith and carriage shop, later removing to Webster county, Neb., and there improving a farm until his death. He was a member of the Reformed Church and a helpful and practical citizen. His wife was formerly Susan Ulrich, who was born in Zurich, her death occurring in Iowa three months prior to that of her husband. They were the parents of ten children, of whom nine are living and six are in California.

The second in the family of his parents, J. J. Suess was brought to Iowa when about six years old, and in 1874 was taken to Nebraska, his education being received through the medium of the public schools of both states and a private institution which he attended for a time. He lost his parents at the age of sixteen years; four years later he decided to seek the broader opportunities of the Pacific coast and accordingly came to California (this being in 1882) and located in Los Angeles, then a city of twenty thousand inhabitants. The following year he went to Widmore City (now Long Beach), where he conducted a small store through the summer, thence locating in Ventura and later in Nordhoff, where he was employed in a general merchandise business until 1890. In the fall of that year he went to Lompoc and followed a similar occupation until the summer of 1891, when he located in Redlands, purchasing a one-half interest in the grocery business of J. W. Lewis, the firm name being Lewis & Suess. A year later he purchased the remaining interest in the business and has since continued the enterprise alone, building up and enlarging the business, increasing his store room and stock, and adding every equipment for the expeditious managment of the constantly increasing custom. His building, which is located at the corner of State and Orange streets, is 40x120 in dimensions, and to this he added a bakery in 1903, now owning and conducting two bakeries, and also has a branch store at Crafton. He conducts the largest establishment of its kind in Redlands, and by his business methods, his honesty, and integrity in dealing with the public, has acquired a wide reputation which has resulted in an increased patronage. In addition to his mercantile interests he also owns an orange grove in the vicinity of Redlands.

Mr. Suess has been twice married, his first wife being Miss Mattie Dewey, a native of Pennsylvania and a member of the New England family of Deweys. She died in Redlands leaving two children, Donald Ensign and Dorothea. Later he was married here to Miss Nellie Westland, a native of Michigan. In 1904 Mr. Suess was elected a member of the board of trustees of Redlands for a term of four years, and is now serving as chairman of that body. He is a director of the First National Bank of Redlands and active in the advancement of its interests. Fraternally he is a prominent Mason, having been made a member of the organization in Redlands Lodge No. 300, of which he is now past master; and also belongs to Redlands Chapter No. 77, R. A. M.; St. Bernard Commandery No. 23, K. T., of San Bernardino; and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is also identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of Redlands. Mr. Suess is a member of the Unitarian Church, and politically is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, taking an active interest in the advancement of his party's interest, and is now a member of the Republican County Central Committee. He is a charter member of the Board of Trade and has served as director of the organization. Justly he is accounted a citizen of worth, held in the highest esteem for his splendid qualities of character, and in the midst of his busy efforts toward a personal competence has proven himself an important factor toward the upbuilding and development of Southern California.

JAMES K. TRIPLETT. Throughout the greater part of his life Mr. Triplett has been a resident of California and during much of that period he has made his home in Santa Barbara county, where he has the distinction of being one of the oldest surviving pioneers of the Santa Maria valley. Shortly after he first came to this fertile region he purchased a tract included within the Lagona ranch and since then he has bought and sold a number of farms, while he still owns the stock ranch of three hundred and twenty acres in the valley and for a few years made his home on that place. More recently (1902) he purchased and since then has occupied and operated a farm of fifty acres under cultivation to grain and beans, and also utilized to some extent as a poultry ranch. The people of the valley among whom he has lived for many years esteem him as a man of sterling worth, progressive character and undoubted integrity.

The Triplett family is of southern ancestry. Very early in the agricultural development of Illinois there removed to it as pioneers A. J. and Frances K. (Mews) Triplett, natives respectively of Bourbon county, Ky., and Virginia. Shortly after their arrival in their frontier surroundings they secured a homestead from the government and engaged in transforming the soil from its primeval condition into a farm of productive capacity and neat appearance. During the spring of 1864 they disposed of the Illinois property and proceeded south and west to the Isthmus of Panama, thence up the Pacific ocean to California, where they settled in Sonoma county. The mother died at Salinas when forty-two years of age, and the father passed away in Santa Barbara county at the age of sixty-one years. Of their ten children five died in infancy; Henry lives in Whittier, Cal., and S. D. is a resident of Kent, in the state of Washington. Actively interested in public affairs, the father remained an adherent of the Democratic party as long as he lived, while in religious connections he and his wife were identified with the Christian Church.

The schools of Pike county, Ill., (in which county he was born November 4, 1848), afforded James K. Triplett the rudiments of a fair education and subsequent habits of close observation and thoughtful reading have broadened his fund of knowledge. When fifteen years of age he accompanied the family to California and settled with them in Sonoma county, where he assisted in the development of a ranch. For a time he enjoyed the privilege of taking a general course of study in Hesperian College at Woodland, and after leaving the college he embarked in independent ranching. For four years or more he engaged in ranching near Salinas, Monterey county, and in 1873 came to the Santa Maria valley, where he has since become prominently identified with the permanent development of the ranching interests of the locality.

The marriage of Mr. Triplett took place in 1871 and united him with Miss Susan K. Rice, one of the native daughters of California, and a lady of estimable character, with him a sincere member of the Christian Church. Four children blessed their union, but one son, John H., died at the age of six years, and another, Francis, died in infancy. William H., the only surviving son, married Lydia Holland and has two children. The only daughter, Bessie M., resides with her parents on the ranch. For thirty-four years or more Mr. Triplett has been actively connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Guadaloupe and Santa Maria and has been a contributor to its charities. Reared in the Democratic faith, he has seen no reason to change his political affiliations and remains stanchly interested in local and general Democratic affairs. While never a candidate for office, he consented at one time to fill the office of high school trustee and in that position rendered efficient service in the interest of educational affairs in his district.

BREEN BROTHERS. The name of the Breen brothers, both collectively and individually, is well known in Wilmington, where for the past ten years they have carried on a general merchandise store, besides owning a rolling mill and dealing in grain extensively. On both sides of the family they are of Irish descent, their parents, James and Sarah (Synnott) Breen, coming to the United States from the Emerald Isle and locating in Vermont. Both the father and mother are now deceased.

Fred F. Breen was born in Underhill, Chittenden county, Vt., August 15, 1868, and his brother, Edward H., was born in the same place, June 16, 1870. Nothing of unusual interest transpired during their early lives to distinguish them from those of other boys in their locality, and when not attending the public school at Underhill they assisted their father in the care and management of the home place. When twenty-two years of age Fred F. Breen began farming on his own account, but after five years of hard work he gave it up and came to California, which by that time had become known for its marvelous agricultural possibilities. Coming to Wilmington, Los Angeles county, he carried on a ranch in this vicinity from 1895 until 1901, giving it up in the latter year to engage in the grocery business. To his original stock he has added a complete line of general commodities, from which he is able to supply any and all household demands. Interested with him in the enterprise is his brother Edward H., and they also are associated in the buying and selling of grain, which forms no small source of income.

In Wilmington, Cal., October 15, 1901, Fred F. Breen was united in marriage with Myrtle McMahon, who was born in Kansas, but has been a resident of California since 1898, at which time she located in Long Beach as a teacher in the public school. Subsequently she taught in Wilmington, and she has also served in the same capacity in Washington and other states. Two children have blessed their union, Fred and Bert. Following in the training in which they were both reared Mr. and Mrs. Breen are communicants of the Catholic Church, and are rearing their children in that faith. Possessing shrewd business sense and a pronounced desire to please their many customers the Breen brothers are also discerning in the selection of their stock and as a result are winning the patronage which their efforts deserve.

EMIL SUESS. The business interests of Redlands have in Emil Suess one of its most enterprising men, his business interests being as proprietor of the Club Stables, one of the chief liveries of the city. Mr. Suess comes of a fine old Swiss family, his father, John J., bringing the family to America a year after his birth, which occurred October 10, 1869; their home was located in Iowa and Nebraska, the father engaging as a farmer in Webster county of the latter state. For more complete details concerning his life refer to the sketch of John J. Suess, which appears elsewhere in this volume. Emil Suess was educated in the public schools of Webster county, Neb., where he made his home until 1891, when he came to California, locating first in Ventura county, where later he homesteaded a ranch in the Ojai valley, near Nordhoff. He improved this property and at the same time drove the stage for the Oak Glen Cottages for the period of three years. Coming to Southern California in 1895 he located in Redlands and engaged as a clerk in the Star Grocery, then his brother's business establishment, but not caring for the indoor work gave it up after two years and entered the transfer business. His association with this work induced his purchase of an interest after six years in the Redlands Livery, then owned by Mr. Wilmot, and conducted on Central avenue. The two continued in partnership for the period of eighteen months, when Mr. Suess sold his interest to Mr. Wilmot. He spent the ensuing year in traveling, during which he visited the St. Louis exposition and also his old home in Nebraska. On his return he purchased in September, 1904, the Club Stables then conducted by Singleton & Haskell. These were the oldest stables in Redlands and, located at the corner of Fourth and State streets, commanded a large portion of the custom. He is located in a substantial, three-story building, 80x300 feet in dimensions and facing both streets, with a second floor arranged for stalls, having a capacity for one hundred and fifty head, and a third floor for the storage of hay and grain, all vehicles being on the first floor. Mr. Suess is interested in the Redlands Driving Association, formed for the purpose of caring for the tourists who come to the city sightseeing, he being secretary and manager.

Mr. Suess was married in Redlands to Miss Martha Kindscher, a native of Iowa, and born of this union is one daughter, Gladys. In his fraternal relations Mr. Suess is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and also the Odd Fellows, having been made a member of this organization here and is now past grand, and is also a member of the Encampment and Canton. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. He is a member of the Board of Trade and active in its affairs.

JONATHAN F. FULKERSON, general blacksmith and wagonmaker of Somis, Ventura county, is a native of Illinois, his birth having occurred in Pope county, February 17, 1867. His father, William B. Fulkerson, now residing in Graham county, Kans., is also a native of Illinois, to which state his parents removed in the early days of the northwest. He was a shoemaker by trade, but always followed agricultural pursuits instead. In 1872 he removed to Rooks county, Kans., from that point located in Graham county, and he is now conducting a hotel in Bogue. His wife, formerly Mary Whiteside, was born in Illinois and died in Kansas in 1879, at the age of thirty-nine years.

Reared in Kansas, Jonathan F. Fulkerson received his education in the public schools of that state, after which in Webster, Kans., he was apprenticed to learn the trade of blacksmith. He was early attracted to the Pacific coast by the more abundant opportunities held out to the ambitious, enterprising young man, and on the 23rd of March, 1891, he located in Somis, Ventura county, where for the past fifteen years he has been engaged in the prosecution of his trade. Step by step he has steadily advanced to a high position in his work, winning the confidence of those whose patronage he sought until to-day, having owned his shop since January, 1900, he has a large and lucrative trade. He has every equipment for the conduct of a large business, carrying a stock of the best iron and steel afforded by shops of this character in the county, and making a specialty of horse-shoeing and plow work which gives universal satisfaction. He always has a force of three men and for a part of the time employes five.

Mr. Fulkerson was married in Somis, December 25, 1902, to Miss Fannie G. Hughes, a daughter of W. A. Hughes, of whom extended mention is made in another part of this volume. They have two daughters: Birdie Adell and Inez Floyd. Mr. Fulkerson is associated fraternally with the Masons, being a member of Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., and Oxnard Chapter No. 86, R. A. M.; and also affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America, being consul of the Camp at Somis. He was the first postmaster of Somis, being appointed to the position May 12, 1893, and discharging the duties in an able manner for the period of two years. He is actively interested in affairs concerning Somis and is liberal and public spirited in his support of its best interests. As a trustee of the Somis school board he seeks the advancement of its educational interests. The qualities of his citizenship have won for him the high position which he holds in the esteem of his fellow-townsmen, who count him among the men who uphold our civic honor.

JOHN LOYNACHAN. One of the most popular young men in the Lompoc valley is John Loynachan, a progressive and enterprising rancher, who has made a success in his business enterprises and gained a host of friends. His father, John Loynachan, Sr., was born in Scotland and immigrated to Canada, which latter country was the birthplace of the mother. Seven children comprised the parental family, the subject of this sketch being the only son. Of the six daughters four still live in Canada, which was the parental home, and one in Massachusetts. The father was a ranchman in Canada and lived there until his death, at the age of sixty-two years. The mother was forty-nine at the time of her death.

John Loynachan was born July 15, 1865, in Canada, where he received his early education, and when his school days were over immediately engaged in ranching there, having assumed charge of his father's farm when only fourteen years old. At the age of twenty-seven he decided to immigrate to California, and made San Francisco his first objective point. He soon went to the redwood lumber country, where he worked for a time, and in the fall of 1893 arrived in Lompoc, where he has been engaged in ranching ever since. The twenty acres of land which he owns is situated in the limits of the town of Lompoc and it is his intention to erect a fine home thereon in the fall of 1907. He is now farming a rented ranch of three hundred and fifty acres and raises hogs and cattle on the two hundred acres of pasture land, farming the remainder, which is planted to barley and beans, and five acres is devoted to a Bellflower apple orchard.

In 1893 Mr. Loynachan was married to Miss Jeanette McAdam, a native Canadian, and to them have been born three children: Gertrude M., Bernice A. and J. Dean. The wife is a member of the Baptist Church; while in Canada Mr. Loynachan gave his allegiance to the Presbyterian Church. Politically he affiliates with the Republican party, and fraternally he holds membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows Lodge at Lompoc and belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

N. H. HAMILTON, M. D. One of the most prominent physicians of Southern California is N. H. Hamilton, widely known and highly esteemed in Santa Monica, where he has engaged in active practice since September, 1894, firmly establishing himself among the medical fraternity of this section. He has brought to bear in his work a thorough knowledge broadened by practical experience covering a period of over thirty years, constantly increased by wide reading (for he is an indefatigable student and keeps thoroughly in touch with modern thought and methods), and is also possessed of personal qualities of character which enable him to come in closer contact with his patients than is the case with the average physician. He is a native of the middle west, his birth having occurred at Ann Arbor, Mich., February 17, 1852, but when only two years old he was taken by his parents to Winona, Minn., where he grew to manhood. His preliminary education was received through an attendance of the grammar and high schools of the town in which he lived, after which he returned to his birthplace and became a student in the medical department of the University of Michigan, having selected this profession for his lifework. Later he entered Rush Medical College of Chicago, from which institution he was graduated with honors in 1877, thoroughly equipped theoretically for the practice of his profession.

Following the westward trend of immigration, Dr. Hamilton, immediately following his graduation, located in the then new town of Grafton, N. Dak., and established himself as a practitioner. Step by step he advanced to a place of prominence in his profession, constantly increasing his patronage and widening his influence until he became known as a representative physician of that section. For seventeen years he remained a resident of that place, and for fourteen years of this time served as president of the United States board of examining surgeons for soldiers' pensions; also, for a similar period, served as county physician. For two years he served as county coroner, for four years as a member of the examining board for the insane, and for nine years acted as secretary and superintendent of the county board of health. He was the first vice-president of the North Dakota State Medical Society, and served as district surgeon for the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railroad Companies. Significant of his ability, his standing as a physician and citizen, were the honors which came to him unsought, and in which positions he faithfully and efficiently discharged all duties incumbent upon him. Impaired health, however, caused by constant application to his duties and the rigors of the northern climate finally induced Dr. Hamilton to leave Grafton, and in September, 1894, he came to Southern California and established his home in Santa Monica, where he has ever since remained. Besides his private practice he is district surgeon for the Southern Pacific Railway; is the medical examiner for all the old-line insurance companies in Southern California; and also acts in the same capacity for four fraternal societies. He is a director in the Santa Monica Bank and is actively connected with other local enterprises, in the success of which he is deeply interested. During the anti-saloon movement in Santa Monica in March and April, 1900, he was one of five constituting the executive committee that rid the town of her ten saloons. In 1906 he with others organized the Santa Monica Bay Hospital Company, with a capital stock of $100,000, he being made president of the company. At a cost of about $40,000 the company has erected a building on the corner of Pacific and Fourth streets, Santa Monica, overlooking the ocean.

Dr. Hamilton has taken a deep interest in various medical societies of Southern California, being a member of the Los Angeles County Medical Association, California State Medical Society, and also belongs to the American Medical Association, which is the largest medical association in the world. Despite his engrossing professional cares he has also taken an active interest in fraternal organizations, in Grafton having been made a Mason and there raised to the degrees of Royal Arch and the Commandery, and also became a member of the Mystic Shrine, which he joined in Fargo, N. Dak. He secured demits from these various lodges and is now identified with Santa Monica Lodge No. 307, F. & A. M., Chapter and Commandery, and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles. He is also a member of the Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias, in Santa Monica, and the Independent Order of Foresters of the same place. He is a director in the Western Masons' Mutual Life Association of Los Angeles, and maintains a deep interest in its welfare. In his political affiliations he is a Republican, and believing in the active duties of a citizen he has sought to advance the principles he endorses. As a member of the Presbyterian Church of Santa Monica he takes a deep interest in forwarding all charitable and denominational movements. Personally he is held in the highest esteem by all who have known him, either professionally or socially, admiring and respecting him for the sterling integrity of his character, for the personal honor he steadfastly maintains, and the practical demonstration of his belief in the universal brotherhood of man.

The home of Dr. Hamilton, in Santa Monica, is presided over by his wife, whom he married October 21, 1887. She was formerly Miss Bertha R. Crookston, a native of Ann Arbor, Mich., and a woman of rare personal qualities and grace of manner. In the years of their married life she has proven a worthy helpmate to her husband and has maintained through all conditions her good cheer and Christian helpfulness. Four daughters were born of their union, three of whom are living, Helen, Clara and Esther. The second daughter, Edith, died October 16, 1900, after an unsuccessful operation for appendicitis. The Hamilton home is a place of refinement and culture, and there also true hospitality abounds. Both the doctor and his wife hold a high place in the social life of the city and are universally esteemed.

BRUCE E. DOUGLAS. One of the many active, enterprising and worthy citizens of Los Angeles county is Bruce E. Douglas, who until recently, as proprietor of the Bay View Transfer Company, carried on a thriving business in Long Beach. Energetic, accommodating and painstaking he met with much success in his occupation, being popular with his patrons. In 1906 he embarked in the real-estate business under the name of the Riverside Real Estate Company. A son of Cyrus Douglas, he was born in March, 1845, in Vermilion county, Ill., being one of a large family of children.

Born in 1792, in Vermont, Cyrus Douglas lived there until 1820, when he migrated to Illinois, becoming a pioneer farmer of Vermilion county. He was a man of influence and patriotism, and served as a soldier in the Black Hawk war, and was afterwards engaged in agricultural pursuits in Illinois until his death, in 1880, when nearly ninety years of age. In 1822 he married Ruby Bloss, they obtaining distinction by being the first white couple married in Vermilion county. She was born in 1800, and died in 1865. Thirteen children, nine boys and four daughters, were born of their union, Bruce E., the subject of this sketch, being the youngest child. Six of the children are still living of the eleven that grew to years of maturity. Of the two that died young, one was killed accidentally on the ice, and the other by being thrown from a horse. Three of the sons served in the Civil war, Thomas enlisting in the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, while Joseph and Luther belonged to a Missouri regiment. Dorman, one of the older children, came to California in company with several friends in 1849, and after mining two years with good success returned to Illinois, and is still living there, being now over eighty years of age. Three other sons besides Bruce settled permanently in California, namely: Cyrus, who came here in 1852, served in the Indian war in Oregon, and subsequently located in Lompoc, Santa Barbara county, residing there until his death; George, who has been a resident of Lompoc since coming here in 1888; and Joseph, who settled in Pomona in 1892, and is now one of the city trustees.

On account of ill health when young, Bruce E. Douglas was unable to attend school at all, so that he is largely self-educated, having gleaned his knowledge by reading and observation. At the age of twenty-two years he left home, and until September, 1887, was engaged in farming for himself in his native state. Coming to California in that year he located in Riverside when the boom was at its height, purchased an orange grove, but when the property depreciated he lost everything. The following thirteen years he carried on a good business in establishing orange groves, setting out and budding trees, after which he had charge of S. F. Herrick's nursery for three years. January 1, 1904, he purchased the business of the Bay View Transfer Company, which he managed successfully until April, 1906.

In March, 1866, in Illinois, Mr. Douglas married Lucy Girard, of Ohio, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Cyrus E., manager of the Bay View Transfer Company, who is married and has one child; Minnie, wife of John L. Tummond, of Los Angeles; and Clara, wife of P. M. Ogden, of High Grove, Riverside county. Politically Mr. Douglas is a loyal adherent of the Republican party. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Illinois in 1870, joining Fairmount Lodge No. 590, A. F. & A. M., and is now a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M. Religiously both he and his wife are Christian Scientists.

AUSTIN WALSH. Conspicuous among the earlier settlers of San Diego county is Austin Walsh, who, with his twin brother, Ambrose Walsh, located near Valley Center upwards of thirty years ago, and has since been a valued and useful member of the community. By his intelligent industry and wise management he has built up one of the finest homesteads along the western coast, and by his sterling worth as a man and a citizen is held in high esteem by his neighbors and friends. He was born, January 29, 1845, in Atchison county, Mo., a son of the late Walter Walsh.

The birth of Walter Walsh occurred on the high seas, while his parents were crossing the Atlantic ocean, en route to the United States. Reared and educated in Maine, he began life there as a farmer. Wishing, however, to take advantage of cheap lands on the western frontier, he subsequently migrated to Missouri, taking up land that was in its virgin wildness, and there improving a homestead. Again starting westward in 1854, he crossed the plains with ox teams, following the noted train in which all of its members were massacred, and during the long journey had much trouble with the Indians. Purchasing one hundred and eighty acres of land in Contra Costa county, he lived there about sixteen years, when he sold out and moved to Mission valley, San Diego county. Entering land at Valley Center October 16, 1879, he began the improvement of a ranch, on which he resided until his death, in 1887, at the age of sixty-nine years. He was a man of excellent character, a Democrat in politics, a member of the Masonic fraternity, and belonged to the Catholic Church. In Maine he married Jane H. Colby, a native of that state, and they became the parents of eleven children, nine of whom are living. His wife survived him, dying in 1888, aged sixty-five years.

Coming across the plains when a lad of nine years, Austin Walsh was educated in the district schools of Contra Costa county, and until twenty-three years old lived with his parents, assisting in the care of the farm. Upon beginning the battle of life for himself he entered one hundred and sixty acres of land in San Diego county and set to work as a farmer in earnest. In his undertakings he has met with some reverses, but his good fortunes have far outnumbered his failures, and he is now the owner of two valuable ranches in Valley Center, one containing one hundred acres, and the other forty-five acres. He is devoting himself to general ranching, and is numbered among the progressive and prosperous agriculturists of the community.

May 3, 1884, in Merced, Cal., Mr. Walsh married Nancy C. Merrill, who was born in this state, and died at Valley Center in 1901. Seven children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Walsh, namely: Alice G., Anna, Norval (who died in infancy), Norman, Fannie, Merrill and Paul W. Politically Mr. Walsh is identified with the Democratic party, and for a number of years has served as clerk of the Vespa school district.

THOMAS HAZEL STEWART. Now retired from the active cares of life, Thomas H. Stewart is enjoying the competency acquired by him during the past busy years. He is of southern birth and breeding, his grandfather, Thomas Stewart of Scotland, having located the family fortunes in North Carolina, where he engaged as a farmer and Baptist minister. One of his sons, Charles Stewart, was also a Baptist minister, who organized a church in Pickens county, Ala., serving for forty years as its pastor with the exception of the thirty-seventh year when he took a vacation. Aaron Stewart, another son, was born in North Carolina and in young manhood became a farmer and millwright, erecting water mills in Alabama and Mississippi. He died in Winston county, Miss., after a life of usefulness and helpfulness to those about him. He was a patriot, serving in the war of 1812 in Colonel Alcorn's regiment and Harpool's Company. He married Sarah Brock, who was born in Bedford county, Tenn., a daughter of Isaac Brock, also a native of the same state, and a farmer throughout his entire life. Mrs. Stewart also died in Mississippi. She was the mother of thirteen children, of whom ten attained maturity and six are now living.

Thomas Hazel Stewart was born in Pickens county, Ala., June 7, 1828, the fourth in the family of his parents. He was reared principally in Mississippi in the vicinity of Louisville, and received a meager education in a subscription school, whose sessions were held in the primitive log cabin of the age. The death of his father occurring when he was only six years of age necessitated his remaining at home to assist in the management of the plantation. With the exception of a trip made to California in 1852 he remained at home until he was twenty-seven years old. His trip to California was made via Nicaragua and upon his arrival in the state he went to the mines on the American, Yuba and Feather rivers, engaging in this occupation for nearly two years. Returning east via the Isthmus of Panama, he remained on the home farm until 1855, when he purchased land and improved property of his own, also erecting a mill on the Harshuqua river. In 1856 he married Miss Anna L. Kirk, whose death occurred the same year. In connection with his brother, he engaged in the milling business, operating by water power flour, corn, saw and cotton mills. They were successful in their enterprises and with his accumulated means Mr. Stewart added to his landed property until the breaking out of the Civil war in 1861. Loyal to the cause of the "sunny south" he enlisted in Company A, First Regiment Mississippi Infantry, and after six months' service assisted in the organization of Company A, Forty-first Regiment Mississippi Infantry. For over a year he served as orderly sergeant in that company, when the quartermaster detailed him in charge of the transporting of the regiment, later in transporting of the brigade, then the division, and in battle was placed in charge of the ambulance corps. He participated until the close of the war, taking part in the battles of Resaca, Atlanta, Chattahoochie, Franklin, Nashville and many others. He was wounded five times and at the close of his service was on crutches, it being ten years before he fully recovered from the effects of a wound received at Nashville. He also had two brothers in the Civil war, Charles J., who was killed at Gettysburg, and Lieut. Robert C., killed at Stone River.

Upon his return to civic pursuits Thomas H. Stewart built a large steam saw-mill in Montgomery county, Miss., on Black river, and there engaged in the manufacture of lumber for seven years. Disposing of these interests at the close of this period he engaged in farming for several years, in 1881 again making a trip to California. He located near Saticoy, Ventura county, where he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, shortly afterward improving the property by the erection of a substantial residence, barn and outbuildings. With the accumulating means he bought adjoining property until he now owns three hundred and twenty acres all in a high state of cultivation. For many years he was known as one of the extensive farmers in that section. In 1904 he located in Long Beach, investing in business property on Third street, where he erected the Stewart building in connection with his son, Charles, and daughter, Mrs. Hill. They also erected Armory Hall, a building 40x80 feet in dimensions.

In Mississippi Mr. Stewart was united in marriage with Miss Mattie C. Dooley, a native of Georgia, and born of this union are three children: John of Long Beach; Eloise, wife of R. L. Hill, of Long Beach; and Charles W., a real-estate dealer of this city. Mr. Stewart is a member of the Baptist Church in his religious affiliations. Politically he adheres to the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party. He was made a Mason in Robert Burns Lodge No. 177 in Kilmichael, Miss.

HENRY THOMAS KORTNER. A wide-awake rancher in Santa Barbara county is found in Henry T. Kortner, brother of Christian Kortner, one of the extensive agriculturists and stock raisers of the vicinity of Santa Maria. Mr. Kortner was born in Norway September 9, 1860, and like his father followed the sea in the early part of his life, leaving home at the age of fourteen, and continuing upon the deep for nine years. The last four and a half years of his sea-faring life was spent along the Pacific coast. He first located across the river in San Luis Obispo county, where he started at the bottom round of the ladder as a farm hand.

In 1891 Mr. Kortner rented the three hundred acres of land upon which he still lives, and where he is engaged principally in grain raising. He is making a success of his chosen calling, and is supplementing his practical work by study and research along these lines. He is a bachelor, and his home is presided over by his sister, Otelda Kortner, who shares his ambitions and attends to his comfort and well being. Mr. Kortner is broad minded and liberal, a believer in education and good government, and a supporter of the Democratic party. While not aspiring to office, he has served as road commissioner and has held other offices within the gift of his fellow-townsmen. Socially he is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Foresters at Santa Maria. Industry and integrity are among the most valuable assets of Mr. Kortner, and these, combined with intelligence and good judgment, assure him a liberal share of material prosperity.

JOHN P. CHRISTENSEN, a contractor and builder of San Diego, was born at Aalborg, Denmark, June 5, 1827, being the youngest of nine children, of whom only four survive. He received a common-school education, studied architecture at the Architectural Institute, and also learned the bricklayer's and plasterer's trade, which he followed for a number of years.

In the spring of 1866 Mr. Christensen left Denmark, taking the steamer at Hamborg for New York. Going to Chicago he found employment in the office of M. Waskyer, an architect of that city, but later went to work at his trade as bricklayer. In the fall he went to New Orleans, remaining there until the spring of 1867, when he went to St. Louis and there worked at his trade until the fall of 1869, when he came to California, reaching San Francisco in October. While there he read about the different places, among them being San Diego with its fine climate and excellent harbor. He came to San Diego December 18, 1869, going to work at plastering for Van Poser & Fraser. When the Horton house was ready for bricklaying he went to work on that under Henry Hamphill (the pioneer bricklayer) and after the Horton house was finished he began contracting for himself in bricklaying and plastering. He sent to San Francisco for two barrels, of English Portland cement, for which was paid $10 per barrel. That was the first Portland cement which ever came into San Diego. Having done considerable cement work in the old country the trade was not new to him and his architectural and practical training made him well qualified to introduce the innovation into San Diego, where his satisfactory filling of such contracts did much toward interesting people in the use of cement. He is the pioneer manufacturer of artificial stone in San Diego, as well as all other kinds of plain and ornamental concrete and cement work.

May 6, 1874, Mr. Christensen was married to Mrs. Hannah Marshall, a native of Burlington, Iowa, and of their five children only one daughter survives. She is a school teacher and a graduate of the Normal school at San Diego. Mr. Christensen is a member of San Diego Lodge of Odd Fellows, Veterans and Encampment, and has always supported the Republican party.

ALVAH DOWNEY. Mr. Downey's coming to the west can in no way be traced to the influence which brought the Argonauts hither in 1849, for three years prior to this he had set out on his march toward the setting sun. Leaving his parents in Illinois, in 1846 he came overland as far as Salt Lake, and some years later again took up the journey to the coast, arriving in San Bernardino county in 1854. Indians were numerous here at that time, but as they were peaceable, gave little or no cause for disquiet or fear on the part of the newcomer.

Wild game was also plentiful, and many a buffalo and deer fell before his unerring rifle, thus furnishing the meat supply for the family. It was his custom in the early days to go on an expedition of this kind every fall, dressing and drying the meat in the mountains, and later bringing it down to the ranch.

A son of Calvin C. and Nancy (Meyers) Downey, Alvah Downey was born in Canada, September 29, 1828. When he was a lad of ten years his parents came to the States, locating in Hancock county, Ill., near Carthage, and there the father's earth life came to a close fifteen years later, his death occurring in 1853. The wife and mother also passed away there a few years later. In the meantime Alvah Downey had left the parental homestead and become established on the Pacific coast. Upon first coming to the county he purchased a number of lots in San Bernardino, and later bought the ranch upon which he now makes his home. This originally included forty acres, but he has since disposed of a portion of it and now has twenty-five, admirably located one and one half miles southwest of Highland. Probably no one in the county who came here as early as he did recalls more vividly the transformation which has taken place during the last half century. Excellent roads have taken the place of the blazed trail, telegraph and telephone wires cross and recross the fields, and the daily service of the rural free delivery adds immeasurably in distancing the discomforts and isolation of former days.

After coming to the west, February 22, 1849, Alvah Downey was united in marriage with Elizabeth Hawes, and of the two children born to them only one is now living, William A., a resident of San Bernardino. The daughter, Mary E., died when one and a half years old. Mrs. Elizabeth Downey passed away in 1876, and the following year Mr. Downey married Mary Benson, the daughter of Jerome Benson. Three children were born of the second marriage, as follows: Calvin H., who makes his home with his parents on the home place; Edna E., who is the wife of Samuel Johnson and lives in Oregon; and Jerome Henry, who lives near his parents. Mr. Downey is now nearing the four-score milestone of life, contented with his lot, at peace with the world and enjoying life only as one can who has lived well and worthily.

ERNST KOHLER. When Ernst Kohler came to Ventura county he had nothing but his two hands and a determination to succeed to enable him to achieve the success which is now his, but they were enough, for he is now in comfortable circumstances and has a fine home on his ranch near Oxnard. He is of German parentage, his birth having occurred March 26, 1858, in the province of Hanover, Germany, where his father, Henry Kohler, owned a farm. The son received his education through the medium of the common schools of Hanover and at the age of twenty-three decided to come to America, landing in San Francisco and remaining there two weeks to see the city and visit the various places of interest there. He then came to Ventura county and found employment on ranches in the vicinity of Hueneme. He soon decided to establish himself independently, however, and rented a piece of land in the Ocean View district and commenced to raise grain and stock. In 1892 he has accumulated sufficient funds to enable him to purchase the land which he had been renting and he now owns ninety acres upon which he has put all of the fine improvements it boasts. His crops are principally beets and beans, and in addition to farming his own land he rents an adjoining tract of fifty acres which is devoted to beets.

Mr. Kohler was married in Ventura county to Miss Barbara Furrer, who was born in Switzerland, and they have become the parents of three children: Francis Christopher, Dora Clara, and Mary Hulda. They are members of the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Kohler is considered one of the most reliable men of that vicinity and his many admirable qualities have won for him the highest respect and esteem of the citizens of Ventura county.

NATT W. TILTON. Capable and industrious, with a remarkable degree of push and energy, Natt W. Tilton holds a noteworthy position among those who have contributed liberally towards the growth and upbuilding of San Pedro. For many years he has been prominent as a city official, possessing in an eminent degree the discretion, trustworthiness and force of character which have made him so useful as a member of the common council, a position which he has filled acceptably to all for nearly a decade. A son of John A. Tilton, he was born September 17, 1857, in Fremont, Rockingham county, N. H., coming from a long line of honored New England ancestry.

A native of Tilton, N. H., John A. Tilton grew to manhood in his native town. In 1849, lured by the thrilling stories concerning the discovery of gold in California, he came around the Horn to this state, but after mining a few months with moderate recompensation for his labors he returned to the rugged hills of New Hampshire. In 1851 he made a second trip to the mining regions, coming by way of the Isthmus, and returning to New York by the same route the following year. Locating then in Fremont, N. H., he carried on general farming for a number of seasons. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, was wounded in battle, and at the end of a year was honorably discharged. In 1868 he removed to Chicago, Ill., where he was employed for a few years as a contractor and builder. Buying a farm in Reno, Nev., in 1878, he was there engaged in agricultural pursuits for about three years. Coming to California in 1881, he settled first at Stockton, then in Kern county, finally coming to San Pedro, where he resided until his death, at the age of seventy-eight years. He married Sarah Ann Heath, who was born in New Hampshire, a daughter of Nathaniel Heath, a farmer, and of the eight children born of their union, six survive. Two of the sons served in the Civil war, both being members of the Eleventh New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry. One of these, George A. Tilton, died from wounds received at the battle of Gettysburg, the other son, Edward D., served until the close of the war, after which he came to California, and for many years has not been heard from.

About eleven years old when his parents removed to Chicago, Natt W. Tilton was educated principally in the public schools of that city. Going from there to Reno, Nev., in 1875, he followed farming and teaming until 1881, when he settled in Stockton, Cal., where he continued as a teamster for five years. In 1886 he took up a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres in Delano, Kern county, where he carried on general farming during the summer seasons, spending his winters in Fresno, for four years of the time superintending the construction of the Risden and Kirby canal. Coming to San Pedro in 1893, he accepted the agency of the Union Ice Company and here built up a large and remunerative business for the firm. He was likewise agent for three breweries, the M. & Z. Brewery, the Los Angeles Brewing Company and the Weiland Brewery. Under his supervision ice houses were erected, and for nine years, under the name of the San Pedro Wholesale Company, he carried on a very large business. In 1902 he incorporated the business under that name and served as its president and manager until selling out his interests in the concern in February, 1903. A man of great financial and executive ability, far-seeing and possessing good judgment as an investor, he has acquired a fine property. In company with Mr. Menburg he has established a large business as a dealer in real estate under the title of the San Pedro & Wilmington Realty Company, with office in Wilmington. He has built a large residence for himself and family in San Pedro, and also owns a valuable farm of three hundred and twenty acres near Calexico, San Diego county, on which, in addition to raising alfalfa, cattle and horses, he has a bearing vineyard of five acres.

In Delano, Cal., Mr. Tilton married Mattie Meier, who was born at Cole Camp, Mo. Politically Mr. Tilton is an active adherent of the Republican party, which he has served with fidelity and ability in public affairs. In 1895 he was elected councilman, and served until he moved outside of the city limits. Eighteen months later that part of the town was taken into the municipal limits and he was re-elected to the same position, and has served continuously ever since. Fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and of the Eagles.

URIAH URBAN TYLER. Though thirty-five years have passed since the death of Mr. Tyler so indissolubly was his life associated with the upbuilding of San Bernardino, where he had made his home for twenty years, that his name and deeds are alike imperishable. Born November 13, 1826, in New York state, at the age of twenty-one he came across the plains as far as Salt Lake, remaining there until the following year, when he completed the journey to California. Coming the same year to San Bernardino, which was then little more than a hamlet, he entered heart and soul into whatever project was started for its upbuilding and for the part which he performed in bringing about better conditions all who remember him revere his memory. For a number of years during the early days his meat market was the only store of the kind in town, and after he gave this up he engaged in various lines of business. At the time John C. Fremont was surveying for the base line Mr. Tyler assisted in the work and also helped to place the monument on the mountain.

In Salt Lake City, May 14, 1865, Mr. Tyler was married to Rachael Moore, who was born in Ft. Madison, Iowa, August 26, 1841, the daughter of John Harvey and Clarissa (Droll) Moore. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tyler, as follows: George W., who lives at home with his mother; Lizzie A., Mrs. R. W. Colson, of Portland, Ore.; Emery B., in Nome, Alaska; Urban A., living in San Bernardino; John Hugh, also at home with his mother; and Edward Guy, deceased.

Not only was Mr. Tyler a believer in Republican principles, but he was a stanch supporter of those principles and did his part in gaining converts to his belief. As a candidate on his party's ticket he was elected the first deputy sheriff in Los Angeles, later was county clerk of San Bernardino county, his election as assessor following still later. As the first justice of the peace in San Bernardino his position was no sinecure, for he fought lawlessness and corruption to the bitter end, with the result that he was a terror to evildoers and had the stanch support and goodwill of the better element. For over thirty years he had been affiliated with the Masonic order, at the time of his death, July 4, 1871, being a member of the lodge at San Bernardino. In her declining years the widow is blessed in the companionship of her eldest and youngest sons, the three living together in the family home on Second street, San Bernardino.

JOSEPH WILEY WRIGHT. Since coming to Long Beach in 1904 Mr. Wright has gained considerable renown as a contractor, the initial training in that line being among his boyhood accomplishments at the carpenter's bench. Among the larger structures which stand as monuments to his handiwork are the Townsend building and the Eastman block, while in the residence district he has erected many of the finest homes in the city. Contracting, however, is only one of the lines in which he is engaged, for he is equally well known as a reliable real-estate dealer, and owns considerable valuable property in the residence district particularly.

The ancestry of the Wright family is traceable to Irish antecedents, for the grandfather, Joseph Wright, who established the family in the United States, was a native of the Emerald Isle. He settled in Virginia, in Roanoke county, and there his son, Chester B., was born in the town of that name, as was also the grandson, our subject. Besides following farming, a life to which he had been trained from boyhood, he also was a millwright, and it is safe to presume that he was very successful in both lines of endeavor, for he is now living retired on his Virginia farm, where he and his wife had lived for so many years and trained their eleven children. Before her marriage Martha Sweeney, Mrs. Wright was also born in Virginia, and her death occurred on the home farm in 1905.

Of the eleven children born to his parents, J. W. Wright was the eldest, his birth occurring in Roanoke, October 15, 1877. From the public schools of that place he matriculated in Norfolk college, there as well as in the common schools acquitting himself nobly. During his boyhood and youth he had applied himself to mastering the carpenter's trade whenever he could spare the time from his studies, so that when he was little more than a boy he had a knowledge of the business which justified him in starting out on his own behalf in 1896. Going to Lincoln, Logan county, Ill., he followed his trade there for about one year, during which time he erected the Spitley hotel, one of the finest buildings in that city. Returning to Virginia at the end of that time, he engaged in millwrighting, besides which he also worked at his regular trade. The years 1897-98 were spent in West Virginia, where he made a specialty of dealing in lumber and building mills, and during this time he also bought a farm and erected a mill upon it. Once more he returned to old Virginia, there following the lumber business until his removal to Dayton, Ohio, remaining in the latter place seven months. His coming to the west dates from the year 1902, at which time he went to Whittier, following his trade there for two years, at the end of that time locating in Long Beach, where he has become well known as one of the leading contractors and builders as well as reliable real-estate dealers in the city.

Mr. Wright has a very pleasant and commodious residence at the corner of Lemon and Alamitos streets, his home being presided over by his wife, who, before her marriage, was Miss Sallie Light, she also being a native of the Old Dominion. Two children have blessed their marriage, Clarence B. and Alta May. Mr. Wright is a valued member of numerous fraternal organizations, among them the Independent Order of Odd Fellows (being high priest of the encampment branch of his lodge, and is also serving as vice-grand of the subordinate branch), Modern Woodmen of America, Modern Brotherhood, Rebekahs and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

GEORGE H. MARSH. Since taking up his residence in Pomona in 1897 Mr. Marsh has substantially impressed his merit upon the community. Among the busy enterprises of this thriving town due mention belongs to his manufactory at the corner of Cypress and Sixth streets, where he makes a specialty of manufacturing ladders and screens. Among the former are the Acme extension ladder, the tripod fruit-picking ladder, and the painter's extension ladder. The plant is supplied with modern conveniences and appliances, and a ten-horse power gas engine furnishes the motive power for the planers, saws and lathes.

Mr. Marsh is of English birth and ancestry, and was born in Kent, November 3, 1859, the son of William Henry and Emma (Crow) Marsh. The father now makes his home in Pasadena, his wife having died in England. George H. Marsh was educated in the public schools of Seven Oaks, Kent, England, and when he had reached his seventeenth year had definite plans as to his future business career. Going to Bristol, England, he apprenticed himself to learn parlor-organ building and such was his application and interest in the work that it was not long before he had established a factory of his own in the same city in which he had learned his trade, his plant being known as the Temple Organ works. After a number of years' close application to the business he took a deserved respite in the year 1891 and came to the United States, visiting Santa Rosa, Cal., among other places. Returning to England he once more took up the work of organ-building and for two years carried it on with apparent content. His visit to California, however, had made a lasting impression on his mind, and his object in disposing of his business in 1896 was to take up his permanent residence in the Land of Sunshine and Flowers. For about a year after coming to Southern California he was interested in the furniture business in Los Angeles, and the following year he came to Pomona and established himself as a manufacturer of ladders and screens, his plant being the only one of the kind in town, hence the rapid growth of his business. The products of his factory are well known commodities throughout this part of the country. Not only is Mr. Marsh a manufacturer, but he is an inventor as well, having originated the bolted step used in the ladders of his manufacture, as well as the patent lock.

Mr. Marsh was married in England to Miss Nellie Sewell, who was a native of that country also, and two children, William Gordon and Louisa have been born to them. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in their daily living exemplify the teaching they profess. Public-spirited and enterprising, Mr. Marsh is one who is not content to live for himself alone, but is happiest when giving joy or comfort to others, which makes it superfluous to say that he has friends innumerable.

JOHN BJORKMAN. A man of sterling worth and integrity, industrious, energetic and progressive, John Bjorkman is numbered among the valued citizens of San Pedro, where for one year he served as treasurer of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California, one of its most important business organizations. A native of Finland, he was born, May 4, 1871, in Nyacarleby, where his parents, John Frederick and Sophia (Harold) Bjorkman, spent their entire lives, being engaged in agricultural pursuits. He is one of a family consisting of eight children, five of whom are living, namely: Carl, of Los Angeles; John, the special subject of this sketch; Mary, of Los Angeles; Henry, of San Pedro; and Mrs. Louise Gustason, of Nyacarleby, Finland.

Brought up on the home farm, John Bjorkman received his elementary education in the common schools. Immigrating to America in 1889, he came directly in San Pedro, which was then but a comparatively small place, and for about four months worked on a farm. Entering then the employ of the San Pedro Lumber Company, he began in a humble capacity, and gradually worked his way upward, becoming lumber inspector for that firm. Resigning that position in 1895, he established himself as a lumber surveyor, working for different companies as tallyman, and meeting with excellent success. In 1901 he assisted in organizing the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California, of which he has since been an active and prominent member, and for one year was its treasurer. Mr. Bjorkman is a man of good financial ability, and in addition to accumulating other property has a fine residence at No. 119 Orizaba street.

September 4, 1902, Mr. Bjorkman married Hannah Sisbacka, a native of Purmo, Finland, from which she emigrated in 1902, coming from there to San Pedro, arriving in this city on July 12 of that year. In religion, Mr. and Mrs. Bjorkman are Lutherans.

CHARLES L. MULLHOLAND. In 1884 Mr. Mullholand came to California and since that time has succeeded in building up for himself a competence, proving himself a pioneer farmer in the peet lands and successfully establishing his claim that these lands could be profitably cultivated. Mr. Mullholand is a native of Wyandot county, Ohio, his birth having occurred in Carey June 25, 1864; his father, William, was also born in Ohio, near McCutchenville, while his grandfather, Hugh, was born in Ireland and became a pioneer farmer of Ohio, where he died. William Mullholand engaged as a farmer in Ohio until his retirement from active life, when he located in Adrian, Ohio. His wife, formerly Lucinda Long, was born in Pennsylvania, and she also survives. They were the parents of ten children, of whom seven are now living.

The fifth child in the family, Charles L. Mullholand, was reared on the paternal farm in Ohio, receiving an education in the district school in the vicinity of his home. At the age of thirteen years he became dependent upon his own resources, inheriting the sturdy spirit of his ancestors. He worked on various farms throughout the country, his last five years in Ohio being spent on the farm of David Straw. In 1884 he came to Los Angeles, thence went to Colton, and from there to the Greenlead mines, after which he mined in the Holcomb valley for two years. Going to San Diego he was employed for two months in the building of the No. 2 tunnel, after which he returned to Colton and entered the employ of J. V. Suman. In 1889 he came to Los Angeles county and made a contract with Richard Garvey to run a tunnel into the hills. This he did, at a cost of $8,000. He was then employed on the Ripatti ranch, working for Hellman, Newmark and Bicknell, and while in their employ ran a nine hundred foot tunnel for them. He then did two thousand feet of work on the Titus ranch for Bradbury and Bicknell. In the meantime he had purchased ten acres of swamp land, which he now began to improve and in 1892 purchased another ten acres and improved it, his horses having to wear peet shoes when he ditched and tiled the land. In 1896 he purchased another ten acres adjoining, which he ditched and improved, and the next year planted seven acres in potatoes, from which he obtained three hundred sacks per acre. He sold at a profit of $450 per acre, this being the first large yield in the vicinity. He continued his farming enterprise and finally bought the old Bolton place near the Durfee ranch, where he made many improvements and began general farming and gardening. The first ten acres he purchased he has now set to walnuts, apples and peaches, and on this has erected his home residence, owning in all thirty acres; besides which he owns property in Adrian, Ohio, where his father still lives. He has taken a prominent part in matters of public import and has served efficiently as school trustee in the Puente district. Politically he is a stanch adherent of Democratic principles.

ALBERT SLACK. A native son of the state, Albert Slack was born near El Monte, Los Angeles county, July 14, 1868, a son of William Slack, a well remembered pioneer of Southern California and one of its prominent citizens, whose history will be found elsewhere in this volume. He was next to the youngest in a family of ten children, all of whom are now living. Reared on the paternal farm near El Monte, he received his education in the public schools of this place, after which, at the age of nineteen years, he engaged as a clerk in a general merchandise establishment here. In Monrovia, January 12, 1890, he was united in marriage with Miss Eva Irene Durfee, born on her father's homestead near El Monte. James Devine Durfee was one of the earliest pioneers of this section, locating here in 1859, and gradually rising to a position of affluence and influence in Southern California. More complete details concerning his career are given in his personal biography, which appears elsewhere in this volume. Immediately following their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Slack located on a farm near El Monte, upon which Mr. Slack engaged in general farming with financial success, which enabled him in 1902 to purchase his present property. This consists of a portion of the old Allen property, located two and a half miles south of El Monte, ten acres having been set out in walnuts, while twenty acres of peet land is rented for celery and general gardening purposes. Mr. Slack has one of the finest ranches in this section, well improved and highly cultivated, and which brings him in large financial returns. In addition to his farming enterprises he is also interested in teaming and as a wholesale dealer in hay, grain and wood, furnishing the first named commodity to South Pasadena. Mr. and Mrs. Slack have three children, Howard Albert, Perry Durfee and Majorie Diantha. Politically Mr. Slack is a stanch Republican.

OLIVER PERRY THORNE. The fact that Oliver Perry Thorne is a new resident of Long Beach does not in any sense signify that he is new at the cement business, for he has been engaged in this work all of his life and has a thorough, practical knowledge of it in all its details, which accounts in a large measure for the success of the Ornamental Stone and Brick Company, of which he has been manager since acquiring an interest in the firm in May, 1906. A member of a family of seven children, six of whom are now living, Mr. Thorne was born March 5, 1871, in Winchester, Ind., the son of D. M. and Lucy (Keever) Thorne, both natives of Indiana. The father was a prominent business man of Winchester, and a large landowner, and was an influential citizen who took an active interest in the public life of the community, at one time serving on the board of county commissioners from his district. During the Civil war he served in the Fifth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry as a first lieutenant, fought valiantly for his country, and during the remainder of his life carried scars from wounds received in battle. His death in Indiana removed a man who had many friends and was held in the highest respect and esteem by all who knew him.

After completing his studies in the public and high schools of his native state Mr. Thorne learned the carpenter's trade and followed it for two years, after which for a like period he was employed by T. J. Lyst & Son, large cement contractors of Anderson, Ind., working for them as foreman in various parts of Indiana and Ohio. Following this he established himself in a cement-contracting business in Winchester, where he owned one of the first cement block machines brought into that city. His business at this time also embraced general street contracting, and in all he met with excellent success. It was in the fall of 1905 that he located in Long Beach and engaged in cement contracting for a few months before buying an interest in his present business. The Ornamental Stone and Brick Company manufacture ornamental stone and cement pressed brick, using two Wingate cement block machines and one Jackson cement pressed brick machine. They also do a general contracting business in heavy cement and re-enforced concrete work and have furnished materials for many public and business buildings in the city, giving entire satisfaction to their patrons.

Mr. Thorne's marriage, which occurred in Lynn, Ind., united him with Miss Mattie Norton, a native of that place. Fraternally he is connected with a number of the more prominent organizations, having been made a Mason in Lynn Lodge No. 223, A. F. & A. M.; is a member of Lynn Lodge No. 294, I. O. O. F., belonging also to the Encampment of Lynn and the canton at Winchester, Ind.; and holds membership in the Knights of Pythias Lodge at Lynn. Politically he is an advocate of Republican principles. As a public spirited citizen, an enterprising business man, and one whose well-rounded interests give him broad and liberal views he is accorded a high place in the esteem of all with whom he comes in contact.

SAMUEL WARNOCK. The changing destinies of military service established the Warnock family in Southern California, the first to found the race on this soil having been Samuel Warnock, a native of the north of Ireland and a soldier in the United States army. While in the early dawn of manhood he enlisted in the army and in 1849 was sent to California as a member of Company I, Second Infantry of Major Heintzelman's command. When the discovery of gold in the far west attracted emigrants by the thousands the government found it necessary to establish military posts along the route of travel in order to protect the defenseless gold-seekers from the hostility of the Indians. For this purpose the secretary of war ordered Major Heintzelman with several companies of the Second Infantry to establish posts at various points along the western coast and on the lonely deserts. Among other posts the major established was that on the right bank of the Colorado river at its junction with the Gila, and this he named Fort Yuma. The location was an exceedingly important one, for the emigrants, having fought their way down the Gila, had previous to the coming of the soldiers fallen an easy prey to the red man.

Concerning the experiences of the soldiers at Fort Yuma in those early days Joseph Swycaffer, an old comrade of Samuel Warnock, has given this statement: "Although the establishment of the post at Fort Yuma was a benefit to the emigrant it was a death trap to many a soldier. It was one of the most forbidding and desolate places at that time on the continent of America; there was no rest for the wicked and no peace for the righteous. The red men were always on the alert to surprise the camp and murder the occupants. This was in 1850, and they were then particularly active in their efforts to destroy the camp. The year before they were successful in their raid on the Clanton party near the same place, destroying the entire party of over forty people, not one escaping to tell the tale.

"Thus it was that the soldiers were always on duty and slept on their arms, if sleep they could, with the thermometer ranging anywhere from one hundred and twelve to one hundred and thirty-two degrees, with swarms of gnats and flies by day and myriads of mosquitoes by night. The soldiers' rations were of the poorest kind and no vegetables of any sort whatever—old army stores that perhaps had been lying in warehouses since the commencement of the Mexican war, then shipped to California for the troops in service here. The rations were five or six months at sea in a ship's hold before reaching Benicia, thence to San Diego, thence across the mountains and desert to Fort Yuma, about a year in transit. Under such conditions disease broke out and it did not take long to start a graveyard under the hill at Fort Yuma. It will readily be seen that the available force of the camp was soon greatly reduced and that the lives of all depended entirely upon the bravery and endurance of a few hardy men whom neither climate, red men or other productions of this 'hell hole' (as it was called) could swerve from duty. One of those brave boys was the comrade who has heard and answered the last bugle call. He had the entire confidence of his officers and if there was any dangerous or confidential duty to be done, Samuel Warnock was always on the detail. He completed his service in 1854, and was honorably discharged, with character good."

After leaving the army Mr. Warnock was engaged by the quartermaster's department at Fort Yuma to carry the mail to that point from San Diego. The work was one of exceeding difficulty and taxed the powers of endurance of even a hardy man, while none but the bravest would attempt the work. It was felt by all that he was the man for the place. Not only was he the possessor of fearless courage which no peril could daunt, but in addition he had a thorough knowledge of the desert and the mountains and hence could find his way over the trackless stretch of sands and barren wastes. For three years he pursued this hazardous undertaking and then resigned in order to take up ranching.

The distinction of having been the first farmer in Ballena valley, San Diego county, belonged to Samuel Warnock. It was he who in 1855 turned the first furrows and sowed the first seed in the rich virgin soil of the valley, and for years afterward he was intimately associated with the agricultural development of the region. As newcomers began to be attracted to the district they came to him for advice as to land and from the first he wielded a large influence among his fellow-workers. In all business transactions he was the soul of honor, and never was known to dispute a debt nor to owe a dollar he did not pay. Often strangers came to his door in search of lodging and food, and none was refused shelter and the hospitality of the table, although most of these were unable to make any return for the kindness. He was ever ready to help others, even those who had been unfriendly to him were treated with the same generous spirit shown toward his friends. A citizen of irreproachable life and kindly heart, he was mourned when death ended his labors, November 9, 1905, and it was felt throughout the entire valley that one of its greatest men was gone from among the people. His marriage united him with Maria Bradley, who was born in the north of Ireland.

The old homestead of four hundred and twenty acres, which forms one of the finest ranches in the valley, is now owned by the family and operated by the three sons of the former owner, all of whom were born in San Diego, the dates of their births being as follows: Robert, February 26, 1876; Samuel H., October 20, 1877; and James B., Christmas day of 1879. The only daughter now living, Elizabeth Ann, was born April 11, 1883. The young men have been life long residents of San Diego county and are familiar with its agricultural conditions. As yet none of the three has married, but they remain together, working in partnership the tract inherited from the estate. At this writing they have two hundred acres in grain and much of the remaining acres are in pasturage, affording facilities for the care of a large number of head of stock. In the management of the land they display energy and wise judgment, and already they rank among the capable agriculturists of the valley.

JAMES L. DOUGHERTY. A pioneer of the state and one of its most successful ranchers and dairymen, James L. Dougherty, of Norwalk, has succeeded in establishing for himself a position of high esteem among the citizens of this section of Los Angeles county. He is of southern birth and lineage, his birth having occurred in Grayson county, Va., June 17, 1847; his parents, Charles and Rosamond (Hale) Dougherty, were natives respectively of North Carolina and Virginia. In 1868 they came to California with their son and located in Los Angeles county, living first at El Monte and then at Azusa, where the death of the father occurred after an active career as a farmer, which pursuit he followed throughout his entire life. His wife survives him and makes her home in Pomona, Cal. Mr. Dougherty was identified with the Odd Fellows fraternally and politically was a stanch advocate of Democratic principles. Both himself and wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Of their seven children, one son is deceased, and the remaining children are living in California.

The family removing to Texas when James L. Dougherty was but four years old, he received his education in the common schools of that state. He was a very youthful recruit when he enlisted in Captain White"s company, Gittings Battalion, under General Ford's command for service in the Civil war, but no more faithful or courageous soldier was found than he during the three years in which he acted in various capacities in the cause he loved. After the close of the war he remained in Texas until 1866, when he set out for California, only reaching San Antonio, however, before he turned back to the old home place and began raising cotton. He finally sold out and with his parents in 1868 made the trip overland with mule-teams to the El Dorado state, from San Bernardino journeying to El Monte, where they passed the ensuing two years. Mr. Dougherty then engaged in ranching and finally went to Azusa, where he purchased a tract of thirty acres and later set it out in fruit of various kinds. He remained in that section for about fifteen years and during this time was compelled to fight for his land, which was a part of a Spanish grant; he won the suit, however, and retained the property. Disposing of his interests in Azusa he came to the vicinity of Artesia, purchased thirty-five acres, later sold it, and bought his present ranch of one hundred and sixty acres. This is devoted to grain and alfalfa, while much of his time is given over to the management of a dairy, which is supplied by thirty-five cows of fine stock, the product being shipped to Los Angeles. He has improved his property by the erection of a comfortable residence, barns and outbuilding and all necessary equipment for conducting a successful ranching enterprise.

In Texas, in 1868, Mr. Dougherty was united in marriage with Miss Lorinda C. Barling, a native of Missouri, and born in McDonald county in 1851. Her father, Henry A. Barling, was born in Baltimore, Md., and reared in Fort Smith, Ark., while the mother, Sarah Price in maidenhood, was a native of Missouri. The mother died when her daughter (who was one of seven children, four of whom are living) was but a small child; later the family removed to Texas, where the father passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Dougherty became the parents of the following children: Sybil, who died at the age of three years; Charles, at home; and Frank H., who died June 20, 1900, while on a trip to Tahiti Island for his health, and was buried at sea. He left a widow, formerly Esther Lowenstein, and two children, one of whom has since died at the age of five years. Fraternally Mr. Dougherty is a member of the Knights of the Maccabees, of Artesia, and politically is a lifelong Democrat. He supports the Methodist Episcopal Church South of which his wife is a member. Mr. Dougherty is highly esteemed throughout this section and merits the position of general respect which he enjoys.

BERNHARD MAIER. So closely allied is the name of Bernhard Maier with that of the Greater Los Angeles Realty Company, that to mention one immediately suggests the other. The company has been in existence since September, 1905, at which time Bernhard Maier, Henry Kahn, Samuel J. Harris and Samuel Waktor united their efforts under the name of the Greater Los Angeles Realty Company and have since carried on an immense business in their line, operating in Los Angeles and the adjoining country, principally, although they also buy and sell improved and unimproved property in other parts of the country.

Bernhard Maier is of German nativity and was born in the town of Reckendorf, Bavaria, April 8, 1869, the son of Hirsch and Fannie (Raiss) Maier, they too being natives of the Fatherland. The public schools of his home town furnished him with the only training he was destined to receive in that line, for when he was scarcely more than a primary student he had formulated plans whereby the remainder of his life was to be associated with the New World. In 1886, when a lad of seventeen years of age, he debarked from the German port of Bremen and nine days later had passed inspection at Castle Garden, New York City. Without loss of time in the east he immediately made his way overland to Los Angeles, Cal., reaching this city August 10, 1886. Though unfamiliar with our customs and language he proved so apt a scholar in both that these disadvantages were only temporary handicaps. Going to Norwalk, Cal., he secured a clerkship in the general merchandise establishment of Speier & Swigart, a position which he held for eight years, having served his employer well and faithfully during that time. The national characteristic of thrift had been generously bestowed upon him by a long line of German ancestors, as was demonstrated during the eight years just mentioned. So frugally had he saved his earnings and so carefully had he noted and studied the details of the business, that upon leaving his first position he felt himself qualified to start in business for himself. Going to Rincon, Riverside county, in February, 1894, he established a merchandise business which he managed with good financial results for six years. In the meantime he had been appointed postmaster of the town, serving for four years in this capacity under the presidency of Grover Cleveland, besides which he also acted as agent for the Santa Fe Railroad for about one year. In 1899, after selling his stock and good-will to L. Wells & Son, he went to Benson, Ariz., and again established a general merchandise business, which he conducted personally for five years and ten months, after which he turned its management over to his brother, L. Maier, and Henry Waktor, although Mr. Maier himself still owns the business. As the stock carried is first-class in every way, and always has been from the time the store was established, an immense and dependable patronage has been the result, goods being handled both in wholesale and retail quantities. In order to carry out a business undertaking which had been under consideration for some time Mr. Maier found it necessary to give the entire management of this large business into the care of others, and since September of 1905, his own time has been given entirely to the new company then organized and known as the Greater Los Angeles Realty Company, with offices in the Huntington building, Los Angeles.

Mr. Maier's home at No. 1610 Union avenue, Los Angeles, is carefully presided over by his wife, to whom he was married in this city May 12, 1895, and who before her marriage was Frieda Fichtelberger, a daughter of Moses and Minnie (Stern) Fichtelberger. Of the two children born of this marriage Louis, born in Rincon, Cal., December 5, 1897, is the only one living. The other child, Norma, born in Benson, Ariz., May 31, 1901, was taken from them by death September 10, 1904. Mr. Maier's business duties consume the greater part of his time and thought, but not however to the exclusion of his fraternal obligations, which are numerous and varied. He was initiated into the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks in Lodge No. 671 in Bisbee, Ariz., and is now a member of Westgate Lodge No. 335 of Los Angeles. He also belongs to Artesia Tent No. 10, K. O. T. M., of Artesia, Cal.; and Circle City Lodge I. O. F., of Corona, Cal., of which latter lodge he had held the position of financial secretary for three years. His initiation into the order of Foresters occurred in Norwalk, Cal., he being one of the charter members of his lodge. Fraternally Mr. Maier is a believer in Republican principles.

ADOLPH MULLER. The late Adolph Muller is remembered as one of the prominent citizens of San Pedro, where he was located for many years prior to his death, which occurred in June, 1904, at the age of sixty-nine years. He was a native of Germany, his birth having occurred in Breton Hebein where his ancestors had been located for generations. He was reared to young manhood in his native country and was apprenticed to learn the trade of ship carpenter, which he mastered. He spent a large portion of his young manhood on the sea and in the course of his travels came to the coast of California. Landing at San Francisco he decided to settle here permanently and engage in building, which occupation he followed for some time. In 1882 he came to Los Angeles in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, thence coming to San Pedro and following the same work until his retirement.

Mr. Muller was twice married, his first wife being Annetta Wyllie, who was born in Los Angeles and died in San Pedro. In San Bernardino, he was united in marriage with Marie Pico, who was born near San Diego, Cal., a daughter of Jose Antonio Pico, a brother of Governor Pio Pico and of Gen. Andreas Pico, all of whom were sons of Jose Marie Pico. The elder man, an officer under the Mexican government, located in San Diego, Cal., and later settled in San Gabriel, where his death occurred. Jose Antonio Pico, who was born in San Diego county, became a military man and as a lieutenant served for many years in the army located in various parts of California, from the extreme southern portion to Benicia, Solano county. About the time of the American occupation of the state he was retired, making his home on the Santa Margarita ranch, in San Diego county, of which he was part owner. He married Magdalena Baca, a native of Santa Fe, N. Mex., and a daughter of Manuel Baca, an early settler of Solano county, where he became an extensive land owner. He was a man of fine character, tracing his descent to the Bacas of Castile, Spain. He became a prominent man and citizen in Solano county, taking an active part in its development and upbuilding, the town of Vacaville being named for him. Mrs. Pico died in San Bernardino, Cal., leaving the following children: Francisco, engaged in the cattle business in San Jacinto; Pio, a farmer near Tucson, Ariz.; Jose, located in San Juan Capistrano; Francisca, of San Bernardino; Andreas, a farmer at Oceanside, Cal.; Manuel, located in San Jacinto; Marie; Rudecinda, wife of M. Aguirre, of San Jacinto; and Dolores, Mrs. Huzzalla, of San Bernardino. Marie Pico was reared in San Jacinto, Riverside county, Cal., where her father was then engaged in stock-raising, their home being known as Casa Louia, which interpreted means "House on the Hill". She received her education in St. Catherine's Academy and in young womanhood became the wife of Mr. Muller, since whose death she has continued to make her home in San Pedro. She is a devout member of the Catholic Church, in which faith she was reared. Her husband was associated fraternally with the Knights of Pythias, serving as treasurer of the lodge of which he was a member.

SCHUYLER COLE. Since becoming a resident of Colegrove and a promoter of its financial, commercial and landed development, Mr. Cole has accomplished much in behalf of local progress. During the year 1902 he opened a branch of the Bank of Santa Monica at Sawtelle of which he was manager for several years, and still holds the position of assistant cashier in the Bank of Santa Monica. Besides being a close student of the financial world and a discriminating judge of banking affairs, he has an expert knowledge of real estate values in the region lying between Los Angeles and the ocean. As a member of the real estate firm of Loomis & Cole, he was interested in the opening of the Artesian tract of one hundred acres adjoining Sawtelle on the west, which was platted into residence lots and has proved a successful investment for all parties concerned. With the addition of another partner and under the title of Health, Loomis & Cole, the firm carries on a real estate brokerage business at Ocean Park and acts as selling agents for the Santa Monica Land and Water Company.

A son of Senator Cornelius Cole, a native of Lodi, Seneca county, N. Y., and for years a leading man of affairs in California, Schuyler Cole was born in Schuyler county, N. Y., February 4, 1865, and received a fair education in the grammar and high schools of San Francisco, preparing for admission to Cornell University, but obliged to forego higher educational advantages on account of poor health. In company with his brother, Seward Cole, in 1880 he came to his father's ranch at Colegrove, Los Angeles county, and here engaged in raising wheat and barley on an extensive scale. For a long period he remained on the ranch, but in 1898 he left in order to become superintendent and general manager of the Gold Bug mine near Grant's Pass in Oregon, a well-known and rich quartz mine with a stamp mill and full equipment. During the four years in which he had charge of the mine he gained a practical knowledge of mining as conducted in Oregon and proved successful as a superintendent. On the sale of the mine in 1902 he returned to Colegrove, where he has since made his home. October 1, 1906, he organized the Occident Motor Car Company, of which he is president and manager, and which has the Pacific coast agency for the Cartercar.

At Santa Monica in December of 1896, Mr. Cole was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Gorham, who was born in Ohio and is niece of Senator Jones of Santa Monica. Possessing genial companionable traits, an affable manner and uniform courtesy of demeanor, Mr. Cole enjoys a high standing in society and is a prominent member of the Jonathan Club of Los Angeles. Supplementing these traits which contribute to his personal popularity, he possesses keen judgment and untiring energy in the prosecution of business affairs, and is therefore able to maintain the highest standing among men of commerce. Though not a partisan in political views, he stanchly advocates the principles of the Republican party and invariably gives his support to the party's candidates in national elections.

WILLIAM VOLKMOR. The substantial and well-to-do citizens of Whittier have no better respresentative than William Volkmor, who is actively identified with the industrial interests of this part of the county, and stands high among the keen, progressive business men of the place. A man of strong individuality, possessing excellent executive ability, and an expert mechanic, he served for many years as foreman of the blacksmithing department at the state school, where his personal influence was felt and appreciated. A son of Levi Volkmor, he was born, August 30, 1864, in Massillon, Stark county, Ohio, of German ancestry.

A native of Germany, Levi Volkmor immigrated to the United States when a young man, locating in Ohio, where for a few years he ran the tow-boat from Cleveland to Cincinnati. Settling then in Massillon, Stark county, he entered the Russell machine shops, where he had charge of the department in which threshing machines were manufactured for twenty-two consecutive years. On retiring from that position he purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in Stark county, and having made excellent improvements upon it is now devoting himself to its management, meeting with good success as an agriculturist. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Ertle, has resided in Stark county during her entire life.

Having completed his early education in the public schools, William Volkmor learned the trade of a horse-shoer, serving an apprenticeship of four years with his uncle, Adam Volkmor. Coming then, with his brother Adam to California, he arrived in Los Angeles in November, 1888, just at the time the great land boom collapsed, and the people were nearly discouraged, the city being in a rather demoralized condition. However, he was fortunate enough to secure work on the day of his arrival, but three weeks later his brother died, and he returned with his body to their old home in Massillon. Coming back before very long to Los Angeles, Mr. Volkmor worked at his trade for three years, being employed for six months by one man, and working on the east side for another blacksmith for two and one-half years.

Being then appointed foreman of the blacksmithing department in the state school at Whittier, Mr. Volkmor retained the position for twelve years, three months and fifteen days, giving good satisfaction. Serving through various administrations, he had boys from twelve to fifteen years of age under his instruction, and as a teacher was very successful, his moral influence in the schools being good, his pupils becoming expert workmen, and honest, upright citizens. Resigning from the school, Mr. Volkmor opened a shop at the corner of College and Greenleaf streets, Whittier, where he has since been busily employed as a general blacksmith, horse-shoer and horse-clipper, doing an annual business that amounts to from $8,000 to $10,000, keeping two or three men to assist him in his work. When he arrived in Los Angeles he had but $40, and that same day he lost his money and everything that he possessed excepting the clothes that he wore. Beginning then at the very foot of the ladder of success, he has steadily mounted, rung by rung, and is well entitled to his present fine position among the self-made men of our day.

In Whittier, Mr. Volkmor married Sarah King, who was born in Michigan, a daughter of Michael King, and into their household three children have been born, Hilda Mary, Mildred Barbara and Charles Walter. Mr. Volkmor, true to the religious faith in which he was reared, is a member of the Catholic Church.

J. R. ABBOT. Associated with agricultural development of Los Angeles county, J. R. Abbot occupies a prominent place among the representative citizens of this section, where he has been located since 1893 and engaged in the cultivation of a twenty-five acre ranch. He was born in Lansing, Mich., March 30, 1865, the representative of an old eastern family established on American soil in the colonial days of our history. His grandfather was a noted lawyer and representative to the legislature which met in Boston, before the separation of Maine from the Boston Bay colony. His father, Theophilis C. Abbot, was a Congregational clergyman who was born in Vassalboro, Me.; he was the first professor of the Ann Arbor high school, which position he retained for about three years, when in 1857 he accepted a call to the Lansing State Agricultural College, and the following year was elected president of the same institution. Thirty years later impaired health compelled his resignation from this position but he still held an important chair until his death, which occurred in his sixty-sixth year. His devoted zeal and enthusiasm in the upbuilding of this institution won him commendation among those who recognized his endeavors; for with others he endured the hardships of maintaining this school as it was the first agricultural college established in the United States and was necessarily forced to combat the prejudice of many who failed to see the need of scientific education along this line. In his political convictions the Rev. Mr. Abbot was always a stanch Republican. In Ann Arbor, Mich., he was married to Miss Sarah Merrylees, who was born in Lerwick, on the Shetland Isles, and she is still surviving and making her home with her son on his California ranch and enjoying good health at the age of seventy-eight years. She had one other child, a daughter, Mary M., who became the wife of C. M. Moore and died in 1902 leaving one daughter, Margaret.

J. R. Abbot received his preliminary education in the public schools of Lansing, after which he attended Lansing State Agricultural College and graduated therefrom in the class of 1884. Upon leaving the college work he received an appointment in the state library of Michigan, which position he held for the period of two years. At the expiration of that time he went into the lumber camps of the state to learn the lumber business, and later had charge of a part of the mill work of a lumber company of Saginaw, one of the largest concerns of that section. He engaged in this occupation for about seven years, when he severed his connections and coming to California purchased the ranch which he now owns, consisting of twenty-five acres, of which six are devoted to oranges and the balance in grain and pasture. He has thirty head of Jersey cattle and conducts a dairy, now supplying Alhambra with dairy products, his wagons making daily trips to that town. He is unusually successful in his work, having brought to bear the knowledge and science acquired during his years of study in preparatory work, and proving beyond doubt the advantage of such a course. Politically he is like his father a stanch Republican, and although never desirous of official recognition he still takes an active interest in the advancement of the principles he endorses. He is a member of the Congregational Church, as is also his mother, who keeps his home for him. He is public spirited and progressive, interested in matters of public import, a worthy citizen and friend, and is looked upon as one of the representative men of this section.

LESLIE A. MILLER. San Pedro is the center of an extensive lumber trade, which has been built up through the sagacity and foresight of men of enterprise and ability, prominent among the number to whom credit for advancing this profitable industry is due being Leslie A. Miller, superintendent of the National Lumber Company. Possessing a wide knowledge of the business in all of its details, he devotes his energies to the promotion of the business in which he is employed, and is meeting with marked success in his operations. Of excellent New England ancestry, he was born, May 9, 1869, in Whitneyville, Washington county, Me., which was also the birthplace of his parents, Albion and Maria Helen (Lowell) Miller. His father removed with his family to Minneapolis, Minn., in 1876, and there built up a large and profitable lumber business, becoming head of the Albion Miller Lumber Company. He was a man of strong personality, a stanch Republican in politics, and a member of the Masonic fraternity.

The youngest child in a family of which three sons and two daughters survive, Leslie A. Miller was graduated from the Minneapolis high school when young, and for two years thereafter was in the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company, first as a clerk, and then as foreman of the freight department. Beginning then to learn the lumber business with his father, he remained in his employ until 1896, when he went to Seattle, Wash., where he became connected with Cosh-Murray Company as commercial salesman, traveling through Washington with a good line of cigars and tobacco. Coming to San Pedro in 1902, he entered the employ of the Whiting Lumber and Supply Company, and as its superintendent had charge of opening and building all of its yards. March 29, 1905, the name of the firm was changed to its present name, the National Lumber Company, with Perry Whiting as manager, H. W. McLeod treasurer, and Mr. Miller as superintendent, a responsible position which he is filling with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the company and its patrons.

In Minneapolis, Minn., Mr. Miller married Minnie Campbell, who was born in Sioux City, Iowa, and they have one child, Lois M. Miller. Politically Mr. Miller is true to the faith in which he was reared, and is a loyal supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of the Elks of Long Beach.

PETER J. FILANC, Sr. The death of Peter J. Filanc in 1896 closed a career which extended over a period of seventy-seven years. Of this nearly a quarter of a century had been spent on his ranch near Colton, San Bernardino county, the same on which his son and namesake now resides. The elder Mr. Filanc was a native of southern France, born November 3, 1818, the oldest child in his parents' family. During young manhood he went to Africa, where for nine years he engaged in the slave trade, a business which required considerable travel. In 1845 he sailed from Mecca, Arabia, to China, from there taking slaves to Salem, Mass. After following the sea many years in the interests of this business he gave it up in 1848, with the determination to make his future home in America. From New York he made his way by water to New Orleans, thence went up the Mississippi and Missouri rivers as far as Council Bluffs, Iowa. Winter overtaking him at that point he spent several months there and the following spring crossed the plains with ox-teams to Salt Lake City. The winter of that year was spent in Utah and with the opening of spring he joined a party consisting of fifty-two wagons under the leadership of Captain Foote. The journey was a fortunate one, for none of the large band was seriously ill and no mishaps befell them. They arrived in San Bernardino in September of 1849, at which time there was only one fort in the place.

It was during the same year that Mr. Filanc purchased two hundred and twenty-five acres of land in this county not far from what has since sprung up and been known as the town of Colton. By adding to the tract from time to time he finally had one thousand acres under his control and ownership, for which he paid $5 per acre. Over this vast tract his large bands of sheep roamed at will, sheep-raising forming his principal occupation for many years, a business which netted him a good income. In later years, however, he gave it up and stocked his ranch for dairy purposes. It was while carrying on this latter industry that he met his sudden death, being gored by a bull. Before his death he had disposed of considerable of his land, the ranch now comprising two hundred and thirty acres, upon which a specialty is now made of cattle-raising, besides growing large crops of hay and alfalfa.

In 1859 Peter J. Filanc was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Lughan, a native of Los Angeles and a daughter of Joseph and Mary Lughan, who were born respectively in Spain and California. Mr. Lughan came to the state in a very early day and was one of the first settlers in Los Angeles. At his death in 1881 he left a family of ten children, of whom Elizabeth was the third in order of birth. She is still living, at the age of sixty years, and makes her home with her son. Of the three children born to Mr. and Mrs. Filanc the eldest, Louisa, is now the wife of Samuel Lambert, of Redondo, and the mother of four children; the next child, Aeneas, died at the age of thirty years; by his marriage with Josie Salsar one child was born, the widow and child now residing in Arizona; the youngest child, Peter J., his father's namesake, now has charge of the homestead ranch, in the management of which he is having the same success that made his father a well-to-do and substantial citizen.

JOHN H. STEWART. For many years a well-known and successful farmer of Ventura county and now a business man of Long Beach, John H. Stewart is widely known in this section of Southern California, and has won a large circle of friends. Born of a southern family of prominence, and inheriting the qualities of his Scottish forefathers, Mr. Stewart first saw the light of day July 19, 1858, in Macon, Miss. His father, Thomas H. Stewart, is one of the prominent citizens of Long Beach, where he is now retired from the active cares of life. A complete history of the family will be found on another page of this volume.

Reared to young manhood in his native state, Mr. Stewart received his education in the public schools and later accepted for his life work the occupation to which he had early been trained, engaging in farming in Lafayette county, Miss. In 1882 he followed his father to California, locating in Ventura county, where he homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres, four miles east of Saticoy. He made all of the improvements upon his property, which he brought to a high state of cultivation, being a pioneer in many lines in farming activity. He was the first farmer to plant and raise corn in the Los Posas valley and also the first to raise beans in that section. He remained in that location until November, 1903, when he sold out and located in Long Beach, engaging in the feed and fuel business. He is located at No. 321 East Anaheim road, near American avenue, where he deals in hay, grain, wood and coal, also the buying and selling of horses and mules. He built this property and also owns a residence at No. 1314 American avenue. He was married in New Orleans in 1880 to Miss Sarah Todd, a native of Louisiana, and born of this union are the following children: Celena, wife of Theo. Sanchez, of Long Beach; Claude, engaged in teaming in Long Beach; Minnie, wife of Henry Steplar, of Long Beach; Lorena and Alice at home. In 1898 Mr. Stewart made a trip to Alaska, and in February of that year crossed Chilcoot Pass and reached Lake Bennet about the time of the "great slide," when he made one of the party which dug out the buried prospectors. Later he went on to Dawson City and engaged in prospecting and mining until December, 1898, when he returned to his home in California. Mr. Stewart is a Democrat in his political affiliations, although he endorses the present administration, and is liberal and enterprising and an all around business man.

JOHN R. HEINRICH. No country contributes more valuable citizens to the United States than does Germany and those industrious and well educated young men whose ambitions prompt them to come to this country where so many opportunities await them are heartily welcomed to whatever community they may choose as their new home. They are quick to see and take advantage of openings which promise good returns for the labor expended, and are almost invariably flatteringly successful in their undertakings. John R. Heinrich, the subject of this sketch, is one of those young men about whom all of the foregoing is true, and while he has been in the United States only three years, two of which have been spent in this state, he is very enthusiastic about everything concerning California, speaks the English language fluently and is highly spoken of by all who know him.

It was on October 20, 1877, that John R. Heinrich was born in Germany, where his father, Carl Heinrich, died several years ago, and where his mother, with the remaining five children of the family, still resides. He received his education in the high school of his native town and upon his arrival at New York in 1903 he secured a position at John Wanamaker's store, which is one of the largest and most prominent in the metropolis. After working there for one year he came to Arroyo Grande, Cal., where he has since resided. Immediately upon his arrival here he bought the place which he now occupies, he himself putting on the improvements, which consist of a very fine large house and buildings to accommodate fifteen hundred chickens, for his eight acres of land is given over entirely to his chicken ranch. He now has four hundred laying hens and one thousand young chickens, which yield him a handsome income.

In 1904 Mr. Heinrich was married to Miss Helen Thiele, a native German, and both are members of the German Presbyterian Church, and contribute generously to the support of all benevolent and charitable interests of that denomination.

JAMES B. RIDDICK. Considerably more than one-half a century ago the Riddick family became connected with the agricultural development of the United States; their race being founded in this country by Joseph B. Riddick, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, and an immigrant of 1846. From the time of his arrival in the United States until his death, which occurred in October, 1891, at the age of seventy-one years, he engaged in agricultural pursuits in Vermont, owning and cultivating a farm in Chittenden county, near Milton. When he crossed the ocean he was a young man without domestic ties, but a few years later he established a home, being united in marriage with Mary A. Blair, who was born in Maine, and later became a resident of Vermont, where she remained until her death on the home place in 1872, at the age of forty-one years.

Among three sons and five daughters comprising the parental family and of whom seven are now living, James B. Riddick is the second in order of birth, and was born in Milton, Vt., December 28, 1852. On the completion of his studies taught in the country schools, he entered Georgia academy in Vermont, where he finished his education. Afterward he secured employment on a farm, remaining in Vermont until 1872, when he removed to New Hampshire and began to work in a cotton mill at Manchester. During the year 1877 he removed to Lowell, Mass., and was similarly employed in that city until 1884. The following year found him as far west as Minnesota and for two years he made his headquarters in Minneapolis, meanwhile traveling through Wisconsin and Illinois in the interest of a rubber-stamp business. Late in the year 1885 he went back to Lowell, and from there traveled to Florida, where he remained until the spring of 1886, and then again went to Minneapolis, soon, however, proceeding to Kansas City, Mo., where he was employed for a brief period.

It was during the fall of 1887 that James B. Riddick came to California and secured a position as letter carrier connected with the Los Angeles postoffice, continuing in that capacity until April of 1903, when he resigned in order to take up the real-estate business. For a year he had his offices at No. 2602 Downey avenue, Los Angeles, and he still owns property in that city. Some years ago his attention was called to Long Beach as affording a profitable field for investment, and in 1900 he erected ten cottages on First street between American avenue and Elm streets. The interests of his property led him to remove to Long Beach in March, 1904, and he now has a real-estate office at No. 343 East First street, where he manages the details of his real-estate holdings and is in a position to consult with would-be investors as to desirable property. After coming to California he married Miss Mary A. Collins, who was born in Malone, Franklin county, N. Y., and has been a resident of the Pacific coast since 1889. They are the parents of three sons, Arthur, Joseph and James. The family are identified with the Long Beach Congregational Church, in which Mr. Riddick is a member of the board of deacons and one of the most liberal contributors and influential workers. A stanch opponent of the liquor traffic, he has given his support to the cause of prohibition and for years has advocated the theory that the indiscriminate sale of intoxicants should be suppressed in the interests of the prosperity of our country and the happiness of its people. The only fraternal organization with which he has identified himself is the Independent Order of Foresters at Los Angeles, in which he remained an active worker during the period of his residence in that city.

M. N. WESTOVER. Upon coming to the state in 1889 Mr. Westover was attracted to the extreme southern section as offering the greatest number of opportunities, and it is reasonable to suppose that his expectations have been realized, for at no time in the intervening years has he contemplated removing from his original location. Coming to the west from the extreme east, where the farms are necessarily much smaller than in any other portion of the country, he purchased a ranch of one hundred and fifty acres in San Diego county, not far from the village of Mesa Grande, and here inaugurated a stock and grain ranch in addition to establishing a dairy business. He now has twenty-five cows, and it is his intention to give more attention to the latter industry in the future, relinquishing the stock-raising and grain interests as the growth of his dairy warrants.

A native of Minnesota, Mr. Westover was born in Blue Earth county May 13, 1858, a son of Orlin J. Westover. The latter was born in the Empire state, but during his early manhood went to Minnesota, and there established domestic ties by his marriage with Mary J. Britton, a native of Missouri. Two children were born of this marriage, Calvin E. and M. N., but while they were quite young they were deprived of the love and care of their mother, who passed away in 1863, when only twenty-eight years of age. This calamity to both husband and children resulted in their removal to the east, the children being placed in the public schools of Oxford, N. Y., while the father joined the regular army and at once entered upon active duty in behalf of the Union. Six months after entering the service he was taken prisoner and confined in the loathsome dungeon at Andersonville, and although he was later removed, did not long survive, his death being the result of privations and improper treatment. By trade he was an experienced surveyor, following this to a considerable extent in addition to carrying on farming.

His school days over M. N. Westover found employment on neighboring farms in Chenango county, and before he had attained his majority had established a home of his own. After his marriage with Clara N. Beardsley, a native of New York state, he carried on a farm in that state for ten years, giving it up at the end of that time to settle in the west. While Mr. Westover is the gainer by larger opportunities as a result of the change, San Diego county is also reaping a benefit from his enterprising spirit, his ranch ranking among the most prosperous and productive in the vicinity of Mesa Grande.

The marriage of Mr. Westover and Clara N. Beardsley resulted in the birth of two children, Alice D. and Mary Estella, the latter the wife of T. O. Fewel, of Warner Springs, San Diego county. Both Mr. and Mrs. Westover are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and politically the former is a Republican.

JEAN APIOU. The pioneer element of Southern California has in Mr. Apiou one of its well educated and informed gentlemen who has made a personal success and at the same time has acquired a position of prominence among the citizens of this section. He was born in Lescun, Basses-Pyrenees, France, February 6, 1852, the fourth in a family of five children born to his parents, Jean and Elizabeth (Casau) Apiou, natives of the same place, where they passed their entire lives. Jean Apiou was reared on the paternal farm and educated in the public and private schools of his native land. November 18, 1868, he left Havre, France, bound for America, and after landing in New York City took passage via the Isthmus of Panama for San Francisco, which he reached January 4, 1869. His first employment was on a farm in that vicinity, where he remained until November of following year, when he came to Los Angeles and found a like occupation here until 1874. At this date he purchased a herd of sheep in partnership with a cousin, Pierre Beilhes, and with this herd of twelve hundred began an independent effort in sheep raising. In 1876 they located in San Bernardino county and there in 1879 Mr. Apiou purchased his partner's interest and continued alone for two years. Disposing of the business at the expiration of that time because of impaired health, he took a trip to France and at Vichy Springs took treatments which restored his health. Returning to California in 1889, the following year he again embarked in the sheep business, retaining his herd for three months, when he sold out, and since that time has acted as business agent for his countrymen occupied in this work. He acts occasionally as interperter for both French and Spanish in the courts of Los Angeles, where he is most widely and favorably known.

In Los Angeles, May 19, 1906, Mr. Apiou was united in marriage with Mrs. Jeannette Agoure, also a native of France, and a daughter of Jean Pierre Higue, formerly a farmer in France and a town official, and now a resident of Los Angeles. Her first marriage united her with Jean Pierre Agoure, a native of France, who came to America in 1873 and engaged in the sheep business until his retirement, when he located in Los Angeles and spent the remainder of his days, his death occurring February 25, 1903. They had three children, Emma, Annie and Theresa. Mr. Apiou is a member of the French Benevolent Society of San Francisco, and politically leans toward the principles of the Democratic party, although he is too broad to be bound to cast his ballot for any set of men, reserving the right to interest himself for the man whom he considers best qualified for public service. Mr. Apiou is broad minded and liberal in his ideas, and as a progressive citizen has done much for the material upbuilding of Los Angeles.

FRANK A. BORCHARD. Descended from a family that was represented among the pioneers in the early days of the American occupancy of California and that has since given to the state citizens of worth and intelligence, Frank A. Borchard has passed his life within the immediate vicinity of his present home, and was born November 7, 1876, on a ranch within two miles of where Oxnard now stands. The first of the name to settle on the Pacific coast was his grandfather, Christian Borchard, a native of Germany, and during early manhood a resident of Iowa. Attracted by reports concerning the discovery of gold in California he closed out his interests in Iowa and accompanied by his family and such supplies as were necessary, he started upon the long and dangerous trip across the plains through a region inhabited only by hostile Indians. Arriving safely on the western coast, he took up farm work near Antioch and later moved to Ventura county, where he died about 1903, at an advanced age. It was his privilege to be spared to witness the remarkable growth of the state to which he came when it was sparsely settled and comparatively unknown, and he was went to contrast the hardships of pioneer days with the improvements and conveniences of the twentieth century.

In the family of Christian Borchard was a son, J. E., who was born in Iowa and was eighteen months old when the family crossed the plains to Contra Costa county, Cal., and later he came with them to Ventura county, where he was one of the earliest settlers on this side of the river. After he had removed to this locality he married Miss Mary Kaufman, who was born in Minnesota and came across the plains with her father, Michael Kaufman, settling among the pioneers of the Sacramento valley, but later removing to the Santa Clara valley, Ventura county, where Mr. Kaufman remained until death. Both J. E. and Mrs. Borchard are living and nine of their twelve children survive, Frank A. being third in order of birth. Reared on the home farm, he was given the advantages of local schools, supplemented by attendance at St. Vincent's College in Los Angeles and Throop Institute in Pasadena.

Upon starting out for himself Mr. Borchard engaged in raising beets on a ranch near Oxnard. During the dry years it was necessary to irrigate the land. For that purpose he bought a gasoline engine, installed the same and operated it with success, finding that it proved a valuable acquisition for a rancher. During May of 1900 he assisted in the organization of the Oxnard Implement Company, of which he was chosen assistant manager. On the incorporation of the company he continued to act as assistant manager and in addition held the office of vice-president. The company owns the largest implement house in Ventura county and he still retains stock in the enterprise. In August of 1905 he bought the stationery and news business owned by H. A. Thatcher, and about the same time was appointed agent at Oxnard for the Wells-Fargo Express Company. At the store on the corner of Fifth and B streets, on the Plaza, he carried a full line of stationery, and handled all of the Los Angeles papers in addition to the San Francisco Chronicle, Call, Examiner and Bulletin. In 1906 he disposed of the business in order to engage in the selling and setting up of gasoline engines of the Fairbanks-Morse type, varying in horse power from two to one hundred and fifty, these being especially adapted for the purposes of the farmers of this locality. In May, 1906, he purchased an interest in the Oxnard Furniture and Plumbing establishment. Mr. Borchard's home in Oxnard is presided over by his wife, who was formerly Miss Millie McLaughlin, and is a native of this valley, receiving her education in local schools. For some years Mr. Borchard has been identified with the Citizens Club of Oxnard and he further holds membership with the Knights of Columbus and the Fraternal Brotherhood.

CHRIS N. OHRE. On the rugged coast of Norway, near where the tempestuous waves of the Skager Rack and Cattegat merge into the calmer waters of Bohus bay, there lies the seaport town of Tonsberg, whose inhabitants are principally of the seafaring class. Generation after generation of the Ohre family sailed the high seas and the smaller bodies of water skirting the shores of Scandinavia, and not a few of the name rose to the command of ships of considerable importance. Amid the sights and scenes familiar to all maritime environments Nils Ohre passed the years of boyhood in Tonsberg, his native village, and under the influence of his father, who was a sea captain, he early learned to love the life of a sailor, and eventually he rose to be captain of a brig engaged in the lumber trade on the Norwegian coast. Both he and his wife, Martina, died in their native village, Tonsberg, and they are survived by six of their eight children, Chris N. being the youngest of the number.

The village of Tonsberg is the native town of Mr. Ohre and May 24, 1855, the date of his birth. As a boy he became familiar with sailing and when fifteen he went to sea in his father's brig under a brother, Anton, as captain. After two years on that brig he left to accept a position on another vessel and thereafter was connected at different times with various barges and brigs sailing the waters of the Baltic and North seas. Later he obtained a captain's certificate and for years sailed to New Orleans, Philadelphia and New York, making perhaps twenty trips in all. Eventually he left his ship, the Sir John Lawrence, in New York in 1883 and gave up a seafaring life for that of a landsman. For some years he was employed in a wholesale farm machinery house in Minneapolis, but in 1887 he came to San Diego, and here since then he has made his home. From the time of his arrival until 1893 he was connected with a wholesale commission business, but since the latter date he has devoted his attention to the poultry business and other enterprises.

At the time of purchasing the property at No. 4057 Eighth street, San Diego, Mr. Ohre secured two-thirds of an acre covered with sage totally unimproved. On that unpromising site he now owns a comfortable modern residence surrounded by a beautiful lawn and fruit trees of all kinds, besides all of the equipment necessary for the poultry industry. Among his six breeds of poultry he is making a specialty of Buff Cochins, Plymouth Rocks and Leghorns, and has altogether about two hundred and fifty hens. In addition he has nine high-grade Jersey cows and delivers milk to customers in the city. The enterprise is conducted under the title of the Scandia dairy and poultry yards, the name being given in honor of his old Scandinavian home. In his work he has the able and cheerful co-operation of his wife, who was Miss Mathilda Olson, a native of Sweden, but resident of San Diego from girlhood. Four bright sons bless their union, Mauritz, Clarence, Oscar and Albert. Since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Ohre has been a stanch adherent of the Republican party and in fraternal affiliations has been connected with the Order of Foresters.

E. FRANCIS CONRAD. The farming regions lying in the vicinity of Arroyo Grande are among the most fertile of San Luis Obispo county and present fair opportunities for gratifying returns to those willing to devote time, thought, energies and untiring industry to their development. Coming to this neighborhood in the fall of 1876 Mr. Conrad rented the farm which he later purchased and on which he since has made his home. The ranch comprises three hundred and seventy acres, of which two hundred acres are in grain and pasture, forty-five acres in hill pasture, while seventy acres of leased land are devoted to the raising of seed. With his brother, W. A. Conrad, as partner he owns a walnut orchard of sixteen acres of bearing trees, and the profits from the orchard are a considerable portion of his annual revenues.

Born in North Carolina, November 21, 1848, Frank Conrad is a son of E. and Sarah (Holder) Conrad, also natives of that state, and pioneers of 1864 in California. As early as the middle of the nineteenth century the family left the south and became pioneers of Iowa, and from there started across the plains in 1863. The winter season set in before they reached the last range of mountains, so they spent some months in Nevada and arrived in California early in 1864. For a time they remained in Nevada county and for four years engaged in grain farming in Sonoma county, after which they spent two years in Stanislaus county, but each year the weather conditions were such as to cause a failure of their crops. In search of a better location they removed as far north as Tehama county, where they took up ranch pursuits. Later they carried on a ranch in Shasta county for three years. In the fall of 1873 they settled at Guadaloupe, Santa Barbara county, and engaged in ranching in the Santa Maria valley for three years. On coming to the present homestead in the fall of 1876 they rented the land, and here the father died at eighty-nine years and the mother when eighty-seven. Of their seven children four still survive. The parents were earnest members of the Presbyterian Church and in politics the father advocated the cause of prohibition.

The farm formerly occupied by his parents is now the home and property of E. F. Conrad, who in addition to engaging in ranch pursuits has been identified with the ministry of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church for a long period and has given his services freely to the work of preaching the Gospel. In this responsible service he has labored without financial returns, but wholly from love of the ministry and from a desire to extend the kingdom of Christ in the world. Mainly through his unaided exertions he acquired a broad education and is particularly well versed in the Scriptures. As a speaker he is both interesting and instructive, while in the pulpit, when depicting to his hearers the value of Christian service, he is especially earnest and eloquent. For seven years he gave his entire time to the ministry, during the greater part of his active life he has earned a livelihood from the cultivation of the soil and has engaged in religious work gratuitously, without expectation of reimbursement.

In 1876 occurred the marriage of E. F. Conrad and Mary Frances Bryan, who was born and educated in California. They are the parents of the following children: Edna May, who married A. C. Haskin and lives in San Francisco; Clara Belle, Mrs. J. R. Reinike, of Arroyo Grande; Howard F., who married Georgia Pheonix and resides in Arroyo Grande; Edwin A., who married Chrystal Tully; Nellie C., Marion McGrady, Leila I., Laura Grace, Merle M. and Landreth Bryan. The importance of the suppression of the liquor traffic appeals to Mr. Conrad with such force that he has for years supported Prohibition principles at the polls, and both by precept and example he has given his support to the cause of temperance. Interested in educational matters, he served as trustee of the Arroyo Grande high school and in other ways has aided the cause of free schools in his county.

ABNER D. JACOBS. Conspicuous among the pioneer residents of California is Abner D. Jacobs, now living on a farm in the Belvidere district, Los Angeles county, retired from the activities of life. Coming here when the country was in its original wildness, ere the dusky savage had fled before the advancing steps of civilization, he has taken an important part in developing the resources of this wonderful country, and by his sagacity and foresight has at the same time been enabled to accumulate a goodly estate. A son of John Jacobs, he was born in 1838 in Arnheim, Brown county, Ohio, and was there brought up until fifteen years old.

Engaged in agricultural pursuits throughout his life, John Jacobs cleared and improved a farm in Ohio. He was a man of strong patriotic principles, and in the war of 1812 offered his services to his country. He took part in several engagements, and fought under General Jackson in the battle of New Orleans, when General Pakenham, the British commander, was killed. He married Maria Devore, a daughter of Abner Devore, a native of Ohio, who, in 1844, made a trip to western Texas, and on his return trip, a few months later, was murdered at Fort Leavenworth, Kans. Of the children born of their union, all grew to years of maturity, namely: Ellen, Rebecca, Abner D., Elsie and Benjamin Franklin. Enlisting at the beginning of the Civil war, Benjamin Franklin, served as a soldier in an Ohio regiment, continuing until the close of the conflict. He is now living in Kentucky.

Remaining with his parents on the home farm until 1852, Abner D. Jacobs then went to Illinois, intending to settle there. Meeting with friends who were on their way to Missouri, he accompanied them to that state, but as he was dissatisfied with the prospects in that locality he returned to Hancock county, Ill., where he resided two years. In 1854 he started for the Pacific coast with Dr. T. L. Barnes, crossing the plains with ox-teams, the trip taking six months. He began life here as a miner in Eldorado county, and while thus employed went to Coloma, Eldorado county, to see four desperadoes executed. After two years of prospecting he went to Petaluma, Sonoma county, where he remained for a time, and from there going to Mendocino county, where he was for many years engaged in the timber business. Subsequently purchasing land east of Redondo, Los Angeles county, he has improved a fine ranch, on which he is living free from the cares of active business, enjoying to the utmost the fruits of his many years of toil. Not far from him is the home of one of his early playmates and schoolmates, and they take solid pleasure and comfort in each other's society, meeting frequently and talking over the events of their boyhood days.

J. X. Woods

In 1868, in Mendocino county, Mr. Jacobs married Martha Jane Pound, who had the distinction of being the first white girl born in Oakdale, the site of the present populous city of Oakland. She died March 22, 1885, leaving four children, namely: John F., Charles E., Ida M., and Violet. Politically Mr. Jacobs is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JOHN XAVIER WOODS. Conspicuous among the public-spirited, progressive men, who by their energy, wealth and keen foresight have done much towards building up Southern California, and were among the foremost in developing and advancing its many and varied interests, was J. X. Woods, a well-known resident of Oceanside, and president of the Bank of Oceanside. A son of the late F. X. Woods, he was born, December 28, 1844, in Ottawa, Canada, on a farm.

Born, reared and married in Canada, F. X. Woods lived in his native land until 1865, when he settled in Ohio. Subsequently removing to Missouri, he resided in St. Louis until his death, in 1878. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Daze, was born in Canada, and died in 1874 in Oakland, Cal. Both were members of the Catholic Church. Of their large family of children, ten grew to years of maturity.

Having acquired a good common school education in Ottawa, Canada, J. X. Woods worked on his father's farm until about twenty years old. Going to Cleveland, Ohio, in 1864, he began life as a railroad man, working in the motor department of the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio Railroad for five years. Removing to Kansas in 1869, he secured a position on the St. Joseph & Denver Railroad, running a locomotive and train for three years. From 1872 until 1874 he was employed in the motor department of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, after which he went to Terre Haute, Ind., where he had charge of a locomotive on the Vandalia Railway for five years. Going from there to Colorado in 1879, he invested his money in mining property, and losing all of his capital he resumed railroad work, being employed in the motor department of the Santa Fe Railroad until 1882, when he assumed charge of that company's shops at Winslow, Ariz., a position that he retained five years. Becoming interested in stock raising, he then resigned his position with the Santa Fe Company and turned his attention to the cattle business, in which he continued until the hard times of 1892 and 1893, when he again entered the railroad service. While living in Winslow, Ariz., Mr. Woods became prominent in public life, and for six years served as supervisor of Navajo county. He was also elected to the upper house of the territorial legislature, and by the governor was appointed a member of the territorial board of equalization, a position which he held up to six months prior to his death, which occurred September 17, 1906.

Forced to leave Arizona on account of ill health, Mr. Woods came to Oceanside, where he took up his residence and became actively identified with many of the leading interests of town and county. He was one of the proprietors of the Bank of Oceanside; and besides owning real estate in this locality was financially interested in the local electric light plant.

In 1874 Mr. Woods married Mary Curvin of Illinois. She and their infant child died a few years later, and he then went to Colorado. Returning to Illinois he married for his second wife Emma Anderson, who was also a native of the Prairie state, and of this union three children were born, Selma P., Pauline and Francis. Politically Mr. Woods was a true-blue Republican, active in party matters, and while in Arizona was one of the six delegates sent to the national convention in Chicago, where he assisted in nominating Theodore Roosevelt for president. Fraternally he was a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and belonged to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He was a member of the Catholic Church at Oceanside, and also attended the Mission, and Mrs. Woods is a communicant of the same church.

HUMPHREY G. SULLIVAN has been a resident of California for more than a quarter of a century and has identified himself prominently with the upbuilding of the state and especially San Luis Obispo county, where he has resided continuously since 1882. This section of the state has undergone many changes since Mr. Sullivan first settled here, and from a wild and uncultivated region dotted here and there with small shanties has emerged into one of the finest and most highly developed farming sections in the state, the scattering homes having multiplied many fold, and the crude shanties made way for large modern residences, the pride of their owners. Mr. Sullivan's ranch comprises one hundred and two acres of fertile land which is devoted to the growing of corn and beans and some vegetables and orange and lemon trees.

County Kerry, Ireland, was the place of the birth of Humphrey G. Sullivan, and August 6, 1850, the date. He is a son of Peter and Mary (Gallivan) Sullivan, both of Irish nativity, and a member of a family of six children. He received his education in Ireland and after his school days were over engaged in farming there until he was thirty years of age. Immigrating to California in 1880, he landed first in Alameda county, where he remained about two years. From there he came directly to San Luis Obispo county and for twelve years worked for Dr. Hayes, who lived near San Luis Obispo, being engaged as foreman of his vineyard. He then decided to purchase a ranch of his own and bought the place in Verde Canyon which is now his home. In 1897 occurred the marriage of Mr. Sullivan to Sidney Clark, who was born in Ireland, and to them have been born two sons, Lester and George. He is an ardent Republican in politics and has always taken a prominent interest in matters of interest to the public at large, while for several years he has done active service on the school board of his district and has filled the obligations of his trusteeship with entire credit to himself and satisfaction to the patrons of the schools. His election to the office was also in recognition of the intelligent and enthusiastic interest he has always displayed in matters of educational importance.

JAMES C. COLE. One of the oldest pioneers of San Bernardino county and a man who has prominently identified himself with the improvement of that section of Southern California is James C. Cole, by occupation a farmer and officially a member of the city council of San Bernardino. He was born September 3, 1853, in Springville, Utah, the son of James Alfred and Elizabeth (Kelley) Cole; the father a native of Dayton, Ohio, and the mother born, educated and reared to womanhood in the same state. In 1849 the father removed his family to Utah, settling on a farm near Springville, where he resided until 1857 when he journeyed still farther west and settled in San Bernardino, locating in the old town at the Mission. He purchased a farm of five hundred acres and engaged in farming and stock raising until the time of his death in 1888. The mother still lives on the old homestead at the advanced age of seventy-six years.

There were eight sons and two daughters in the family of which James C. Cole was a member. He attended school at the old Mission until fifteen years of age, when he secured employment on a ranch for a time, but being ambitious to acquire an independent business he went to Nevada and started in the stock raising. Those were years of great excitement in the western country and Mr. Cole had his share of the thrilling times during his sojourn in the sage-brush state. In 1874 he returned to San Bernardino, purchased sixty-five acres of the best land in that section and turned his attention to its cultivation. A part of the place is now within the corporate limits of the city and upon that he has placed good buildings. His principal crops are grain and alfalfa.

In 1875 Mr. Cole was married to Abbie, the oldest daughter of William and Mary (Noble) Davis, who became pioneers of San Bernardino county in 1852. This union has been blessed with the birth of four children: Laura, a graduate nurse of Los Angeles; Ira residing at San Jose; Jessie and James W., both of whom are at home. Mr. Cole has taken an especial interest in political matters and stands high in the councils of the Republican party. He has repeatedly served as delegate to the county and state conventions and is now serving a term as councilman from the first ward of the city of San Bernardino. Fraternally he affiliates with the Knights of Pythias Lodge No. 27.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN PATTERSON. Closely identified with the industrial and financial advancement of Glendale, a thriving town in Los Angeles county, is Benjamin F. Patterson, who has been one of the foremost in establishing beneficial enterprises since he first assisted, more than twenty years ago, in laying out the place. Energetic, far-sighted, with keen perceptive faculties, he has attained a high position in the business community, and is held in high esteem as a man and as a citizen. A native of Ohio, he was born in Mount Vernon, Knox county, December 9, 1845, a son of Robert Patterson. His grandfather, James Patterson, was a farmer by occupation, owning land in Pennsylvania.

Born and reared on the paternal homestead in Pennsylvania, Robert Patterson lived in his native state until becoming of age, when he settled in Ohio, where, for several seasons, he followed the independent occupation to which he was reared. Migrating with his family to Muscatine county, Iowa, in 1850, he became a pioneer farmer of that county, until his death, at the age of forty-seven years, he was one of its leading men, serving as supervisor, county commissioner and county clerk. His wife, whose maiden name was Laura Nye, survived him, passing away at the age of sixty-seven years.

On July 25, 1862, then a boy of sixteen years, Benjamin F. Patterson enlisted in Company E, Twentieth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until the close of the war. He took an active part in many of the important engagements that followed, and before celebrating the seventeenth anniversary of his birth, was badly wounded, at the battle of Perry Grove, Ark., receiving three buckshots in the calf of his right leg. Subsequently, on June 26, 1863, during the siege of Vicksburg, while under the command of General Grant, he received a severe scalp wound. With his regiment, under Captain Barney, head of his company, and Col. William McE. Dye, he saw hard service, both in field and camp. He received his discharge in July, 1865.

Subsequently returning to Iowa Mr. Patterson was for a number of years prosperously employed in farming and stock-raising. Coming with his family to California in 1882, he erected two residences in Los Angeles, which he sold advantageously. In 1884 he purchased fifty-two acres of land, which he improved and cultivated and which now constitutes part of the townsite of Glendale. He soon became prominent in local affairs, and as a member of the Verdugo Springs Water Company, which consisted of Capt. C. E. Thom, E. M. Ross, E. T. Byram and himself, laid out the town in 1886, at the beginning of the boom. These gentlemen, with optimistic vision, erected the Glendale hotel, and built the narrow gauge railroad between Glendale and Los Angeles, a line of railway now owned by the Salt Lake Railway Company. After the boom Mr. Patterson and the remaining members of the company paid up the indebtedness and it was found that this railroad was the only one out of seventeen that was not put into the hands of a receiver, a fact that reflected great credit upon the owners of it.

After the boom collapsed Mr. Patterson again turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, and leased a ranch of four hundred acres, which he devoted to grain, and for three years was successfully employed in tilling the soil, being ably assisted by his two older sons, William and Eldon. He is now an influential citizen of Glendale, and in every way a representative man. He owns considerable property of value, and, with others, established the Bank of Glendale, the leading financial institution of the place.

In 1868, in Iowa, Mr. Patterson married Mary Keen, a native of New Jersey, and they became the parents of five children. William Albert died at the age of eighteen years; Eldon, residing in Glendale, served in the Philippines as a soldier, and is now serving as city marshal; Mabel, Jessie and Bertha complete the family. In his political views Mr. Patterson is independent, voting for the best man and measures without party restrictions. He is a man of patriotic spirit, and assisted in organizing N. P. Banks Post No 170, G. A. R., of Glendale, of which he was commander for years. The post now has thirty-five members, and is in a flourishing condition, owning its own hall.

SAMUEL ROTANZI. A noted writer has said, "Never desert your own line of talent; be what nature intended you for, and you will succeed." Evidently Mr. Rotanzi is in full sympathy with this author, for he has measured his own ability and hewn his way straight to the line thus marked out. Trained to agricultural pursuits from his youth up, he has a thorough knowledge of all branches connected with the art and science of agriculture, and is considered an authority on all questions concerning the dairy. He is extensively engaged in general farming and cattle raising, being manager of the Martin, Bloom & Brackett ranch, known as the Santa Ysabel ranch, which contains eighteen thousand acres of land, and in addition owns a magnificent farm of seven hundred and twenty acres, which he is successfully carrying on, giving him the supervision of more than eighteen thousand seven hundred acres of as fine land as can be found in San Diego county. A man of sterling integrity, honest and upright in all of his dealings, he is justly entitled to the esteem and respect so universally accorded him. A son of James Rotanzi, he was born, November 15, 1853, in Switzerland, where he was reared and educated.

Born, reared and married in Switzerland, James Rotanzi became a farmer from choice, in that independent occupation spending his active life. Ambitious to try life in America, he came to the United States, locating in Sacramento, Cal., where his death occurred shortly afterward.

In immigrating to the United States when but seventeen years old, Samuel Rotanzi came direct to Sonoma county, Cal., where for twenty years he was prosperously engaged in the stock and dairy business, becoming the owner of valuable land, and meeting with satisfactory results in his labors. Disposing then of his interests in that county, he came to San Diego county, accepting his present position as manager of the Santa Ysabel ranch in 1889, and has since had full control of its affairs. In its supervision he has met with eminent success, not only as a general farmer, but as a stock raiser and dairyman, having the care of about two thousand head of cattle on the Santa Ysabel ranch alone. Industrious and thrifty, he has accumulated money, a part of which he invested, in 1893, in land, buying a ranch of seven hundred and twenty acres, which he is managing with excellent pecuniary profits. On this ranch he has a large dairy also, milking on an average sixty cows a day and separating the cream, which he ships to San Diego. Here he raises all of the grain needed for food, his land being rich and productive.

In 1881 Mr. Rotanzi married Katie Wilson, who was born in California, a daughter of Frederick Wilson, who immigrated to America from Germany, locating in this state. Three children have been born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Rotanzi, namely: Mary, Birdie and Alwin. Politically Mr. Rotanzi is a firm adherent of the Republican party, and in their religious beliefs both he and Mrs. Rotanzi are Catholics.

MIGUEL ANTONIO AGUIRRE. Southern California will always retain the influence upon it of the Spanish race in the characteristics of its inhabitants, and the names of the old families will never be forgotten, for they are planted all over the state, not only in the individual representatives of the families, but in their adoption as titles for cities, counties, streets, etc., and the descendants of these families also retain ownership in some of the finest properties of the state. Miguel Antonio Aguirre is one of the most prominent Spanish gentlemen to whom the foregoing may be properly applied. He was born at San Diego, August 25, 1849, of Spanish parents, Jose A. and Rosario (Estudillo) Aguirre. His father, who was a silk merchant, came to the United States, carrying on his trade between the ports of California and Japan. In 1833 he was naturalized as a citizen of the United States at New Orleans and about 1843 located at Santa Barbara, and as he still owned vessels carried on business as a dealer in hides and tallow and supplied the old missions with those commodities which it was necessary for them to purchase. He later removed to San Diego, about the year 1846, and engaged in general merchandising, owning as well several ranches at different locations, among them being the one at San Jacinto, which the son now owns, and another near Compton, besides carrying on an extensive stock business. He was married in San Diego in 1847 and had four children: Miguel Antonio, the oldest; Dolores, who became the wife of Francisco Pico, mentioned elsewhere in this history; Jose A., who has an official position at the Folsom prison; and Martin G., now of Los Angeles, formerly warden at San Quentin under Governor Gage. The father died July 31, 1860.

After completing his education at Santa Clara and St. Vincent's colleges Mr. Aguirre immediately engaged in ranching, and later became a partner with Mr. Pico in the wholesale butchering business in Los Angeles, their establishment being one of the first started in that city. In 1877 he removed to San Jacinto and engaged in grain and stock-raising, building a house and barns and otherwise improving the premises which he occupied. He owns fifty acres of this ranch, twelve acres near Compton, in Los Angeles county, besides which he rents and cultivates one thousand acres in the Moreno valley, owning about forty dairy cows.

Mr. Aguirre's marriage to Rudecinda Pico, a sister of Francisco Pico, occurred at Los Angeles, September 9, 1880, and of this union nine children were born, namely: Elena, Jose, Rosario, Martin, Dolores, Francisco, Marie, Anita and Carlos. The mother died September 4, 1895, at the age of sixty-five years. Mr. Aguirre is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West at San Jacinto, and a devoted communicant of the Catholic Church. He is a man who takes a great interest in all matters of public import, is a constituent of the Democratic party, and for six years was deputy treasurer of San Diego county.

WILLIAM H. WITHAM. Many of the representative business men of Los Angeles county are of New England birth and breeding, and with their quick perceptive faculties, practical judgment and energetic activity, become conspicuous in the upbuilding of the cities and towns in which they settle. Conspicuous among this number is W. H. Witham, a comparatively new-comer in Glendale, of which he became a resident in 1902. A son of J. G. Witham, he was born April 20, 1860, in Southington, Hartford county, Conn., of thrifty colonial ancestry.

A native of Connecticut, J. G. Witham was there reared and spent his long and useful life of eighty-three years. He had an excellent training in the use of tools, and during his active career was employed in carpentering and building. He married Laura Buck, who belonged to an old and prominent New England family. She died when forty-eight years of age, leaving three children, two of whom reside in California, namely: J. N. Witham, living near Glendale, where he is a large orange and strawberry grower; and W. H., the special subject of this sketch.

Having obtained a good common school education in the city of his birth, W. H. Witham worked for his father until he had acquired proficiency in the carpenter's trade, which he followed first in his native state, both in Southington and in neighboring places. Becoming skillful and successful as a contractor and builder, he sought new fields of operation, and, after the destruction of Charleston, S. C., by an earthquake, he went there and materially assisted in rebuilding the city. January 1, 1902, he established himself in Glendale, where he has since been busily employed at his chosen occupation, and has won a fine reputation for his workmanship. As a contractor and carpenter he has erected many of the buildings of this locality, including his own residence and the one adjoining it, both being built in the mission style.

Joseph E. Morrison

In Connecticut, in 1890, Mr. Witham married Emma Gilbert, a daughter of William and Emily (Funk) Gilbert. On the paternal side Mrs. Witham is of New England stock, her father having been born in Connecticut, while on the maternal side she is of German origin, her mother having been a native of Baden, Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Witham are held in high esteem throughout the community in which they live, and are valued members of the Theosophical Society. Politically Mr. Witham is independent in his views, voting without regard to party lines, and fraternally he belongs to East Gate Lodge No. 290, F. & A. M., of Los Angeles.

JOSEPH A. MORRISON. The name of Joseph A. Morrison is connected with all that is substantial in character, excellent in ranching and admirable in social life in the Santa Maria valley. Few among those who may be called early settlers have contributed more to the harmony of their surroundings, the delight of their friends or the encouragement of the rising generation. Mr. Morrison is the owner of a quarter section of land, which, though a former possession of his father, has been purchased by the son with means acquired through personal toil, economy and good management. He was born in Warren county, Ohio, June 28, 1843, and is a son of Ezra and Martha Jane (Van Horn) Morrison, also natives of the Buckeye state.

Ezra Morrison was reared on a farm in Ohio, and subsequently succeeded to a property of his own which he operated for many years. The discovery of gold on the Pacific coast during the middle of the last century diffused a new current through his method of life and thought, opening up a quicker road to fortune than farming upon the prairies of the central west. It was typical of the man, though, that the gold fever which possessed him did not partake of that blindly speculative quality that usually characterized it. On the contrary, upon reaching Trinity Center, Trinity county, Cal., in the fall of 1855, he spent but a short time in the mines, and then settled down to sawmilling as his chief means of livelihood, regarding mining from then on as incidental and hardly dependable. So strong was his faith in the future of the state that he made his way back to Ohio in the fall of 1860, and in the spring of 1861 brought his family across the plains with wagons and mule teams, his most able assistant being his son, Joseph A., then eighteen years of age. Leaving the family in Sacramento in July, 1862, Mr. Morrison returned to Trinity county, where he continued to engage in sawmilling and mining until 1868, during that year locating upon a farm in Butte county, this state. Sixteen years later, in 1884, he came to the Santa Maria valley, bought the farm now owned by his son, Joseph A., and continued to make this his home until his death, October 6, 1905, at the age of eighty-eight years, eleven months and six days. His wife died in Kansas at the age of sixty years. After the death of his first wife he married Anna E. Osborne and two children were born in Butte county, John H. and George W. Subsequently he was married to Amanda M. Carman. Mr. Morrison possessed force of character and determination, and that he was a shrewd business man was evident from the fact that at the close of his life he owned ten hundred and sixty acres of land. He was a Republican in politics, a Presbyterian in religion, and for years was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Joseph A. Morrison followed the changing fortunes of his father until the latter's removal to Butte county in 1868. He first engaged in teaming in Sacramento in 1861 and '62 and then worked at mining among the crude surroundings of Trinity county until the fall of 1870. Up to this time his wealth consisted rather of experience than money, and it was with a wholesome respect for the safe and sure reward of farming that he returned to his native state of Ohio in 1870. Doubtless the Buckeye prairies sent forth to the coast a still more alluring call, for he soon married Alice Apgar, a native daughter of Ohio, with whom he settled on a rented farm for four years. In the meantime two children were born to himself and wife, of whom Estella is the wife of Stephen Runnels of San Luis Obispo county, and Roland, a rancher of this valley, married Pearl Wylie. In 1877 Mr. Morrison sold his stock and farm equipment and purchased a quarter section of land in Washington county, Kans., where he lived until 1891, and where three of his children were born: Frank, an electrician, of San Francisco, who married Sadie McCaw; Blanche, the wife of Abraham Rimirez, of Los Angeles; and Joseph A., Jr., living with his father.

Mr. Morrison came to the Santa Maria valley in 1891, and lived on rented land until purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of his father's estate. His ranch is fertile and well improved, and devoted principally to grain and beans. Two years after coming here, in 1893, his wife died at the age of forty years, and in January, 1904, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Jane Shea, a native of Vermont, and a member of the Catholic Church. In 1901 Mr. Morrison added to his many experiences a trip to the Klondike, where he prospected and mined for a few months. He has been an observing traveler, and in settled and frontier communities has drawn valuable deductions and evolved sound philosophies. He has made friends wherever fortune has directed his steps, and his genial and interesting personality, his generosity and kindly intent have smoothed many rough places in a career rich in incident and useful in scope.

JOSEPH W. YOUNG, JR. As a member of the Young-Parmley Investment Company Mr. Young has been interested in the real estate business in Long Beach since October, 1905, the incorporation of the company following one year later. Both Mr. Young and his partner are capable and energetic business men and in the comparatively short time which they have been in business have gathered around them one of the largest real estate enterprises in the city. While they handle business and residence property of all kinds, their specialty may be said to lie in subdividing large tracts and selling the lots as homesteads. The following is a partial list of the tracts which they have thus subdivided: Young and Parmley's annexation, Young and Parmley's tract, Windemere, Signal Park, East Long Beach, North Long Beach, Jessie, Hill street and Hillside tracts, besides laying out the town of Hynes.

Joseph W. Young is a native of the east, born in New York City August 4, 1881, a son of Joseph Wesley and Rose (Fisher) Young, the latter of French descent. The paternal grandfather, Joseph Young, was a cotton planter in Tennessee, but in an early day left the south and settled as a pioneer in California, his death occurring in San Francisco during the memorable days of '49. On his father's plantation near Memphis, Tenn., Joseph W. Young, Sr., was born, and at the time of his parents' removal to the west he was quite young. At one time he was proprietor of the Jumbo hotel in Salt Lake City, but in the main his interests have been along the line of mining. For many years he had mining claims in California, but at this writing his interests are almost wholly in Nevada.

Of the three children born to his parents, Joseph W. Young, Jr., was the eldest and received his early school training in New York City. When only eleven years old he started out to make his own way in the world, and that he has been successful in accomplishing his purpose has already been demonstrated. When he had secured sufficient means to warrant further schooling he took a two-year course in Gonzaga College in Spokane, Wash. Few young men of his years have had the world-wide experience which has fallen to Mr. Young's lot, for he has sailed in all of the principal waters of the globe, having shipped as a sailor on a vessel which touched port in China, Japan and Australia among other places. The years from 1898 to 1901 were spent in Alaska, all of which country he has traversed by boat. It was in 1903 that he came to Long Beach and engaged as a salesman in the real estate business with Frank Shaw for a short time. Thereafter he carried on a similar business alone until his association with Mr. Parmley, the business being later incorporated as the Young-Parmley Investment Company.

In Long Beach Mr. Young was married to Miss Jessie Cook, a native of Footville, Wis., and two sons, John Marshall and Joseph W., have been born to them. Fraternally Mr. Young is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Cosmopolitan Club, and in his political inclinations is a Republican.

GEORGE CHARNOCK. Situated on the Charnock road one-half mile South of Palms lies the ranch which, since 1884, has been the home of George Charnock and the center of his varied activities. The one hundred and fifty acres comprising the estate were purchased for $10 an acre by the present owner. By reason of the improvements made and also the general rise in land values, the tract is now valued at about $500 per acre and therefore represents large financial holdings on the part of Mr. Charnock. General farming engages his attention and in addition he has been interested in dairying for a number of years. Through sagacious management he secures from the property a fair income as well as interest on the investment represented.

By birth and lineage Mr. Charnock is a representative of the English race, by the associations of boyhood he is a Canadian, and by choice of citizenship he is identified with the United States. Born in the shire of Lancaster, England, December 18, 1835, he is a son of John and Anna Sophia (Pearce) Charnock, natives respectively of Preston and Liverpool, England. At one time the family had possessed wealth and the maternal grandfather had held lands and slaves in the West Indies. The father was reared on a farm, but in early life turned his attention to the mercantile business and later lost large sums of money in the hotel business. For two years he carried on the Clifton Arms hotel at Lythan, an unusually large inn, whose furnishings cost him about $75,000, and afterward he conducted a hotel at Preston, England, but both ventures brought him heavy losses.

Hoping to retrieve his losses in America John Charnock brought his family to the new world in May, of 1843. For ten years he engaged in farming in Canada and then settled on a farm near Madison, Wis., but two years later removed to Minnesota, where he took up government land in Dodge county and improved a farm. The possessor of a splendid constitution, he remained active and robust until his last sickness at eighty-six years of age. After coming to America he gave his allegiance to the Republican party, and in religion he was always faithful to the doctrines of the Church of England. His wife, who also was an earnest Episcopalian, died four years after they settled in Canada and was then forty-seven years of age. Ten children were born of their union, but one died before they left England.

When the family settled in Canada George Charnock was a boy of seven years, and he remained on a farm there until he was seventeen. On coming to the States he aided his father in developing a farm in Wisconsin and went from there to Minnesota, where at the age of twenty-one years he took up a pre-emption claim in Brown county. As owing to the hostilities of the Indians it was unsafe to remain in that sparsely settled region, he returned to his father's home in Dodge county. Purchasing the home place, he tilled its soil for a long period, but sold out in 1882 and removed to Nevada, where his brother, John J., had preceded him. With him he became interested in raising sheep near Eureka, where he had a large range and thousands of sheep in his flocks. Next he went to Arizona with the intention of engaging in the sheep business, but the Indians were hostile and numerous, and in a year he abandoned his holdings and removed to the Pacific coast.

The marriage of Mr. Charnock took place April 2, 1868, and united him with Miss Esther Irene Marcy, a native of Pennsylvania, and from which state her grandfather went to the front as captain of a company in the Revolutionary war. Two sons were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Charnock, namely: Nathan Snow, now living at Pasadena; and George Bancroft, who is associated with his father in the management of the home ranch. Politically Mr. Charnock votes with the Republican party in national elections, but in local matters he maintains liberal views, believing the character and intelligence of the candidate to be of greater importance than his ideas concerning national problems. In the community where for about one-quarter of a century he has made his home, he is honored as a man of upright character, tireless energy, varied agricultural knowledge and high principles of honor.

GEORGE SAMUEL BENSON. But little more than two years have elapsed since George Samuel Benson located in Long Beach, yet in his work as a merchant and real estate dealer he has ably demonstrated qualities which give him a place among the representative citizens of this section. He is a native of Livingston county, Mo., and was born December 22, 1852. His father, Ira Benson, was born in Baltimore county, Md., in 1826, and when twelve years of age was brought to the middle west by his father, Samuel Benson, who located in Trenton, Mo. Ira Benson was there reared to young manhood, when he enlisted in the Mexican war and served until its close as a lieutenant under Captain Slack. Returning home in 1849 he spent one year there, and, in 1850, outfitted with ox-teams and crossed the plains to California. Upon his arrival in the state he followed the example of the great majority and engaged in mining, but later conducted a provision store on the American river. In 1851 he returned to the east by way of Cape Horn, experiencing many hardships, and on account of storms, was forced to put in for repairs at Peru. He reached his home in safety, however, and in Chillicothe, Mo., engaged as a farmer and hotel keeper until his death, which occurred in the winter of 1862, at the age of thirty-six years. His wife, formerly Sarah Monroe, a native of Cooper county, Mo., died in that state in October, 1904, at the age of seventy-two years.

Ira Benson and his wife became the parents of one son and three daughters, of whom the son, George Samuel, was the oldest child. He received his education in the common schools of his native state and in young manhood followed his early training and engaged as a farmer. He finally became connected with the grocery business in Chillicothe, remaining there until 1902, in which year he went to Oklahoma and in Norman established a laundry enterprise. After two years in that business and location he came to California, in March, 1904, locating at Long Beach, where he established the George S. Benson & Son grocery business, located at the corner of Sixth and American avenue, an enterprise which proved successful. Subsequently, however, he gave up the business, and in July, 1906, embarked in the real estate business under the name of Benson, Fager & Benson, with offices at 350 Pine avenue, where they do a general real estate and insurance business.

In Missouri Mr. Benson married Anna Marlow, native of that place. Her father, P. M. Marlow, was a teamster in the Mexican war and in 1849 he crossed the plains to California and engaged in mining on the American river. He eventually returned to Missouri, in which state his death occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Benson are the parents of five children, namely: John Paul, engaged with his father in the real estate business; S. Ethel, M. Fay, Claude M., in the city clerk's office, and A. Ruth. In his fraternal relations Mr. Benson is a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M., and Long Beach Lodge No. 888, B. P. O. E. Politically he is a Democrat on national issues, while locally he reserves the right to vote for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office. On this issue, in April, 1906, he was elected a member of the board of trustees of Long Beach and is serving as chairman of the police and sanitary committee and is a member of the committee on public works. He is a member of the First Baptist Church, in which he officiates as trustee. In 1906 he erected a modern and commodious residence at No. 351 East Sixth street.

THE HOLLYWOOD HOTEL. No more commodious and home-like hostelry can be found in this part of Los Angeles county than the Hollywood hotel, whose reputation for dispensing good cheer as well as the more substantial comforts of life are proverbial. The hotel was established by G. W. Hoover, who also built the original structure in 1902. Two years later it was sold to Mrs. M. J. Anderson and still later was merged into a stock company, who enlarged and refurnished the hotel throughout, and at this writing (1906) still another addition is being constructed, which will give it a total of two hundred rooms. The company owning this structure and carrying forward the improvements was capitalized for $100,000 in 1904, but on December 1, 1906, the valuation of the hotel was placed at $230,000. Besides owning the plant which furnishes light for the building, they also have a cold storage and compressed air plant. In fact, everything connected with the hotel and its management is first-class, one of the finest six-piece bands dispensing music for the pleasure of guests while meals are being served and during the evening hours.

The management of the Hollywood hotel is under the immediate care of Mrs. M. J. Anderson, who is ably assisted by her son, Stanley S. Anderson. Mrs. Anderson was born in Iowa and was brought to the west by her father, Rev. Robert Boag. Formerly he was a minister, but is now living retired in Los Angeles. By her marriage Mrs. Anderson became the mother of two children, Stanley S. and Ruth C., the latter a student in the Marlborough school, Los Angeles. The son, Stanley S., was born in the San Gabriel valley and attended the primary schools of that locality, finishing his education by taking a course in the Los Angeles Business College. It was with this preparation that he came to the Hollywood hotel to become an assistant to his mother in the care and management of one of the largest hostelries in this part of the country outside of Los Angeles.

ELMER BACON. When the stalwart farmers of the east were beginning to seek new lands further removed from the Atlantic seaboard, Samuel Bacon, who was a native of New Jersey (born at Bridgeton, according to family traditions), took his household goods and traveled across the country to Ohio. Arriving in what is now Trumbull county he selected a tract of land lying on the banks of the Mahoning river, where a fertile valley smiled upon the waters of the tranquil stream and gave to the location an atmosphere of romance. In that neighborhood, in the township of Bazetta, he platted a town, to which the name of Baconsburg was given in his honor, but at a later date the name was changed to Cortland. There he passed the remaining years of his busy life and there he passed away at about the time of the Civil war. After he settled in Ohio he married and reared a family, among whom was Moses, who was born in Warren, Trumbull county, and died in the same locality after a life devoted to dairy farming. In his marriage he was united to Eliza Hovey, who was born in Ohio and remained in the same state until death.

Six sons and one daughter comprised the family of Moses Bacon, of whom the third son, Elmer, was born at Cortland, Trumbull county, Ohio, May 6, 1838, and received a fair education in common and select schools. While still quite young he left home in order to see something of the world, it being his intention to settle in Iowa. But a disagreement arose with a cousin, in whose company he traveled, and he was led for that reason to change his plans and join an expedition to Pike's Peak, then attracting thousands of gold-seekers. When he arrived in Denver there were only a few settlers in the place and prospects for work were so discouraging that he returned to Ohio, where he took up school teaching. When the Civil war began his younger brother enlisted, and as he was a delicate lad, the older brother gave up his school and enlisted in the Fourteenth Ohio Infantry in order to be with the one less sturdy than himself. The two fought side by side and served honorably until the expiration of their time, escaping imprisonment and injury.

At the close of the war Mr. Bacon became interested in wholesale and retail milling at Corry, Pa., and from there in 1877 he removed to Streator, Ill., where he engaged in the wholesale and retail flour business for sixteen years. Meanwhile both himself and wife began to suffer from poor health and for this reason they made a tour of Southern California, hoping that a temporary change would benefit them so as to permit their return to Illinois. While they found their trip in 1893 proved even more beneficial than they dared to hope, they were so attracted by the charm of the ocean and the climate that they settled in Long Beach, where Mr. Bacon remained until his death, in November of 1898. During the latter part of his life he lived retired, taking little part in the activities of the town, but enjoying to the full the tranquil sunshine and the pure ocean air.

While living at Corry, Pa., Mr. Bacon married, in August, 1868, Miss Fannie L. Frisbie, who was born at Madison, Lake county, Ohio, and now resides at No. 446 Pacific avenue, Long Beach. In religion she is identified with the Christian Church and maintains a warm interest in its progress. The only child of her marriage, Lura B., now Mrs. H. W. Wohlgemuth, resides at Glendora, this state. Mrs. Bacon was a daughter of Henry and Eliza (Astly) Frisbie, natives respectively of Connecticut and Ohio, the former of whom migrated to Ohio in young manhood and settled on a farm near Madison, where he remained until death. While Mr. Bacon never took an active part in politics he kept posted concerning public matters and gave his support to the Republican party. The old war days were kept in memory through his association with members of the Grand Army of the Republic, while in fraternal affairs he affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

ANTONIO TOMASINI. Few of the native sons of Switzerland have worked out their dreams of agricultural success in California with more patience and perseverance than did Antonio Tomasini. During thirty-three years, from the time of his arrival on the coast at the age of sixteen, to his lamented death near Casmalia, Santa Barbara county, February 2, 1898, he advanced from an unknown lad to one of the prosperous and influential dairymen of the Santa Maria valley, the possessor of a model and paying property, and the esteem and good will of all who had ever known him.

Mr. Tomasini came of forefathers long identified with farming and dairying in Switzerland, and his birth occurred on a small Alpine farm January 8, 1849. His own existence failed to reflect the longevity enjoyed by his parents, his father surviving until his eighty-fifth year, while his mother, at the same age, gives promise of several more years of usefulness. There were eleven children in the family, and three still are residents of California. Antonio began to work at the dairy business soon after his arrival in California, and spent about four years in Sonoma county, removing from there to Salinas county, and from there to Guadaloupe, Santa Barbara county, where he conducted a brewery for about eight years. From there he went to Point Sal, where he had a dairy, and after five years located on a ranch near Casmalia, this county, where terminated his useful, well-directed career. He was the personification of industry, and always lived within his means.

To the co-operation and sympathy of a capable wife Mr. Tomasini attributed much of his success in life. He married, July 1, 1878, Virginia Bonetti, who also was born in Switzerland, and whose mother, Domenica Piezzi, died in that country when fifty-three years old. Her father, Paul Bonetti, immigrated to the United States, and died at the home of his daughter near Casmalia, at the age of seventy-one years. Four children came to brighten the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tomasini: Silvio, Ellis, Isadore and Romilda. Two years after the death of her husband Mrs. Tomasini purchased the ranch upon which she since has lived with her children, and which has the reputation of being one of the best equipped dairying plants in the county. It is largely under the management of Mrs. Tomasini, who has mastered every detail of the business, and is possessed of shrewd financial and executive ability. She has about thirty cows, and manufactures butter which she sells to the stores. In connection with the dairy, the children of Mrs. Tomasini lease several hundred acres of land and conduct a general farming and stock-raising business. They are all industrious and capable, and inherit the thrift and ambition of their parents. Mrs. Tomasini is a devout member of the Catholic Church at Guadaloupe.

SHIRLEY V. BACON. Distinguished as the pioneer photographer of Long Beach and as one of the leading artists of Los Angeles county, Shirley V. Bacon is justly entitled to mention in a work of this character. By skill and ability in his profession he has built up a fine business in this vicinity, having an excellent patronage and commanding good prices for his work. A son of Oliver C. Bacon, he was born August 11, 1878, in Streator, La Salle county, Ill., where he grew to man's estate. A native of Ohio, the father immigrated to Illinois when young, and after the close of the Civil war located in Streator, Ill. From there, in 1895, he came to Los Angeles, Cal., where he resided until his death. He married Emma Kelly, who was born in Virginia, and is now a resident of Long Beach. She bore him three children, two sons and one daughter, of whom Shirley V. is the second-born.

Receiving his education in the public schools of his native town Shirley V. Bacon was graduated from the Streator high school in 1896, and soon after began the study of photography, for which his artistic talent peculiarly fitted him. Subsequently leaving Streator he followed his profession in many different cities, including Franklin, Marion and Anderson, in Indiana; Augusta, Ga.; Columbus, S. C., and Champaign, Ill. Coming to California in 1900, he located at Long Beach, opening a studio at No. 119 East Ocean avenue, and has since carried on a substantial business. His artistic talent, aided by his many years of experience, has given him a strong hold on the vast possibilities of the future, which every artist is trying to seize, and his work now compares favorably with that done by his professional brethren in the larger cities of the east.

At Long Beach, Cal., May 30, 1903, Mr. Bacon married Grace Mendenhall, a native of Iowa, and their pleasant home, which he erected at the corner of Ninth and Magnolia streets, is ever open to their large circle of friends and acquaintances. Politically Mr. Bacon is independent, voting for the best men and measures. Fraternally he is a member of Long Beach Lodge, K. of P., of which he was secretary two years, and of Long Beach Lodge, B. P. O. E.

GRANT SIMPSON STONE. The fame of Long Beach and the band which plays there the year around are inseparable and as manager of the first band which began furnishing continuous entertainment to residents of, and visitors to, the city, Grant Simpson Stone has been prominent in contributing this feature to the enterprises which have made Long Beach the thriving city that it is today. This is but one of the ways he has assisted in the upbuilding of Long Beach, however, and besides carrying on a successful real estate business, he is actively interested in various other enterprises. At one time he also set out a forty-acre orange grove at La Habra, Orange county, and otherwise improved the ranch.

July 23, 1862, Mr. Stone was born near Madison, in Dane county, Wis., the son of Ethel Samuel Stone, who was born in New York, and the grandson of Dr. Ethel Samuel Stone, during his lifetime an eminent physician of that state. The father removed to Ohio, later to Dane county, Wis., where he became a pioneer farmer, and finally to Grant county, that state, locating on a farm near Bloomington, where his death occurred. The mother, who was before her marriage, Melvina Boyles, was a native of Athens county, Ohio, and died in Wisconsin. Of the twelve children in the family all grew to maturity and seven are yet living, Grant Simpson being the youngest. He was five years of age when taken by his parents to Bloomington, where he received his education through the medium of the public schools. Remaining on the home farm until he was of age, he then married and followed the occupation of farming for one year. Removing to Madison he took up the study of telegraphy and nine months later secured the position of agent at Edgerton. From there he went to Pipestone, Minn., and continued in the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway until F. D. Underwood was made general manager of the Soo line, when he became agent at Tenney, Minn., and later filled the same position in Annandale, remaining there two and one-half years, and becoming one of the incorporators of that city.

In 1889 Mr. Stone came to California and entered the employ of the Southern Pacific, which soon sent him to Wilcox, Arizona, as telegraph operator and during the following two years he was employed in the same capacity at different times in Benson and Tucson. Returning to California he was given the station at Compton and there remained for nine years, after which he was sent by Wells, Fargo & Company to Long Beach to open their first regular city office at that place on Second street, near Pacific. A year later he resigned the position to engage in the real estate business, and being a talented cornetist he at the same time organized the Long Beach band, which later became the Long Beach Marine Band, of which he continued to be manager until May, 1904, when he relinquished the position in order that he might give all of his time to the prosecution of his real estate business, that having grown from a very small beginning to large proportions. He has laid out Lincoln Park tract, comprising eighty-five acres of land located on the main line of the Pacific Electric Railroad's four-track system, and also on the line of the Southern Pacific. There are three hundred and eighty-five lots well situated and well drained, and the whole tract will be graded, curbed, sidewalked and set to ornamental trees before the lots are deeded to buyers. The tract is within the corporate limits of Compton, and the lots have a fifty-foot frontage. He was one of the original incorporators and is now president of the Ornamental Stone and Brick Company, engaged in the extensive manufacture of stone cement blocks and brick, and carrying on, as well, a contracting and building business.

The family residence is located on Ocean avenue and Esperance street. By his marriage in Middleton, Dane county, Wis., he was united with Miss Jessie Sanford, and they have become the parents of four children, Edna, George, Ray and Harley. Fraternally Mr. Stone is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Fraternal Aid Society, and he belongs to the First Congregational Church in Long Beach. Politically he is a believer in Republican principles. He is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce of this city, and every movement tending to forward the development of Long Beach has his enthusiastic support, and as a man of many admirable personal qualities he is highly esteemed by a host of friends and acquaintances.

ABRAHAM T. ORELLI. One of the young business men of Long Beach who is rapidly forging to the front is Abraham T. Orelli, vice-president of the Orelli-McFadyen Company, which conducts a city livery at No. 127 West First street and is engaged in undertaking at No. 115 East Third street, both branches of the business being in a thriving condition. Augustine Orelli, the father of Abraham T., was born in Canton Ticino, Switzerland, in 1834, and as a young man plied the painter's and plasterer's trade. In 1845 he went to France and in 1858 came to California via the Panama route, locating in Placer county and later in Georgetown, and engaging in mining on the American river at Forest Hill divide. Subsequently he was occupied as a dairyman for six years, and having met with good success in all of his ventures, returned to Switzerland and married a daughter of his own native place, Marie Anna Orelli. Bringing his wife to Georgetown he then engaged in the hotel business until about 1892, when he bought an undertaking establishment which he still owns and which is now under the management of his son, C. A. Of their five children now living Camille A. is a funeral director in Georgetown; Abraham T. and Augustine J., are in business in Long Beach; while Mary Louise and Rose reside with their parents in the same city. Mr. Orelli is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

The birth of Abraham T. Orelli occurred August 9, 1879, in Georgetown, Cal., and after acquiring an education in the public and high schools of that city he assisted his father in his undertaking business. In 1901 he went to Auburn and learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until 1904, when he again took up work with his father, continuing until January, 1906, when he came to Long Beach and engaged in his present business. The company was incorporated in March with A. J. Orelli president; A. T. Orelli vice-president; Edgar McFadyen secretary, and became the successors of W. P. Wilson & Son. Mr. Orelli is a member of Georgetown Parlor No. 91, N. S. G. W.; and of the Woodmen of the World lodge of Long Beach. Politically he is a believer in the principles of the Republican party. His brother, A. J. Orelli, who is associated in business with him, was also born in Georgetown, and after attending the public and high schools worked at undertaking for a time, then took a professional course in Myers College of Embalming of San Francisco, graduating therefrom in 1903. He is a member of the State Funeral Directors' Association of California and is considered one of the most competent men of the state in his line of work. He also belongs to Georgetown Parlor No 91, N. S. G. W., and fraternally holds membership in the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks lodge in Long Beach. Being young men of enterprise and energy and thoroughly trained in every department of their business their continued success is fully assured.

RAYMOND E. CHASE, M. D. Prominent in the medical fraternity of Los Angeles county is Raymond E. Chase, M. D., of Glendale. Possessing keen intelligence, ability and good mental attainments he keeps in touch with modern, up-to-date methods in vogue in his profession, and is meeting with flattering results as a general practitioner, having an extensive practice in both Los Angeles and in his home town. Of substantial New England ancestry, he was born in New York state. His father, S. Everett Chase, was born and reared among the hills of the Granite state, and grew to manhood on the home estate, inheriting from his colonial ancestors habits of thrift and industry, and developing a strong, manly character. He worked for several years as a machinist, and then removed with his family to Rochester, N. Y., where he was engaged in business as a shoe manufacturer for a few years. Coming from there to Los Angeles county, California, in 1883, he located in Glendale. Buying twenty acres of land, he improved it, and for awhile was pleasantly and profitably employed in diversified ranching, raising all kinds of deciduous fruits, and paying much attention to the cultivation of oranges. Subsequently selling his ranch he lived retired from active pursuits until his death, October 28, 1904. During his residence in Glendale he evinced a genuine interest in local progress and improvement, heartily indorsing all enterprises calculated to benefit the town or county. For twelve years he was connected with the Childs' Track Pipe and Reservoir Company as its secretary. Fraternally he was a member of the Masonic order. Politically he cast his vote for the best men and measures, independent of party restrictions, and for several terms served as road overseer. Mr. Chase married Ella T. Harris, of Rochester, N. Y., and she survives him, living in Glendale. Three children were born of their marriage, namely: W. E. Chase, of Los Angeles; Jennie L., wife of J. D. Robinson, of Los Angeles, and Raymond E.

Coming with his parents to Glendale in 1883 Raymond E. Chase acquired his rudimentary education in the public schools, after which he took the full course at the Los Angeles high school, receiving his diploma. Subsequently entering the medical department of the University of Southern California, at Los Angeles, he was graduated from that institution in 1901 with the degree of M. D. Since that time he has been in active practice of his chosen profession, both in Los Angeles, where he has an office, and in Glendale, where, among his neighbors and friends, he has built up a large and lucrative patronage, his professional skill being recognized and appreciated.

September 14, 1904, Dr. Chase married May Rogers Pirtle, daughter of John A. Pirtle, well-known in business circles as president of the Bank of Los Angeles. They are parents of one child, Shirley E. The Doctor is prominent in medical circles, belonging to the Los Angeles County Medical Society, and likewise to the State Medical and the American Medical Associations. Fraternally he is a Mason, holding membership in Unity Lodge 368, F. & A. M., of Glendale, and is a member of Glendale Lodge No. 388, I. O. O. F.

OLIVER McCOY. It is a trite but true saying that industry hath its own reward, and this is nowhere better illustrated than in the life of Oliver McCoy. In 1900 he purchased one hundred acres of choice land lying five miles north of San Pedro, and during the six years which have since elapsed he has wrought a transformation which the average rancher would have required twice as long to perform. Neither time, money nor effort has been spared in bringing about present conditions, a fact which was demonstrated in the erection of his present residence in 1902. It is a modern eight-room house, in which all of the accessories to convenience and comfort have been included.

Born in Iowa September 1, 1857, Oliver McCoy is a son of John and Marietta (Miller) McCoy, of whom a more detailed account will be found in the sketch of Benton McCoy, given elsewhere in this volume. Until the home was broken up by the death of the father, Oliver McCoy, was a resident of Iowa, in whose public schools he was educated. Coming to California in 1881 he located near Long Beach, where he later bought fifty acres of land upon which he resided for seven years or until his removal to Los Angeles. Three years afterward he came to the vicinity of his present home, renting six hundred acres directly north of the ranch he now owns. As previously stated he purchased his present property in 1900.

Whatever of good fortune has fallen to Mr. McCoy has been brought about by the combined efforts of himself and wife, who has been a helpmate to him under all conditions. She was formerly Mary Ann Matilda Bell, a native of Mississippi, and the ceremony which united her with Mr. McCoy was celebrated July 20, 1893. They have four children, Esther, Rena Lemar, Agnes B. and Frances Willard. Mrs. McCoy is a faithful member of the Baptist Church, while her husband is identified with the Presbyterian Church. His fraternal connections bring him into membership with Wilmington Lodge No. 130, A. O. U. W. From a material standpoint Mr. McCoy has been very successful, and his personal attributes are in accord with sterling western citizenship.

FRED I. KIMBALL. The long term of years during which Fred I. Kimball has been supervisor of the State Hospital for the Insane located in Highland is sufficient proof of his efficiency in that capacity and the satisfactory service he is rendering. He was born September 11, 1858, in Orleans county, Vt., the son of Dr. Isaac and Finette S. (Percival) Kimball, both of whom were also natives of Vermont. In 1861, during the Civil war, the mother went to the front as a nurse, and while taking care of the wounded soldiers contracted typhoid fever. Her husband, who attained the rank of a lieutenant and later was appointed to the medical staff, removed her from a tent where she was raving with fever and took her to the nearby home of a Mr. Mason, a Confederate sympathizer, and there she died in June, 1861, at the age of thirty-seven years, in Virginia. Mr. Kimball's health became impaired while still serving in the army and he was sent home to act as a recruiting officer until the close of the conflict. He was a successful medical practitioner throughout his life, and lived to be seventy-six years old, his death having occurred in October, 1903.

After securing a good common school education in his native county Fred I. Kimball went to Independence, Iowa, and was for ten years engaged as an attendant in the hospital there. Later he became connected with the Elgin (Ill.) hospital as supervisor, retaining the position for three years. Returning to Independence he filled a similar position there and at the expiration of eighteen months came to Los Angeles and was steward of the Los Angeles hospital for two and one-half years. It was in June, 1893, that he came to the State Hospital for the Insane at Highland in the capacity of supervisor, and he continued to fill that position until December, 1904, when he resigned, nine months later returning to the position, which he has since filled.

Mr. Kimball became the father of three children, namely: Blanche, who was engaged in hospital work for four years in the California Hospital at Los Angeles, and is now the wife of Dr. Arthur F. Godin of that city; Donald F., and Merritt Percival, the latter two being students of the Highland schools. Mrs. Kimball, who bore the maiden name of Maren A. Berg, a native of Norway, holds membership in the Congregational Church of Highland and is actively interested in all religious work. Fraternally Mr. Kimball was made a Mason in Independence, Iowa, in 1882, and still belongs to the lodge at that place; joined the Knights of Pythias lodge at Independence in 1887, and is a charter member of the Knights of Korasan of Los Angeles; and in 1895 was made a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Redlands.

WILLIAM CALEB LITTLEPAGE. When a young man of twenty years, well qualified by youthful energy for the arduous responsibility of pioneer life, Mr. Littlepage came to California in company with his father and other members of the family, and settled among the pioneers of Ballena district, San Diego county. By inheritance he possesses the chivalrous traits and genial manner characteristic of southerners. His parents, William W. and Mary Ann (Woods) Littlepage, were natives respectively of Virginia and Kentucky, and for some years made their home in Missouri, where W. Caleb was born February 11, 1848. A few years later the father sought the cheaper lands of Texas and established a home in the midst of lonely frontier environments, where he labored with ceaseless industry but without the gratification of attaining success. Hearing much concerning the prospects offered by California to men of persistent application he determined to seek a home near the Pacific coast, and accordingly disposed of his Texas interests in 1868, loaded his effects in a wagon and with wife and children journeyed along the southern route. After a tedious trip behind an ox-team El Cajon valley was reached and a temporary home there established, but soon removal was made to the Ballena district and land was taken up from the government. For many years the father lived on the quarter-section ranch he had pre-empted from the government and on that homestead he died in 1899, at the age of seventy-five years, and the demise of his wife occurred two years before, at sixty-five years of age.

Shorty after he had attained his majority W. C. Littlepage took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land near the tract secured by his father, and all through the years that have since intervened he has given his attention to the bringing of the land under cultivation, the making of necessary improvements, the building of needed structures, and the general development of his homestead. Besides he has rented other tracts and has almost two hundred acres in grain. As might be supposed, farm work takes the precedence of other activities, yet he never neglects any duty that falls to a public-spirited citizen and at present he fills the office of clerk of the school board in his district. Politically he has been a stanch supporter of the Democratic party ever since casting his first ballot in favor of its principles. A few years after he came to San Diego county, in 1874, he was united in marriage with Miss Etta Deming, a native of Michigan, but from childhood a resident of California. Four children were born of their union, namely: Fannie May, who married Martin Curlee and makes her home in Pomona; Edgar G., who is married and lives in Poway; Edith F., who is married to E. F. Cravath and lives in Ballena, this county; and Albert E., who is married and resides in San Diego, where he holds a position as foreman in the Kelley stables. Throughout Ballena district the Littlepage family has been known for many years and its members have the confidence and esteem of those who have shared with them the agricultural, moral and educational upbuilding of this section.

JOHN B. SNODDY. One of the successful farmers of Los Angeles county is John B. Snoddy, who is located two miles northeast of El Monte and engaged in the cultivation of a walnut ranch of fifty acres. His father, William Snoddy, represented elsewhere in this work, is one of the early pioneers of California, a man of worth and works, successful in his personal affairs and an enterprising and prominent man among the citizens of this community. John B. Snoddy was born on his father's ranch in El Monte November 1, 1874, the oldest child in the family, and all of his boyhood days were passed in that place. He received his education in the public schools and at the same time was trained to the practical duties of a farmer's son. After leaving the public school of Savannah he attended Woodbury's Business College of Los Angeles, from which institution he was graduated in 1894. Returning home he remained on his father's ranch until attaining his majority, when he became dependent upon his own resources, his first business venture being as proprietor of a feed and sale stable in Pasadena. He was successful in his enterprise, but after three years was burned out. The greater part of his capital being lost he then engaged in farming, and in 1898 purchased the G. W. Tungate walnut ranch at El Monte, adjoining his father's property. The trees had just begun bearing and since that time have proved a profitable investment, each year bringing him large returns for his efforts. In 1906 he improved his property by the erection of a handsone residence, and has otherwise added to its value, bringing to bear in his work an intelligent interest and capability which have justly placed him among the enterprising and successful men of this section. This ranch receives irrigation from the Tungate and Snoddy ditch, which his father took out in 1870.

In Pasadena Mr. Snoddy was united in marriage with Miss Anna C. French, who was born in Missouri and reared in California from the age of twelve years, her parents being early pioneers of the state. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and active in its work. They have one son, Emory. Mr. Snoddy belongs to the Woodmen of the World of Pasadena and the Ancient Order of United Workmen of El Monte, both himself and wife having the Degree of Honor in the latter, while his wife is chief of honor. Politically Mr. Snoddy is a stanch Democrat.

BERNARD SCHMITZ. William Schmitz, one of the representative men of Ventura county, and the father of Bernard Schmitz, of this review, accompanied his parents to the new world in 1860, having been born in Prussia, April 16, 1851. The first twenty years of his life in this country were spent in Butler county, Neb., which he left in 1880 to take up life in the far west. He first located in Santa Ana, Orange county, and upon the ranch which he purchased there he made his home for nine years, or until removing to the Santa Clara valley, in Ventura county, and purchasing the ranch of sixty acres, upon which he now lives, and which is planted to lima beans. His marriage in 1876 united him with Mary Stiner, a native of New York state, and the following children were born to them: John, who is married and lives near Hueneme, Ventura county; Bernard, the subject of this sketch; Stella Carlson, Emma, at home; Robert Ingersoll, and one child who died in infancy.

Born in Butler county, Nebraska, January 10, 1880, Bernard Schmitz was next to the oldest in his parents' family, but as he was an infant at the time of his parents' removal to the coast he has no knowledge of any other home than California. His schooling was received in the common schools of the Santa Clara valley, and, after his education was completed, he remained with his father until attaining his majority. Ambitious to engage in ranching on his own behalf, in 1901 he rented the property near Oxnard, on which he now resides, and in the abundance of harvests, which he has gathered, has more than realized his fondest expectations. One hundred and fifty acres are in beets and barley, while the remainder of the ranch, or two hundred and fifty acres, are in lima beans.

The marriage of Bernard Schmitz and Florence Moore was celebrated May 10, 1903, she being a native of Ohio. She is an active worker in the Christian Church of Oxnard, of which she is a member, and with her husband stands high in the social circles of Oxnard. Mr. Schmitz is conceded to be one of the most enterprising citizens in this part of Ventura county, and if what he has already accomplished can be taken as a criterion, future years will find him ranking among the wealthy men of the state.

E. LYNN COVERT. While the term pioneer as generally understood would hardly be applicable to Mr. Covert, he was, nevertheless, an early settler in Long Beach, coming here in 1891, at which time its population scarcely reached seven hundred. No one has been a more interested witness of the advancement and progress along all lines of its growth than he, and during the past fifteen years he has not only been a witness but has been one of the most active workers in bringing about present conditions.

Mr. Covert was born in Hopewell, Ind., November 11, 1854, the eldest of the five children born to his parents, George W. and Mary E. (La Grange) Covert, of whom more may be learned by referring to the sketch of the father elsewhere in this volume. When he was a lad of about six years the family removed from Indiana to Kansas, locating near Carlyle, and in the public schools of the latter place he gained his first educational training. Some time later, about 1873, removal was again made to Indiana, and in the high school of Whiteland he completed his education. He was now of an age when he could be of assistance to his father, who was a practicing physician and dentist, a dual profession which he followed in Whiteland and later in Franklin, that state. After working for a time in the dental office he relinquished this to take up farming and stock raising in that locality, and continued this occupation as long as he remained in the East. As has been previously stated he came to Long Beach in 1891 and two years later established himself in the real estate business in this city. It was no doubt his favorable report concerning the country, and especially of Long Beach, that induced the father to remove west the following year, and he has made his home in this city ever since. In 1904 Mr. Covert and his father became associated in the subdivision of a tract of land on American avenue between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets, an undertaking which has been exceedingly profitable, for practically all of the lots have been sold at good prices. Besides the residence which he built on Stanwood avenue Mr. Covert also owns residence property in other parts of the city, and is carrying on a very lucrative business as a real estate dealer.

In Whiteland, Ind., Mr. Covert was married to Miss V. Belle Brewer, a native of that State, and to them two children have been born, Ada Edell and Angelo. Mr. Covert's interest in his adopted city has been recognized by his fellow-citizens, who nominated and elected him a member of the city council, serving to their satisfaction and to his own credit for one term. Further proof of his loyalty and devotion to the well-being of Long Beach was demonstrated when he set on foot the organization of the Chamber of Commerce, composed of business men of the city, who in every community are the bone and sinew which sustain it. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, having joined the order in Greenwood, Ind., and politically he is a Republican. Both Mr. Covert and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Long Beach, and share the love and respect of their many friends and acquaintances.

AUGUSTE CANTARINI. One of the more extensive ranchmen in Riverside county is Auguste Cantarini, who lives one-half mile north of Temecula, on his large grain ranch. His birth occurred in 1860, in Ticino, Switzerland, in which country he was educated in the common schools. His parents were Eustorgio and Lucia Cantarini, both natives of Switzerland. The death of the father occurred in 1882, at the age of eighty-six years, and that of the mother in 1904, at the age of eighty-seven. Auguste Cantarini immigrated to the United States when sixteen years of age, locating in Temecula in 1876, and securing employment by the month until 1881, when he became of age and was able to file on a tract of government land. He improved the property thus acquired and gradually added to his holdings, until at the present time his ranch embraces four hundred and fifty-one acres of land.

In 1886 Mr. Cantarini returned to his native land and there married Pia Cantarini, born in Switzerland, and brought her with him to this country. Her parents were Onorato and Sophia Cantarini; the mother's death occurred in 1887, at forty-five years of age, the father being now sixty-six years old and residing in South America. Mr. and Mrs. Auguste Cantarini are the parents of eight children, namely: Leo Paul, Angelina, Mary, John, Joseph, Elvezi, Daniel, and Serena. Mr. Cantarini is a progressive and enterprising citizen, and by industry, thrift and honesty earned a success in his business which he richly deserves.

EDWARD REBER. As a contracting plumber Edward Reber conducts a successful business in San Bernardino and his work shows him to be thoroughly familiar with all parts of his trade. Mr. Reber is of German descent, his father, John, having been born in that country. Upon immigrating to America he settled first in Iowa on a farm, and later went to Stafford county, Kans., where he secured a piece of raw land and improved it until it became a valuable piece of property. In early days, before the railroads threaded their way across the continent, he and a comrade undertook the hazardous trip of crossing the plains from the farm in Kansas to California by foot, and proved their powers of endurance and courage by accomplishing the task not only once, but twice, for they returned to Kansas in the same way. In 1885 Mr. Reber located in Los Angeles and is now engaged in ranching at Redondo. His wife, formerly Mary Olliman, was also a native of Germany, and they are the parents of ten children, all of whom are living.

It was on October 26, 1870, that Edward Reber was born in Stafford, Kans., where he lived until 1890, when he came to Los Angeles. His education was received through the medium of the public schools and after coming to San Bernardino, in 1892, he began his apprenticeship at the plumber's trade. Subsequently he was employed successively by Wilcox & Rose, Thomas Hadden and George Cooley, and in 1902 he opened a shop of his own on Court street and began to take contracts for general plumbing and heating. His work is all done in a highly satisfactory manner, as may be seen in the Home Telephone building, the St. Charles hotel, and the residences of Mrs. Cochrane, Messrs. James Fleming, Crossman and Glasgow, as well as elsewhere. He erected the family residence at No. 776 Fourth street, where he resides with his wife, who was formerly Miss Sadie Kenyon, a native of San Bernardino county, where her father is a prominent ranchman. Mr. Reber is a member of the Board of Trade and the Merchants' Protective Association, and fraternally affiliates with the Woodmen of the World and Knights of Pythias. He is an enterprising and progressive citizen, an energetic business man and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

MICHAEL HENRY BURKE. One of the most enterprising representatives of the industrial interests of Los Angeles county is Michael Henry Burke, of Terminal, who has attained marked distinction as a millwright, having built and equipped many of the more important sawmills and planing-mills of this part of the state. A man of inventive genius, familiar with every detail concerning the manufacture of lumber, his quick, keen intellect, practical training and wide experience have made him complete master of his trade, and as superintendent of the Southern California Lumber Company's planing mill his knowledge and services are thoroughly appreciated by his superiors. A son of the late Alexander Burke, he was born June 3, 1855, in Jefferson county, N. Y.

On emigrating from Tipperary, Ireland, his native town, to the United States, Alexander Burke lived for a while in Jefferson county, N. Y., being employed as a veterinary surgeon and a farmer. He subsequently removed to Canada, but on the breaking out of the Civil war returned to New York to offer his services to the country of his adoption, and as a gunner in Captain Green's company of heavy artillery served until the close of the conflict. Removing then with his family to Excelsior, Wis., he improved a farm, and, in connection with his work as a veterinary surgeon, was engaged in tilling the soil until his death, which occurred at Rice Lake. His wife, whose maiden name was Helen Connors, was born at Cape Vincent, N. Y., and died at Rice Lake, Wis. Of their family of twelve children, five sons and three daughters are living.

Moving to Canada with his parents when a small child, Michael H. Burke lived in Kingston until after the close of the Civil war. Going then with the family to Wisconsin, he continued his studies in the public schools, being afterwards graduated from Princeton College, in Princeton, Minn. Returning then to Wisconsin, he learned the trade of a mechanical engineer, and subsequently, as head sawyer in different mills, became proficient with every detail of lumber manufacturing. An expert mechanic, he installed machinery in many mills of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and was permanently employed by one firm for eight years.

Coming to San Pedro, Cal., in 1901, Mr. Burke built and started the Southwestern Lumber Company's mill. Subsequently locating on Terminal Island, he erected his present fine residence, and built for the Southern California Lumber Company the finely equipped planing mill of which he has since had charge. He bought all of the equipments, installed the machinery, which is of the most approved modern construction, on the planer having two new inventions of his own, a shifter and a tightener. This mill, one of the finest in southern California, has a capacity of two hundred thousand feet a day.

In Richland, Wis., Mr. Burke married Emma Morgan, a native of that place, and they are the parents of six children, namely: William, a practical chemist; James, Sylvester and Francis, all expert machinists and engaged in the mill with their father; Harvey; and Nellie. Politically Mr. Burke affiliates with the Republican party, and fraternally he belongs to the Foresters of America, the Modern Woodmen of America and to the Modern Brotherhood of America.

HAL W. BALY. Prominent among the rising young business men of San Pedro is Hal W. Baly, bookkeeper for the E. K. Wood Lumber Company. Possessing an active brain, keen and quick at solving mathematical problems, he is a skilful accountant, and in his present position is performing the duties devolving upon him with ability and fidelity. Having great faith in the future possibilities of his adopted city, he is warmly interested in everything that tends to promote the welfare of the community in which he resides and in which he is very popular, few men having a larger list of warm friends than he. A native of Kansas, he was born September 21, 1880, in Butler county, a son of Henry Baly, in whose sketch, on another page of this volume, further parental and ancestral history may be found.

Brought by his parents to San Pedro in 1886, Hal W. Baly was here brought up, receiving a good education in the public schools. In 1899 he began his active career as an assistant bookkeeper for the Kirchkoff & Cuesner Lumber Company, with which he was associated two years. Resigning his position with that firm in 1901, he has since been bookkeeper for the E. K. Wood Lumber Company, and in this capacity has contributed largely towards the advancement of the financial prosperity of his employers. He is a man of sterling integrity, honest and upright in all of his dealings, and is well worthy of the regard in which he is so universally held.

In San Pedro, Mr. Baly married Frances Morris, who was born, reared and educated in Los Angeles, and their pleasant home, at No. 357 Sixth street, is a center of social activity. Politically Mr. Baly is a stanch Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and both he and his wife belong to the Daughters of Rebekah. Religiously Mr. and Mrs. Baly are members of the Episcopal Church, and liberal contributors towards its support.

PHILIP NOURBOURNE MYERS. No name in the San Jacinto valley, Riverside county, is more enduringly associated with its substantial development than that of Mr. Myers, general manager of the Hemet Land and Water Company, and one of the large land owners and prosperous citizens of this section. He is a native of the south, born in Covington, Ky., September 16, 1866, the son of Hon. Harvey Myers. The latter was a native of Pennsylvania, born, reared and educated in Great Bend, Susquehanna county, leaving there during young manhood to take up teaching in Kentucky. Subsequently he began reading law and in due time was admitted to the bar, establishing his office in Covington, Ky. Politically a Republican and hence a strong Union man, he was not only a witness but was a participant in the Civil conflict, and assisted in the defense of Cincinnati against the Confederate raider, Kirby Smith. Some time afterward he was the choice of his party as their representative in the state legislature, there as elsewhere serving his constituents faithfully and to the best of his ability. At the close of his term he returned once more to Covington and resumed his law practice, having in the meantime associated himself in business with J. W. Stevenson, ex-governor of Kentucky. Thus far in his experience Mr. Myers had received many honors and a brilliant career of many years of usefulness apparently lay before him, but in the midst of it all he was suddenly cut down, being killed by William J. Terrell, who held a grievance against Mr. Myers for his stand upon some legal matter which was detrimental to him. His untimely death occurred in 1874, when he was only forty-six years of age. He was survived only five years by his widow, who before her marriage was Susan Scott, born in Georgetown, Ky., the descendant of an old Virginia family. Four children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Myers, of whom we mention the following: The eldest, Harvey, is an attorney of considerable note in Covington, and for two terms was speaker in the House of Representatives; besides being prominent at the bar he is also a well-known business man, having a large interest in the Independent Telephone Company, is president of the Memphis Telephone Company and is also interested in the Corsicana and Dallas (Texas) Independent Telephone Companies. The second child in the parental family, Adeline L., became the wife of Rev. William A. Shedd, who died in Persia, while there representing the Presbyterian Board of Missions. Susan is the wife of Thomas J. Willison, the family making their home in Cincinnati, Ohio.

The youngest child in his parent's family, Philip N. Myers attended the common and high schools of Covington and after his graduation began reading law in the office of Hallam & Myers in that city. He gained a valuable insight into legal affairs in his capacity of official reporter, his duties taking him into the United States district court, the courts throughout the northern district of Kentucky and the criminal courts. In addition to this he held other city and county offices which proved of considerable benefit to him from an educational standpoint. He was admitted to the bar in 1890, and the year following he came to California, in San Francisco being admitted to practice at the bar of the supreme court. Notwithstanding his excellent legal training circumstances seemed to lead him in another direction. Going to Bakersfield in 1891 he was offered and accepted the position of private secretary to the general manager of the Kern County Land and Water Company, of which Haggin & Tevis were the owners and proprietors. Owing to his wife's ill-health he was compelled to give up his position four years later and seek a climate more suited to her condition, and for this reason located in Los Angeles temporarily. In the mean time he had been offered a position in Hemet, and hither he came in 1896 to become secretary of the Hemet Land and Water Company, an enterprise which during the past ten years has made rapid strides under his capable management. The originator of the enterprise which has made a garden spot of the San Jacinto valley is Col. E. L. Mayberry, who in 1887 acquired the water rights and incorporated the Hemet Land and Water Company. The reserve supply of water is held in Lake Hemet, which drains a watershed of over one hundred thousand acres, and from which water is tapped when the supply from the streams below runs low. Water is diverted below Lake Hemet at four points, from Strawberry creek, the South fork, North fork and from the San Jacinto river, which during the winter and spring are constantly replenished from the mountains and give an abundant supply without drawing upon the reserve, until the irrigating season opens, when a partial supply is often necessary for about three months. In 1890 Colonel Mayberry began the construction of the Hemet dam, which is a solid piece of masonry built across a narrow granite gorge at the lower end of Hemet mountain valley. On top it is two hundred and fifty feet long, and is imbedded into the solid walls of the canon on either side and also below bedrock at the bottom. Its base is one hundred feet thick and at present its height is one hundred and twenty-two and a half feet, although the plans now are to raise this to one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty feet. The dam has an elevation of forty-four hundred feet above sea level, or twenty-eight hundred feet above the town of Hemet, a condition which precludes any fear of water famine on the part of residents of the surrounding country. The holdings of the Hemet Land and Water Company at one time comprised seven thousand acres, to which was subsequently added three thousand acres by purchase from the Fairview Land and Water Company. About half of this large tract has been sold in ten-acre plats, upon which deciduous and citrus fruits, alfalfa, broom corn or sugar beets are grown with considerable profit. The company is capitalized at $3,000,000, and is under the direct management of Mr. Myers, who resides in Hemet, while the president, W. F. Whittier, makes his headquarters in San Francisco.

In St. Louis, Mo., December 6, 1886, Mr. Myers was united in marriage with Miss Alma Newman, who is a native of Fulton, Mo. Two children have been born to them, Harvey H., who is attending Leland Stanford University, and Philip N., Jr. Politically Mr. Myers is a Republican, and is active in party ranks. For six years he served as county central committeeman, and in June, 1906, was chairman of the county convention for the nomination of candidates. On June 18, 1906, he was sent as a delegate to the state convention which met in Santa Cruz. Numerous fraternal organizations claim his membership, among them the Republican Club, of which he was the first president, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Riverside, Independent Order of Foresters, Fraternal Aid and the Knights of the Maccabees. With his wife Mr. Myers attends the Episcopal Church, of which they are both members. By right of her descent from Revolutionary ancestors Mrs. Myers has received certificate of membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution, in whose ranks she is an active worker. The Myers home is one of the most beautiful and attractive places in Hemet, a town which is indebted immeasurably to Mr. Myers for what he has accomplished.

WILLIAM T. McLAUGHLIN. An energetic and enterprising young rancher, William T. McLaughlin is located two and one-half miles southwest of Palms, Los Angeles county, engaged in the cultivation and improvement of a ranch of fifty acres which he owns, besides renting two hundred acres which he carries on in connection with his own property.

A native of Douglas county, Kans., born November 17, 1865, William T. McLaughlin is a son of John and Mary (Riggs) McLaughlin, born in Pennsylvania and Missouri respectively. While he was still a young man the father became a pioneer settler in the commonwealth of Kansas, and as he was born in 1834, was less than thirty years old at the time of the outbreak of the Civil war. He joined a Kansas regiment in defense of the Union, and though his service was not protracted, it was rendered willingly and faithfully. When he located in Kansas many years ago he took up from the government a quarter section of land which he improved and cultivated with the idea of making his home there indefinitely, but the year 1870 brought about a change in his plans and witnessed his removal to California. His first purchase of land in the state was a ranch of one hundred and fifty acres in Los Angeles county not far from Compton, and upon selling this some time later he invested the proceeds in a ranch on Adams street in the same vicinity. At this writing he is living retired in Los Angeles, making his home on Twentieth street. Named in order of birth the children comprising the parental family are as follows: Ellen, who became the wife of F. Garrison; Mattie, Mrs. C. R. Coe; William T., the subject of this sketch; Belle, who is unmarried and makes her home with her parents; George, who chose as his wife Bessie Andrews; Eva and Walter, also at home; Ida, Mrs. George Rittsman; and Minnie, the wife of H. W. Chase.

When twenty-one years of age William T. McLaughlin assumed the responsibilities of life on his own account, and the property which he then selected and purchased is the same on which he makes his home today. This comprises fifty acres not far from the village of Bollona, but as the latter is not a postoffice he receives his mail and markets his produce in Palms, which is about two and a half miles distant from his ranch. Besides this property he owns two hundred acres in Tulare and Kings counties. Carson City, Nev., was the early girlhood home of Mrs. McLaughlin, who before her marriage was Miss Laura Kitzmeyer. She is now the proud mother of two daughters, Inez and Lulu. While Mr. McLaughlin is not named as a follower of either of the great political bodies, it is no indication that he is luke-warm in his interest in the affairs of his nation and county, but on the other hand suggests an independent spirit, and in casting his ballot for the man best fitted for the office rather than for the support of a political organization he is acting from the point of principle.

JOHN McGLASHAN. In whatever part of the world the Scotch people may elect to reside they are welcomed as valued additions to the citizenship of the locality, for their thrift, energy and high principles of honor are known the whole world around, and it is generally conceded that no race excels them in the qualities that contribute toward ideal citizenship. Representative of that nation is John McGlashan, a prosperous rancher who owns and operates a ranch of seventy-eight acres in the vicinity of Arroyo Grande, San Luis Obispo county, and who for a number of years has cultivated this tract with increasing financial returns and gratifying success. A portion of the property is under cultivation to beans, while twenty acres are utilized as pasture land for horses.

Born in Scotland August 28, 1835, this progressive farmer is a son of John and Elizabeth (Rogers) McGlashan, also natives of that country, but during much of their married lives citizens of Fulton county, N. Y., where the mother died at sixty-six years and the father when eighty-two years of age. Of their ten children seven are still living, and these were trained to habits of uprightness, industry and honesty under the wise preceptorship of the parents. In religious views the family were earnest members of the Presbyterian Church. During all of his active life the father followed agricultural pursuits and while he did not reap a fortune from his labors, he was enabled to support his large family in comfort and accumulated a competency for his old age.

When the family left Scotland for the shores of the new world John McGlashan was a boy of eight years, and much of his education was acquired in the schools of Fulton county, N. Y., where he grew to manhood. In addition to working on a farm in youth he learned the trade of mason, but this he did not follow for any considerable period. Leaving the east in 1858 he went to the frontier regions of what was then known as the Colorado desert. For one year he worked for Butterfield & Co., in the overland mail route. On settling in California he engaged in ranching in Alameda county, where he remained about ten years. Later he went to the San Joaquin valley, but met with heavy reverses in his agricultural enterprises in that part of the state. After six years in that locality he left to start anew in another region, and proceeded to San Luis Obispo county, where he has made his home since 1875. For a time he owned a ranch on the other side of Arroyo Grande, but eventually he sold and in 1903 he bought the property he still owns. Here he is retrieving the losses of earlier years and by dint of perseverance and energy he has won recognition among the progressive ranchers of the valley.

The marriage of Mr. McGlashan took place in 1866 and united him with Lucy A. Rooker, a native of Iowa and a member of the Presbyterian Church. They are the parents of four children, The eldest son, John A., was first married to Malinda Gibson, and to them one child was born; his marriage with Eva Beavers resulted in the birth of two children. The second son, David R. married Mattie Bray and has three children. The third son, Joe W., now deceased, married Rose Eubanks, who survives him. The youngest son, Charles, is unmarried and resides on the home ranch. Politically Mr. McGlashan gives allegiance to the Democratic party, but he displays no partisan spirit and is liberal and broad-minded in his views.

FREDERICK C. HESS. Comparatively few of the men now prominent in agricultural or commercial affairs in San Luis Obispo county have spent their entire lives within its limits, but such is the record of the young gentleman whose name introduces this article and whose energy and progressive spirit have made him popular among the ranchers in the vicinity of Arroyo Grande. This village is his native place and November 24, 1873, the date of his birth. In addition to attending the grammar school here he had the advantage of a course of study in the San Francisco Business College, and on his return to this county he began to work on a ranch, starting out for himself in 1897. The farm which he occupies and operates near Arroyo Grande comprises seventy-three acres of valuable land. Besides this tract he has fifteen acres at Pismo devoted principally to beans and ten acres planted to apricots and walnuts. His marriage and his independent undertaking of ranching were both events of the year 1897, the former occurring in September, at which time he was united with Miss Tessie Ransom, a native of San Jose, this state. Mrs. Hess was one of the two children comprising the family of Amasa and Mary (Wallace) Ransom, the former of whom was born in New York and died at thirty-six years, while the latter was born in Michigan and died at forty-five years of age. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hess there have been born two children, Freda and Carl. Fraternally Mr. Hess holds membership with the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of Pythias at Arroyo Grande.

The Hess family is of German origin, and the parents of Frederick were both natives of Germany, but emigrated from there to the United States in 1866. The father, Henry, was a native of the city of Frankfort, and in that part of the empire married Susan Schimph, by whom he became the father of five children. Of this family two daughters are now deceased. Both parents survive and at this writing make their home in the city of Berkeley, where they have many friends, and they also are remembered with esteem and respect by old friends in San Luis Obispo county. After coming to this country the father allied himself with the Republican party and the son was reared in that faith, to which he still adheres, voting the regular party ticket at local and national elections.

PETER L. IVERSEN. Among the many prominent residents of San Pedro worthy of special representation in this volume is Peter L. Iversen, who, as president of the Terminal Ship and Boat Building Company, is actively associated with the advancement of the industrial and commercial interests of Southern California. A native of Denmark, he was born, October 31, 1846, at Skjelskor, Sjaeland, where his father, Hartvig Steffen Iversen, a shoemaker by trade, spent his entire life. His mother, whose maiden name was Anne Dorthea Peterson, was born in Aggerso, Denmark, and, like her husband, was a life-long resident of her native land. They were the parents of eleven children, six of whom grew to years of maturity, the fourth child in order of birth being Peter L., the subject of this sketch. Several of their descendants settled in this country, some of whom are prominent in public life, one of their grandchildren, Jens Iversen Westengaard, a graduate of Harvard University, being at present one of the legal advisers of the King of Siam.

Brought up in his native town, Peter L. Iversen was educated in the public schools, and at the age of fourteen years began learning the trade of a ship carpenter, serving an apprenticeship of three years at Karrchaks minde. He was afterwards ship carpenter on deep water vessels for a short time, acquiring practical experience in his chosen industry. In 1867 he came to California, sailing from Scotland as a ship carpenter, and seven months later, having rounded the Horn, arrived in San Francisco. For several years thereafter he was engaged in the coasting trade, going as a common sailor, and subsequently being similarly employed on the Sacramento river, where he was at first mate on a schooner, and afterwards master of a vessel. In 1880, as master of the schooner Adeline, he came to San Pedro to assist in hauling the rock from Catalina to build the break-water in this harbor. Completing his work in that line, he entered the employ of the government, and as ship carpenter was employed in different capacities, among other things having charge of the building of two lighters. He was afterwards ship carpenter for the Wilmington Transportation Company for awhile, and on giving up that position, in 1891, established a boat yard on Terminal Island. The land being subsequently claimed by the railroad company, Mr. Iversen compromised with it, retaining his present yard, which is 140x140 feet, and is located just opposite Terminal. With his partner, he is carrying on a large and lucrative business as a member of the enterprising firm of Fulton & Iversen, and in addition to building boats and launches of all kinds, and repairing vessels in port, he erected the building for the San Pedro Canning Company. Mr. Iversen is a man of excellent business ability, and by dint of industry, forethought and good management has acquired a handsome property. When he first came to San Pedro he erected a house for himself and family on Eleventh street, and has since built the pleasant residence that he now occupies, at No. 248 Eleventh street.

June 9, 1897, in Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Iversen married Helena Bertha Lang, who was born in Luzern, Switzerland, of German ancestry. Her parents, John and Lucilla (Marfort) Lang, were life-long residents of Luzern, and she was their only child. Her father, who was a miller by trade, died in manhood's prime, and her mother died when Mrs. Iversen was a child of eleven years. Being thus left an orphan, she came, in 1883, to the United States with Mr. and Mrs. Hoffman, who were traveling through Switzerland, and for four or more years lived with them in Enterprise, Kans., while there perfecting her studies in English. In 1887 she came to San Diego, Cal., and four years later went to San Francisco, from there going to San Jose, and later locating in Los Angeles, where she resided until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Iversen have two children, Anna Lucilla and Harold Steffen. Fraternally Mr. Iversen is a member and past grand district deputy of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and a past officer of the Knights of Pythias; and both he and his wife belong to the Rebekahs. Religiously Mr. and Mrs. Iversen are Lutherans.

S. CAMPODONICO. Since in its most intelligent form success is measured by the faculty of contributing to the well-being of the community, by promoting soundness in finance, politics, education, ethics and some of the useful arts of living, the career of S. Campodonico must be regarded as of vital importance to the town of Guadaloupe, of which he has been a resident for the past twenty-two years, and of which he is the largest merchant, and wealthiest, most influential citizen.

The rise of Mr. Campodonico has been from a small beginning and meagre advantages. Being of Italian ancestry he is further to be commended on account of having achieved pronounced mercantile success in a rugged western community. In Italy, where he was born January 10, 1840, he received the rudiments of an education since diversified by continuous research. The expectation of long life would seem justified by his parentage, for his father, John Campodonico, lived to be seventy years old, while his mother attained to the age of ninety years.

Mr. Campodonico was seventeen and a half years old when he arrived in America. July 18, 1857, he began to work for a toy manufacturer in New York City for $1.50 a week, but he soon afterward apprenticed himself to a marble sculptor, with whom he remained three and a half years. In 1861 he came to San Francisco and worked at marble cutting until 1864, when he moved to Mariposa county and clerked in a general store a couple of years. He then returned to San Francisco and worked at marble cutting for $5 a day, a year later establishing a marble business of his own which was successfully conducted until disposing of the same in 1880. Mr. Campodonico then became a partner in a canning venture, upon the failure of which he took charge of the small mercantile store in Guadaloupe, for the creditors, this being the nucleus of his present large business. This was in 1884, and his future prospects were centered around the contents of a small room, valued at a few hundred dollars.

Forceful and energetic, and with a keen desire to please, Mr. Campodonico won the confidence of the purchasing public, and an enlargement of his stock soon became a necessity. Today he has one of the best equipped and best managed stores in the Santa Maria valley, and a patronage by no means confined to the limits of the town or county. He has made an exhaustive study of merchandising, and in his own character and acquirements subscribes to the essentials of this important branch of industry. He carries general merchandise of all descriptions and graded to suit all tastes and purses. Neatness, order and dispatch are among his watchwords, and living within his income has advanced him to a position where he is unaffected by temporary depressions or falling off of trade.

July 8, 1869, Mr. Campodonico was united in marriage with Lizzie Bigler, a native of Missouri, and of the union there are nine children: Lottie, who became the wife of J. R. Acquistapace; Sylvia, wife of M. L. Smith, manager of Union Sugar Factory store; Frank E., who married Hulda Burola; Stephen Victor; Joseph A.; Marguerite E.; Charles L.; Alma E.; and Victoria M. Mr. Campodonico is prominent in social as well as business circles, and a member and past master of the Masonic lodge of Guadaloupe. Politically he is independent. His fitness for public service has resulted in his election to the school board, of which he was clerk during the erection of the present substantial school building. He is the active and unceasing friend of education, the promoter of sound local government, and the upholder of high civic and private ideals. In adding his name to its citizenship more than a score of years ago, Guadaloupe was to profit by the efforts of a man thoroughly in sympathy with its progress, and one who was in a position to grasp its most desirable opportunities.

MORRIS A. ROSENFELD. Prominent among the successful and influential business men of San Pedro is Morris A. Rosenfeld, the popular and leading merchant tailor of the city. Identified with the manufacturing and mercantile interests of the place, he gives careful attention to his business, is prudent in the management of his affairs and strictly honorable in his dealings, and as a man of undoubted integrity and worth has won the confidence and esteem of all with whom he has been brought in contact. In following his trade, Mr. Rosenfeld has had a broad experience, having traveled quite extensively in England and on the continent as a journeyman cutter and tailor, obtaining a practical knowledge of every branch connected with his trade. During the earlier years of his business career he pursued his vocation in a number of eastern cities. In 1903 he decided to come west, attracted by the mildness of the climate and the glowing accounts of the brilliant prospects for business enterprises in this portion of Southern California. Coming to the city of Los Angeles, he followed his trade there for a year, having a finely furnished and stocked establishment on Broadway, between Fifth and Sixth streets. Settling in San Pedro in August, 1904, Mr. Rosenfeld established his present business, which has grown rapidly and satisfactorily. Since his advent in San Pedro he has given a great deal of attention to real-estate investments, and has been very successful in this respect. In 1905 he began the erection of the Rosenfeld building, on Fourth street, between Palos Verdes and Center streets, where he has ample accommodations for himself, his patrons, and for the large stock of fine goods which he carries. This building, 37x60 feet, two and three stories in height, with a buff-colored, pressed brick front, is a credit to his good taste, and an ornament to the city. Having purchased two lots on Seventh street he has erected thereon a large apartment house, which is up-to-date in every respect. It is a two-story frame, with a classic colonial front, contains twenty-five rooms with modern equipments, baths and accommodations for the traveler, to which class of patronage the proprietor devotes his best attention. Other investments in property have been most successful and several choice sites are being held with a view to suitable improvement when the city's requirements have so far advanced as to permit the additional outlay.

In Little Rock, Ark., Mr. Rosenfeld married Sophia Bejach, and they have three children, Harry, Abe and Sylvia. Mr. Rosenfeld, familiarly known as "Morris, the tailor," is a member of the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce, which is composed of the foremost business men of the city, and fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias and to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

ROBERT MORRIS McGEE. Occupying a good position among the leading merchants and real-estate dealers of Long Beach is Robert M. McGee, who until recently conducted a thriving grocery business, having built up an excellent reputation among the people of his community for fairness and honesty. A son of Patrick Henry McGee, he was born March 1, 1867, in Massac county, Ill., on the paternal side coming from thrifty Scotch ancestry, and on the maternal side being descended from a Pennsylvania-Dutch family.

Of Scotch-Irish stock, Patrick Henry McGee was born in Tennessee June 3, 1826, the son of Benjamin and Nancy McGee, of Graves county, Ky. From Tennessee the father removed to southern Illinois, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits for a time, but when war was declared between the United States and Mexico he enlisted and served under Gen. Zachary Taylor until its close. Returning to Illinois, he continued as a farmer in Massac county for a number of years. In 1861, with true patriotic spirit, he answered President Lincoln's first call for troops, enlisting in Company A, Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served until after the surrender of General Lee. He participated in many of the important engagements of that time, including the siege of Vicksburg and Sherman's March to the Sea, part of the time being under command of that gallant hero, Gen. John A. Logan. Being honorably discharged from the service in Washington, D. C., he returned to Massac county, and there resided until his death, November 29, 1875, when forty-nine years of age. November 30, 1851, he married Anna Mary Hewitt, a native of Huntingdon county, Pa., born October 5, 1832. Her father, Henry Hewitt, removed from Huntingdon county, Pa., to Missouri, where he was employed in farming until his death, in 1848. His widow, Mrs. Margaret Hewitt, who was a native of Huntingdon county, Pa., subsequently settled in Illinois with her children. Of the union of Patrick Henry and Anna Mary (Hewitt) McGee six children were born, concerning whom we mention the following: Izora, who was born February 26, 1853, married W. P. Brown, of Belknap, Ill., and died January 11, 1892; Iona, born August 7, 1855, married Robert Grimes and died October 5, 1896, her husband also being deceased; Benjamin H., born November 22, 1857, died January 15, 1874; Patrick Henry, Jr., born March 8, 1860, resides in Massac county, Ill.; Andrew Jackson, also a resident of the latter county, was born July 20, 1863; and Robert M., the subject of this biographical sketch, was born March 1, 1867. The mother of these children passed way August 16, 1900.

After taking the full course of study in the common schools of his native town Robert M. McGee was graduated from a business college in Delaware, Ohio. He subsequently taught school with good success for seven years, being in Massac county six years, and in Pulaski county one year. Locating then in Boaz, Ill., he was there engaged in mercantile pursuits for several years, having a general store, and also serving as postmaster. Coming to California in May, 1903, he settled at Long Beach, buying a home for himself and family, and likewise purchasing other valuable real estate. On April 16, 1904, he established a grocery on the corner of Fourth and Cherry streets and built up a substantial business, but two years later, in April, 1906, he sold out and organized the Sunset Realty Company, doing a general real-estate and insurance business in association with Thomas Patch.

September 3, 1893, Mr. McGee married Alice Alena Wade, a daughter of George W. and Rebecca (Cook) Wade, her birth occurring in Massac county, Ill., June 23, 1872. Three children have blessed their union: Gracie Maud, born June 18, 1894, died November 28, 1897; Lewis Wallace was born January 3, 1896, and Alice Alena October 25, 1897. Politically Mr. McGee affiliates with the Republican party, and fraternally he belong to Center Point Lodge No. 811, I. O. O. F., of Boaz, Ill. Religiously he and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a trustee.

JOHN T. SHOOP. Properly numbered among the self-made men of our times is John T. Shoop, who for many years has been actively identified with the agricultural interests of the western part of San Diego county, his ranch, situated about ten miles east of Oceanside, being favorably located. Thrown practically upon his own resources when a mere child, he began life with no other capital than strong hands, resolute will, and an abundance of determination, even as a boy being handicapped by a lack of the educational advantages that are today in the reach of every American child, whether born in a palace or a hut. Industrious, diligent and persevering, he has attained success in his undertakings, now owning and occupying a valuable home estate, and being numbered among the respected members of his community. A native of Virginia, he was born January 22, 1835, a son of Isaac and Polly (Robinson) Shoop. His parents, both of whom were born and reared in Pennsylvania, settled first in Virginia, from there removing, in 1837, to Alabama, where both spent the remaining years of their lives, the father dying, at the age of fifty-four years, in 1850, and the mother a few years before.

Until seven years old, John T. Shoop made his home with a married sister, after which he was bound out to a man named Green Edmonson, with whom he lived three years, in the meantime attending a subscription school for a brief time. He subsequently lived for awhile with his brother-in-law, Mr. Moore, with whom he had previously lived for a time, and then went to work for a Mr. Adkinson, who was to pay him for his services in stock. In 1851 Mr. Shoop migrated to Mississippi, where he was engaged in the manufacture of chairs for a few months. Not very successful in that occupation, he settled in Arkansas, working as a day laborer until he had saved some money. Not contented, however, with his condition or his future prospects, he came across the plains with an ox-team train in 1861, and for a short time lived in Los Angeles. Then after spending a few months in Watsonville, he engaged in mining on Owens river. He subsequently went to Sonoma county, from there going to Napa county, where for two years he was employed in a fruit orchard. He subsequently lived for a time in San Francisco, but not liking city life went to San Luis Obispo county, where he located a government claim. Selling that in 1878, he purchased land in Jones county, Tex., where he was engaged in stocking-raising and dealing for four years. Disposing of his interests in that place, he came to San Diego county, and on November 2, 1882, bought out a claim of one hundred and sixty acres, the greater part of which is now included in his home ranch, although he has sold forty acres of his original purchase. He has since been profitably engaged in general ranching, and in his various undertakings has met with excellent success.

In 1866 Mr. Shoop married Margaret Conley Foley, who was born in Galway, Ireland, one of a family of twelve children. She came to the United States in 1855, and after living for a few years in Boston, crossed the continent to California, locating in San Francisco, where she resided until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Shoop are the parents of three children, namely: Isaac Henry, who was educated in the River District school and is now farming with his father; Margaret, wife of Frank Peters, of San Diego; and Elizabeth, wife of Stonewall J. Walker, who is engaged in mining in Riverside. Politically Mr. Shoop is identified with the Socialists.

WILLIAM DAVIS. One of the most prosperous and highly esteemed residents of San Pedro is William Davis, a substantial representative of the lumber interests of this part of Los Angeles county, and one of its active and honored business men. In a true sense he has been the architect of his own fortunes, his success in life being due to his persistent efforts and determined pluck. Coming to this country as a young man, poor in pocket, but rich in energy and ambition, he laboriously toiled onward and upward, rising by slow degrees to his present position of affluence and influence. A native of Wales, he was born in Cardiff, October 31, 1863, and was there brought up and educated. His grandfather, Thomas Davies, came from one of the older families of Cardiff, and there his parents, David and Sarah (Griffith) Davies, spent their entire lives, the father, who was a hotelkeeper, dying in 1903, and the mother a few months later.

After leaving the public schools of his native land, William Davis was employed as a clerk for a number of years. Not satisfied with the financial returns of his employment, he immigrated to the United States in 1888, coming directly to San Pedro, Cal., where for about three years he had a hard time in trying to meet his expenses, although he tried various occupations. In 1890 he entered the employ of the San Pedro Lumber Company, beginning as switch clerk, and for ten years remained with the company, the greater part of the time, however, being lumber surveyor. Resigning the position in 1900 he has since carried on a thriving business as lumber surveyor, and in 1902 was one of the organizers of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California, which he served as first vice-president until sending in his resignation. Prudent in his expenditures and wise in his investments, he has accumulated a good property, and in 1903 erected on Front street, at Knob Hill, the Alta Vista, a modern, well-finished, up-to-date house, containing twenty rooms, and from this receives quite an income.

In national politics Mr. Davis is strongly Republican, but in local affairs he votes independent of party restrictions. Fraternally he is a member of San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M., of which he is secretary; a member of Los Angeles Consistory No. 3, and is also a Shriner; and is past chancellor commander of San Pedro Lodge No. 126, K. P.

ROBERT LEE WATSON. The entire life of Robert Lee Watson has been passed in California, for he is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in the city of Los Angeles, January 29, 1864. His parents, James J. and Mary D. (Dominguez) Watson, were natives respectively of Scotland and Los Angeles county. The father, a pioneer of the Pacific state, was a prominent citizen of Los Angeles, his wealth, acquired after coming to California, and his wide personal influence, combining to win for him a high place in political and municipal affairs.

The schools of Los Angeles furnished fair advantages to Robert Lee Watson, who, after completing the course attended commercial college in Santa Clara. Having attained manhood's estate and being well equipped for the future which lay before him, he then returned to his native city, where he established an insurance business and also loaned money. He continued successfully engaged in this work for the period of three years, when he decided to take up agriculture, and accordingly located on his present property, three miles north of Wilmington. He is now engaged in extensive ranching operations and also raises fine horses and a large number of sheep, having made for himself a place among the enterprising ranchers of this section. His home is presided over by his wife, formerly Louisa Poggi, whom he married April 29, 1899. She is the daughter of Rafael Poggi, who operates a large winery in this vicinity. Mr. and Mrs. Watson are the parents of one child, Susanna, who is six years old.

MRS. MARY E. LINDSKOW. For upwards of thirty-seven years a resident of San Pedro, Mrs. Mary Lindskow is widely and favorably known throughout the community in which she lives, and has the respect and esteem of her neighbors and friends, who have ever found her a kind, helpful and genial companion, always ready and willing to render assistance any sympathy wherever and whenever needed. A daughter of William Sanford, she was born in New York City, where the earlier days of her childhood were spent.

A native of Germany, William Sanford was born in Detmasten, Schleswig-Holstein, and early in life embarked in seafaring pursuits. Becoming master of a vessel in course of time, he visited many of the important ports of the globe, in 1848 coming to California, where he was subsequently, as captain of a vessel, engaged in the coasting trade. In 1858, having returned east for his family, as master of the ship John Baring, he sailed from New York City for San Francisco. After rounding Cape Horn the vessel was disabled, and for some time laid at Valparaiso for repairs. On arriving in San Francisco, Captain Sanford continued coasting, and in 1870, in charge of the schooner Ajax, delivered the first load of rock used in the construction of the San Pedro breakwater, dumping it about one hundred feet south of the present ship yard of the Wilmington Transportation Company. He subsequently retired from active labor, and was a resident of this city until his accidental death by drowning, in the San Pedro Harbor, January 16, 1882. He married Mary McGrogan, who was of Scotch descent. She died in California, in 1863. Eight children blessed their union, and of these Mary E., the subject of this sketch, was the first born, and is the sole survivor.

Mary E. Sanford obtained the rudiments of her education in the public schools of San Francisco and Vallejo, completing it at the Palace Street convent, in San Francisco. February 18, 1866, she married for her first husband John McGuire, who was born in Ireland, but was reared and educated in Albany, N. Y. Mr. McGuire was a man of great patriotism, intensely devoted to his adopted country, which he first served as a soldier in the Mexican war, being under command of General Kearney. During the Civil war he enlisted in the first volunteer regiment of cavalry from Albany, N. Y., and afterward as an artilleryman fought the full four years. After two weeks incarceration in Libby Prison he was exchanged, and at the close of the conflict entered the regular army, under General Stoneman fighting the Indians in California and Arizona. After his marriage with Miss Sanford, Mr. McGuire, as regimental tailor went on the vessel John C. Stephens to Sitka, Alaska, as a member of Company H, Second Artillery, being one of the first body of troops to land in that territory after it passed into the control of the United States. He died while in service, at Cape Disappointment, Wash., June 24, 1871, leaving two children: Susan Alaska, the first white girl born at Sitka, is the wife of William M. Hart, of San Pedro; and Emily Ellen is the wife of C. B. Parker, of Catalina Island, a taxidermist. Fraternally Mr. McGuire was a member of the Masonic order, and was a man of much worth.

October 7, 1873, Mrs. McGuire married for her second husband Martin Emil Lindskow, who was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, where the family name, originally spelled Lindskov, meant Lind forest, or Lind woods. His father, Andrew J. Lindskow, was head gunner on the frigate Christiania the Ninth, which was destined to be captured by the Prussians; rather than be made prisoners by the enemy or have their three ships taken they blew themselves up. Immigrating to America when a lad of fourteen years, Martin Emil Lindskow subsequently followed the sea for many years, being often employed in foreign service. At nineteen years of age he went back to Denmark. Enlisting in the Danish navy, he was assigned to the frigate Sjelland, which was dismantled in a sea fight, and nearly all on board were killed. From that battle he carried a piece of shell in his leg to his grave. Coming to California in 1868 Mr. Lindskow was for a time employed as superintendent under Captain Polheamus and Thomas Hayes, to deliver rock to build the government breakwater at San Pedro. In 1870 he secured a position with General Banning as head lighter man, and while with this employer he helped to build the old breakwater, and also assisted in discharging vessels. Subsequently he was engaged in the hotel business in San Pedro, and was also active in civic affairs, serving as deputy marshal, night watch and jailer. While firing salutes during the first election of Congressman McLaughlan, Mr. Lindskow lost his right hand by a premature explosion, a sad accident. He died August 23, 1902, leaving a wide circle of friends to mourn his loss. He was a man of high standing in the community and much respected. He was a stanch Republican in politics, a member of the Lutheran Church, and belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and to the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lindskow, the following children were born: George W. E., of San Pedro; Axel Richard; Edward Sylvester; Mrs. Carrie J. Wack, of San Pedro; Ellen Christine, widow of the late G. B. Sullivan, of this city; Rose Dagmar, at home; and Hugo Valdmar, who died when but thirteen months old. Mrs. Lindskow resides at the old family home, at the corner of Eleventh and Center streets, and is happy in having her children near her. She is an active member of the Woman's Relief Corps, and Foresters Circle of America, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HORACE A. JOHNSON. The agricultural resources of San Diego county have been developed by a large number of intelligent and industrious farmers, among whom may be mentioned Mr. Johnson, the owner of a large farm lying in the vicinity of Bonsall, his postoffice town, and somewhat to the east of Oceanside, his railroad station. On coming to San Diego county in 1884 Mr. Johnson settled upon his present property of three hundred and seventy-five acres, which he bought from the government. At that time the land was bare and unimproved. No attempt had been made to place the soil under cultivation. Hence he became the possessor of virgin soil, with all its possibilities of development. Under his supervision buildings have been erected, fences have been built as needed, and three hundred acres of the farm have been placed under cultivation to grain, of which he makes a specialty.

Mr. Johnson is proud of the fact that he can claim to be a native son of California, San Jose is his native city and May 19, 1863, the date of his birth, his parents being S. V. R. and Almira (Rooker) Johnson, natives respectively of New York and Ohio. The father, who learned the butcher's trade in early life, crossed the plains from the east to California in 1852 and after his arrival engaged in mining. After a brief and not especially successful experience in various mines (including those of the Fraser river) he again turned his attention to the butcher's trade, which he followed with varying success for a long period. On disposing of his interests in San Jose he came to Oceanside in 1887 and opened a meat market, which he conducted in addition to operating a ranch and raising stock. The remaining years of his life were passed in Oceanside, where he died in 1899, at the age of sixty years; one month after his demise his wife passed from earth.

Educated in California schools and reared in a California home, Mr. Johnson early became imbued with an affectionate loyalty and patriotic devotion to the state, and this feeling is still one of the leading attributes of his character. In youth he was familiar with the northern and central portions of the state, but since the fall of 1884, when he removed to San Diego county, his interests have been concentrated in the southern part of the commonwealth. Industrious in disposition, genial in temperament, of an accommodating nature, ready to assist the unfortunate and to relieve the distressed, he furnishes a type of the quiet, unostentatious farmer and native-born citizen, and among the people of his locality he has many friends. Though never active as a partisan, he has pronounced opinions on political questions and is in sympathy with the Democratic party. At Santa Ana in 1890 he married Miss Fannie M. Pickle, who was born and reared in California, and is a woman of gentle disposition, an earnest Christian and a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Their family consists of five children, namely: Lerue, Lila, Horace, Jr., Erva and Leo, all yet at home.

BENTON McCOY. It would be difficult to find a man more emphatically in accord with the true western spirit of progress or more keenly alive to the opportunities awaiting the industrious and intelligent man of affairs in Los Angeles county than is Benton McCoy, who in addition to carrying on a real-estate and teaming business is also managing a small ranch. Determination and tenacity of purpose are characteristics which have been paramount in all of his undertakings, traits which he no doubt inherits from his father, John Benton. The latter was born in Scotland, and when he was eleven years of age shipped as a cabin boy on a vessel bound for the United States. Life on the water had a particular fascination for him and he followed the sea for twenty-one years. Later he joined the United States navy as carpenter, and was in the country's service for three years and four months. During this time he was stationed at Monterey when the fort was built at that point, and he was on the vessel at the time the soldiers were buried on Dead Man's Island at San Bernardino. After he was mustered out of the service at Norfolk, Va., in 1848, he went to the Mississippi valley and settled in Illinois not far from Joliet, where for a number of years he farmed on land which he had taken up from the government. Selling this in 1853 he bought a farm near Homestead, Iowa, whither he removed the same year. Prior to leaving Illinois, however, he was married, in 1852, to Marietta Miller, who was born in New York state, and they made their home in Iowa until the death of Mr. McCoy, which occurred in September, 1880, at which time he was in his seventy-third year.

Born in Iowa December 10, 1854, Benton McCoy was educated in the public schools of that state and when not in attendance during the summers helped his father with the farm duties. In the mean time he had been giving considerable thought as to his plans for the future, and by the time he was of age had made up his mind to locate on the Pacific coast, whither so many stories of the possibilities for ambitious young men had originated. Upon coming to the state in 1875 he worked on a farm in the vicinity of Chico, Butte county, for one year, and after a five months' stay in Oregon again returned to that city. The year of 1878 was spent in Los Angeles, after which he again went to Chico, leaving there in the fall of 1879 to investigate the possibilities in Plumas county. A few months later he went back to his home in Iowa, but after spending the winter there returned to this state in April, 1880, and spent one season in lumbering in Butte county; for about two months he was also interested in mining at the Cherokee mines. His father's death in September, 1880, broke up the family home in Iowa and in the following spring the mother, two daughters and John Oliver came to Los Angeles county. Giving up his mining enterprise Benton McCoy came to Los Angeles county to meet them and thus since 1881 he has been a resident of this county. The death of the mother occurred near Wilmington in 1887, when fifty-four years of age. Locating in Wilmington in 1881, from that date until 1893 Mr. Benton was engaged in bridge carpentering, in the latter year purchasing a ranch of four and three-quarters acres for $280, selling the same tract three years afterward for $5,200. He still owns a ranch of one and three-quarters acres upon which, in 1903, he erected a modern eight-room house, 24x40 feet, which is equipped with all of the conveniences and many of the luxuries of latter-day homes.

Mr. McCoy's home is presided over by his wife, who before her marriage, December 10, 1894, was Leonora Sylva. Mrs. McCoy is a daughter of Joseph Sylva, one of the very early settlers of Wilmington. The four children comprising the McCoy family are Otto Benton, Ruth E., Joseph A., and Earl J. Fraternally Mr. McCoy is a member of Lodge No. 198, F. & A. M., at Wilmington; and Bohen Lodge No. 138, I. O. O. F., at San Pedro; and in his political views is independent. He is one of the trustees of the Wilmington Cemetery Association. Mrs. McCoy is an adherent of the Catholic Church, while Mr. McCoy is a believer in the Presbyterian faith.

GEORGE HANSEN. Descended from an ancient family of the Danish race and Lutheran faith, George Hansen of San Diego was born at Bornholm, Denmark, April 16, 1860, and was next to the youngest among four children, two of whom are now living. His parents, Lars and Elizabeth (Jorgensen) Hansen, were natives of the same locality as himself and the former followed the occupation of a contracting mason throughout all of his active life. Of the entire family George was the only one to cross the ocean to the United States and he came in 1882, after having served at the carpenter's and cabinet-maker's trade from fourteen until seventeen years of age, then attended high school for a year and afterward returned to his trade at Bornholm. After coming to the United States he was employed in putting up derricks in the Pennsylvania oil regions and from there crossed the continent to San Francisco in 1883, securing employment as a cabinet-maker at fair wages. In 1887 he arrived in San Diego and secured work as a journeyman until about 1891, when he embarked in contracting and building as a member of the firm of Hansen & Engebretsen. The partnership was dissolved at the expiration of two years and since then he has been alone. In addition to his residence at No. 2380 C street, he has built six houses of his own, but several of these are now sold. Frequently he has drawn his own plans and discharged the duty of architect as well as builder. Among his contracts were those for the Southwestern Investment Company's building on Fifth street, Fry, Garritt & Smith's building, the Fry flat, and the residences of Major Schon, Bishop J. Edmonds, L. A. Wright, C. M. Gifford and many others. August 1, 1906, Mr. Hansen was appointed street superintendent of the city of San Diego.

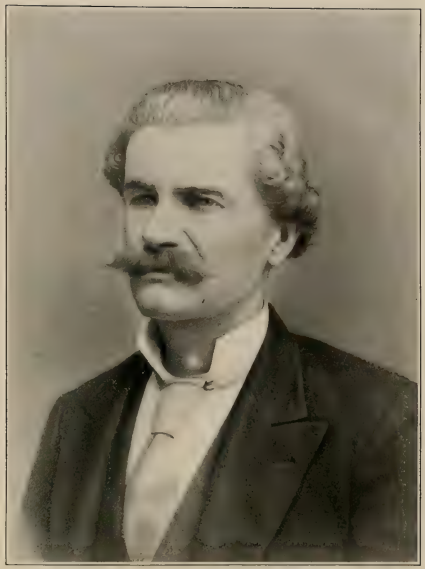
In San Diego occurred the marriage of Mr. Hansen and Miss Emma Carlson, a native of Sweden. Their family consists of four children, Roy, Alva, Ella and George, Jr. The Republican party receives the ballot of Mr. Hansen in local and general elections. On the organization of the Union League Club he became one of its charter members and he is similarly connected with the Scandinavian Society, of which he was the first financial secretary. Along the line of his occupation he is prominent in the Master Carpenters' Association, of which he formerly served as treasurer and now officiates as secretary. The Woodmen of the World and the Knights of Pythias are among the fraternal organizations to which he belongs. After coming to San Diego he was made a Mason in Silver Gate Lodge, F. & A. M., and later rose to the Royal Arch Chapter and the thirty-second degree of Masonry. Prominent in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, he was initiated in Sunset Lodge No. 328, at San Diego, of which he is past noble grand. During 1893 he was honored with the office of district deputy grand master. In the Encampe he is past high priest, while in the Canton he officiates as an aide on the colonel's staff, with the rank of lieutenant. With his wife he is actively associated with the Order of Rebekahs. On the occasion of the Grand Encampment at San Diego in 1905, he officiated as treasurer of the executive committee. The unusual and gratifying success of the convention may be attributed to the tact, energy and sagacity of the executive committee, aided by the members of the order in San Diego and by the co-operation of the citizens of the place, irrespective of fraternal relations.

JAMES McPHERSON. After having lived in many different cities and states of the Union, the varied attractions of scenery and climate of Southern California, with the opportunities offered here to men of spirit and determination, lured Mr. McPherson to this section to establish his permanent home. He is a native of Scotland, having been born on the Shetland Islands, and is one of two children born to John and Christina (Jamison) McPherson, the former of whom is deceased. Spending the first sixteen years of his life in his native country, where he received a common-school education, he then went to Canada, there learning the baker's trade, which he followed during the remainder of his stay in that country. In 1886 he went to Wyoming, where he remained for awhile, then went to Denver, Colo., and his trade met with such success there that he was soon enabled to take charge of a large bakery, which he continued to manage during the remainder of his stay in that city.

Deciding to try his fortune on the west coast,

Mr. McPherson went to Oregon for a short while, then visited Seattle, Wash., and British Columbia. Prior to coming west he took out naturalization papers, thus becoming a true citizen of the United States, with all the privileges and opportunities which are enjoyed by citizens of our country. After returning from British Columbia to Seattle he determined to come to Southern California and accordingly, in 1900, he located in Los Angeles, following his trade here very successfully until 1901, in June of which year he opened up the first bakery in Ocean Park, and from being the pioneer baker of this town, he has become one of its most honored and progressive citizens. Close attention to business and honest dealing have won for him the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens, as well as given him a competence of the world's goods.

In 1898, at Colorado Springs, Colo., Mr. McPherson was united in marriage with Bessie Flause, and of their three children, John and James survive, the daughter, Mary, having died when about one year old. In religious connections Mr. McPherson holds membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ocean Park, and also aids in the philanthropic work of the Fraternal Aid Society, of which he is a member. In his political views Mr. McPherson is a Prohibitionist, having adopted the principles of that party in 1904, since which time he has used his influence towards furthering the best interests of mankind on the liquor question.



ENOCH GRIFFIN. From the earliest period within his recollection Enoch Griffin has lived in California and memories of childhood bring to him thoughts of a settlement remote from the then centers of civilization, a region where the Indian and the Mexican were more numerous than the white man, and where the search for gold was the most absorbing occupation of the pioneers. The family history shows that his father, Enoch Griffin, Sr., was born and reared on a Missouri farm and was of southern lineage. From boyhood he aided in the clearing of a raw tract of farm land, hence enjoyed few opportunities for gaining an education. After having remained a bachelor until middle life he then married Mrs. Ellenda (Holman) Rose, who was born in Kentucky and removed to Missouri in girlhood. At an early age she became the wife of John Rose, whose death some years later left her with several small children. After some years of widowhood she was married to Enoch Griffin, and in the course of time they disposed of their Missouri interests for the purpose of removing to the Pacific coast. Before they had left Missouri and while they were traveling through Macon county a son was born to them, May 16, 1852, and to him the father's name was given. For some weeks they continued on their journey without trouble, but ere the summer had waned the father fell a victim to the cholera and was buried on the plains. At the expiration of six months spent in the "prairie schooner," drawn by oxen, the mother reached Eldorado county, accompanied by her infant son, and by the sons of her first marriage, who were then stalwart lads.

In the vicinity of Woodland, this state, and at San Gabriel Mission, Enoch Griffin, Jr., remained until seven years of age, when he accompanied his mother to the ranch, a part of which he now owns. All of this country was new, in respect to American settlement, though it long had been occupied by the Mexicans, Indians and some Castilians of aristocratic pedigree. Fences had not been built to separate ranches. Grain-raising had not yet been taken up, but stock roamed over the country at will. The lad, finding few American boys with whom to play, found playmates among the Mexicans, and thus acquired a command of the Spanish language which has constantly proved helpful to him. Before coming to this county his mother had married William Young, who died about 1870. On coming here Mr. Young purchased for $1.25 an acre, land that now sells for $500 to $1,000 an acre, and he acquired large tracts, but much of the land was sold at a low figure compared with its present valuation. On the homestead which she retained for her own use she died in 1900 at eighty-three years of age. A part of the homestead was inherited by her son, Enoch, and he also bought land, so that he now owns thirty-four acres of valuable land. For about seven years he engaged in the livery business in Los Angeles, but during 1896 he returned to the ranch near Palms and has since engaged in farming and buying and selling horses. An expert judge of horse-flesh, he is admirably qualified for the business to which he gives his attention and his opinion is always considered of great value by those making important purchases in the line of his specialty. In politics he shows great interest and fraternally holds membership with the Woodmen of the World. October 9, 1877, he was united in marriage with Miss Belle Suits, a native of Calaveras county, Cal., and they are the parents of two sons, namely: Arthur E., residing in Seattle, Wash.; and Walter S., who is a traveling salesman for a wholesale business house of Los Angeles.

The father of Mrs. Griffin was Stephen Suits, a native of Rochester, N. Y., who rounded the Horn and came to California in the exciting period of 1849. For a time he tried his luck in the mines of Calaveras county. Later he freighted from Stockton to the mining camps, after which he engaged in raising cattle and followed the butcher's trade. After seven years on a farm in the San Joaquin valley he removed to Santa Monica, of which he was among the first settlers. In addition to carrying on a meat business he teamed between the town and Los Angeles. At an advanced age he died in Santa Monica. After coming to California he met and married Margaret Marshall, who was born in Scotland and at the age of seventeen years came to the United States, proceeding direct via Panama to California, and landing in this state about 1850. Since the death of her husband she has continued to reside in Santa Monica and, despite her seventy years, retains possession of mental and physical faculties to an unusual degree.

WILLIAM O'CONNELL. Remembered among the pioneers of Los Angeles county is William O'Connell, whose death occurred November 23, 1891. He was born in Knoxville, Tenn., April 25, 1832, and was educated in his native state. Completing the course in the high school of his native town, he learned the trade of carpenter and engaged in this work for a short time prior to 1852, in which year he came to California, following the westward trend of civilization. He worked in the mines of northern California for some years and finally came south, where in San Bernardino, December 25, 1865, he allied himself by marriage with one of the early pioneer families of the state. His wife was formerly Elizabeth E. See, a native of Monroe county, Ill., where she was born in 1843; her parents, William and Leah (O'Neil) See, were both natives of Kentucky. They located in Illinois, where the father engaged in farming, but he afterward settled in Missouri, in which state his death occurred in 1853. In 1857 the mother brought her family of six children across the plains to California and in this state this honored mother died, at Whittier, having attained the age of eighty years, one month and ten days. One of her sons, John C., is deceased. Besides Mrs. O'Connell the other living children are M. C., Mary Ann, Mrs. Nicholson, Joseph C., Sarah, Mrs. McDonald.

Elizabeth E. See was educated in San Bernardino county and there in young womanhood she married Mr. O'Connell who had become the owner of one hundred and sixty acres in that section. In 1874 he sold out his interests in San Bernardino county and coming to Los Angeles county purchased a forty-acre tract and later twenty acres additonal, and at the time of his death was improving and cultivating this property. After the death of her husband Mrs. O'Connell continued to manage the home ranch, raising alfalfa and having about sixteen acres devoted to walnuts, while she also leases one hundred and forty acres and raises grain. She manages a well equipped dairy, having about forty cows, and also raises horses for the market. She has proven herself a woman of rare business ability and thoroughly capable of managing the business interests left her by her husband.

She became the mother of the following children: William, who married Ruby Durand and has one child; Ada Belle, who married V. V. Jerome, of Downey, and has six children; Valentine, who married Obe Dendenger, has two children, and is located on the old homestead; Wesley died at the age of three years; John; Dora, wife of Henry Joslin, of Long Beach, and has two children; Elmer, at home; and Gruver, who married Mabel Hill. The first four children were born in San Bernardino county and the others in Los Angeles county. Mr. O'Connell was a member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church while his wife belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he was connected with the Odd Fellows of San Bernardino, one of his sons also being connected with that organization as well as the Masons, while another son is identified with the Woodmen of the World.

CHARLES FREDERICK IRONMONGER. It takes the real artistic temperament and talent to become a successful photographer. No matter how good the subject may be, whether it be a person or landscape, if the artist's eye is not there to choose the exact range from which to secure all of the advantages of the composition possible to the situation the picture will not be the success it should be. Charles Frederick Ironmonger, whose views of Santa Catalina Island and Avalon have become famous, is an artist, as is well proven by the photographs which he makes. He has hundreds of views of this beautiful island and has made a specialty of carbons on celluloid, which sell at from $1 up to $30 for a picture 10x30. He has also a fine collection of fish pictures, Catalina being noted for the size and numbers of species found in the waters surrounding it. In addition to his own photographic work Mr. Ironmonger also does an extensive business in finishing and developing views for amateurs, and is the originator of all the fine portraits of Catalina.

The birth of Mr. Ironmonger occurred in 1868, in Greenwich, Ohio, his father, John, having become an early settler in that state from England. He was a machinist by trade and also engaged at one time in the lumber business. His death occurred in Ohio in 1870. His wife, who was Eliza Ellis before her marriage, was born in New York, a member of an old family there, and the daughter of Elias Ellis, who became a pioneer in Ohio. The mother is still living in the old home in Ohio. The parental family comprised seven children, five of whom are now living, Charles Frederick being the youngest. He received a high-school education and in 1892 came to California and began the photographic business in Los Angeles in Waite's studio. In 1895 he came to Avalon and built the first studio and since 1896 has been alone in the conduct of the business. His present studio on the beach was built in 1904.

In Santa Barbara, August 1, 1906, Mr. Ironmonger was united in marriage with Viola Packard, who was born in China. Fraternally he is a member of the Order of Eagles and of the Royal Arcanum. Politically he believes in the principles embraced in the platform of the the Republican party. As a man who has been successful in business, as a public-spirited citizen, and the possessor of many pleasing personal qualities he is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

RUSSELL KINGCADE. While the commonwealth of Illinois was still an undeveloped region there came from the north of Ireland to the new world a young man of excellent education and fine medical training, by name Henry Kingcade. It was he who established the family in the United States, and he remained a professional practitioner in Illinois until he passed from earth. Among his children was a son, Archibald, who was born in Illinois, learned the blacksmith's trade and followed the same in conjunction with agricultural pursuits, remaining in Illinois until his death about 1855. His wife, Elizabeth, like himself, was a native of Illinois and died there while still in middle age. She was a daughter of William Johnson, a man of pioneer instincts, fond of hunting and trapping, and possessed of the tastes of a frontiersman. To such a man the discovery of gold in California was a call to the far west. With members of his family he started for the gold mines in the spring of 1850, but cholera broke out among the travelers and he and two of his sons fell victims to that dread disease; their bodies were buried near the Platte river, and thus ended the expedition from which they had hoped so much. The widowed grandmother, Mrs. Johnson, remained in Illinois, and took under her care her grandson, Russell Kingcade, who was born in Pike county, Ill., May 23, 1850, and who was the elder of two children, the younger being a sister. When he was five years of age he lost his father and, as previously stated, found a home afterward with his grandmother, on whose farm he remained until he was old enough to earn a livelihood by working out for farmers.

On his arrival in California during 1871 Mr. Kingcade settled near Modesto and bought thirteen hundred acres, on which he raised grain. After some time he disposed of the ranch and in 1882 removed to the vicinity of Long Beach, where he bought one hundred and twenty acres lying three and one-half miles northwest of town. This he farmed for some time and still owns, but in 1902 moved from the farm into Long Beach, where in 1887 he had purchased a lot at No. 720 American avenue. Immediately after coming to town he erected the residence which he now occupies. The pleasant home is presided over by Mrs. Kingcade, who bore the maiden name of Mary Ellen Tharush and is a native of Missouri, but at the time of their marriage was a resident of Pike county, Ill. Of their union five daughters and three sons were born, namely: Nora, who married Walter Martin and resides in Long Beach; Ollie, Mrs. Robert Martin, also of Long Beach; George, now employed in Los Angeles; Lulu, wife of Charles Kelly, of Santa Ana; Walter, living in Los Angeles; Ida and Lettie, who are with their parents; and Leland, deceased.

While fraternal movements have never especially interested Mr. Kingcade, he is an ardent supporter of Masonic principles and holds membership with the blue lodge at Long Beach. Early in life he began to take an active part in local politics as a member of the Republican party and this interest he has maintained to the present. At no time has he been a candidate for office, his tastes inclining toward other work than office holding. However, he supports with enthusiasm the candidacy of friends and is willing to aid with time and influence. With George Bixby he was the first delegate from Long Beach township to the county convention and ever since then has been active in county convention work of the party. In 1902 and 1906 he was a delegate to the state convention.

H. N. STONE. Occupying a position of note among the rising young business men of San Pedro is H. N. Stone, who, as a druggist, is actively identified with the development and promotion of the industrial and mercantile interests of this part of the state. Capable, talented and far-seeing, he has built up a fine trade in his special line, by his courtesy, care-taking and promptness having won an extensive and lucrative patronage. Coming on both sides of the house from Kentucky families of prominence and worth, he was born, April 4, 1871, in Greencastle, Ind. His father, James Stone, a native of Kentucky, removed with his family to Indiana, settling, after his marriage with Sarah A. Williams, in Greencastle. He was a man of influence in his adopted home, and for a number of years served as sheriff of his county. He died in California, while on a visit to friends, and his widow now resides at the old home in Greencastle, Ind.

The fourth child in order of birth in a family of five children, H. N. Stone received excellent educational advantages in his native city, being graduated from the common and high schools. At the age of seventeen, in Greencastle, he began learning the drug business, staying there three years. Going then to Kansas, he was located in Topeka for some time, being afterwards in Catskill, N. Mex., one year. In 1894 he came to Los Angeles, Cal., and there continued his employment as a druggist, being first with Thomas & Ellington, pharmacists, and subsequently with other druggists in different parts of the county. Locating in San Pedro in 1897, he started a new drug store in this city, and has now the distinction of being the longest-established druggist in this part of the county, his store being on Front street, near Sixth street, where he is carrying on an extensive general drug business. He is a man of great enterprise and energy, and in addition to his regular trade has other interests of a financial nature, in his store being located the ticket offices of the Independent Steamship line, and the Salt Lake Railway Company, and the pay station of the Sunset Telephone Company, for all of which he is the agent.

In Topeka, Kans., Mr. Stone married Edna Pearl Yohey, who was born and reared in that city, and they have two children, Helen Marie and Harry Earl. Politically Mr. Stone is a straightforward Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Eagles, of the Independent Order of Foresters, and a member and past treasurer of the Foresters of America.

STEPHEN GANO LONG. Genealogical records of the Long family show that they became established upon Kentucky soil during the earliest period of the settlement of that commonwealth, and several successive generations contributed to the upbuilding of Russellville and Logan county. There Nimrod Long was born and there he died after a busy but uneventful career as banker and planter. In the same town Spencer C., a son of Nimrod, was born and reared, and there he became connected with banking and mercantile interests. Early in his business life he removed to Louisville and engaged in the tobacco business upon a large scale, but eventually returned to Russellville to resume his banking interests in the town. During his youthful years he had attended Georgetown College and there met Miss Cornelia Gano, a native of Kentucky. They were married while still quite young, and in their advanced years they returned to Georgetown, where Spencer C. Long died in March, 1899, at sixty-four years of age. In politics he was a stanch adherent of Democratic principles. Educational interests received his earnest support, as did also the work of the Baptist Church, in which he was a lifelong and faithful member.

The Gano family came to America during the colonial era, and during the war of the Revolution Rev. John Gano, a prominent Baptist minister living in New York City, served in the United States army under General Washington as a chaplain. A grandson of this Revolutionary chaplain was Stephen F. Gano, a prominent physician and influential Whig residing at Georgetown, Ky. In the family of Spencer C. and Cornelia (Gano) Long, there were four sons and three daughters, all of whom are still living except two sons. Of those now living Stephen Gano Long was third in order of birth, and was born in Louisville, Ky., October 1, 1864. Common-school studies were followed by the studies of Bethel College, from which he was graduated in 1883 with the degree of A. B., and later received the degree of A. M. Subsequent to his college course he studied in the University of Virginia, from which he received the degree of LL. B., in 1886, and at the same time was admitted to practice at the bar.

After having gained an early professional experience in Russellville, Ky., during 1888 Mr. Long came to California and opened an office in Los Angeles, where he still has his main office at Nos. 215-217 Bullard block. Immediately after his arrival he formed a partnership with an attorney who still remains with him, the firm of Long & Baker being probably as old a firm as any in the city. In 1895 Mr. Long established his residence in Long Beach, where he has an office in the Long Beach Bank building, and during 1898-99 officiated as city attorney of Long Beach. Since coming to this city he has aided in the establishment of the Citizens Savings Bank and the State Bank of Long Beach of the latter of which he now acts as attorney. In addition, he is retained as attorney for the Long Beach Water Company, the Pacific Surgical Company of Los Angeles, the Home Telephone Company of Long Beach and the Home Land and Water Company. The firm of Long & Baker are city attorneys of Azusa and Glendale.

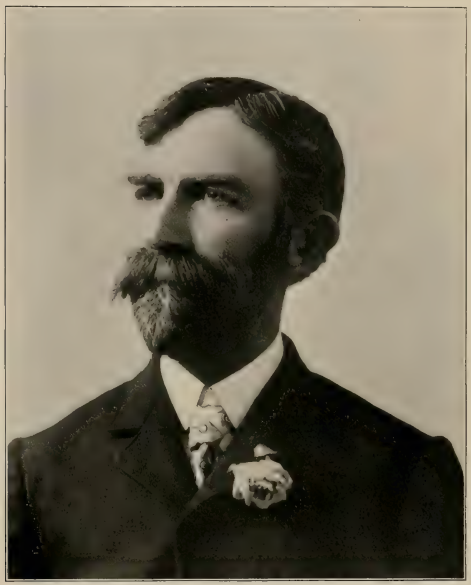
The marriage of Mr. Long was solemnized in Los Angeles and united him with Miss Mary Obear, a native of St. Louis, Mo. Five sons were born of this union, namely: Spencer C., who died in infancy, Frank O., Stephen G., Jr., Thomas O. and Walter B., who are receiving the best educational advantages their home city affords. The family are identified with the First Baptist Church of Long Beach and contribute generously to its maintenance, as to other movements for the general welfare. In fraternal connections Mr. Long holds membership with the blue lodge of Masons and the Knights of Pythias at Long Beach, while in politics he is a stanch Democrat, an active worker in the party, and during 1905 was honored with the presidency of the Democratic Club of Long Beach. He has been a delegate to the county conventions of his party and in 1906 was elected a delegate to the state Democratic convention.



WALTER C. EYMANN. Prominent among the highly esteemed and influential citizens of Ocean Park is Walter C. Eymann, a practical business man and a leading real-estate dealer, who has been an important factor in promoting the rapid growth of this beautiful coast city, and a liberal contributor towards the establishment of its varied enterprises. Distinguished not only as a native-born son of California, but for the honored ancestry from which he traces his lineage, he occupies a conspicuous position in the annals of Los Angeles county, and no person is more worthy than he of representation in a work of this kind. A son of Charles F. Eymann, M. D., he was born, November 3, 1867, in Anaheim, Orange county. The Eymann family has long been prominent in Germany, among its members being doctors, lawyers and merchants of distinction, one of its members having served as court physician to the Czar of Russia.

A native of Germany, Charles F. Eymann was born, reared and educated in Oldenburg, the home of many of his ancestors. Immigrating to the United States when a young man, he continued his studies in the medical college at Cincinnati, Ohio. Subsequently going overland to California, he engaged in mining and prospecting with unusual success, amassing a fortune. As banks were unsafe in those days it was customary to bury money; one day he returned and was bitterly disappointed to find that some one had visited the spot where he had secreted his wealth, and robbed him. Afterwards settling in San Francisco, he built up a substantial business as a merchant, and became a large property owner. He married Amalia Hammes, whose father, Philip Hammes, immigrated to San Francisco from Germany in 1856, and there followed his trade of watchmaker, clockmaker and jeweler until his removal to Anaheim with the original German colony.

Leaving school when about sixteen years of age, Walter C. Eymann assumed charge of a vineyard of thirty-three acres, managing it successfully until the destruction of the vines by a disease that killed all of the vineyards of that locality and ruined the wine industry. He subsequently took a course of study at Heald's Business College, after which he was a resident of San Francisco for two and one-half years, being employed as collector, salesman and bookkeeper, first for Hueter Brothers, and later for the Bass-Hueter Paint Company. Going then to Europe, he visited a favorite aunt at the home of his ancestors, after which he traveled extensively on the continent, visiting the principal art galleries, and other places of interest.

On returning to California, Mr. Eymann settled near Anaheim, on land left him by his father, and at once began its improvement, in the course of a few years developing a valuable walnut grove. He built a fine house and substantial farm buildings, making noteworthy improvements. This place he sold in November, 1904, realizing a handsome profit from his expenditure of time and money. Coming to Ocean Park, he bought the Summerheim flats, which he has since managed, and continued in the real-estate business, with which he had previously been associated for three years. In the spring of 1905 he opened a real-estate office in the city of Los Angeles, but this he abandoned when the beach cities began to show signs of life and activity and has since maintained an office on ocean front. He not only deals in Southern California property, but also handles northern lands, owning property in the San Joaquin valley and Tulare county.

Mr. Eymann is a man of great inventive talent as well as a business man of ability. In 1895 he received from the United States government a patent that was an improvement on a patent that he then possessed, it being a valuable invention utilizing a combination of coal and gas ranges. In introducing it to the public he traveled over one-half of the states of the Union, and from the royalty now given him by its manufacturers, the J. L. Mott Iron Works Company, of New York City, he receives a good annual income. He also has other incomplete inventions, one contemplated one being the taking of electric currents from the earth and using them in stationary engines. He is an expert in oil and water, and has acted in this capacity in Southern California for a number of years, always with satisfactory results. He is a fine business man, and has acquired extensive property interests in Ocean Park, San Joaquin valley and Tulare county.

In Europe, in 1894, Mr. Eymann married Dorothea H. Schellens, a daughter of Richard Schellens, a noted railway man, who is a government director of all the railroads in the Rhine provinces, and an inventor of the Schellens railway train blocking devices. Mr. and Mrs. Eymann have one child, Gilbert H. W. Eymann. Fraternally Mr. Eymann is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters.

WILLIAM A. REEVES. As a well known and highly respected rancher and dairyman, William A. Reeves is located in the vicinity of Hynes and engaged in the management of his business, which has brought him a competence and placed him among the successful men of this community. He is a native son, his birth having occurred near El Monte, Los Angeles county, January 7, 1862, his parents, Samuel and Lydia (Cleminson) Reeves, being natives respectively of Kentucky and Missouri. They were the first white people married in San Diego, the father having crossed the plains in 1849; he teamed for a time from the port of Wilmington to Los Angeles, and finally removed to El Monte and took up government land, making that place his home for a few years, when he located in Azusa. He there owned thirty acres upon which he made his home for fifteen years, when he sold out and came to the vicinity of Hynes and purchased ten acres with his son, but made his home in Hynes, where his death occurred at the age of seventy-two years. The mother is still surviving and makes her home in Clearwater at the age of seventy years. She became the mother of eight children, of whom the following are living: William A., of this review; Mrs. Mary Dougherty, a widow; Lucetta, wife of D. W. McDonald, of Santa Ana; Minnie, wife of H. W. Snodgrass, of Covina; Lillian, who resides with her mother at Clearwater, and Ina, wife of John G. Lewis, residing near Hynes. Mr. Reeves was a stanch Republican in politics and while in Azusa served as justice of the peace.

In El Monte William A Reeves received his education in the public schools, and also attended school in Azusa. He worked at home until his marriage, which occurred in 1885, when he went to San Bernardino and about three miles up Lytle creek engaged in ranching. After four years he removed to Santa Monica and engaged in the stock business, raising beef for the market and making that place his home for ten years. He finally took up a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres, the greater part of which was grazing land, and improved the property with buildings and by setting out a fine orchard. Subsequently he sold out at Santa Monica and coming to the vicinity of Hynes purchased his present property of twenty-five acres, all devoted to the raising of alfalfa, and he also leases forty-five acres devoted to alfalfa, beets, and pasture land. He has a dairy of twenty-four cows and disposes of his product to the Crescent Cream Company through the Hynes Co-operative Creamery Company, of which he is a member.

To Mr. Reeves and his wife were born three children, namely: Claude, Lyda and Pearl. Before marriage Mrs. Reeves was Miss Molly E. Swinney; she was born in Missouri, a daughter of Henry G. and Cordelia (Shores) Swinney, natives respectively of Kentucky and Pike county, Mo. The family came to California in 1870 and here the father engaged in ranching and the sale of real estate until his death, which occurred in 1901, at the age of sixty-seven years. During the Civil war Mr. Swinney enlisted in a Kentucky regiment and was taken prisoner and confined in prison for some time. Mrs. Swinney still survives and makes her home at Ocean Park, Cal. Besides Mrs. Reeves she is the mother of the following children: Laura, wife of William Clark, of Los Angeles; James, of Alamitos Bay; Rudolph, of Roseberry; and William, residing with the mother at Ocean Park.

Mr. Reeves is a stanch Republican in his political convictions and takes a keen interest in the advancement of these principles. He served for some years as a school trustee in Santa Monica. Mrs. Reeves is a member of the United Brethren Church.

FRANK BROCKMAN PETTIS. When the early years of the '50s were drawing thousands of strong, self-reliant young men from the east to the unknown shores of the western sea, B. F. Pettis, who was a native of Syracuse, N. Y., and a blacksmith by trade, joined a party of emigrants bound for the west with wagons and oxen. In common with many of the early settlers, he was anxious to tempt Dame Fortune in the gold mines and this plan he carried out, only to find that the goddess was fickle and refused to respond to his labors in the mines of the mountains. Thereupon he sought a more reliable if less fascinating occupation, and took up the work of horse-shoeing in Alpine county, working both in the towns of Genoa and Markleeville. A brief subsequent experience in placer mining was followed by his removal further south, and in 1871 he arrived at Goleta, Santa Barbara county, accompanied by his family. Soon after his arrival he bought a blacksmith's shop and afterward engaged at blacksmithing until his retirement from business cares, since which time he has remained at Goleta, honored by the entire community as a man of warm heart, fine principles of honor and unquestioned integrity.

After coming to California B. F. Pettis met and married Mary Brockman, who was born in Sonoma county, Cal., and died at Goleta, Santa Barbara county. Her father, Capt. Israel Brockman, was a pioneer of 1846 in California, having come to the then territory with General Fremont's expedition, and serving as an officer in the Mexican war. Upon the close of that struggle he settled in Sonoma county, of which he was a pioneer, and in 1850 was elected sheriff, the first incumbent of the office in that county. Not long afterward he removed to Mexico with the intention of settling, but he failed to make satisfactory arrangements for land with the Mexican government, and therefore returned to California, where he secured large tracts on the Sweetwater in San Diego county. After a long and unusually active existence he passed away in San Diego, and was followed to his last resting place by tributes of respect and admiration from old and young. With his departure another link was broken binding the past with the present.

In the family of B. F. and Mary Pettis there were seven children, five of whom are now living. The eldest, Frank Brockman Pettis, was born near Markleeville, Alpine county, Cal., January 11, 1871, and in infancy was brought to Santa Barbara county. During boyhood he was a pupil in the Goleta common schools. Upon leaving school he learned the blacksmith's trade under his father, with whom he worked until 1895, and then engaged in business alone, having a large trade as a blacksmith and also selling agricultural implements. During 1903 he came to Oxnard and embarked in the hardware and implement business on Sixth and B streets, dealing in heavy and shelf hardware, cutlery, implements, etc., and acting as agent for the Osborne and Planet, Jr., machinery, the Milburn wagons and the Oliver plows. In the spring of 1906 he removed to more commodious quarters at No. 525 Saviers road.

Before leaving Goleta Mr. Pettis married Miss Carrie E. Carr, of that city, a native of Wisconsin, and they are the foster parents of one daughter, Helen B. In religious connections they are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which Mr. Pettis officiates as a steward. Politically he always has voted the Republican ticket and believes in the platform for which that party stands. Initiated into Masonry during his residence in Santa Barbara county, he is now a member of Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., and his Masonic relations are further extended through his membership in the Royal Arch Chapter of Oxnard.

RICHARD HOFF. Among the residents of Los Angeles county who are specially worthy of notice in this volume is Richard Hoff, now living on a farm at Hyde Park, retired from active pursuits. A man of unquestioned courage and bravery, persistent of purpose and of upright principles, he has had a varied career, and during the Civil war acquired distinction for his gallant work in the United States navy. A son of Richard Hoff, Sr., he was born in 1841, in New York state, of English ancestry.

A native of Lincolnshire, England, Richard Hoff, Sr., lived there until 1827, when he immigrated to the United States. Settling in New York state, he worked as a farm hand at first, and until his death, in 1861, was actively employed as a tiller of the soil. He married Elizabeth Crane, who was born in New York state, and she survived him many years, dying in 1882. Seven children were born of their union, namely: George, William, Charles, Richard, Edward, Mary and Antoinette, and with the exception of Richard, the subject of this sketch, the sons are all deceased.

Starting in life for himself in 1856, then a lad of fifteen years, Richard Hoff labored industriously at any honest employment, working at first as a farm hand. In 1858 he embarked in seafaring pursuits, and for six years was a common sailor on board a New Bedford, Mass., whaling vessel. In 1864 he enlisted in the United States navy, and on the gunboat Huron, which was commanded by Admiral Thomas O. Selfridge, he participated in the two engagements at Fort Fisher, the first one being on Christmas day, 1864, and the last one on January 15, 1865, when the garrison was forced to surrender. In this attack the sailors fought gallantly, armed with revolvers and cutlasses, and Mr. Hoff had the distinction of being one of the very first of the bluejackets that attempted to mount the fort. The Huron was then sent to the Norfolk navy yard for repairs, and after the mast, which had been shot off, was replaced by a new one, Admiral Selfridge was ordered to Key West, Fla., with his men in order to head off Jefferson Davis, who, it was thought, had fled in that direction. At the close of the war, Mr. Hoff was honorably discharged at the Brooklyn navy yard, in June, 1865, and is now a retired admiral.

Resuming his agricultural labors, Mr. Hoff worked on a farm for a year, after which he came by way of Panama to California, arriving in San Francisco May 23, 1866. Going from there to Santa Cruz, he secured a position in the powder works, with which he was connected for thirteen years. In 1881 he became fireman on the Central Pacific Railroad, remaining with the company for two years, when he went to Ogden, Utah, and became superintendent of the Utah powder works, a position which he held for seven years. Settling in Hyde Park, Los Angeles county, in 1890, he has since resided here, and is now living retired on the small ranch which he owns. His services in the war have won recognition, and he has been entered in the Soldier's Home, in Los Angeles county. Politically he is a true-blue Republican.

Mr. Hoff married first, in 1878, Flora Bennett, a daughter of Eben Bennett, who came to California with the Crockers in pioneer days. At her death she left three children, namely: George, Clara and Edwin. Mr. Hoff married for his second wife, in 1901, the widow of E. A. Lamphere, of Los Angeles. Mrs. Hoff is a most estimable woman, and a consistent member of the Congregational Church. By her first marriage she had five children, none of whom is now living.

REV. CHARLES H. LAWRENCE. The First Methodist Episcopal Church of Escondido, of which Rev. Mr. Lawrence has acted as pastor for five years, holds a prominent position among the uplifting spiritual forces of the city and has proved a power for good during the period of its existence. The organization of the congregation dates back to September 16-21, 1886, when the San Diego district was created, and on the 7th of October, of the same year, the first quarterly conference was held, resulting in the permanent establishment of the cause at Escondido. Under the original board of trustees, consisting of I. B. Thayer, John Hudson, W. H. Sharp, D. T. Oakes and F. M. Statler, the movement was incorporated for a period of fifty years. The first meeting-house utilized by the congregation was a brick building now used as a warehouse. When a schoolhouse was erected on Lime street permission was given the congregation to hold their Sunday-school and church services in that building. Their first permanent home, which is still their house of worship, was erected of brick, and on the occasion of the dedication, August 21, 1887, the entire cost of the structure, $1600, was raised within one hour. Under the present pastorate a parsonage has been erected at a cost of $2500, containing the modern conveniences, including hot and cold water, and admirably adapted to contribute to the bodily comfort of the occupants.

The present pastor of the Escondido church is a Canadian by birth and education. His parents, Erastus and Elizabeth (Gilman) Lawrence, were natives of Canada, where the former was postmaster and a leading merchant of his town. Warmly interested in all movements for the development of local resources, he was particularly interested in railroad building and accomplished much in that important department of progress. Overwork and anxiety in connection with his extensive investments brought on his death in 1881, when he was sixty-one years of age. Afterward his widow came to California and now, at the age of eighty-three years, makes her home with her son in Escondido. In the province of Quebec Charles H. Lawrence was born March 20, 1859. At an early age he displayed unusual aptitude for intellectual pursuits and consequently was given every educational advantage within the means of the family. After a course of three years in Stanstead Wesleyan College he matriculated in The Wesleyan Theological College at Montreal, Canada, an institution affiliated with McGill University, and there he completed his theological studies and prepared for the ministry of the Methodist Church. In the spring of 1881 he entered upon his first pastorate at St. Henri de Montreal Methodist Church, where he did effective work for three years. His next two pastorates also covered three years each and then he remained for brief periods at Frelighsburg and Richmond.

After eleven years of ministerial work in the province of Quebec, in the fall of 1892 Rev. Mr. Lawrence came to Southern California, bringing with him a younger brother whose ill-health demanded a change to a climate less rigorous than that of their old Canadian home. For five months he remained in Los Angeles, but in the spring of 1893 he was given the pastorate of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Santa Maria, Santa Barbara county, where he remained for three years. Next he was stationed at Arroyo Grande, San Luis Obispo county, for three years. While there the church received a gift of fifteen acres of land admirably adapted for an assembly-ground, and he at once took steps toward securing the establishment of a permanent camp-ground at that place. Largely through his ceaseless efforts a fund of $1600 was raised with which to erect a large tabernacle on the grounds, and since then, summer assemblies have been held for the members of the denomination and other Christian workers. From Arroyo Grande he was transferred to the Union Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church of Los Angeles, and during a pastorate of two years with that congregation he was instrumental in the erection of a commodious edifice on the corner of Court and Union avenues. A pastorate of one year at Santa Paula, Ventura county, was followed in 1901 by his removal to Escondido, where under his efficient labors the church has enjoyed a steady growth. In his ministerial work he has the co-operation of his wife, formerly Mary Jarvis, of Quebec, whom he married August 25, 1886, and by whom he has two children, Arthur D. and Mabel Jarvis, now (1906) seventeen and twelve years of age respectively.

Since the above was written Rev. Mr. Lawrence has been removed from Escondido to the pastorate of the South Main street Methodist Episcopal Church of Los Angeles, with residence at No. 127 West Fifty-first street.

HARRY JULIUS HOFFMAYR. There are few grain-buyers in Southern California who possess a more thorough knowledge of the details of the business or are more adequately prepared for the successful discharge of affairs connected with the business than Mr. Hoffmayr, a gentleman of broad experience in the line of his special calling. While the period of his residence in Oxnard is of comparatively brief duration, nevertheless he has formed a large circle of acquaintances throughout all of this section of country. The importance of his position as agent for the Southern Pacific Milling Company may be inferred from the statement that he has charge of all the company's warehouses at Oxnard, Camarillo, Somis, Moorpark and St. Susanna, and takes entire charge of the buying of grain, beans and produce from the farmers of the adjacent country.

The genealogy of the Hoffmayr family shows that they come from ancient German ancestry and as far back as the records can be traced some of their name flourished in the land of the Teutons. The first to cross the ocean to America was Col. Julius Charles Hoffmayr, a native of Hochzeit, Prussia, a son of Charles J. Hoffmayr, a large land owner, and Emma, nee von Treskow, a member of one of the oldest military families of Prussia. At the age of twenty-one years he came to the United States and settled at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where, although a civil engineer by profession, he followed the miller's trade, building at St. Mary's the first sawmill in the entire western slope of the Missouri river, and operating it for Col. Peter A. Sarpy, the noted old Indian trader of the North Western Fur Company. Somewhat later he built a flour mill at the same location. The next work in which he became interested was the furnishing of oak ties and car lumber for the building of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, he and his partner, John W. Cooper (a brother of Mr. Cooper living near Santa Barbara, Cal.), obtaining the lumber for the ties and car lumber in the extensive woods near Honey Creek, Iowa, on the Chicago & North Western Railroad. At Council Bluffs he assisted in piling the first wooden ice bridge across the Missouri river, for the Union Pacific Railroad. Next he erected a flour mill at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and this he operated for thirty-seven years. He was also a director of the Pacific National Bank. Eventually he left Iowa for the more genial climate of New Mexico and there he engaged in horticultural pursuits until his retirement from business, since which he has made his home with his son in California. The title by which he is known came to him through service as a colonel of Iowa State troops during the Civil war. He was wounded several times in fights with Sioux Indians. Fraternally he is identified with the Masons and the Knights Templar, and while living in Iowa was one of the most eminent men in the Masonic fraternity in the state, at one time officiating as eminent commander of Ivanhoe Commandery No. 17, and in other ways impressing the strength of his individuality upon the order.

The marriage of Colonel Hoffmayr united him with Miss Antoinette Wolfram, who was born at the ancestral home in the province of Posen, Germany, and died at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1876. Seven children were born of that union, of whom Harry Julius, the eldest, and his brother Arthur are the sole survivors. Born at Council Bluffs, Iowa, June 29, 1865, Harry Julius was only eleven years of age when death deprived him of a mother's affectionate oversight. After having studied in the grammar and high schools of Council Bluffs until he was sixteen years of age, he then began to earn his own livelihood, and since then has been independent of aid from others. The first position which he held was that of bookkeeper for his father, with whom he continued in business for eight years. At the expiration of that time he came to California in 1890 with the hope that a change of climate might benefit his health, which had been injured by the confining work of bookkeeping. For a time he engaged in horticultural pursuits at San Miguel and found the open-air work conducive to health. For a year afterward he worked with Eppinger & Co., at Paso Robles, but at the expiration of that time he found it necessary to seek the mountain air for the benefit of his health. Later he engaged as bookkeeper with Eppinger & Co., for eight months. Since March of 1895 he has been employed by the Southern Pacific Milling Company, first acting as their agent at Guadaloupe, and then as agent at San Buena Ventura for nine and one-half years, after which in 1904 he came to Oxnard, his present headquarters.

Before leaving Iowa Mr. Hoffmayr was united in marriage at Crescent City with Miss Maggie S. Corbaley, a native of Indiana, and like himself a faithful member of the Christian Church. Five children comprise their family, namely: Antoinette May, Kate Janet, Eva Leona, Olive Marguerite and Charles Arthur. Fraternally Mr. Hoffmayr affiliates with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, while in matters political he gives his stanch support to the men and measures advocated by the Republican party. Keen, intelligent, capable and energetic, he forms a valuable acquisition to the business element of Oxnard and holds a distinct position in the regard and esteem of associates.

WILLIAM M. BROWN. Fortified by a previous extended and comprehensive experience in the sash and door business and in woodwork of every kind, Mr. Brown was qualified to successfully conduct the plant which he established after coming to Long Beach in 1903. The Long Beach Sash and Door Company was originally started on American avenue, but now occupies suitable quarters on the corner of Appleton and Bonita streets, where employment is furnished to twenty-seven men. The company was incorporated September 30, 1904, capitalized at $25,000, and under the guidance of the following corps of officers: W. M. Brown, president and manager; George Howe, vice-president; B. C. Hatch, secretary; and P. E. Hatch, treasurer.

Of eastern birth and descent, Mr. Brown was born in the village of St. George, Me., August 2, 1852, being a son of Charles Brown, a native of the same locality. After having completed the studies of the common schools he began to earn his own livelihood and at the age of nineteen was apprenticed as a ship joiner in Belfast, Me., where he remained for some time. During 1883 he removed to Minneapolis, Minn., and became interested in the manufacture of sash, doors and moulding. For four years he was in charge of the moulding department of the Minneapolis Sash & Door Company and for three and one-half years he was connected with the Flour City Sash and Door Company. In July, 1892, he accepted a position as woodworker with the street railway company and in 1895 was promoted to be master mechanic of the Twin City Rapid Transit Company, in which position he designed the type of car adopted for use on the street railways of those cities.

Considerations of health induced Mr. Brown to give up a profitable position in Minneapolis and seek the west, where he made a brief sojourn in Seattle, Wash. On his return to Minneapolis he took charge of the sash and door department of the Abbott Manufacturing Company of St. Paul, but soon found that it would be necessary to remove permanently from that section of the country in order to retain his health. During the latter part of 1902 he came to California and settled at Wilmington, where he erected the Southwestern Lumber Company's plant and took charge of the same until it was in accurate and satisfactory running order. From there he came to Long Beach, where he has gained a place as a reliable, intelligent and trustworthy business man. Before leaving the east he married Miss Vesta Frost, who was born in Maine. They are the parents of one son and four daughters, namely: Walter M.; Edith; Albertha, who resides in Minneapolis; May, assistant librarian of the Long Beach library; and Vesta, at home. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church in their home city.

Always interested in fraternal organizations, Mr. Brown was active in a number of these during his residence in Minneapolis, and was especially interested in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows as a member of the lodge, encampment and kindred order of Rebekahs. In 1888 he was chosen a delegate to the grand lodge and also represented at various times ,his local lodge at the Grand Encampment. In the work of organizing the Northern Light Lodge No. 121, of Minneapolis, he was a leading factor and became one of its charter members, as also he was of Hennepin Encampment at Minneapolis. The Iola Lodge of Rebekahs in Minneapolis also owed its establishment largely to his energetic efforts and constant interest, and he was among its charter members. Though not a partisan in politics, he supports Republican candidates and believes thoroughly in the principles for which that party stands.

J. DANIEL GARD. Prominent among the men of Long Beach, is J. Daniel Gard, who has been a resident of this city since 1901 and a constant contributor to its growth and progress. He was born on a farm in Warren county, Ohio, August 13, 1836 a son of John Gard, a Virginian by birth and a pioneer of Ohio in the year 1820. The elder man engaged as a farmer throughout the years of his manhood, dying on the family homestead at an advanced age. He inherited from English ancestors the sturdy qualities which distinguished his citizenship, acquiring a position of both affluence and influence in the section of country where he made his home. His wife, formerly Hannah Hisey, was a native of Virginia, but she received her education in Warren County, Ohio.

The youth of J. Daniel Gard was passed upon his father's farm, receiving a practical training along business lines while he attended the public schools. In young manhood he followed the example of his father and engaged actively in farming and stock-raising in Ohio, buying and selling stock. He traveled all over the state of Ohio in the course of his business, but preferred to make his home in Warren County, where he owned a farm of one hundred and sixty acres of fine land. This property he cultivated actively until 1887, in which year he was impelled to seek a milder climate on account of impaired health; coming to the Pacific slope, he spent an enjoyable seven months in Southern California. He returned home and for five years continued in his former pursuits. Once more he sought the temperate climate of California, where he passed one year, returning at the end of that period entirely cured of his bronchial trouble. A few more years passed in his native state were all that Mr. Gard desired, and in 1901 he closed out his business in Ohio and came to California with the intention of making this place his permanent home. He located in Long Beach and has since been engaged in an extensive handling of real estate, buying and selling lots. With his brother, William Gard, he now owns one hundred and eleven lots at Oceanside, in addition to much other valuable property. In May, 1905, he built a comfortable residence at No. 635 Pine avenue, which is presided over by his wife. She was formerly Miss Mary J. Walter, a native of Ohio, in which state their union occurred. They have had three children, all of whom are deceased, two dying in infancy, and Walter meeting his death accidentally in 1886.

Mr. Gard has met with success in all his ventures and particularly since coming to California. Previous to this move he had given all of his time and attention to agriculture, which occupation had been followed by his ancestors for generations. The outdoor life and healthful occupation of mind and body bred in the members of the family the best qualities of manhood, health, strength and vigor, with the best possible use of the talents with which nature has endowed them being their chief characteristics. Mr. Gard is a man of energetic temperament, strong and forceful in character, and has brought to bear in his operations in California all of these qualities. He has a firm belief in the future of this section and supports it enthusiastically, financially and otherwise. He is conservative and yet progressive, the possession of good judgment enabling him to act upon opportunity. He takes an active part in the promotion of all worthy movements for the growth and development of Long Beach, being particularly active in educational affairs, in Ohio having served on the school board for many years. In his political affiliations he is a stanch Republican and firmly grounded in the principles he endorses. He is liberal by nature, generous to a fault and can always be depended upon to contribute freely to charitable movements and public enterprises. He has won a position of exceptional prominence among the citizens of Long Beach, where he is held in the highest esteem for the character and quality of his manhood.

S. A. SANDERSON. While yet a young man, S. A. Sanderson, manager for the United States Trust Company at Long Beach has achieved an enviable degree of success in the business world, and his success in life is due principally to his own efforts. He can be properly styled a self-made man, for he has won his position entirely through his own talents, energy and the desire to succeed. The stories of men who have overcome obstacles and risen in the line of their endeavor are always an inspiration to other men. They give to the disheartened and discouraged new impetus to push forward, and success will follow persistent effort, for ambition, accompanied by untiring industry, is the key to success.

Mr. Sanderson was born in Mayfield, Graves county, Ky., on the 18th of October, 1873. Like the majority of boys he received his first instruction in the public schools of his native state. Early in life he was thrown on his own resources, and at the age of fifteen years was teaching a school consisting of eighty-five pupils, being distinguished as the youngest teacher in the public schools of the south. His ambition was to enter college to better prepare himself for the larger duties of the world. Through his own unaided efforts he paved the way, and by teaching and other work accumulated sufficient money to enable him to matriculate at the University of Kentucky, graduating therefrom in 1892. Desiring further instruction along special lines he entered the University for a post-graduate course of two years. In 1894 he resumed teaching and during six years following taught in the public schools of Mayfield, Ky., and at West Kentucky College. He then removed to Arkansas and there engaged for a time as teacher in the State University at Fayetteville.

While teaching at Fayetteville Mr. Sanderson married Miss Lucy Dickson, a native of Georgia, and they have one son, Clyde, born in Arkansas. Having confined himself too closely to his work Mr. Sanderson suffered the usual result, a breaking-down in health, and found it necessary to give up his work as teacher and return to his native state. As his health did not improve he concluded that an entire change of location and of occupation would be beneficial. Following this resolve he came to California in April, 1902, locating at Long Beach, and engaged as traveling salesman for a large clothing establishment. He traveled throughout the state for one year, meeting with excellent success in his new line of work. At the end of the year, when he severed his connection with the firm, he became head salesman and had the satisfaction of winning the premiums offered by the company to the employe selling the largest amount of goods for the firm. Having visited nearly every town and city in the state he was in a position to judge for himself as to the desirability of a location for establishing himself in business which would combine church, social and educational advantages for the benefit of his young son. Long Beach seemed to offer exceptional opportunities, and the family made the city their home, and now reside at No. 729 Cedar avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Sanderson are members of the Christian Church. They are deeply interested in all that pertains to the welfare of the church and charities connected with church work. Both are members of the church choir, and Mr. Sanderson is the youngest elder in the church. He gives all of his spare time to the furtherance of church interests. In 1902, when he came to Long Beach, the church numbered forty members, with property valuation of $1,500. To-day they have a membership of six hundred and property valuation of $35,000. He is Vice-President of the Christian Endeavor State Union, and is a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, being chairman of membership committee, and an energetic temperance advocate and worker. Quite naturally he takes great interest in the public schools and in maintaining a perfect school system is in full sympathy with the demands of the day, requiring educational facilities to be of the highest order. Mr. Sanderson is identified with fraternal organizations, being a member of the Masonic, Odd Fellow, and Knights of Pythias lodges.

In business he has the full confidence of the community. His motto is the Golden Rule and his business is carried on with that divine injunction in view. Not only has he the management of the Long Beach office for the company he represents, but in addition, carries on an extensive business of his own, handling high-class bonds, investments and insurance. He has shown his confidence in the future of Long Beach property as an investor in real estate holdings, buying, improving and selling real estate, and has met with gratifying success in his real estate transactions. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Long Beach, and is a notary public, his commission issued by Governor Pardee bearing date of April 10, 1905.

WALTER B. JOY. As a pioneer in his business, which is that of cornice, sheet metal worker and plumber, Walter B. Joy, located in Long Beach, in the spring of 1896 and leased land at the corner of Pine and Second streets, where he erected a building adequate for the needs of his business. This business has since grown to proportions in keeping with the advancement of the city itself and the passing of years has brought to Mr. Joy financial returns, as well as making him a factor in the industrial life of Long Beach. Born December 24, 1857, in Muscatine, Iowa, Mr. Joy was a son of W. H. Joy, a pioneer of Iowa in 1856, being agent for the United States Express Company in that section for thirty years. His death occurred in that locality after attaining advanced years. In the public schools of Muscatine Walter B. Joy received an education, after which he served an apprenticeship as metal worker in that city. Following his mastery of the trade he worked in various places throughout Iowa and Dakota as journeyman. Induced to come to California through representations made by relatives who had located here, he came to the state in 1885 and in Pasadena, Los Angeles county, found employment at his trade. He remained in that city for a number of years, when, in the spring of 1896, he located permanently in Long Beach, whose future possibilities he believed to be unsurpassed. His own success and the growth of the city have justified his faith. He began on a small scale and has increased several hundred fold, employing at the present time about nine men, his specialty being furnace work. His second location was on the present site of the Masonic Temple, but with the growth of the city he removed to his present location, where he is carrying on a successful business.

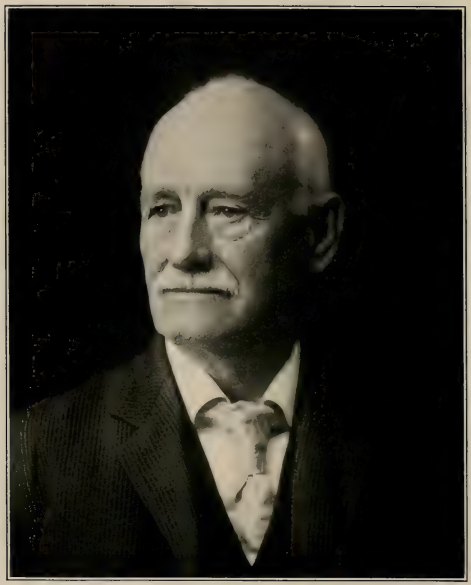
Mr. Joy was married in Iowa, in 1886, to Lottie Burlingame, whose death occurred in California November 6, 1903. She left one daughter, Edith W., who is now attending the University of California. Fraternally Mr. Joy is identified with the Uniformed Rank of the Knights of Pythias, (in which he is past chancellor), Woodmen of the World and Order of Pendo. He belongs to the Master Plumbers Association and is active in the same. In religion he is a member of the Congregational Church, in which he officiates as trustee, and politically is a staunch Republican. Mr. Joy has ably demonstrated his ability in the line of his work and has also made for himself a place among the enterprising and helpful citizens of Long Beach.

A. M. CASWELL. A descendant of good old Puritan stock that traces back to the earliest settlement of New England, no one has more reason to be proud of his lineage than A. M. Caswell. His father, Isaac Caswell, a native of Greene, Me., was descended from the Massachusetts Caswells, who came from Holland with the first settlers of Plymouth. Isaac Caswell, a farmer by occupation and a Quaker in his religious views, was a man of stern integrity of character, loved and esteemed by his fellow-citizens, by whom he was honored with many offices of trust in the community. He died on the old homestead overlooking the blue waters of Penobscot bay, after a long and useful life.

On the maternal side, A. M. Caswell comes of pioneer New England stock; his mother, Mary Spring, native of Maine, was a descendant of the Daggett family, early settlers of Martha's Vineyard, Mass. Her father, William Spring, and his son, William, were soldiers in the war of 1812. For her day and generation—the day of the slow-moving stage coach and limited advantages—Mary Spring Caswell was possessed of unusual mental ability, having been a teacher for several years previous to her marriage. She was the mother of ten children, six of whom are living, and of these the subject of this sketch is the youngest. Mrs. Caswell was noted for her noble qualities of mind and heart. She died at the old homestead, aged ninety-eight years, in the faith of the Baptist teachings in which she had lived.

A. M. Caswell attended the public schools of his native town until he was sixteen years old, when he learned the trade of trunk-making. In 1861 he sailed from New York on the steamer Champion via Panama for California; from Panama he was a passenger on the old side-wheel steamer Constitution, which arrived in San Francisco shortly before Christmas, the entire trip having been made in twenty-four days.



Mr. Caswell followed his trade in San Francisco for a year and then went to San José, where he was an orchardist and engaged in the fruit commission business about the same length of time.

Some eight or nine years were passed as a successful merchant in San Francisco, when the rapid growth and boom in real estate values in San Diego attracted him to that city. Five years and a half were passed as a merchant there, when Mr. Caswell decided to invest his money in Santa Monica property and has since made some valuable improvements in that place. He was also, for fourteen years, Southern California agent for the Westervelt National Vinegar Works, with headquarters in Los Angeles.

Mr. Caswell is a substantial and highly esteemed citizen of Santa Monica and while he is Republican in political affiliations, he is not a strict adherent to party lines. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

GEORGE B. STETTER, of the firm of George B. Stetter & Co., of Long Beach, was born in Tipton, Moniteau county, Mo., January 14, 1875. His father, George Stetter, was a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, his birth having occurred in the vicinity of Stuttgart. Left an orphan at an early age he was thrown upon his own resources and in young manhood came to America, his industry and energy bringing him success in his undertakings. He finally located in Missouri, where he engaged as a broker and land dealer until his death, in 1882. He was loyal to the country of his adoption and served in the Union army. He married Sarah M. Snorgrass, a native of Tipton, Mo., and a daughter of Isaac Snorgrass, also a native of that state, a farmer by occupation and the descendant of an old Kentucky family. Some time after the death of her husband, Mrs. Stetter became the wife of C. G. Ely, of Long Beach, who served during the Civil war in the Fourth Ohio Cavalry. By her first marriage she had three children, of whom George B. Stetter is the youngest and only son. By her second marriage she had one son, Roscoe C. Ely, who is a member of the real-estate firm previously mentioned.

The preliminary education of George B. Stetter was received in the public schools near his home, after which he attended Robinson's Business College at Sedalia, Mo. After graduation from this institution, he accepted a position as bookkeeper in Sedalia, and later he located in Webster Grove, Mo., and engaged in the drug business. Shortly afterward he located in Kansas City, where he engaged as commercial traveler for the Robert-Wicks Company of New York, in the interest of whom he traveled throughout the mountain and coast states. In 1897 he made his first trip to California and in 1899 he came to Los Angeles and followed the drug business a short time. The following year (1900) he engaged in the real-estate business and two years later came to Long Beach, where with his half-brother, Roscoe C. Ely, he established the George B. Stetter & Co., real estate enterprise. They are especially interested in handling business property and are themselves holders of valuable real estate in the business district of this city. Their faith in the permanency of conditions here have led them to invest largely, their erection of the apartment house at Nos. 219-221 Locust avenue resulting in large financial returns for them.

Mr. Stetter was married in Long Beach to Miss Margaret Johnson, a native of Story City, Iowa. Socially Mr. Stetter is a member of the Cosmopolitan Club.

G. W. E. GRIFFITH, of Los Angeles, Cal., was born in Tippecanoe county, Ind., December 22, 1833, a son of Rev. James and Nancy (Hunt) Griffith, both natives of New York, who early removed to Indiana and there resided until their deaths at advanced ages. Mr. Griffith was one of a family of eight children and lived with his father on the farm until his education in the common branches was completed, when he went to live with his brother, who was at that time president of Mount Pleasant College at Mount Pleasant, Pa. He was married there and in 1855 removed to Franklin county, Kans., where he filed on a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres. While residing there he took a prominent part in public life and was elected at different times to the offices of county commissioner, county clerk and recorder and county treasurer, and also served in the state legislature. After a number of years he removed with his family to Lawrence, Kans., and established a hardware and mercantile business, which he conducted until the time of the famous Quantrell raid at Lawrence, when he lost all of his property and was left with nothing but a linen coat and a pair of slippers. This was discouraging, but did not dishearten Mr. Griffith, who immediately borrowed money and re-established the same business, which was carried on for a number of years under the firm name of Griffith, Duncan & Co. and became one of the largest business houses in the state.

Mr. Griffith sold out of the mercantile business to accept the position of cashier of the Second National Bank of Lawrence, Kans., of which he was one of the promoters. Having sold his interest in this bank, he acted as agent for eastern investors for several years, and was instrumental in introducing a great deal of capital in Kansas at reduced rates of interest. While thus engaged he was selected by the creditors to liquidate the State Bank, which had failed, and all the assets and business was turned over to his control. It was not expected that over fifty per cent would be realized by the depositors in the then depressed condition of affairs, but under the able and economical management the depositors were paid one hundred per cent.

Soon after this business was so satisfactorily settled Mr. Griffith organized the Merchants' National Bank, with $100,000 paid up capital at Lawrence, Kans., and became its president and manager. This bank was a success from the start, and paid a dividend of eight per cent the first year, which it has continued to do to this day. In 1888 he resigned his position as president of the Merchants' National Bank to accept a position as manager of the Western Farm Mortgage Trust Company and removed to Denver, Col. After two years he foresaw that unfortunate results were likely to be the result of the management of the company, and a meeting of the board of directors was called to consider the subject, which was represented by capitalists from New York, Philadelphia and Boston. The board of directors refused to go into liquidation or change the policy being pursued, whereupon Mr. Griffith resigned and severed his connection with the company. Thereafter in about one year the company failed, and Mr. Griffith was appointed receiver in February, 1892, by the court in Denver to wind up the business of the company, which had sold throughout the eastern states some $5,000,000 guaranteed securities. The winding up of such a business was one of great responsibility, which was accomplished, and all accounts approved by the court, in 1896.

About the years 1890 and '91 Mr. Griffith organized and established the United States National Bank of Portland, Ore., and the Seattle National Bank of Seattle, Wash., with $250,000 capital each. The stock of the latter bank is worth at this time $300 and has a deposit of around $5,000,000. Mr. Griffith removed to this state in 1900. In 1904 he organized the South Pasadena Bank, and afterwards, in 1906, the Bank of Highland Park was established, the latter with a capital of $100,000, one-third of which is paid up, and

Mr. Griffith fills the office of president of this institution. He occupies a prominent position in financial circles and is held in high esteem by his associates.

Politically Mr. Griffith affiliates with the Republican party and takes an active interest in all affairs of civic interest. His wife, who was Facita A., daughter of Abraham Horbach, a farmer of Pennsylvania, is a native of Westmoreland county, Pa., and they have had four children: Charles E. died in Panama, where he was stricken with yellow fever; Mary G. Osborn resides with her father and is prominent in club circles, being president of the Ebell Club at Highland Park; George W. is a broker at No. 25 Pine street, New York City; and Mrs. Elida G. Van Pelt resides at No. 1206 West Lake avenue, Los Angeles.

LEWIS FILLMORE CRAM. Numbered among the pioneers of San Bernardino county, whither he came as early as 1851 after a tedious overland trip from Illinois through New Mexico and Arizona into California, Mr. Cram holds an honored position among those who assisted in the development of this region from the primeval conditon of nature into one of the most beautiful sections of the state. As a result of wise management and judicious labors he has attained a competency and has been able to assist his children in acquiring a substantial start in the world of activity. Though his life has been filled with indefatigable labors and though he has now passed his three score years and ten, he retains his mental activity and to some extent the physical vigor of younger days; however, through an abscess in the head, the left side of his face became paralized and the hearing of the left ear was lost, but with that exception he retains excellent health.

Essex county, N. Y., is Mr. Cram's native place, and April 19, 1834, the date of his birth. When about eighteen months old he was taken to Michigan by his parents, who settled near Detroit on a farm. At the age of seven years he accompanied the family to Ohio and for a time lived near Akron, also sojourned temporarily in other places. Two years later he went to Illinois with the family and settled in Schuyler county, where he remained for eight years, meanwhile attending the country schools. On leaving Illinois in May, 1851, he came with the family to California and during the long journey suffered a bereavement in the death of his mother. On account of sickness in the company, whose numbers were small, this latter fact making them easy prey to the hostile Indians who beset their pathway, they halted in New Mexico and Arizona to await recruits for the train, and it was not until May of 1852 that they finally arrived in Los Angeles. Going to Redlands in 1854 Mr. Cram made his first home in the state at that place. During 1858 he and his brother Henry each took up one hundred and sixty acres of land near Highland, and on this tract they still live, meanwhile having developed the land into one of the finest ranches in the entire county. Some of his original property has been sold, but he still owns eighty acres, representing a very important investment at present valuations. The substantial residence, erected in 1886, superseded the two original dwellings built in the early days and furnishes an excellent example of the growing prosperity of the country.

The marriage of Mr. Cram was solemnized September 27, 1866, and united him with Sarah Ann Wakefield, daughter of Andrew Jackson and Nancy (Garner) Wakefield, of Highland, San Bernardino county. From early life Mrs. Cram has been identified with the Congregational Church, to whose missionary and charitable enterprises Mr. Cram contributes, although not a member thereof or identified with any denomination. Politically he always has been stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party. On that ticket he twice was elected to the office of county supervisor, in which capacity he served with efficiency and fidelity. During the early days of the organization of the Grange he identified himself with the movement and served as a local officer in the same, maintaining a deep interest in the work as one calculated to promote the permanent prosperity of the agricultural class. All of his children are living, namely: Andrew Jackson, William Henry, John Edwin, Lewis Franklin, James Eaton, Robert and Mary Emile, Mrs. Joseph Cole, of Redlands. The father and sons own about one hundred and forty acres of orange land. While they have the different varieties of oranges, their specialty is the navels, of which they have some fine specimens in their groves. With one exception all of the sons are married and have established homes of their own; all are prosperous and enjoy the confidence of associates, exemplifying in their characters the efficient training and wise example of their parents.

ZENAS FREEMAN. Fallbrook counts itself fortunate in having among its substantial farmers and prominent citizens a man who has stood unflinchingly for the best interests of his neighborhood and the community at large. Mr. Freeman has always been conspicuous for his enterprise in the advancement of the common schools and in all public projects that tended toward the upbuilding of the locality in which he lived. The son of Jacob and Elizabeth A. (Eubanks) Freeman, the former a native of Georgia and the latter of Alabama, Zenas Freeman was born in Washington county, Ill., April 10, 1846. About 1830 Jacob Freeman removed to Illinois where he married and settled on government land. He spent the remainder of his life on his original farm; his wife is still living, at the age of eighty-nine years, in Webb City, Mo.

Zenas Freeman was educated in the district schools of the time and lived at home on the farm until he was of age. In 1867 he removed to Jasper county, Mo., where he bought land and engaged in farming and growing fruit. Where the flourishing city of Joplin now stands he killed ducks in 1872 on land which is now the main street. In company with his brother he erected a sawmill on the present city site and also conducted a lumberyard, furnishing the lumber of which the first buildings were constructed, and doing a business which totaled $25,000 a year. This he disposed of later and returning to the farm, set out seventy-five acres to fruit, this being considered a large orchard at that time.

In 1886 the failing health of his wife induced Mr. Freeman to leave his home in Missouri and remove temporarily to San Diego, Cal. The climate proving beneficial a month later they came to Fallbrook, purchased their present holdings and subsequently disposed of the eastern property. His land, comprising sixty acres, is devoted to general farming, with the exception of fourteen acres in bearing olive trees.

While in Missouri Mr. Freeman served sixteen years on the school board of Jasper county and soon after removing to Fallbrook was elected, in 1888, to a similar office here, a position he held eleven years. He was also one of the organizers of the high school district and in 1893 was elected first president of the board of trustees, an office which he continued to fill until July, 1904. It is due in no small degree to Mr. Freeman's efforts that the school is now considered one of the best in the county.

While in Missouri he was for some years deputy state organizer for the Grangers. He has been for the past five years deputy clerk for San Diego county, is also one of the road superintendents of the fifth district, and was both active and efficient in working against the voting of irrigation bonds in that district, a measure which has proved so disastrous to other localities.

In the spring of 1895 Mr. Freeman issued a call and assisted in the organization of the Co-operative Association, which was consummated in the autumn with fourteen members and a capitalization of $400. This store did a cash business of $140 per day for 1906 and has now membership stock of over $10,000. Mr. Freeman was also instrumental in organizing the Fallbrook Horticultural Society, which kept the banner exhibit in the San Diego Chamber of Commerce for several years.

Mr. Freeman was married to Miss Sarah E. Glasscock, a native of Jasper county, Mo., and the daughter of Eli Glasscock, of Tennessee. Six children were the result of the union: Zula E., who died when two years old; Margaret A., who died when one and a half years of age; Frederick J., of Los Angeles; Mamie Myrtle, wife of A. C. Réche, of Fallbrook; Eli E., engaged in farming on a large scale near Fallbrook; and Earnest L., a student in the Fallbrook high school. Mr. Freeman is a demitted member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which he joined when twenty-one years of age.

GEORGE WASHINGTON COVERT, M. D. The Covert family is of Holland-Dutch origin and became established in America as early as 1645, in which year it is thought the great-grandfather crossed the ocean and settled in Manhattan, N. Y. Subsequently he removed to Morristown, N. J., and it was there that the grandfather, Isaac Covert, was born. As one of the valiant defenders of the young colonies' interests he served for seven years in the Revolutionary war, first as a scout under General Armstrong, and later as fife major. After the close of hostilities he removed to Mercer county, Ky., where in addition to following his trade of weaver he also carried on a farm. He located seven quarter sections of land in Johnson County, Ind., which he had planned to apportion equally among his seven children, but his death occurred in 1825, on the very day set for the transfer and settlement of the transactions. His wife passed away in Indiana three years later. Their son Daniel was born in Mercer County, Ky., where besides following agricultural life to which he was early trained, he learned the cabinet-maker's trade. After his removal to Franklin, Ind., he still continued farming, but made a specialty of building and contracting, into which he finally drifted, having branched out into this line through his knowledge of cabinet-making and the carpenter's trade. During his later years he retired from active life, dying on the homestead farm in Indiana in his eighty-ninth year. Throughout life he had enjoyed the consolation of religion and was a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he served as deacon for many years. Politically he was a Republican. In his young manhood he married Miss Rachel Voorhies, who like himself was a native of Kentucky and a descendant of Holland-Dutch ancestors on the paternal side. Her father, John Voorhies, who was a native of New Jersey, removed to Mercer county, Ky., following farming there some time before his removal to Indiana in 1825. There he remained until 1860, when he moved to Allen county, Kans., but in 1873 settled once more in Indiana, and in that state he passed away. Mrs. Covert died on the Kansas homestead when in her eighty-third year.

Of the five children who comprised the parental family George W. was next to the youngest and is now the only one living. He was born August 18, 1833, on the Indiana homestead near Franklin, Johnson county, and received such meager educational training as the schools of the time and locality afforded. In brief, his education was limited to three months in the pay schools during winters, the remainder of the year being given to his father in caring for the farm. Taking advantage of the opportunity to become a landowner by the opening up of government land in Kansas he went thither in 1860 and entered land in Allen county in the vicinity of Carlyle, carrying on a farm for a number of years. As late as 1863 there was only one physician in Carlyle and he determined to prepare himself for the profession and open an office in his home town. During the years 1864-65 he attended Rush Medical College, Chicago, Ill., and thereafter returned to Carlyle and began the practice of medicine, in addition to which he also practiced dentistry. A brief interruption in his practice occurred in 1865, during which time he served in the Kansas Militia, but when his services were no longer necessary he returned to Carlyle and resumed his practice. The strain of overwork began to impair his health and he gave up his practice in Kansas and returned to Indiana in 1873, locating in Whiteland, where he soon regained his former vigor. It was not long after this that he opened an office in Whiteland, following his profession there for a number of years, or until 1887, when he located in Franklin, that state, there continuing the practice of medicine until 1894. His identification with the west and more particularly with Long Beach dates from May, 1894, coming here at that time to engage in the practice of dentistry with his son, he himself having charge of the plate work. Dr. Covert is an enthusiastic believer in the future of Long Beach and has demonstrated this belief by investing quite heavily in city real estate. He bought a large tract on American avenue and Sixteenth street, known as the Covert tract, which he subdivided, and all of which is now practically sold. He also owns property on the corner of Third and Locust streets, upon which are two residences, one of which he occupies with his family.

In 1854 Dr. Covert was married to Miss Mary E. LaGrange, a native of Indiana, and five children have been born to them, as follows: E. L., a real-estate dealer in Long Beach; Carrie C., Mrs. Lynn, also of this city; Electa, the wife of J. D. Whiteside, and resident of Franklin, Ind.; Mollie, the wife of J. Sharp, of Long Beach; and A. T., a graduate of the dental profession, who is now in the employ of the Townsend Dayman Company. The family attend the Presbyterian Church of Long Beach, in which Dr. Covert and his son A. T. are ruling elders, and politically he is a Prohibitionist.

FRED P. BALDWIN. During his three years' residence in Long Beach Fred P. Baldwin has shown his enterprise and progressiveness as a citizen, and since his election to the office of city clerk has proven himself an exceptionally efficient official. He was born February 22, 1866, in Watertown, N. Y., the son of Fred A. and Ellen (Perry) Baldwin, the former having been born on the Atlantic, and the latter of Welsh descent and a native of Utica, N. Y. The father was reared until his sixteenth year in England and after coming to America learned the plumber's and tinner's trade in Utica, and was a resident of Watertown, N. Y., from 1866 until the time of his death in 1892, his wife surviving him three years.

Of their three children Fred P. was the oldest. He was educated in the public schools of New York, and in 1885 graduated from the Watertown high school. Possessed of unusual musical talent he had in the meantime become a proficient pianist and after the completion of his school work he traveled for two years with a light opera company. After giving up this line of work he went to Ticonderoga, N. Y., and was for a short time secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association there, but soon resigned and returned to Watertown, where in 1888 he secured an appointment as a sub-carrier in the postoffice. A year later he was made a regular carrier and continued at that employment for fourteen years. Then deciding that a change would be beneficial he decided to come to California and in 1903 located in Long Beach. He secured bookkeeping positions successively with Bailey Brothers, the Long Beach Ice Company, and the Long Beach Hardware Company, resigning from the latter position after his election to the city clerkship April 9, 1906. He was nominated on the Independent ticket and the good reputation he had gained among his fellow citizens was then evidenced by the fact that he received a majority of three hundred and seventy-nine votes.

Upon April 16 the oath of office was administered and he will continue to fill the position to which he was elected for two years from that date.

In Watertown, N. Y., Mr. Baldwin was united in marriage with Miss Maud M. Greene, who was born in Belleville, N. Y., and they have become the parents of one son, Raymond F. Both Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin are active members of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Baldwin keeps up his piano practice and is considered one of the most talented musicians in Long Beach. Fraternally he is affiliated with numerous prominent lodges, among them being the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Eagles, Knights of Pythias and Royal Court. In national politics he advocates Republican principles, in local affairs believing that men are more important than platforms in securing good and efficient government. He is interested in military affairs and while in New York he was a member of the Thirty-ninth Separate Company, N. G. S. N. Y., in which he enlisted the second time, serving in all eleven years or until the law excluding government employes from the national guard ranks went into effect. As a man of well-rounded interests and talents he is held in the highest respect and esteem throughout the community.

JAMES CHRISTOPHER HASKINS. The ancestry of the Haskins family is traced to England, the emigrating ancestor having established the name upon American soil in the colonial days of our history. Massachusetts was the state chosen by this ancestor and there the name flourished for many generations, members of the family participating in the Revolutionary war. Lafayette Haskins was a farmer throughout his entire life. The patriotism of the family was his by inheritance, demonstrated by his service in the war of 1812. In his family was a son, Caleb R., who was born in Assonet, Mass.; in young manhood he entered upon a sea-faring life and in time became master of a whaler out of New Bedford. He came to his death by drowning in 1852. His wife, formerly Jane Slocum, a native of Massachusetts, born on the Island of Cuttyhunk, one of the Elizabeth Group, was a daughter of Frederic Slocum, and died in New Bedford in 1853.

The birth of two children blessed the union of Captain Haskins and his wife, the younger of whom, James Christopher Haskins, was born in New Bedford, Mass., January 23, 1842. He was reared in his native town, receiving his preliminary education in the common schools of that place, and later attending the schools of Providence, R. I. Trained to habits of industry and self-reliance, at the age of sixteen years, he was apprenticed in Providence to learn the jeweler's trade, remaining so occupied until the breaking out of the Civil war, when on the 16th of April, 1861, he volunteered in the First Rhode Island Detached Militia Company under Colonel Burnside. He was mustered in at Washington May 2, and with his company was immediately ordered to the front, participating in the battle of Bull Run. His three months' service expiring on August 2, he re-enlisted as sergeant on the 28th of that month in the Third Rhode Island Heavy Artillery, his service continuing until the close of the war. He participated in the battle of Hilton Head on November 7, 1861, Skull Creek, Pocotaligo, Ahista, Secessionville, James Island, and many other important engagements. For thirteen months he was located on the extreme point of Morris Island, at Fort Gregg, engaged in the bombarding of Fort Sumter, S. C. Upon the evacuation of Charleston he was the first man to place the colors over the city, planting the flag over the old postoffice at the foot of Broad street, assisted by four of Company B of the Fifty-fourth Regiment of Massachusetts, who volunteered to row him over to the mainland. During the war he received several wounds. While on Morris Island at Fort Gregg the explosion of a two hundred pound Parrot gun threw him over a gun carriage and injured his spine in such a way as to cause partial paralysis in later life. At Pocotaligo he received a gun thrust in the forehead and at James Island a pistol ball in the chin. He was mustered out of service at Providence, R. I., August 24, 1865.

Returning again to the jewelry business Mr. Haskins engaged in this work until the failure of eyesight induced him to seek other employment. He secured a position as traveling salesman for his cousin, W. L. Douglas, the well-known eastern shoe manufacturer, with whom he remained until his retirement from active business life because of failing health. He made his home in Providence for some years, later in Brockton and finally in Boston, from which city in 1902 he came to Long Beach, Cal., where he has since resided. His home is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Addie Clark, of Springfield, Mass. She also boasts an ancestry of the best blood of New England. John Clark, mate of the ship Ann, having landed in Plymouth in 1620. A descendant, John Clark, served in the Revolutionary war and another John Clark served in the war of 1812—all men of patriotism, earnestness of purpose and of citizenship that meant no little in the upbuilding of the nation. Mrs. Haskin's father, Norman Clark, also born in Springfield, Mass., was a farmer by occupation, and like his ancestors, a patriot, serving in Company C, Twenty-ninth Regiment Massachusetts Infantry, during the Civil war, his death occurring on Ship Island in 1862. His wife, formerly Maria Baker, was a native of Massachusetts, her death also occurring in that state. They were the parents of seven children, of whom four are now living, another son, Charles H., also serving in the Civil war in a Massachusetts cavalry regiment. By a former marriage Mrs. Haskins is the mother of one son, E. N. Whittaker, a manufacturer of paper. By her marriage with Mr. Haskins she also has one son, Waldo F. She is a member of the Women's Relief Corps and the Ladies of the G. A. R., Daughters of Veterans of the Civil war and the Bess Ross Society. Mr. Haskins is a member of Long Beach Post No. 181, G. A. R., and both himself and wife are identified with the First Congregational Church of this city. Mr. Haskins is a Republican and gives a most earnest support to the principles he endorses. He is a citizen of worth and merits the esteem in which he is held.

HENRY Z. GILL, M. D., LL. D. Varied experiences and a cosmopolitan knowledge of the world, acquired through travels in the old world and the new, and through the strenuous career of an army surgeon, give to Dr. Gill a distinctive position among the physicians of Southern California, where he has made his home since the autumn of 1902. Although he was attracted to this section by its charms of climate and scenery, he has not allowed his life to sink into passive enjoyment of surrounding comforts, but has given of his best to the promotion of local interests. Perhaps in no other respect has he accomplished as much good as through his efforts to secure a thorough knowledge of the laws of health on the part of the people. That "prevention is better than cure" is one of his theories, and acting upon that sentiment he has maintained an interest in the construction of public school buildings in order that the ventilation and the lighting facilities may be conducive to the health of the children. In the latter part of 1902 he strongly advocated the establishing of city sewers, and also gave his most earnest efforts toward securing the sanitary systems and conditions which now exist.

The early years of Dr. Gill's life were associated with a farm in Bucks county, Pa., where he was born October 6, 1831, and where he passed the uneventful years of boyhood. On the completion of an academic education he engaged in teaching school in Pennsylvania. After going to Columbus, Ohio, in 1854, he followed teaching in Franklin county, and in the leisure hours of school work he took up the study of medicine with R. J. Patterson, M. D., of Columbus, as preceptor. Later he attended one and one-half courses of lectures at Starling Medical College, and then completed his course in Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, from which he was graduated in 1857. From that time until the Civil war he engaged in professional practice at Columbus, Ohio, where he gained a reputation as a rising young surgeon and physician.

An appointment as assistant surgeon in the Eleventh Ohio Infantry was tendered Dr. Gill in April, 1861, and he accepted for a service of three months, but in July again enlisted, this time for three years. In July of 1862 he resigned his commission and returned to Columbus. Immediately afterward he accepted an appointment as surgeon of the Ninety-fifth Ohio Infantry, where he remained in active service until May of 1864, thus giving the State of Ohio three years of active professional labors in her regiments. In July, 1864, he was commissioned surgeon of United States Volunteers by Abraham Lincoln, after a brief service as an assistant surgeon with the same troops, and he continued to hold his commission until the war closed and he was mustered out in August of 1865. During the first year of the war he was stationed in West Virginia, and during the second year participated in the campaigns in Kentucky, where he was captured at Richmond and imprisoned for six weeks within the enemy's lines. In January, 1863, he entered upon the Vicksburg campaign, where he participated in that long and terrible ordeal memorable in the annals of history. During the following year he was a participant in the Atlanta campaign, later was in the Savannah campaign and through the Carolinas, his service being in the capacity of surgeon-in-chief of the First Division, Twentieth Army Corps, which position he held until the close of the war.

Following the stirring years of the war Dr. Gill traveled through Missouri and purchased property in Kansas City. Later he took a complete course of lectures in Jefferson Medical College. In May of 1866 he left the United States for professional study in Europe, where he spent two years in the hospitals of Berlin, Vienna, Breslau and Prague, and then visited Paris, where he spent five months during 1867-68, and after a month in London crossed the ocean to the United States. Opening an office in St. Louis in 1868, he not only conducted a private practice, but also lectured in the St. Louis Medical College. In 1873 he removed to Jerseyville, Ill., where he had a large and profitable practice from that year until 1881, but removed then to Chester in order to enter upon his duties as surgeon of the Southern Illinois penitentiary. In that position he was remarkably successful. Prior to his appointment the records showed the death rate to be thirty-seven for every one thousand prisoners, but under his supervision and insistence upon sanitary methods the rate was reduced to five per thousand.

After a service as surgeon for two years and four months Dr. Gill resigned and became professor of surgery in the medical department of the University of Wooster, in Cleveland, Ohio, where he delivered five courses of lectures. Owing to his health becoming affected by the climate, he resigned in 1886 and went to Kansas, where he established a large practice at Eldorado and continued there for seven years. From 1893 until 1902 he had his office at Pittsburg, Kans., where he became widely known as a specialist in treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. Prior to this, in 1886, he had published the largest work in the English language treating on diphtheria, croup and tracheotomy. After a very successful career in Kansas, he removed to California in order to avail himself of the climatic advantages offered by this region, and extended travels in the state upon a tour of investigation ended in his decision to settle at Long Beach, where he makes his home at No. 338 Pacific avenue, and has established a practice extending through the city and surrounding country. Since coming to this location he has erected five houses, all of which have been sold, and he has also bought and sold real estate in the city.

In Columbus, Ohio, in April, 1869, Dr. Gill married Miss Mattie C. Carpenter, native of that city. They are the parents of a daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth McAlister of Long Beach, and a son, R. F., who has charge of the Long Beach water works. The family are identified with the Methodist Episcopal denomination, of which the doctor has been a member for fifty years, and in the work of which he has been a generous contributor. In politics he has always been a believer in Republican principles, but no trace of partisanship has shown in his acts; in every relation he has been the fair-minded, impartial citizen. In Masonry he has affiliated with the blue lodge, chapter and commandery, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Grand Army Post No. 181, California and Nevada Department, of which he was surgeon and now ranks as senior vice-commander. During his residence in Kansas he served for two years as secretary of the state board of health, and since coming to the coast he was for two years surgeon of the Southern California Veterans' Association. In the course of his long professional life he has accumulated a large library of valuable medical works, as well as many other volumes, and this library he has donated to the Southern California University, the medical department receiving the bulk of the volumes. Through this gift the information he gleaned in former years of thoughtful study may now be acquired by others, who in their turn may enter upon careers as active and helpful as his own has been to the world.

ARTHUR L. PARMLEY. Among the younger generation of business men in Long Beach is Arthur L. Parmley, who as a member of the Young-Parmley Investment Company has been engaged in the real-estate business here since October of 1905. Many of the large tracts in and around Long Beach have been bought and subdivided by this company, and if their accomplishments in the past can be taken as a criterion of what lies before them their success is assured, for both members of the firm possess those qualities which make for success in any calling, push and determination.

Mr. Parmley is a native of Wisconsin, born in Janesville, Rock county, May 28, 1874, the son of R. G. and Fannie A. (Dann) Parmley, born in Ohio and Wisconsin respectively, and the latter of English descent on both sides of the family. Though born and reared in Ohio, R. G. Parmley became one of the early settlers in the commonwealth of Wisconsin, and for many years was a merchant in Janesville. From there he removed to Sioux Falls, S. Dak., and there as in Wisconsin followed merchandising for many years. In 1904, however, he disposed of his interests there and has since lived retired in Long Beach, with his wife enjoying the rest and quiet which their means will permit, to which is added the still greater comfort which invariably comes to those who have lived worthily.

Arthur L. Parmley was quite a young child at the time of the family removal to Sioux Falls, so that he has little or no knowledge of his birthplace from personal recollection. He passed a creditable school life in the institutions of learning in Sioux Falls, after which he took a course in the State University at Vermilion. It was with this training as his stock in trade that he entered the business world in 1890, becoming a messenger in the Union National Bank of Sioux Falls. From this humble position he rose steadily until he was numbered among the stockholders of the institution and was made assistant cashier. In 1894 he became interested in the life insurance business, in May of that year accepting the position of superintendent with the Northwestern of Milwaukee, having entire charge of the agencies in North and South Dakota for four years. In the mean time he had become interested in mining in the west, locating in Shasta county, Cal., in 1902, in that year opening what was known as the Mountain Lion Mine, located not far from old Shasta. There he established a five-stamp mill which is still in operation under Mr. Parmley's ownership, although he does not now give it his personal supervision, having removed to Long Beach in October of 1905 to engage in the real-estate business with Mr. Young. One year later, in October, 1906, the company was incorporated as the Young-Parmley Investment Company.

While in Sioux Falls Mr. Parmley was made a Mason and it was there also that he joined the Knights of Pythias. Since locating in Long Beach he has become identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and is also a member of the Cosmopolitan Club, a social organization. Politically he is a believer in Republican principles, and in his religious belief he is a Congregationalist.

CHARLES A. WEIDENFELLER. Persuaded to come to California through the vivid descriptions given of its mild, health-invigorating climate, its rarely beautiful scenery, and its many special attractions as a place of residence, Charles A. Weidenfeller located in Los Angeles county in 1904, and is now living in his pleasant home, Oakhurst, in Glendale. His enthusiasm in regard to the merits of Southern California as an abiding place has been in no wise dimmed, its peculiar charms being enhanced upon a more intimate acquaintance with its natural resources, while the improvements that are constantly being carried on render it an ideal garden spot, a veritable haven of rest, comfort and happiness.

Although born on the high seas, while his parents were en route to America, Mr. Weidenfeller is a native of America, his father, John Weidenfeller, of Newark, N. J., being an American citizen. Brought up in Newark, N. J., he completed the course of study in the public schools of that city, and afterwards there served an apprenticeship at the jeweler's trade. Turning then his attention to mechanical pursuits, he entered one of the largest sash and blind factories of Newark as a workman, and during the twelve years that he was employed he became an expert and skilled mechanic. Giving up his position in the factory he was two years associated with the Provident Savings Life Assurance Company of New York City. After retiring from this company he became similarly connected with the John Hancock Life Insurance Company of Boston, remaining there for two years. Being then offered a position with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York City, he accepted it, and for twenty years was its general agent, with headquarters in either New York or Chicago, being first located in the former city, then from 1883, until 1893, in Chicago, and from 1893 until 1897 in New York. In the latter year, having, by superior business tact and ability and wise financial management, acquired a competency, he sold out his renewals to the company and retired from active business.

Since retiring Mr. Weidenfeller has devoted much of his time to looking after his Chicago interests, and for a few years superintended the management of his country seat in Allegan county, Mich., where he had one hundred and sixty acres of land. He kept fine trotting horses, and, as a fad, became interested in raising Hereford cattle. This beautiful farm he disposed of, and it was subsequently, while spending the summer at Macatawa Park, Mich., that he met two gentlemen from California who praised the state, its beauties and advantages to such purpose that Mr. Weidenfeller was filled with a desire to come here, and having taken up his residence here he never regretted it. The first few months of his life in this county he spent traveling about, making his headquarters in Ocean Park. In passing through Glendale he saw the estate on which he now lives, and, being conquered by its charms, bought it, added many improvements, and gave to it the unique name of Oakhurst.

Mr. Weidenfeller married, in Chicago, Ill., Celia M. Hammon, who was reared and educated in Michigan, where her father, James D. Hammon, still resides.

N. C. NIELSEN. As proprietor of the men's furnishings business at No. 208 Pine street, Long Beach, N. C. Nielsen is known as one of the most prosperous and successful merchants in this thriving city, which is noted for the energy and enterprise of its business men. Mr. Nielsen is a native of Wensyssel, Denmark, born July 18, 1851, the son of a Danish farmer. After acquiring a good common-school education, at the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to a merchant tailor for three years, and immediately upon the expiration of his term of service started in business for himself, carrying it on until 1883, when he came to America. The first year in this country he spent in Mt. Morris, Ill., and in 1884 he located in Abilene, Kans., where for three years he was occupied at his trade, then continued the same occupation for a number of years in Herington, that state. His residence in Long Beach dates from 1904, when he established the business which he now conducts.

May 8, 1879, occurred the marriage of Mr. Nielsen to Miss Kirsten Kathrine Hansen, and of this union three children were born: Niels H., who is a partner in his father's business; Hannah, a talented music teacher, and an infant who died aged six days. Mr. Nielson has always taken an especially active interest in church work and is one of the most earnest and enthusiastic leaders in the Progressive Brethern Church (Dunkard), being at the present time chairman of the board of trustees of the Los Angeles Church of that denomination at No. 412 East Miles street, the building of which was largely due to his self-sacrificing zeal; he is a member and treasurer of the state mission board, and a member and representative of the California district of the national mission board of his church. He is also superintendent of the Sunday-school and is a valued contributor to the denominational papers, discussing especially the tithe question, and through this was organized the Tenth Legion of the church, of which he is secretary. As a man of unimpeachable character in private or public, social, business or civic life, he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

SYLVAIN BERGES was born in Basses-Pyrenees, France, March 1, 1855, and is the son of Jean and Mariana (Bambalero) Berges, both of whom died in France. The father, who was a builder by trade, was the only son and his sister, Mrs. Bambalero, died in Los Angeles.

Mr. Berges was educated in the common schools and in 1874, at the age of nineteen years, he came to the United States. Until 1879 he was employed in the dairy business, and then, having come to California, he engaged in the same line of work in San Francisco. In 1881 he came to Los Angeles and was in the employ of John Lankershim on his canyon ranch in San Diego county for two years, and later on his Palton ranch in San Fernando valley. He then rented for six years an eighty-acre ranch on Jefferson street, where he engaged in farming. In 1889 he married Anna Riviere, who was born in Los Angeles, the daughter of Bertrand and Sacramento Ruiz, pioneers of Los Angeles. She died in 1895, leaving five children: Marie Louise, who died in 1895; Clara, Mrs. Eselon; Pierre, Ellen and Cecelia, all at home.

All these years Mr. Berges has engaged in farming and gardening and owns thirty acres of land on west Jefferson and Arlington which has now become very valuable. His political principles coincide with those of the Republican party. He is a man of worth and integrity and is much esteemed by all for his many noble and liberal acts.

ADOLPH LEUZINGER. Since establishing his home in Southern California Mr. Leuzinger has operated large tracts of rented land and since 1891 he has also been a land-owner, his first purchase consisting of eighty acres situated four and one-half miles southwest of Inglewood near the postoffice of Wiseburn. To his original purchase he has added from time to time until now his landed possessions aggregate three hundred and sixty acres, valued at $200 per acre, and in addition to operating this large tract he continues to cultivate rented lands. Where Inglewood now stands there was once a field of grain and he plowed the ground there and placed it under cultivation, little dreaming that soon a beautiful village would spring up on that site.

The Leuzinger family is of Swiss origin, and Adolph was born in that republic April 13, 1859, being a son of John J. and Verena (Durst) Leuzinger, natives of the same country. His father, who was the owner of a small farm in his native land, sold out in 1866 and crossed the ocean to the United States. While Kansas was still sparsely settled and only partly improved he established his home in Dickinson county, where he took up a homestead claim. Settlers were few and buffaloes still abounded on the plains, as well as other animals now seldom seen. When the railroad was built through his county he lost his land and was obliged to buy it a second time from the railway company, a misfortune which took from him the earnings of years. Until the fall of 1883 he remained in Kansas, but at that time he brought his wife to California and settled at Hyde Park. The ranch which he purchased from General Rosecrans consisted of one hundred and sixty acres, all of which remains intact with the exception of five acres, forming a valuable property. Mr. Leuzinger died January 14, 1906, having attained a good old age. Of the eight children born to himself and wife all but two are living; two daughters, Elizabeth and Fannie, are in Los Angeles; Andrew resides at Hyde Park; Mary in Port Costa; and John A. in Pennsylvania.

When the family came to the United States Adolph Leuzinger was a child of seven years, hence he retains only disconnected recollections of the land of his birth. As a boy he attended the country schools in Kansas and assisted in placing his father's farm under cultivation. In the spring of 1882 he came to California on a tour of inspection with a view to purchasing land for his father, and the result of his investigations was the purchase of the ranch still owned by the family. Shortly after his arrival he rented land owned by Daniel Freeman and afterward increased his rentings until he operated one thousand acres of grain and hay land. For four years he rented from Mr. Freeman and later rented from the gentleman who bought the property from the first owner, at this writing renting an entire section in one body. In 1893 he married Emma L. Bollinger, who was born and reared in Wisconsin, and by whom he has three children, John A., Louis Edward and Arthur Theodore. In political belief Mr. Leuzinger stanchly upholds the principles of the Democratic party, but he takes no part in local affairs aside from voting the regular ticket and giving his influence toward such of his friends as may be candidates for office. Political offices he has always declined, his only position having been in the interests of education, when he served as school trustee for a number of years. Fraternally he holds membership with Redondo Lodge No. 328, F. & A. M., at Redondo, also the Royal Arcanum, in both of which, as also in general social circles, he has a large number of friends drawn to him by his integrity, energy and high principles of character.

WILLIAM M. SNUFFIN. The middle era of the nineteenth century that brought thousands of gold seekers across the plains in search of fortunes in the mines of the west and that for the first time awakened within the spirit of the east a desire to colonize the regions along the coast, was the period that saw the Snuffin family established in California. During 1852 Lyne Starling Snuffin, a native of Iowa, crossed the plains with a throng of emigrants in "prairie schooners" drawn by oxen, and immediately after his arrival he engaged in mining, however, without any special success. Soon he turned his attention to raising stock and grain, and for years he cultivated a farm in Mendocino county, but in 1876 he removed to Santa Paula, Ventura county, where he engaged in the hotel business at first, and then resumed agricultural pursuits. With his wife, who was Emily Dukes, a native of Illinois, he still makes his home in Santa Paula. His father, Martin Snuffin, who was a native of Philadelphia and a pioneer farmer of Iowa, came to California in the latter '70s, and remained in Los Angeles county until his death.

Among the five children of L. S. Snuffin the gentleman whose name introduces this article was third in order of birth, and he was born near Hopland, Mendocino county, this state, February 19, 1863. When the family removed to Santa Paula he was a lad of twelve years and afterward he attended the schools of that town for a few years. His time was given to his father until he became of age, after which he started out to earn his own livelihood, his first work being that of teaming from Santa Paula to neighboring points. Later he engaged in farming near Somis, where he leased about two hundred and twenty-five acres under cultivation to beans and beets. In August of 1904 he started a feed and wood yard on the Savier road, and in August of the following year he erected on the same road a building 44x100 feet in dimensions, where he now conducts a livery, feed and sales business, the same being known as the Valley Stable. The barn is equipped with first-class vehicles and the necessary horses, and has proved an important addition to the business enterprises of the locality.

An attractive residence in Oxnard, on the corner of E and Second streets, was erected by Mr. Snuffin a few years ago, and forms a pleasant home for his wife and three children, Edwin, Amelia and Merle. Mrs. Snuffin formerly was Miss Benetta Halbert, and was born in Alabama, but came to California in girlhood and at the time of her marriage was residing in Santa Paula. She is connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church and has contributed generously of time and means to the forwarding of its work. While living in Santa Paula Mr. Snuffin was an active member of the Native Sons of the Golden West, and at this writing he affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Fraternal Brotherhood. In national politics he votes with the Democratic party, but in local affairs he gives his support to the men whom he considers best qualified to represent the people, irrespective of their party allegiance. While as a rule declining official candidacies, his interest in educational matters led him to accept the position of school trustee and he served in that capacity in the Central school district.

WILLIAM CHARLES SPROUL was born in the town of China, Kennebec county, Me., April 20, 1858, being the third oldest of a family of eight children born to William H. and Marshie Marcella (Putnam) Sproul. The father was a native of China, Me., and was engaged in farming there until 1876, when he brought his family to California and now resides on his farm at Harper Station, Orange county. The mother was born in Cavendish, Vt., and is a great-granddaughter of General Israel Putnam of Revolutionary fame, whose courage and bravery is known to every school child in America, having read the story of his escapade with the wolf.

William Charles Sproul was reared on the New England farm and attended the public schools. In 1876 he came to Norwalk and for a few years assisted his father in clearing a farm in the days when the country that is now so wealthy and prosperous was one of ups-and-downs and might well be termed hard-scrabble. When he reached his majority he followed mining in Arizona and Oregon and in the latter state was married to Miss Louisa Frey, a native of Minnesota, and a daughter of Charles and Fredricka Frey. After spending six years in Grant county, Oregon, he returned to Southern California in 1886 and the next year he purchased his present place of twenty acres, then wild and unimproved. He went to work with an energy and will to make a success and now has a vineyard of ten acres and three acres of alfalfa and the balance devoted to deciduous and citrus trees, The place is located two miles southwest of Norwalk and is well improved with commodious and comfortable buildings and a flowing artesian well. They are the parents of seven children, namely: Charles, Edward, Herman, Eugene, Laura, Evelyn and Ada. Mr. Sproul was made a Mason in Cañon City Lodge No. 22, Oregon, and is now a member of Norwalk Lodge No. 315, F. & A. M., was a charter member of the Fraternal Brotherhood, Norwalk, and served as its first president and himself and his wife are members of the order of Eastern Star. Mr. Sproul has taken an active part in educational matters and the upbuilding of the schools to a high standard, hence it is little wonder that the citizens of Norwalk district have elected him as school trustee and he faithfully discharges his duties. Mr. Sproul is liberal and public-spirited and there is not an enterprise tending to promote the importance of his neighborhood that does not receive his hearty support.

JONATHAN H. SHARPS. An enterprising citizen of Newport Beach is named in the person of Jonathan H. Sharps, whose liberality and progressive spirit have resulted in material development for the place. He was born in Iowa, near Ottumwa, January 8, 1843. The family, originally known as Sharpe, came from England and settled in Parkersburg, W. Va., where members served in the Revolutionary war and again in the war of 1812. His father, Jackson J. Sharps, was born in Virginia February 15, 1816, and became a settler of Iowa in 1838. He was a blacksmith by trade, and he followed this in conjuction with farming for some time, finally establishing a blacksmith shop in Ottumwa, and later removing to Worth county, Mo., where he engaged at the prosecution of his trade for the period of twenty-two years. His last years were spent with his son in California, his death occurring in Newport Beach December 25, 1904. He was a Mason fraternally and in religion belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he was a stanch Democrat. His wife was formerly Catherine Parsons, a native of Virginia and the descendant of English ancestry. She died in Jefferson county, Iowa, December 23, 1859. They were the parents of six children, three sons and three daughters, of whom two sons and two daughters are now living: Celia Ann, wife of J. J. Green, of Newport Beach; Jonathan H., of this review; C. D., located in Eldon, Iowa; Nellie Miller, who died in Missouri; Virginia, Mrs. Folan, of Worth county, Mo.; and John Emory, who died in Newport Beach in 1898.

Jonathan H. Sharps was reared in Iowa and educated in the public school in the vicinity of his home. Upon attaining his majority he secured employment to drive a team across the plains to Montana, for Teddy Wood and Templeton of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, the time consumed in this journey being from May 14 to July 14; there were but nine wagons and fourteen people in the train, but they succeeded in making their way to their destination without serious trouble. He returned to his home by boat on the Missouri river. In January of the following year (1865) he outfitted in Omaha and May 17 again set out across the plains, this time driving a freight team for the Crayton Brothers, bound for Montana. There were thirty teams and seven yoke of oxen to each train and a large number of people in the train, notwithstanding which they had considerable trouble with the Indians, losing one man while outside of camp. They arrived in Salt Lake City, October 9, and from that point journeyed on to Virginia City, Mont., reaching there December 12, and there spending the winter. In February they continued their trip to Helena and from that point Mr. Sharps went to Confederate Gulch and engaged in mining. He followed a similar occupation on Engine Creek and then went to Gallatin valley, near Bozeman and engaged in farming and dairying for the period of four years. In 1869 he disposed of this interest and came to California by horse-teams, spending three months in Sacramento and thence coming on to Southern California, where he located at San Juan Capistrano, Orange county, purchasing ten acres and there acting as superintendent for the stage stock for Seeley & Wright. In 1872 he located at Santa Ana, Orange county, and the ensuing year was spent in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad in forming the grade between Florence and Downey in Los Angeles county. In January, 1874, he removed to San Bernardino county and engaged in the dairy business for the period of four years, when he returned to Santa Ana and followed general farming occupations. Later he was again employed by the Southern Pacific to grade between Santa Ana and Oceanside, and was active in grading for the town site of San Juan by the Sea, building the Pioneer Hotel, which he conducted successfully until 1890. In the last named year he located in Newport Beach in the employ of McFadden & Co., until they sold out, when he moved his hotel from San Juan by the Sea to this place, and here he conducted this enterprise until recently. He is the prime mover and he and his wife the sole owners of the Newport Beach Water Company, which was established and incorporated July 14, 1905, Robert McFadden being president of the concern, Mr. Sharps vice-president and M. J. Sharps secretary. The water was developed by wells in Santa Ana valley four miles northwest of Newport Beach, the pumping plant being equipped with a thirty-five horse power engine with a Byron Jackson Centrifugal pump, with a capacity of seventy-five inches. There is now an ample supply of water furnished to East Newport, Balboa and Bay Island Club, both for domestic purposes as well as irrigation. Mr. Sharps' son, Frank C., is the engineer in charge of this plant. Mr. Sharps was also one of the organizers and is still a stockholder in the State Bank of Newport, as well as being interested with other upbuilding movements of the place.

In Gospel Swamp, Orange county, Cal., Mr. Sharps was united in marriage, July 4, 1876, with Miss May J. Salter, a native of Minnesota, and born of this union are two children: Frank C., engineer for the Newport Beach Water Company, and Ethel E., a merchant in Newport Beach. Fraternally Mr. Sharps is identified with the Odd Fellows of Santa Ana. In religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party and is deeply interested in the temperance cause.

LORING BOYD HASKELL. The earliest ancestor of the Haskell family of whom we have authentic knowledge is William Haskell, who was born in England in 1617. With his two older brothers, Roger and Mark, he crossed the ocean to America in 1632, settling in Beverly, Mass., but later, in 1643, removed to Gloucester, that state, where his death occurred in August, 1693. In direct line the ancestry is traced from William Haskell through William, Jacob, Zebulon, Zebulon and Benjamin, the latter the father of Loring Boyd Haskell. The English coat-of-arms bore the motto, Veritas vincit, Truth conquers, a saying which was not only handed down from one generation to another, but bore fruit in noble living and large accomplishments. Benjamin Haskell was born in the New England town which had been the home of his forefathers for so many generations, Gloucester, Mass., where he engaged first as a blacksmith, and later as a merchant. To himself and wife, formerly Mary Noble, a descendant of an old Virginia family, thirteen children were born, but of this large family only four are living. Three of the sons fought with valor in the Civil war and thus added lustre to the name. Otis L. served as an ensign in the United States navy from his native state, Massachusetts, and is now a resident of Denver, Colo; William B., who enlisted in the Twelfth Massachusetts Regiment, was wounded in the battle of Antietam, July 17, 1862, but recovered sufficiently to again take his place in the ranks and was one of the brave defenders of the union at the battle of Gettysburg; his life was sacrificed in his country's cause, for he did not long survive the wounds and exposure of warfare, his death occurring in Washington, D. C. in 1864. Howard Haskell volunteered his service in the Eighth Massachusetts Regiment and is now a resident of Gloucester, Mass.

The youngest of the parental family now living is Loring Boyd Haskell, who was born in Gloucester, Mass., March 25, 1850. Before he had reached his twentieth year he had completed his school training, having attended the public and high schools of his native town, and had entered the business world. Under the name of B. Haskell & Sons he was interested with his three brothers in the merchandise business which his father had established many years before. In connection with the business they had a large shipping trade, and ran a fleet of fishing schooners from Gloucester by way of Florida to Greenland.

After an association of about thirty-five years in business life in the east Mr. Haskell came to California in October of 1904, and was so well pleased with the outlook in Long Beach that he determined to remain and identify himself with the business life of the town. Associated with others he established in 1905 the Boston Realty Company, with offices at No. 243 Pine avenue, where a large business in the buying and selling of real estate has since been transacted.

In Gloucester, Mass., Mr. Haskell was united in marriage with Miss Lizzie M. Center, who like himself was a native of that state. The Center family was established in New England early in the seventeenth century, the first representative in this country leaving England and settling in Vermont. Mrs. Haskell's father, Capt. Addison Center, received his title in the Civil war as a member of the Eighth Massachusetts Regiment, Company G, and of Company E of the Twenty-third Regiment. His entire life was spent in Massachusetts, where he became known as a portrait artist of considerable note. His wife, formerly Mary Phelps, was also a native of Massachusetts, born in Salem, and a granddaughter of Judge Phelps. Six children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Haskell, the eldest of whom, Otis L., died when four years old; the others are, Mary C., Hannah Dorothea, Grace Otis, and Esther and Elizabeth, the two last named twins. In their religious leanings the family are Universalists. Fraternally Mr. Haskell belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is also a member of the Royal Arcanum, while in his political belief he is Independent, voting for the best man in question regardless of party name. While a resident of the east he was an influential member of the Board of Trade, president of an electric light company and a director of banks, and though a comparatively new comer to Long Beach has identified himself with the Chamber of Commerce and is one of its most interested members.

TILGHMAN DAVIS ANDREW. An early settler of Southern California, Mr. Andrew has witnessed the development of this section of the state and has given his best efforts toward its material upbuilding. He is the western representative of a proud old Maryland family, father, grandfather and great-grandfather as well as himself, all natives of Caroline county and each one occupying a place of prominence in the affairs of his day. Revolutionary stock bred patriotism and Melvin Andrew served in the war of 1812; his son Richard became a farmer in Maryland, where he spent his entire life. The latter married Rebecca Kamper, born in Dorchester, Md., a daughter of Samuel Kamper, a native of the same locality, a farmer in manhood, and a loyal soldier in the war of 1812. Mrs. Andrew survives and still makes her home in Maryland at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. She had nine children, of whom eight still survive; inheriting the stanch patriotism of a loyal ancestry two served in the Civil war, Isaac in the First Regiment Maryland Infantry, being wounded at the battle of Gettysburg, and James, a lieutenant in the First Delaware Cavalry, also being wounded at the famous battle mentioned above.

Tilghman Davis Andrew was born in Caroline county, Md., May 11, 1846, and was reared on the paternal farm until the year 1867. On the 25th of May of that year he enlisted in Company H, Thirty-second Regiment, United States Infantry, which was immediately sent via Panama to San Pedro, Cal., whence they marched one thousand miles to Tucson, Ariz., to engage in the Apache war, their combined force being four regiments, two of infantry and two of cavalry. They remained in that location for three years, Mr. Andrew being promoted to sergeant. When the government reduced the army in 1869 he was supernumerary and was transferred to Company H, Twenty-first Regiment, U. S. A., and in the same year was honorably discharged, after a service of two years and four months. Returning to California Mr. Andrew located in San Bernardino and entered the employ of John M. James, engaged in the sawmilling business. In that section he was married April 30, 1872, to Miss Sarah James, of Sunny Slope, Los Angeles county. Her father, John M. James, was born in Tennessee, married in Arkansas and came across the plains with ox-teams in 1852 and located in the vicinity of San Gabriel. He was a millwright and carpenter by trade, both of which he followed with considerable profit throughout Southern California. He engaged in whipsawing lumber in Saw Pit canon, which he sold for $100 per thousand. Going to San Bernardino he rented a saw mill from John Rowland and later purchased it outright and continued to conduct these interests in the mountains north of the city for many years. His death occurred in 1903, when nearly eighty-eight years of age. He was a man prominent in the early history of the state, having served efficiently as a member of the legislature for one term. He married Margaret Johnson, a native of Missouri, and daughter of Alfred Johnson, who also crossed the plains in 1852 and eventually died in El Monte. Mrs. James died in 1883 in San Bernardino. They were the parents of nine children, of whom five are now living, Mrs. Andrew, who was reared in San Bernardino, being the fifth in order of birth. She passed away February 22, 1907.

After a time Mr. Andrew left his work in the sawmill to engage in stock-raising on the Mojave desert, and after three years returned to San Bernardino to engage in farming pursuits. In 1882 he came to El Monte and followed farming on three hundred acres of the Baldwin ranch, remaining so employed until 1890, when he came to his present property, purchasing the same, which consists of ten acres set out in walnuts located on Mountain View and Andrew avenue, while at the same time he carries on general farming and grain-raising on other lands. He is a charter member of the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association and active in the development of this section.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew became the parents of the following children: Lillie, wife of David Wright, of Fullerton; Charles, a farmer of El Monte; Lawrence, Clarence and Stanley. Mr. Andrew supports the Christian Church, of which his wife was a devoted member, and politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party.

ROY C. SILVERNALE. Among the rising young business men of Santa Monica Roy C. Silvernale has attained a noteworthy position, and, as proprietor of one of the best and most modernly-equipped drug stores of the place, is carrying on a most successful trade, his patronage being extensive and lucrative. A son of Daniel and Catherine (Niver) Silvernale, he was born July 19, 1880, in Waukesha, Wis., where his parents were early settlers. His grandfather, Henry Silvernale, was a pioneer settler of New York state, and one of the most successful farmers of his neighborhood.

After his graduation from the Waukesha high school Roy C. Silvernale began the study of pharmacy, which he completed in Milwaukee, Wis., where he subsequently passed the state examination in a satisfactory manner. Thus equipped for his chosen work he worked awhile for the well-known firm of John A. Dadd & Son, obtaining a practical experience in the drug business, and then went to New London, Wis., where he was employed in a drug store for a year. Coming from there to California in search of a favorable opening, he located immediately in Santa Monica, purchasing his present drug store, at the corner of Third street and Utah avenue, where he is rapidly building up a substantial business. A young man of sterling integrity and ability, honest and square in all his dealings, he has gained the confidence and good will of the community and is already known as one of the most popular and esteemed residents of the place.

Politically Mr. Silvernale is a stanch Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

GUS P. DREHER. Three generations of the Dreher family have been identified with business affairs in the United States and two generations have been residents of California. It was Carl J. Dreher who founded the family in America, he having crossed the ocean from Germany in 1850 and settled in St. Clair county, Ill., where he built up a large mercantile business in a rural community. Following him came his son, P. J., also a native of Germany and a merchant of St. Clair county, where he carried on a general store at Lenzburg. From the latter town in 1885 he came to California and settled in Pomona, where he bought and sold real estate and improved an orange and lemon grove. Still active in business affairs, he acts as secretary and manager of the San Antone Fruit Exchange of Pomona and as president of the P. J. Dreher Company, Incorporated, having under his direct supervision sixty acres of orchard. The fact that he had no experience in horticulture prior to coming to California did not work to his detriment, for he has proved naturally adapted for such work and has gained a reputation for sagacious judgment in the growing and selling of fruit.

Of the marriage of P. J. Dreher and Miss Margaret Greibel, a native of St. Clair county, Ill., and now a resident of Pomona, Cal., there were born eight children, all but two of whom are still living. The fourth in order of birth was Gus P., who was born at Lenzburg, St. Clair county, Ill., March 12, 1876, and received his primary education in the Lenzburg schools. Accompanying the family to California in 1885, he afterward was a student in the grammar and high schools of Pomona, and was graduated from the latter in 1890, at the age of fourteen years. In seeking a means of livelihood he found employment on ranches and the range, but while still a mere youth he embarked in the livery business on Avenue Twenty-two, Los Angeles, where he remained a year, and then spent a similar period in a livery business at Covina. During June of 1904 he came to Oxnard and purchased the livery barn of Gordon Brothers, since which time he has conducted a livery, boarding and sales stable on A street near Fifth. Special attention is given to the boarding of horses and to the giving of prompt and efficient service along the lines of the business. In addition to the management of the barn, he is interested in the P. J. Dreher Company at Pomona. Since coming to Oxnard he has identified himself with the Citizens Club and has become associated with Masonry in the Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., in which he is an active worker and to whose philanthropic principles he gives stanch support. As yet he has not been active in party affairs, and the casting of a Republican ballot represents the limit of his participation in politics; however, he keeps posted concerning problems of national importance and is intelligently interested in measures tending to the permanent prosperity of the city, state and country.

JOHN A. PEARSON. After traveling extensively in the central and western states of the Union, John A. Pearson came to the wise conclusion that there were few sections of the country more desirable for an abiding place than Southern California, and has, accordingly, taken up his residence in San Pedro. He has been engaged in various occupations, and from a financial point of view has attained success, while his sterling integrity and honorable, upright manhood justly entitle him to the assured position which he holds in the estimation of the people of the community. A native of Sweden, he was born in the city of Lund, in the southern part of the country. His father, a farmer, spent his entire life in his native land, and of his family of four sons and one daughter, John A., the special subject of this sketch, is the only one that has crossed the Atlantic.

The second child of the parental household,

John A. Pearson was born December 14, 1858, and was brought up on the home farm. At the age of fifteen years he began working in a minor capacity in hotels, and two years later went to Copenhagen, where he was employed in a hotel for five years. Immigrating to the United States in 1879, he spent eighteen months in Chicago, Ill., and was afterwards in Eagle Grove, Iowa, for six months. Coming to the Pacific coast in 1881, he resided for two years in San Francisco, and then settled in Yakima county, Wash., where he ran a hotel and was also engaged in farming and stock-raising until 1892. During the ensuing four years he was a resident of Walla Walla, Wash., and then, in 1896, went to Butte City, Mont., remaining there until 1901, when he was employed in a hotel in Anaconda, Mont. Coming to California in December, 1902, he located first in Los Angeles, from there coming in 1903 to San Pedro, where he has since resided. At the corner of Eighth and Palos Verdes streets he erected the Brunswick, a large three-story apartment house, 45x45 feet, and in its management has been very successful. He has likewise had other interests, and has carried on contracting and building to some extent.

In Chicago, Ill., Mr. Pearson married Ellen P. Pearson, who was born near Helsingborg, Sweden, and into their household the following children have been born: Charles A., a real-estate dealer in San Pedro; Clyde, in Butte City, Mont.; Harry, in the United States navy; Oscar, with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; and Annie and Benjamin, living at home. True to the religious faith in which he was reared, Mr. Pearson is a Lutheran.

FRANK JOHNSON. One of the enterprising and progressive citizens of San Bernardino is Frank Johnson, who came to this state in 1884. He was born November 10, 1863, in Fredericktown, Mo., the son of N. and Martha (Mathews) Johnson, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Mississippi. The father settled in Missouri when a young man and followed the occupation of stone and brick-work contractor for many years. His last days were spent in the home of his son, Frank, at San Bernardino, and the mother is still living here, and is now eighty years old. Of the nine children born to them only three are now living.

The early education of Frank Johnson was received in the district schools of his native state and after school days were over he there learned the brick-mason's trade under the direction of his father. In 1884 he came to California and located at Colton, following his trade at that point for one year, then removing to San Bernardino, which place has ever since been his home. While in Colton he assisted in the erection of the Cuma building and other business houses, was at one time employed on the Santa Fe round house and the first shops built here, and in 1889 he began contracting for buildings independently. He has erected a number of the brick buildings in San Bernardino, including the Traction company's buildings, and has satisfactorily filled many contracts for brick and cement work in the city.

Mr. Johnson's marriage to Miss Martha Hicks, a native of Farmington, Mo., occurred in that state, and they are the parents of one child, Marvin. The family residence in an attractive one located at No. 778 Second street. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being past noble grand of his lodge, and politically he is a stanch believer in the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He is progressive and upright, well informed and agreeable, and has many friends in the city which has been his home for so many years.

JOHN MILNER. Prominent among those early settlers to whom the city of Los Angeles is deeply indebted for its wonderful development, rapid progress, and present prosperity, was the late John Milner. During his residence here of a quarter of a century, he was identified with the establishment of various beneficial enterprises, by his enthusiastic and able support contributing toward their success. He was recognized as a man of unquestioned integrity, straightforward and honest in all of his transactions, and as one of the most competent and successful financiers of his time. A native of Germany, he was born, February 5, 1834, in the city of Hanover, where he received a collegiate education.

Leaving the Fatherland at the age of nineteen years, John Milner emigrated to the United States, and for about five years resided in New York City. In 1858 he made his first trip to California, coming by way of the isthmus, and for two years was employed in mining. In 1860 he returned east, and on the breaking out of the Civil war entered the quartermaster's department, in which he served until the close of the conflict. Mr. Milner then came again to Los Angeles county, and, under Captain Swazey, served in the quartermaster's department in Wilmington for a number of years. Resigning from the army, he entered the employ of General Banning, becoming business agent for the Los Angeles and Wilmington Railroad Company, with headquarters in Wilmington. In 1874, giving up that position, Mr. Milner became associated with the management of the newly organized Farmers and Merchants' Bank, in Los Angeles, first as secretary, and then as cashier of the institution. Showing marked financial ability, he retained this responsible position until his sudden death, April 27, 1895. For twenty-one years Mr. Milner was connected officially with the bank, and by his superior business tact and judgment did much towards placing it among the strong and substantial financial institutions of Southern California. A man of rare ability, quick and accurate in discernment, he was ever equal to all emergencies, and exerted a good influence in business circles. Inherent in him were the qualities of a noble manhood, his unselfishness, amiability, broad views, and high-minded principles winning him the esteem and love of all with whom he was brought in contact. His death was a public loss.

Mr. Milner was a stanch Republican in politics, a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, a devoted Episcopalian, and belonged to the Masonic order. Mr. Milner was happy in his social home life. Mrs. Milner came to California in 1861, and since 1864 has been a resident of Los Angeles.

GILBERT A. BIXLER. As a cement block manufacturer and contractor Gilbert A. Bixler is ranked as one of the most successful young business men of San Bernardino, in which city he has spent the greater part of his life since early childhood. He was born November 13, 1878, in Portland, Mich., the son of Frank and Flora E. (Gilbert) Bixler, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Ohio. Throughout his lifetime the father followed the builder's trade, first in Portland, Mich., and later in Kendallville, Ind. Mrs. Bixler, who is still living, is the daughter of George W. Gilbert, an inventor and machinist residing at the present time in Kendallville.

In that city Gilbert A. Bixler, the oldest of the three children now living, spent his childhood days until 1886, when he came to San Bernardino and here received his education in the public and high schools. After the completion of his studies he learned the jeweler's trade under George Jordan and subsequently worked a short time in Los Angeles in the employ of H. J. Whitley, but found the work too confining and turned his attention to the study of stenography under Harry Luce. Neither of these occupations appealed to his inclinations, however, and as his greatest talents seemed to run along mechanical lines he took up stationary engineering under the tuition of W. S. Fryett. After obtaining his license he was employed as a stationary engineer in Los Angeles for a time, and came to San Bernardino as chief engineer for the San Bernardino Lumber & Box Co., retaining this position for six years. In the meantime his grandfather Gilbert had succeeded in interesting Mr. Bixler in the cement-block work and in 1904 he resigned his position as engineer to engage in his present business. Mr. Gilbert purchased a model concrete block machine and together with Mr. Bixler set it up and started to manufacture in a small way. When Mr. Gilbert returned to the east Mr. Bixler continued the work alone and soon began to engage in contracting on a large scale. The plant is located on the corner of Sixth and B streets. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and he is an ex-member of the International Association of Stationary Engineers. His marriage in San Bernardino united him with Miss Adah Flack, a native of Ohio. They are members of the Baptist Church and every uplifting enterprise receives their hearty support.

HENRY F. WEGNORI, the present building inspector of San Bernardino is one of the most enterprising citizens of this city. He has been the incumbent of the office ever since the adoption of the new city charter and at the same time conducts a business as general contractor and builder. Mr. Wegnori is of French descent, his grandfather, H. F., having been a native of Lyons, France, from which place he immigrated to New Orleans, La., when a young man and there became a captain on a steamboat plying on the Mississippi river. The father, John Wegnori, who was born in New Orleans and was also for a time a captain on Mississippi river boats, was later sent by a company of boat builders to Geneva, Switzerland, to build and run a pleasure boat on that famous lake. His wife, who was Annie Walther before her marriage, was a native of New Orleans, at which place, also, her death occurred. They were the parents of four children, Henry F. being the youngest of the family, and but three years old when taken by his father to Geneva, his birth having occurred at New Orleans, November 1, 1846. His father continued to operate the boat on Lake Geneva until his death, in 1865.

It was at Geneva, Switzerland, that Henry F. Wegnori was educated in the public schools, there learning besides the other necessary branches of study the French, German and Italian languages, becoming very proficient both as a reader and a writer. When the time arrived for him to choose a trade he decided to learn that of cabinet-maker and carpenter. In 1864, being anxious to see his native land, he located in New Orleans, and followed his trade for a couple of years. In 1866 he went to Ogden, Utah, and secured employment on the Central Pacific Railroad, which was then being built. He was occupied as carpenter and bridge builder and was present at the ceremonies when the golden spike was driven at Promontory Point, Utah, which signalized the completion of that part of the transcontinental railway.

In 1868 Mr. Wegnori removed to San Francisco and for ten years prosecuted his trade at that point. From there he removed to Virginia City, Nev., and engaged in contracting and building during the summers and mining in the winter time. After remaining there for five years he went to Truckee, where for some time he was foreman in a large planing mill. The year 1886 found him in San Bernardino as foreman of the West Coast Lumber Company's planing mill, which position he filled for three years and then commenced business as contractor and builder. Among other contracts which he secured were those for the erection of the Harbison and Levy residences and in all his work there is evident the hand of the expert builder.

Mr. Wegnori's marriage to Miss Hattie Dill, a native of Ohio, occurred in Los Angeles, and they own and occupy a fine residence in San Bernardino. Politically Mr. Wegnori is a strong advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. He is a member of several lodges, among them being the Knights of Pythias, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Masonic order. He was made a Mason in Pacific Lodge at San Francisco, and is now a member of Phoenix Lodge No. 185, F. & A. M., at San Bernardino, being also a member of Keystone Chapter, R. A. M.

PERCY A. JOHNSON. As one of the largest ranch owners in Southern California and assemblyman to the state legislature from his district, Percy A. Johnson is known as a man of considerable prominence in this state. He was born May 19, 1867, in Bangor, Me., the son of C. F. A. and Sarah (Jewett) Johnson, both of whom were born in Maine and died in California at advanced ages, the father being seventy-five and the mother seventy. There were four children in the family, two sons and two daughters, both of the latter now residing in this state. Percy A. Johnson received his education in the Bangor public schools and at the Hallowell (Me.) preparatory school and after the completion of his studies, although only a young boy, he came to San Diego county, Cal., arriving in January, 1884, and securing employment of ranchmen in that vicinity. From there he came to Fallbrook and continued in the same occupation for a time, then feeling that he had become thoroughly familiar with ranching in all its branches he began independent operations on a large scale, in 1896 moving to his present location, which is known as a part of the Magee & Johnson ranch. Mr. Johnson runs the thirty-five hundred acreage, the greater part of which is devoted to grain farming, while his partner has charge of the two thousand acre ranch upon which a large dairy is operated. They now have one hundred fine milch cows, but expect soon to increase the herd to three hundred head. The ranch is a highly improved property, having a barley crushing mill, an up-to-date pumping plant, and being fitted with all necessary modern machinery to carry on operations in the most scientific manner. The amount of money invested in stock, horses, mules and machinery is considerable.

In 1891 Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Marie A. Magee, three children blessing this union: Ynez, aged thirteen; Antonio, aged eleven and Josephine, aged five. The mother is a native Californian and a devout member of the Catholic Church. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is a member of Fallbrook Lodge No. 317, F. & A. M., which he served as grand master for five years; of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Fallbrook; and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at San Diego. As a member of the Republican party he takes a leading part in its councils and the confidence and esteem in which he is held by his fellow-citizens is demonstrated in his unsolicited nomination and election to the state assembly from the Eightieth district of California.

L. BERT MORGAN. The boyhood years of Mr. Morgan were passed upon a farm in Kansas, where he experienced all of the vicissitudes incident to the agricultural development of that state in the period before the era of her permanent prosperity. Born in Cherokee county, that state, March 16, 1870, he was early trained to habits of industry and perseverance, and was made an assistant on the farm as soon as old enough to handle horses and machinery. His parents, Enos and Annie (Harvey) Morgan, were natives of Indiana, and the former was a soldier in the Civil war, at the close of which he took up a homestead in Kansas. There were two sons and two daughters in the family and when the eldest of these, L. Bert, was a child of five years, the mother was taken from the home by death. The father and children remained on the home farm until 1887, when they came to California and settled on a ranch near San Diego, but came to Long Beach in 1893, and the father has since made his home on Signal Hill.

In addition to attending common school L. Bert Morgan was a student in Spring River academy, a school in Kansas conducted by the Society of Friends. When he was seventeen years of age he came to California with his father, whom he accompanied a few years later to Long Beach. During 1898 he became an employe of the Long Beach steam laundry and after working there for eighteen months he bought a one-half interest in the business, but later disposed of the same. In 1902 he started, with others, the Model laundry at No. 644 West Fifth street, Long Beach, the company consisting of L. B. Morgan and H. D. Vail. The company is incorporated with a capital stock of $9,000 and owns a fine plant with a reputation for careful and reliable workmanship.

Since coming to Long Beach Mr. Morgan has established domestic ties through his marriage to Lydia B. Wildman, a native of Indiana, and they are the parents of one son, Leslie Earl. The residence is located at No. 1145 East Fourth street, where he erected a comfortable residence. The family are members of the Society of Friends, in which faith Mr. Morgan was reared and to which he adheres with sincere devotion. Interested in all movements for the public good, he has rendered efficient service in the Young Men's Christian Association and has given his stanch support to the cause of Prohibition.

HIRAM CALVIN MATTESON. For the past three years Hiram Calvin Matteson has been conducting one of the most successful dairies and creameries in San Bernardino, where his butter has gained a wide reputation for its superior quality. Mr. Matteson was born January 1, 1863, near Fond du Lac, Wis., the only child of C. K. and Caroline (Robinson) Matteson, both natives of New York. Calvin Matteson, the grandfather, was a pioneer farmer in Wisconsin, and the father, though reared on a farm, chose the medical profession as his life work. The breaking out of the Civil war found him in the midst of his medical studies, but he relinquished them for the time being and entered his country's service, enlisting three times in as many different Wisconsin regiments. His bravery and soldierly qualities were noted by his superiors in rank, and in recognition of these he was chosen as one of Earle's picked men, and at the time that brave officer was killed he was one of those who helped to carry him from the field of battle. At the close of the war Mr. Matteson entered Eclectic Medical College in Cincinnati, Ohio, receiving his medical degree in 1868. He then engaged in professional practice in Fond du Lac, Wis., later in Tennessee, and in 1885 came to San Bernardino and engaged in horticultural pursuits on a ranch of forty acres, situated one mile south of Harlem Springs, that place being now his home. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and as an enterprising and progressive citizen is held in the highest esteem in that community.

The boyhood days of Hiram C. Matteson were spent in Iowa and Tennessee, his education being received in the public schools. His mother died when he was six years old. Coming with his father to California in 1885 he remained at home for a time, helping to improve the place, then engaged in independent farming operations, raising grain and hay. For two years he subsequently worked for the Pacific Clay Company at Corona. Returning to San Bernardino he again engaged in grain and hay raising, and later entered the employ of W. F. Somers, for over twelve years having charge of his ranch, which was devoted largely to stock and had a dairy and creamery in connection, thus enabling Mr. Matteson to become thoroughly familiar with all the details of the business. It was in 1903 that he purchased the Lightfoot milk route in San Bernardino, with a consumption of about three hundred gallons daily. He is located on South C street near Mill street, owns a dairy herd of twelve cows, and also buys milk from other dairymen, with whom he makes yearly contracts. In the creamery which he has built up he manufactures Matteson's creamery process butter, which is of as fine quality as can be bought anywhere at any price. The plant is a modern one, fitted with refrigerators, two-horse power engine and other machinery necessary to the production of a first-class product.

By his marriage in San Bernardino Mr. Matteson was united with Miss Elizabeth Walton, a native of Pleasanton, Alameda county, and of this union three children have been born: Carrie, Francis and Charles Kenneth. Fraternally Mr. Matteson is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and politically he is a stanch believer in the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party.

DWIGHT M. CRUM. During the last twenty years many changes have marked the history of Southern California and there are few properties which in that period have been held by the same owners, one instance of this kind being furnished by Mr. Crum, who came to the state in October of 1887 and has since owned and occupied a ranch near Compton. The property comprises eighty-seven and one-fourth acres and is devoted to the raising of barley and alfalfa, which products have proved profitable to the owner. In his farm operations Mr. Crum utilizes modern methods of work and thus is enabled to gain the largest results possible from every acre; indeed, his ranch is among the most attractive and also among the best-cultivated tracts in the county. Upon it he has put down two artesian wells, with adequate water for irrigation of the entire ranch.

Descended from an eastern family, Mr. Crum is a son of David S. and Mary (Walton) Crum, natives of Pennsylvania, the former born in 1826. During childhood they accompanied their respective parents to Ohio and there were united in marriage. While they were yet living in that state their son, D. M., was born January 3, 1852. Two years after his birth the family removed to Illinois and purchased a tract of raw land in Livingston county, where the mother died in 1860. Throughout his entire life the father has followed agricultural pursuits and he still resides at his old homestead in Livingston county, where he is an honored citizen, a sincere member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a devoted adherent of Republican principles, and at one time held office as justice of the peace and as a member of the county board of supervisors.

Upon the completion of common-school studies, D. M. Crum matriculated in the Wesleyan University at Bloomington, Ill., where he carried on his studies for two years, and thus acquired the foundation of a broad education. On his return to Livingston county he took up agricultural pursuits and became the owner of a well-improved farm devoted to the raising of grain and corn and the feeding of cattle. After a successful experience as an Illinois farmer he came to California and settled near Compton, where he yet resides. Some years before leaving Illinois he married, in 1877, Miss Lydia Van Petten, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Van Petten. Though born in New York state the father spent his life in Illinois; since his death the mother has continued to reside in Colfax, McLean county. Mrs. Crum was born and reared in Illinois, receiving a fair education in McLean county schools, the Peoria Normal and the Illinois State Normal, after which she followed teaching until her marriage. Of her marriage there are four children namely: Mabel, who is employed as a teacher in the Compton schools; Lula, who is in the employ of the Los Angeles City Railway Company; Margaret, a student in the class of 1908 at the California State University; and Van, who is now attending the Compton high school. The family are attendants upon the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church and contribute to religious and charitable movements. For years Mr. Crum has been a stanch supporter of Republican principles. At every election he casts his ballot for the party nominees and for the principles represented by the same. Some years ago he was selected to act as deputy assessor of six school districts of Los Angeles county and devoted three months to the work, discharging every duty with conscientious fidelity and patience. For a time he held office as justice of the peace, where his decisions displayed an impartial spirit and a broad knowledge of local and general laws. By faithful service as school trustee he has evinced his interest in the free-school system of education, which he considers indissolubly associated with the permanent welfare of our country. In fraternal connections he has passed the various degrees of Masonry, has been warmly interested in the Eastern Star and has officiated for years as chief ranger of the Independent Order of Foresters.

MORGAN PERRY. As a contractor and builder who makes a specialty of planning residences and cottages Morgan Perry does a fine business in San Bernardino. He is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, born December 6, 1848, and is the son of Joseph Perry, a native of Lancaster, Pa. His grandfather Perry died when comparatively young in Pennyslvania and his wife was subsequently married to Dr. Oberdorf, an old German physician who had been surgeon under Napoleon for twenty-six years, and was with him when he crossed the Alps on the way to Moscow. Dr. Oberdorf removed with his family to Cincinnati in 1815 and was a practicing physician there until his death. Joseph Perry was a bricklayer and contractor in Cincinnati, from there removing to Sunman, Ripley county, Ind., where he died at the age of sixty-eight years. The mother who was Hannah J. Marsh before her marriage, was born on the battlefield of Buffalo, in 1812, and was the daughter of Thomas Marsh. The latter was born in New Jersey, and removed with his family to Cincinnati, where he followed the trade of bricklayer, which trade he taught to Joseph Perry. The mother died in Indiana, and of the eight children born to her three are now living.

Until 1862 Morgan Perry lived in Cincinnati, where he attended the public schools, and in that year went to Kentucky and was engaged in government service as a cook at Camp Nelson, located near Nicholasville. In 1865 he went to Nashville and began the study of bridge building. Subsequently he was employed by L. B. Boomer & Co., now the American Bridge Company, and worked with crews on the Nashville & Chattanooga, Tennessee & Alabama and East Tennessee & Georgia Railways. Following this he was with the Southern Bridge Contracting Company at Knoxville, Tenn., working in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee, and after the flood in 1867 returned to the American Bridge Company for a time. Going to Cincinnati in 1868 he was associated in business with his brother until his removal to Beardstown, Ill., when he again worked at bridge building for F. E. Canda & Co. of Chicago, continuing with them for a year, after which he entered the government employ at Ft. Leavenworth, Kans. In the fall of 1870 he went to Little Rock, Ark., and from there to Lewisburg, in the latter place engaging in contracting and building until 1887, when he came to San Bernardino and was employed at the carpenter's trade, working at various times for the Santa Fe Railway Company on bridges and buildings and in their carshops. Since 1891 he has given the greater part of his time to planning and erecting residences and cottages and has been very successful in the work.

Mr. Perry was married in Lewisburg, Ark., to Miss Martha Merryman, a native of Johnson county, in that state. Having no children of their own, they adopted a daughter, Lula. Mr. Perry was made a Mason at Lewisburg, Ark., and is now a member of Phoenix Lodge No. 178, F. & A. M. at San Bernardino. He also belongs to the Independent Order of Foresters. Both he and has wife are active members of the Bethel Congregational Church, of which Mr. Perry is a member of the board of trustees. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party, and as a member of the Mt. Vernon Improvement Club he takes an interest in the beautifying of the city. His well rounded interests in business, social and civic lines give him a large and favorable acquaintance among the residents of San Bernardino, who regard him as a highly respectable citizen.

ALBERT THOMAS KIMBELL. The family represented by the supervisor of the fourth district of Riverside county is of southern extraction. His father, A. G., was born in Nashville, Tenn., January 20, 1817, and in early life removed to Texas, where for a time he was employed as a clerk in the state capitol at Austin and also as a clerk in the land office. At Red River, Tex., October 12, 1841, he married Sarah C. Gleaves, who was born in Davidson county, Tenn., May 15, 1825. When news came of the discovery of gold in California he immediately determined to journey to the unknown regions of mining activity. With a party of five men he started from Austin by muleback to Mazatlan, at which point he took a ship for San Francisco and arrived at the Golden Gate in January of 1850. His health had been impaired by the confinement incident to his clerical duties in Texas, and accordingly he spent some time in hunting deer and bear, thereby deriving all the benefits of the splendid western climate and the outdoor exercise. In the fall of 1850 he secured a position as enrolling clerk in the state legislature for the term, after which he mined in Tuolumne county for two years. For the purpose of giving his children good educational advantages he removed to San Francisco, where he was assistant marshal in 1860-61 and also assisted in taking the census of the city. Somewhat later he became interested in the reclaiming of the tule lands in San Joaquin and Contra Costa counties, where he lived until 1878, and then removed to the San Gabriel valley in Los Angeles county.

In order to take up mining A. G. Kimbell went to Arizona in 1880 and became a miner in Cochise county, from which point he made a trip to Texas and other southern states. In 1883 he left Arizona, and two years later settled in the San Gabriel valley. When the development of the Imperial valley was first agitated he became a stanch champion of the measure and endeavored to interest capitalists in the undertaking. In 1888 he removed to the vicinity of Perris, Riverside county, where he died June 20, 1899, at the age of eighty-three years and five months. His wife had passed away in the San Gabriel valley December 2, 1880, and was buried in Evergreen cemetery at Los Angeles. They were the parents of eleven children, namely: John F., who was born January 23, 1843, and died May 15, 1893, at the age of fifty years; Mary E., who was born December 31, 1844, and in San Francisco was married to William C. Harrington November 22, 1864, afterward living at Sousma, but in 1877 removing to San Gabriel valley, where Mr. Harrington died August 22, 1875; William Y., who was born October 1, 1847, and now resides with his next younger brother and his older sister at Perris; Albert Thomas, who was born in Austin, Tex., October 23, 1849; Frank G., who was born in California June 6, 1854, and died January 7, 1859; Henry S., who was born in May, 1856, and died September 11, 1857; Charles J., who was born in San Francisco July 9, 1858, and is now living, unmarried, in Arizona; Edward G., who was born December 20, 1860, and is living in California; Eugene L., who was born January 1, 1863, and is now married and living at Riverside; Sallie R., who was born in San Francisco January 17, 1865, and is the wife of C. H. Cowles of Perris; and Samuel B., who was born February 3, 1867, and with his family now makes San Jose his home.

Brought to California during infancy, Albert Thomas Kimbell was educated in San Francisco and Oakland college, and in 1878 accompanied his parents to the San Gabriel valley, seven years later removing to the Perris valley, where he engaged in farming. The following year he removed to Los Angeles and secured an appointment as storekeeper and gauger at the bonded warehouse under the first administration of President Cleveland. After having filled the position for four years he resigned and returned to the vicinity of Perris, where he resumed agricultural pursuits. November 4, 1898, he was elected supervisor, the duties of which he assumed in January, 1899, and since then he has been a member of the county board of supervisors. Reared in the Democratic faith, he always has been stanch in his allegiance to that party. However, he places loyalty to county and commonwealth before partisanship, and in private life and public service has displayed a keen sense of responsibility as a citizen and a desire to aid in securing lasting improvements. In fraternal relations he holds membership in Elsinore Lodge No. 289, F. & A. M., and the Eastern Star; also the Independent Order of Foresters at Perris, and Knights of Pythias No. 90, at Perris, in which he has been honored with the office of chancellor commander. Socially he is respected for his manly traits and sterling qualities. His popularity is evidenced by the fact that he has three times been elected supervisor in a district containing twice as many Republicans as Democrats, yet it is known everywhere that he champions Democratic principles and votes the straight party ticket. Sharing with him in the esteem of neighbors is his sister, Mrs. Harrington, who has charge of his home, and who is a lady of culture and kindly disposition.

LEWIS MORSE. One mile southeast from the city of San Bernardino may be seen one of the neatest and most orderly dairy ranches to be found anywhere in the county. The property formerly belonged to Governor Waterman, from whom Mr. Morse purchased it in 1897, removing with his family to the same in the fall of that year. The ranch comprises twenty-one acres, and with the exception of the house which was upon it at the time of purchase Mr. Morse has made all of the improvements which are to be seen upon the property today. Besides this ranch, which is pasture land exculsively, and devoted entirely to dairy purposes, Mr. Morse also owns other property in the county. In November, 1905, he purchased one hundred and thirty-three and three-quarters acres near San Bernardino, twenty-five acres of which he has under cultivation and five acres set out to various kinds of fruit. A good residence, excellent barns and an abundant supply of water which is stored in a large reservoir, add immeasurably to the value of the property.

Mr. Morse is of eastern birth and parentage, born in Yates county, N. Y., March 12, 1841, the son of Samuel and Mary (Shepard) Morse. His boyhood and early manhood years were spent in and around his native place, but the year 1874 found him in Virginia, where he remained for six years, engaged in farming. To his ambitious spirit the slow and unprogressive methods which prevailed in the south became irksome to him and influenced him in his decision to remove to the west. Putting this decision into execution in 1880 he came to Merced, Cal., remaining there for eighteen months, after which he came to San Bernardino county. It was a number of years before he was enabled to secure a piece of property to his liking, and in the meantime he lived on various ranches in the vicinity. In the purchase of the two pieces of property which he now owns he has been amply repaid for the delay, for without doubt he now possesses two of the finest ranches to be found in the county.

One year after coming to California Mr. Morse formed domestic ties by his marriage with Mardula Carney, their marriage being celebrated in October, 1881.

JOSEPH INGERSOLL. Listed among the business enterprises of San Bernardino that have experienced a steady growth and gratifying prosperity may be mentioned the Ingersoll & Esler Company, of which Joseph Ingersoll acts as president. From the time of the establishment of the business in March, 1891, until 1904, the company existed as a co-partnership, but during the latter year papers of incorporation were taken out under the laws of the state of California, the capital stock being $60,000. At this writing the officers are as follows: Joseph Ingersoll, president; Frederick John Esler, vice-president; and John Batchellor, secretary. Besides the wholesale business in wines and liquors, the firm is largely interested in the Brookside winery at Brookside, San Bernardino county, incorporated under the title of E. Vaché & Co. Large wine cellars are utilized for the storage of wines, and distilleries with modern improvements afford ample facilities for the manufacture of an output recommended for its purity. The winery, which has a capacity of two hundred and fifty thousand gallons per year, contains an equipment which is said to be unsurpassed by any similar plant in the entire state.

The president of the company is a native of Michigan and was born at Watertown, Eaton county, where he received a fair common-school education and grew to manhood. Remaining a resident of Michigan until 1881, he then removed to California and settled at San Bernardino, where for a time he was employed at the Brookside winery. In a few years he purchased stock in the business and associated with himself Mr. Esler, also a practical business man. The company has established a large local trade and also ships extensively to many parts of California and into Nevada and New Mexico. While devoting his attention closely to the management of the plant and the development of the large and important trade, Mr. Ingersoll has found leisure to identify himself with other commercial interests, including the following: the Home Gas Company, of which he is a stockholder; the Lytle Creek Light and Power Company, of whose board of directors he is a member; the Building and Loan Association of San Bernardino, in which he owns stock; and the Seal of Gold Mining Company of California, all of which organizations receive from him the attention and sagacious supervision which their importance renders necessary, and with his partner, F. J. Esler, is interested in the growing of oranges.

Before coming to California Mr. Ingersoll was united in marriage with Miss Alice Stoddard, of Detroit, Mich. They have two daughters, of whom Mamie was born in Michigan and Lozie M., in California. Fraternally Mr. Ingersoll is identified with San Bernardino Lodge No. 348, F. & A. M.; San Bernardino Lodge No. 146, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand, also a member of the Encampment; and Aerie No. 506, Order of Eagles, of which he is past worthy president. While stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party, he has never consented to hold office and political honors have been unsought at his hands, but, nevertheless, he was elected one of the Freeholders that got up the new city charter. He gives generously of his time and means to promote movements for the benefit of his home city and is ardently loyal to the welfare of his state.

MRS. MABEL L. HACKMAN. An accomplished, enterprising and progressive business woman, Mrs. Mabel L. Hackman is actively identified with the mercantile, agricultural and horticultural progress of Glendale, where she is now serving as postmaster. She is a clear-headed, brainy woman, possessing excellent judgment and great executive ability; with her brother-in-law she owns a large department store in Glendale, and in addition to owning and managing a large fruit ranch she has title to much real estate in this vicinity. Notwithstanding her many responsibilities she looks carefully after all of her affairs, and as a landholder and a merchant has met with success and very few discouragements. A native of New England, she was born in Harrison, Me., a daughter of Eleazer Newcomb, being descended from one of the early colonial families.

A native of Maine, Eleazer Newcomb sprung from an old English family, and, as shown by the genealogy of the Newcomb family, can trace his lineage back to Henry VIII. His emigrant ancestor came from England to America at an early date, and by marriage and intermarriage his descendants of to-day are closely related to the distinguished family of Wentworths, one of whom, Benning Wentworth, was the first governor of New Hampshire. Mr. Newcomb was a millwright in his earlier years, and during the Civil war served as a soldier in Company B, Twenty-third Maine Volunteer Infantry. He married Ellen Brown, also a native of Maine, and they are now living in Glendale, making their home with their daughter, Mrs. Hackman. She is a woman of talent and culture, and although seventy-three years of age, writes a good deal and contributes many articles of merit to the local literary club. At the age of sixty years, without any previous instruction, she took up painting, and among her productions are numerous beautiful pictures of flowers and fruit.

After leaving her native state Mabel L. Newcomb lived for awhile in Chicago, in its schools receiving her elementary education. Subsequently going to Plattsmouth, Neb., she was graduated from the high school, and afterwards taught school for two years in Kansas City, Mo. Giving up her position as a teacher Miss Newcomb married David M. Hackman, and for a number of years resided in that city.

A native of Pennsylvania David M. Hackman was born in Bethlehem, Lehigh county, where his early ancestors settled when they first came to America. He is of patriotic stock, some of his kinsmen having fought in the Revolutionary war. He was reared and educated in his native state, but in early manhood went to Chicago, Ill., where he embarked in mercantile pursuits, being for a time in the employ of Partridge & Co. Still retaining his connection with that firm, he went to Kansas City, where he had a part interest in their store, and of which he was general manager for several years. As a merchant he has been exceedingly prosperous, and is now a part owner and the superintendent of one of the largest department stores in Pittsburg, Pa. Mr. and Mrs. Hackman have one child, Eulalie W. Hackman, who attended first the public schools of Kansas City, later going to the Marlborough School and the Girls' Collegiate Institute of Los Angeles. Fraternally Mr. Hackman is a thirty-second degree Mason.

Coming with her parents to Los Angeles county, in 1885, Mrs. Hackman purchased a ranch of forty acres on First street and Verdugo road, Glendale, and has since improved it, having now a valuable orchard of deciduous fruit trees, which she is managing successfully and profitably. In 1903, with her brother-in-law, Walter C. Fraley, she embarked in mercantile pursuits, buying a store, which they have enlarged, converting it into a fine department store, one of the best in its equipment of any in the vicinity. The postoffice is located in her store, and since October, 1904, she has served most acceptably to all as postmaster. In addition to her property in Glendale Mrs. Hackman has other interests, being owner of considerable real estate and other property of value in the east. Mrs. Hackman is a member of the Tuesday Afternoon Club of Glendale, and is very popular and prominent in social circles throughout the valley.

THOMAS A. BLAKELY. The establishment of the important business enterprise with which the name of Mr. Blakely is indissolubly associated dates back to the year 1899, when in conjunction with Prof. S. M. Woodbridge, of Pasadena, he embarked in the manufacture of chemical fertilizer at San Bernardino. Three years later the Woodbridge Chemical Works were incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000, and the following officers: Hiram M. Barton, president; Samuel M. Woodbridge, vice-president; and Thomas A. Blakely, treasurer. The works are situated in the southeastern part of the city of San Bernardino, occupying a plant erected especially to meet the needs of the business, and equipped with modern machinery operated by electricity. The bones of which the fertilizer is largely composed are bought at slaughter houses. The potash is imported from Hamburg, Germany, and the other ingredients are brought from Chile, South America, thus securing in each instance the pure and unadulterated article and material. The output of the plant is purchased in large quantities by the orange-growers of Southern California and also by market gardeners, and the value of the product has become so widely recognized that orders frequently have to be filled from Arizona, New Mexico and other points outside of the area of the home trade.

The treasurer of the company, who owns two-thirds of the stock in the incorporation, has lived in the United States since he was nineteen years of age. Born in Ireland, November 2, 1863, he is a son of Ambrose Blakely, an Englishman by birth and education, but for years prosperously engaged in business in Ireland. His education was received in the schools of the Irish town where his father engaged in business. From an early age he had been ambitious to come to America, and as soon as he was permitted to start out in the world for himself he crossed the ocean to the new world. For eighteen months he was employed in Ohio and then went to Missouri. Two and one-half years later he went to Kansas City, that state, and embarked in the cattle business, buying and selling to the large cattle-dealers in the state. For this work he had the advantage of previous experience in Ireland, where he had received a thorough training in the handling of thoroughbred and pedigreed stock. The parties by whom he was employed and with whom later he was associated owned a number of animals each of which they valued at thousands of dollars.

Disposing of his interests in Kansas City in 1891 Mr. Blakely came to California and established his home at Redlands, where soon he acquired valuable property. While for fourteen years he made his home in Redlands he meanwhile acquired important interests at San Bernardino and eventually in 1902 moved to this town, where now he makes his home at No. 369 D street. At the time of the organization of the San Bernardino County Savings Bank, in which he took a leading part, he purchased stock in the new institution, and since then has officiated as a member of the board of directors. Another important local enterprise which numbers him among its stockholders and enthusiastic supporters is the San Bernardino Valley Traction Company. Besides his interests previously mentioned he owns valuable real estate in San Bernardino and is interested in various enterprises with capitalists in Los Angeles and San Francisco. Possessing practical ideas and a fine mind, his presence in financial undertakings is deemed of great value to the profitable development of the work under consideration and by his co-operation beneficial measures have been profitably promoted. While he has had little leisure for participation in social affairs or fraternal movements, he has been actively associated with the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks in his home city.

JEROME W. LOVE. Distinguished as a California pioneer, and as one of the oldest and most highly respected residents of San Diego county, J. W. Love has contributed his share towards advancing the industrial prosperity of his adopted state, in every respect being recognized as a true and loyal citizen. During his long and useful life he has pursued the even tenor of his way as an honest man, promoting the interests of the community as opportunity has offered, and now in his declining years is reaping the reward of his many years of persistent toil, living retired in Ramona, and here enjoying the respect and esteem of his neighbors and friends. A son of Robert Love, he was born, December 12, 1827, in Monroe county, N. Y.

Born and reared in Oneida county, N. Y., Robert Love learned the carpenter's trade when a young man, and also became familiar with the methods of farming then in vogue. Settling in Monroe county, N. Y., he carried on general farming for several years, and then, about 1836, moved with his family to Wisconsin, settling on the present site of the city of Milwaukee, where one of his daughters was born, she being the second white female child born in that locality. He followed his trade for a number of years, and was also engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, at the age of seventy-eight years. He married Martha Barnett, who was born in Oneida county, N. Y., and died at the age of seventy-two years, in Wisconsin. They were honest, God-fearing people, and valued members of the Congregational Church. Of the nine children born of their union, five are living, three of the sons being engaged in the commission business in Chicago, Ill.

Removing with his parents to Wisconsin in 1836, J. W. Love obtained the rudiments of his education in the Milwaukee schools, after which he attended Oberlin College, in Oberlin, Ohio, for two years. The following three years he was employed in a wholesale and retail book store in Milwaukee, also being agent for the Wells-Fargo Express Company. In 1849, influenced by the enthusiastic reports concerning the discovery of gold in California, he determined to investigate the truth of the stories for himself, and with that object in view followed the trail of the emigrants across the continent. For four years thereafter he was engaged in mining, confining his operations to the Sacramento and Feather River valleys, and meeting with more than average success in finding the desired metal. Embarking then in the lumber business, he followed it for five years, being especially interested in the manufacture of shingles, having a mill in Santa Cruz. In 1861, going to Sacramento, he enlisted in Company K, Fifth California Volunteer Infantry, in which he served three years, the following two years being in a regiment of cavalry. With his comrades he was sent at the time of the Indian disturbances to Arizona, and from there to Texas, being under the command of General Carlton. While going down the Rio Grande river about one hundred miles below El Paso with his comrades he first heard of the death of Lincoln. Returning to San Francisco at the expiration of his term of enlistment, he was mustered out of service in that city, after which he rode horseback to his home in Santa Cruz.

In December, 1879, Mr. Love located in San Diego, and the following year took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land in the Ramona district and began the improvement of a farm. He met with good success from the start, clearing a part of the land from its original wildness and placing it under a good state of cultivation. For a number of years he carried on general ranching, raising wheat and barley, and in addition worked for his cousin in his apiary. On retiring from active pursuits Mr. Love rented his ranch and for several years lived with William Warnock. About 1900 he returned to Ramona, and has lived here since, esteemed and respected throughout the community. During the Civil war he suffered the privations of army and camp life, and for his services at that time now receives a government monthly pension. Politically Mr. Love is a straightforward Republican.

HARRY JOHNSTONE WOODS, of El Monte, has met with success in the conduct of his bakery and restaurant in this place, and is counted among the substantial business men of the section. He came to California in 1897, bringing with him the sturdy traits of character which were his by inheritance from New England ancestors descended from Scotch forefathers. His birth occurred in West Burke, Caledonia county, Vt., March 28, 1872, being next to the oldest in a family of eight children, five of whom are living. His father, John M. Woods, was born in Hamilton, N. Y., while his grandfather, Harry Johnstone Woods, was born in Scotland, became an immigrant to America, and served his adopted country in the war of 1812. John M. Woods was a civil engineer during the construction of the Hoosac tunnel. His wife was in maidenhood Margaret McLeod, born in Scotland and reared in the Presbyterian faith.

In childhood Harry Johnstone Woods was taken by his parents to Manchester, N. H., where he received his education in the public and high schools, also attending Dartmouth College for six months. In St. Johnsbury, Vt., he was apprenticed to learn the baker's trade and after its completion worked in various places, among them Boston, New York City, and Philadelphia. He finally went into business in Manchester and successfully conducted a bakery for seven years. In 1897 he disposed of his interests in that city and came to California and on Buena Vista street, Los Angeles, established a bakery, which he conducted for a time, later carrying on a similar business on Seventh street and Broadway. He met with success and built up a large trade, which he sold out in 1903 to come to El Monte, first acting as manager for the El Monte bakery and the following year he purchased property and engaged in business for himself. In 1906 he enlarged his business by restaurant equipment, and the combined enterprise has resulted in material gain. His business methods are such as to win for him friends among his patrons and thus constantly increase an already wide custom.

In Los Angeles Mr. Woods was united in marriage with Miss Lizzie M. Willis, born in Shrewsbury, Ky., and a daughter of Professor Willis, president of the Shrewsbury Academy. They have one daughter, Maggie. In his fraternal relations Mr. Woods is associated with the Masons, having been made a member of the organization in Lexington Lodge No. 104, March, 1905, and is now acting as senior warden; Woodmen of the World of El Monte; Hillsboro Lodge I. O. O. F. of Manchester, N. H., and Agwam Tribe No. 208, I. O. R. M., also of Manchester; and has been identified with the Knights of Pythias. His wife is a member of the Order of Eastern Star. In his political affiliations Mr. Woods is a stanch Republican.

JAMES Y. JOHNSON. One of the successful men of Los Angeles county is James Y. Johnson, who was born in Sweden, May 18, 1847, and spent the first eight years of his life in his native land. In 1855 his parents emigrated to America, looking to betterment of their financial condition in the western world where opportunities abounded for the progressive and enterprising spirit. Inheriting the sturdy traits which distinguish the natives of Sweden, success accompanied their efforts and they acquired a competence and at the same time became worthy citizens of the country they had adopted for their home. James Y. Johnson remained with his parents until attaining maturity, making his home in different sections of the country. Previous to his location in California fourteen years ago, he engaged in the raising of sheep, cattle and horses in southern Utah and met with success sufficient to give him considerable financial returns. Upon his settlement in Los Angeles county in 1893 he decided to engage in the poultry business, and until 1900 continued so occupied, at first buying and selling poultry and later raising for the market. He gave to his work a sagacious interest and judgment which enabled him to perfect his efforts and brought him a noteworthy success. In the meantime, however, he became interested in the raising of pigeons, beginning this enterprise with a stock of one hundred and continuing to increase his operations until at the present writing he owns a flock of about one hundred thousand flying birds. This is the most extensive enterprise of its kind in the world and represents a big outlay of both capital and energy. Besides Mr. Johnson, four men are required for the care of this immense flock, and the utmost pains are taken in their management, every modern device being used on the ranch; the ranch consists of eight and a half acres located in East Los Angeles, with easy access by means of the Garvanza car line. All kinds of fancy birds are included in the flock, but are kept both for breeding and show purposes, admission being gained through the entrance on West Dayton, near the Los Angeles river. His product is shipped to all portions of the west and is in demand wherever known. The success achieved by Mr. Johnson in this line of work is only equaled by the spirit of enterprise which induced him to establish it. He conceived the plan and put it in operation about twelve years ago, and against more or less obstacles and discouragements has carried it to success and firmly established a branch which was entirely original. He has displayed business ability and judgment, as well as an energy and perseverance unusual in character and quality, and the combined attributes of inheritance and training have brought about satisfactory results.

Mr. Johnson owns a handsome residence on Downey avenue, in the city of Los Angeles. He is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ Latter Day Saints, while politically he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. He is a man of ability and energy and during his long residence in this section has won the confidence and esteem of all who have come to know him.

CLINTON BLYTHE. A prominent citizen of Long Beach, Los Angeles county, is Clinton Blythe, who is now living retired in his home at No. 344 East Sixth street. He is a native of Graves county, Ky., born July 7, 1859, a son of J. T. Blythe. The latter was born in Virginia, the descendant of an old southern family, and when still a young man immigrated to Kentucky. He located in Graves county and engaged as a farmer for some years and in 1875 moved to Texas. In the town of Meridian he lived retired until 1887, when he came to Downey, Cal., and spent the remainder of his life in retirement, dying at the age of seventy-four years. During his residence in that place he was active in the organization the Los Nietos Valley Bank, of which he served as president. His wife, formerly Sarah Adair, a native of Kentucky, also died in Downey, at the age of sixty-four years. Born of this union were thirteen children, six sons and seven daughters; of the five sons and three daughters who attained maturity, two sons have since died.

The sixth in order of birth, Clinton Blythe received his education in a log schoolhouse in his native state, where he spent the first sixteen years of his life. He engaged in farming with his father in Kentucky and later conducted a general farming and stock-raising business for himself in Texas. He remained in that state until 1888, when he followed his parents to California, locating one mile east of Downey, where he purchased a small ranch, raising alfalfa and conducting a dairy. Disposing of this interest he purchased fifty-three acres three miles southeast of Downey, which property he still owns, although he has never made his home upon it. In 1900 he came to Long Beach and first located at No. 233 American avenue, later removing to his present residence, No. 344 east Sixth street. He still acts as a director and president of the Los Nietos Valley Bank of Downey, with which institution his family has been identified ever since its organization, his father serving as president until his death, when his brother, S. W. Blythe, entered upon the duties of this position, continuing there until he died. Mr. Blythe is a man of ability and energy and as such holds a position of esteem among his fellow citizens.

In Meridian, Tex., Mr. Blythe was united in marriage with Mary Parks, a native of that place, and they are the parents of the following children: James, on a ranch in this vicinity; Pearl, wife of R. Smith, located in the vicinity of Los Angeles; Lee, wife of E. R. Creeth; Nora; Sue; Paul; and Mary, all at home. Politically Mr. Blythe is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, which he supports with voice and vote.

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS. The family name of this enterprising business man of Long Beach indicates his Welsh descent. The genealogical records show that the founder of the family in America was his paternal grandfather, a native of Wales and for many years a resident of Staten Island in New York. John A., son of this immigrant, was born on Staten Island and about 1859 settled in Coles county, Ill., from which point, at the age of nineteen years, he enlisted in the United States army and served for three years and eight months. The drum sticks which he used in the capacity of drummer are now in the possession of his son, Thomas W. At the close of the war he entered the St. Louis Medical College and took a course in therapeutics. During the remainder of his life he was actively engaged in professional work and practiced successively at Rocheport, Boone county; Higbee, Randolph county; Deepwater, Henry county; and Carthage, Jasper county, all in Missouri. At the latter city he died in September, 1902, at sixty-one years of age. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Lucy A. White, was born near Lexington, Ky., grew to womanhood in Illinois, and afterward lived in Missouri, where in 1891 she died at Deepwater.

Among six sons and two daughters comprising the family Thomas W. Williams was third in order of birth and was born in Coles county, Ill., November 1, 1869. Primarily educated in the common schools of Deepwater, Mo., he later had the advantages of a course in Clinton academy, and in 1888 was graduated from that institution. The first occupation on which he entered was landscape gardening, which he followed in Kansas City and St. Louis. April 26, 1893, he arrived in California and settled at Long Beach, with whose growing fortune his own interests have since been associated. For six years he was employed as gardener by J. Bixby and for three years served by appointment as superintendent of parks and special police, after which for two years he held the office of city marshal. His introduction into the real-estate business was with the Long Beach Commission and Real Estate Company, whose business he soon purchased. After conducting it alone for four months he sold a one-half interest to M. B. Irvine. February 1, 1905, the business was merged into the Walker Real Estate Company, in which he now owns one-fourth interest. Besides this he has improved and now owns several residence properties. In response to earnest solicitations Mr. Williams consented a second time to fill the office of city marshal until the city council could find a competent man to accept the place, and he accepted the appointment August 28, 1905, upon these conditions. Owing to the growing demands of his business he felt it unwise to assume official duties except in response to an appeal for temporary work. While acting in that capacity he wiped out of existence an organization of the "blind pig" order and in the raid confiscated eighteen hundred and fifty gallons of whiskey. During his administration Long Beach gained a record for enforcement of the laws which no town in the country can surpass. Law and order have been given to the city and the law-abiding class of citizens appreciate the efforts which have culminated in such a satisfactory condition of municipal affairs.

Upon the organization of the Young Men's Christian Association of Long Beach in 1900 Mr. Williams took a warm interest in the founding of the movement and has since officiated as a director. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Long Beach and a director and one of the organizers of the Peoples Bank of Long Beach. In the Humane Society he holds official position and its work has always received his cordial co-operation. Upon the starting of the lodge of Knights of Pythias Mr. Williams became a charter member and ever since has aided in the upbuilding of the society. In addition he takes an enthusiastic interest in the work of the Sons of Veterans at Long Beach. His home in Long Beach, at No. 227 Linden avenue, is presided over by his wife, who was Ruth M. Brown, a native of Illinois, and its pleasures are enhanced by the presence of their two children, Dwight B. and Ruth H. The family attend the Congregational Church, to the work of which he is a contributor, as well as an active worker in its philanthropies. In politics he gives his support to the Republican party, which in 1900 and 1906 he served as delegate to the county central committee, and since then in various instances has promoted the local welfare of the party.

CAPT. WILLIAM W. BURKE. Preceded by years of experienece as a civil engineer Captain Burke came to San Pedro in 1904. Purchasing a lot 40x120 on Fourth street he erected a two-story modern store building, one-half of which he occupies himself as a grocery and meat market, while the other part is rented and occupied as a furniture and crockery store. Thus far Captain Burke has realized his expectations to a gratifying degree and the town and his fellow-citizens are doubtless the gainers by his change of occupation. Born under the rule of the British flag in 1846, he is a native of the West Indies and a son of Francis and Marion Burke, the former a native of Ireland. During his early life the father located in the West Indies, where as an extensive planter he spent the remainder of his life. His wife was a native of the islands, and there they reared their children.

When he was fifteen years of age, prior to which time he had been educated in England, Captain Burke left home and friends and for two years followed the sea. Landing on the shores of the United States at the end of the voyage he found the country in the midst of Civil warfare, in which he later bore a part in 1865 joining the Union army, Company D, battalion of engineers. After peace was restored he entered the United States service as civil engineer. Contracts in this line which he accepted and completed consisted of work on the San Francisco harbor, constructing the harbors from Michigan City, Ind., to Petoskey, Mich., in fact all of the harbors on the Michigan coast. In 1883 he resigned his position to engage in contracting and building harbors for the United States and Mexican governments. His first work in this line was building three miles of the Galveston jetty, following this by constructing the jetties at Pas Cavalla, Rockport, Port Isabelle and at the mouth of the Rio Grande river. His latest work in this line was on the coast of Mexico, where for six years he was engaged on the harbor at Manzanillo. Upon the completion of the undertaking, in 1904, he relinquished the arduous work which for so many years had engaged his attention, and coming to San Pedro purchased the property on Fourth street as previously stated and here he expects to make his permanent home. His building was completed in December, 1904, at which time he stocked it with a complete line of goods, and it goes without saying that the equipment is up-to-date in every particular. Adding to this condition the fact that the proprietor possesses many fine personal attributes including tact and geniality, his success is a matter of no speculation.

In Grand Rapids, Mich., Captain Burke was united in marriage with Cornelia Minder Hout a native of that state, and three children have been born to them. William W., Jr., is a clerk in the Angelus hotel in San Pedro; John Francis assists his father in the store; and Douglas is also at home. As can be gathered from the foregoing brief account of Captain Burke's life it will be seen that he has traveled extensively and the breadth of knowledge which this privilege invariably bestows has not been denied him, but on the other hand has furnished fund of information which makes him a ready and agreeable conversationalist. To some extent he is interested in mining properties in Mexico. Politically he casts his vote in favor of the Republican candidates.

JOHN GEORGE BAUM. Three miles southeast of Inglewood lies the ranch which is owned and operated by John George Baum and which comprises one hundred and forty acres of valuable land. In addition to the management of this tract he operates rented lands adjoining, so that the total aggregate of his holdings reaches five hundred and sixty acres. When he first came to Los Angeles county in October, 1902, he rented the ranch which he still operates and at once became interested in the raising of beans and of grain, managing the tract as a renter until November, 1905, when he acquired that portion of the estate now under his title. Energetic and capable, he is already gaining a position among the prosperous ranchers of the locality, and, should misfortune not betide, the future years will place his fortunes upon a substantial basis and increase his landed holdings.

A native son of California, Mr. Baum was born in Ventura county, this state, April 1, 1875, and is the second among the six children of George and Linnie (Hartman) Baum, natives of Jackson county, Ohio. His father grew to manhood upon a farm and followed agricultural pursuits in Ohio until 1873, when he brought his wife to California, settling near Springville, Ventura county, where since he has engaged in raising beans and beets. At this writing (1906) he is about sixty-four years of age and his wife fifty-five, but both are yet quite active and vigorous, and superintend their ranch of fifty acres with energy and success. It was on this old homestead that their son, John George, gained his early knowledge of agricultural pursuits and the raising of beans and beets, and when not in school he proved a capable assistant on the ranch. On attaining his majority he rented two hundred and eighty-five acres in Ventura county and took up ranching for himself, but after three years he began to raise beans and beets for the American Beet Sugar Company at Oxnard, and during the five years he remained in the work he met with encouraging success. On severing his connection with interests in Ventura county he came to Los Angeles county and since has become a land owner and rancher of this portion of the state.

The marriage of Mr. Baum took place April 27, 1898, and united him with Miss Sarah Biggart, who was born in New York but since 1886 has made her home on the Pacific coast. Three children comprise their family, namely: Alvin Walter, Jennie Alice and Arline Lotta. The only organization in which Mr. Baum holds membership is the Fraternal Brotherhood, and he has maintained a warm interest in the work of that order. Public-spirited as a citizen, progressive as a man, stanch in his allegiance to the Democratic party, liberal in his views, willing to aid friends who are candidates for office but never desirous of securing office for himself, he furnishes an illustration of the native Californians whose energy and intelligence promise success for themselves and prosperity for the commonwealth.

HARVEY W. HINCKS. One of the rising young business men of Long Beach is Harvey W. Hincks, surveyor and draughtsman, with offices in the Long Beach Bank building, from which emanates much of the most important business in that line transacted in Long Beach and vicinity. He is a descendant of Scotch-Irish antecedents, who founded the family in Ontario, Canada, and there the father, John F. Hincks, was born August 7, 1857. During his boyhood years he had been trained to perform his share of the duties which fall to the lot of farmers' sons, but he was not sufficiently pleased with the life to follow it after he reached years of discretion and could choose his own calling. His tastes lay rather along professional lines, and thus it was that he matriculated as a student in Detroit Medical College and prepared himself for the medical profession. After his graduation he settled in Manistee, Mich., where he enjoyed a lucrative practice the remainder of his life, passing away there in 1901. In his young manhood he married Mary A. Porter, also a native of Ontario, who still resides on the old homestead in Manistee, Mich. The younger of the two sons born to Mr. and Mrs. Hincks, J. Frank, has followed in the footsteps of his father in the matter of a profession and is a graduate of the University of Michigan and is now a practicing surgeon in the Jackson City Hospital, in Jackson, Mich.

Harvey W. Hincks was born in Goderich, Ontario, June 24, 1880, his parents removing to Michigan when he was a child of only four years. As for him, his life really began in Manistee, where he attended both the common and high schools and later, in 1899, entered as a student in the University of Michigan. His intention had been to take a thorough course in mechanical and civil engineering, but the death of his father in 1901 brought his student life to a close and put before him the necessity of obtaining his own support. Accepting the first opportunity that offered, for a short time he was a clerk in the office of the Manistee & Northeastern Railroad, but the fall of that year found him in Los Angeles, where he was employed as draughtsman in the office of E. T. Wright and S. O. Wood, until he obtained a position with a party on the United States Geological Survey. Later in the same year he came to Long Beach and entered the office of the city engineer as chief draughtsman, a position which he filled with credit to himself until he was appointed building inspector for the city of Long Beach. In December, 1905, he opened an office of his own, and has since been established in the Long Beach Bank Building. All of the large and authentic maps of Long Beach now in use are his work, and he has likewise surveyed and made plats of Long Beach, Alamitos, Compton, and much of the adjacent country. Each month these plats are brought up to date, noting all changes and subdivisions, which makes them absolutely correct and invaluable for reference. He has lately completed an official map of the city of Long Beach, which was the first of the kind to give in minute detail the new city limits. It is a work of art and considered one of the finest pieces of work ever given to the public in Southern California. Besides the line of work just noted Mr. Hincks also does landscape gardening, such as laying out parks and gardens, a line which in itself forms quite a feature of his business. Twelve men are employed under his direction, either in the office or in the field, each being an expert in his line. Mr. Hincks has recently completed an authentic automobile road map known as the "Auto-Roads of Southern California."

In Los Angeles Mr. Hincks was united in marriage with Mabel E. Smith, a native of Paris, Tex., and one child, Marion Elizabeth, has been born to them. Politically Mr. Hincks is a Republican. As a member of the National Guard of California he served in the Signal Corps of the First Brigade for three years, at the end of which time he received his honorable discharge. He has always been an enthusiast along the line of athletics, and has given much of his time to numerous clubs, such as the Turn Verein, Germania and the local Y. M. C. A., at Long Beach.

HARVEY S. MOURNING. The San Bernardino flour mills, which form one of the leading industries of the city, were established by J. V. Suman, who erected at Colton in 1893 a plant consisting of a complete roller system. Four years later the building and equipment were moved to San Bernardino and since then the business has enjoyed a steady growth. The original owner was succeeded by Harvey S. Mourning, the present proprietor, under whose intelligent oversight a high grade of flour is produced, surpassed by none in California, according to the testimony of competent judges. The plant has a capacity of seventy-five barrels per day and is operated by electricity, besides being provided with other modern appliances well adapted to promote the saving of labor and the increasing of speed, as well as enhancing the quality of the flour. In addition to the principal product, some attention is devoted to the grinding of chicken feed, horse feed and dairy feed, for which there are constant orders sent in by farmers of the vicinity.

The proprietor of the mills came to California from Illinois, where he was born on a farm near Macomb, McDonough county, January 27, 1867, being a son of William H. and Nancy A. (Breeden) Mourning. His father, a native of Kentucky, was taken to Illinois by his parents in infancy and there grew to manhood, married, and settled on a farm. For years he was a prosperous stock-raiser and general farmer. Since his death, which occurred in 1898, his widow has continued to live on the old Illinois homestead. Reared on that farm, Harvey S. Mourning received such advantages as country schools afforded, and later took a course of study in the Macomb Normal School. At the age of twenty-one years he left the old home and the associations of youth, in order to start out for himself, and his first stopping place was in California, where he worked at the milling business for a time. With the means thus earned he returned to Illinois and took a two-years' course of study in the Macomb Normal School. At the expiration of his course of study he returned to Southern California and secured employment in the Colton roller mills.

During the progress of the Spanish-American war in 1898 Mr. Mourning enlisted in Company K, Seventh California Infantry, commanded by Colonel J. R. Berry. The regiment was ordered to San Francisco and encamped at the Presidio until honorably discharged at the expiration of six months. Thereupon Mr. Mourning returned to his work in the roller mill. During October of 1899 he went to New York, but in a short time returned to San Bernardino and became a partner in the milling business with his father-in-law, J. V. Suman, with whom he continued until the death of Mr. Suman July 3, 1904. Since then he has continued the business alone. Besides the management of the mill he is a stockholder in and president of the Gem Mining Company of San Bernardino county, and has interests in other enterprises of an important nature. His comfortable home is presided over by his wife, Josephine F., daughter of J. V. Suman, and a prominent member of the social circles of San Bernardino, where she was residing at the time of her marriage, June 14, 1900. In fraternal relations Mr. Mourning has his membership with Ashlar Lodge No. 306, F. & A. M., at Colton, besides which he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America.

JACOB B. RENTCHLER. Ever since the death of her husband, in 1905, Mrs. Rentchler has made her home on the ranch of fifty acres, not far from the village of La Ballona, in Los Angeles county, upon which he settled in 1895, and began the work of improvement and cultivating the soil for the raising of alfalfa, which is the chief crop harvested.

In common with many who have assisted in developing the possibilities which abound in the west, Mr. Rentchler was of eastern birth, and was born in Union county, Pennsylvania, February 5, 1828, into the home of Jacob and Elizabeth Rentchler. The subscription school, which he attended, was located on his father's farm. In that early day advantages were poor at best, but, meager as they were, Mr. Rentchler managed to gain a fairly good education. Later years found him a resident of Illionis, where for ten years he was engaged in the manufacture of wheat drills and cultivators. In Belleville, that state, he carried on a banking business for a number of years, but finally gave this up and became interested in mining in New Mexico. During the six years spent there he operated several mines, besides owning stock in the Eclipse and Comstock mines. The sale of the famous Kangaroo mine, which he owned, but which was leased to and was worked by other parties, made him a wealthy man, and with the means which this gave him, he came to California, purchasing the ranch upon which his widow now lives, not far from La Ballona, although Palms is the post-office and market town. He passed away in 1905, having attained the ripe age of seventy-seven years.

The lady who became the wife of Mr. Rentchler was, in maidenhood, Mary J. Beecher, and spent her early years in New Orleans. Her father's relatives are connected with Henry Ward Beecher and Harriet Beecher Stowe. With an aunt, whom she had visited in St. Louis, she went to Illinois, and on the way became acquainted with Mr. Rentschler, their marriage following in 1855. Six children were born of their marriage, but only five reached years of maturity. Louis is in the employ of a railroad in St. Louis; Frank R. is connected with the auditor's office in Los Angeles; Anna resides in Belleville, Ill., where her husband, George Rogers, owns an iron foundry; Alice is the wife of Edward Powell, yardmaster in the employ of a railroad in New Mexico; George was formerly a builder in Los Angeles, but is now in New Mexico. Mr. Rentchler was a man of public spirit, a good business man and one who always lived a Christian life, following the Golden Rule.

ELBERT A. SPAULDING. The genealogy of the Spaulding family in America dates back to the year 1632, when one of that name crossed the ocean to the primeval wilderness of New England and from the time of his arrival until his death endured the hardships, privations and perils incident to existence on the bleak shores of an unknown sea. Some time after the Pilgrim Fathers had set up their cabins along the Massachusetts shores, a band of emigrants started from that colony to found homes in Connecticut and with them went a member of the Spaulding family. Later generations of that race bore an active part in the upbuilding of Connecticut. In that state Sampson Spaulding was born and reared and from there he removed to Vermont, settling on the frontier with no neighbors except Indians. The cabin home on the then frontier at Orwell, was the birthplace of his son, Ira, and there he passed the years of boyhood and youth, industriously assisting in the converting of a raw tract of land into a profitable farm. During the war of 1812 he assisted his country in winning a second triumph over England, and subsequently he followed the tanner's trade. While Michigan was still one vast unbroken wilderness he traveled thither by "prairie schooner," and in 1833 became one of the very first settlers of Washtenaw county, where he filed a claim to a tract of government land and engaged in tilling the soil during the remainder of his life. Eighty-three useful and active years were granted him and he died at his old Michigan home.

At the time of the removal of the family to Michigan Warren Spaulding, a native of Vermont, was a child of five years, and afterward he gained his education in the early schools of Washtenaw county, eventually taking up agricultural pursuits and reaping a financial success which his large talents abundantly merited. Among his children there was a son, Elbert A., whose name introduces this article and who is now a prominent citizen of Inglewood, Los Angeles county. He owns and makes his home in the house once owned and occupied by John C. Fremont. This son was born at Hillsdale, Mich., February 29, 1856, and grew to manhood upon a farm. Although his educational advantages were meagre, by observation and self-culture he supplemented his text-book lore with knowledge of even greater value in the busy world of affairs. When twenty-one years of age he joined with his father and brother in starting a colony in Richland county, N. Dak., where in the brief interval of eighteen months they located two hundred and sixteen families on carefully selected lands. Later for eight years he traveled as emigrant agent in the employ of the railroad, and also for twelve years held office as notary public and two years as postmaster at Fairmount, N. Dak., also for twenty years he was engaged in the sale of threshing machines. With his brother in 1899 he came to California, looking for a suitable location for settlers, and being pleased with Inglewood he brought back a company of people for this place. Further acquaintance with the climate and soil increased his admiration for this country, and he has no cause for regret in his choice of a permanent location. Three months after coming west he began to take contracts for the erection of houses and since August of 1905 he has also conducted a real-estate business, and as emigration agent has located many hundred people in Inglewood.

The marriage of Mr. Spaulding and Miss Nettie M. Allen, a native of Michigan, was solemnized on Christmas day of 1879, and has been blessed with three sons and six daughters: Zora, deceased; Ava, wife of L. O. Calkins; Ot-tie; Harry; William, deceased; Winnie, deceased; Leora, Edna and Mildred. Though stanchly Republican in his views, Mr. Spaulding has shown no partisanship in his preferences and has never solicited official honors at the hands of his fellow-citizens, although he has accepted various local offices, including that of postmaster of Fairmount, Richland county, N. Dak., and in every position has displayed energy, intelligence and sagacity. In Masonry he has affiliated with the blue lodge at Redondo and has maintained a warm interest in the philanthropies of the fraternity.

JOHN G. PALMER. Countless hosts of visitors to the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893 saw and admired the California exhibit and not a few of them were so pleased with the display of products that they determined to come to the Pacific coast whenever opportunity offered. Among such was John G. Palmer, who formerly had been a minister in the Methodist Episcopal denomination, but was obliged to discontinue preaching on account of impaired health and at the time of the Exposition was engaged in the publishing business at Blairstown, Iowa. A native of Iowa, born November 16, 1854, he had prepared for the ministry in Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., and commenced to preach at Andrew, Iowa. Two years later, in 1878, he was ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal denomination at Maquoketa, Iowa, and later held charges at Andrew, Otterville and Blairstown, Iowa, and at Aberdeen and Highmore, S. Dak. During his pastorate at Aberdeen he was instrumental in securing the erection of a parsonage and a church building which cost $10,000 and which at dedication was paid for with the exception of only $700. After the town of Highmore had been almost wholly wiped out by a cyclone he went to that place and aided in saving the Methodist house of worship from being sold at a sheriff's sale. Indeed, in every place where he labored, he proved his genius as a financier and executive, and every congregation was left, at his departure, in a satisfactory condition financially as well as spiritually. During his residence in South Dakota in 1884-85 he published a Methodist Church historical directory of the state and shortly afterward became interested in the publication of the Blairstown Press, which he conducted for eight years.

The prospects offered by Long Beach induced Mr. Palmer to settle in this city after coming to the west and here, in 1897, he established the Press Printing office with F. R. Smith as a partner. While in charge of the Press he became interested in the construction of the present pleasure wharf. This matter he continued to agitate until a committee was finally selected by the city council and the board of trade and authorized to design such a wharf and report costs, etc., to the authorities. As secretary of this committee, Mr. Palmer labored assiduously for nine months and carried on a voluminous correspondence in relation to similar structures, endeavoring to secure accurate data as to cost and best methods of construction. It was a source of great gratification to him when the report of the committee was accepted and the building brought forward to completion with the result that the wharf is now one of the city's principal attractions. Since coming to Long Beach he has erected eleven dwelling houses and three business blocks, and has maintained a constant interest in the building activities of the city.

The marriage of Mr. Palmer united him with Miss Ida R. Smith, who was born in Illinois. Their family consists of four children, all at home, and named as follows: Harry R., a printer by trade; Jennie M., a stenographer; Ruth Ann and Percy Edward. In politics Mr. Palmer votes with the Republican party. While living in South Dakota he became affiliated with the lodge, chapter and commandery of Masonry at Aberdeen. Though no longer identified with the ministry, he is deeply interested in the work of his denomination, and for many years officiated as secretary of the board of trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Long Beach and as secretary of the official board of the church. At the time of the erection of the first edifice he served on the building committee and gave freely of time and means to push the work forward to a satisfactory completion, and is still a member of the board of trustees.

IRVING LEWIS BLINN. Although young in years the above named gentleman holds rank with the most progressive and enterprising citizens of Whittier, Los Angeles county, where he is a leading factor in the industries of the place as manager of the Whittier Lumber & Mill Company, a well known enterprise of Southern California. Mr. Blinn is a native son of the state, his birth having occurred in San Francisco August 2, 1870. In that locality he was reared to the age of seventeen years, receiving his education in St. Matthew's Hall school of San Mateo and Hopkins Academy of Berkeley. Following the completion of his studies he was sent by his father, Lewis W. Blinn, to represent the latter's interest at Tombstone, Ariz., where he remained until December, 1888. In that year he came to Los Angeles and opened an office, representing the Blinn Lumber Company in a clerical position, continuing so occupied for some time, when he became an employe of the San Pedro Lumber Company in order to become thoroughly familiar with the lumbering business. Both companies engaged extensively in the wholesale and retail lumber trade and by his application to the work he became proficient in every department and capable of superintending the business. In 1889 he resigned from his position in Los Angeles and went north in order to accept a position in Tacoma, Wash., to thoroughly familiarize himself with the details of the lumber manufacturing business. He became associated with the Tacoma Mills Company in the capacity of manager, having charge of their retail business for the period of two years. Going to Portland, Ore., at the expiration of that time he opened a lumber brokerage office, and later, in company with others, bought a sawmill located at Westport, on the Columbia river. He met with gratifying success in this enterprise and acquired an experience which has been of inestimable service to him throughout his career in this line of business. Heeding a wish of his father's, he returned to Southern California in June, 1903, and assumed the management of the Whittier Lumber Company, which position he still occupies. He is justly numbered among the most enterprising and substantial men of this section.

Mr. Blinn now makes his home in Whittier, where he is a leading citizen. He has one son, Lewis W. Blinn, by a former marriage. Fraternally Mr. Blinn is associated with the Elks, being a member of Lodge No. 142, of Portland, Ore., Lodge No. 323, F. & A. M., and Lodge No. 91, R. A. M., the two latter of Whittier, Cal.

JOSEPH AUSTIN EDWARDS. Among the business men of Hemet there is none more enterprising and energetic than Joseph Austin Edwards, who has been a resident of Southern California since 1887. The Edwards family has been a prominent one in this country ever since the early colonial days, when the great-grandfather, Casper Edwards, fought in the French and Indian wars, and as a participant in the battle of Quebec was one of the men who assisted in carrying the body of General Wolfe from the field. He also served in the Revolutionary war, was in the battle of Princeton, and was at one time taken captive by the Indians, who carried him to Quebec. Joseph Edwards, the son of Casper, married Abigail Buell, whose father also was a Revolutionary soldier. The grandfather, who was born in Windsor, Broome county, N. Y., removed to Chenango county, and later, in 1843, to Wisconsin, where his death finally occurred. Edward F. Edwards, the father of Joseph Austin, was born in Chenango, N. Y., in 1822, and removed to Wisconsin when twenty years of age. He bought a farm near East Troy, in Walworth county, and improved it, in 1852 removing to LaCrosse county, buying a farm at West Salem, twelve miles from LaCrosse. He was one of the very first settlers in that section of the state, became the first postmaster at West Salem, and was also a justice of the peace there. That place continued to be his residence until 1882, when he went still further west and located at Huron, S. Dak. After living there a number of years he came to California to make his home with his son. The mother, who was Almira Carver in maidenhood, was a daughter of Austin Carver, also an early settler in Walworth county, Wis., and is now living with J. A. Edwards, he being the only one of their two children now living. The elder Mr. Edwards is eighty-four years of age, and his wife five years younger.

It was in July, 1848, that Mr. Edwards was born near East Troy, Walworth county, Wis., his boyhood days being spent on the farm at West Salem, where he received his preliminary education in the public schools, and took a finishing course in the West Salem Academy. After graduation he taught one term of school, but finding that he preferred a business career in 1872 he began to deal in grain, wool and live stock, shipping stock and produce from six different stations along the Chicago & Northwestern Railway to Chicago, soon conducting the largest business of that nature on the division. Impaired health compelled him to seek a milder climate, and in 1887 he came to Los Angeles, spending two years in recuperating, and in 1889 again took an active part in business operations. He purchased an orange orchard at Azusa, kept it a short time, then sold it and located at Burbank where he engaged in the dried fruit business, built a packing house and continued to conduct it for seven years. From there he removed to Phoenix, Ariz., where he was in the grocery business until 1905. In the meantime he had also become the owner of an alfalfa and stock ranch at Glendale, Ariz. Disposing of his property interests in that state he returned to California, and in Hemet purchased the Cree & Bruce grocery store and also the stock of Graham & Fast, and has turned his business into general merchandising, with a very complete stock, it being the largest store of its kind in Riverside county. He employs eight experienced assistants and three horses and wagons. His business grew to such an extent that the old quarters were inadequate and in November of 1905 he erected a new building 50x75 feet in dimensions, which is used as a salesroom, with warehouses in the rear. He has also opened up a branch grocery store in Valle Vista, and to all his interests he gives his personal supervision.

The marriage of Mr. Edwards occurred in Wisconsin, and united him with Miss Mona Dickinson, a native of Massachusetts. One daughter, who is now Mrs. Hattie Noyes, of Greenwood, Wis., was born to them. Mrs. Edwards died in Wisconsin. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the Republican party and while official positions do not appeal to him he does his duty as an active and public spirited citizen and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

EBER K. BITHER. Since the founding of the town of Oxnard during the year 1898 Mr. Bither has been identified with its commercial and agricultural interests, and meanwhile has developed a transfer business from an insignificant enterprise to its present large proportions. The management of this business with the filling of the contract for the sprinkling of the streets and also the filling of orders for draying, he gives over largely to his sons, while his attention is devoted in large measure to the management of three hundred and thirty acres near town, utilized in the raising of beets and beans as well as other farm produce. The barns necessary for the proper care of his twenty-six head of horses as well as the substantial residence occupied by his family have been erected under his supervision in recent years, and each is well adapted for its special purpose.

Of remote Scotch descent, Mr. Bither is a member of an old Maine family, and was born in Aroostock county, that state, February 27, 1851, being a son of Phineas and Maria (Porter) Bither, natives respectively of Freedom, Waldo county, Me., and Nova Scotia. The paternal grandfather, Benjamin Bither, was a native and lifelong resident of Maine, where he followed the builder's trade. The maternal grandfather, David Porter, became a pioneer of Wisconsin and Minnesota, where he engaged in mining, also labored as a pioneer agriculturist and frontiersman, and during the Blackhawk war went out against the Indians with other early settlers. At the age of twenty-two years Phineas Bither settled upon seventy-five acres of timbered land, which he cleared and made ready for cultivation, and afterward he devoted the tract principally to potatoes. On that place he remained until death.

Four sons and three daughters comprised the parental family and of these three sons and two daughters survive, the gentleman whose name introduces this article being the eldest of the number. As a boy he became familiar with work in the lumber regions of Maine and with the ceaseless toil connected with the care of the small home place, which under the most intensive form of cultivation scarcely produced enough for the proper education of the large family of children. At the age of twenty-two years he left home to make his own way in the world. During two winter seasons he was employed in driving teams in Clearfield, Pa., and from there in 1876 came to California, establishing himself on a farm near the Cottonwood, in Merced county, where he leased three hundred and twenty acres of grain land. From that beginning he increased his leaseholds until he had the cultivation of three thousand acres under his personal care, and the large output of grain he hauled to Hill's Ferry for shipment. After the death of his wife in 1887 he removed to Saticoy and for two years engaged in farming and teaming, after which he cultivated a portion of the Las Posas rancho for three years. During the next two years he engaged in teaming in Santa Cruz, from which point he returned to Ventura county and the Las Posas rancho. Three years later, in 1898, he came to the new town of Oxnard, where he rented land and embarked in the raising of beans and beets. Shortly afterward he bought out Bell's transfer line and from it has developed a large and profitable business.

The marriage of Mr. Bither took place in Maine and united him with Miss Mary Buck, who was born in that state and died in Merced county, Cal., leaving four children, namely: Vivian R., who married Frank Runkle, of Simi, Ventura county; Miriam A., who resides with her father in Oxnard; Harry S. and Hartley S., who have charge of the transfer business owned by their father. Another son, Eber, died while yet a small child. Politically a Democrat, Mr. Bither at no time has been active in politics nor has he ever sought political offices, but he has maintained a keen interest in affairs tending toward the progress of county, state and nation. Since coming to Oxnard he has been identified actively with the lodge and encampment of the Odd Fellows, and in addition has held membership with the Independent Order of Foresters.

EDWARD PRENTISS CLYDE. Probably no one in the vicinity of Highland can more fittingly claim the title of pioneer than Edward P. Clyde, who for nearly half a century has lived on his present property not far from Highland. When he located here in September, 1855, Indians were his nearest neighbors and the frequent visitations from wild animals made constant watchfulness on the part of the settlers a necessity. All of this is now changed, and in the transformation which the intervening years have brought about in the introduction of labor-saving machinery and the multitudinous influences that make for progress none has been a more interested witness than Mr. Clyde.

A native of the Empire state, Edward P. Clyde was born in St. Lawrence county November 9, 1831, a son of George W. and Cynthia (Davis) Clyde. About 1835, when their son was a lad of four years, the parents took up their westward march, crossing the Mississippi river and locating for a time in Missouri. Another removal found them in Illinois, from there going to Iowa, and in 1850 they crossed the plains and took up their abode in Utah. Of the seven children originally comprising the parental family Edward P. is next to the oldest living. In April, 1855, he started from Utah with California as his destination. Settling in San Bernardino county, he erected the first house which appeared in this part of the valley. In 1858 he purchased one hundred acres near what is now Highland, but from time to time he has disposed of portions of it until now he has only thirty acres, upon which he is engaged in general farming with very satisfactory results. In the early days he planted trees which have grown and flourished with passing years until today one of the most distinguishing features of the Clyde ranch is the grove of alanthus trees, which have grown to enormous size.

A marriage ceremony performed December 26, 1858, united the destinies of Edward P. Clyde and Mary Singleton, the latter a daughter of Robert and Betsy (Hindle) Singleton. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Clyde, William Robert, George Edward and Rufus Thomas, all of whom are living.

DANFORD ATWOOD. The years that have elapsed since the death of Danford Atwood have not effaced from the minds of those who knew him the splendid characteristics and qualities of manhood shown in his career of pioneer and upbuilder of the best interests of San Bernardino county. He was the representative of an old New England family on his mother's side. She was formerly Lucy Turner, a native of Connecticut, while his father, Reuben Atwood, and two brothers, immigrated from England and took up their residence in that state. Some time after his marriage Reuben Atwood decided to immigrate to the western part of the middle west, and in Nauvoo, Ill., made his home for some time. Finally removing to Council Bluffs, Iowa, he resided there until his death, which occurred at an advanced age. His wife survived him for some time, eventually passing away in Springfield, Utah. They were the parents of four children, of whom Danford was the eldest; Rebecca, Mrs. Wareham, died in Springfield, Utah, in which city Celah and Dwight also passed away.

Danford Atwood was born in Connecticut in 1823 and in childhood was brought to the frontier, where he was reared to manhood among the primitive surroundings of the middle west. Early imbued with the frugal and conscientious habits of his New England ancestors, he embarked in an independent career with no capital save that of his qualities of manhood. In 1850, in Council Bluffs, he was united in marriage with Miss Jane Garner, a native of Illinois. Her father, George Garner, was born in North Carolina and in young manhood located in Quincy, Ill., where he engaged in farming for some years, later removing to Council Bluffs, Iowa. In 1850 he removed to Payson, Utah, following stock-raising and farming there and making that place his home throughout the remainder of his life. He was a descendant of a Revolutionary family, his father having served in the Colonial army. He died at the advanced age of one hundred and five years, while the grandmother lived to the age of one hundred and six. George Garner was first married in Hancock county, Ill., to Elizabeth Hedrick, a native of Indiana, and a daughter of Reuben Hedrick. She died in Illinois at the age of thirty-two years. They had six children, of whom three are now living, namely: Mrs. Atwood; John E. Garner, a farmer of San Bernardino; and Mrs. Rathbun, also of San Bernardino. For his second wife Mr. Garner married Lydia Hill. In 1846 he removed to Council Bluffs, Iowa, whence he crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1852 and located in San Bernardino, Cal. He purchased land on Lytle creek and farmed until 1872, when he sold out and went to Utah, where he was killed by a runaway team August 31, 1877.

After his marriage Danford Atwood farmed in Council Bluffs until May, 1860, when with his family he crossed the plains to California, arriving in San Bernardino December 1 of the same year. The trip was a hard and dangerous one. The night before they reached Vagus Springs the train called a halt at two o'clock in the morning and every man and ox laid down to sleep, but Mrs. Atwood, realizing the danger they were in, stood guard for two hours, the train reaching their destination early the next morning in safety. Soon after his arrival in the state Mr. Atwood purchased land, which after two years he sold and reinvested the proceeds in one hundred acres in the Warm creek district. In addition to improving the land he erected a fine residence, good barns and outbuildings. Together with his wife he labored as a pioneer in both his personal affairs and the community in which he made his home, establishing himself as a citizen of worth and works, and one to whom the respect and esteem of all who knew him were generously given. His death was caused by injuries received in a runaway on November 8, 1892, passing away a month later.

Mr. Atwood left a widow and eight children, namely: Eveline, Mrs. Kirkpatrick, of Santa Monica; Ernestine, Mrs. C. C. Janney, of San Bernardino; Arnold, the only son, also of San Bernardino; Ann, wife of William Banford, of Nordhoff, Cal.; Emma, wife of John Shay, of San Bernardino; Ida, wife of William Benson, of Colton, Cal.; Sarah, wife of George Holiday, of San Bernardino; and Lizzie, wife of Judd Rush, a leading attorney of Los Angeles. Since her husband's death Mrs. Atwood has resided in San Bernardino, where she looks after her extensive interests. She is a devoted member of the Christian Church and a woman of rare worth of character, esteemed by all who have known her during her residence in Southern California.

WILLIAM NEWPORT. The city of Chester, where Mr. Newport spent the years of his early life, presents a marked contrast to the locality of his residence during mature years. When he came to Southern California he found the land undeveloped, the towns new and the conditions those of the frontier, while in his old home town antiquity had set its seal upon land and buildings. One of the oldest cities of England, Chester, still has in a fair state of preservation its encircling walls built by the Romans in A. D. 73, in order to protect the inhabitants from invasion. In all of England there is but one other city that has its ancient walls preserved. It is the proud boast of Chester that never once, since its walls were built, has the city been taken by an enemy or succumbed to any foe. Visitors from other points always enjoy the walk along these old walls, with the fine view of the placid and winding river Dee, and the view of the narrow streets of the ancient town with their gabled-roofed houses and galleried stores.

Such were the surroundings with which Mr. Newport became familiar in boyhood days. Born June 5, 1856, he was the only child of the union of William and Mary (Newns) Newport. The father was born in England in 1818 and the paternal grandfather in 1788. The mother was born in 1820, became the wife of William Newport in 1854, and had only one child, to whom was given the name of the father, William. As far back as the records can be traced the ancestors followed farming pursuits, and it is natural that William Newport should have inherited a taste for agriculture. Determining to seek a home in a country where a young man could find a desirable opportunity to prosecute large landed holdings, he came to the United States in 1876, at the age of twenty years, and at once proceeded to San Francisco, thence going to Los Angeles county, where he engaged in farming for nine years, meanwhile studying the soil, climate and possibilities of different localities.

During the year 1885 Mr. Newport came to Riverside county and purchased two thousand acres, almost all of which could be tilled.

His removal to the ranch resembled the migrations of the patriarchs whose journeyings are recorded in Biblical history. Twelve wagons formed the train and were loaded with provisions, lumber, implements and other necessities, including a building 9x18 feet in dimensions, and one story in height, which was utilized as a cookhouse. Cattle, horses and mules in large numbers were driven by his men servants. Menifee valley he found very dry and its few settlers looked with pity upon the young man who, they declared, could not make a success of farming in such a dry country. However, their sentiments did not discourage him. Taking up the work in hand, he built a substantial ranch-house and two large barns. Later he planted ten acres in fruit and laid out ample grounds adorned with shade and ornamental trees, hedges, walks and drives, making of the homestead one of the most attractive in the entire country.

To aid in the cultivation of the land Mr. Newport employs about thirty men, some of whom have been with him twenty years or more. The cooking is in charge of four Chinamen. The plowing is done by means of twenty gangplows with a total capacity of two hundred acres per day. In addition to his large holdings he operates other land, aggregating fifteen thousand acres, of which thirteen thousand acres are in grain (wheat and barley) and the balance in pasture and alfalfa meadow. The grain crops average seven bags per acre each year, but the present crop (1906) will average much more, as the season has been unusually favorable. The harvesting is quickly dispatched with the aid of his four thirty-horse combined harvesters, and all of the other work moves with rapidity and system under the judicious oversight of the proprietor.

One of the specialties of the ranch is the raising of blooded horses and mules. Experience has proved that the pasturage and climate are adapted to the production of fine stock, and some of the animals raised on the land have won wide recognition by their excellent markings and speed. All of the teams used in the cultivation of the land are raised here, as well as many others for the general markets. In addition Mr. Newport engages in raising Berkshire hogs, of which he has some specimens as fine as can be found in the United States. Both in stock and in grain nothing satisfies him that is short of the best. In sowing the land he uses the finest qualities of wheat and barley and as a consequence his grain brings the very highest market prices. The pumping plant which he built about 1894, was the first in this part of the country. Later he put in another plant, both of which he now uses, pumping the water into a large lake, from which it is distributed to any part of the two hundred acres under irrigation.

The putting in of the crops, their harvesting and marketing, are conducted under a regular business system, with the aid of corps of efficient workmen under the capable supervision of Mr. Newport. Energy is the watchword of the proprietor. Laziness is not tolerated, being utterly foreign to his own nature. At half-past four in the morning the hands arise to take care of the stock and while it is yet early, the work in the fields is begun. Dry years have brought hardships and failures of crops, yet in spite of many discouragements Mr. Newport has worked indefatigably and with such energy that he now ranks among the foremost ranchmen of Southern California, and the broad acres which he has transformed into an attractive ranch prove him to be a man of unusual capability.

After having worked for years without a vacation, in 1890 Mr. Newport laid aside agricultural cares for a time and returned to visit Chester and his relatives in old England. There he married Miss Kathryn Lloyd, who, like himself, was born and educated in Chester. They are the parents of five children, namely: William Lloyd, George Denson, Frederick William, Samuel Newns, and Mary Kathryn. The importance of educational work appeals to Mr. Newport, who since 1902 has officiated as school trustee and meanwhile has done much to promote the welfare of the schools of the district.

HENRY BALY. The Bank of San Pedro, a financial institution organized and established in 1888, has for its cashier one of the most prominent and influential citizens of San Pedro, in which city and vicinity he has been a resident for the greater part of twenty-five years. Mr. Baly is a native of London, England, born August 4, 1853, the third of a family of eleven children, of whom six attained maturity and five are now living. His father, William Baly, was a man of ability and education, having graduated from the Royal Academy of Music, in London, where he became a professor of the science of composition. He finally retired from active cares and spent the remainder of his life at his country home at Exeter. He is survived by his wife, formerly Adelaide C. Byrn, a native of London, whose home is still in Exeter.

Henry Baly was reared in Exeter and educated in Mt. Radford College, which he attended until he was fourteen years old, when he went to sea as midshipman. During the three or four years ensuing he rounded the Cape of Good Hope three times and Cape Horn twice during his first trip to Melbourne on the Champion of the Sea (of the Black Ball Line), the vessel being dismasted. When eighteen years of age he quit the sea, and in the fall of 1872 came to America. He spent three years in Illinois and Indiana, farming for a part of the time in Du Page county, Illinois, and in the vicinity of Goodland, Newton county, Indiana. In the spring of 1876 he came to California, from Los Angeles going north to Colusa county, where he spent his first summer in Bear valley in farming and stock-raising. Early in the fall he returned to Los Angeles county and located in Wilmington, where he entered the employ of Jacoby Brothers, merchants of that place. He remained in this occupation for three years, engaged as a bookkeeper, when he located in the vicinity of Eldorado, Butler county, Kans., where he followed farming. Disposing of the two farms which he owned, in 1885, he once more located in Wilmington and engaged in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and also as United States custom house inspector. He became prominent in public affairs in the city and for two terms served as city clerk, and in the meantime, in 1893, had entered the Bank of San Pedro as bookkeeper. In 1897 he became assistant cashier, which position he held until 1902, when he was elected cashier. He is also a member of the board of directors and is an important factor in the upbuilding of the institution. This bank was established as a state institution in 1888 and from its organization has made rapid progress toward an important place among the financial institutions of this section, in the last three years having trebled its deposits. In addition to his position with this bank Mr. Baly is also interested as vice-president and director of the Citizens' Savings Bank of San Pedro, which he helped to organize. He owns his residence in San Pedro and also other valuable real estate and takes an active interest in the development and progress of the place.

In Wilmington Mr. Baly was united in marriage with Anna Louise Parsons, a native of Iowa, and the daughter of William Parsons, who came to California with the Iowa colony that settled in Riverside. His death occurred in Ventura county, California. Mr. and Mrs. Baly became the parents of the following children: John, in business in San Pedro; Henry, bookkeeper for the E. K. Wood Lumber Company, of San Pedro; Adelaide and Robert. Fraternally Mr. Baly was made a Mason in San Pedro and has been raised to the Royal Arch degree in this lodge. He also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is past noble grand. Politically he is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and in his religious views is a member of the Episcopal Church. Mr. Baly occupies a place of importance among the citizens of San Pedro, all who know him recognizing the ability and integrity which have marked his residence in this section.

FRED SCHOLDER. Since 1858 Mr. Scholder has been closely identified with all plans and projects inaugurated for the advancement and well-being of San Diego county, his interest centering more particularly perhaps around Mesa Grande, where he has resided continuously for nearly half a century. In recalling incidents connected with the early days in the vicinity Mr. Scholder would no doubt give first place to the disturbance experienced at the hands of the Mexicans, who resented the invasion of the white man and manifested their dislike in no unmistakable manner. Some idea of the remoteness of neighbors may be gathered when it is known that in order to form a jury it required all of the men in the county. The same year in which Mr. Scholder came to the state he purchased the ranch upon which he now resides. It bore little resemblance to the fine ranch which is to be seen today, for it was almost entirely covered with timber and brush, and much labor was necessary before crops could be planted. In addition to the original purchase of one hundred and sixty acres he has added adjoining land to the amount of nine hundred acres, devoted almost entirely to the raising of stock, although some of the land is in grain.

Mr. Scholder is of German birth and parentage, and is a son of John and Victoria (Hier) Scholder, both of whom spent their entire lives in Germany, the former passing away at the age of seventy-six and the latter when sixty years of age. Four of their eight children, however, became residents of the United States, all settling in Ohio with the exception of Fred. The latter was born in Wurtemberg May 6, 1832, and until he attained his eighteenth year remained in his native land. Equipped with a good common-school education he came to the United States in 1850, going direct to Philadelphia from New York City. After working on a farm in New Jersey for about three years he joined the regular army and was detailed for duty in the Apache Indian war in Arizona. His service extended over five years, during which time he was wounded in the leg, and he received his discharge at Tucson. It was at this point in his career that he decided to come to San Diego county, demonstrating his approval and satisfaction upon coming here by taking up land from the government and becoming a permanent settler.

In 1864 Mr. Scholder was married and of the thirteen children born to himself and his wife, two died in infancy and Lulu, when about four years old. Named in order of birth the others are as follows: Fritz, who married Isabelle Martinas; Adolph; Pauline; Joseph; Margaret, who died at the age of twenty-six; Samuel, who died when in his seventeenth year; William; Ora; John and Louisa. In his political belief Mr. Scholder is independent, casting his vote, as every good citizen should do, with a view to the candidate's fitness for office, irrespective of party name or creed. At one time Mr. Scholder was considerably interested in mining, locating several tourmaline claims which later proved very productive, and several gold claims; and from one ton of rock he secured $500 worth of gold. He still has a fine claim on his ranch, but of late years he has relinquished mining to a great extent and given his attention more exclusively to the management of his ranch.

JAMES C. WATKINS. A man of unlimited energy, enthusiasm and enterprise, J. C. Watkins is successfully engaged in the livery business in Fallbrook, and is here prominently identified with many of its leading interests, being proprietor of the local transfer line, a mail carrier, and a stockholder in both the Fallbrook Hardware Company and the Fallbrook Mercantile Company. A man of strong mental vigor and great business aptitude, he holds a good position among the leading citizens of the place, and is ever among the foremost to forward all enterprises calculated to develop and promote the general welfare of the people and the community. A son of the late W. K. Watkins, he was born, April 18, 1866, in Sonoma county, Cal., where he lived until three years old.

Born in Arkansas, W. K. Watkins came to California when a young man, crossing the plains with ox-teams in 1853. Traveling in the same train as far as Salt Lake was a little girl nine years old, named Pathenia Catherine Miller, whom he subsequently wooed and won, marrying her in 1858. She remained with her parents in Utah for a year, and then came with them to California, and her mother, now an aged woman of ninety-one years, resides with her in Fallbrook. W. K. Watkins was a farmer throughout his life, beginning his operations in that direction in Arkansas, and closing his career in San Diego county, where his death occurred in 1896, at the age of sixty-six years. His father, Ewell Watkins, was a pioneer preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, first in Arkansas, and later as a circuit rider throughout Southern California.

But three years of age when he was brought by his parents to Los Angeles county, J. C. Watkins lived there until 1880, when he came with them to San Diego county. Here he completed his early education, walking three miles each morning to the district school. Selecting the independent occupation with which he became familiar in his boyhood, he purchased land in Valley Center, and was there engaged in tilling the soil for a number of years. Desirous then of making a change, he traded his ranch for his present livery business in Fallbrook, and in its management has been exceedingly successful. Taking possession in 1893, he has built up a lucrative patronage, in addition to running a livery and feed stable carrying the mail and operating a transfer line. Kind, obliging and accommodating, he is very popular with his many patrons, and as a man and a citizen is held in high esteem.

On Thanksgiving day, November 30, 1904, Mr. Watkins married Ella Bunkerman, a daughter of Fred and Rebecca Bunkerman, formerly residents of Kansas, but since 1902 residents of Southern California. Mr. and Mrs. Watkins have one daughter, Anna Izetta. Politically Mr. Watkins is a steadfast Democrat; fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and religiously both Mr. and Mrs. Watkins are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CAPT. JAMES A. McVICAR. During the early portion of the nineteenth century Alexander McVicar, a native of the shire of Argyle on the rock-bound shores of western Scotland, came to the new world and settled in New Brunswick, where, as in his earlier home, he followed a seafaring life. For a time he was employed as a stevedore in St. George. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Elizabeth McDermid, was of Scotch birth and came from the vicinity of Edinburgh. Among their children was a son, Archibald, who was born at St. George and followed the occupation of a stevedore at the docks of St. Johns, dying in the former town in 1865. In early life he had married Eliza Tracy, who was born in New Brunswick of English parentage. Seven children were born of their union, one of whom, William, died at San Pedro, Cal. Only three of the family are now living, and of these James A. is the only one living on the Pacific coast. The third among the children, he was born at St. John, New Brunswick, August 14, 1851, and at five years of age removed to St. George with the other members of the family.

The circumstance of environment determined Captain McVicar's occupation in life. As he lived in a seaport town and belonged to a seafaring family, it was natural that he should drift into a sailor's life. June 8, 1865, he entered the coasting trade on the American ship Lebanon, and later went on the deep water in the trans-Atlantic trade and to the West Indies. In 1874 he was mate and the following year became master of his vessel. In 1876 he sailed around the Horn and north to Central America, and later made a second trip to the same point, thence north to San Francisco, where his ship cast anchor in August of 1878. Following his arrival on the Pacific coast he acted as second mate on the Rival; mate on the Serena Thayer out from San Pedro; mate on the Jessie Nickerson and then on the H. L. Tiernan; second mate on the brig Hazard, to Honolulu (where he was ill in a hospital for three months); and back to San Francisco, where he secured a position as mate on the coaster Haves.

While acting as mate on the schooner Edward Parks, in 1880 Captain McVicar was wrecked on Humboldt Bar. Several of those on board were lost. By jumping overboard and swimming to a larger boat near by, his life was saved, but he lost all of his possessions. The next position which he held was that of mate on the Serena Thayer, after which he made two voyages on the Anna Larson, and then served as foreman of the San Pedro dock for one year. Subsequent positions were with the Halcyon and the Uncle John as mate, during which time he made a voyage to Australia. In October of 1885 he became master of the Serena Thayer, which position he continued to fill until January of 1901, and then was master of the Reporter for six months and of the brig Geneva for two and one-half years, meanwhile making two trips to Australia, one voyage to Peru and several on the coast. After a long and eventful life as a mariner he quit the sea April 29, 1904, and took up the quiet life of a landsman.

Buying an interest with R. L. Brand in the meat business, in February, 1905, Captain McVicar established the firm of McVicar & Brand, who had a large local trade and also made a specialty of furnishing meats to vessels and ships that anchor at the port of San Pedro. The residence of Captain McVicar stands on Fourteenth street near Mesa and was erected under his supervision in 1889. His marriage was solemnized in Los Angeles November 13, 1887, and united him with Annie Edwards, who was born at Hastings, England, being a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Hines) Edwards, also natives of England. During early years Mr. Edwards learned the plasterer's trade and this he followed for many years after bringing his family to Los Angeles. At this writing he and his wife make their home with their daughter, Mrs. McVicar. The latter was educated in Los Angeles and for about four years held a position as a bookkeeper in the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company, resigning at the time of her marriage. Four children were born of her union, but one, Annie Leona, died at six years of age. Those now living are James William, Allen Archibald and Edward Randolph. In religion Mrs. McVicar is identified with the Episcopal Church and the captain is of the Presbyterian faith. In 1884 he was made a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Humboldt and now belongs at San Pedro, while his wife is past-grand of the kindred order of Rebekahs. At one time he was active in the Ancient Order of United Workmen, for many years was a member of St. Andrew's Society of San Francisco, and since 1886 has affiliated with the Knights of Pythias at San Pedro. Before leaving New Brunswick he was made a Mason at St. George in 1872 and in 1886 transferred his membership to the lodge at Humboldt, Cal., where he still has his name enrolled. Since becoming a citizen of the United States he has kept posted concerning political questions and has given his support to the Republican party.

RAVAUD HOVEY CHITTENDEN, M. D., is descended from a hardy race of pioneers. His ancestors were among those sturdy men and women of the early day in the history of our country, whose indomitable courage led them to face hardship and privations in order to found for themselves homes in a new land, and in doing so became the founders of a great nation. Their descendants are a long-lived race. On the forward march of civilization the graves of the weaker ones border the trail, and only the stronger ones survive to the end of the journey. These leave to their children, and their children's children, an inheritance of strength and endurance that serves them well in the battle of life. The first Chittenden, founder of the family in America, landed on our shores in 1630, and numerous descedants are scattered throughout the country. Dr. Chittenden's father was Linus Chittenden; his mother, Julia Ann Hovey, was of Revolutionary stock, and the fourth white child born in the Genesee Valley, New York.

Dr. Chittenden was born near Pittsford, a small town near Rochester, N. Y., in 1835. He received his early education in the public schools of Buffalo, and for a time after leaving school was a teacher in Erie county, New York. In 1855, at the age of twenty years, he removed to McHenry county, Illinois, and in the fall of 1856 married Miss Maggie F. Mitchell, a native of Newburg, N. Y. For a number of years following he was engaged as a bricklayer and mason, but with an ambition to prepare himself for a profession, at the same time he took up the study of medicine. In August, 1861, soon after the breaking out of the Civil war, he enlisted as a private in Company H, Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and with his regiment was engaged in the battle of Pea Ridge. When later he received his discharge from the volunteer service it was to enter the hospital service as hospital steward, his knowledge of medicine proving of advantage to him in obtaining this position, as well as making of him a valuable assistant. After one year as hospital steward he was discharged for disability, at Lookout Mountain, Tennessee. He subsequently re-enlisted in the Seventh Regiment United States Veteran Volunteers, and was steward of that regiment until receiving his final discharge from service in 1866. During his various periods of enlistment he saw much active service. He was stationed at Washington, D. C., at the time of the assassination of President Lincoln and was in the midst of the excitement of those thrilling days that followed. He was at the final grand review of the troops in Washington, the closing year of the war.

While in Philadelphia, in 1866, Dr. Chittenden attended his first course of lectures at the old Jefferson Medical College, from there going to Long Island, where he graduated in the fall of 1866. Immediately thereafter he removed to Iowa and located in Jones county, where he succeeded in building up for himself a large practice, covering not only his home county, but also Cedar county adjoining. He remained in Jones county five years, and then removed to Stanwood, where he practiced two years, and from there went to Kansas and settled in Emporia. Becoming weary of city life he traded his property in the city for a farm and for a time lived in the country, but did not in the meantime abandon the practice of his profession. Later he removed to Mound City, Holt county, and in the following seven years built up a fine practice, treating over four thousand cases during that time. He next removed to Kansas City, and opened an office, where he practiced for three years.

Dr. Chittenden has been a resident of California since 1900. He first located in Santa Cruz and followed the practice of his profession three years, then removing to Long Beach, where he continues his practice. The doctor has a long record as general medical practitioner, and several degrees attest his knowledge of his profession. He took the regular course in medicine and graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Chicago, in 1883.

After completing the study of osteopathy he occupied a chair in the National School of Osteopathy one year. He is well known in medical circles, having been a member of the State Medical Societies of Kansas and Iowa, and is a constant contributor to various well-known medical journals. He was a member of the board of United States Pension Medical Examiners in both Missouri and Kansas.

Mrs. Chittenden has been a valuable assistant to her husband in his profession and has worked side by side with him during his long years of practice. In order to be with him she volunteered as a nurse during the Civil war, and in ministering to sick and suffering soldiers endured trials that few women of the time had courage to face. Since then she has secured a certificate as registered pharmacist in Kansas. Both Dr. and Mrs. Chittenden are interested in Grand Army affairs, Mrs. Chittenden being a member of the Woman's Relief Corps, and the Doctor a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, serving as commander of the post at Mound City. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and the Ancient Order of United Workmen in Kansas. Dr. and Mrs. Chittenden are members of the Congregational Church in Long Beach. The family consists of five children, three daughters and two sons: Mrs. Essie Morrin lives at Rumsey, Yolo county, Cal., and Mrs. Alida Humphrey at Berkeley; another daughter, Maggie Monahan, is deceased, and her two daughters, Dessie and Merl, have since made their home with their grandparents, Dr. and Mrs. Chittenden; Homer T. is a printer of Kansas City, Mo.; Horace Walter, M. D., is a practitioner at Melvern, Kas.

Since coming to Long Beach Dr. Chittenden has interested himself in real estate and has met with success in that line of business. The family residence is at No. 626 West Third street.

HENRY SEYMOUR CALLAHAN. Active, enterprising, and of great business aptitude and talent, H. S. Callahan holds high rank among the prominent citizens of Long Beach, and is ever among the foremost to forward all projects conducive to the public welfare. He is counted one of the most conservative business men in Long Beach, where in 1901 he started with a stock of household furnishings and furniture valued at $2,000, and at this writing (1905) his stock is valued at $20,000.

Born in Houston, Jackson county, Ind., August 19, 1868, H. S. Callahan is a son of Dent and Edith (Matlock) Callahan, the former of whom was born in 1818 and settled in Indiana during a very early period in the history of that state. Throughout his entire active life he was a tiller of the soil, and is now living retired in Kurtz, Jackson county, Ind., his wife having died in that state in 1900. Although his parents were people of some means, H. S. Callahan was early in life initiated into the world of work, and after attending the public school at Houston and graduating from the county school he accepted a position in a furniture store in Seymour, Ind. He continued in the employ of others until 1892, when he came to California merely to see the country, and with little thought of settling here permanently. With the keenness of perception which is one of his notable characteristics he foresaw possibilities here in the west which did not exist in the Hoosier state and he wisely determined to remain and establish himself in the newer country. For a short time he clerked in a store in Santa Ana, but before long he was enabled to purchase a half interest in the firm of F. S. Northrup & Co., a business arrangement which existed for two years and a half, when he sold out his share in the business. Again entering the employ of others he worked for Ira Chandler for about six years, and later was collector for E. J. Brent, of Los Angeles, for nine months. Still later he had charge of the store of J. D. Beach & Sons on Broadway, a position which he held until resigning in 1901 to engage in business on his own account in Long Beach. In order to get a start he purchased a half interest in the E. V. Hill Furniture Company, but one year later he purchased the entire business and removed to his present quarters in the Masonic Temple. The fact that he was enabled to increase the value of his stock in four years to ten times its original value tells more plainly than can words of his tenacity of purpose and business understanding.

In Santa Ana Mr. Callahan was united in marriage with Augusta Young, a native of Kansas, and one child has been born to them, to whom they have given the name of Thelma. The family home is on Pine street, above the store. From the fact that Mr. Callahan has made such rapid strides in the development of his business, it being conceded that he has the largest stock in Long Beach, it goes without saying that his time for outside affairs is rather limited. Notwithstanding this he is a member of the Board of Trade, a stockholder in the Masonic Association building and the new hotel, and is a member of the Trade Exchange of Los Angeles, besides having stock in the Bank of Commerce. In his religious inclinations he is a Methodist, politically is a Republican, and his fraternal associations ally him with Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M., Chapter No. 84, R. A. M., Commandery No. 40, K. T., and Lodge No. 192, B. P. O. E., all of Long Beach. As a proof of his faith in Long Beach, Mr. Callahan has purchased considerable property in town, in the management of which he has been very successful. Personally, he is a sincere and high-minded gentleman, proud of his good name, his many loyal friends, and the success which has been so fairly and strenuously won.

JOHN BARTLEY SMITHSON. Numbered among those who came to the state over a half century ago is John B. Smithson, who has witnessed the ups and downs of life in a new country and has himself shared in its fluctuating fortunes. The stress and anxiety of former days are now matters of memory only, for in their declining years he and his wife are surrounded by every comfort and are living retired in San Bernardino.

Of English descent and of southern parentage, John B. Smithson was born in Morgan county, Ala., October 6, 1841, and is a son of Allen F. Smithson, who for many years was a planter in Mississippi. As early as 1846 he brought his family across the plains, winter overtaking them in Pueblo, Colo., where they lived in log houses which they erected until the opening of spring. The next step brought them to Salt Lake, where they remained for about two years, during which time the father carried on a farm, which provided for the support of his family. Taking up the westward march again, by means of ox-teams the family finally reached San Bernardino, then almost entirely inhabited by Indians, and so treacherous were they that it was necessary to build a fort for the protection of the women and children. On what is now A street Mr. Smithson purchased a farm which he ran until 1857, selling it that year and returning to Salt Lake, Utah, from there going to Pahreah, Kane county, where he became interested in the cattle business and also was made postmaster of the town. He died there at the age of sixty-three years. The wife and mother was before her marriage Letitia Holliday, who was born in Alabama, a daughter of John Holliday, who left the south in 1846 and the following year came to California. His death, however, occurred in Utah. Mrs. Letitia Smithson died in Salt Lake, having become the mother of five children.

Of the parental family John B. Smithson is the eldest and is the only one in California. He was a lad of about six years when the family removed to Utah in 1847, and he was too young to appreciate the dangers and hardships which the journey involved. In San Bernardino, where they located in 1851, he attended school three weeks, which was the only school training he ever received, and in 1857 returned to Utah with his parents. The following year, however, found him back in San Bernardino. The first opening which came to him in a business way was in the lumber business in San Bernardino, a line of endeavor which he followed for nineteen years, during which time he drove seven yoke of oxen in hauling logs to the mills. Subsequently he gave this up and settled on a farm in Strawberry valley, owning one hundred and sixty acres, to which he later added until at one time he had in his possession four hundred and eighty acres. He made a specialty of raising fine apples, having fifteen hundred trees, besides peaches and plums. Many of the vegetables which he raised grew to enormous size, and it was no uncommon occurrence to gather cabbages which weighed forty-two pounds each. Dairying and stock-raising also formed important industries carried on in connection with the ranch. In spite of his many private interests he had time for matters of public import, and for a number of years was road overseer, a position to which he was appointed in 1890, having charge of the roads in district No. 1. Feeling that he was entitled to a rest after many years of arduous labor, Mr. Smithson sold his farm in 1904 and has since lived retired in San Bernardino, and in December, 1905, he resigned his position as overseer, which leaves him practically free from care.

In San Bernardino, in 1866, Mr. Smithson was married to Miss Jane Cadd, who was born in South Adelaide, Australia, a daughter of Thomas Cadd, a native of England. Her grandfather, John Cadd, also of English birth, removed to Australia with his family and there engaged in farming and stock-raising for a number of years. In 1855 he located in San Bernardino, Cal., and two years later went to Salt Lake City. The following year found him again in San Bernardino, and on the farm which he there established he passed away. At the time of his migration to California in 1855 he was accompanied by his son Thomas, who has ever since been a resident of San Bernardino, engaging first as a farmer and stock-raiser, and later as a freighter. He is now living in a substantial residence on Seventh street, and at the age of seventy-five years is in the enjoyment of good health. His wife, formerly Mary Stetsberry, was also born in England. Her death occurred in San Bernardino. Of the thirteen children born to Mr. and Mrs. Cadd ten are living, Mrs. Smithson being the eldest of the family. The fourth anniversary of her birth was spent in Honolulu. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Smithson, as follows: Thomas Allen, deputy sheriff of Barstow; John Bartley, holding the same position at Needles; Rose Adelle, Mrs. Henry Scharf, of San Bernardino; Effie, also a resident of this city and the wife of John McGarvey; William F., deputy sheriff of Daggett; Adolphus H., a merchant of this city; George F., who also resides here and is engaged in teaming; M. Nell and Lena, both at home; and Charles Frederick, a clerk in a mercantile establishment in this city. Mr. Smithson is a member of the Society of Utah Pioneers of 1847, and also belongs to the Society of California pioneers, of which latter society he is president. Politically he is a Democrat of no uncertain sound, and at one time served on the county central committee. Mrs. Smithson is a member of the church of Latter Day Saints.

WENDELL P. DAILY. The Daily family is one well known in Southern California, and the ancestry of the above representative can be traced to the great-grandfather, Thomas Daily, Sr., who was born in the parish of Groton, in County Tyrone, and who, in young manhood, came to the United States and settled in Pennsylvania. Later years found him established on a farm in Monroe county, N. Y., his death occurring there at the age of ninety-six years. The eldest child of his marriage with Miss Wilcox was Arthur Daily, who was the first white child born in Rush township, Monroe county. The latter never left his native county and died on his farm there when he was sixty-nine years of age. His marriage united him with Lorada Baker, a native of New York, who died in young womanhood, leaving two children, Charles W. and Elizabeth.

Charles W. Daily, the father of Wendell P. Daily, carried on a farm in his native state for some years, but later went to Kansas. At the time when the abolition and pro-slavery elements were fighting for supremacy, he served two years and a half in Company L, Fiftieth New York Engineers, and at the close of the war received his honorable discharge at Elmira, N. Y. After his war experience he conducted a farm in Van Buren county, Mich., then returned to New York, but once more located in Michigan, this time settling in Isabella county. After another trip to his native state he finally came to California in 1892, since which time he has made his home with his son, Charles J. By his marriage with Ruth F. Green, a native of Ohio, three children were born, Charles J., Erastus W. and Wendell P., all of whom are residents of California.

While the family were residing in Van Buren county, Mich., W. P. Daily was born March 25, 1875. His boyhood years, however, were spent almost exclusively in New York state, and his education was received in the common and high schools of Monroe county. While he was still a student in the high school he filled his spare moments by working in a boot and shoe store, and after his graduation took up the work in earnest, following it for about five years.

Following the example of his elder brother, who had come to the state in 1885, W. P. Daily came direct to Ventura county in 1893 and found employment in a boot and shoe store in the city of that name. Thus far in life he had displayed no special interest in agricultural matters, and it is probable that he would have continued in the mercantile line had it not been for the fact that his brother Charles, who for many years was manager of the large Patterson ranch, was meeting with such splendid success as a rancher. During the six years spent as an employe on the Patterson ranch he gained a practical experience which warranted him in purchasing a ranch of his own in 1899. This consists of one hundred and sixty acres not far from Camarillo, where he finds a market for his barley and beans, these two commodities forming his entire harvest. With the exception of forty acres planted to barley the ranch is given over to the raising of beans, which average from fifteen to twenty sacks to the acre.

In 1898 W. P. Daily was married to Miss Lenora Dusch, who was born in California, the daughter of John Dusch. The latter is now deceased, having passed away in 1905, but the mother is still living and makes her home in Somis, this county. Five bright and interesting children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Daily, as follows: Ralph, Mabel, Frank, Emma and Roscoe. Although Mr. Daily is not identified by membership with a religious body, he is in sympathy with and assists liberally all denominations, never withholding assistance, in fact, from any good cause, whether religious or secular. Politically he is a Republican. Throughout his community he enjoys an enviable reputation, not only because he has made a success of life in a business sense, but also by reason of the many fine personal attributes which constitute the most praiseworthy citizenship.

GEORGE B. WHITED. The association of George B. Whited with the business affairs of Long Beach and Los Angeles dates from 1890, when he disposed of all interests in other sections and sought California with the intention of making it his future home. He has thrown himself heartily into the upbuilding enterprises, has given time and means freely, and is justly accorded a place among the representative citizens. He is a native of Kansas, having been born in Ft. Harker, July 29, 1869, the representative of a prominent family long established on Virginian soil, the immigrating ancestor having been an Englishman, whose descendants fought valiantly for the freedom of his adopted country. His father, Payton George Whited, was a native of Swords Creek, W. Va., and a son of Robert Whited, who removed to Chautauqua county, Kans., where he engaged as a farmer. Payton G. Whited was a soldier in Company B, Fifth United States Infantry, and was stationed at various places, among them Wilmington in 1858, Alcatraz Island, at San Francisco, and also saw active service during the Civil war. In 1876, at the time of the troubles with Sitting Bull, he was stationed at Fort Keogh, Mont., after over twenty-one years of army life retiring from active service. For a time he engaged in the cattle business in Montana, later engaged in a general merchandise business in Miles City, finally locating in Los Angeles, where he passed his last days. He was made a Mason in 1883, and attained the Knights Templer degree. His wife, formerly Ellen Romaro, was a native of Watrous, N. Mex., and a daughter of a cattleman of that section; she survives her husband, still making her home in Los Angeles. She became the mother of seven children, of whom but two are now surviving.

The only son born to his parents, George B. Whited passed his boyhood days among the frontier forts of the remote west, receiving an education through an attendance of public schools wherever the family chanced to be located, but gleaning much more of knowledge through his associations in the life about him. In young manhood he engaged with his father in the cattle business at Miles City, Mont., remaining in that location until 1890, when he disposed of these interests and coming to California prepared to enter upon another line of work. Since his location in Southern California he has engaged in the outdoor advertising business, city bill posting, etc., doing business in Long Beach, San Pedro, Wilmington, Compton, Watts, Alamitos and Huntington Beach and carrying on one of the most extensive enterprises of its kind in the state. He takes a deep interest in his work, keeping throughly in touch with all progress, and holds membership with the Associated Bill Posters & Distributers Association of United States and Canada, and also a member of the Pacific Coast Bill Posters and Distributers Association. He has purchased considerable property in Southern California, freely manifesting his faith in its continued prosperity and growth. His business headquarters in Long Beach are at No. 29 Locust avenue, while his home is located on Elden avenue, in Los Angeles. He is quite prominent fraternally, being a member of Aerie No. 791, Order of Eagles, of Long Beach; Fremont Lodge No. 466, W. O. W.; and Fair Oaks Camp No. 15, Sons of Veterans, of San Francisco. In his political affiliations he is a stanch Republican on all national issues, but locally gives his support to the men and measures best qualified to advance the interests of the general public. He has served as deputy sheriff under Sheriff White for several years and has proven himself an efficient assistant. In every avenue Mr. Whited has proven himself a broad minded, liberal citizen, intent on the upbuilding and development of the best interests of the portion of the state in which he has chosen to make his home.

WALTER F. POOR, of Highland Park, was born at Newark, N. J., November 21, 1850, his lineage showing a group of men prominent in church and educational work in this country and in foreign fields. His father, Rev. Daniel W. Poor, was born at the Island of Ceylon, where his father was living as a missionary at that time. When twelve years of age his parents sent him alone to the United States and he located in eastern Massachusetts, where his preliminary education was received in the common schools before his entrance to Amherst College. His first pastorate after his graduation was at Fairhaven, Mass., and in the year 1849 he removed to Newark, N. J. There he organized and became the first pastor of the High Street Presbyterian Church, which position he continued to fill for twenty years. In 1869 he accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church in Oakland, Cal., serving for about five years and from then until the spring of 1876 was identified with the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at San Francisco. The remainder of his life he spent as Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Education, and he resided at Philadelphia, Pa., his death occurring at Newark, N. J., in 1898, while visiting at that place. His wife, who was before her marriage Susan H. Ellis, was a native of Fairhaven, Mass., and has always been an active, interested church worker. She was the mother of six children, five of whom are now living, and she makes her home with her son, Dr. D. W. Poor, in Orange, N. J.

Walter F. Poor was educated in the Newark Academy, Newark, N. J., and graduated from that institution before his removal with his parents to Oakland, Cal., in 1869. For two years he remained in Oakland, then came to Los Angeles county and was one of the pioneers of Westminster, now in Orange county. It was while living there that he attended the wedding of Prof. J. M. Guinn, the historian of this work. For nine years Mr. Poor engaged in farming at Westminster on a forty acre ranch which he had purchased. He then removed to Los Angeles and shortly afterwards entered the abstract business. He continued at this for twelve years and then for two years following engaged in the insurance business. In 1900 he removed to Highland Park, a suburb of Los Angeles, where he has since been connected with the firm of Poor & Wing, conducting a successful real-estate business. He is a Republican and has always been active in politics, and interested in educational matters, having served for two years on the Board of Education of Los Angeles. He is secretary of the Highland Park Improvement Association and is always a leader in any project that tends toward the upbuilding of the community in which he lives. He is a member and elder of the Highland Park Presbyterain Church and liberally supports the various benevolent and charitable interests of that denomination. He is a man highly respected for his many sterling qualities and is universally recognized as a leading citizen. While living in Westminster Mr. Poor was married to Anna Adelaide Leffler, a native of Illinois, a woman of many admirable traits and an active church worker. She died September 16, 1906. Of three children born to them one, a daughter, is now living.

JAY GERALD LYBARGER. Among the large number of real-estate dealers in Long Beach there is none more enterprising and energetic nor more successful than Jay Gerald Lybarger, who has been a resident of this city since 1900. Ten generations ago three Lybarger brothers came from Germany and settled in Pennsylvania and in that state the succeeding generations have been born with the exception of the present Jay Gerald, whose birth occurred April 21, 1871, in Woodford county, Ill., near Metamora. Both his father, Samuel, and grandfather, Anthony, were born in Bedford county, Pa. In 1837, when his son was four year of age, the latter removed to Knox county, Ohio, where he engaged in farming and became very prominent in official circles of that county. Obeying the inborn instinct of the pioneer, in 1852 Samuel Lybarger located in Illinois, bought land in Shelby county, and became a pioneer farmer of that section. Later he continued agricultural pursuits on a fine farm of two hundred and forty acres in Woodford county until 1891, when he came to California. Three years later he located in Pasadena and lived retired from business until 1902, when his death occurred. His wife, a native of Ohio, was Mary Jane Ayres, of the same family as the Ayres of medical fame, and her death also occurred in Pasadena. Four of their five children are still living: Fanny, now Mrs. Mondell of San Diego; J. G., of this sketch, and Ray and Clay, both engaged in the real-estate business in Long Beach.

Reared in Illinois Jay G. Lybarger was educated in the public schools and the high school at Washburn, and after the completion of his studies, in 1894 came to California and secured employment as a salesman. In 1898 he removed to the Algadonas rancho near Yuma, Ariz., located on a quarter section of land, and for two and one-half years endured the hardships and privations of frontier life. Returning to California in 1900 he located in Long Beach and has ever since been engaged in the real-estate business in this city. He has successfully handled about twenty tracts of land, comprising from five to ten acres each, and is now subdividing the Harbor Home tract of forty acres, in which he has a large interest. To Mr. Lybarger belongs the credit of organizing the Long Beach Realty Board, of which he is a charter member and vice-president.

Mr. Lybarger's marriage which occurred in Pasadena, united him with Miss Lucile Cummings, who was born in Knox county, Ohio, and whose parents were early pioneers of Pasadena. She is a member of the Congregational Church of that city. The one son, J. G., Jr., born of this union, died in January, 1906, aged one year and five days. Fraternally Mr. Lybarger is a member of the Eagles, and politically is prominent in Democratic circles, having recently been named as a delegate to the Democratic county convention. As a man of strong principles and sterling personal worth he is regarded as one of the most valued citizens of the community in which he resides.

JOHN KEMPLEY. Many of the residents of Long Beach are men who, having reaped success in other portions of the country, have sought this balmy climate in order that their declining years may be filled with a greater measure of health and happiness than would be possible in the rigorous winters of northern latitudes. Climatic reasons were largely instrumental in leading Mr. Kempley to remove from his Iowa farm to the Pacific coast, which he visited for the first time in 1897 and four years later became a permanent resident of his present home city. Though practically retired from active cares and the possessor of ample means rendering further labors unnecessary, he still retains various interests, included among which may be mentioned a half interest in eighteen valuable claims on Providence mountain in San Bernardino county.

In Yorkshire, England, Mr. Kempley was born June 29, 1832, being a son of Charles and Hannah (Page) Kempley, natives of the same country. The father, after having followed the blacksmith's trade in Yorkshire for some years, came to the United States in 1842 and settled among the pioneers of Wisconsin, where he took up a tract of raw land in Racine county. In addition to cultivating his farm he carried on his trade, having a shop on the farm. Later he moved to Marquette county, Wis., where his son was a pupil in a country school. Eventually he established his home at Fort Dodge, Iowa, where he died at the age of ninety-five years. Longevity has been noticeable on both sides of the ancestry. His wife, Mrs. Hannah Kempley, lived to be ninety-one, and her father attained the great age of one hundred and two years.

Among the recollections of Mr. Kempley's boyhood none is more vivid than that of walking five miles to school, where one of his playmates was Ann Whitehead. That she was a special favorite of his own became evident when he chose her to be his wife. They were united in marriage in Marquette county February 18, 1856, and settled down in the home neighborhood, where he followed his father's example in combining the blacksmith's trade with agricultural pursuits. In 1864 he removed to Iowa and settled on a farm near Fort Dodge, where he became the owner of a valuable tract of two hundred and forty acres, the land remaining in his possession until May, 1905, when it was sold at a high valuation. Meanwhile he also operated a gristmill worth $10,000, but lost the plant as the result of a washout. While living on his farm he took a warm interest in local affairs, was regarded as one of the leading Republicans in his locality, and also aided greatly in the development of the school interests, serving as a member of the school board, and in addition was a member of the board of township trustees. Consistent in his character and upright in life, he was from youth an exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and still maintains a warm interest in its welfare.

Through his marriage to Miss Whitehead of Wisconsin Mr. Kempley became allied with an English family of honored history. Her parents, Benjamin and Sarah Whitehead, were born and reared in England and came to the United States in 1845, settling in Racine county, Wis., thence removing to Marquette county, where both remained until death. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Kempley there were nine children born, named as follows: Sarah, who married Harry Eubanks of Long Beach and has six children; Hannah Mary, Mrs. H. Wonder, of Washington, who has five children; Esther, who married Elbert Handy of Fort Dodge, Iowa, and has four children; James, who lives in Fort Dodge, Iowa, is married and has six children; B. P., who has a family of six children; Charles, living in Green Bay, Wis.; John F., whose family comprises four children; Elbert, who is unmarried; and Elsie, Mrs. James Scoville, who has three children. Descended from Mr. Kempley are thirty-four grandchildren now living and three deceased, and there are also six great-grandchildren living.

RALPH E. WATSON. Although a young man Ralph E. Watson is one of the most progressive and enterprising ranchers of this section, much of his time being devoted to the management of a dairy, having assumed charge of this work when only a lad in years. His many friends speak highly of his ability in this line, and of the tact and zeal with which he has handled the enterprise. Born in Washington College, Tenn., June 2, 1886, he was a son of John A. Watson, a native of Shenandoah valley, Virginia, where he was educated and became a professor of mathematics, which position he held for ten years in Washington College, Tenn. He was then active in educational work as professor in high schools in both Nebraska and South Dakota. He came to California and died in Norwalk at the age of fifty-four years. His wife, formerly Fannie Phelps, was a native of Parkersburg, W. Va., and died in Lyons, Neb., at the age of forty-five years.

The greater part of the education of Ralph E. Watson was received in the public schools of Nebraska and South Dakota, where his parents removed when he was a small child. He completed the high school course in Custer, S. Dak., and then on account of the failing health of his father the family removed to Southern California, this being in 1900, and located in Gardena. They purchased a tract of ten acres and engaged in the culture of small fruit; two years later disposing of this interest they came to Norwalk and purchased thirty-two acres of fine farming land and established dairy business. The death of the father in 1903 threw the entire responsibility upon the son, but he proving equal to the occasion successfully managed the affairs until to-day he has one of the modern and up-to-date dairies in this section. He has twenty fine milch cows unsurpassed in quantity and quality of product, the Good Samaritan Hospital of Los Angeles being one of his regular patrons. He is also a fine judge of cattle and an expert in his line of work. He has built a fine barn for the care of his stock, with all modern conveniences from an economic and sanitary standpoint. He has a part of his ranch in alfalfa and grain and also leases other land for corn and grain. Fraternally he is popular, being a member of the Woodmen of the World, and politically is a stanch advocate of Democratic principles.

Miss Edna E. Watson, sister of our subject, was born in Ravenswood, W. Va., July 30, 1883, and is now completing her M. S. degree in the University of California, class '06. She has received prominent mention from the faculty in zoological research.

HON. BENTON PETTIS TAYLOR. As pioneer, frontiersman, miner and capitalist Mr. Taylor has been a conspicuous figure for the past half century in the middle and western states, and when he was only sixteen years old was in Mexico with Col. Izale Prigmore. This experience seemed to create an insatiable thirst for travel and adventure, with the result that he has become thoroughly acquainted with the topography of the western coast of the Americas, extending from British Columbia on the north to Chile on the south, and has also visited the Hawaiian Islands. An important deduction may be taken from the fact that for the past eight years he has been a continuous resident of Pomona, showing that while there may be attractions for trade and commerce elsewhere, it is in the quiet and restful sun-lit valley where his home is nestled that he prefers to spend his later years.

A native of Missouri, Benton P. Taylor was born seven miles from the present site of Sedalia December 6, 1833, and is a son of Elijah and Elizabeth (Fisher) Taylor, both of whom were born in Pennsylvania. In 1803 the father left the Quaker state, going first to Tennessee, then to Kentucky, from there to Illinois, and in 1822 removed to St. Louis, Mo. A few years later he went to Cooper county, but two years afterward became a pioneer settler in Pettis county, that state. In addition to carrying on the farm which he purchased and improved in that locality, he also followed the miller's trade, and among many others erected a mill north of Sedalia, whither the farmers of the country roundabout brought their grain. Both of the parents passed away in Missouri. Of the seven children born to them three are now living, and one of the number, Leonard S., is a resident of Colorado Springs, Colo.

His father being a miller it was natural that Benton P. Taylor, who was next to the youngest in the family, should become interested in the same trade, and under his father's training he learned it thoroughly. Subsequently he established a business of his own not far from his home, but in 1856, he disposed of it and removed to Mills county, Iowa, there erecting a mill on Silver creek. In connection with carrying on this enterprise, for three years, during 1856, '57 and '58, he went on freighting expeditions for the government to Aurora (now Denver), Colo., but was forced to give up the work in the latter year owing to his election to the Iowa state legislature. The opening of hostilities between the north and the south brought a change in his plans and expectations, and his muster in at Council Bluffs made him a member of the Twenty-ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, Company B. He participated in the battles of Vicksburg, Island No. 10, and while at Helena, Ark., in March, 1863, he was injured by the breaking of the barracks. However, he participated in the battle of Helena on July 4 following. Besides the shock which his system received in the accident his hip was dislocated, and after lying in a hospital in Keokuk for nearly three months he was honorably discharged September 4, 1863. Returning home he remained there practically an invalid throughout the winter, but in the mean time had been making plans for an expedition to the west. With the opening of spring his health was so far recovered that he was enabled to carry out his plans for going to Montana, leaving Omaha March 12, 1864. After reaching his destination, Virginia City, Mont., he took up a claim in Alder gulch, upon which he worked diligently until the following fall. With twenty-two companions he started for the Yellowstone country, and finally reached it, but interference from the Indians was the means of taking some of the romance out of their plans and they decided to return home. Building a boat, they came down the Yellowstone and Missouri rivers and finally reached their destination in Iowa, December 24, 1864, but not without experiencing numerous attacks from the Indians, three of the party receiving wounds, Mr. Taylor being one of the number. On the whole he had no cause to complain, however, for in addition to renewed health, from the lack of which he had suffered for so many months, his summer's work had netted him $58,000 in greenbacks. Returning to his farm near Glenwood Mills, Iowa, he operated it for about two years, in the mean time adding to its acreage by the purchase of adjoining land, but in 1866 he disposed of his holdings in that state and returned to Missouri. In Knobnoster, Johnson county, he established a merchandise business which proved a very successful undertaking, and he also carried on a large grain business. He was one of the largest landowners in that vicinity, owning a farm of ten hundred and sixty acres upon which he carried on an extensive stock business, in fact for eighteen years he was one of the best-known business men and most enterprising citizens of his community. The organization of the Knobnoster Bank was partly due to his efforts, he being one of the first to promote the project, and for eight years he was assessor and collector of Johnson county.

Upon closing out his holdings in Missouri Mr. Taylor came another step towards the Golden West by his location in Colorado Springs, Colo., in 1884, and there as in the middle west he was destined to become an important factor in the town's welfare. He was one of the organizers of the Exchange National Bank and was one of its directors, and was also interested in the organization of the Colorado Springs electric light plant. In fact, many beneficial measures for the town's permanent good may be traced either directly or indirectly to Mr. Taylor's far-sightedness in recognizing them first, and then making them a reality by interesting other citizens in the project. Many such bear the impress of Mr. Taylor's handiwork, but probably there is no project which will be of more lasting benefit than the water system of Colorado Springs, which is conceded to be one of the finest systems in the United States. The initial procedure was to secure the perpetual use of Lake Marine as a reservoir, to which was later added seven other lakes for the same purpose, the result being that Colorado Springs and vicinity have an abundant and constant supply of the purest mountain water possible to obtain anywhere in the United States.

In 1890 Mr. Taylor removed to Oregon and purchased a large ranch near Stayton, and there he became interested in the stock and grain business. Mr. Taylor was too active and broad-minded to give his whole time and thought to private interests, and thus it happened that wherever circumstances placed him he immediately became interested in the welfare of those about him. Believing that better results and more satisfactory service to the citizens would follow through municipal ownership of the water works he worked diligently for this end, which finally prevailed, and resulted further in establishing the present excellent system of Portland, water being secured from Bull Run, at the foot of Mount Hood. While in Stayton Mr. Taylor was a member of the city council for five years, during a part of that time serving as president of that body.

Although Mr. Taylor had come to Pomona as early as 1893, it was not until four years later that he came here and took up his permanent home, the family residence being at No. 580 East Fifth avenue. He was first married in Missouri to Miss Martha M. Van Bibber, who was born in Callaway county, that state, and was a great-granddaughter of Daniel Boone. At her death, which occurred in Colorado, she left five children, of whom we mention the following: George, who for eight years was an electrician with the Colorado Springs Electric Company, was killed by a live wire in 1889; Anna became the wife of E. J. Dolbear, a conductor on the Oregon Short Line of Pocatello, Idaho, where in 1905 she was grand matron of the Eastern Star lodge; Maggie is a resident of Pomona; Mamie died in St. Helen, Ore., and James S., a resident of Pocatello, Idaho, is also with the Oregon Short Line. Mr. Taylor's second marriage occurred in Missouri and united him with Miss Edith Moore, who was born in Illinois, and died in Idaho, leaving two children, Helen and Lela. The present Mrs. Taylor was formerly Kate Young, of Missouri, and it was in that state that their marriage was celebrated. The family are members of the Christian Church, and fraternally Mr. Taylor is a Democrat. While in Knobnoster, Mo., he was made a Mason in Knobnoster Lodge No. 245, and for several years was past master of his lodge. Upon his removal to Colorado he transferred his membership, belonging to the lodge at Colorado Springs and later to Stayton Lodge No. 25. In Warrensburg, Mo., he was raised to the Royal Arch degree, and was made a high priest of his lodge. In the same city he was later made a Knight Templer, belonging to Mary Commandery No. 19. In Warrensburg he was also made a member of the council of the Order the Eastern Star. After coming to California he associated himself with the foregoing orders except the Eastern Star, and now holds a demit from those mentioned. As a veteran of the Civil war he keeps in touch with comrades of other days by associating with members of the Grand Army post of which he is a member. During the many years that Mr. Taylor has been identified with the country west of the Mississippi river he has been more or less interested in mining, and still has valuable claims throughout the west as well as in Old Mexico and Alaska.

GEORGE HENRY BANKS, engineer of Mill Creek Station No. 1, of the Edison Electric Power Company, is one of the oldest employes of the company and one of its most trusted men, his mechanical ability and engineering skill having given him a lucrative position. He is a native of Maine, his birth having occurred in Kenduskeag, Penobscot, June 26, 1863; his father, J. J., was born there in 1826, the grandfather, John, being a farmer of old and honored Puritan stock. J. J. Banks was a minister in the Free Will Baptist Church until his retirement from active life; he now makes his home in South La Grange, Me., with his eldest son, Edmond L. Banks. His wife, formerly Catherine Chandler, was born in East Corinth, Me., a daughter of John Chandler, a farmer and also the representative of an old New England family. She is also living, the mother of two sons, of whom George H. is the younger and the only one in California.

Reared in his native state, George Henry Banks received his education in the public schools and also attended East Corinth Academy for two terms. His first independent venture in life was in the lumbering camps of Maine, where he spent two winters; in 1886 he came to California and spent his first year in Pasadena as a carpenter, the following year was a carpenter and farmer in Pomona, and in 1889 went to Fresno and engaged in teaming and transfer work. He continued in this last named location for six months, when in 1890 he returned to Los Angeles and for one year was in the employ of Morris & Jones, coal merchants. Coming to Redlands in 1891 he engaged in carpentering and building for a time and later entered the employ of Alvin Pratt, proprietor of the Sloan house; in 1892-93 he was employed in Terrace Villa, and the Windsor in 1893-94. During the summers Mr. Banks conducted the Seven Oaks resort for his employer, remaining in this connection until October 14, 1894, and acting in various capacities. On the last named date he entered the employ of The Redlands Electric Light & Power Company as headworks man, and was in charge of the pipe lines for more than a year. In January, 1896, he began work on the construction of the large plant on the Santa Ana river, working from the first survey until its completion in 1898. He was then employed similarly in the plant on Mill creek No. 2, from its beginning to its completion, July 2, 1899, coming to his present position at Mill Creek Station No. 1, as oiler. He here began the study of engineering, and assisted by his natural mechanical ability he soon mastered the details and in 1902 was made foreman of the station. He has made a success of the work and is held in high esteem by the officials of the company. In addition to these interests he is interested in horticulture, having a five acre orange orchard in Ontario.

In Redlands in 1892 Mr. Banks was united in marriage with Mrs. Lillia B. (Casey) Fitzpatrick, a native of New York, and a daughter of Henry Casey, a farmer, and Mary (Wait) Casey, the father of the latter, John Wait, also being a farmer in that section. Her father is deceased but the mother still survives and makes her home with her daughter in Craftonville. Mrs. Banks had a sister and a brother, but she is the only child of the family now living. She was educated in the Young Ladies Seminary in Windsor, Conn., where she married William Fitzpatrick, whose death occurred in California. Mr. Banks is a stanch Republican in politics, and although never desirous of personal recognition at the hands of his party, still gives his most earnest support to these principles.

MRS. LUCY ANN SANFORD. Three miles southeast of Palms lies the large and valuable ranch which is owned and managed by Mrs. Sanford, and which she acquired by dint of the greatest frugality and most rigid economy. She is of southern birth and ancestry and was born near Nashville, Tenn., January 17, 1840, being a daughter of Madison and Susan (Laughlin) Tucker, natives respectively of Tennessee and Charleston, S. C. On her mother's side she is the granddaughter of an Irish immigrant to the United States, while her paternal grandfather, John Tucker, was an Englishman, who came to America at an early age, settled in Tennessee and died there during middle age. Madison Tucker was born in 1812 and for years engaged in farming in Tennessee, but about 1845 he took his family to Illinois, purchased land and developed a farm. When advanced in years he and his wife went to Texas to make their home with their children; both died in that state, he at the age of eighty-six, and she in March, 1885, at the age of sixty-six.

When the family moved to Illinois Mrs. Sanford was quite a small child, and in 1852 she accompanied them to Texas. In January, 1857, she, with the other members of the family, started overland, with ox teams, for the Pacific coast, and, arriving at Visalia, remained there for two years, when the parents returned to Texas with mule teams and wagons. Mrs. Sanford, with a brother and sister, remained at the present site of Pasadena. June 14, 1858, she was married to Cyrus Sanford, a native of Missouri, and the son of an Englishman who came to the United States in early life. In 1849 Cyrus Sanford came to California and engaged in mining. During 1860 he came to Southern California and purchased about nine hundred and ninety acres of La Ballona grant, where he settled down to ranch pursuits. When sixty-six years of age he died at Stockton, this state, but meanwhile, about 1877, he and his wife separated, and she assumed the management of the ranch and the care of the nine children. The property was mortgaged, and it was only by the most arduous exertions that she was enabled to free it from encumbrance and to provide for her children until they were old enough to become self-supporting. Now she is classed among the wealthy women of Los Angeles county, being the owner of two hundred and thirty-five acres, valued at $400 per acre. She became the mother of the following children: George A., who has charge of the ranch and superintends its cultivation; John, who died at thirty-two years of age; Amanda, who was born July 18, 1863, and died in 1901; Luella, who was born April 15, 1865, and died April 17, 1899; William, who was born April 23, 1867, and resides with his mother; Rebecca, who was born April 27, 1869, and died September 16, 1890; Cyrus, who was born January 4, 1871, and remains on the home ranch; Joe, born August 27, 1873, also living on the home place, and Leland, born January 20, 1877, now living on the home ranch.

CHARLES H. THOMAS. The family of this honored pioneer has been represented in every war of the United States, where members of it have risen to prominence and success, and besides being patriots in the time of their country's need have also proven themselves a part of that quiet yet distinctly potent influence in the every day development and upbuilding of the nation. The characteristics of the family have been passed from father to son, from generation to generation, their hospitality opening their doors to many who have ever afterward counted themselves among their friends; they have gone forward in the vanguard of civilization, established their homes on the frontier, and by their courage, and steadfastness of purpose, their fortitude and unselfish devotion to the public welfare, have upheld the hands of those seeking to develop and reclaim wilderness lands for the needs of countless emigrants in their home quest. Such men have been the heads of the Thomas family, and such an one is Charles H. Thomas, known, honored and esteemed throughout Southern California.

Born in Saratoga county, N. Y., October 1, 1836, Charles H. Thomas was next to the youngest child in the family of his parents, Murray and Sylvia (Beebe) Thomas, natives respectively of Saratoga and Madison counties, N. Y. The paternal grandfather was one of the first settlers of Saratoga county and a distinguished patriot in the Revolutionary war. The maternal grandfather, Silas Beebe, was of Puritan ancestry, the name transmitted by a member of the Mayflower company, and who was also related to the famous Beecher family; he was born in Connecticut and became an early settler of Madison county, where he served as the first sheriff of the county. He was a gallant soldier in the War of 1812, and also in the Black Hawk war. Murray Thomas inherited qualities of character from a Welsh ancestry, the family however having long been established on American soil. He engaged as a calico printer throughout his active career, his death occurring at the comparatively early age of forty-five years. His wife had died some years previous, leaving a family of four sons and two daughters: William S., of Little Rock, Ark., in the employ of the Goulds of the Iron Mountain Railroad as chemist and mineralogist until his retirement, served in the Stevenson regiment during the Mexican war, in which struggle he was wounded; John served in the Confederate army during the Civil war and was killed at New Orleans; Martin, who died at Little Rock, Ark., was a chaplain in an Illinois regiment of the Federal army during the Civil war; two daughters, Mrs. Rogers and Mrs. Scott, live in Minnesota; and Charles H. is the subject of this review.

Charles H. Thomas was reared in New York and being left an orphan at an early age he was taken into the home of his maternal grandparents and there trained to the first duties of life. His education was received in the district school in the vicinity of the home farm. The gold fever of famous '49 took possession of him and he decided to come to California, expecting that his brother William, then a soldier in the Mexican war, would be in that section shortly. He accordingly took passage on the ship Tecumseh for a trip around the horn to San Francisco, arriving in November, 1849, when with a young companion he purchased a mining outfit and went at once to Mariposa creek, in Mariposa county, where for six months the two diligently and successfully dug for gold. Mr. Thomas then returned to San Francisco. In the fall of 1853 Gen. William Walker, the noted filibuster, came to San Francisco from Marysville and organized the band of adventurous spirits numbering forty-five all told, chartered the bark Carolina and in November left San Francisco for La Paz in Lower California. Here Walker disembarked his forces, attacked and captured the town, taking the governor prisoner. Another man was sent by the Mexicans to take command but he also was captured by Walker's forces. Finding himself too weak to hold the place Walker and his forces left the town after holding possession a week or more. Walker sailed first to Cape St. Lucas, then to Ensenada, whence he landed his men and a portion of his supplies, leaving the vessel in charge of the second mate. He, it is supposed, had been bribed by the Mexicans; at any rate, at the first opportunity he deserted his comrades and took the vessel to Guyamas, leaving Walker and his men in a hostile town, short of food and ammunition. Mr. Thomas started immediately for San Diego for a supply of percussion caps, of which there was a great need; he was successful in obtaining all he needed from a Mr. Rose who then resided in San Diego, and he at once returned to Ensenada to find that his companions were about to be attacked by a large body of Mexicans, and they were so nearly out of percussion caps that there were not more than five to each man. His return doubtless saved his companions from capture for within fifteen minutes they were surrounded by several hundred Mexicans who made a vigorous attack, in which five of Walker's men were killed. The Mexicans were repulsed with several killed and wounded. During the following night Walker assumed the offensive and in a sharp fight succeeded in driving the Mexicans from the field. Walker then buried his guns and taking such supplies as he could started for Sonora by way of Santa Catherine Passo, but after marching several leagues found the route impracticable and most of the party returned and surrendered to Captain Burton, then in command of the United States troops at San Diego. A few of the men went on and finally succeeded in reaching Sonora, but what became of them has never been known. Walker was tried in the United States court for a violation of international law and on his acquittal in February, 1854, the others were released.

Finding himself a free man once more, Mr. Thomas went to Halfmoon Bay and there took charge of the Pescadero ranch, and there he remained for about a year, when he went to Trinity river and for the ensuing three years was engaged in mining. In 1858 he returned to San Francisco and in the same year came to Los Angeles, and here with others discovered the celebrated tin mines of Temescal. He continued his identification with this project until 1861 when he disposed of his interests to Don A. Stearns, and went to the Hemet valley in San Diego county (now Riverside) and there took up a tract of four hundred and eighty acres of land, while he at the same time purchased forty-three hundred acres of railroad land. This he developed to general farming and stock-raising, bringing the first herd of Shorthorns into San Diego county, and now owns some of the finest thoroughbred horses in the west. His herd of Durham cattle will compare favorably with any to be found on the Pacific coast. The Hemet valley is about twenty-three miles east of the town of Hemet at an elevation of about four thousand feet, and with its mild climate and abundance of pasturage and water is admirably adapted for the raising of stock. Included in the ranch are two thousand acres of moist grass land, while the grain crop is one of the best in this section. Near the ranch house is an unfailing spring, containing iron, soda and sulphur. Mr. Thomas was the first white settler in the Hemet and San Jacinto valleys; when he first came there bears as well as deer, were plentiful, which supplied the table with meat. The Thomas ranch became known as the Thomas valley, where they built a large and comfortable residence, with wide verandas, flower decked and all on stone fountains, and where they extended the famous hospitality of the family to whomsoever might come within its portals, friend and stranger alike welcome in the midst of the early habitation.

May 14, 1861, in Los Angeles, Mr. Thomas was united in marriage with Miss Genevieve Bardico; she was born in Santa Barbara, Cal., a daughter of Francisco Bardico, a native of Spain who came to the city of Mexico and thence to Santa Barabara, Cal., where he engaged as a merchant; he married Raphalita Garcia, a native of San Gabriel, whose grandfather, Ayalla, was sent by the government of Spain to take charge of the mission stock of San Gabriel, whence Don Garcia was sent by Don Ayalla to San Bernardino county to take charge of the cattle ranch in this large valley, his residence being on the hill which is the present site of the Barton ranch residence. The name of Bardico is a prominent one in the city of Mexico, where members of the family remained and became prominent in public affairs, one serving for years as city treasurer. Mrs. Thomas was reared in Santa Barbara and there educated, is a cultured and well informed woman, endowed by nature with gifts of more than ordinary value, among them a voice of wonderful range and thrilling power, sweet and true to the highest idealization of music. She is the mother of the following children: Adeliza, wife of H. Tiffany of Bakersfield; Fannie, the wife of George Johnson, of San Bernardino; Joseph, now a resident of the City of Mexico and formerly interpreter for the United States army at Manila, where he interviewed Aguinaldo: Charles, a mining expert in Guadalajara: Victoria, wife of Frank Brooks, of Hemet: Lulu, wife of Harry McCondless, of Arizona; James, a stockman in Corona; George, a buyer of the Cudahy Packing Company of Los Angeles; Emma, graduate of St. Catherine's Academy at San Bernardino and now a student of music; and Mary, wife of Henry Pram, of Prescott, Ariz. The daughter Fannie had a remarkable and brilliant career in foreign lands across the Atlantic, as a scholar and a business woman, before settling down in her native state. She was one of the first students at Santa Catherine Academy and after her graduation went abroad and continued her study of languages in Santa Maria College in Antwerp, when later she accepted a position as representative for Docet of Paris, France, traveling through France, England, Germany, Italy and Spain, introducing the latest patterns and fashions for twelve years, having in all spent seventeen years in Paris. In 1900 she resigned her position and returned to California, where May 3, 1904, she became the wife of George Livingston Johnson, a native of Oxford, Ohio, who came to San Bernardino in 1885, where he is successfully engaged in the wholesale and retail liquor business. They are the proprietors of the Oxford hotel.

In January, 1906, Mr. Thomas sold his ranch in Hemet valley and located in Redlands, where he purchased a livery located at the corner of Central avenue and Fourth street, and he has here continued in business and met with success. He retained his thoroughbred herd of cattle and horses, in which he takes the greatest pride. He has taken a keen interest in affairs of the city and community, providing the site for the Hemet Land & Water Company and in many other ways assisting in the development of the community. Up to 1896 he had been Democratic in his tendencies but the silver issue of that year turned his interest toward the Republican party, and he has since voted that ticket. As early as 1866 he was elected supervisor of San Diego county and held the office for two terms. He was school trustee from the organization of the district near his home, he himself laying out the first school district in San Diego county. Every achievement of his adopted state has been a matter of pride with Mr. Thomas—the first telegraph, the first telephone, and other modern methods and equipment being welcomed into the country with eager assistance by him; at the feast of the newsboys of Los Angeles he was foremost in his donation of a magnificent Durham cow, movements of this kind being ever helped by his counsel, time and means. He recalls the early days of the state, his early adventures, and especially a trip taken in 1861, through Strawberry valley, piloted by an Indian chief, this being probably the first white man who ever penetrated its then remote lands. The dominant characteristics of an American gentleman, enterprise, progress and public spirit, are the salient qualities in the makeup of Mr. Thomas, lending their aid to make of him a citizen among citizens, a man among men, a friend among friends, revered, honored and esteemed by all who have known him since his boyhood days, which were spent as a miner in the state of California.

JUDGE JULIUS ADELBERT HOAG. Although he has been connected with different legal cases in Riverside county during his residence at Elsinore Judge Julius Hoag is practically retired from the practice of law, in which profession he had been very prominent and successful in the east. Judge Hoag is a member of an old New York family, his grandfather, Daniel, having been born in that state, of English descent, and became a pioneer Quaker west of the Hudson river. The father of Judge Hoag, Philo Hoag, was born near Saratoga Springs, and after he grew to manhood, engaged in agricultural pursuits at Norwich, where his death occurred in his fifty-sixth year. His wife was Celia, a daughter of Philip Phetteplace, a native of Rhode Island, who settled in Norwich, N. Y., and on his farm there the daughter was born and in that location she remained until the time of her death. Her family was of old Congregational stock.

There were nine children in the family of which Judge Hoag was a member, and three of his brothers are still living. He was the youngest, his birth occurring May 15, 1840, at Norwich, Chenango county, N. Y. His early boyhood days were spent on the farm, but after the completion of his studies in the common schools he was sent to Oxford Academy, and, upon his graduation, matriculated in Yale College, entering in 1861, and graduating four years later with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Following this he began the study of law under Judge Elisha Prindle, of Norwich, and, in 1867, he was admitted to practice before the supreme court at Binghamton, N. Y. Believing that opportunities for the young attorney were greater in the west than in the east, he sought a location in the great plains country, and settled at Paola, Kans., the old stamping ground of John Brown, where, for twenty-four years he identified himself with the history of that state in legal circles, becoming one of the most prominent attorneys and the recipient of numerous official honors. He was prosecuting attorney at the time that the state prohibition law was enacted and St. John was governor of Kansas, and took active steps in the enforcement of the law. He was open and fearless in his denunciation of illegal and unjust combinations of capital and in many cases was successful in defending men against corporations, thereby gaining the ill-will of the latter and making it necessary for him to keep constantly on his guard against them. He was city attorney at Paola for a long period and for many years held the position of United States commissioner, having been appointed by Judge John F. Dillon. He was admitted to practice in the United States district and circuit courts while a resident of Kansas.

In 1890 Judge Hoag made his first trip to Elsinore, Cal., on account of his sister's health, and, being favorably impressed with conditions, as well as being in need of rest himself, he located here permanently in 1891. He engaged in horticulture for a time, set out an orchard on a ten-acre ranch which he purchased, and now has a fine lot of prune, apricot and olive trees in bearing. He makes his home in Elsinore, where he is a highly respected citizen, and is now filling for a second term a place on the Elsinore board of trustees. He was at one time a member of the lodges of the Woodmen of the World and of the Knights of Honor. While not affiliated with any church denomination Judge Hoag is a gentleman of Christian character and exerts an elevating influence on the community in which he resides. A man of his education, culture and large experience could not fail to be a leader wherever he might live and the people of Elsinore are glad to accord to him the high position in their midst to which his talents entitle him.

CORNELIUS STOUT. In the truest sense in which that much-used term could be applied, Cornelius Stout is a self-made man, having made his own way in the world from early boyhood. With a thorough understanding of the carpenter's trade and with the previous experience of about eleven years as a contractor and builder in other parts of the state he came to Pomona with his tool chest in June of 1887, and in little less than twenty years has built up the large business which he commands today. The mill covers a floor space of 65x120 feet, while the lumber yard is of the same dimensions, all in all it is one of the largest manufacturing plants of the kind in this part of the county.

The Stout family has been represented in this country for at least four generations, for it is known beyond a doubt that the great-grandfather, Richard Stout, fought as a soldier in the Revolutionary war among the patriots from New Jersey. Among his twenty-three children, seventeen of whom were sons, was one John, who was born in New Jersey and in that state became well known as a farmer and an expert judge of horse flesh. His son, Michael F., was also born in New Jersey, but while he was still a young man he came to what was then considered the frontier, as early as 1836 settling in Fairview, Fulton county, Ill. As a means of livelihood he continued farming with work at the carpenter's trade, both of which he followed in Fairview and in DeKalb county, that state, whither he later removed, and where also his death occurred. During his young manhood he had formed domestic ties by his marriage with Ann Maria Suydam, who like himself was a native of New Jersey. She was a daughter of Simon Byce Suydam, also a native of New Jersey, but who later settled in Ohio and Illinois respectively, passing away in DeKalb county, as did also his daughter, Mrs. Stout. Three children were born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Stout, as follows: John, who died in Humboldt county, Cal.; Cornelius; and Mary Elizabeth, now Mrs. M. E. Arnold, a resident of Iowa.

While his parents were living in Illinois Cornelius Stout was born in Fairview, Fulton county, September 23, 1849, being next to the oldest in the family. He interspersed work on the home farm with his school studies, and when he was still a mere boy had decided to learn the carpenter's trade. As his father was an experienced workman along that line he was taught the business thoroughly and was soon able to contract for work on his own account. Leaving the middle west in 1875 he came west to Portland, Ore., and subsequently went to Albany, that state, carrying on work at his trade in both places. The following year he located in Susanville, Cal., and from working at the carpenter's trade he finally branched out into contracting and building, a venture which proved remunerative and which he continued until June, 1887, when, as has been stated, he identified himself with the growing town of Pomona. He entered upon his career here as a carpenter and builder and later added carriage and wagon manufacturing. After eight years he gave up the latter and started the planing mill of which he is now the proprietor. General mill work of all kinds is here manufactured, and the plant is one of the live industries which have added to the commercial activity of the town. Mr. Stout is also an inventor of some ability, and among other of his patents is a turner's gauge and a sugar paddle, both of which have merits at once recognized by those in need of those articles.

In Susanville, Cal., Mr. Stout was married to Jessie E. Soulé, who was born in Iowa, and one child, Frances Estella, has blessed their marriage. Mrs. Stout is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Stout is a believer in Republican principles. His experience as a business man of many years standing makes his membership in the Board of Trade a decided acquisition. While in Susanville, Cal., he joined the Odd Fellows, and is now affiliated with Pomona Lodge No. 246, of which he is past noble grand, and is past chief patriarch of San Antonio Encampment. With his wife he is a member of the Rebekahs, of which she is past noble grand. The Woodmen of the World also claim the membership of Mr. Stout, and in that as in other organizations with which he is associated he is a valued and esteemed member.

CADET YRIBARNE. For nearly twenty years Mr. Yribarne has been a resident of California, and during that time he has been connected with a number of undertakings directly or indirectly connected with agricultural life. In none of them, however, has he been more successful than in the growing of grapes and their later manufacture into wine, his distillery and vineyard, known as the Tisnerat vineyard, being located in Long Beach on Anaheim road and Alamitos avenue.

Mr. Yribarne is a native of France, and was born in Basses-Pyrenees January 1, 1865, the eldest of three children born to his parents, Jean and Madeline Yribarne. As the father died when Cadet was only seven years old, leaving his mother with two children younger than himself, it was not surprising that his school days were limited. However, he applied himself diligently and gained a fair general knowledge in the common schools near his home. Subsequently he took charge of the home farm, which he managed for his mother until he was eighteen years old, when in 1884, he went to Montevidio, South America, working as a farm hand there for two years. The next year he returned to his home in France, but he was not satisfied to remain there after getting a glimpse of the new world, and the following year, 1887, he was among the passengers who embarked from France bound for California by way of Panama. A strong factor in directing his steps towards California was the fact that an uncle, John Ballan, lived in San Pedro, and it was at that seaport that his ship cast anchor. For two years he was in his uncle's employ as assistant to him in the management of his stock business, but later he purchased a drove of sheep and started in business for himself. In 1891 he came to this part of Los Angeles county and rented four thousand acres of the Alamitos Land Company lying east of Long Beach, which he ran as a stock ranch until 1897. Selling out his stock he at once purchased four acres on the corner of Second and Ansel streets, where he made his home and continued ranching for about three years, and then, in 1900, bought two and a half acres at the corner of Seventh and Temple streets. He still owns a portion of this latter tract, although since 1902 his interests have been centered in the Tisnerat vineyard, which he purchased that year, and which consists of six and seventy one-hundredths acres. On this property he is conducting a very profitable business in the raising of grapes, his brand of wine and brandy having a wide sale on its superior quality, and a reputation that is more than local.

After locating in Long Beach Mr. Yribarne formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Mary Cilbete, a native of Spain, but her death in April, 1904, left him alone with two children, John and Marguerite. Mr. Yribarne has shown himself a true American citizen by making a study of the platforms of the two great political bodies, and after weighing the principles of each has decided that the Republican party stands for that which, in his mind, will bring the most good to the greatest number. The only fraternal organization of which he is a member is the Eagles.

MILLARD FILLMORE NEFF. Among the intelligent, wide-awake agriculturists and the energetic and progressive business men of San Diego county, Millard Fillmore Neff, of Fallbrook, occupies an assured position. He is a fine representative of the native-born sons of this state, his birth having occurred January 24, 1860, in Yolo county, where his father, Benjamin W. Neff, was a pioneer settler.

Leaving Maryland, his native state, when a young man, Benjamin W. Neff started westward, and, with a band of emigrants, crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1849. From San Francisco he went directly to Virginia City, Nev., where he worked at his trade of blacksmith at the mines, and was afterward similarly employed in both Yolo and Placer counties. Coming to San Diego county in 1874, he located near the present home of his son, Millard F. Neff, taking up a tract of government land, on which he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, at the age of sixty-four years, in 1882. He married Matilda Copeland, who was born in Ohio, and is now a resident of Florida.

Having received a practical common-school education in Placer county Millard Fillmore Neff came with his parents to Fallbrook township when a boy of fourteen, and assisted in the pioneer labor of improving a ranch from the wild land which his father purchased. After the death of his father he had the management of the home estate until it was sold in 1888. Moving then into the village of Fallbrook he purchased a one-half interest in the general merchandise business of J. E. Tracy & Son, and for two years the business was conducted under the firm name of Tracy & Neff. At the end of that time Mr. Neff sold out to J. W. Cheatem. Removing then to his present ranch he has since been prosperously employed in general farming, having now a finely cultivated ranch of one hundred and sixty acres. He is especially interested in raising bees, being very successful, at the present time having two apiaries, each containing one hundred and ten colonies of these busy little honey-makers. Mr. Neff is a man of eminent business qualifications, and is one of the stockholders in the Fallbrook Mercantile Company store, in which he was for two years the bookkeeper. He takes an intelligent interest in local matters, is a firm supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and for a number of years has served as school trustee.

March 18, 1885, in Fallbrook, Mr. Neff married Sarah E. Locke, a native of Pennsylvania, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Clarence, at home; Edith, a pupil in the Fallbrook high school, and Benjamin Gerry. Fraternally Mr. Neff is a member of Fallbrook Lodge No. 339, I. O. O. F., and of Fallbrook Lodge No. 317, F. & A. M. Mrs. Neff is a woman of culture and refinement and a member of the Baptist Church.

PIERCE BROTHERS. Among the representatives of old New England families who have transferred their substantial traits of character to the far west, and have given their moral and business support to the upbuilding of San Pedro, mention is due the firm of Pierce Brothers, who as dealers in staple and fancy groceries are carrying on a profitable business. Charles E., Frank A. and Dennis G. Pierce are sons of Milo and Miranda (Galusha) Pierce, New Englanders by birth, and both of whom are now deceased.

The eldest of the three sons is Charles E. Pierce, who was born January 13, 1852, in South Shaftsbury, Bennington county, Vt., and was educated at the Burr and Burton Seminary at Manchester, that state. His first experience in the business world dates back to the time when he entered the employ of his father, who conducted a general store in South Shaftsbury. The work was congenial and his services were likewise satisfactory to his father, but owing to failing health he was compelled to seek a change of climate and consequently went to St. Paul, Minn. He remained in that city for seven years as bookkeeper for a building and loan association and real-estate firm, of which he finally became a director, and in the meantime also organized and became president of another building and loan society. During his residence in that city he became one of its employes, and as bookkeeper for one year in the city treasurer's office and assistant in the comptroller's office for eight years he not only won the commendation of his superiors, but gained what was of far more value in the business training which his various duties placed in his way.

Leaving the middle west in 1903 Mr. Pierce came to California, and after spending about two months in Long Beach, with his brother Frank A. came to San Pedro and established themselves in the grocery business at the corner of Palos Verdes and Eleventh streets. So rapidly did their business increase that in a short time they realized that more help was a necessity, and forthwith asked their younger brother, Dennis G., and his wife to come west and join them in their growing enterprise. While their stock includes everything that the demands of the household could suggest, such as staple and fancy groceries, fruits and notions, they also carry a complete line of shelf and heavy hardware, besides dealing in hay and grain.

Charles E. Pierce was married in St. Paul, Minn., September 25, 1885, to Ellen Bartlett, who like himself was a native of New England, her birth occurring in North Adams, Mass. She died in St. Paul, Minn., August 8, 1903. While a resident of St. Paul, Mr. Pierce was initiated into Masonry, becoming a charter member of Shekinah Lodge No. 171, A. F. & A. M., with which he is still affiliated; is a member of Chapter No. 18, R. A. M., of Bennington, Vt.; Capitol City Lodge No. 48, I. O. O. F.; Capitol City Lodge No. 2, K. of P., at St. Paul; North Star Grove Lodge No. 4, A. U. O. D.; Bethesda Lodge No. 1 of the Rebekahs at St. Paul; and Harbor Chapter No. 174, O. E. S., at San Pedro.

Frank A. Pierce was born in 1856 and reared in South Shaftsbury, Vt., and prior to coming to California in 1903 held a position with the American Steel Wire Company at Allentown, Pa. The youngest brother, Dennis G., was also born in the family home in Vermont, February 2, 1872, and his early training and education were received in the Green Mountain state. Subsequently he took a higher course of training in the Fort Edward (N. Y.) Institute. His marriage in 1896 in Rochester, Minn., united him with Anna E. Sischo, a native of Wisconsin. On coming to California in 1904 to assist his brothers in the management of the store he gave up his position with the American Steel Wire Company, as his brother F. A. had done the year previously. Fraternally F. A. Pierce is a member of the Masonic lodge at North Bennington, Vt., the Odd Fellows and Knights of the Golden Eagle lodges in Allentown, Pa., and the Elks lodge in San Pedro, while D. G. Pierce is identified with the Odd Fellows and Knights of Malta, both of Allentown, Pa. Although the Pierce brothers are among the more recent settlers in San Pedro they have already become known as men of sterling worth and irreproachable character. They are members of the San Pedro chamber of commerce and stockholders in the Harbor Savings Bank.

FRANK L. MOORE. A farmer of practical experience and skill, Frank L. Moore is actively identified with the promotion of the agricultural prosperity of Los Angeles county, having charge of his father's ranch, at Palms, and also of the hotel belonging to his father, Joseph K. Moore. He comes of good old New England stock, and was born, July 27, 1860, in St. Peter, Minn.

Born in Massachusetts in 1827, Joseph K. Moore was brought up and educated in his native state, and as a young man learned the printer's trade, which he followed for awhile in the east. With the venturous ambition of youth he came overland to California in 1852, making the tedious journey with ox-teams. Locating in San Francisco, he accepted a position as foreman in a printing office, receiving $300 per month wages for the three years in which he was so employed. Going as far east as Minnesota in 1856, he located at St. Peter, where he started the St. Peter Tribune. He was subsequently burned out, but immediately rebuilt and continued operations, remaining in that city thirty-five years. He became very prominent in municipal affairs, serving as postmaster twenty-four years. During his residence there he served in the treasury department at Washington, D. C., and was also private secretary for Governor McGill, of that state. Disposing of his interests in St. Peter in 1888, he lived in retirement at St. Anthony Park for six years. Coming to Los Angeles, Cal., in 1894, he bought sixty acres of land near Palms, where he improved a ranch now valued at over $500 per acre. He also owned town lots and the hotel at Palms, valuable real estate holdings at Los Angeles and Ocean Park, and was financially interested in silver mines. Fraternally he was a Mason and quite prominent in the order. Although physically feeble, his mind was clear and his mental vigor unimpaired until his death, in February, 1906. His wife, whose maiden name was Clara Hosley, was born in Massachusetts, and is still living, a bright and active woman, and a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church. Four children blessed their union, namely: Frank L., the special subject of this sketch; Frederick S., foreman of a printing office in Downey, Cal.; Florence K., living at home; and Harry E., of Los Angeles, bookkeeper for the Conservative Life Insurance Company.

Educated in the public schools of St. Peter, Frank L. Moore subsequently worked in his father's printing office for awhile, after which he attended Milton College, at Milton, Wis., for two years. On attaining his majority he embarked in farming pursuits, for a number of years renting land in Wisconsin. Going then to South Dakota, he took up a homestead claim and a tree claim, and there pursued his independent calling for awhile. Selling out, he returned to Wisconsin, and after farming for a few seasons went to St. Paul, Minn., where he was employed for a year in a printing establishment. Coming to California in 1890, he located near San Diego, where for three years he had charge of a ranch belonging to his father. Going then to Redlands, he carried on farming on rented land for two years, when he returned to Los Angeles county, the following year having charge of a ranch near San Gabriel. Since that time he has managed his father's ranch of sixty acres at Palms, and in his operations has met with marked success. November 15, 1905, he assumed control of the hotel property, which he managed for a short time, and then embarked in the bakery and confectionery business.

Mr. Moore married first, in 1881, Annie McNitt, who was born in Wisconsin, and died in that state at the age of twenty-six years. Of the three children born of this union, two died in childhood, and one is living, Frank F., a ranchman of Palms. In San Diego, Cal., Mr. Moore married Mrs. Emma (Swords) Bales, a native of Illinois, and they have one child, Edith F. Moore. Politically Mr. Moore is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to Palms Camp No. 567, W. O. W.

H. C. KELSEA. Prominent among the leading citizens of Compton is H. C. Kelsea, who located here when the town was comparatively new, and in its upbuilding and growth has been an important force. Enterprising and energetic, he has generously aided and encouraged the establishment of all beneficial projects, in the material and business advancement of town and county taking an active part. Brave and public-spirited, he served as a member of the vigilance committee in the early days, being captain of the local company. Of thrifty New England stock, he was born, September 11, 1845, in New Hampshire, which was likewise the birthplace and life-long residence of his parents, Benjamin Franklin and Martha (Merrill) Kelsea. His father, a farmer in his earlier days, subsequently sold his land and settled as a merchant at Center Harbor, N. H. He was a Whig until the formation of the Republican party, when he became one of its stanchest adherents, and was active in local affairs, serving as postmaster under both Lincoln and Johnson. He was a man of high moral principles, and his wife was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

After leaving the district school, which he attended six months of the year, H. C. Kelsea worked for awhile in his father's store, at Center Harbor, N. H., and then learned the trade of machinist. Enlisting, in August, 1861, in Company I, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, he served until July 5, 1865, during which time he participated in thirty-two engagements, including the battles of Gettysburg, Seven Pines and the Wilderness. Being wounded in the right lung during the latter engagement, he was confined in the hospital for two months, and on being released was sent home on a furlough. He afterwards reported for duty, and remained with his regiment until the close of the war. Locating then in Salem, Mass., he learned the trade of a carpenter and builder, at which he worked as a journeyman for five years, and as a contractor for himself for two years. Then, the wounds that he received in the war beginning to trouble him seriously, he came by way of the Isthmus to California in 1874, hoping in this land of sunshine to receive permanent benefit. After spending a brief time in San Francisco, he came on a coast steamer south to Santa Barbara, from there going up into the mountains. He subsequently worked at his trade in Los Angeles for a year, from there coming to Compton. Deciding to locate here permanently he bought a ranch of twenty-eight acres and began life as a farmer. He afterwards purchased another ranch, one containing forty acres, and in the management of his two farms has been very successful. He carries on general farming, making a specialty of raising two of the staple products of this section of the county, alfalfa and beets. In addition to ranching he has carried on an extensive business as a contractor and builder, having erected many of the larger public buildings and private residences of Compton and vicinity, being popular as a carpenter and a most pleasant and agreeable man to deal with, as he is upright and honest in all of his transactions.

In 1870, in Danvers, Mass., Mr. Kelsea married Mary E., daughter of Frederick A. Wilkins, of Massachusetts, and into their home five children have been born: Frederick, born October 6, 1873, married Sarah Lothrop, and resides in Long Beach; Frank, living in Los Angeles, was born July 21, 1875; Chester, also of Los Angeles, was born August 24, 1879; Harold, born October 21, 1883, resides in Los Angeles; and Gertrude, born August 24, 1887, is attending the University of California at Berkeley. In national politics Mr. Kelsea supports the candidate of the Republican party, but in local affairs he invariably casts his ballot for the men best fitted in his judgment for the offices, regardless of party prejudices. He takes great interest in town and city matters, and has served as school trustee. Socially he is a member and the commander of Shiloh Post No. 60, G. A. R., of Compton.

ROBERT KIRKWOOD. Familiar with various portions of California through travel and brief sojourns in a number of cities, Mr. Kirkwood on coming to Long Beach was especially attracted by the possibilities of this city and so disposed of his holdings in five different counties of the state, in order that his investments might be centered in Long Beach. Here he now lives, retired from business activities, in the comfortable residence which he erected on the corner of Magnolia avenue and West Seventh street. Of Scotch birth and ancestry, he was born in the city of Glasgow, December 29, 1827, being a son of Robert and Jane (Gilbur) Kirkwood, natives of Scotland. His father, who was a steam engineer by occupation, came to the United States in 1848 and settled near St. Louis, where a suburb was given the family name. There both he and his wife remained until death.

In a family of three sons and three daughters Robert Kirkwood was next to the youngest. Educated in the schools of his native city and reared to habits of industry, he was well qualified to make his own way in the world when, in 1848, he accompanied his parents to the United States. The trade of machinist, which he had learned in Glasgow, he followed in St. Louis until 1856, when he came to the Pacific coast by way of Panama. For a time he worked in San Francisco as an employe of the Union foundry (now the Union Iron Works), but in 1857 he went to Angel's Camp to take up the work of a mining engineer. After working for two companies he formed the firm of Kirkwood & Co., but in 1860 discontinued activities there and removed to Sonora, where he was employed in a foundry for eight years. The year 1869 found him in Soulsbyville, where he put in mining machinery and then acted as foreman of the mechanical department in the mines. Next he experimented in a new field of labor, that of grape culture, purchasing in 1875 a vineyard near Fresno; however, not finding the occupation profitable at that time and place, he sold the vineyard. Later he made his home in Pasadena and engaged in engineering work elsewhere until 1901, when he came to Long Beach and bought his present property.

The marriage of Mr. Kirkwood was solemnized in St. Louis, Mo., and united him with Elizabeth Harris, who was born at Worcester, England, and died at Long Beach, Cal., in June of 1903. Of their union six children were born and four are now living, namely: Alfred Robert, who remains with his father; Mrs. Jeannie Davies, of Long Beach; Charles, who is engaged in mining in Alaska; and Annie, who has charge of the family home since the death of her mother. The only fraternity with which Mr. Kirkwood has been identified is the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; nor has he been active in politics, taking no part in the same aside from voting the Republican ticket at elections. Through his active years the duties of his occupation were such as to preclude activity in fraternal or political organizations, and now, when retired from business, he finds his greatest enjoyment in the quiet of his home and the companionship of children and friends.

WILLIAM EDWARD PHELPS. No citizen takes a keener interest in the history of California than does Dr. Phelps, of Redlands, and no citizen is more ready and able to lend an impetus to the upbuilding of the section than he. Inheriting from an old New York family those qualities of character dominant in the life of the early settler, he was born in Phelps Street, Fulton county, N. Y., November 12, 1860; his grandfather, Chester, was born in that place, as was his father, George R., a farmer, who died in Gloversville in May, 1903. His mother was a member of the Whitney family, her birth occurring in Saratoga county, N. Y., near Glens Falls; she still survives and makes her home in Gloversville. She has two sons and three daughters living, one daughter being deceased; one son, W. W., is now a glove manufacturer in Gloversville.

The second child in the family of his parents, William Edward Phelps was reared in the paternal home until he was twenty years old, receiving a preliminary education in the public schools of the state. In Gloversville he engaged in the manufacture of gloves and at the same time studied and began the practice of veterinary surgeon. Severing his business relations in that place in June, 1890, he came to California and located in Redlands, then but a small place, and here engaged in the practice of his profession, which he has since continued, now being the oldest veterinary surgeon in San Bernardino county. He has been successful in his work and has acquired a competence, and at the same time by reason of his interest in public affairs has assumed a place of prominence in the citizenship of the place. He has contributed no little toward the upbuilding of Redlands, has purchased and improved property, and now owns a comfortable residence on Walnut street, where he makes his home.

In Fulton county, N. Y., Dr. Phelps was united in marriage with Miss Emily Banks, a native of Phelps Street, N. Y., where her death occurred. She had two children, Jessie May and Harold Chester, who died at the age of three months. The second marriage of Dr. Phelps took place in Redlands and united him with Miss Hester J. Mums, a native of Illinois, and born of this union is one son, Raymond Chester. Dr. Phelps gives his support to the Baptist Church, of which his wife is a member. The doctor served as county veterinarian, having been appointed by the board of supervisors in June, 1905. Fraternally he is prominent, being past grand of the Odd Fellows, and belonging also to the encampment of that organization; the Redmen; Ancient Order of United Workmen; Fraternal Brotherhood; Knights of the Maccabees; and the Royal Court, of which he is serving as trustee. He belongs to the State Veterinary Medical Association and is prominent in the Southern California Auxiliary. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and is serving as a member of the Republican County Central Committee. He is a member of the Board of Trade, and in all things gives his stanch support to the advancement and upbuilding of the city. He is justly esteemed among the representative citizens of Redlands, and appreciated for the high qualities of character displayed during his residence here.

IRWIN FELLOWS. Indiana has contributed her quota of dependable citizens toward making California the greatest commonwealth in the west, and among those of her number mention is due Irwin Fellows, who has been a resident of the state since 1887. Born in Putnam county, Ind., May 28, 1858, he is a son of Warner and Charlotte (Howe) Fellows, the latter both natives of the Empire state. In Onondaga county, where he was born in 1812, Warner Fellows was reared to young manhood, and there also he settled down to follow an agricultural life. For a number of years after this venture he was well content with his lot, but a desire to settle in a newer country led to the sale of his eighty-acre farm and the year 1842 found him among the pioneer settlers in Indiana. Selecting a location in Putnam county, he purchased a farm of seventy-two acres, upon which he made his home for nearly thirty years, his death occurring there in 1870. Politically he favored Republican principles, and fraternally he was identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Although he was not allied with any religious organization he assisted in the maintenance of the Baptist Church, of which denomination his wife was a member.

The parental family comprised twelve children, of whom Irwin was the youngest. His early boyhood years were not unlike those of the average boy in a new country, and when not attending the subscription school he was performing his share of the chores on the farm. This desultory training was found to be a valuable asset when, at the age of sixteen years, he was given charge of the home farm, running it for four years. About this time, 1879, he was married and with his bride removed to Missouri, removing back to Indiana two years later, however. After spending a like period in the Hoosier state he went to Kansas, there learning the mason's trade. Thus doubly equipped for making a livelihood he came to California in 1887, locating at once in Los Angeles county, and upon the property which he then purchased, near Palms, he has since been a resident. His ranch comprises eight acres, and in addition to its care and management he also works at his trade, the combined income enabling him to enjoy the comforts of life and to bestow upon his children advantages of which he himself was deprived. To himself and wife, formerly Martha A. Whittaker, two children have been born, Luther J., born in 1879, and Warner E., in 1882. All of the family attend the Baptist Church, of which Mr. and Mrs. Fellows are members, and politically Mr. Fellows is a Republican. The only fraternal order of which he is a member is the Woodmen of the World.

JAMES B. PROCTOR. The establishment of the Proctor family in the United States occurred under circumstances somewhat peculiar. One of that name was a millwright in a cotton mill in England and, being a man of unusual ability and energy, he acquired a thorough knowledge of the business. With keen foresight he decided that the United States offered a splendid field for the establishment of a cotton mill, for up to that time none had been started in the new world. However, the English government, naturally averse to the building up of cotton factories in our country, refused to give him permission to come to the United States, but allowed him to go as far as Nova Scotia. From there he made three attempts to steal away, but each time was caught by officers until the third time, when he secreted himself on board of a vessel bound for Massachusetts. The officers of the ship and the crew were ignorant of his presence. Scarcely had the ship set sail when he was missed and a British war vessel was dispatched in pursuit of the craft. Soon overtaken, the officers made a thorough search, but could not find the missing man, so they departed, and in this way the fugitive reached Massachusetts in safety. Shortly after his arrival he started the first cotton mill in the United States and the remainder of his life was devoted to that occupation.

Among the descendants of this sturdy English pioneer of Massachusetts was a grandson, Alfred A. Proctor, who was born in New York, and for years lived in Michigan, but about 1872 came to California and started the first blacksmith's shop at Compton. A sincere member of the Christian Church, he died in that faith in May of 1904. In early manhood he had married Margaret Chrysler, who was born in Canada, removed in childhood to Vermont, and from there to Michigan, later coming to California, where in 1888 her death occurred. Among her three children there was one daughter, now a resident of Los Angeles. One of the sons is living at Norwalk and the other, J. B., makes his home at Compton. The latter was born at Lowell, Kent county, Mich., on the 4th of July, 1857, and came with his parents to California, arriving November 2, 1872, after which he attended school at Compton. At the age of nineteen years he became interested in boring wells and has since engaged in this business, using two machines in his work. For ten years he made his home in Riverside, but with that exception he has resided at Compton since coming to the coast.

The marriage of Mr. Proctor took place November 2, 1882, and united him with Mary Wilson, a native of California. Three children were born of their union, namely: Victor E., born August 9, 1883; Leona M., April 26, 1897; and Viola I., August 30, 1899. The father of Mrs. Proctor was William A. Wilson, who was born in Missouri and crossed the plains with his wife in the first train behind the victims of the Mountain Meadow massacre, from whom they were distant only forty miles. The savages came upon their own little party and took all of their stock, but allowed the men and women to go on through Utah unmolested. When Mr. Wilson arrived in California he had nothing but his yoke of oxen and fifty cents in money. Notwithstanding his condition among strangers, with a family dependent upon him, he was able to supply the needs of wife and children and gradually gained a position of prosperity. Of his eleven children eight survive, four sons making their home at Long Beach. His death occurred in 1892 and was mourned by the people of Compton, where he had been one of the earliest settlers. His wife and her mother still survive, and there are altogether five generations of their family living in this vicinity. The Republican party receives the stanch support of Mr. Proctor in national elections, but in local matters he supports the men he considers best qualified to promote the local welfare. In fraternal relations he holds membership with Anchor Lodge, No. 273, F. & A. M., and has officiated as steward of the same.

FRED. A. McCURDY. Among the enterprising and self-reliant men who are actively associated with the development of the agricultural resources of Los Angeles county is F. A. McCurdy, a well-known ranchman of Clearwater township. He pays especial attention to dairying and poultry raising, and in the management of his interests shows marked ability and excellent judgment. A son of the late Daniel McCurdy, he was born January 22, 1852, in Waldo county, Me., coming from honored New England stock.

A native of Maine, Daniel McCurdy there spent the larger part of his comparatively brief life, being a true and loyal citizen. In 1862 he enlisted in his country's service, becoming a member of the Eighteenth Maine Volunteer Infantry, and in 1864 met his death on the field of battle, being killed at the siege of Petersburg. He married Hannah Field, who was born in Maine, living there until 1880, when she removed to Kansas. From there she subsequently came to California, and died at the home of her son, F. A. McCurdy. She was a member of the Baptist Church, while her husband belonged to the Christian Church. He was a Republican in politics, and a man of sterling character.

Brought up in his native town, F. A. McCurdy received his early education in the district schools, and as a youth was well trained in the New England habits and virtues. Being left fatherless when a boy, he was thrown partly upon his own resources, and began earning his living by working as a farm hand in summer and in the Maine lumber camps winters. Leaving his native state in 1876, he made his way westward to Lawrence, Kans., where he was successfully employed in the agricultural implement business for about ten years. Coming to California in 1886, he was for six years engaged as a windmill tank contractor, being located in Alameda county, near Oakland. Settling then in San Luis Obispo county, he embarked in agricultural pursuits, remaining there a number of seasons. Disposing of his property in that locality, he purchased his present ranch of twenty acres near Clearwater, and since devoted himself to the raising of hay, grain and alfalfa for feed, and to dairying and chicken raising, carrying on a large and lucrative business in this line.

In Kansas, in 1879, Mr. McCurdy married Rachel Walton, who was born in Indiana. Her father, Amos Walton, was born and reared in Ohio, but after his marriage settled first in Indiana, later moving to Kansas, and is now a resident of Long Beach, Cal. His wife, whose maiden name was Sallie Hiatt, died when the daughter Rachel was a young girl. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. McCurdy six children have been born, and of them we mention the following: Clemie Raye, who was born in Kansas, died at the age of four years; Fred, born in Kansas, lived but two years; Nicholas, also born in Kansas, is following the carpenter's trade in Los Angeles county; Helen A., born in Alameda county, Cal., is living at home; Blanche, born in Alameda county, is at the Home for Children, in Eldridge, Sonoma county; and Joseph F., is the only one of the children born in Los Angeles county, his birth having occurred on the home ranch. Politically Mr. McCurdy is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of Alameda Lodge, K. of P. He is an esteemed and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church, toward the support of which he contributes generously.

MERCURIAL LUGO. The ranch of eighteen acres now the property of Mr. Lugo was formerly a part of La Ballona rancho, the latter in times past one of the vast properties held by the Spanish. A man of progressive ideas, he looks forward to the betterment of the community in which he makes his home, in a special as well as an agricultural way, giving the best of his efforts toward this end. A native son of the state, he was born in Los Angeles county in February, 1859. (For an account of the parental history the reader is referred to the sketch of Vicente Lugo, which will be found elsewhere in this volume.)

The first seven years of Mr. Lugo's life were closely associated with his birthplace in Los Angeles county, the family at this period removing to a ranch in San Diego county. Ten or twelve years later Mr. Lugo and his mother removed to the ranch in Los Angeles county which the latter owned in the vicinity of Palms, the two making their home together until the son attained his twenty-fifth year. At this period in his career he formed domestic ties of his own and established his home on the ranch of eighteen acres which he now owns. This was a gift from his mother at the time of his marriage and was a part of the ranch upon which he and his mother had resided for so many years previously.

Seven children were born of the marriage of Mercurial Lugo and Reta Rays, the latter also a native of Los Angeles county. Named in order of birth their children are as follows: Antonio, Francisco, Jean, George, Becinta, Lovena and Loquano. With the exception of Lovena, who died when seven years of age, all of the children are at home with the parents. The family are communicants of the Roman Catholic Church, and politically Mr. Lugo is a Democrat. The esteem in which Mr. Lugo is held by his fellow citizens is well deserved and reflects further credit on a name already well known in this part of California.

AMOS DAVIS THATCHER. The Thatcher family comes of old Quaker ancestry and became established in the Virginian colony during the early colonization of America. One hundred and fifty-seven years ago Jonathan Thatcher purchased from Lord Fairfax a plantation situated near what is now Martinsburg, W. Va., and the house he erected still stands, in a fair state of preservation. The old homestead has been handed down from father to son and now belongs to Newton J. Thatcher. Perhaps one hundred years ago the then owner of the property planted an orchard of apple trees and long afterwards this was still considered one of the finest orchards in the entire state. A single tree one year bore one hundred and forty-five bushels of apples, and some of the trees measured as much as twenty-six inches in diameter.

The original owner of the plantation was succeeded by his son and namesake, who was a native of West Virginia and spent his entire life in that state. Next in line of descent was Mark Carr Thatcher, who was born near Martinsburg, W. Va., and at an early age removed to Ohio and took up a tract of raw land. During 1839 he settled in the then frontier regions of the territory of Iowa, where he improved a prairie farm in Van Buren county, and continued to reside there until his death. As early as 1850 one of his sons, Ezekiel, crossed the plains with an ox team, arriving in California after a fatiguing journey of five months. Eventually settling in Shasta county, he is still one of the leading men and honored pioneers of that section. On the completion of the railroad across the continent the father determined to visit Ezekiel and view the great and hitherto unknown west. Accompanied by his wife, in 1868 he went to Omaha and there paid $600 for two tickets to Sacramento, where they arrived at the expiration of five days. During the visit in California he lost his wife, who was Hannah Thomas, a native of the Shenandoah valley in West Virginia and a descendant of an English family identified with the Society of Friends.

There were nine children in the family of Mark Carr Thatcher and seven sons are still living, Amos Davis being sixth in order of birth. Four of the sons were Union soldiers in the Civil war, namely: Jonathan, who served in Company E, Fifteenth Iowa Infantry; Isaac, also of that regiment, and who was wounded in the battles of Corinth and Shiloh; Aaron, a member of the First Iowa Cavalry; and Amos D., who served with the Fifteenth Iowa Infantry. On the occasion of the Grand Army Encampment at Washington, D. C., in October, 1902, nine members of the Thatcher family marched abreast in the column down Pennsylvania avenue and were given a flag bearing the words, "One Family of Thatchers."

While the family were living near Wilmington, Clinton county, Ohio, Amos Davis Thatcher was born April 9, 1838. His earliest recollections are associated with frontier surroundings in Iowa. Neighbors were few, land was in the original condition of nature, and the farmer's task one of arduous labor and self-sacrifice. Free schools had not yet been generally introduced, and he was a pupil in a subscription school conducted in a log building wholly destitute of comforts. When the war opened he was eager to offer his services to the Union, and October 14, 1861, he was accepted as a volunteer in Company E Fifteenth Iowa Infantry, where he was first a sergeant and later a sergeant-major. Among the engagements in which he participated were those at Shiloh, Corinth, Iuka, siege and surrender of Vicksburg, Champion Hill, Jackson and Black River Bridge. Ill-health occasioned by exposure to inclement weather and the hardships of long marches forced him to leave the army, and he received an honorable discharge in September, 1863, at the close of little less than two years of service.

Returning to Van Buren county, Iowa, Mr. Thatcher engaged in the drug business and also followed farm pursuits. In 1878 he removed to Kansas and settled on a farm near Topeka, but after three years on the farm he moved into town and built a store building on the corner of Sixth and Clay streets, a locality still known as Thatcher's Corner. On account of the ill-health of a son he eventually disposed of his interests in Topeka and moved to California, settling in San Diego in 1889. Two years later he went to Pomona, where first he engaged in the fruit business and later was superintendent of a plant owned by the Deciduous Fruit Growers Association, his special work being the preparation of olives for the market, and of these he cured each year ten thousand gallons during the winter months.

Immediately subsequent to his arrival at Oxnard, February 27, 1900, Mr. Thatcher took charge of the business of the California Implement Company. However, within a short time he organized the Oxnard Implement Company, which purchased the interests of the former organization and has continued the business to the present time, with himself as president and manager. The implement house is the largest business of its kind in Ventura county. The company acts as exclusive agents for the machinery manufactured by the Moline, McCormick, Studebaker and Fish Brothers Companies, also handles gasoline engines manufactured by the Fairbanks-Morse Company, and transacts a large business in the line of its specialties.

The first marriage of Mr. Thatcher was solemnized in Iowa and united him with Miss Melissa Hartsell, who was born in Indiana. Her death occurred in 1902, while attending the Grand Army Encampment at Washington, from which city the body was brought to Pomona, Cal., for interment. Five children were born of their union, namely: George, who died while his father was at Corinth with the army during the Civil war; Mark, who died at Topeka, Kans., October 15, 1888; Frank, who died at San Diego in February, 1891; Frederick, cashier of the Bank of Oxnard; and Hugh, who is engaged in the drug business at Los Angeles. Four years after coming to Oxnard Mr. Thatcher was united in marriage with Mrs. T. E. Parker, who was born in Massachusetts, and now owns mercantile interests at Littleton, N. H. Both Mr. and Mrs. Thatcher are members of the Order of the Eastern Star and both are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he officiates as a trustee. Politically he supports Republican principles. While living in Kansas he was initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Topeka Lodge No. 40, and also affiliated with the Encampment, Canton and Rebekahs. He was made a Mason in Pomona Lodge, F. & A. M., and now belongs to Oxnard Lodge No. 341, and Oxnard Chapter. At the time of removing from Kansas he was commander of Abe Lincoln Post No. 1, at Topeka, and now has his membership with Vicksburg Post No. 61, G. A. R., in Pomona, this state.

WILLIAM WARREN ORR. A Californian in every sense of the word save that of birth, William W. Orr is one of the stanch supporters of the commonwealth and an important factor in its upbuilding. He is located in Los Angeles county and in the vicinity of Norwalk is engaged as a rancher, owning a tract of one hundred and sixty acres highly cultivated and improved and also forty acres just north of his home, all of which is devoted to grain and alfalfa and the pasturage for a large herd of cows which supplies a fine dairy kept by Mr. Orr. Born in Union county, Ky., February 15, 1832, Mr. Orr was a son of William and Susan (Stone) Orr, both natives of the same state, the paternal grandfather, John, having emigrated from Ireland in an early day and located in Kentucky where he engaged as a surveyor for many years. William W. Orr is the sole survivor of the Orr family of Kentucky, his brothers and sisters being deceased.

A limited education was all that Mr. Orr was able to obtain as he was orphaned by the death of his father when only five years old, and with seven children in the family it was necessary for them all to seek some means of earning their own livelihood. As soon as he was old enough he assumed charge of his mother's farm, remaining at home until 1852 when he started across the plains to California. He arrived in Placerville, Eldorado county, the same year and engaged in mining for the ensuing four years. He then went to Alameda county and purchased a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres and carried on general farming for about five years, when he disposed of these interests and removed to Contra Costa county and purchased a stock ranch of one hundred and sixty acres. He followed this enterprise for a time and then bought the La Fayette hotel at La Fayette and spent ten years in that section. In 1864 in company with Judge Venable he went to Nevada and was engaged in the lumber business in that state for three years, when he returned to Kenetucky via the Isthmus of Panama and the following year was married to Miss Sarah E. Ryle, a native of Oldham county, Ky., and a daughter of William and Annie (Baldock) Ryle. Mr. and Mrs. Ryle came to California and spent their last days with their daughter on the old homestead, his death occurring in 1889 at the age of eighty-four years and hers at the age of eighty-five years.

In 1869 Mr. Orr and his wife set out for California with an ox-team, coming via the southern route, and while camping at Waco, Tex., their first child was born. Pushing on toward their journey's end they arrived in San Diego, where Mr. Orr found himself without means, but here he received a letter from his friend and former associate, Judge Venable, advising him to come on to Los Angeles. They reached Los Angeles county and in the vicinity of Norwalk Mr. Orr rented land and began farming, two years later purchasing the first forty acres he owned, and where the old home now stands. The country was then wild, with but few settlers. He has since continued to purchase property until he now owns one hundred and sixty acres in the home property and a forty-acre tract one mile north, all well improved and finely cultivated. With his general farming he also manages an extensive dairy business, milking over thirty cows, while at times he has had as many as eighty in his herd. He has put up a model dairy, which is sanitary in all its appointments. He is also interested in the raising of thoroughbred draft horses. Mr. Orr owns a fine residence property on Maple avenue, near Sixteenth, Los Angeles.

Mr. Orr lost his wife August 21, 1905, at the age of sixty-three years. He has a family of five children, namely: Emma, wife of Wallace Randall and the mother of four children, their home being in the vicinity of the new Rivera school house; William, who died at the age of twenty-one years. John who married Miranda Sackett, has two children, and resides on a forty-acre ranch; Robert, who married Mabel Miller and now lives in Tulare county, Cal.; and Charles A., who married Grace Gibson, and is located on the old place. Mr. Orr is a charter member of Downey Lodge No. 220, F. & A. M., and is proud of the fact that all of his sons are identified with the Masonic organization. Mr. Orr is one of the esteemed residents of this section, his home having been upon this property he now owns for the past thirty-five years, during which he has taken a keen interest in the development and upbuilding of his adopted home; has established for himself a position of respect among his fellow citizens for his integrity and personal worth; and has also accumulated a competence. Although advanced in years he is still actively engaged in the management of his ranch and is proud of his superior products. He is justly named among the representative citizens of Los Angeles county for to such characters as his is owed the progress of the western commonwealth.

JOSEPH FRANKLIN NADEAU. The name of Nadeau is inseparably linked with the history and highest development of Southern California, and especially is it synonymous with progress in Los Angeles county and city, where Remi Nadeau, the father of Joseph Franklin, became a pioneer settler in 1860, and it was he who erected the first real modern building within the precincts of the city. The senior Nadeau, who was born in the province of Quebec, Canada, was descended from French ancestry and early settled in Concord, N. H., where he was occupied as a millwright and built a number of mills. In 1857 he removed to Chicago, remaining there a short time only before going to Faribault, Minn., where he erected mills and engaged in milling operations. Two years later he decided to push his way further west and crossed the plains, going by way of Pike's Peak to Salt Lake City, and after a year's sojourn there finished his westward trip to the Pacific coast and became one of the first settlers in Los Angeles. Upon his arrival here he began to do heavy teaming, later engaged in merchandising and again in freighting, using sixteen and twenty mule teams to haul merchandise to the mines, returning with loads of bullion. His extensive business in this line embraced the Owens river country, and he also brought borax from the deserts of California and Nevada, for his were the largest teaming outfits owned by anyone in those days.

It was about the year 1884 that he erected the Nadeau building, which was the largest in the city and the first large building on Spring street. He had succeeded in accumulating extensive property interests in various locations, became interested in agriculture and horticulture, and owned four thousand acres of land embraced in what is now known as the Cudahy ranch, adjoining the city on the south, upon which he planted a twenty-five-hundred-acre vineyard, making his the largest one in this section of the state for many years. The remainder of his land was devoted to the raising of alfalfa hay and other grain crops. Politically he was a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party and was actively interested in the public welfare of the municipality in which he lived. His death, in January, 1887, at the age of sixty-eight years, removed one of the most prominent and progressive citizens this section has known, and a man whose honesty and integrity of character were acknowledged by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. His wife, who was before her marriage Martha Fry, was a native of Concord, N. H., and a daughter of Amos Fry, who patriotically served his country in the war of 1812. The death of Mrs. Nadeau occurred in Los Angeles.

The oldest in a family of seven children, four of whom grew to maturity, Joseph Franklin Nadeau was born in 1845 in Concord, N. H., and reared in that state until fourteen years of age, his education being received there in the public schools and at an academy. In 1859 he removed with the family to Faribault, Minn., and in 1862 became a volunteer in Company H, First Regiment of Minnesota Cavalry, having mustered into service at St. Peter. He was engaged in the Sioux Indian campaign until 1863, when the redskins were forced to cross the Missouri river, and returning to Minnesota he was mustered out at Fort Snelling in the fall of 1863.

Following this he learned the carpenter's trade and was occupied as a builder in Faribault for a time. In 1868 he came to California via Panama and located in Los Angeles for one year, then removed to the northern states and spent the subsequent four years in Washington and Oregon on the Cowlitz and Columbia rivers.

Returning to California in 1873 Mr. Nadeau engaged in the teaming business with his father in the Nevada and California deserts, becoming interested in the borax mines at Columbus, Nev. He built four plants for refining the product with a capacity of twenty tons daily. The cost of hauling the borax from Columbus to Wadsworth was four cents per hundred weight, and the railroad haul to San Francisco was from one to two cents, so that when great quantities were shipped the market was soon flooded and the operation of the plants became unprofitable. Again returning to California the father teamed in Inyo county, forming a partnership with Judson & Belshaw, known as the Cerro Gordo Freighting Company, he acting in the capacity of manager. The son went to Modoc county and engaged in the cattle business at Goose Lake for a year, then returned to Los Angeles and was in business with his father for several years, after which he engaged in farming and stock-raising on a large scale, operating the Centinello and White & Denman ranches, and having from one thousand to three thousand acres of land in crops each year. He operated four steam threshing outfits at one time at an expense of $250 per day. Later he bought three hundred and twenty acres of land adjacent to the city and planted it to grapes. This land now adjoins Ascot Park on the south and lies between Central and Main streets. The price of grapes went down so low as to make their raising an unprofitable business and he was obliged to dispose of his vineyard in a few years. He then engaged in the furniture business in San Diego, and for the following six years was interested in the development of that section of the state. Returning to Los Angeles he there continued in the furniture business.

In 1897 Mr. Nadeau went to Skagway, Alaska, and inspected the Alton mines, but finding them commercially unprofitable he settled in Seattle for five years, occupied as a manufacturer of show cases and office fixtures. January of 1904 found him again a resident of Los Angeles, and a year later he located in Long Beach, building a residence on Riverside Drive and Third street, and here he has since devoted his time to looking after his large business interests. He subdivided the Nadeau homestead tract on the Long Beach car line on Nadeau street, the plat embracing thirty-six acres; laid out thirty-two acres on Nadeau street across from the first-named tract and called it the Edgewood Park tract; then laid out ten additional acres adjoining Woodland Park tract, and has established one large water plant for the three additions. The Powers pump over the well has a capacity of two hundred inches of water. He is interested in the Inner Harbor tract developed by the Inner Harbor Realty Company, of which he is a director, and owns other valuable real estate in Long Beach.

Politically Mr. Nadeau is a firm believer in Republican principles and is interested in the good government of the community. He has a family of five children; George J., residing at Nadeau station, and having charge of his father's interests there; Remi, in the real-estate business at Florence station; Amos, a farmer at Florence station; Laura, the wife of William Anderson, of Los Angeles; and Don Clemont, living at home. Personally Mr. Nadeau is a man of quiet habits and modest disposition, but possesses an innate strength which causes him to be immediately recognized as a leader by all those with whom he comes in contact, either socially or in a business way.

WALTER E. BARKER. Not a few of the men yet prominent in business affairs and public life are veterans of the Civil war, whose youthful participation in the turmoil of a bitterly contested struggle has been followed by long years of honorable association with civic movements and peaceful perseverance in commercial pursuits. Among such men there may be mentioned Walter E. Barker, for the past few years a resident of Southern California and a business man of Long Beach. The year after the beginning of the war, when he was only seventeen years of age, he was accepted as a private in Company C, Thirtieth Maine Infantry, and went to various parts of the south in company with his regiment, taking part in the battle of Pleasant Hill under General Banks and fighting at Cedar Creek with General Sheridan. The hardships of camp life and the exposure incident to long marches resulted in a sickness, which detained him in New Orleans for a time, but with that exception he remained with his regiment in camp and on the battlefield until the expiration of his period of service in 1864, when he returned to his northern home.

Descended from an ancient family of New England, Mr. Barker was one of eight children, all of whom live in the east with the exception of himself, and whose parents, D. K. and Julia A. (Green) Barker, were natives and lifelong residents of Maine. It was in Maine that he was born June 4, 1845, and there he received such advantages as the common schools afforded, leaving school to march with a gallant troop of Maine boys to the seat of war in the service of the Union. From boyhood he had been familiar with the lumber industry and at the close of the war he took up that occupation, of which he soon acquired a thorough knowledge. For eight years he was engaged in the lumber business in Pennsylvania, and from there went to Wisconsin, where he remained about one-quarter of a century, meanwhile conducting a lumber business with Chippewa Falls as his headquarters and place of residence. On coming to California, in 1902, he established his home in Long Beach, where he has since been a stockholder in a paint and paper business.

The marriage of Mr. Barker occurred in Wisconsin and united him with Miss Statie, daughter of Abel Brownell, and a native of Wisconsin, where her entire life was passed until ten years after her marriage. In her old home in that state she has a host of personal friends and was one of the leading members of the Episcopal Church, her membership in which denomination later was transferred to the Long Beach Church. During the long period of his residence in Wisconsin Mr. Barker maintained an active part in local politics and was known as one of the leading Republicans of his locality, yet he had no aspirations toward official honors and never sought office at any time or in any capacity. Yet, had his inclinations turned in that direction, his fellow-citizens would have tendered him such offices as were within their gift, for he was a man of great popularity in his section of Wisconsin, and since coming to the west has also gained a circle of warm friends in his new home.

JOHN C. WEES. An identification of more than thirty years with the city of San Bernardino entitles Mr. Wees to be numbered among its early settlers, as also he has been one of its leading builders. While for some years he has been retired from business cares, the work which he did in the past still stands a monument to his thrift, efficiency and reliability. Various of the houses of worship in the city were erected by him, as were also numerous business properties and many residences. During all the years of his energetic devotion to his trade he has owned and superintended a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres in Riverside county, which is in hay and grain, and which at this writing is operated by a son. Since retiring from his trade he has devoted his attention to the supervision of his property and to the discharge of his duties as member of the city council from the fourth ward.

The genealogy of the Wees family shows that they removed from Wales to the north of England many generations gone by, and some of the ancestors also came to America from Holland. John C. Wees was born near Toronto in Belleville, Canada, August 9, 1835, being a son of Peter and Joyce (Brown) Wees, natives respectively of Canada and England. The parents were lifelong residents of Canada and followed agricultural pursuits. Reared on the home farm and given the advantages of a common school education, John C. Wees grew to manhood without special incident to mark the passing years of boyhood and youth. At an early age he began to learn the carpenter's trade, but he remained at home until he was twenty-one and assisted his father in the management of the large farm. After having completed his trade, in 1860, he crossed into the States and settled at Appleton, Wis., where he worked at the carpenter's trade, remaining for a number of busy and uneventful years.

Coming to California in 1875 Mr. Wees remained in San Francisco from May until August and then came to San Bernardino, where he immediately secured employment at carpentering. Such was the success of his work that he was kept constantly busy, and little by little, with the proceeds of his earnings from the trade, he was able to become a property owner and he invested with such wise judgment that he is now well to do, holding a position among the prosperous citizens of the city. His various properties afford him a sufficient income to render unnecessary a continuance at carpentering, and accordingly he has retired from such responsibilities. His home at No. 1334 C street is a modern structure with attractive environments and substantial furnishings. Frequently he has been offered a high price for his ten acres of walnut land surrounding the residence, but as yet he has refused all offers, preferring to retain the homestead intact. For more than one-half century he has had the companionship of an excellent wife, whose cheerful co-operation has enhanced his successes and lessened his disappointments. Mrs. Wees was Louise Wright, a native of Canada, where she was educated and where in 1850 she became the wife of the man by whose side she has since labored for their mutual welfare and happiness. Three children were born of their union, namely: Oscar, who learned the carpenter's trade with his father and now operates the latter's ranch; Armantha, deceased; and James H., at home.

Ever since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Wees has kept posted concerning our national problems and has maintained a constant interest in movements for the upbuilding of his county and state. Politically he votes the straight Republican ticket and always gives that party his stanch allegiance. For eight years he served efficiently in the office of city trustee and since 1902 he has been a member of the city council, representing the fourth ward, in which capacity he has given his support to measures beneficial to the city, yet bearing ever in mind the interests of the taxpayers. More than forty years ago, while living in Wisconsin, he became a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and now has his name enrolled with Token Lodge No. 290, in the work of which he has been warmly interested.

ALLEN W. ANDREWS. Actively and prosperously engaged in business as a dealer in real estate, and as a property owner, Allen W. Andrews holds a position of note among the representative men of Compton. Public-spirited and energetic, he has been a prominent factor in the upbuilding of this part of the county, his aid and influence being visible in all movements for the general welfare of the community. The descendant of an old colonial family of New England, he was born April 25, 1845, in McHenry county, Ill., a son of George Andrews.

Born and reared in Massachusetts, George Andrews left the scenes of his childhood days when a young man, migrating to Illinois, where he took up land from the government, in McHenry county. With true pioneer grit and courage he cleared and improved a valuable homestead, on which he was prosperously engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1903. He married Cordelia Allen, who was born in Michigan, and died on the home farm in Illinois in 1847. Three children were born of their union, namely: Henry T., who served throughout the Civil war in Company C, Twentieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, subsequently studied law, and now resides in Prescott, Ariz.; John, who enlisted in Company D, Eighth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil war, and died of measles while in service; and Allen W., with whom this sketch is chiefly concerned. Both parents were Universalists in their religious beliefs, and in politics the father was a Republican.

Brought up on the home farm, Allen W. Andrews obtained a practical education in the common schools of his district. Fired with the same spirit of patriotism that enthused his brothers, he enlisted, at the age of sixteen years, in Company E, First Illinois Artillery, better known as the Waterhouse Battery, was mustered into service on December 13, 1861, and remained with his comrades until mustered out, December 24, 1864. He participated in many of the important battles of the war, including the engagement at Pittsburg Landing, in April, 1862; those at Corinth, Memphis, Guntown, Raymond, Champion Hill, the Siege of Vicksburg, and at Jackson, Miss. During the summer and fall of 1864 he, with his company, followed General Price through Arkansas, Missouri and Kansas, from the latter state going to Nashville, Tenn., where he took an active part in the engagements of December 15 and 16, just before he was mustered out.

Returning from the scene of conflict to his home in central Illinois, Mr. Andrews remained there awhile, after which he resided in Missouri and Kansas for a long time, living in the former state four years, and in the last-named ten years. Coming from Kansas to California in 1887, he first engaged in the livery business in Pasadena, after which he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, living on a ranch for a number of years. Subsequently settling in Compton, he has since carried on an extensive business as a general dealer in real estate, by his systematic methods and honest dealings building up a fine trade and winning the confidence and respect of the people.

In 1892 Mr. Andrews married Nellie McNall, daughter of Chauncey McNall, a native of New York, and into their pleasant home three children have been born, namely: Nellie, thirteen years old; Webb, nine years of age; and John, seven years old. Politically Mr. Andrews is a stanch Republican, and takes a genuine interest in local and national affairs. Fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias, and belongs to Shiloh Post No. 60, G. A. R., of Compton. Religiously he is a Congregationalist. He has accumulated money as a business man, and in addition to his town property he owns a ranch of twenty acres, situated one and one-half miles east of Compton.

DAVID MITCHELL is well informed on scientific farming and the breeding of stock, for he has spent many years in securing the most comprehensive training and education in these lines that could be obtained in the best schools on agriculture and stock-breeding in England and Ireland. He is highly esteemed by all who know him and enjoys an enviable reputation in business and professional circles. His ranch of one hundred and ten acres is well improved and is devoted to general farming, corn and beans being the principal crops, although he also has a walnut orchard and some berries planted and in bearing.

Mr. Mitchell was born in Londonderry, Ireland, a son of John Mitchell, a hardy Scotchman, who died at the age of sixty-four years, when his son was sixteen years of age. His mother, Marjorie (Stewart) Mitchell, was also a native of Scotland and after locating in Ireland was married to Mr. Mitchell. She died in Ireland at the advanced age of seventy-five years. The father was engaged as a steward or manager of a large estate in Ireland during his lifetime. It was after his death that David attended the Belfast farm schools, which are conducted by the English government, and in 1870 he graduated from the model farm school at Cork. He then attended the Albert institution at Dublin, receiving further instruction in agricultural work and the breeding of stock. He did some botany lecture work here and later was given charge of a model farm located at Tervoe, Limerick, in which position he remained for one year, when he went to Ballyclare, North Ireland, to manage a farm for his brother. In 1874 he decided to immigrate to this country and made San Francisco his first objective point. He brought with him letters of introduction to Steele Brothers in Edna, who gave him a position in their butcher business which he held for thirteen years. From there he moved to his present location, purchasing a ranch of fifty acres, to which he later added sixty acres, making his ranch today one hundred and ten acres.

In 1877 Mr. Mitchell was married to Miss Catherine Donahue, a native of County Kerry, Ireland, and to them eight children have been born: Marjorie S., the wife of G. W. Bennett of San Francisco; Annie Laura, who is married to D. C. Isom; David Francis, Agnes, William Wallace, Ethel Porter, John Alexander and Andrew Joseph. Mrs. Mitchell is a member of the Catholic Church and Mr. Mitchell belongs to the Presbyterian denomination. Politically he is a strong believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party, and he is especially interested in educational matters, in recognition of which he has been serving as school trustee of his district for twenty years.

WILLIAM CARUTHERS. The Caruthers family, represented in Los Angeles county by William Caruthers, a widely known and prosperous rancher in the vicinity of Downey, is of Scotch ancestry and possesses in a large degree the traits characteristic of these people. In Missouri John Caruthers first saw the light of day and was reared to manhood in the vicinity of his birthplace, receiving his education in the primitive schools of the middle west. In his native state he met and married Miss Frances Murphy, and shortly afterward they established their home in Louisiana, where, on the 22d of January, 1830, their son William was born. Later they removed to southeastern Texas and located on a farm, where the father died in 1855 and the mother a year later. They became the parents of fourteen children, of whom twelve attained maturity and all, with the exception of William Caruthers, are now living in Texas.

Rather limited advantages in an educational line were afforded the youth of the southwest, the subscription schools leaving the principal parts of one's training to be acquired by experience and observation. William Caruthers received his educational training through this medium and at the same time was drilled in the daily duties of a farmer and stock-raiser. He engaged in this occupation in Texas upon attaining manhood's estate, remaining in that location until 1859, when, with his family (having previously married Amarado Perry), he journeyed to California, driving his stock before him across the plains. A brief time was spent at El Monte, Los Angeles county, whence he went to San Luis Obispo county and there established a farming enterprise, which occupied his attention for the ensuing two years. About this time he was impelled to make a trip throughout the northwest before locating permanently in California, and accordingly he spent some time in Oregon and Washington. After his return to California he located for a short time in the Soledad mines, Kern county, which move proved a disastrous one indeed, for he lost by floods everything he had accumulated. In 1865 he came to Los Angeles county and in the vicinity of Downey purchased the ranch which he now owns; this was then bare, wild land, devoid of all cultivation and giving no promise of the future productiveness. Mr. Caruthers immediately began improvements and cultivation, setting out fruit trees, building fences as needed, erecting substantial buildings, and to-day owns a seventy-five acre ranch largely devoted to the raising of English walnuts. Besides this property he also owns another ranch of eighteen acres in this vicinity. He has met with success in his enterprises, and although suffering a misfortune at one time in his life, he was undaunted at the prospect of again beginning his career, bravely faced the future and energetically sought to build up his fortunes, once more. He is named among the prosperous land-owners of this vicinity and esteemed for the business qualities which he has demonstrated throughout his long residence in this section.

The marriage of Mr. Caruthers occurred in 1856, his wife being a native of Tennessee. They became the parents of the following children: Zora, wife of L. M. Drider, of Los Angeles, and the mother of two children; William, at home; Angie, who died at the age of thirty-three years; Jefferson D., who married Annie L. Holmes, and resides in the vicinity of Whittier; Mollie, wife of J. T. Stevens, of Mississippi; Martha, wife of Marion McClure, of Burbank, and the mother of two children; Hugh, who is married and has two children, and resides in Merced county; and John P., who married Bessie McMillan and has one child. The family support the Christian Church in their religious inclinations, while politically Mr. Caruthers adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party. Fraternally he is associated with Downey Lodge No. 220, F. & A. M., and also belongs to the Eastern Star lodge of this place. Mr. Caruthers has proven himself a citizen interested in all movements pertaining to the advancement of the community in which he has made his home, and has been particularly active in educational affairs, serving for several terms as a member of the school board. He is an honored and useful member of the Los Nietos and Ranchito Walnut Growers' Association, incorporated, and renders valuable aid in the advancement of these interests.

SAMUEL NEWTON JENNINGS. Conspicuous among the more prominent and progressive agriculturists of Los Angeles county is S. N. Jennings, one of the leading farmers of Clearwater, and one of the foremost citizens of the town. Possessing a good knowledge of the pleasant occupation in which he has for so many years been actively engaged, he is carrying on general ranching in a thorough-going, systematic manner, his labors being well repaid by the generous crops produced in his fertile and well-tilled fields. A son of the late John Jennings, he was born, October 1, 1843, at Mount Pleasant, Brown county, Ill., where his parents were pioneer settlers.

Born and brought up in Kentucky, John Jennings lived there until after his marriage with Mary Fry, who was born and reared in the same town. Then, in 1838, he went with his bride to Brown county, Ill., where he took up land, from which he cleared and improved a fine homestead. He was successful as a general farmer and stock-raiser, becoming owner of four hundred acres of valuable land before his death. He was a man of sterling integrity, highly respected throughout the community. He was a Democrat in politics, but belonged to no secret organizations. Both he and his wife attended the Presbyterian Church, being valued members. They became the parents of five children, one daughter and four sons. The daughter died in early childhood, but the sons are all living, two in California and two in Illinois.

Reared on the homestead, and educated in the common schools, Samuel N. Jennings became familiar with the numerous branches of agriculture in his younger days. Choosing farming as his life occupation, he remained at home, taking care of his parents and managing the home farm until they died. Subsequently, in partnership with one of his brothers, he owned over five hundred acres of land in Brown county, a large part of it belonging to the parental estate. Selling his share of the estate to his brother for $50 an acre, Mr. Jennings left Illinois in 1888, coming from there to Los Angeles county in search of a favorable location. Renting the Cox ranch, about five miles from Clearwater, on the Santa Monica road, he lived there for a year, and in the raising of barley and other crops was quite successful. Being thus encouraged, he then purchased his present ranch, buying first forty acres of his farm, subsequently adding two other tracts of forty acres each, then a tract containing fifty-four acres, and still later buying twenty acres of land. On this extensive ranch he is carrying on a large and very remunerative business, raising fine crops of alfalfa and beets, and running a dairy. He is a man of excellent business capacity, influential in public matters, deeply interested in the growth and prosperity of his adopted town, ever willing to contribute of his time and means to further its interests. He is successful financially, and is a stockholder in the Commercial Association of Compton, as well as in the First National Bank of that city.

In 1871, in Brown county, Ill., Mr. Jennings married Emma Haley, daughter of William Haley, a well-known farmer of that vicinity, and of their union four children have been born, namely: Clarence; Eva, who died when eighteen years old; Stella, who died at the age of fifteen years; and E. D., who is married, and with his son, Fred, lives on the homestead with his parents. Politically Mr. Jennings affiliates with the Democratic party in national affairs, but in home matters votes for the best men and measures, independent of party restrictions. He and his family are attendants of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAM TURBETT. Many have been the changes wrought in the history of California since Mr. Turbett landed at San Francisco in the year 1852, after having traveled via the Nicaragua route from his eastern home. Then the country presented an aspect of crudity and of primeval wildness strangely depressing to one fresh from the refining influences of a high civilization. Still sparsely settled, its population was of cosmopolitan variety, yet among its pioneers there were young men of remarkable strength of purpose, integrity of character and force of will, and it was these who laid the foundation upon which rests the great commonwealth of the present century. The pioneers of fifty years ago have in many instances passed from the scenes of their labors, but a few yet remain to enjoy the fruits of their arduous efforts and the refinements of the present era of progress.

Honored among the pioneers of California and for many years a resident of Ventura county, Mr. Turbett was born near Mansfield, Richland county, Ohio, being a son of Thomas and Martha Turbett, the former born in Pennsylvania of Scotch-Irish descent, and the latter descended from German progenitors. Both died in Ohio, the mother passing away when in middle age. Of their seven sons and two daughters, William was the youngest. By a second marriage of the father there were three children. Among the sons was John, a pioneer of 1849 in California, who crossed the plains with an emigrant party and eventually settled in Ventura county, where he died. The father was a farmer in Ohio from early manhood through all of his life.

On the farm where he was born October 16, 1833, William Turbett passed the uneventful years of youth. For a time he attended school held in a log building furnished with slab benches; public schools had not yet been introduced into the locality and the wages of the teacher were raised by subscription. When he left home to make his own way in the world he came to California, which, in those days, was attracting attention by reason of the riches of its mines. After he arrived in San Francisco he went to the mines in Yuba county and for a time clerked in a hotel, but after about five years he abandoned that work and went to Sutter county. Near Yuba City he bought a farm, settled upon the land and operated the same for two years. During the fall of 1869 he returned to Ohio by the newly completed railroad and visited among friends in the old home locality, at the same time working for a livelihood. During November of 1870 his brother-in-law returned to Ohio from Ventura county and described the opportunities awaiting settlers in this part of the state. Attracted by the description of opportunities, Mr. Turbett accompanied his brother-in-law to California, arriving in Ventura county late in the year 1870. For three years he worked for his brother-in-law, and meanwhile, in 1872, he and a nephew, Daniel Gilger, bought one hundred and sixty acres less than one mile south of the present site of Oxnard.

Three years after acquiring a partial interest in the farm, Mr. Turbett secured the deed to forty acres of the tract and this he still owns. A year after gaining the title he put down an artesian well of one hundred and forty feet, using a sixteen-inch pipe, and he still has an abundance of water from this well which makes it possible to irrigate his land as needed. However, since settling on his place he has never found it necessary to use water to raise his crops and has raised a crop every year. In former years he had the land in barley and corn, but eventually found it far more profitable to raise beans and beets, and accordingly gives his attention exclusively to these products. In politics he is of the Republican faith. Personally he bears a reputation as an unpretentious, retiring man, averse to prominence, yet unusually liberal and public spirited, a friend to all measures for the development of the county. After coming to his present place he here married Miss Elzora Trotter, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of three children. The sons, Thomas and John, make their home in Oxnard, and the daughter, Mrs. Grace Tapee, resides in Santa Barbara.

STEPHEN H. CARSON. Through an intimate association with the commercial and public interests of San Bernardino extending over a long period of years, Mr. Carson has acquired a thorough knowledge of the resources of the locality and has gained a wide acquaintance among its people. Much of his life has been passed in this city. In its schools he received his education and in its stores he gained his initial experience in business methods. During the greater part of his business career he has been interested in the drug business and possesses a practical knowledge of that occupation. Aside from the amount he still has invested in that line of trade, he has other business interests, besides which he owns residence and business property in the city.

While he has passed the greater portion of his life in San Bernardino, Mr. Carson is a native of Utah and was born near Salt Lake City, December 5, 1855, being a son of William and Trephina Ursula (Goddard) Carson, and a grandson of Stephen H. Goddard, a pioneer of San Bernardino, who died in this city at the age of about eighty-eight years. The father was born in Pennsylvania in 1818 and died at Fairfield, Utah, in 1898, while the mother, who was born in Ohio in 1836, is still living and makes her home with her children. Brought to California by his parents at an early age, Stephen H. Carson received such educational advantages as the schools of San Bernardino afforded, and after leaving school entered the office of the Daily Guardian, where he served an apprenticeship of three years at the printer's trade. However, he did not follow that occupation, but turned his attention to the drug business, in which he was employed as a clerk by the firm of Bowland & Craig for two years. Meanwhile his health had become impaired and hoping to regain his strength he went to the mountains and worked in saw-milling. The change proved beneficial and soon he had recovered his physical strength. Returning to San Bernardino he engaged as a clerk in the grocery business with Henry Conner, but later again became interested in the drug business, and still continues in that occupation, being now a silent partner with his sons-in-law, Schlott & Clute, in the Owl drug store.

The marriage of Mr. Carson took place December 30, 1877, and united him with Anna, daughter of William and Hannah Harrison. Four children were born of this union, Lillie, Ada, William S. and Clarence H. The elder daughter is the wife of D. C. Schlott, and the younger married William G. Clute. As before mentioned, the sons-in-law are engaged in the drug business; the sons also are employed in the Owl drug store. Throughout all of his active life, ever since attaining his majority Mr. Carson has voted the Democratic ticket. While maintaining his views with firmness and voting for them with fidelity, he has displayed no trace of partisanship, but concedes to those of opposite beliefs and ideas the same independence of thought and ballot which he demands as his own privilege. At no time has he solicited official honors, and the only position he has held was that of member of the city council, to which he was elected in 1903 for a term of four years. As a citizen he is honored for the qualities that have brought him financial success and for the generosity of disposition and kindness of heart that have characterized him in his dealings with others.

WILLIAM SMITH. One of the progressive and wide-awake ranchers of Los Angeles county is William Smith, who has succeeded in building up for himself and family a home and competence, and at the same time is winning the good opinion of all who know him. Of southern birth and lineage, he was born in Monroe county, Tenn., November 20, 1860, a son of William and Elizabeth (Hudgings) Smith, both natives of the same state, where the father engaged as a farmer until his death, which occurred shortly before this son was born. His mother, whose grandfather Hudgings served in the Revolutionary war, lived in Tennessee until her death, which occurred at the age of fifty-five years. She was the mother of two children. William Smith was reared in his native state and educated in its common schools, after which he worked on the home farm until attaining the age of twenty-seven years. He then set out for himself and not many years had passed away until he was the owner of a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, all of which were devoted to the raising of grain. In 1887 he went to Texas and located in Parker county, thence went to Scurry county and made that place his home for the period of three years, owning a farm of six hundred and forty acres and being interested in general farming and stock-raising, then returned to Parker county. Going next to Indian Territory he spent the ensuing four years there and on leased land raised corn and cotton. In 1900 he came to California and located on his present property, later purchasing the same, which consists of twenty acres with good and substantial improvements. Besides his own property he leases about sixty acres and raises grain, while his principal interest is the management of a dairy of fifteen cows. He is also giving some time to the breeding of poultry, having at the present writing about three hundred hens.

In 1888 Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Willie A. Rogers, a native of Mississippi, and who came to Texas with her parents in childhood. They are the parents of eight children, namely: Guy L., Izeta M., Roger C., Leotha, Ottis C., Prilla J., Lowell J. and William A. In politics Mr. Smith is a Democrat, and both himself and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

JAMES H. DOVEY. One of the recent industries organized in Long Beach is the Ornamental Stone and Brick Company, of which Mr. Dovey was one of the organizers. Until January, 1906, he was superintendent of the plant, and is still a member of the board of directors. The company was organized in 1904 with a capital stock of $25,000, and has since engaged in the manufacture of fine building stone. Specimens of the stone turned out from the plant are to be seen in the structure owned and occupied by the Bank of Huntington Beach, also in the stone used in the Harris residence and the McCullough block at Long Beach. Prior to and also since the organization of the company Mr. Dovey has been interested in the laying of cement walks and foundations; in which industry he has gained a reputation for skilled and successful work.

The Dovey family is of English lineage, and was founded in America by William Dovey, a native of Somersetshire, and an immigrant of 1857 to the United States, where he found employment in Syracuse, N. Y. During 1869 he removed to Michigan and settled on a tract of land near Coldwater, where he followed farm pursuits until his death. His wife bore the maiden name of Elizabeth Telford and was born in Ireland of Scotch ancestry; at this writing she continues to make her home in Michigan. Of their ten sons and four daughters the eldest was James H., a native of Syracuse, N. Y., born June 5, 1861, and reared on the home farm there and in Michigan, which he assisted in cultivating until he was twenty years of age. He then served an apprenticeship to the miller's trade at Coldwater, and at the expiration of his time (five years) he went west as far as Denver, Colo., where for two years he engaged in the creamery business. In 1888 he secured work as a fireman on the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad between Denver and Salida, where he continued for two years.

It was during 1890 that Mr. Dovey came to California, where at first he made his home at Pasadena and engaged in laying cement walks and foundations. After eleven busy years in that city he removed to the then small town of Long Beach, with whose rapid progress his own fortunes have materially advanced, and where he has had a large number of important contracts, both for cement walks and for foundations. As a business man he is prompt, reliable and resourceful, careful in planning his contracts and even more careful in executing them. Through his reliable methods of doing business he has established a reputation that is not limited to his home town, but extends through this part of Southern California.

While living in Denver Mr. Dovey was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Horan, who was born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Of this union there are four sons and four daughters, all of whom are being given the best advantages which the means of their parents permit. The family attend the Episcopal Church and Mr. Dovey contributes to the maintenance of that denomination. In politics he supports Republican principles and keeps well posted concerning the issues of the age. In fraternal matters he holds membership with the Independent Order of Foresters.

JOSEPH F. BRYANT. A man of broad and enlightened views, taking an intelligent interest in local affairs, Joseph F. Bryant is actively associated with the leading interests of the thriving village of Palms, where he is serving as postmaster and express agent, and is carrying on a good business as a dealer in real estate and in agricultural implements. Wide-awake, energetic and persevering, he is a true type of the self-made men of our times, and as a public-spirited and faithful citizen is ably performing his duties. A son of Enos Bryant, he was born, December 27, 1855, in Darke county, Ohio, near Greenville. His grandfather, David Bryant, spent the first sixty-five years of his life in Butler county, Ohio, where his father, a native of New Jersey, settled as a pioneer. Going then to Michigan, he took up land that was in its pristine wildness, cleared a homestead, on which he resided until his death, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years.

Born and brought up in Hamilton, Butler county, Ohio, Enos Bryant settled as a farmer in Darke county, Ohio, when young, continuing his residence in that place until 1870, when he removed to Iowa. Taking up land in Woodbury county, he cleared and improved a homestead, and for seventeen years was there employed in farming and stock-raising. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1887, he located about a mile west of Palms, buying a ranch of ten acres, a part of which he devoted to the culture of fruit, and was there successfully engaged in his independent occupation until his death in 1902, at the age of seventy-four years. He was a man of sterling integrity, an earnest supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and an active member of the United Brethren Church. He married Sarah Ann Townsend, who was born and reared in Darke county, Ohio, where her father, Alfred Townsend, settled as a pioneer. She died on the home ranch at Palms in 1897, aged sixty-seven years.

Going with the family to Iowa when a lad of fifteen years, Joseph F. Bryant assisted his father in clearing a homestead and completed his studies in the public schools. A natural mechanic, familiar with machinery of all kinds, he began his active career as an engineer on becoming of age, running stationary engines and threshing machines during summers, while during the winter seasons he engaged in carpentering. He was subsequently employed as a fireman for two years on the Iowa divisions of the Illinois Central and Northwestern Railways. In November, 1889, he located at Palms, and for eight years thereafter had charge of the local water works, the ensuing two years running an engine at the Downey avenue power house in Los Angeles. Establishing himself then as a merchant in Palms, he ran a general store for about a year, when he closed out all of the stock with the exception of the agricultural implements, in which he still deals, carrying on a substantial business in that line, and likewise in the sale and transfer of real estate in this vicinity. Since 1900 he has served as postmaster at Palms, and is now agent for the Wells-Fargo Express Company, and ticket agent for the Los Angeles and Pacific Railroad Company. In these various positions he is rendering able service, performing his duties with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the general public.

Mr. Bryant married Martha Devore, who was born in Winneshiek county, Iowa, and they are the parents of three children, namely: Nellie, wife of Albert LaForge, of Palms; Nettie A., wife of Edward Cook, of Palms; and Marion R., associated in business with his father. Politically Mr. Bryant is a stanch Republican, and formerly served as school trustee, for three years being clerk of the Board. He and his family are consistent members of the United Brethren Church, in which they are valued workers.

J. P. CHRISTENSEN. Before the provinces of Schleswig and Holstein had been incorporated within the German empire and while they were yet under the sovereignty of the Danish government, Mr. Christensen was born in Schleswig September 24, 1841, and in childhood he was a student in the schools of his native land, where he acquired a fair education in the Danish language. While still quite young he decided to seek a home and livelihood in the United States, concerning whose opportunities reports were many and favorable. Bidding farewell to the friends of his boyhood and the members of the family, he set sail for the new world June 26, 1860, and after an uneventful voyage landed in New York harbor on the 19th of July. Immediately after landing he proceeded to Mankato, Minn., whither two of his brothers had gone three years before and where, in 1859, they had opened a general store.

Scarcely had Mr. Christensen become familiar with his new surroundings when a heavy misfortune befell him. While hunting on the 7th of September, less than two months after his arrival, his gun burst and seriously crippled his left hand. The outlook was discouraging, but with his naturally optimistic disposition he did not allow the catastrophe to weaken his energies or lessen his courage. In order to acquire a more thorough knowledge of the English language he attended a select school. Meanwhile he aided his brothers in their merchandising, and bought furs, ginseng and farm produce, exchanging same for goods at the store. Times were very hard then, a financial depression pervading the entire country. Little money was in circulation. Eggs brought only four cents a dozen, butter five cents per pound, and wheat thirty cents a bushel, and payment was always made in trade, not in cash.

The great Sioux massacre commenced in August, 1862, and shortly afterward Mr. Christensen secured a government contract to furnish supplies for all of the military posts south of the Minnesota river. The money thus paid for produce by the government greatly relieved the distresses of the settlers on the frontier, besides causing an advance in prices paid for farm products of from two to four-fold. Supplies were furnished to the troops until the summer of 1864, when they were ordered to South Dakota. On discontinuing that work Mr. Christensen bought an interest with his two brothers under the firm title of H. P. Christensen & Brothers. In the spring of 1867 the senior member of the firm retired and the business was continued by C. S. C. and J. P. Christensen under the title of Christensen Brothers, a large trade being built up throughout all that section of the country. After twenty-one successful years in business they sold out and in the fall of 1889 J. P. Christensen moved to California, arriving in San Diego on the 9th of September. Since then he has engaged in the real-estate business in this city and among other important tasks carried out by him may be mentioned the platting of an addition on the west side of City Park, and the laying out of Golden Park on Point Loma.

The marriage of Mr. Christensen took place September 24, 1866, and united him with Mary A., youngest daughter of R. W. Warren, and a descendant of ancestry dating back in America to the coming of the Mayflower in 1620. As early as 1834 R. W. Warren left his home in the vicinity of Lake Champlain in New York and traversed the wilds of what was then known as the frontier until he arrived in Wisconsin, then still under territorial government, and there he became the first settler at Lake Geneva, where he remained for years, becoming one of the most prominent and most active business men in that part of the state. Through all of his life Mr. Christensen has been an industrious, energetic man, interested in business to such an extent that he has not participated in politics, nor has he identified himself with any fraternity other than the Masonic Order, in which he is a Master Mason. All who know him unite in bearing testimony to his upright life and to the energy with which he has overcome misfortune and achieved success.

ALBERT C. HAIGHT. A fine old gentleman and a pioneer orange grower in San Bernardino county is Albert C. Haight, who has been a resident of this part of the county for nineteen years. His ranch comprises nine acres, of which six and one-half acres are planted to orange trees, which Mr. Haight himself set out. He has a fine home with all modern improvements, his outbuildings are good, and the whole place has an air of thrift pleasant to note. The birth of Mr. Haight occurred July 25, 1843, in Steuben county, N. Y., where his parents, Peter and Ada (Crawford) Haight, reared their family, being themselves natives of that state, in which their deaths occurred. The father served in the war of 1812, and died when the son, Albert C., was a child of nine months, the death of the mother occurring when he was seven years old. Of the twelve children in the family six are now living, one son residing in San Diego at the present time.

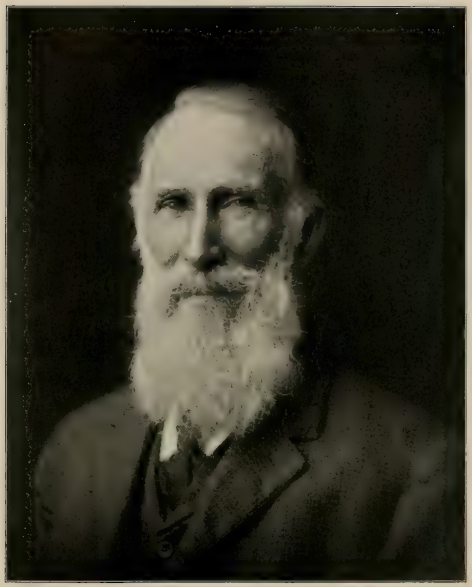
Until seventeen years of age Mr. Haight attended the public schools of Steuben county, and then removed to Belvidere, Boone county, Ill., where he engaged in agricultural pursuits for a time, later continuing the same occupation in Michigan. He also worked for a time in a factory in the latter state. His next move was to Nebraska, where he remained two years, and in 1886 he arrived in California. After six weeks spent in Riverside he came to his present ranch in San Bernardino county, which has been his home throughout the succeeding years. During the Civil war he served a year and a half in Company B, Ninety-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but owing to sickness was not engaged in active warfare. Politically he is a strong believer in Republican principles, and fraternally is affiliated with the Loyal Mystic Legion.

In 1875 Mr. Haight was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Dakin, a native of Michigan, and they have become the parents of seven children: John, who married Miss Alice Twogood; Alla; Adda; Affa, the latter now the the wife of David Downs of Highgrove; Ira; Alzora and Elizabeth. All charitable and benevolent interests receive the hearty and liberal support of the family.



JOHN FAHLER. A man of energy, enterprise and wise forethought, John Fahler has been actively identified with the material and industrial advancement of San Pedro, and occupies a noteworthy place among its business agents. Starting in life for himself when young, he came to California in search of a favorable opportunity for gaining a livelihood, and by means of diligent toil and a wise use of his faculties he met with a fair degree of success. The third child in order of birth in the parental household, John Fahler was born in 1862, at Malax, near Vasa, Finland, where his father, Isaac Fahler, was a tiller of the soil.

Immigrating to the United States in 1880, John Fahler landed in New York, but after a brief stay in that metropolis came to San Francisco, where he entered the employ of the Morgan Oyster Company. He was subsequently engaged in fishing, first in San Francisco bay, and later on the Columbia river, being located at Astoria, Ore. Returning from there to San Francisco, he remained there until 1891, when he settled permanently in San Pedro. Here he worked for awhile for the San Pedro Lumber Company, and has since been profitably engaged in lumbering or sailing, in either branch of industry meeting with success. He is a man of wise management and by judicious investment has accumulated some property. On Fourth street, between Center and Mesa streets, he erected the residence now occupied as the family home.

Mr. Fahler married first, in San Pedro, Annie Newland, who was born in Finland. She died in San Pedro, leaving one son, Frederick Fahler. Subsequently Mr. Fahler married, in San Pedro, Annia Larson, a native of Eskilstuna, Sweden, and they have one child, a daughter named Mary. Fraternally Mr. Fahler is a Knight of Pythias.

STEPHEN O. DAVIS. For upwards of twenty years Stephen O. Davis, now residing at San Gabriel, has been actively identified with the advancement of the agricultural interests of Los Angeles county, holding a noteworthy position among the foremost farmers of Southern California. He is a broad-minded, liberal man, enterprising and progressive in all matters, and in the improvement of his fine ranch, located two miles north of Long Beach, he has spared neither time nor expense. He is a native of New York, and was born in Dutchess county April 2, 1831. His parents, William and Catherine Davis, were born in New York state, and lived there until 1837, when they removed to Williams county, Ohio, where they purchased land and were engaged in farming the remainder of their lives, the death of the mother occurring there in 1848, and that of the father in 1857.

But seven years old when the family settled in Ohio, Stephen O. Davis was there educated, attending the district school until about fourteen years of age. Beginning life for himself then, he worked as a farm laborer until 1850, when he followed the tide of emigration westward, coming across the plains with ox-teams to California, being six months en route. The ensuing year he was engaged in mining on the Scott river, and the next twelve years was similarly employed in Shasta county. Changing his occupation, Mr. Davis then went to Monterey county, where he invested a part of his money in cattle, and for twelve years thereafter was in the stock business. Coming to Southern California in 1884, he purchased forty acres of the land included in his ranch near Long Beach, paying $32 an acre. Beginning at once the improvement of his ranch, he met with most satisfactory results, and as a general farmer was exceedingly successful, meeting with good pecuniary rewards. Each year he added to the value of his estate, which is now worth $500 an acre. In 1900 Mr. Davis bought another tract of land containing forty acres, and soon afterward purchased fifteen acres more, and has now one of the most desirable farms in the neighborhood. He has a fine set of buildings, which are models of comfort and convenience, and which, with their attractive surroundings, evince the thrift and prosperity of their owner. In the fall of 1905 Mr. Davis bought residential property in San Gabriel, where he is now living retired from active pursuits and enjoying the competency which he has acquired by industry, perseverance and judicious management.

In June, 1885, in Los Angeles, Mr. Davis married Christie Williams, a native of Wisconsin, and into their household the following children have been born, namely: Debnoy, at home; Eugenie, wife of Daniel Harbert, of Bakersfield; Carl and Arthur. Politically Mr. Davis is a straight Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Masons.

JAMES A. SMITH. One of the prominent ranchers of Los Angeles county, James A. Smith, widely known as Section Smith, was born in Orange township, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, February 12, 1830, a son of John G. and Nancy (Burnside) Smith, natives respectively of New York and Pennsylvania. Both parents lived to a ripe old age, the father, a Whig in his political affiliations in the early days and later a Republican, engaging as a farmer up to the time of his death. The mother was a first cousin of the celebrated General Burnside and her great grandfather, James Burnside, was a fifer in the Revolutionary war. They were the parents of eight children, five of whom are still living. James A. Smith obtained his education through the medium of the public schools in Ohio, after which he learned the moulder's trade and followed it for a short time in his native state. Finally removing to South Bend, Ind., he engaged in the same kind of work and was there married, two days afterward starting overland with his bride for California. They drove the entire distance but arrived safely in Eldorado county in 1853, and immediately engaged in mining at Hangtown. The name of the place was changed to Placerville soon after he arrived there. He remained for a short time in that place when he went to Colusa county and engaged in farming, purchasing six hundred and sixty acres of land, where he carried on the raising of grain. In connection with his own property he rented about four hundred acres for the purpose of raising grain. Mr. Smith purchased and conducted one of the first threshing machines in that section of the country, being interested in this for about five years.

In the fall of 1864 Mr. Smith returned to Illinois and located in Livingston county, where he purchased a fine farm of four hundred and four acres. He remained there until 1876 when he again located in California, having purchased a section of land near Norwalk, showing his faith in the country and obtaining for him the name his friends like to call him; since then he has sold off or given to his children, and now retains two hundred and eighty acres two and one-half miles southeast of Norwalk, where he is engaged in the raising of alfalfa, stock and sugar beets, a part of his land being pasture. Mr. Smith owns valuable property in Los Angeles consisting of three hundred and forty-seven and one-half feet on San Pedro street, near Fourteenth, and one hundred and sixteen feet on West Eighteenth, near Main.

Mr. Smith's first wife was Miss Maria Hanson, a native of Indiana, and while living in Illinois the second time her death occurred. He then married his wife's sister, Mrs. Margaret L. Furgerson, a widow, also a native of Indiana, and her death occurred in 1895. Mr. Smith has four living children, namely: William H., James F., Jay G. and Bessie; the last named is the wife of A. M. Costner. A lifelong Republican, Mr. Smith was a schoolmate and personal friend of James A. Garfield, the martyred president.

JUSTIN ROUSSEY. The family represented by Justin Roussey is of French origin, although he himself is a native of the United States, born in Franklin county, Kans., June 22, 1869. The first representative of the family in America was the paternal grandfather, who emigrated from France with his family in 1830, making settlement in Pennsylvania. His son John B. was a lad of only seven years at the time of the removal to the United States, and from then until reaching young manhood he knew no other home than Pennsylvania. A desire to locate in the newer parts of the west was the means of his selling out his holdings in the east and removing to Kansas, where he purchased a half section of land. Besides this property, he also owned fifteen acres of land in Ventura county, Cal., upon which he lived until his death in 1900.

The wife of John B. Roussey, before her marriage Miss Harriet Petit, was also born in France, and was brought to the United States by her parents when she was about fifteen years old. The Petits also settled in Pennsylvania not far from the Roussey family, and thus the young people became acquainted and were finally married. Ten children were born to them, all of whom reached maturity, and their names in order of birth are as follows: Charles S., Nicholaus F., Louis F., Addie A., Justin, Chloe Elizabeth (who married D. Jordan and lives in Kansas), Jane Della (Mrs. R. B. Knipschure), Julia B., Margaret M. and Catherine E.

From early boyhood Justin Roussey had been associated with agricultural affairs, so that when he chose his life calling and started out independently it is a matter of no surprise that he continued to follow the business with which he was most familiar. At twenty-two years of age he began farming on a tract of rented land, his experience on that farm giving him the training and confidence necessary to insure success in handling a larger undertaking. This resulted in the purchase of a tract of fifteen acres in the La Ballona district, and ten acres of this property now comprises the home place. Besides his own ranch he rents adjoining land to the extent of one hundred acres, all of the tract under his control being devoted to beans, hay and barley. By his marriage with Anna Luella Kauffman, a native of Ventura county, two children have been born, Justin Edward and Marion Adeline. Politically Mr. Roussey is independent.

JAMES QUILL. Conspicuous among the pioneer settlers of Downey is James Quill, an extensive landholder and a citizen of influence and wealth. Beginning life with scant means, he labored unceasingly for many years, following any honorable occupation, and through his unaided efforts has attained distinction as a self-made man and won a position of prominence in business and social circles. Like many other of our most respected California residents, he is of foreign birth, having been born, December 20, 1848, in Ireland. His father, James Quill, Sr., immigrated with his family to New England in 1852, locating in Ipswich, Mass., not far from Newburyport, where both he and his good wife spent their closing years.

But four years old when he came with his parents across the broad Atlantic, James Quill was educated in the public schools of Massachusetts. April 9, 1865, the very day of Lee's surrender, he left his Newburyport home, and, with but $30 in his pocket, went to New London, Conn., where he was for two months in the employ of G. G. Hammond. Thinking the outlook for a young man much brighter in the west, he proceeded to Illinois, and for a brief time worked in Mendota. Continuing his journey westward, he was for awhile located in Iowa, first in Davenport, where he received fifty cents a day on a farm, and afterwards in Muscatine. Subsequently going to St. Louis, Mo., he was employed as a boatman on the Mississippi river for a short time, and afterwards became watchman on a boat at the dock, remaining thus occupied for about five weeks. Still hoping to find something better to employ his time, he then went to Leavenworth, Kans., where, as an employe of Burrows & Trowbridge, he engaged in hauling government freight across the plains. Having delivered his first cargo at Fort Laramie, he drove to Council Grove, Kans., where he reloaded, and subsequently started for Fort Union, N. Mex. On the way, while crossing the creek, he and his companions were snowed in and had to remain from December 4th until the ensuing May, during which time he lost most of his stock. He then continued the journey to Fort Union, from there returning to Fort Leavenworth, traveling on an average thirty miles a day.

Mr. Quill next went to St. Louis, thence going up the Ohio river to Cincinnati, Ohio, and from there to Covington, Ky., but not finding anything desirable to do in either city, returned again to St. Louis. From there he went to Omaha, Neb., thence by steamer to Fort Benton, and after remaining there a short time engaged in lumbering in the Nebraska timber-lands. January 2, 1868, he arrived in Chicago, Ill., being then on his way east. Going to New York City and Boston, he visited his old home and former friends in Newburyport, Mass., after which he sailed from New York for California, arriving in San Francisco in February, 1868. Going on to San Jose, he was for a time employed in prospecting along the Kern river, after which he came by stage to Los Angeles, where he worked two months. Returning then to San Francisco, he proceeded to Emigrant Gap, where during the summer he drove a logging team to Putnam's mill. Going to White Pine, Nev., in the fall, he located several claims, remaining in that vicinity until August, 1869. Coming to Southern California that fall, he located in the Los Nietos valley in October, 1869, and having rented eighty acres of land embarked in agricultural pursuits.

Meeting with undisputed success as a farmer, Mr. Quill purchased his first land in 1879, buying twenty acres now included in his home ranch. He afterwards bought a tract containing seventeen acres, and subsequently purchased forty acres, and again bought twenty acres of land adjoining his forty acres of grapes and walnuts. Very successful as a general rancher and fruit grower, he continued investing in real estate, and more recently bought five acres of rich land lying just across from his home estate. He also owns valuable land adjoining the city of Downey, and has title to considerable city property, being owner in all of one hundred and seven acres of as fine land as can be found in this locality. This land he has improved himself, each year adding to its richness and value. Before becoming a landholder Mr. Quill loaned money, and in connection with farming carried on a substantial business in buying and selling grain, his foresight, practical judgment and sound sense winning him success in his extensive operations in that line.

February 2, 1882, Mr. Quill married Rosina Allen, daughter of Judge O. H. Allen and grand-daughter of Col. James and Mary (Reed) Allen. A native of Kentucky, Judge O. H. Allen studied law when young under Benjamin Harding, and was admitted to the bar in Washington, D. C. He immediately located in Mississippi, going from there to Texas in 1832. Engaging in journalistic work, he established the first newspaper in the state, and in it, as an advocate of the people's rights, he published the celebrated letter which led to the appointment, by the Mexican government, of Stephen F. Austin as grantee of the lands in that vicinity. In 1849 Judge Allen came across the plains to California, and here spent the remainder of his life, dying, March 13, 1889, in Los Angeles county. Three children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Quill: Oliver James, Charles A., and Joseph A. Mr. and Mrs. Quill are highly esteemed throughout the community, and their pleasant home is a center of gracious hospitality. They have a very conveniently arranged house, with sanitary plumbing, furnished with water power and a gas plant. Politically Mr. Quill is a stanch Republican, and takes great interest in local matters, although he is no aspirant for official honors.

ALLAN L. HART. In the business circles of Santa Monica, no member holds a more assured position than Allan L. Hart, who is actively identified with the mercantile interests of the community as a large and active dealer in staple and fancy groceries. Beginning life with no other assets than a willing, courageous heart and strong hands, he labored industriously, meeting with success in his various undertakings, and is justly entitled to an honored position among the self-made men of the county. A native of New York, he was born, September 11, 1869, in Chautauqua county. His father, Lester Hart, was of New England stock, and his mother, whose maiden name was Anna Williamson, was of thrifty Scotch descent. She died in 1901, aged fifty-nine years.

The oldest child and only son in a family of four children, Allan L. Hart was reared and educated in the Empire state. Thrown upon his resources when young, he worked at any honorable employment for many years, and by perseverance, thrift and wise management acquired some money. In August, 1903, he came with his family to Los Angeles county in search of a favorable opening for business, and October 10 opened his present grocery, in the Columbian block. Starting in on a broad scale, he carries a complete line of fine groceries, tea and coffee, his stock comparing favorably in regard to quantity and quality with any in the vicinity, while his store is a model of cleanliness and thrift.

While living in New York, Mr. Hart married Cora D. Skinner, the descendant of an old New York family. Politically he is a loyal supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He is a man of upright character, well worthy of the success he has attained in social and financial success, and is held in high regard by his associates and friends.

CHAUNCEY B. PETTIS. A man of unquestioned business tact and judgment, possessing strong and intelligent convictions, Chauncey B. Pettis is identified with the mercantile prosperity of Ocean Park as junior member of the firm of Devore & Pettis, carrying on an extensive hardware business. Beginning on a small scale, these enterprising men have established a fine trade, which has kept pace with the rapid growth of the town, and have thoroughly identified themselves with the leading interests of this section of the county, becoming prominent in financial, social and fraternal circles. A son of Willard H. Pettis, Chauncey B. Pettis was born in Canastota, Madison county, N. Y., of English ancestry, among his early progenitors being one of the heirs of the famous Richards estate in England. The founder of the Pettis family in this country came to the United States in early colonial days, and the brother of Mr. Pettis's grandfather served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

A life-long resident of New York state, Willard H. Pettis was born in Oswego, where he learned the trade of carpenter and builder. He subsequently lived in different parts of the state, including Canastota and Newark, and died at the age of seventy-eight years, beloved and respected by all. He married Jeanette Scott, who was born and reared in Glasgow, Scotland, and of the children born of their union Chauncey B. was the third in order of birth.

Educated in the public schools of New York,

Chauncey B. Pettis was graduated from the high school at Newark, after which he studied drawing, draughting and architecture. Thus equipped, he worked with his father for awhile at the carpenter's trade, and then started in business for himself as a builder and contractor, remaining in the east a number of years. In 1886 he came to California, arriving in Los Angeles in December. For fourteen years he resided there, and during the time was actively identified with the upbuilding of the city, working sometimes with a partner, and sometimes alone. Locating at Ocean Park in December, 1900, he formed a co-partnership with Mr. Devore, with whom he has since built up one of the largest and most profitable hardware trades in Southern California. As their patronage has increased, this enterprising firm has enlarged its operations, from time to time adding to its stock, which is now valued at $50,000. Their fine double store, on Pier avenue, is one of the largest of the kind in the county, exceeding in size that of any on the beaches outside of Los Angeles. Aside from their varied stock of hardware they carry a good line of paints, oils and glass, and in every department have a most satisfactory trade.

In Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Pettis married Mrs. Sarah Haulenbeck, a daughter of James H. Young, of Massachusetts. Politically Mr. Pettis is an independent Republican, and fraternally he is a member of Ocean Park Lodge, F. & A. M.; of the Woodmen of the World; and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Both Mr. and Mrs. Pettis are held in high esteem, and are members of the Christian Science Church.

AUGUST CARL HEISTERMANN. Some men's lives are passed quietly in the enjoyment of their homes, while others are so rudely buffeted in the voyage through life, and they meet with so many strange adventures, that the history of their wanderings is more like a tale of fiction than that of sober biography. Among those whose life work has been of this character, and whose wanderings have been far and wide, is August Carl Heistermann, of San Pedro. Resolute, self-reliant, energetic and enterprising, he has kept busily employed since a boy of ten years, having been associated with various occupations, and is now carrying on a substantial business as proprietor of the Home dairy, the largest institution of the kind in this part of Los Angeles county. A native of Germany, he was born, December 23, 1861, in Kiel, duchy of Holstein. His father, the late Carl Heistermann, was born at Lippe-Detmold, Germany, where he learned the trade of brick maker, which he subsequently followed at Kiel until his death, about 1872. His wife, whose maiden name was Charlotte Groath, was born in Gikon, Holstein, and died, August 16, 1904, in San Pedro, Cal.

The oldest of a family of four children, August Carl Heistermann was brought up on a farm near Kiel. When he was but ten years of age he was left fatherless, and from that time became self supporting. From then until sixteen years old he worked on a dairy farm, receiving his board and clothes for his labor, and having two half school days each week. The following two years he was employed in the Kiel navy yard, after which he followed the sea for a long time, being engaged principally in the coasting trade. Subsequently he made three trips around Cape Horn, going first to Iquique, Chile, and returning. On his second voyage he visited Valparaiso, Chile, and then, after making a trip to Hamburg, a home port, he came to California by way of the Horn, being one hundred and sixty-five days on the way, and arriving in San Francisco in October, 1880. While following the sea, he had many perilous adventures. While sailing on the Magdalena, a two-master, the vessel was ship-wrecked off the coast of Mecklenburg, but no lives were lost, the entire crew being saved. During his last voyage around the Horn his vessel lost nearly every sail while rounding the Cape, and for seven weeks laid off the coast, being on the beam end for three days, during which time the men on board came very near being frozen to death.

Locating in San Francisco soon after the vessel landed, Mr. Heistermann worked for four months at the confectioner's trade, receiving $4 a week wages. The ensuing five years he was in the employ of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, and during the time made two voyages to Honolulu on sailing vessels, and two to Australia on the steamship Australia, landing at Sydney, on one of the latter trips going as quartermaster. Again giving up his seafaring pursuits, he was for a number of years employed in dredging in different localities, first as leverman for the Smith Company assisting in dredging the Oakland basin, and afterwards the San Pedro bay. Then, as captain of the men employed, he dredged the San Diego bay, and afterwards the Oakland channel. Giving up his position with the Smith Dredging Company, he was subsequently associated with the San Francisco Bridge Company for fourteen months, being captain of the dredging company that dug the tidal canal. Coming again to San Pedro in 1890 he served as captain of the dredging company that made the channel in the harbor, and filled in Bosco Island, working for Captain Polhamus. Giving up his position in 1893, he opened a feed and grocery store at the corner of Fourth and Mesa streets, in San Pedro, and continued there until 1895, when he moved into a store which he had built, and there remained two years, meeting with excellent success. His health failing, he then gave up all business for four years. Then, accepting the position of foreman of the Coast Contracting Company, in San Francisco, he had charge of the blowing up of Shark Rock and Arch Rock, at the first charge of Shark Rock using ten tons of gelatine. Returning to San Pedro in the spring of 1902, Mr. Heistermann started in his present business, locating at the corner of Fourth and Mesa streets. He subsequently enlarged his operations, buying another firm's stock, and in November, 1902, locating at his present place, one mile from the city, where he is carrying on a large and remunerative business under the name of the Home dairy. He keeps about seventy-five cows, Jerseys and Durhams, and in supplying the demands of his numerous customers runs three wagons.

In Alameda, Cal., in 1885, Mr. Heistermann married Annie Nicolai, who was born in New York, but when two years old was taken to Germany, remaining there until sixteen years of age. She then returned to the United States, locating in San Francisco, and subsequently, in Alameda, was married to Mr. Heistermann. Their marriage has been blessed by the birth of eight children, namely: Gustav, Bertha, Maggie, Tina, Carl, Cora, George and Henry. Politically Mr. Heistermann is identified with the Republican party in national affairs; fraternally he belongs to the Improved Order of Red Men; and religiously he is a Lutheran.

ROBERT E. L. SACKETT. The universal esteem of a community is given to Mr. Sackett for his demonstration of business qualities which have placed him in the front rank of ranchers in Los Angeles county, where he was born December 5, 1869, the son of a worthy pioneer. His father, Thompson D. Sackett, was born near Quincy, Ill., in 1827, while his mother, Rebecca M. Evans in maidenhood, was a native of Alabama. The parents were married in Arkansas, and lived in that state until their removal to Texas, whence they came overland to California in 1857. From San Bernardino county they went to Visalia for a few years, then returned to Los Angeles county in 1867. While in the north he had engaged in the cattle business but during the dry years lost all of his stock, and when he came back to Los Angeles county he had to begin at the foot of the ladder once more. He established his home in this community and spent the remainder of his years on the old homestead, passing away in 1892 at the age of sixty-five years. The mother died in 1906 at the age of seventy-four years. They were the parents of eight children, of whom four are now living. Mr. Sackett was a lifelong Democrat politically, and in religion both himself and wife were devoted members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Norwalk.

The preliminary education of Robert E. L. Sackett was received in the common schools, after which he took a commercial course in the Woodbury Business College, of Los Angeles. After the close of his schooldays he returned to the home ranch and worked with his father, until the latter's death, when he went to work upon the forty-acre tract which he had inherited. He is progressive and enterprising and it was not long before he purchased thirty-five acres of land adjoining his property, and has since added twenty acres, and a fifteen-acre tract, while he also owns a lot in Long Beach. The home place is in grain and the management of a dairy occupies a large part of his attention, fifty cows supplying this department of the work, the milk being sold to the Alpine Farm and Dairy Company, of Los Angeles. A considerable portion of his other property is devoted to the raising of grain, although he intends to set out fifteen acres in gum trees in the fall of 1907. In 1893 Mr. Sackett was united in marriage with Miss Millie Beasley, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of David I. Beasley, who at the time of his death was in the employ of the government in Arizona. Mr. and Mrs. Sackett are the parents of the following children: Edward B., Irene, Dorothy and Robert G. Mr. Sackett is a member of Camp 10, K. O. T. M., of Artesia, and is also identified with the Independent Order of Foresters. Politically he is a stanch Democrat. Regarding the upbuilding of this section no citizen has been more prominent than Mr. Sackett; he has done much to promote the improvement of the San Gabriel river in this vicinity, serving as secretary and the superintendent of the new San Gabriel corporation organized to improve and straighten the river. Mr. Sackett was the right of way man and the successful completion of this undertaking was largely due to his efforts and those of a brother.

WALTER J. MAIN. Ever since crossing the ocean from his native land and identifying himself with the citizenship of the United States, Mr. Main has been a resident of California, and of recent years he has made his home and business headquarters in Downey, where he owns and operates a blacksmith's shop. In a shop in Scotland, under the oversight of a skilled blacksmith, he learned the trade while yet a boy and by reason of thorough practical training and industrious perseverance there are few now who can surpass him in skilled workmanship along the line of his chosen occupation. Those who have once entrusted him with their work afterward feel every confidence in his skill and painstaking care.

There were ten children, seven boys and three girls, in the family of Alexander and Margaret (Grant) Main, natives of Scotland, and they were reared to habits of industry and honesty characteristic of their race. Some years ago the father passed away, but the mother still survives and remains in her native country, where also the majority of the children reside. One brother who came to California is married and occupies a ranch in the vicinity of Santa Barbara. Walter J., who was next to the youngest of the ten children, was born in Scotland April 27, 1873, and received a common-school education. Leaving school at the age of thirteen years he became an apprentice to the trade of a blacksmith, at which he served for three and one-half years, and then became a journeyman in the employ of others.

Crossing the ocean to New York in 1897 Mr. Main proceeded direct to California and settled at Santa Barbara, where he secured employment at his trade and remained about five years. From there he came to Downey and after nine months in the employ of others he bought his present shop, which he conducts with care and skill. While living in Santa Barbara he was married, in September, 1901, to Mary Ann Downey, a native of Scotland, but a resident of California from early girlhood. One child, Ann, blesses their union. The family are identified with the Presbyterian Church, and fraternally Mr. Main holds membership with the Modern Woodmen of America, Knights of the Maccabees and Knights of Pythias. Though deeply interested in all the questions pertaining to the welfare of his adopted country he has never become an adherent of either of the dominant political parties, but maintains independence of opinion and ballot.

CECIL L. GRIFFIN. Descended from Welsh ancestry, the Griffin family has been identified with the development of the United States from an early period and its members have made their homes principally in the north and east. In New York state, near the city of Buffalo, D. C. Griffin was born and reared and there he learned the trade of a carpenter, which for some years he followed in the vicinity of Fort Wayne, Ind. Upon removing to Michigan he took up land near Charlotte, in Eaton county, and there not only tilled the soil, but also devoted considerable attention to the building business. Emigration was drifting steadily toward the undeveloped west, and he followed the tide of population to Kansas, where in 1881 he secured farm land near Wellington, Sumner county. Ten years later he removed to the newly opened territory of Oklahoma and opened a mercantile store at Hennessey, continuing the same until his retirement from business cares. That town continues to be the home of himself and wife, the latter of whom was Amanda Potter, a native of the vicinity of Buffalo, N. Y. Of their two sons and two daughters all are living except one daughter, Ida. Cecil L., the youngest, was born near Fort Wayne, Ind., April 29, 1867, and was two and one-half years of age at the time of the removal to Michigan. Hence his early recollections are of the farm near Charlotte and the public schools of that neighborhood, where he gained his primary education. After removing in 1881 to Kansas he completed his grammar-school studies.

On crossing the continent to California in 1887 Mr. Griffin became an employe of the Griffith Lumber Company of Santa Ana. Under their supervision he learned the industry from the foundation and acquired a trustworthy and important knowledge of the many details connected with the work. After he had been with the firm for eighteen months he resigned his position and returned to Kansas, where he spent four years, a part of the time as a farmer and the remainder of the period as a clerk in a store. On his return to the Pacific coast he secured a position with the Newport Lumber Company as a clerk and afterward was promoted to the charge of their shipping department in the wholesale yards. When the business was sold to the Nofziger Brothers he continued with the new owners, by whom he was entrusted with the management of the Santa Ana yards. In a short time the company sent him to Los Angeles to superintend the building of their wholesale lumber yard on Palmetto avenue and Sixth street, and he remained in that place until the yard was in running order. In September of 1901 he came to Redondo as tallyman for the company, and here in July of the following year he took an influential part in the organization of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California. This enterprise has since numbered him among its most active members, and at this writing he holds the office of vice-president and agent for Redondo, his home town.

The marriage of Mr. Griffin took place in Santa Ana and united him with Miss Campbell, who was born in Nova Scotia, but has resided in Southern California since girlhood. Five children comprise their family, Leslie, Percy, Fay, Clifford and Ralph. After coming to his present location Mr. Griffin was made a Mason in Redondo Lodge No. 328, F. & A. M., in the philanthropies of which he has ever been interested. During his residence in Santa Ana he was an active member of the Knights of Pythias and the Tents of the Maccabees in that city. Though he has never been prominent in politics nor sought the emoluments of office, he has firm convictions upon all public questions and gives his support to the Republican party

CHARLES E. FULTON. Among the talented and progressive residents of San Pedro is Charles E. Fulton, a skilful and capable mechanic, who, as a member of the Fulton & Iversen Ship and Boat Building Company, is actively identified with one of the leading interests of Los Angeles county. Dependent upon his own resources from boyhood, he has labored with untiring diligence, steadily climbing the ladder of success, and is to-day a fine representative of the self-made men of our country. Of New England ancestry, he was born, February 17, 1871, at Port Ludlow, Jefferson county, Wash., a son of William Fulton, and a lineal descendant of Robert Fulton, the inventor, who, in 1807, built the first steamboat, the Clermont, which was launched on the Hudson river.

William Fulton was born and reared in East Machias, Me., and there followed for awhile the business of a lumberman. Being attacked with the gold fever in 1849, he came overland to California, and in common with the thousands of other emigrants embarked in mining pursuits. Unsuccessful, however, he went northward to Port Ludlow, Wash., where he was for ten years engaged in the manufacture of lumber. Giving up that occupation, he was subsequently employed in logging until his death, at a comparatively early age. He married Mary Ann Guptill, who was born in East Machias, Me., and died in Chico, Cal., in 1879.

After the death of his mother which occurred when he was but eight years of age, Charles E. Fulton attended school a very short time, and at the age of ten years began life as a wage-earner, from that time until the present being self-supporting. At the age of fourteen he went into the woods to work, and for a number of seasons was employed in a logging camp. Subsequently, while thus employed, a thirst for knowledge came upon him, and he eagerly seized upon every opportunity afforded him for study. In 1891, at Port Blakeley, Wash., he entered the employ of Hall Brothers, and there began to learn the trade of shipbuilder. Going to San Francisco in 1895, he accepted a position in the Fulton Iron Works, working a year as ship carpenter, and afterwards being foreman. While there he attended the Lincoln night school, studying marine architecture and mechanical drawing, in both of which he became proficient. Returning then to Washington, he located at Bellingham, where he built the four-masted schooner Sehome, the schooner Cecilia Sudden (both of which are still in commission), a tug-boat seventy-five feet in length, and several launches. Locating at San Pedro in 1904, he was for a year employed in the shipyard of the Wilmington Transportation Company. In the spring of 1905 he resigned that position to become the partner of Peter Iversen, since which time business has been carried on under the name of the Fulton & Iversen Ship and Boat Building Company. By his wise management and good judgment Mr. Fulton has advanced the interests of the company and extended its business. Among some of the better known boats built by this firm may be mentioned the steamships Long Beach and Empress, the latter the largest glass-bottomed boat in the world.

In Tacoma, Wash., Mr. Fulton married Carrie Linnie Johnson, who was born in Chicago, Ill., where her parents settled on coming to this country from Christiania, Norway. Of their union two children have been born: Clara May and Robert W. Politically Mr. Fulton is a true-blue Republican, and fraternally he was made a Mason in San Francisco Lodge No. 212, F. & A. M.

WILLIAM SHEPPARD. As proprietor of the Hemet dairy, which is supplied by a herd of twenty-five high grade Jersey cows, William Sheppard is known as one of the most enterprising and energetic citizens of Riverside county. He is of German descent, the name having originally been Schaeffer, and his father, George Sheppard, was brought to this country by his parents from his native land when but seven years of age. The family settled near Catawissa, Pa., where the son attended the common schools and later learned cabinetmaking and the painter's trade, attaining great proficiency in the work. He afterwards resided in Maryland for ten years, then went to Beaver Dam, Wis., and in 1856 settled in Fillmore, Minn., where he engaged in agricultural pursuits and lived until his death in 1906, at the age of eighty-seven years. His wife, who was Hannah Yost before her marriage, was born in Pennsylvania near Catawissa, and her death occurred in 1904.

The birth of William Sheppard occurred at Fillmore, Minn., November 10, 1857, and his education was received through the medium of the common schools of that state. From boyhood he helped his father on the farm and when a young man contracted to conduct the place for a number of years. In 1893 he went to Kingfisher county, Okla., and purchasing a homestead relinquishment on a claim near Okarche, proved up on the place and engaged in grain and stock raising. He also ran a threshing outfit there and continued to live in that state until 1902, when he sold his interests and located in Hemet, Cal. He first purchased five acres of land on Florida avenue, adding subsequently by purchase fifteen acres more, which now gives him a twenty-acre ranch, sixteen acres being in alfalfa and the remainder devoted to horticultural purposes, a fine olive orchard occupying the most of the plot. He established his dairy business in 1903 and has since done an excellent retail business.

The marriage of Mr. Sheppard took place in Fillmore, Minn., Miss Lillian F. Young, a native of that place, becoming his wife. They have become the parents of seven children, three sons and four daughters: George Nelson, living in Minnesota, Lee, Mabel, Jennie, Rose, Aloa and Wallace. Mr. Sheppard was made a Mason in Chatfield, Minn.; he also belongs to the Knights of the Maccabees at Hemet; Independent Order of Foresters, Modern Woodmen of America, Fraternal Aid and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Mrs. Sheppard being a member of the Rebekah Lodge.

FREDERICK BLUEMLE. Closely identified with the industrial prosperity of Los Angeles county is Frederick Bluemle, a representative farmer, and a true type of the energetic, hardy and enterprising men who have actively assisted in the development and advancement of this fertile and productive agricultural region. His ranch, lying seven miles north of San Pedro, is one of the best in the vicinity, and under his intelligent management is highly cultivated and improved. A German by birth and ancestry, he was born, November 4, 1855, in Baden, Germany. His parents, George and Karoline (Riess) Bluemle, were born in Germany, where the father was engaged in tilling the soil until his death, in 1856. The mother survived her husband, and is now living in the Fatherland, a bright and active woman, seventy-nine years old.

Leaving the public schools at the age of fourteen years, in 1870 Frederick Bluemle immigrated to the United States, hoping in this land of plenty to find remunerative employment. Going to Somerville, Ind., he worked by the month for about eight years, and being industrious, and prudent in his habits, accumulated some money. His health failing, he came to California, arriving in Los Angeles county September 27, 1878, and locating in the German settlement, where he worked by the month for a year. His health improving, he then rented land, which he managed successfully for a number of seasons. Purchasing forty acres of the land now included in his home ranch in 1884, he has since been prosperously employed in agricultural pursuits. A systematic, thorough-going farmer, he has made all the improvements on his ranch, which is advantageously located seven miles north of San Pedro, his ranch, with its large dwelling house and fine outbuildings, being one of the most attractive in the community, while everything about the premises indicates the existence of a cultivated taste and ample means. His farming implements are of the most approved pattern, and all things are in keeping with the appliances of a first-class agriculturist. In 1903 he added to the size of his ranch, buying sixty acres of land near the German Church, and to this he is making extensive improvements also.

March 29, 1883, in California, Mr. Bluemle married Elizabeth Anna Rockensuess, a daughter of the late William Rockensuess, of Germany. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bluemle, namely: William Ludwig, Rudolph Henry, Frederick Johann, Emma Helen, Lillian Mina, Maria Karolina and Anna Elizabeth Thusnelda. Politically Mr. Bluemle is identified with the Republican party, and for a number of years has been clerk of the Lincoln school board. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bluemle are members of the German Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was one of the organizers and served on the building committee of the church. He is now a trustee and serves as local preacher of the church. For over twenty years he served as superintendent of the Sunday School. He has always supported movements that have had for their object the upbuilding of the county.

WILLIAM I. STEVENS. Prominent among the well-known and thriving business men of Compton is William I. Stevens, who has spent nearly three decades of his life in this community, being formerly engaged as a lumber dealer in Gardena, but now employed by the San Pedro Lumber Company at Compton. He enjoys the many improvements that have been made in this locality since he first came here, the establishment of home industries and local benefactions being with him of paramount importance and well worthy of the aid he so willingly gives. A son of S. C. Stevens, he was born in St. John, New Brunswick, September 5, 1853.

Coming from old Virginia stock, S. C. Stevens was born, reared and educated in Canada. He was engaged in seafaring pursuits during his active career, living in New Brunswick during his earlier life, but subsequently settling in Maine, where he lived for twenty-five years, dying there when well advanced in years. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Jones, also died in Maine. They were the parents of five children, namely: Mrs. Maud Bryan; Mrs. Eliza Holmes; William I.; Mrs. Catherine McAfee; and Clarence H.

Acquiring a good education in the district, subscription and normal schools, William I. Stevens was employed as a teacher while a young man. Subsequently learning the business of a lumber manufacturer, he followed it for some time, but was unfortunate, losing considerable money in his transactions. Departing from his eastern home, he went to Illinois, arriving in Chicago with but fifty cents to his name. Shipping before the mast, he went from there to Green Bay, Wis., where he secured a position with a lumber company, receiving a salary of $80 a month. At the end of a year and a half he established himself in business in Chicago as a lumber manufacturer and dealer. A few years later, in 1874, he came to California, locating in Compton, where, with the exception of three years spent in Gardena, where he was in business for himself, he has since been similarly employed, the San Pedro Lumber Company appreciating his knowledge and experience. In his operations he has met with good success, by his industry, thrift and force of character arising from a condition of comparative poverty to a place of affluence. He owns considerable city property in Compton, and has recently erected a fine residence in a pleasant part of the place.

In 1876 Mr. Stevens married Mrs. Nancy (Gaines) Rogers, a native of Kentucky, who presides over their new home with grace and hospitality. She is a member of the Christian Church, but, with Mr. Stevens, attends the Congregational Church. Politically Mr. Stevens affiliates with the Socialist party.

HON. PRESCOTT F. COGSWELL. The California Assembly has acquired a distinction among the states of the nation because of the men of ability and enterprise who are lending their efforts to advance the interests of the people through legislation, and holding place as a representative of his district is the Hon. Prescott F. Cogswell, a pioneer walnut grower of the Mountain View section in Los Angeles county. Mr. Cogswell is of English ancestry, the records tracing the name to the year 1064, in the county of Essex, England, where it was then known as Coggeshall. John Cogswell was born in Westbury, Leigh, Wilts county, England, in 1592, and in 1635 he came to America on the ship Angel Gabriel, which was wrecked off the coast of Maine on the 16th of August of that year. He escaped by swimming to the land. He finally settled in Massachusetts and there the name flourished for generations; his son, William, born in Westbury, Leigh, Wilts county, England, married and located in Massachusetts, where his son, William Jr., was born in Ipswich and married Martha Emerson; their son, Edward, was born in Gloucester, while his son, Samuel, was born in Ipswich, to which place the family returned. The family fortunes were changed to Preston, Conn., where another John Cogswell was born, who in young manhood located in South Britain and there reared a family, a son, Ferris, marrying and passing his remaining years in that section. His son, Franklin Ferris Cogswell, moved toward the north, passing some time in Sandgate, Vt., where was born a son, Asa H., the father of Hon. Prescott F. Franklin F. located in, Ontario, where he engaged as a farmer until his death which occurred at an advanced age.

Asa H. Cogswell became a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Ontario and continued so occupied for a number of years, finally, however, engaging as a farmer in that section until his removal to Los Angeles, Cal., where his death occurred in 1896. His wife was formerly Mary L. Allen, who was born in Ontario, a daughter of Nathan Prescott Allen, of Fort Plains, N. Y., and granddaughter of Nathan Allen, of Pomfret, Conn., who married into the Goodell family of Mayflower ancestry. Mrs. Cogswell died in Los Angeles in 1906, leaving a family of two daughters and three sons, namely: Prescott Franklin, of this review; Mary, wife of J. R. Davis, sheriff of Luzerne county, Pa.; Elizabeth, wife of Rev. John P. MacPhie, of Lynn, Mass.; A. Horatio, head of the Latin department of the Alameda high school, and a prominent baritone singer of that section; and Irvin Roy, of Los Angeles.

Prescott F. Cogswell was the oldest in his father's family and was born October 23, 1859, in the vicinity of Ingersoll, Ontario, and there spent the first nine years of his life. In 1868 he was taken by his parents to Afton, Iowa, where his father engaged as a merchant for the period of two years; they then returned to the old home in Ontario, where Mr. Cogswell completed his education in Albert University of Belleville. He came to California in 1883 and in the vicinity of Tustin purchased an orange ranch of twenty acres, which he cultivated and improved for a few years, disposing of the same during the real estate excitement of 1888. That same year Mr. Cogswell became associated with B. F. Maxson in the purchase of the McLean ranch of five hundred and fifteen acres in El Monte, which they subdivided, putting in streets and laying off blocks, and disposing of the greater part of it advantageously. Mr. Cogswell set out the first walnut orchard in Mountain View district and continued to add to his interests until he now owns one hundred and one acres in walnuts, while he also owns an alfalfa farm adjoining El Monte. He has laid out several tracts in this vicinity, one of which, one hundred acres, is known as the Cogswell tract.

In Montreal Mr. Cogswell married Miss Jane Belcher, a native of Calcutta, and a daughter of the Rev. Canon S. Belcher, of Grace Church, Montreal. He was born in London, England, and was sent as a missionary to India and later to Montreal. Mrs. Cogswell died in 1898, leaving a family of three children, namely: Frederick A., attending the University of Southern California; Harold G. and Irene, in the high school of El Monte. Mr. Cogswell has always taken a prominent part in matters of public import and is especially interested in educational work, now serving as secretary of the board of education of the Union high school, of El Monte, which position he has occupied since the organization of the district. He was prominent in the organization of the First National Bank of El Monte and is still connected with the institution as a director. He also is a director in the Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Los Angeles. In religion he was reared in the Methodist Episcopal Church and is numbered among those who may be counted upon to support all worthy charities of the church or community. In politics he is a Republican and it was on this ticket that he was nominated and elected in 1906 as representative from the Sixty-eighth district, having a plurality of thirteen hundred and eighty-five votes. His liberality and enterprise have won for him a wide friendship and given him a place among the representative citizens of this section.

E. M. JOURDAN. Generations of the Jourdan family have lived and died in sunny France, content with her surroundings and advantages, but the continuity was broken when E. M. Jourdan set foot on American soil in 1876. Closely following the discovery of gold in California and while the prospects for obtaining sudden wealth in this locality were still at high tide, he was born January 6, 1854, in Hautes-Alpes, France, a son of Pierre and Edelean (Joubert) Jourdan. Neither of the parents ever left their native land, and throughout his entire life the father was a tiller of the soil.

Nothing of unusual interest transpired during the early life of E. M. Jourdan, and as was natural he gave a helping hand in relieving his father of such farm duties as his strength would permit. An irreparable loss in the death of his mother when he was only nine years old saddened his young life, and before long he was made to realize the necessity of self maintenance. A period of nine months in the public schools constituted his school life and formed the foundation for the later knowledge which he obtained from reading good literature. His first independent work was herding cattle for neighboring farmers and during the two years that he was thus employed he made his home with his father and assisted him as his other duties would permit. When only thirteen years old he entered the coal mines, but soon found a better opening in a foundry, where the work was more in keeping with his tastes and inclination, and he soon became an expert in his particular line, receiving eight francs or $1.52 per day for his services. Although his business undertakings had been successful in his native land, he was filled with an ambitious spirit to advance still further, and in order to carry out his plans he set sail from France in December, 1875, and in due time arrived in San Francisco.

Since locating in the United States Mr. Jourdan has been interested in various undertakings, in all of which he has met with the success which his efforts and determination made possible. It was not long after locating in San Francisco that he entered the employ of G. Venard, dealer in tea, coffee and spices, with whom he remained for five years. After severing his connection with Mr. Venard in 1881, he went to Los Angeles, and for one year worked in the foundry of Powers & Baker, his experience in this branch of mechanics during early life thoroughly qualifying him for the position. Later, going to Riverside, he established a restaurant, which he conducted for three years, giving it up at the end of that time to engage in mining in the Perris district. It is safe to presume that his efforts as a miner were not as remunerative as he had hoped, for he soon afterward went to Santa Ana, where he engaged in the liquor business for one year. In 1886, having again located in Los Angeles, he followed brick-making for one year, and in 1887 came to San Pedro, with whose interests he has since been identified. During the eleven years which he had spent in the state he had resided in a number of the larger and more important cities, but in none had he found the opening which he sought until locating in San Pedro. In partnership with George H. Peck he purchased two blocks of land, which has since been divided and is now known as blocks Nos. 15 and 17, Jourdan's subdivision, and block No. 11, Hill & Jourdan subdivision. During the twenty years which Mr. Jourdan has made his home here he has been fairly successful in the handling of real estate, making a specialty of subdividing and improving large tracts and selling in small lots for homesteads.

In San Francisco, January 8, 1881, Mr. Jourdan was united in marriage with one of his countrywomen, Victonne Maouconl, and two children have blessed their union, E. A. and Edward J., both of whom are at home with their parents. True to the faith in which they were reared, Mr. and Mrs. Jourdan are adherents of the Catholic Church and contribute generously to its various benevolences.

CHARLES FREMONT PITCHER. The Pitcher family is of English descent, although the branch to which Charles Fremont Pitcher belongs has lived in America since Revolutionary days, and his great-grandfather, who was a settler in Vermont, served in that struggle. The grandfather, Oren, was born in Vermont, afterwards removed to New York, served in the war of 1812 and later went to Bremer county, Iowa, where his death occurred. The father was originally a farmer in New York, but removed to Iowa in 1859, improved a farm there and resided on it during his lifetime. At the breaking out of the Civil war he volunteered in an Iowa regiment, but was rejected. His wife was Phoebe Ann Smith, who was born in New York, a daughter of Hiram, also a native of that state, who removed to Bremer county, Iowa, in an early day and remained until the time of his death. He served in the Civil war in an Iowa regiment, and was wounded in battle. After the war he did military service on the Texas frontier and was engaged in the Maximilian troubles. Mrs Pitcher died in November, 1905, at her home in Iowa.

The oldest in a family of five children Charles F. Pitcher is the only member living in California. He was born October 2, 1856, in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., and when only three years old was taken with his father's family to Iowa, where his boyhood days were spent on the farm. He was educated in the public schools and when eighteen years of age came to California, locating at Vacaville, where he worked at his trade of blacksmith and machinist. He remained there until 1878, when he removed to Mendocino county to work in the lumber mills. He stayed there but a few months, however, in the fall coming to Ventura county and locating on a ranch on the Conejo, upon which he engaged in grain raising and the stock business. After a term of four years he removed to the Ocean View district and devoted himself to grain raising. His present home is on a ranch of three hundred acres which was formerly in the seaside tract of the Colonia grant. One hundred and twenty acres of the land are in beets and the remainder in grain and hay. He has some very finely bred cattle and horses, among the latter being Young Mac, a black twelve-year-old by McKinney, dam by A. W. Richmond. He also has a blacksmith shop on the place and does a good business working at his trade.

In 1879 Mr. Pitcher was married to Miss Emma Arnold, a native of Susanville, Lassen county, Cal. To this union seven children were born, namely: William, a farmer in Ventura county; Fannie, the wife of Joseph Thompson, of Phoenix, Ariz.; Oscar, in the United States navy service aboard the ship Paul Jones; Grace, a student at the University of California; Ray, Ethel and Percy, the last three named being still under the parental roof. Mrs. Pitcher is a school trustee of their district and Mr. Pitcher has served on the board of school trustees of Ocean View district several terms in the past. He is a Republican in politics and is a man who takes a keen interest in everything pertaining to the welfare of the community in which he lives. In 1898-99 he was engaged on the coast survey under A. T. Mossman, remaining with the party until the survey from Santa Barbara to Yuma was completed. In every enterprise which engages his attention Mr. Pitcher gives faithful and efficient service and he has earned the highest esteem of all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

EDWARD ATHERTON BRUNSON. A resident of Downey, Los Angeles county, for nearly a quarter of a century, Dr. Edward Atherton Brunson has been actively identified with the best interests of the people and the place, and has contributed his full share in advancing and promoting the agricultural and industrial prosperity of the community in which he resides. For the past year he has been engaged in the real-estate business, and in his operations has met with uniform success. A son of the late Robert A. Brunson, he was born, in 1844, in Arkansas, and was there brought up and educated.

Although born and reared in North Carolina, Robert A. Brunson migrated when a young man to Tennessee, thence to Arkansas, and for many years was one of the leading physicians of the community in which he resided. In 1876 he came to California, locating near Downey, where he purchased land from which he improved a good ranch. In addition to his agricultural labors he was also actively employed in the practice of medicine until 1890, having an extensive patronage throughout this section of the county. Retiring from the profession in that year, he lived on his home farm, enjoying a well-merited leisure, until his death, in 1902, at the venerable age of eighty-one years. His first marriage united him with Mary J. Johnson, who was born in Arkansas, and there spent her entire life, dying in 1863. In 1865 he married Annie Shepperd, a niece of L. E. Conway, distinguished as the first governor of Arkansas, and also a cousin of ex-governor Rector of Arkansas. She survived him, passing away in 1903, at the age of sixty-five years.

Having completed the course in the public schools of his native town, E. A. Brunson continued his studies at Bardstown, Ky., after which he attended medical lectures at the University of Louisiana. Beginning the practice of his profession in 1872, he was located at Columbus, Ark., for fifteen years, and during that time built up a large and lucrative business. Listening to the persuasions of his father, he finally came to Los Angeles county, locating in Downey, where for three years he leased about five hundred acres of the Centenilla ranch. He also invested in land, buying a farm of twenty acres, which he still owns. A man of much enterprise and energy, farsighted and practical, he became one of the promoters of the Arroyo Ditch and Water Company, which he served as president one year, as director five years, and as superintendent two years. The latter position he was urged to accept for another term, but refused, sending his resignation in January, 1905, since which time he has devoted his attention to the buying and selling of real estate.

Dr. Brunson married, in 1876, in Arkansas, Susie E. Kinsworthy, a native of that state, and into their household three children have been born, namely: Mary L., a teacher in the Lugo district; Lillian M., a medical student in Los Angeles; and Zekie K., a graduate of the Downey high school and teacher of music. Fraternally Dr. Brunson belongs to Downey Lodge No. 220, F. & A. M., and religiously he is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church.

THOMAS H. JAMES. Occupying an assured position among the representative citizens of Santa Monica is Thomas H. James, city engineer, who has attained marked distinction in his profession, and is widely known as a gentleman of scientific attainments. Since his appointment to this office in 1895 he has devoted his attention to the duties devolving upon him, giving most satisfactory service, his quick, keen intellect, his training and his wide experience eminently qualifying him for his responsible position. He was born, November 4, 1857, in county Devon, England, near the city of Exeter, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, Thomas James.

Born of Welsh ancestors, Thomas James was reared and educated in his native county, living there for a number of years after his marriage with Anna L. Wright, by whom he had eight children. He died in England in 1868; subsequently emigrating with her family to the United States, Mrs. James in 1874 settled in Cleveland, Ohio, where she had been preceded two years by her son Thomas H. She passed away in that city in 1878.

After locating in Cleveland, Thomas H. James continued his studies under private instructors, receiving excellent educational advantages. Interested in mechanical pursuits, he subsequently entered the city engineer's office in Cleveland, where, under such men as Morse, Force and Rice he received his principal training. For four years he served in the engineer's department of different railroads, including the New York, Chicago & St. Louis, known as the Nickel Plate, and the Michigan & Ohio, while thus employed doing a good deal of bridge and construction work. April 10, 1888, he took up his residence in Los Angeles, Cal., where he soon accepted a position in the city engineer's office, in the construction department. He afterwards assisted in the construction of the outfall sewers of the tunnel portion at Inglewood.

Starting then in business on his own account, Mr. James had an office in the Workman block, and was kept busily employed. Subsequently becoming identified with the Terminal Railroad Company, now the Salt Lake Railroad Company, he served as assistant engineer until the fall of 1893, winning a fine record for his achievements in that capacity. In November, 1893, he came to Santa Monica to take charge of the laying of the foundations of the North Beach bath house, also the general construction work for the Santa Monica Land and Water Company, at the same time doing some special engineering for the Los Angeles and Pacific Railroad Company. He afterwards served, by appointment, as city engineer and street superintendent for two years, but since 1895 has served in the capacity of city engineer, rendering distinguished service. He also does engineering to some extent in other portions of Southern California, being frequently called upon for work requiring special care, among which may be mentioned work for the Western Pacific Development Company in laying out Brentwood Park and all the Palisades improvements. In the pursuit of his profession, Mr. James has accumulated a fine property, including a handsome home at No. 322 Fourteenth street, in which he resides. He is maintaining an office in Los Angeles at No. 611 Fay building to look after his outside interests.

January 6, 1881, Mr. James married Mary Rose Lucas, who was born in Cleveland, Ohio, a daughter of M. S. Lucas, of that city, and they are the parents of three children, Clarence V., Grace L. and Myrtle H. The son, a mechanical engineer and electrician, was for some time in the employ of the Los Angeles Pacific Railroad Company at Sherman, Cal., but is now associated with the Wilson Electrical Company in Santa Monica. The oldest daughter, Grace L., is a member of the senior class in the Leland Stanford, Jr., University and Myrtle, the youngest child, and the only one born in California is in the freshman year in the above institution. Politically Mr. James is a sound Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

ROBERT ALLEN CRAWFORD. Conspicuous among the men of prominence and influence in San Pedro is Robert Allen Crawford, who is distinguished alike for his own sterling qualities, and for the honored ancestry from which he is descended. As a civil engineer in the employ of the government, he has done much to advance the commercial interests of this part of Los Angeles county, and by careful attention to those things conducive to the welfare and progress of business and social affairs he has shown himself a public-spirited and useful member of the community. As to his private business, he has never allowed anything to escape his observation which might be of benefit to him in carrying on his trade, or rather his art, for his work in this vicinity has almost amounted to a fine art, so well has it been executed. The descendant of an honored southern family, he was born September 19, 1864, in Richmond, Va., a son of John A. Crawford. His grandfather, John Crawford, was born in Georgia, of substantial Scotch ancestry, and during his active life was a banker in the city of Athens.

William H. Crawford, Mr. Crawford's great-grandfather, was a very prominent figure in public life during the first quarter of the nineteenth century. He was born in Georgia, studied law, and was among the leading attorneys of the south. From 1807 until 1813 he was a member of the United States senate, after which he served as a cabinet officer, first as secretary of war, and later as secretary of the treasury. At one time he was minister to France, and in that capacity was a personal friend of Lafayette. He was a man of strong individuality, possessing a keen intellect, and in his religious beliefs was a Scotch Presbyterian.

Born and reared in Athens, Ga., John A. Crawford received a legal education, becoming an attorney of note. For a few years he followed his profession in Richmond, Va., being while there a court reporter, also serving as a representative to the state legislature, as state senator, and as private secretary to General Cobb, secretary of the treasury. At the close of the war he returned to Athens, Ga., where he was engaged in the practice of law until his death. He married Ellen Peebles, who was born in Richmond, Va., where her father, Allen Peebles, was a jeweler. She is now living in Athens, Ga. She bore her husband three children, of whom two survive, Robert Allen, the special subject of this sketch, being the first born.

Educated in Athens, Ga., Robert Allen Crawford was graduated from the University of Georgia with the class of 1884, receiving the degree of C. E. He was subsequently principal of a school in Mitchell county for two years, when he resigned the position. Locating in Kansas City, Mo., in January, 1887, he was for two years employed as a civil engineer with the firm of Tuttle & Pike, while there gaining valuable experience in his special line of work. Since February, 1889, with the exception of six months that he spent in superintending the construction of the grounds for the St. Louis Exposition, he has been in the service of the United States government as a civil engineer. In 1889, as assistant engineer, with headquarters either in Kansas City or Jefferson City, he was employed on construction work, which he followed in that vicinity for twelve years, building dikes, revetments, dams, etc. From 1901 until 1902 he was engaged in dredging at Memphis, Tenn. Coming to San Pedro in 1902 as assistant engineer he had charge of the Inner Harbor improvements, in which capacity he designed and built the new government dredge. During the comparatively short time that he has been a resident of this city he has won a place of influence in business and social circles, and is now one of the directors of the First National Bank.

In Jefferson City, Mo., Mr. Crawford married Pauline Brace, a daughter of Judge Theodore Brace, chief justice of the supreme court of Missouri. The judge, a native of Maryland, is a skilful and able attorney, well known throughout the western central states. His wife, whose maiden name was Roanna Penn, was a descendant of William Penn, the English Quaker who founded Pennsylvania. Mrs. Crawford is a woman of talent and accomplishments, and is a fine musician, having been graduated from the Conservatory of Music at Jacksonville, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford have one child, Robert Brace Penn Crawford. Mr. Crawford, true to the religious training of his youth, is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Crawford belongs to the Christian Church.

LOUIS F. STEPHENS. Although not a native of Southern California, Mr. Stephens has made his home in this part of the state since youth and is a thorough Californian by birth, training, education and ideals, keenly in sympathy with the progressive spirit that has converted the barren wastes into scenes of "beauty that are a joy forever." The property which he owns and operates lies one and one-fourth miles south of Palms, Los Angeles county, and comprises twenty-five acres of large monetary value, in addition to which he owns thirty acres in another tract. A native of San Francisco, he was born in that city October 29, 1861, and is a son of Andrew and Rosina (Wetzel) Stephens, natives of Germany, who immigrated to the United States in early life and were married in New York City. The father, who was twenty-one years of age at the time of landing in the new world, secured employment on a steamer plying the waters of the Hudson river between New York and Albany, and remained with the same steamboat company for nine years, during a part of which time he acted as third mate. On resigning his position on the steamer he came to California and settled in San Francisco, where for nine years he was a clerk in the large mercantile establishment of Redington & Co. From 1868 to 1878 he made his home in Santa Clara county, where he owned one hundred and eighty acres and engaged in general farming. In the mean time he also became interested in the cultivation of large areas of wheat land in the Salinas valley, but several seasons of protracted droughts ruined his crops and left him without means to continue agricultural pursuits.

While making his home in Santa Clara county Andrew Stephens was bereaved by the death of his wife in 1876. Discouraged by this loss and by the failure of his industrious efforts to gain a livelihood, he decided to seek a new location, and in 1878 came to Los Angeles county. Having practically no capital, he was obliged to begin farming upon a very small scale, but gradually he increased his holdings, and with the savings of these years he invested in a tract of one hundred and fifty acres near Palms. To this he subsequently added by the purchase of one hundred and sixty-three acres, owning in all three hundred and thirteen acres. On that place he was actively engaged in farming until a short time before his death, which occurred at sixty-eight years. After becoming a citizen of the United States he voted the Republican ticket at both local and general elections. At his death he was survived by four children, namely: Andrew C., now residing in Fresno county; Louis F. and Carl E., ranchers near Palms, Los Angeles county; and Edith, who is the wife of Luther Washburn.

When the family left the Santa Clara valley and established a home near the southern coast, Louis F. Stephens was a youth of seventeen years, alert, keen and vigorous, therefore capable of assisting his father in the difficult task of renewing the family fortunes. His time was given to his father until 1885, when he married Mercy, daughter of Jacob Brown (see sketch elsewhere in this work) and established a home of his own. Since then he has been interested in general farming, at first as a renter, then as the owner and operator of one hundred acres near Palms, and still later, selling that place, becoming the owner of his present homestead. With his wife he holds membership in the United Brethren Church and they are rearing their children, Louis Reuben and Melzina, in the faith of that denomination. In political views he has always been independent, voting for the man rather than the party, and with strong leanings toward the cause of prohibition as a principle rather than as a party issue.

JOSEPH H. McCULLOUGH. Identified with the industrial and mercantile interests of the city of Downey is Joseph H. McCullough, who is carrying on an extensive and remunerative business as a dealer in farm implements and machinery of all kinds, and also in buggies, wagons, carriages and vehicles. One of the early settlers of this part of the county, he is widely known, and as a man of upright character and fine moral principles is held in high esteem. A son of the late Thomas McCullough, he was born, January 23, 1859, in the province of Quebec, Canada.

A native of England, Thomas McCullough immigrated to America when a young man, locating in the province of Quebec. Purchasing land at North Hatley, he engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years, and in addition was interested in the mercantile prosperity of his adopted town, keeping a general store. He died at the ripe old age of eighty-two years, in Canada, where his wife, whose maiden name was Martha Irwin, is still living, having come to Quebec when a girl from Scotland, her native country.

Educated in the common schools of North Hatley, Quebec, Joseph H. McCullough remained on the home farm until attaining his majority. Learning then the blacksmith's trade, he followed it at Ayer's Flat, Quebec, until 1887, when he came to California in search of a favorable opening for business. Spending the first winter of his stay in this genial climate at Santa Ana, he located in Downey in the spring of 1888, and has since resided here, having now a pleasant and attractive home of his own. After working at his trade for six years, he purchased a smithy, and in addition to carrying on general blacksmithing dealt in farm machinery, buggies and wagons, in both branches of industry being very successful. In December, 1904, he sold his shop, and has since confined his attention to mercantile pursuits only, handling farm implements, machinery, wagons and buggies, as before mentioned, and having a fine trade.

June 7, 1894, in Downey, Mr. McCullough married Julia Ardis, who was born December 11, 1873, a daughter of John and Fanny (Harris) Ardis, and they have two children, namely: Ardis Irwin, born December 4, 1895, and Katherine, born January 17, 1903. Politically Mr. McCullough is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Foresters, to the Modern Woodmen of America and to the Knights of the Maccabees. He and his family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, their religious belief being in sympathy with the teachings of that denomination.

BYRON S. COLE. Distinguished as a native-born citizen of Los Angeles county, and as one of its most prosperous and practical agriculturists and horticulturists, Byron S. Cole is worthy of special mention in this volume. A man of enterprise and keen foresight, possessing a thorough knowledge of ranching in all of its departments, he is meeting with signal success in his operations, his fine ranch, with its many substantial improvements, comparing favorably with any in this part of Southern California. A son of George W. Cole, he was born, December 21, 1871, in Los Angeles county, near Downey, and in this section of the state he has spent his entire life.

After leaving the district school, Byron S. Cole continued his studies for awhile in Whittier Academy, completing his early education in the Baptist College at Los Angeles. From earliest boyhold he was familiar with farming pursuits, being well trained in the science of agriculture by his father, and on attaining his majority selected as his life work the free and independent occupation to which he was reared. He now owns forty acres of the old Cole homestead, and to its care and management is devoting all of his energies. His ranch, one of the most fertile and productive in the neighborhood, contains a bearing walnut grove of twenty acres, from which he receives good annual returns, and on the other twenty acres he raises excellent crops of corn and alfalfa.

In Whittier, Cal., October 13, 1892, Mr. Cole married Mayme King (daughter of John King, a highly respected citizen of this place), and they have one child, a son, named Clifford Raymond. Mr. Cole is financially interested in horticultural organizations, and is a member of the Los Nietos and Ranchitos Walnut Growers' Association. Politically he supports the principles of the Democratic party by voice and vote, and fraternally he is a member of Oro Lodge No. 315, I. O. O. F., of Whittier.

REINHOLD BOETTCHER. While retaining a deep affection for the land of his birth and the home of his ancestors, Mr. Boettcher is a typical Californian, loyal to the country of his adoption, interested in its progress and firmly persuaded that no other land can surpass it in climate, soil and other advantages. Identified with California since he was a young man of twenty-two years, he is by birth a German, born in Posen, Prussia, July 23, 1850, being a son of Frederick and Wilhelmina (Bledow) Boettcher, natives and lifelong residents of Prussia, where the father followed the blacksmith's trade through all of his active life. Both are now deceased, but all of their six children survive them, and of these Reinhold was next to the youngest. Following the usual German custom he was sent to school until fourteen years of age and then was apprenticed to a trade, serving for two years under a blacksmith of the home neighborhood.

When only sixteen years of age Mr. Boettcher came to the United States and settled in Pennsylvania, completing his trade in Philadelphia and Shamokin. For a time he was employed in the Pennsylvania railroad shops, where he had the heavy blacksmith's work in connection with the building of coal cars. From Pennsylvania he came to California in 1872 and secured employment in San Francisco, where he held various positions, including a brief period of work in the Fulton iron plant. Next he spent six months as an employe in a foundry at Greenville, Plumas county, after which he worked at the blacksmith's trade in Susanville for two years. For several years afterward he carried on a blacksmith's shop at Buntingville, Lassen county. The year 1883 found him a newcomer in Los Angeles, and there he worked in the Baker iron foundry (at that time on Second street), as well as with other companies or men engaged along the line of his specialty. For several years he carried on a shop at Anaheim and later worked at the trade in Pomona, after which, in 1894, he was employed in the factory at Chino in the capacity of blacksmith. At the time of the laying of the foundation of the Oxnard factory he came to the new town and has since been in the employ of the American Beet Sugar Company in the position of chief blacksmith, which responsible work he discharges with characteristic efficiency and promptness.

In the numerous places whither work at his trade has taken him Mr. Boettcher has made many friends, so that his circle of acquaintances and well-wishers is unusually large and widely scattered throughout the state. While giving his attention principally to his chosen occupation, he has been interested in other enterprises and has the credit of erecting the Pomona house, a building of twenty-three rooms, situated on A street near Fifth. Formerly he was quite an active worker in the Odd Fellow encampment, but of more recent years he has relinquished his association with any section of that order besides the local lodge. While living in Anaheim, on April 28, 1887, he married Miss Dolores Portio, who was born in San Diego county and is a member of an old family of Southern California. The heaviest bereavement of their married lives came to Mr. and Mrs. Boettcher when they lost their only child, Sylvester, who died at the age of eighteen years.

GEORGE P. SHANKS. Fortified by the experience gained while following agricultural pursuits successively in Iowa, Oregon and South Dakota, Mr. Shanks was prepared for the practical conduct of farm affairs upon coming to the southern coast of California in 1891. For a year he remained at Norwalk, Los Angeles county, and then removed to Palms, in the same county. For thirteen years he rented three hundred acres or more of the Hammel and Dinker ranch, and utilized the land in the raising of corn and beans, also had a portion of the property in meadow and pasture. Meanwhile the savings of these years were invested in property and he thus acquired a five-acre tract with a house, also another place near by, where he has recently erected for his family a comfortable residence costing $4,000, also has erected a substantial barn for the shelter of stock and storage of grain, as well as one hundred acres of orange land in the Lindsay district, Tulare county. His present possessions are the result of judicious investments since coming to California, as previous to that he had lost practically everything through crop failures in South Dakota.

Born in Chicago, Ill., September 1, 1860, George P. Shanks was a son of John and Ellen (Sharp) Shanks, natives of Scotland. His father, who was born March 8, 1828, immigrated to Chicago about 1849, and for some time was connected with a general mercantile business of that city, also engaged in merchandising in Elgin, Ill., for a few years. About 1867 he became a pioneer merchant of Waterloo, Iowa, but a few years later took up farm pursuits on rented land in Blackhawk county, Iowa. Eventually he purchased farm land near Cedar Falls, Iowa. On account of ill health he came to California in 1899 and now resides at Pomona, where he has an orange grove of two acres. Since coming west his health has been restored and he is now robust and vigorous for one of seventy-nine years. While he was still a lad in Scotland he became acquainted with Ellen Sharp, who was born January 1, 1831, and an engagement was entered into, which was consummated in their marriage at Chicago, she having crossed the ocean alone to join him in his new location. Her death occurred in Chicago, September 1, 1860, when she was twenty-nine years of age and when her son, George P., was an infant.

After having completed such advantages as the public schools offered, George P. Shanks started out for himself at nineteen years of age and for three years rented land in Plymouth county, Iowa. Later he went west to Oregon and experimented with farming as conducted in that state, carrying on a farm near Lebanon, Linn county. However, prospects and conditions were not satisfactory and he soon returned to Iowa, thence went to South Dakota and bought a tree claim relinquishment near Chamberlain, Brule county. Three years were sufficient to convince him that success could not be gained in that region. During the last two years a drought set in, attended by frequent high and hot winds, and as a result he lost his crops and was forced to start anew. In November of 1891 he came to California, a decision which he has had no reason to regret, for he has enjoyed a delightful climate, has earned a livelihood for his large family and in addition has reaped the benefits accruing from the increase in land values. Through all of his active life he has stanchly supported Republican principles, but at no time has he solicited office. During the strife in the location of the state capital in South Dakota he took an active part in advocating Pierre as the desirable location. The only position which he has filled, that of school trustee, he held for several years in the interests of the educational advancement of his district. Fraternally he affiliates with Palms Camp No. 567, W. O. W., and in religion favors the doctrines of the United Brethren Church, in whose faith he was reared.

The marriage of Mr. Shanks in 1883 united him with Ida Le Forge, who was born in New York, a descendant of French ancestry. They are the parents of eight children, namely: Raymond, who is employed as a clerk in Los Angeles; Ethel May, who is a graduate of the Palms grammar school and the Santa Monica high school; Mabel, George P., Jr., Edna, Pearl, Lucile and Wesley James, all of whom are receiving excellent educational advantages in the schools of the county.

GEORGE E. MOE. Among the prominent and progressive agriculturists of Ventura county who are turning their attention to the culture of lima beans, and in this comparatively new line of industry are meeting with noteworthy success, is George E. Moe, living near Oxnard, on the Schiappa Pietra ranch. Believing that from health and labor, wealth and contentment spring, he had bent every energy toward the perfecting of his agricultural projects, and now occupies a foremost position, not only among the prosperous farmers of the community in which he resides, but among its most valued and highly esteemed citizens.

A son of Elmore Moe, he was born, May 3, 1856, in Sherbrooke, Quebec. His father was born in England, immigrated to Canada when young, and was there a resident until his death, May 24, 1895, at the age of seventy-seven years. He married Mary Robert, who was born in Germany, and died in Quebec, in 1899, in the seventy-third year of her age.

At the age of seventeen years, having acquired a practical education in the public schools, George E. Moe began work for himself as fireman on the Passumpsic and International Railroad, subsequently obtaining a similar position on the St. Francis Railroad. Coming to the Pacific coast in February, 1877, he located in Marin county, and for awhile worked on the North Pacific Coast and Narrow Gauge Railway. From there he went to Occidental, Sonoma county, where he was engaged in the livery business until 1881, when he removed to Seattle, Wash., obtaining a position on the Lake Shore and Eastern Railroad, for twelve years thereafter being either conductor or engineer. In 1893 he came to Ventura county, and for a year was employed in ranching on the old Gilger place, near Oxnard. The following eight years he carried on general farming on the McCoy ranch, on the old Hueneme road. In the meantime, in February, 1898, he made a trip to Alaska, taking passage on the ship Corona, which was rock bound for four days. In October of that year he came back to his farm, and the following spring returned to the Alaska mines for another season's work. Locating then on his present ranch, he rents four hundred and fifty acres of land, the larger part of which he devotes to the raising of lima beans. Although renting the land, he bought all of the improvements that had been previously made, and to these has made valuable additions, having a substantial set of farm buildings. In carrying on his work he makes use of the most modern machinery and appliances, this year, 1906, introducing a bean thrasher.

July 4, 1876, in Canada, Mr. Moe married Delia Annable, who was born in Canada, a daughter of J. M. Annable. Mr. Annable was a native of New England, Vermont being the state of his birth. He subsequently removed to Canada, and there spent his remaining years. In Vermont, he married Eunice Dean, who was born in New Hampshire, came to California with her daughter, Mrs. Moe, and died here, September 25, 1899, at the advanced age of eighty-four years. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Moe five children have been born, namely: Harry Elmore, of Kelso, San Bernardino county, who married Bertha Pasold, of Oxnard; Daisy, wife of Gale Dixon, of Los Angeles; Lawrence, of Los Angeles; Lotta, of Los Angeles; and Ernest, at home. Fraternally Mr. Moe is a member of the Ventura Court, Palm City No. 1800, I. O. F.

JAMES SHEDDEN. As general superintendent of the Gage Canal System, Mr. Shedden has charge of eight miles of irrigating canal which carries water for irrigation purposes into Riverside and San Bernardino counties. He has charge of from twenty to one hundred and forty men at different seasons of the year, the latter force being necessary at times when there may be a threatened break in the levees after heavy rains. Mr. Shedden is a native of Scotland, born in Glasgow, March 21, 1864. His parents, Robert and Mary (Shearer) Shedden, were both natives of Scotland and lived in that country throughout their lives. The father was a tanner by trade and was for a number of years superintendent of a large tanning establishment. James Shedden spent the first nineteen years of his life in his native country, where he received a good common school education, and, following in the footsteps of his father, learned the trade of tanner. On the completion of his apprenticeship, which was spent under his father, he immigrated to Canada in 1882 and located at Gananoque, where he worked at his trade for a time and later for five and a half years was in the employ of Carranton & Son, who carried on an extensive leather business. When he came to California in 1887 he first stopped at Riverside and found employment on the Gage Canal. In 1889 he assumed his present duties as general manager of the Gage Canal System and has since filled the position with entire satisfaction to all concerned.

The marriage of Mr. Shedden occurred June 19, 1888, Miss Elizabeth Hewton, a native of Canada, becoming his wife. The union has been blessed by the birth of the following children: Winnifred (a high school student), Howard B., Allen J., Robert H. and Archie G. Both parents are active members of the First Presbyterian Church of San Bernardino and contribute liberally to the support of the various charities and benevolences connected therewith. Fraternally Mr. Shedden is a member of San Bernardino Lodge No. 348, F. and A. M.; Woodmen of the World; Token Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F., and of Morse Encampment No. 51, all of San Bernardino.

WILLIAM A. WALLS. Preceded by several years of indifferent success in various localities in the state, Mr. Walls came to Pomona in 1891, two years later purchased his ranch of ten acres two and a half miles southeast of town, and in 1898 established the nucleus of his present dairy business, now grown to be one of the substantial enterprises of the kind in the locality. When he purchased the ranch in 1893 no buildings had as yet been erected, but as soon as it came into his possession he built a comfortable residence for his family and later such outbuildings as were necessary for the prosecution of his dairy industry. He now has thirty-five head of milch cows, in the care of which and in handling the products of the dairy he gives employment to two men in addition to his own labor.

Born in Iowa county, Wis., September 3, 1857, William A. Walls is a son of Daniel and Margaret (Bernard) Walls, who were both born on Prince Edward Island. Both parents removed to the United States and settled in Wisconsin prior to their marriage, for the ceremony which united their lives and interests was performed in the latter state, and in that state also a number of their family of eight children were born. Later years found the family in Taylor county, Iowa, where Mr. Walls had purchased a quarter section of land, and there as in Wisconsin he continued his grain and stock enterprises. Selling out his interests in Iowa in 1886 he came to California and located at Santa Ana, Orange county, where he lived retired from business cares until his death, at the age of sixty-seven years. Mrs. Walls still survives, and at the age of eighty-two makes her home in the Santa Ana residence, which has been her home for twenty years. Politically Mr. Walls was a Republican, and with his wife was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, she still worshiping with that congregation. Of the eight children originally comprising the parental family only three are now living, William A., John W. and Mrs. F. L. Benedict, of Los Angeles.

During his boyhood years the ill-health of the father made it necessary for William A. Walls to shoulder much of the responsibility connected with the management of the home farm in Wisconsin, with the result that his education was sadly neglected, but such opportunities as he had he improved with greater zeal for that very reason. At the time of the removal of the family to Taylor county, Iowa, he was eighteen years old, and there as in Wisconsin he continued to work for his father on the home farm until 1884, that year witnessing his removal to the west and his settlement in Los Angeles county. He became foreman of the Hollenbeck fruit ranch, but his position was destined to be shortlived owing to the disastrous fire which destroyed the enterprise. For a short time thereafter he was engaged in the dairy business in Los Angeles, but later established himself with his brother in the butcher business in Santa Ana, his parents having located there in the meantime. During the two years in which he carried on business there he was quite successful, and with the money thus accumulated he joined interests with his brother in the purchase of a forty-acre ranch. This was during the boom days, and the fate of their undertaking went the way of the majority of investments during those unstable times. Putting his losses and disappointments behind him Mr. Walls came to Pomona in 1891 and began a fruit-ranching enterprise which he conducted with splendid results for the following seven years. During the past nine years he has demonstrated his ability along the special line of agriculture which he has chosen, and is now recognized as one of the most thoroughly versed and successful dairymen in the vicinity of Pomona.

The year before coming to the west, in 1883, Mr. Walls was united in marriage with Hattie E. Landon, who was born in Iowa, the daughter of Capt. S. N. Landon, a well-known resident of that commonwealth, where his death occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Walls are the parents of two children, Roy and Guy, both of whom are receiving the careful training which their parents are well qualified to bestow. Both are members of the Presbyterian Church. As was his father, Mr. Walls is an advocate of Republican principles, and the only order of which he is a member is the Fraternal Aid. Much praise is due Mr. Walls for what he has accomplished since locating in the state, for in spite of discouragements he still kept his courage high and forged ahead, with the result that he is now one of the well-to-do ranchers of Los Angeles county.

GEORGE H. PECK, SR. The life which this narrative depicts began at Burlington, Vt., March 4, 1819, in the home of John and Almira (Keyes) Peck, and closed in Southern California in 1903. The intervening years represented a period of wide travels in our own land and other countries and a long identification with the educational interests of the Pacific coast, as well as association with enterprises of a commercial order. At no time robust in health as a boy, when Mr. Peck was graduated from the University of Vermont in 1837 his delicate constitution had been so undermined by overstudy that he was unable to take up the activities toward which his aspirations pointed. It was thought that sea-air might prove beneficial, and accordingly he shipped on a cod-fishing voyage through the straits of Belle Isle, as far north as the missionary settlements of Okak and Naim, off the Labrador coast. During the winter of 1839-40 he visited the Danish West Indies and the islands of St. Thomas, Porto Rico, Hayti and Jamaica. Returning to Vermont much improved in health, he took up the study of law and in 1841 was admitted to the bar, but again ill-health took him to the sea. From 1842 until 1846 he was a sailor before the mast and visited many ports of the United States, South America and England, after which he returned to Vermont and took up mercantile pursuits.

When the discovery of gold in California turned the tide of emigration across the then so-called American desert into the far west, Mr. Peck was among the young men who determined to seek his fortune in the new country. December 1, 1849, he landed in California, where he found conditions unsettled and constantly shifting. During his first summer he farmed fifty miles south of San Francisco. The next year he engaged in the produce business in the city, and in 1851-52 mined on the middle fork of the American river, investing his earnings in several thousand acres in Yolo county, where he remained for two years. February 14, 1854, he opened in Sacramento the first public school in the state outside of San Francisco. In 1857-58 he practiced law at Dutch Flat, Nevada county, and then visited old friends in Vermont. After his return he taught bookkeeping in San Francisco, where he was the first to teach the double entry system. In May of 1860 he opened the San Francisco industrial school, and from 1861 to 1863 he was grammar master, which, in those days, was the highest educational position in the state. On reliquishing the work of teacher he returned to merchandising and continued at the same until his removal to the southern part of the state.

A steamer brought the Peck family from San Francisco to San Pedro in 1869, and soon afterward they settled on a ranch of about five hundred acres at El Monte. While it was possible to raise crops in those days, it was not possible to find a market for them, and consequently the family endured many privations and vicissitudes during those first years in Los Angeles county. By means of teaching Mr. Peck was able to eke out a livelihood, and for two years he acted as county superintendent of schools. After a time markets opened up, settlers came into the country, improvements began to be made in lands and the fortunes of the early settlers changed for the better, so that thereafter he enjoyed a gratifying degree of prosperity. While living in Northern California he established domestic ties, his marriage, April 30, 1864, uniting him with Mary W. Chater, who was a member of a New England family early established in the west. Four children were born of their union, namely: John H. F., a merchant of Soda Springs, Idaho; George H., whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume; Kate, wife of Albert Gibbs, of South Pasadena, and Mary C., Mrs. John E. Jardine, also a resident of Pasadena. The closing years of Mr. and Mrs. Peck were passed in quiet retirement in their Pasadena home, where to both came the end of activities. United in life, in death they were not long divided, the wife surviving her husband for only one year.

JAMES H. RITCHIE. A pioneer of Los Angeles county and a citizen well known and respected by all, James H. Ritchie was born in Nova Scotia May 7, 1843, and educated in the common schools of that section. He was one of eleven children born to his parents, Andrew and Elizabeth (Jefferson) Ritchie, both natives of the same place, and both now deceased, the father dying at the age of forty-seven and the mother at eighty-two. The father was a farmer throughout his entire life and owned a valuable property in Nova Scotia. Seven of the children are at the present writing making their home in Nova Scotia, while James H. is the only one in California.

In Nova Scotia James H. Ritchie learned the trade of blacksmith, and after serving his apprenticeship at Yarmouth he came to California and in San Francisco engaged in the prosecution of his trade. He was next located in Stockton, where the ensuing three years were similarly spent. Coming to Los Angeles in 1869 he first worked for John Toller, a pioneer blacksmith of this section, and later for the Cerro Gordo Freight Company. For about three years following this last employment he worked for I. F. Nadeau, after which he went to the mines in Arizona and there followed his trade for about three years. Returning to Los Angeles county he established a blacksmith shop on Florence and Compton avenues and has since been occupied in the conduct of this enterprise. During the years in which he has been located here he has made one trip to Arizona.

In 1872 Mr. Ritchie married Miss Mary F. Jennings, a native of Illinois, and born of this union are the following children: Elizabeth, who married Charles D. Burt, of Los Angeles; Harry Clifton, who died at the age of three years; Georgia L., J. Harry, Jr., Frances G. and Charles E. The family homestead is a handsome structure, surrounded by ample grounds, on Compton avenue. Mrs. Ritchie is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Ritchie has been a member of the Masonic organization for many years, having been associated with a lodge in Nova Scotia. Politically he is a Republican and takes an active interest in public affairs.

CLARENCE E. COE was born in Iowa, January 23, 1873, a son of N. F. Coe, who is represented elsewhere is this volume. Mr. Coe was about ten years of age at the time the family removed from Iowa to California, and the greater part of his education was, therefore, received in the latter state. As soon as he reached his majority he started out on his independent career, renting a ranch of three hundred acres in close proximity to Santa Monica. Some time after he took charge of his father's ranch, which he later purchased. By his intelligent industry and devotion to the welfare of Los Angeles county he gained the esteem of acquaintances and a fair competence as well.

Mr. Coe's marriage, October 23, 1895, united him with a native daughter of the state, Miss Laura E. Bauder, whose father, Rev. T. J. Bauder, was a presiding elder in the United Brethren denomination for many years. By his wife, formerly Miss Electa M. Clifford, five children were born, as follows: Minnie, Lelah, Myrtle, Laura E. and Talmage. Prior to her death, in 1895, Mrs. Bauder was an active worker in the United Brethren Church, and took an equal interest in the work carried on by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Four children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Coe. Named in order of birth they are as follows: Theron E., Etta E., Mildred E. and Clifford B. Following the teaching of her parents Mrs. Coe is an adherent of the United Brethren Church, the welfare of whose interests she has at heart, and both by personal efforts and financially she assists in carrying on the work of that organization.

GUSTAV FERDINAND JOHNSON. Many of the most active and prosperous business men of Los Angeles county are of foreign birth, and have transported to this land of fertility and plenty the habits of industry and thrift that win success. Prominent among these is Gustav Ferdinand Johnson, of San Pedro, who is identified with the advancement of the lumber trade of this part of the state as a surveyor and tallyman, in both of these lines being without a peer. The youngest of a family of seven children, of whom three daughters and one son are living, he was born, September 26, 1864, in Nikolaistad, Finland. His father, the late John Johnson, was there engaged in merchant tailoring during his active career, and there his mother, whose maiden name was Louisa Vickstrand, still resides.

Having completed his studies in the common schools of his native land, Gustav Ferdinand Johnson went to sea when a boy of fourteen years, going first on a coaster, and afterwards sailing on an English vessel to Pensacola, Fla., from there going to Malaga, Spain, and thence back to Liverpool. Shipping then on the English vessel Loyola, he came around Cape Horn to the Pacific coast, landing in San Pedro in 1881, after a tedious voyage of one hundred and sixty-two days. The ensuing four years, he was here employed in the coasting trade, the last year being second mate. Giving up seafaring pursuits in 1885, he entered the employ of the San Pedro Lumber Company, beginning in the very lowest position to learn the business, at first being a lumber carrier. From time to time he was promoted, at the end of three years becoming lumber surveyor, a position that he retained until 1899, when he severed his connection with the company. Since that time he has been engaged in business on his own account, and as a lumber surveyor and tallyman has met with marked success. A man of good financial judgment, industrious and saving, he has accumulated a fine property, and on O'Farrell street, Barton Hill, has erected a substantial residence, which, with its beautiful lawn, adorned with magnificent roses and evergreens, is one of the most attractive in the city. He is interested to some extent in fruit culture, and has a grape vine which is said to be the largest in San Pedro. In 1902 he assisted in organizing the Lumber Surveyors' Association, and has since been a member of its finance committee.

In Astoria, Ore., Mr. Johnson married Wendla Nelson, who is also a native of Nikolaistad, Finland, and they became the parents of three children, Ida, Otto and Carl, the last named dying June 16, 1906. Mr. Johnson was made a Mason in Wilmington, demitted from that lodge, and became a charter member of San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M. He is likewise a member of the Ancient and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being past grand of his lodge, and is a member of the Rebekah Lodge. In national politics he is a Republican, but in local affairs votes for the best men and measures, regardless of party prejudices.

OSCAR FITZALLEN PALMER. In every progressive city the time comes when the old must give way to the new, and in the case of buildings, too valuable to be destroyed, the business of house-moving becomes important, rendering possible the removal of the structure to a lot less centrally located or of less financial value. Reasons of this character, supplementing the need of the wreckage of buildings no longer habitable, caused the organization of the firm of Palmer Brothers in 1901, the members of the firm being Oscar, William and Edward Palmer, who have established the largest business of its kind in San Diego and devote their attention to the filling of contracts for the moving, remodeling or wrecking of houses. They are the owners of various lots and houses in the city and some years ago purchased the old Horton house, the annex of which they removed to their lot on Union street to be used as a hotel.

The founder of the Palmer family in San Diego was John D., a native of Ohio, a soldier in an Ohio regiment during the Civil war and a manufacturer of lumber for many years. Removing from Ohio to California in 1884, he settled in San Diego, where he took contracts to remove and remodel houses, continuing actively engaged in business until his retirement in 1904. His death occurred in this city in February of 1906 and was mourned by the large circle of friends he had formed in this city since coming here as a citizen and business man. For years he was identified with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in religious views he was of the Methodist Episcopal faith. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Lydia Swift, was born in Ohio and now makes her home in San Diego.

The family of John D. and Lydia Palmer consisted of four sons and four daughters, namely: Mrs. Ida McCann; Oscar FitzAllen; William, who is sewer inspector in addition to being a member of the firm of Palmer Brothers; Mrs. Maggie Ferguson and Mrs. Mollie Crane (twins); Scott, manager of the Pickwick theatre, a first-class playhouse leased by the firm of Palmer & Ferguson; Edward and Mrs. Bessie A. Jones. All of the brothers and sisters make San Diego their home.

Oscar FitzAllen Palmer was born in McConnelsville, Morgan county, Ohio, February 18, 1868, and received a fair education in the common schools of his native town. On accompanying his parents to San Diego in 1884 he began to help his father in the moving of houses and soon learned the business in all of its details, proving himself so reliable and efficient that his father gradually turned over to him the management of affairs, and in time he and his brothers acquired the business which they have conducted with exceptional enterprise and intelligence. In San Diego he has a comfortable home, presided over by his wife, formerly Lillian Pray, who was born in Kansas, but came to the Pacific coast in early girlhood and was married in this city. Aside from identification with the Fraternal Aid and Fraternal Brotherhood he has no affiliation with orders or organizations, it being his preference to devote himself to the business established by his father and built up to its present dimensions largely through his efforts. Modest and unassuming, he takes little credit to himself for what he has accomplished, but gives the greatest praise to his father, whose uprightness of life, intelligence, sagacity and genial temperament gave him an honored place in the estimation of his acquaintances and in the hearts of his children.

EMIL J. EISENMAYER. As treasurer and general manager of the Colton Grain and Milling Company, E. J. Eisenmayer is recognized as one of the most progressive and thorough-going business men in this city. The close of his school training found him eager to begin his business career, and from that time to the present he has been interested in the milling business, a line of endeavor for which he seems to have a special aptitude. Born in Illinois, March 8, 1871, he is a son of P. H. and Emma (Wise) Eisenmayer, the father also being a native of Illinois. From there he removed to Missouri in the early days of the settlement of that state.

The preliminary education of Emil J. Eisenmayer was received in the common schools and later he took a course in a manual training school in St. Louis, Mo. His initiatory training in the milling business was obtained in Illinois, and was continued in Newton, Kans., and Missouri, in which states he was a resident for a number of years. In 1902 he came to Colton, Cal., and became the principal organizer of the company which built the Globe mills here. After 1903 the business was conducted under the name of the Colton Grain and Milling Company, with officers as follows: W. E. Keller, president; J. B. Alexander, vice-president; W. H. Joyce, secretary, and Emil J. Eisenmayer, treasurer and general manager. The plant is modern and up-to-date throughout, both buildings and machinery being the best of their kind. One hundred and fifty horse-power is required to operate the mill, which has a capacity of two hundred and fifty barrels of flour, fifty barrels of corn and one hundred tons of barley and feed per day. In connection with the plant are steel storage tanks of one hundred thousand bushels capacity, in addition to which there are several large warehouses throughout Riverside county. Taking the equipment throughout, it is probably the most complete of its kind in Southern California today. In addition to the milling enterprise, Mr. Eisenmayer is connected with a number of other industries in this section. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank, and has a large interest in a seventeen thousand acre ranch, the owners having incorporated in 1905 with H. E. Harris, president; E. J. Eisenmayer, vice-president; Thomas Keefer, secretary.

Mr. Eisenmayer's marriage occurred in 1892 and united him with Miss Alice A. Burton, a native of Trenton, Ill., and a daughter of John H. and Helen (Douglas) Burton, the family being an old and prominent one in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Eisenmayer have one daughter, Mildred A. Mr. Eisenmayer is especially talented as an organizer and promoter of business enterprises and his energy and enthusiasm, when applied to the furthering of any undertaking, are factors which insure its successful consummation.

JOHN WEBER. The business interests of Pomona have an able representative in Mr. Weber, who is the sole proprietor of the soda works in this place. He is a native of Illinois, born in St. Clair county, June 14, 1855, and is a son of Henry and Barbara (Rock) Weber. Both of the parents were born in the Fatherland, but as they were brought to this country when mere children (the father at five and the mother when three years of age) they never knew any other home than the United States. As pioneers they settled in St. Clair county, Illinois, when Indians were still plentiful and wild animals were so commonly seen as to cause no comment. Clearing his farm of the underbrush with which it was covered, the father prepared the soil for seed and made a specialty of raising grain. When a comparatively young man, at the age of forty-nine, the father's earth life came to a close, the mother surviving to reach her sixty-sixth year. Of the eleven children originally comprised in the parental family only three besides our subject are now living, all daughters, one residing in Los Angeles, one in St. Louis, and another in Illinois.

A student in the common schools of St. Clair county, Illinois, during his boyhood, John Weber later matriculated as a student in Central Wesleyan College, of Warrenton, Mo., and after a two years' course in that institution took a normal course in order to fit himself for teaching. For this field of endeavor he seemed to have a special inclination and fitness, and no doubt would have followed teaching indefinitely had not the ill-health of his family necessitated removal to a more salubrious climate. His career as a teacher in St. Clair and Clinton counties, Illinois, was therefore brought to a close in 1887 and the same year he brought his family to California, locating in Pomona, which has ever since been their home. Two years later, in 1889, Mr. Weber bought a half interest in the soda works of this place, and two years afterward bought his partner's interest, since which time he has been sole proprietor.

In Illinois Mr. Weber was married in 1880 to Miss Elizabeth Koob, a native of that state and a daughter of Philip H. and Mary A. (Huebsch) Koob, the father settling in Illinois as a pioneer. The following children were born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Weber: Philip H., Edna (now the wife of Houston Browning and a resident of Illinois), Bertha, Olive, John R. and Francis G. Mrs. Weber is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, toward the support of which Mr. Weber is a liberal contributor, as he is to all enterprises of an uplifting and benevolent character. With wise foresight he appreciated that with the growth of the town real estate values would necessarily advance, and soon after locating here he invested in considerable property, and also erected the commodious residence now occupied as the family home. Fraternally he belongs to the Fraternal Aid of Pomona, and in his political sympathies he is a Republican. In whatever community he has resided he has always been alert to the best interests of his home town, and while in Illinois was for eight years village clerk of New Baden, Clinton county. This same interest has been manifest in Pomona, and for eight years he has been one of the most efficient members of the board of education. The fact that his election immediately preceded the expenditure of about $80,000 for school extension and improvements is an index to the value placed upon his ability and judgment along these special lines.

MISS IDA E. WARFIELD. Eminently qualified by birth, training and experience for a business career, Ida E. Warfield has achieved acknowledged success in her realty dealings, by honest, earnest work, and much persistency of purpose, winning a place of distinction among the leading real estate agencies of Venice. A native of New York, she was born in Ontario county, the only child of Leonard K. and Mary E. (Antisdale) Warfield, the former of whom is a resident of Ocean Park, Cal., while the latter died, in 1896, in Michigan.

The Warfield family originated in England, and was first represented on American soil by two brothers, who immigrated to the United States in colonial days, and were afterwards prominent in public life, descendants of both taking an active part in the Revolutionary war. The brother from which Miss Warfield descended settled in Maryland, where her great-grandfather, Zadock Warfield, Sr., was born and reared, although he subsequently became a pioneer settler of New York state. His son, Zadock Warfield, Jr., the next in line of descent, was born in Maryland, but when a child was taken to New York state, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits during his active life. He married Chloe Knapp, who lived and died within half a mile of the house in which she was born. This energetic couple began their married life with scarce any capital, he owning a pair of oxen, while each had ten sheep. He was industrious, prudent and thrifty, becoming a large landholder, and rearing a fine family of children, eight in number, Leonard K. being the oldest of this family, all of whom at the present writing, in 1905, are living.

A native of New York, Leonard K. Warfield was educated in the common schools, and like his ancestors chose farming for his life occupation. About twelve years after his marriage he removed to Michigan, where he continued in agricultural pursuits for many years, living first in Hillsdale county, and afterwards residing on a farm in St. Joseph county, and meeting with excellent results in his undertakings. In May, 1900, he came to Los Angeles county, and has since lived retired from business activities in Ocean Park.

Educated in the schools of Michigan, and receiving her diploma from the State University at Ann Arbor, Ida E. Warfield is highly cultured and accomplished. Before her graduation, at the age of sixteen years, she began teaching, entering upon a profession for which she was naturally fitted by birth and inheritance, as in her mother's family, which consisted of seven children, there were six teachers. She subsequently taught school in Michigan for a number of years, having a teacher's life certificate in that state. Afterwards coming west, she taught in California and Arizona, from the latter place going back to Michigan to visit her parents and friends. Returning to the coast in 1900, she settled with her father in Ocean Park, and with a few hundred dollars at her command entered into her present business as a dealer in real estate, having an office at No. 3 Ocean Front. In July, 1905, Miss Warfield removed to her present spacious office in Ocean Park, where she is managing her affairs with characteristic enterprise and ability, her dealings in real estate in this part of the county being extensive and noteworthy. Miss Warfield is a most estimable woman in every respect, highly esteemed by all, and is a valued member of the Presbyterian Church.

FRANK C. HOSSLER. During the entire period of his residence in Southern California Mr. Hossler has been associated with the lumber industry, first in Newport and later in other towns of the same locality, eventually coming to Redondo, where he has made his home for a number of years. Every detail of the business has been learned thoroughly by him, but of recent years his specialty has been surveying, and ever since the organization of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California, of which he was a charter member, he has maintained an active identification with its interests and has accomplished much in the promotion of its usefulness.

Mr. Hossler is now in the prime of life, having been born February 1, 1872. His earliest recollections are of Springville, in Linn county, Iowa, where his father worked as a carpenter and builder. The latter, M. V. Hossler, was a native of Pennsylvania, but passed the years of youth in Ohio and became a pioneer of Iowa, eventually, however, removing to Nebraska and settling at Hastings, Adams county, where he remained until death. After he had passed away his wife, Catherine (Bowers) Hossler, a native of Ohio, removed to California, and here spent her closing days. In their family of three sons and three daughters, Frank C. was the youngest child, and he was primarily educated in his native town of Springville, Iowa. When nine years of age, in 1881, he accompanied the family to Nebraska, where he became a pupil in the Hastings schools and later took a complete course in the Grand Island Business College.

After his graduation from the commercial school Mr. Hossler came to California in 1893 and secured employment with the Newport Lumber Company, under whom he began at the bottom and learned every detail connected with the industry. Proving efficient and competent, he was sent to Santa Ana as a clerk in the company's wholesale yard, and there not only promoted the firm's interests, but also broadened his own knowledge of the business. When the yard was sold to Nofsinger Brothers, he began tallying in Los Angeles for the new proprietors, and in their interests came to Redondo in September of 1901. Subsequently he took a leading part in the organization of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California, an institution that has accomplished much for the promotion of the industry and the men connected therewith, as well as advancing the general welfare of the people.

It has been necessary for Mr. Hossler to give his attention very closely to the details of his business, hence as yet he has taken no part in politics aside from voting the Republican ticket, nor has he identified himself with any of the social or fraternal organizations with the sole exception of the Fraternal Brotherhood. August 3, 1902, he was united in marriage with Nellie Walch, who was born in San Francisco, but at the time of their union was making her home in Riverside. Both are cordially esteemed in their home town and have many friends also in other parts of Southern California.

JOSEPH FELLOWS. A prominent representative of the manufacturing interests of Southern California, Joseph Fellows, of Terminal, has acquired distinction along the entire length of the Pacific coast as a skillful boat builder, his productions being in great demand, and as president of the Joseph Fellows Yacht and Marine Construction Company is widely and favorably known. Joseph T. Pugh is secretary and treasurer of the company. Possessing great mechanical ingenuity and much artistic ability, with a well-trained eye and a skillful hand, Mr. Fellows draws his own plans, being an expert draughtsman, and in the building of sea-craft of all kinds has no superior, his yachts, pleasure launches, fishing smacks, lighters, sail boats, etc., being well made, and meeting the approbation of his numerous patrons.

A son of Isaac Fellows, he was born May 31, 1865, in Staffordshire, England, where his ancestors on both sides of the house originated.

Isaac Fellows spent his early life in England, emigrating from there with his family to Ontario, crossing the Atlantic on the Severn. In 1873 he migrated to Iowa, settling as a carpenter and builder in Decorah. From there he went to Minneapolis, Minn., where he was engaged at his trade until his death, in 1901. He married Mary Millward, who was born in England and died in Minneapolis in March, 1902. Nine children were born of their union, seven of whom grew to years of maturity. One of these, John Fellows, a fireman, was killed in the memorable fire at Minneapolis December 20, 1894, going down with a burning building, so that but six children are now living, Joseph, the subject of this sketch, being the third child in order of birth.

Receiving a common-school education in Decorah, Iowa, Joseph Fellows acquired a practical knowledge of the use of tools while working with his father, and at the age of fourteen years began to learn the trade of a boat builder, working day times and attending a business college evenings. Subsequently going to Washington, he located at Spokane, where he built boats for several residents of Portland, and was by them offered a good-paying position in the city of Portland. Going, however, to Seattle, Wash., he built several boats for people of prominence in the west, and likewise built pleasure and fishing boats for firms in San Francisco and Astoria, Ore. In 1896 he accepted the position of superintendent of the yards of the San Francisco Launch Company in San Francisco, and during the eighteen months that he remained with the company manufactured many boats and steamers. Coming to San Pedro in 1898 to take charge of the construction of the J. C. Elliott, a sixty-foot launch, he met with good success, and soon had so many orders to fill in that line that he has since remained here. Establishing himself as a boat builder in 1899 he has been actively employed ever since, and as a builder of yachts, launches and sailboats has won an extended reputation, being the only manufacturer of the kind in this part of the county. He has built twenty-four launches, twenty-six feet each, and several of his boats exhibit great speed, the Venus having won thirteen straight races. He constructed the Mischief, a fine boat, and also the Minerva, which weathered one of the worst storms ever known on the Pacific coast. One of the boats, the Myth, which he owns, is a noted racer, and usually comes in winner. Mr. Fellows and his partner, J. T. Pugh, have their factory in Terminal, which is an up-to-date plant, finely equipped, and employs about thirty hands. They have had as many as seven boats in process of construction at one time. Mr. Fellows assisted in organizing the Southern Coast Yacht Club, of which he is an active member. During the summer of 1906 the races of the season were held, the competing boats being Mischief II, designed and constructed by Mr. Fellows for Walter Folsom, and the Monsoon, owned by Mr. Gardner of New York. The latter boat was also constructed on the coast, by J. T. Pugh, the latter designer up to this time having the reputation of designing the fastest boats in the world. The average winning time of all the races was six minutes and fifteen seconds, this result showing the superior ability in building craft for speed and giving Mr. Fellows a world-wide reputation.

In San Francisco Mr. Fellows married Josie K. McMeans, who was born in Nebraska, the daughter of James A. McMeans, state senator, and they have two children, Robert Millward Fellows and an infant not named. Politically Mr. Fellows is a Republican. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church.

D. C. REED. An upbuilder of the city of San Diego is named in the person of D. C. Reed, one of the enterprising citizens of this section. He was born in Madison county, N. Y., in 1847, a son of Oliver, born in the same place in 1800, and a grandson of Charles, who was a native of Genesee county, same state, a descendant of English ancestry, which has been represented in America since 1665, members of the family being prominent in Massachusetts for many generations. Farming was the chief occupation of earlier members of the family. Oliver Reed engaged in this occupation first in his native state and later in Wisconsin, having located in Green Lake county in 1858. He followed an active life as a pioneer settler and died at an advanced age. His wife, formerly Elizabeth Brewer, was also born in New York of English ancestry and died in Wisconsin.

D. C. Reed was reared to young manhood in Green Lake, Wis., receiving a preliminary education in the common schools of Madison, supplemented by a course at the University of Wisconsin. Desiring to take up the study of law he entered the office of Dobbs & Foote, being admitted to the bar in 1869, and the following year he came to California. January 20, 1870, he located in San Diego, which was then only a small town with a few houses on Fifth street. He immediately established an office here and shortly afterward was made deputy district attorney under W. T. Neeley. The great possibilities of this section early appealed to Mr. Reed and it was in 1878 that he became actively engaged in real-estate operations. With a partner he established an abstract business and incorporated the same under the title of the Reed & Burt Abstract Company, which made up the first set of abstracts in the county. In February, 1884, they purchased two tracts of land, one of two hundred and twenty acres and the other of one hundred and sixty acres, and two years later laid out the Reed & Daily addition of forty acres, the Reed & Hubbell addition of one hundred and sixty acres, and also laid out the Reed-Central addition of twenty acres, the Reed & Swaynes addition of forty acres, the Bird Rock City of eighty acres and also a forty-acre tract on University Heights. It was through his instrumentality that Pacific Beach became a city. He continued actively interested in the abstract business until 1899 when he sold out to the Union Title & Trust Company of this city.

In spite of his absorbing business cares Mr. Reed has always found time to take an active interest in the public welfare of San Diego. He has served as director of the Bank of Commerce for many years, was president of the Gas Company from the time of its organization, and has served as a member of the city council many years. In 1897 he was elected on the Republican ticket to the office of mayor of the city and served one term. He has always been intensely interested in the advancement of his party's principles and in 1884 was a delegate to the National Convention in Chicago, which nominated J. G. Blaine for president, and was a member of the notification committee, going with the committee to Bar Harbor. He is a life member of the Chamber of Commerce and seeks in every way to promote the welfare of the city.

In San Diego Mr. Reed married Juliet C. Guiou, who was born in Grass Valley, Cal., a daughter of Daniel Guiou, who came from Bangor, Me., to California in 1851, and twenty years later located in San Diego. They have three children: Ethel B., Vida B. and Ruth. Mr. Reed was made a Mason in San Diego Lodge No. 35 and is now a member of the chapter, commandery and consistory.

GEORGE C. SAWTELLE. The son of an early settler, George C. Sawtelle inherits the sturdy qualities and independent characteristics which distinguished the pioneers of California and has in his work since attaining manhood sought to advance the standards set by the men who laid the foundation for statehood. Born in Harvard, Clay county, Neb., March 8, 1876, he is a son of J. F. and Adalina Sawtelle, natives respectively of New Hampshire and Maine. Previous to his removal from New England the father had operated a shoe store on Hanover street, in Boston, Mass., which he sold in 1866. Later he removed to Lynnfield, same state, where he engaged in the manufacture of ladies' and men's shoes, continuing in this business until 1868, when he sold out and removed to Cleveland, Ohio, in the latter city having the agency of the Gold Medal sewing machine. From Cleveland he went to Nebraska in 1870, and in Harvard, Clay county, conducted an extensive general merchandise establishment. Disposing of a $25,000 stock, he removed to Wyoming in 1885 and followed merchandising for three years; thence removing to Simi, Ventura county, he established the store which is now conducted by his son, the first mercantile enterprise in Simi. Ever since its establishment this store has been known as the Pioneer store. Mr. Sawtelle brought to bear in his work business ability, increased by a wide experience in the east, and since locating in California he has also devoted considerable time to ranching, his home still being in the Simi valley.

George C. Sawtelle received his education through the medium of the public school of Simi, after which he immediately engaged in business with his father. The qualities which had distinguished the efforts of his father have also been noticeable in his career, and the energy of his youth added immeasurably to the advancement of the enterprise. For some time the firm name was J. F. Sawtelle & Son, but in 1902 he purchased the entire interest of the concern and has since conducted it alone. In addition to his dual interests in the conduct of the store and livery stable he also owns a ranch of one hundred and two acres. In San Diego, June 25, 1903, he married Miss Elma M. Ecoryd, a daughter of John Ecoryd, of Simi, and they have one son, George John. They attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which Mr. Sawtelle gives a liberal support, as he does to all public matters which have for their end the upbuilding of the community at large.

OSCEOLA C. ABBOTT. Since the firm of Abbott & Stacy opened their doors for business in San Pedro in 1899 they have established a reputation for reliable commercial transactions and have acquired a business second to none of its class in the town. They started in a very modest, unpretentious way, but month by month and year by year they have added to their real-estate holdings until today they handle property in all of the additions in San Pedro. While it may be said that they make a specialty of buying and selling and exchanging real-estate, yet that by no means represents the scope of their undertakings, for they write considerable insurance with many of the old-line companies, among them the Fire Association of Philadelphia, Philadelphia Underwriters, Germania, the Casualty, Etna and Northern. They have also built a number of residences in San Pedro.

Descending from a long line of southern antecedents, O. C. Abbott was born in Kouts, Porter county, Ind., September 5, 1851, a son of Edwin C. and Mary Ann (Wright) Abbott. From old Virginia, where he was born and where he spent his early years, the father first removed to Porter county, Ind., and soon after the birth of his youngest child removed to Fayette county, Iowa, locating not far from Fairbank. By occupation he was a farmer, and followed that vocation in the various states in which he made his home. He died in Fayette county when his son, Osceola, was a child of five years. His wife was also of southern parentage, and was born in Kentucky. She survived her husband about thirty-two years and died in Delaware county, Iowa, whither she had removed from Fayette county after the death of her husband. The parental family originally comprised five children, four sons and one daughter, but two of the sons are now deceased. One of the sons, John W., gave up his life in the cause of his country, dying two weeks after his return home, from disease contracted in the army while a member of the Thirty-fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

As he was the youngest child in his parents' family O. C. Abbott was a small child when the family removed to Iowa, and he therefore has little or no recollection of his native surroundings in Indiana. He was reared on his father's farm in Fayette county, and attended the schools in that locality until the latter's death, when his mother located in Delaware county, and he completed his education in the latter locality. When twenty years of age he was interested in a mercantile business in Hopkinton, Delaware county, and eleven years later, in 1882, removed to Albion, Boone county, Neb., and established a grocery. During the eight years in which he resided in Nebraska he took an active interest in public affairs and for three years of this time filled the office of city treasurer of Albion. Since coming to San Pedro in 1890 his qualifications as a public official have become recognized by his fellow-citizens and for four years he has served them as city clerk and two years as custom house inspector, besides serving as city assessor and deputy county assessor for several years.

Near Dixon, Lee county, Ill., Mr. Abbott was united in marriage with Miss Emma E. Carnahan in 1875. She was a native of Malugin Grove, Lee county, that state, in which vicinity she taught school five years prior to her marriage, taking her first school when only seventeen years of age. All of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Abbott are living, as follows: Edwin S., a butcher in San Pedro; Claire C. and Osceola C., Jr., both residents of San Pedro, the latter foreman of the machinists in the S. P. planing mill at Los Angeles; Lula E. and John D., who are attending college in Los Angeles. All of the family are well liked by their many friends and acquaintances, and at their home on Tenth street they dispense a gracious hospitality. Fraternally Mr. Abbott is a Mason, being initiated into the order in Malugin Grove, Ill., and he was made a Master Mason in Hopkinton, Ia. Upon his removal to Albion, Neb., he transferred his membership thither, and later to San Pedro. He is also identified with the Foresters of America, in which he served as master of his lodge; and his wife is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star. At one time he was an officer in the Royal Arcanum, an insurance order with which he is identified, and he is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce and now vice-president of that body. His political affiliations ally him with the Republican party, in which he takes an active interest, to the extent that he has been a member of the county central committee. The family find their church home in the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which Mr. Abbott is now serving as president of the board of trustees. Few residents of San Pedro have achieved a success more noteworthy than that which has rewarded the efforts of Mr. Abbott and to none has success come more deservedly than to him. Recently he has been elected as free holder of the city of San Pedro, to draft the city charter for a fifth class city, and is now engaged in the duties of his office.

OSCAR C. WILLIS. Conspicuous among the attractive country homes of Ventura county is the ranch near Moorpark which is owned and occupied by Oscar C. Willis and utilized by him in the raising of barley and the pasturage of stock. Every ranchman has his specialty and that of Mr. Willis is the raising of horses, in which department of agriculture he has been remarkably successful. As a judge of horses he has few superiors, and his opinion concerning an animal is usually accepted as authoritative. At this writing he acts as manager of the Moorpark Horse Company, owners of the Percheron stallion Sampson, No. 22104, which won the first prize at the Illinois State Fair in 1904 and has a reputation as the finest animal of its class in Ventura county. Besides having charge of this horse, Mr. Willis owns the trotting stallion Buster, and has engaged in the raising of standard-bred trotting horses. One of his mares, Tempest, has raised ten colts, six of which he sold for $1,160, and the remaining four he yet owns, one of them being a very promising colt by Zolock. The ranch which he owns comprises five hundred acres and in addition he leases three thousand acres for the pasturage of his stock.

Born in Dallas county, Iowa, December 28, 1862, Mr. Willis is a son of Jonathan and Lucinda (Beeson) Willis, natives of Indiana, but after 1857 residents of Iowa, where the mother died during October of 1865. For years the father was one of the most extensive stock-raisers of Dallas county and was one of the first to bring in Percheron horses to Iowa. At one time he served as a member of the board of supervisors of Dallas county. During 1893 he removed from Iowa to California, bringing with him three of the finest horses ever brought to the coast. Two years later he returned to Iowa and established his home at Perry, where he died July 27, 1903, at the age of seventy-six years.

Educated in the public schools of Perry, Ia., Oscar C. Willis left school to take up ranch pursuits. On starting out for himself he came to California in the spring of 1882 and settled at Vacaville, Solano county, where he engaged in the fruit and tobacco business for three years. After a visit of three months among old friends in Iowa he came back to the Pacific coast and settled in Ventura county, where he began to operate a ranch near Saticoy, although it was not until 1889 that he began ranching independently. In 1891 he removed from his Saticoy ranch to the Los Posas estate, where he had two hundred acres under cultivation to beans. The Los Posas rancho stood along the route of the old pioneer stage line from Los Angeles to San Buena Ventura and Santa Barbara, and formed a portion of the old Spanish grant of that name. A number of years he remained on that place, but in the fall of 1903 he traded property in Los Angeles county for his present ranch near Moorpark, which is improved with a comfortable ranch house, substantial barns and the other equipment essential to a model estate of the twentieth century. The pleasant home is presided over by Mrs. Willis, formerly Anna Duval, who was born and reared at Saticoy, and was there married November 9, 1889. Five children brighten the home and the hearts of their parents, namely: Marie, Louise, Lester, Lawrence and Gertrude. In religious views Mrs. Willis is identified with the Advent Church and her children are being trained in that faith.

Politically Mr. Willis gives his support to the Republican party in local and national elections, and fraternally he affiliates with the Independent Order of Foresters. Though averse to filling positions of a public nature, his interest in educational work led him to accept the office of school trustee at Moorpark, and during his service he has favored measures for the benefit of the school and the welfare of the students.

O. J. SOLARI. The establishment of the Solari family in Ventura county dates back to the pioneer period of the American occupancy of California, and its first representative in this country, Augustin Solari, came from his native land of Italy ere yet he had formed domestic ties or drifted into the settled routine of business affairs. The superior qualities coming to him as an inheritance from a long line of cultured Italian ancestors soon made him a conspicuous figure among the ranchmen of the then sparsely settled regions along the coast. Eventually he became the owner of one-fourth interest in the Santa Clara Del Norte rancho, containing fourteen thousand acres, and conceded to be one of the finest estates of Ventura county. The other owners of the rancho were Don Antonio, who had one-half interest, and Leopoldo Schiappa Pietra, who owned the remaining one-fourth interest.

Upon the death of Augustin Solari, which occurred in Ventura county March 18, 1888, twenty-six years after his arrival in California, his portion of the rancho was divided among his heirs, comprising wife and children. His wife was Mercia Cota, a native of Santa Barbara county and a member of an old Spanish family. Their marriage was solemnized in Ventura county, where she yet makes her home. Ten children comprised their family, namely: Isodro, who died in 1885; Elvira, wife of E. M. Wagner, of Ventura county; Amalia, deceased; Ermina, wife of T. C. Lutneskey, of Los Angeles; O. J., a farmer near Oxnard; Emma, who married O. C. Dempsey and lives at Redondo; Lena, Mrs. E. F. Kohlar, of Pasadena; Elizabeth, wife of J. J. Judd, of Los Angeles; Della, who married George Phillips and resides in Santa Barbara; and Eva, wife of A. L. Chaffee, of Ventura.

A lifelong resident of Ventura county, O. J. Solari was born here April 26, 1868, and received his education in the public schools of the county. In 1895 he settled upon land formerly owned by his father and here he has since followed farm pursuits, having a tract of one hundred and seventy acres, of which seventy-five acres are under cultivation to lima beans, and the balance is in barley. The neat residence is presided over by his wife, whom he married in Ventura December 5, 1895, and who was Petra Ruiz, a native of California. Both Mr. and Mrs. Solari are devout believers in the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church and in that religion they are training their two sons, Augustin and Grabil, who at this writing are respectively nine and six years of age. In fraternal relations Mr. Solari holds membership with the Native Sons of the Golden West, being an active worker in the Ventura Parlor. In addition he affiliates with the Ancient Order of United Workmen at Ventura and is prominently associated with Union Latina Americana No. 1 at Ventura, which has the distinction of being the only lodge of its kind in California. The interest which Mr. Solari maintains in the progress of local educational matters led him to accept the position of clerk of the school board in the Del Norte school district, and in this capacity he has given painstaking and efficient service. By his activity as a citizen and his capability as a rancher he has added luster to the honorable reputation established by his father during the pioneer history of our commonwealth.

JOHN BUNYAN GOODLETT. A prominent business man of San Bernardino is John Bunyun Goodlett, who was born in Greenville district, S. C., March 31, 1840, the son of Wilson N. and Lena Ann (Prince) Goodlett, both of whom were natives of South Carolina. Leaving their native state in 1852, they removed to Texas and there remained the rest of their lives. In Texas the father was engaged as a farmer, planter and large cotton grower. The paternal grandfather was William Goodlett, and the maternal grandfather was Harvey Prince, the latter born in Scotland. The first twelve years of the life of John Bunyan Goodlett were spent in South Carolina and from there he went to Texas with the family. There he attended a private school and assisted his father on the large plantation until grown to manhood.

In 1879 Mr. Goodlett came to California and located in San Bernardino county. The following fifteen years he was engaged in ranching and horticultural pursuits, improving a ranch of forty acres, which he superintended until 1894, when he removed to the city of San Bernardino. On the Democratic ticket he was elected to the office of city recorder in San Bernardino for two terms and gave to the municipality most efficient service in that capacity.

Mr. Goodlett's marriage to Miss Julia McDonald of Grimes county, Tex., occurred in that state, and at her death in 1881 she left one child, a daughter, J. Hope, who is now the wife of Arthur Clark. The present Mrs. Goodiett was formerly Miss Anna Maria McGee, of San Bernardino, who although a native of Missouri has spent the most of her life in California, having come here when she was yet a young girl. Mr. Goodlett was for several years connected with the banking interests of this city, and at one time served as a director of the First National Bank of San Bernardino, in which his wife was also a stockholder. They are both active and devoted members of the Baptist Church of San Bernardino, and their present home is on a valuable tract of land located within the corporate limits of the city. Mr. Goodlett is a typical southern gentleman and his home is noted for that refreshing hospitality for which those born and reared in the south are noted.

CAPT. G. L. F. FALK. In reviewing the career of Captain Falk one is impressed with his indomitable spirit, showing the possession of mettle which has never known the word defeat. His early life was associated with happenings in and around Hallen, Sweden, where he was born October 28, 1843, and in which vicinity he was reared until he was fourteen years of age. With the daring of youth he shipped as a sailor before the mast in 1857, little thinking at that time, perhaps, that so large a part of his life would be spent on the water. As one of the crew on an American vessel, which shipped from London in 1861, he made the long and perilous voyage around the Cape of Good Hope, and finally reached Calcutta. After exchanging cargoes the return trip was undertaken, the ship reaching London just seventeen months after leaving port. Subsequently he made the voyage from Liverpool to New York, this being his first trip to America, and later he sailed from Havre to New Orleans. In 1868, on the ship Taylor, he rounded the Horn in making the voyage to San Francisco, the trip consuming one hundred and twenty days. The second day after landing he shipped as second mate on the schooner Eurenta, and before returning to San Francisco, twenty months later, had touched at the ports of Australia, Sandwich Islands and Mexico.

It was after this voyage that Captain Falk determined to embark in business on his own account. Purchasing a scow he engaged in the transportation business on the bay between Stockton and Sacramento, following this until 1870, from then until 1874 giving his attention more especially to the handling of firewood. About this time he built the Pauline Collins, a vessel which he used in the lumber trade until 1877, in that year building the George R. Higgins, in Humboldt county, which plied the coast from San Francisco as far north as Alaska for a number of years. It was about this time, 1880, that he made a trip to Europe, and upon his return he purchased the schooner Bonanza, and for two years carried on a coasting trade along the coast from Mexico to Alaska. In 1882 he built the schooner Mary and Ida, in the Dickey shipyards at San Francisco, running this boat as a coaster until 1888. Going again to the Humboldt docks that year he built the Glendale, but after sailing her for two years gave up life on the sea and settled down as a landsman in San Pedro. It was while master of the George R. Higgins, in 1877, that he had first became acquainted with the town, and so favorable did it impress him as a desirable place to locate that the thirteen years which had intervened had not effaced the idea from his memory. For three years, from 1890 to 1893, he was interested in the liquor business at the corner of Sixth and Fronts streets, property which he had previously purchased, but in the year last mentioned, he rented the property and took a trip to Europe. Since 1898 he has not taken any active interest in business aside from looking after his property, and in 1905 he erected a new building in San Pedro, 25x50 feet. Captain Falk has not severed his connection with nautical affairs entirely, and is still interested in the schooner Glendale and the steam schooner Marshfield, both of which are employed in the lumber trade.

In San Pedro, in 1893, Captain Falk was united in marriage with Miss Ida Campbell, a native of Detroit, Mich., and of the children born to them seven are living. Captain Falk is identified with the Master Mariners Association of San Francisco, and with the Eagles of San Pedro, and in his political sympathies he is a Republican. In retrospect Captain Falk can look back upon a life checkered with high hopes followed by disappointments and discouragements, for his life on sea was not always the most pleasant, nor was it at all times profitable, but he has weathered these breakers and is now living in the comfort which his previous years of hardship and toil have made possible. In his various trips and travels he has acquired a fund of general information, and is as familiar with the famous seaports throughout the world as he is with his home surroundings in San Pedro.

J. J. COLBY, of the Colby Real Estate Company of Long Beach has been a resident of California since 1900, first locating in Redlands, where he set out an orange orchard. This he sold and in 1903 located permanently in Long Beach, where he has since made his home, taking an active interest in the growth and development of the city, in whose future he has unbounded confidence. Mr. Colby is a native of Vermont, and was born November 6, 1842. His boyhood years were spent in the schools of the Green Mountain state, and upon the completion of his scholastic training he engaged in the manufacture of children's carriages, clothes wringers and other small articles, having charge of two hundred men in this work. He was very successful and remained thus occupied until 1890. In that year he made a trip to California and although he returned home and spent the ensuing ten years he was so pleased with the conditions, climate and opportunities of the Pacific coast that in 1900 he came west for a permanent settlement. After spending one summer in Long Beach he decided to locate here, and accordingly purchased a lot on East Ocean Park avenue, where he built a comfortable residence. He engaged in the real estate business, buying acreage and subdividing, having put on the market Eagle Park and Signal tracts. He has made a success of his undertakings and has had no cause to regret coming to California.

In Vermont Mr. Colby was united in marriage with Alice Hutchins and they are now the parents of the following children: Bessie J.; Edwin A., in the National Bank at Redlands; Jesse J., Jr., in the Long Beach Bank; and Mary, wife of K. C. Wells, of Redlands. Mr. Colby is a member of the Royal Arcanum, and in religion is a charter member of the New Plymouth Congregational Church, which was organized in 1904 with forty members and now (1905) has one hundred and fifty. Politically he has always been a staunch Republican and a loyal supporter of the government at all times. In 1862 he enlisted in the United States navy in the paymaster's department, and during his two years' service participated in the blockade of the Gulf of Mexico. He was honorably discharged at the expiration of his service. He is associated with the veterans of the Civil war as a member of the Long Beach Post, G. A. R.

PETER H. SCHWARTZ. The life which this narrative sketches began in Columbiana county, Ohio, June 22, 1842, and was brought to a close May 2, 1903. The intervening years were filled with hard work, noble service in the cause of his country, and latterly in making a name and place for himself on the western coast. His father, Jacob Schwartz, was a farmer in Columbiana county, Ohio, and it was there that he rounded out his years, his wife passing away in Kansas.

Of the six children born to his parents, Peter H. Schwartz was next to the youngest. His earliest recollections were of his father's farm in Ohio, upon which he worked during the summer seasons when not attending the village school. Later training was received in Mount Union College, an institution under the care of the Methodist Episcopal denomination in Mount Union, Ohio, but his studies there were brought to a sudden close by his response to his country's call for volunteers during the first year of the Civil war. After the expiration of his first term of enlistment, which was for three months, he joined Company C, Eighty-sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, enlisting as corporal; later was sergeant of Company B, Twelfth Ohio Cavalry; and finally, as second lieutenant, joined Company B of the One Hundred and Eighth United States Volunteers. At the time of his discharge from the army, in the fall of 1865, he was a young man of only twenty-three years, but even though young in years the hardships and trials of warfare had opened up experiences to him that men thrice his age might not have met as bravely. He was accidentally wounded while in camp, although the accident was not of such a serious nature as to disable him from further service. Mr. Schwartz took pride in the fact that while he entered the service as a non-commissioned officer, he was promoted from time to time, and at the time of his discharge was first lieutenant of the Second United States Volunteers, his commission bearing date of March 24, 1865.

August 1, 1872, Mr. Schwartz was married to Miss Isabella Hoiles, a native of Mahoning county, Ohio, and a daughter of James Hoiles, the latter born in New Jersey. The grandfather, Levi Hoiles, left his home in the east and became one of the early settlers in Mahoning county, both himself and his son becoming farmers in that locality. James Hoiles passed away on his Ohio farm, and his wife also died in that state. She was, before her marriage, Barbara Oyster, and was a native of Pennsylvania. Following his discharge from the army Mr. Schwartz returned to his old home in Ohio and soon afterward embarked in the wholesale and retail hardware business in Alliance, that state. This proved a profitable and congenial undertaking, judging from the fact that he continued in the business for over twenty years, but he was seized with the western fever about this time and the year 1887 witnessed his arrival in California. For about a year he engaged in the real estate business in Santa Ana, but on coming to San Pedro in 1888 he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Lumber Company, branching out from this into contracting and building on his own account. During his later years, and at the time of his death, he was engaged in the real estate business, a line of endeavor into which he could and did put his whole soul, for his faith in the future of San Pedro was unbounded and he had the happy faculty of inspiring his patrons with the same hope. For four years he served his fellow-citizens as constable.

Two children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Schwartz, Clifford D., who is now in Mexico, and Myrtle, who makes her home with her mother. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Schwartz has continued to reside at the old home on Palos Verdes street near Ninth. Politically Mr. Schwartz was a Republican, and in his fraternal associations he belonged to the Masons, having attained the Royal Arch degree; he also belonged to the Knight of Pythias. As was natural for one who had served long and faithfully in his country's behalf he was also a comrade in the Grand Army of the Republic, and his widow is now a member and active worker in that kindred order, the Woman's Relief Corps. While Mrs. Schwartz is a Lutheran in her religious preferences, she attends the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church, there being no Lutheran congregation in San Pedro. Mr. Schwartz was also of the same belief as his wife, passing away with the Christian's hope and assurance of a life hereafter. His body lies buried in the cemetery at Wilmington.

GEORGE BEARD. With the larger growth of Long Beach noticeable during the recent years of its history Mr. Beard has been intimately associated and, as a contractor and builder, he has accomplished much toward the permanent upbuilding of the city. With the assistance of the fifty men now on the pay-roll he is able to take charge of large contracts and fill them without delay or needless annoyances. Since coming to this city in 1901 he has built many residences and public buildings, including the Congregational Church, Hoag and Yoeman residences, Butte block, Masonic Hall, Alamitos schoolhouse, Flint and Barndollar block, Pine street school, the remodeling of the Alamitos school and the finishing work on the high school, the building of the convention hall and Cynthia annex. The hall is a casino, 152x257 feet in dimensions, a wooden structure three stories in height, with a seating capacity of ten thousand, giving the people of Long Beach adequate facilities for the accommodation of the vast throngs attending their assemblies and other public meetings.

The Beard family is of German extraction. John Beard, who was born in Hessen-Darmstadt, came to America alone at seventeen years of age and in 1837 became a pioneer of South Bend, Ind., where at different times he conducted a bakery and hotel and carried on a farm consisting of two hundred and fifty acres. At the time of his death, which occurred at South Bend, he was seventy-eight years of age. When a young man he had married, at Columbus, Ohio, Miss Magdalena Barth, who was born at Baden-Baden, Germany, and accompanied her parents to the United States, settling in Sidney, Shelby county, Ohio. When seventy-eight years of age she died in South Bend. Of the marriage there were five sons and six daughters, George being the seventh in order of birth, and he was born at South Bend, Ind., November 2, 1849. The family being poor and the children numerous, it became necessary early in boyhood for him to earn his livelihood. At fifteen years he became an apprentice to the trade of carpenter and builder with James Million, of Mishawaka. His employer had been a school teacher in Maine and was a man of fine educational attainments, so that the lad enjoyed the advantage of being instructed by him, not only in a trade, but also in the rudiments of an education. Indeed, this was all the education he enjoyed in life, with the exception of a year at Notre Dame, South Bend, where he paid his expenses by working for others. On the completion of his apprenticeship he traveled for three years in Illinois and Iowa, the most of the time working in the bridge-building department of the railroads.

On his return to South Bend in 1870 Mr. Beard there married Miss Clara Spaun, who was born and reared there and died in El Paso, Tex. The two sons of their union died at an early age. The older daughter, Bertha, is the wife of T. W. Dougherty, of Tocsin, Wells county, Ind.; and the younger daughter, Grace, married John Fochtman, of Petoskey, Ind.

Upon first coming to California in 1875 Mr. Beard took charge of a cattle ranch near Bakersfield. At that time many settlers were coming into that locality, without means to pay for the building of homes, and to help them in getting a start he donated his labor in the building of houses for their families. During 1878 he went to Sacramento and for three years worked at his trade with Henry Coates. When Tombstone was in its balmy days as a rich mining region he went to that town overland and from there proceeded to El Paso, where he worked at his trade. After the death of his wife he took a position with the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad as foreman of their bridge-building department and while filling that position he had charge of the building of the first bridge erected across the Colorado river at the Needles, on the road now owned by the Santa Fe. In 1884 he settled in Los Angeles, where for three years he engaged in the planing-mill business with J. M. Griffith and for six years was in charge of a department with Perry & Mott, also worked with Arnold as foreman for a time. From that city he came to Long Beach, where he has a large shop equipped with the latest appliances for his work and containing a department for the manufacture of mission furniture and bank fixtures. During the summer of 1905 he enjoyed a needed relaxation from business cares, at which time he returned to the east and visited the scenes familiar to his boyhood days. Since coming to Long Beach he has been made a Mason in the blue lodge in this city. Politically he favors Democratic principles in national issues, but in local matters is independent. Interested in everything pertaining to his occupation, he was prominent in the Carpenter's Union while living in Los Angeles and often aided in settling disputes which arose between capital and labor.

NELLIE H. AND ETTA C. WILLIS. Conspicuous among the transformations wrought during the latter part of the nineteenth century and the opening years of the twentieth century has been the entrance of women into commercial affairs. There are now few occupations and few professions in which at least a few women have not gained distinctive success, and more and more it is being commonly recognized that the mental capacities of the sex are far broader than former ages supposed. Scattered through every part of California are women who alone and unaided have gained success in their chosen callings; some may be found on ranches superintending the care of stock and cultivation of the land; some have entered professions, where their knowledge, skill and quickness have won recognition; and some have selected a certain sphere of business activity for the exercise of their special talents. In the list of the business women of Ventura county appear the names of the Willis sisters, who for some years have engaged in the restaurant business in Oxnard and also during the busy season operate a restaurant at the sugar factory.

The history of the Willis family is traced back to the eastern states. Jonathan and Lucinda (Beeson) Willis, natives of Indiana, became pioneers of Iowa as early as 1857, settling in Dallas county, where he served as supervisor and attained a high position as a progressive citizen. While carrying on a large farm he made a specialty of raising fine horses and imported a number from Europe in order to secure the finest strains for his own herd. Coming to California in 1893 he remained on a ranch near Saticoy about two years, but then went back to Iowa, where he died at Perry, July 27, 1903, at the age of seventy-six years. His wife had died in Iowa during October of 1865. Among their children were the son, Oscar C. (who is represented elsewhere in this work) and the daughters, Nellie H. and Etta C., both of whom were born and reared in Dallas county, Iowa, and received fair education in the schools of their home neighborhood. During 1887 Miss Nellie came to California and settled at Saticoy, where she made her home for three years, and then her sister joined her. The two had very limited means, but they were energetic, capable and resourceful, and soon found the business opening they desired.

Coming to Oxnard the sisters started a delicatessen store on a very small scale. It was not long before the superior quality of their bakery goods attracted attention and their customers grew in number. Gradually they changed the business into a restaurant and as such they now successfully conduct the store. The heaviest hardship of their business experience came to them in 1904, when a fire destroyed their building and equipment, and they were left without insurance to cover the loss. However, undiscouraged by this catastrophe, they soon resumed business, and by their large trade were enabled to recompense themselves for their losses. Their restaurant has no superior in the city, and among the towns-people it is recognized that their establishment is a credit to the place as well as a tribute to the energy and culinary abilities of the proprietors.

JOHN CAMMACK WILHOIT. In the period subsequent to the Revolutionary war the people of the east began to drift toward the frontier regions and at that time many of the colonial families of Virginia became established in the wilderness beyond the mountains, where they built up the commonwealth of Kentucky. Among those who followed the trend of emigration westward was Hiram Wilhoit, who was born in Culpeper county, Va., in 1797, and was only a lad of fourteen when, in company with his father, Elijah, he blazed a path through the wilderness into the blue-grass region of Woodford county, Ky., where he turned the first furrows in the soil of a frontier plantation. After his settlement in that region he met and married Miss Sophia Thornton, a native of Kentucky, and both remained in that state until they died.

In a family of three sons and two daughters, all of whom except one son attained mature years, John C. Wilhoit was the second in order of birth, and was born in Frankfort, Ky., February 6, 1851. As a boy he alternated attendance at school with work on the home farm, and in young manhood continued with his father until the latter's death, which occurred in 1876. Afterward he remained for some years in Woodford county, where he cultivated a farm and, like the majority of Kentuckians, became a fine judge of horse-flesh, owning a number that were of the choicest stock and excellent pedigree. From Kentucky he removed to Missouri and settled in Cass county in 1881, but a few years of farming in that locality did not prove satisfactory, and in 1887 he removed to the Pacific coast, settling two and one-half miles northwest of Long Beach, which at that time contained but one house. The tract of five hundred acres which he leased was in part under cultivation to alfalfa, which proved a profitable crop. Meanwhile he bought and sold horses and made a specialty of raising the trotting breeds, notable among which was Italie, an exceptionally fine animal. With the disposal of his ranch he sold his stable of horses, but he continued to be interested in that industry and is an authority in equine values.

On removing from his ranch into town Mr. Wilhoit from 1901 to 1903 conducted a grain, hay and feed business, and since then has been somewhat retired from commercial activities, although he personally superintends his real-estate interests. In addition to his residence at No. 424 American avenue, Long Beach, he owns one-quarter of a block on Fourth street, on which he has erected business houses for rental. While living in Kentucky he was married at Nicholasville, that state, to Miss Nannie Hawkins, a native of Kentucky. They are the parents of five children, namely: Bessie, who married Allen Walker and lives at Long Beach; Lulu, wife of J. F. McSwain; G. C., a bookkeeper; Pearl F. and J. Wallace, who reside with their parents. The family attend the Christian Church, of which Mrs. Wilhoit long has been an earnest and faithful member. Though Mr. Wilhoit is not active in politics, he is stanch in his adherence to Democratic principles and stands firm by the faith of the old party.

WILLIAM L. RUST. In tracing the lineage of the Rust family the records show that they come from old and honored English stock, whose members hold prominent positions in commerce and the professions. For years Abraham Rust was an extensive manufacturer engaged in business in the city of London. Among his children was a son, Rev. A. Rust, who was born and reared in London and received a thorough classical education at Cambridge, afterward taking up the study of theology and fitting himself for the ministry of the Episcopal denomination. Immediately after he was ordained to the ministry he went to India, where he had been appointed a vicar in Calcutta. On his return from that county he became vicar at Dunkirk, France, and in 1886 returned to London, where he has since been vicar of an Episcopal parish. Widely known throughout his denomination, he is honored as a man of broad knowledge, earnest life and consistent Christian character, and his influence has tended toward the spiritual uplifting of mankind.

The ministerial labors of Rev. A. Rust have been deepened in their usefulness through the capable assistance of his talented wife, who was a descendant of a family noted for its clergymen. Her father, Rev. Joseph Webster, was a graduate of the University of Edinburgh and became an ordained minister in the Presbyterian denomination. For a time he was a chaplain in the English army, and during his service in that capacity he took part in the Crimean struggle, the Egyptian campaigns and many other historic events in English history. Finally he died in England when a very aged man. His daughter, Elizabeth, was born in Kingston, Jamaica, while he was stationed with the army on that island, and she was reared principally in England, where she died in 1898.

Among seven children, all but one of whom are still living, William L. Rust was the eldest in order of birth, and was born in the city of Calcutta, India, while his father was stationed there as vicar of an Episcopal Church. Born February 1, 1874, he was four years of age when he accompanied his parents to Dunkirk, France, and in 1886 he went with them to England, where he was apprenticed to the machinist's trade at Birmingham in one of the many large factories of that city. In the iron works there he completed his trade after a service of several years, during which time he had acquired a thorough theoretical and practical knowledge of his chosen occupation. Crossing the ocean to the United States in 1891, he proceeded direct to California and joined his brother, Henry, at Santa Barbara. Soon afterward they became interested jointly in cattle-raising in the San Raphael mountains, but at the expiration of three years William disposed of his interest and turned his attention to his trade. For five years he was employed as engineer for the Seaside Oil Company at Summerland. On resigning from that position he became chief engineer with the Guarantee Oil and Refining Company at Beaumont, Tex., where he assisted in the building of the company's plant and helped to place the works upon a substantial basis for practical operation.

Ill-health resulting from an attack of the Texas fever led Mr. Rust to resign his remunerative position at Beaumont and for a time he devoted himself to recreation and travel until he had regained his former state of health. During 1901 he came to Oxnard and has since been employed by the American Beet Sugar Company in the capacity of engineer, his special line being the engine and power work. For some years he has been associated with the National Association of Stationary Engineers, Santa Barbara Local. In political matters he gives his support to the Republican party, while in his religious views he adheres to the doctrines of the Episcopal denomination, in which he was reared. After coming to California he formed domestic ties through his marriage at Summerland to Miss Ethel Opple, a native of Michigan, and now the mother of one son, Frank Rust. At an early age she accompanied her father, Andrew, from Michigan to California and settled at Summerland, where Mr. Opple afterward made his home. During the Civil war, while he was making his home in Michigan, he enlisted in the service of the Union and was enrolled as a member of the Seventh Michigan Infantry, with which he went to the front and bore a gallant part in various engagements with the enemy.

WILLIAM J. ALLEN. A considerable proportion of the population of Southern California consists of men who, having accumulated competencies in other sections of the country, have sought in the evening of their years the climate of the Pacific coast in order that they might enjoy the superior advantages it affords. Included in this class of citizens is William J. Allen, who came to Inglewood in 1903, purchased two lots in the town and erected the comfortable residence now occupied by himself and wife. In genealogy the Allen family is of colonial ancestry, having been identified with the original settlement and early development of New England. The family records show that Ebenezer Allen, who was a native of either Connecticut or Massachusetts, became a pioneer of Vermont, and in 1796, on the occasion of the marriage of his son, Noah, he presented the young married couple with a deed to a tract of farm land in Vermont, which state up to that time had attracted comparatively few settlers. Afterward that same farm became the centre of Noah Allen's activities and there he and his wife, who was Mary Woods, spent the remaining years of their busy lives, she dying on the home place at the age of forty-five, while he survived until seventy-four years of age. The Woods family settled in America at an early date, and her father, Daniel, enlisted as a private in the war of 1812 and was wounded while on picket duty during the battle of Ticonderoga.

At Goshen, in the county where Noah and Mary Allen for many years made their home, a son, William J., was born February 1, 1829, and there he early learned lessons of frugality and industry. When he was fifteen years of age he lost his father by death and afterward was employed by an elder brother as a farm hand for three years, later starting out to earn his own livelihood in the world. In the fall of 1851 he sold his interests in Vermont and removed to Michigan, where he bought a timber farm in Van Buren county and devoted several years to the clearing of the land. For twenty-five years he continued upon the same place, meeting with his share of reverses and also not a few successes. Meanwhile his sons had grown to manhood and started out for themselves, going to Dakota and becoming prominent in their locality. While visiting them in their new home, Mr. Allen took up a homestead under the Dakota laws, and shortly afterward disposed of his Michigan property and moved to his newer possessions. The claim was placed under cutivation and improved with the necessary buildings, and he remained there until his retirement from agricultural pursuits in 1903, when he removed to California and settled on his present property.

The marriage of Mr. Allen was solemnized December 3, 1850, and united him with Lucy A. Brown, a native of Vermont. They became the parents of four children, namely: Anthony, who is engaged in the hardware and furniture business at Fairmount, Richland county, N. Dak., and also owns farm lands in that vicinity; John, a partner with his brother in business; Nettie, wife of E. A. Spaulding, a well-known real-estate man whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume; and Mrs. Mary Mosier, who died on the last day of the year 1904. The family are identified with the Free Methodist Church and Mr. Allen has officiated as a steward in that denomination. Both by precept and example he has given his influence toward the cause of temperance and in politics sympathizes with the Prohibitionists. For several years while living in North Dakota he filled the office of supervisor of Richland county, but with that exception has declined office, preferring to devote his attention to private affairs. Though not a man of large wealth, he has gained a competency by constant labor through a long and active life and is fully deserving of the success he now enjoys.

FRANCISCO MARCOVINA. In noting the various members of any California community it is interesting to observe how all of these people were gathered together from different countries, states and localities, and how well they usually combine to form an intelligent and prosperous town, village or city. Francisco Marcovina, a well-known resident of San Pedro, was born June 10, 1848, in Austria, on the Island of Curzola, where his father, John Marcovina, now a venerable man of eighty-nine years, has spent his entire life, during his active career having been a shipbuilder. There, also, his mother, whose maiden name was Maria Kercenich, lived until her death, in 1901.

The second child in order of birth of a family of four children, of whom two sons and one daughter are living, Francisco Marcovina is the only one in America. At the age of twelve years he began a seafaring life on a coasting vessel visiting the Mediterranean ports. Four years later he went into the deep waters, making voyages to China and the East Indies, and in 1866 coming across the Atlantic to New York and Boston. At the age of twenty-one years, he was made mate of the barque A. A. Drebbett, and in 1868, on the ship John Bright, he came to California, and there left his vessel, locating in San Francisco, where he was for a while engaged in coasting and freighting for himself. Going then to Contra Costa county, he was employed in farming in the Pacheco valley for six years, the following year being employed as a stevedore at Port Costa. Then, on account of his wife's health, he came, in 1882, to San Pedro, and having purchased a lot on Palos Verdes street erected a substantial residence.

Mr. Marcovina subsequently entered the employ of the Wilmington Transportation Company as stevedore, and after a few months was made assistant foreman of the San Pedro Wharf & Transportation Company. This responsible position, with the exception of five years spent as foreman of the wharf at Port Los Angeles for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, Mr. Marcovina has since held, and during his long term of service has performed the duties devolving upon him with ability and fidelity. In 1902 he sold his residence on Palos Verdes street and bought his present fine dwelling-house at No. 1011 Beacon street, near Tenth street. In northern California Mr. Marcovina married Mary A. Markey, a native of Canada, and they are the parents of two children, John Franklin and Edith Emilia. In national politics he is a stanch Republican, but in local matters he votes according to his best judgment for the men and measures advocated by the most intelligent and practical citizens. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JESUS SAENZ. For thirty years or more Mr. Saenz has been numbered among the business men of Los Angeles county, where he has built up a substantial mercantile establishment at Palms, on First street and Washington street road. In an early day this place was a part of La Ballona grant and the postoffice was known as Machado. For ten years he held the office of postmaster, the office being in his store. The success that has rewarded his efforts is especially noteworthy from the fact that the business previously had been conducted at a loss, and when he assumed the management it was necessary to establish credit among business men and awaken confidence among possible customers, a task that called for his persistent application and mental alertness. In addition to his store building and his beautiful home he owns about sixty-five acres of property, in five, ten and seventeen acre tracts, the whole representing an important investment owing to the high valuation of the land. This is devoted to alfalfa, beans, corn, etc., and two acres are in oranges. Believing that increased transportation facilities would benefit the community he donated without charge to the electric railway company the right of way through his lands, and in many other ways he has proved his public spirit and enterprise.

Near the gulf of California, at Guaymas, Sonora, Mexico, Jesus Saenz was born November 14, 1844. In his veins flows the blood of Castilian and Indian ancestors, of both of which he is proud; but in appearance and enterprise he shows a spirit decidedly American. He was the only son of Dionisio and Andrea (Rodriguez) Saenz, natives respectively of Durango and Guadalajara, Jalisco, Mexico. His father, who was the son of wealthy parents, came to California during the eventful year of 1849, with associates chartering a schooner and bringing men and provisions sufficient for a prolonged sojourn in the mining regions. The venture, however, proved very costly and unremunerative, and eventually about 1863 he came to Los Angeles county, where he died April 10, 1887, at sixty-two years of age. In 1891 his wife died, her son having taken care of her in her declining years.

When quite a small child Jesus Saenz accompanied the family to San Francisco. Owing to his father's heavy losses he was unable to attend school longer than two years, after which he earned his livelihood as an errand boy in a store. Gradually, as he was proved to be trustworthy, he was given greater responsibilities, and in time became a trusted clerk in Martinez and Ventura. At eighteen years of age he came to Los Angeles and for some years held a clerkship in this city, and then spent two years at the trade of iron-shutter maker in San Francisco, but the latter occupation did not prove congenial and he abandoned it for the management of the store he now owns. Many years ago he attended the first sale of lots in Santa Monica, but the condition of his finances did not permit him to purchase any real estate in the new town. During the long period of his residence here he has witnessed the growth and prosperity of the county, the development of its resources and the improving of its lands, and no one maintains a greater pride than he in the present prosperity of the people. October 1, 1883, he was united in marriage with Miss Amada Garcia, a native of Los Angeles and a member of an old Spanish family. Ten children were born of their union, but five died at an early age. Those now living are Amadita, Manuel E., Teresa, Andrea, and Bernardo, all of whom are yet at home. Mr. Saenz is a member of Court Columbus, Foresters of America, and the auxiliary. In national politics he is a Republican, casting his first vote for A. Lincoln, but in local matters selects men best qualified for the office.

W. PATTON WILSON. During a prospecting tour in Southern California made in the fall of 1893 Mr. Wilson was so attracted by the possibilities of the coast region that he purchased ten acres on Signal Hill and planted the tract to lemon trees, since which time increase in land values has made the investment remarkably profitable. Determined to settle in this locality he brought his family to the west in April, 1894, and after a year on Signal Hill removed into Long Beach, where he became interested in a drug business and also carried on a carriage and wagon manufacturing plant and repair shop. After having disposed of these enterprises, in 1899 he embarked in the undertaking business and until November, 1905, conducted a modern and well-equipped establishment at No. 115 East Third street. In addition to the industries named he has been active in many other enterprises vitally important to the permanent development of Long Beach. At the time the Citizens' Water Company was established he became one of the first stockholders in the concern and he was active in the starting of the Oceanside Development Company, in which he officiates as a member of the board of directors. As a director and original stockholder in the United Improvement Company he was interested in the establishment of a gas plant for the city of Long Beach. The building business also has attracted his attention and besides erecting dwelling houses he built the Wilson block, a modern two-story brick structure on the corner of Third and Pine streets.

Mr. Wilson was born at Crawfordsville, Ind., May 2, 1851, and is a son of Hugh B. and Nancy Ann (Patton) Wilson, natives respectively of Hamilton, Ohio, and Dayton, Ohio. His father, who was born in March of 1810, learned the tanner's trade in youth and after settling in Indiana conducted a small tannery, but later moved to Crawfordsville, and in 1854 embarked in the grocery business at Cincinnati, Ohio, where misfortune followed his arduous efforts. In 1856 he returned to Indiana and opened a grocery at Anderson, but reverses overtook him and he closed out at a heavy loss. In 1864 he went to Greenfield, Ind., and while carrying on a tannery there he saved enough to pay his debts. For ten years he served as postmaster at Greenfield, and after resigning from that position he led a retired life. Both he and his wife, who was two years his junior, died at the age of eighty-seven.

In a family of five sons and six daughters W. Patton Wilson was ninth in order of birth and is the only survivor among the sons. Primarily educated in the common schools of Anderson and Greenfield, he was later privileged to attend Wabash College at Crawfordsville for two years, but on account of his father's ill-health and financial reverses he gave up a scholarship tendered him by the county of Hancock and took up work more immediately remunerative. At eighteen years of age he began to learn the cabinet-maker's trade. From 1875 to 1878 he was employed as clerk in a drug store at Greenfield. Resigning that position in 1878, he went to Colorado and secured employment as a cabinet-maker at Colorado Springs. After a few months he removed to a stock ranch, hoping the change would benefit his wife's health, and for eight years he remained a rancher in Colorado. At the expiration of that time he spent six months in Kansas and then returned to Greenfield, Ind., purchasing the furniture and undertaking establishment in which he had learned his trade. The business had become demoralized and it required constant application to bring it to a profitable basis, but he was successful in the attempt, and continued in charge of the store for seven years. From there he went back to Colorado and bought fifty acres adjoining Colorado Springs, but not being satisfied with the country he came to California on a tour of inspection and was so attracted by the country that he became a permanent resident.

While living at Greenfield, Ind., Mr. Wilson married Ella M. Crawford, a native of that state. They are the parents of three children, namely: Hugh C., formerly engaged in the undertaking business with his father; Annie and Bessie, who are with their parents. The family are communicants of the Presbyterian Church and Mr. Wilson officiates as an elder, in which office his father and grandfather likewise served. Fraternally he is connected with the lodge and chapter of Masonry at Long Beach and in politics casts his vote with the Republican party.

AUGUST SEDERLUND. The name of this gentleman is well and favorably known throughout San Pedro, where he is carrying on a large and lucrative mercantile business, dealing in groceries, feed and grain. He is a man of great business capacity, possesses keen judgment, is enterprising and progressive, and by industry, diligence and wise investments has acquired a fine property. A native of Sweden, he was born January 3, 1860, in Skaraborg Læn, where his father, Lars Anderson, was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death. His mother, a life-long resident of Sweden, died on the home farm in 1866, leaving three daughters and one son.

The youngest child of the parental household, August Sederlund immigrated to America soon after becoming of age, at Gothenburg, where he embarked, taking the name of Sederlund, on account of difficulty in getting mail by the Anderson name. Arriving in New York in 1882, he went directly to the Northwest Territory, where he worked on the Canadian Pacific Railroad for a number of months. Coming from there to California, he located in San Pedro February 10, 1884, and has since resided here. For about ten years he was in the employ of different lumber companies, including the San Pedro, K. C. M. & L. Co., and the Perry companies. The ensuing three years he was engaged in the teaming and transfer business on his own account, meeting with good success while thus employed. Opening then a store in San Pedro, he started in the grocery business on a small scale, and as his increasing trade demanded more commodious quarters he changed his location to Beacon street, between Fourth and Fifth streets, where he remained until 1904, when he returned to his original site. As a merchant he has been very prosperous, and in the spring of 1906, he completed the Sederlund block, which is a fine two-story building, 28x54 feet, with pressed brick front, and has ample accommodations for his entire stock of groceries. Mr. Sederlund was one of the original stockholders of the First National Bank of San Pedro, which he assisted in organizing, and of which he was one of the directors until he sold his stock therein. He also owns valuable real estate, and is proprietor of the Sederlund hotel, a large and commodious building, on the corner of Second and Palos Verdes streets.

In San Pedro Mr. Sederlund married Anna Sophia Jacobson, who was born in Finland, and they have two children, Rudolph Augustine and Jacob Hjalmar. Mr. Sederlund is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and in his political affiliations is a Republican. Religiously he belongs to the Lutheran Church.

HARRISON J. BLOOD. The highest honors belong to those brave men who responded to the appeal of their country in her hour of need and offered their services to aid in the defense of the Union; and especially should due praise be given where, as in the case of Mr. Blood, the hardships and exposures of army life and the wounds received on the battlefield so injured them that they were permanently disabled and prevented thereby from gaining success in commercial activities. Shortly after the opening of the Civil war Mr. Blood enlisted in the Union army and from that time until peace again reigned throughout the land he was a soldier at the front. Many were the perils he braved and many the hardships he endured; more than once his life was in danger, but he bore the gallant front of a brave soldier. When in later years he suffered from the effects of his army service he came to California in the hope that the genial climate of the coast might rebuild his strength, but the hope proved futile and his last days were passed in Inglewood.

A native of Vermont, Mr. Blood was born January 20, 1835, and he remained at home until sixteen years of age, when, having secured a common-school education, he started out in the world to earn his own livelihood. Going to Wisconsin, he worked in the lumber woods and later found similar employment in Minnesota. December 24, 1861, he enlisted as a private under Capt. William Clayton in the First Minnesota Regiment of Light Artillery. At the expiration of his time he was honorably discharged at Vicksburg November 30, 1863, and the following day re-enlisted in the same company and regiment, remaining with the same command until July 1, 1865, when he was honorably discharged at St. Paul, Minn. During the battle of Shiloh he was wounded by a gunshot in the spine. The bullet was removed by an operation, but the injury caused him much suffering in later years. After the siege of Vicksburg he remained in the south and later accompanied Sherman on the famous march to the sea.

On the close of the war Mr. Blood settled in Iowa and engaged in farming near Sumner, Fayette county. After a number of years he sold his farm there and moved into the town of Sumner, where he engaged in buying and selling stock. In 1897 he came to California and bought an acre of ground at Ingelwood, where he erected a residence. However, it was not his privilege to long enjoy the climate of the coast, for death came to him November 1, 1898, and brought him release from his sufferings. While living in Iowa he had met and married Mrs. Mary (Treloar) Kilby, who was born in England March 19, 1845, and at the age of three years was brought to the United States by her parents, growing to womanhood in Wisconsin and Iowa. Her father was successful in his labors and accumulated a competency, a portion of which she inherited at his death. Her first marriage was solemnized in Wisconsin and united her with Alfred S. Kilby, a native of that state. At his death he left his widow with one child, William C., now a merchant of Perth, Okla. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Blood was blessed with a daughter, Edith M., who is now the wife of J. W. Benn and resides in Inglewood. In politics Mr. Blood supported the Republican party and was a firm believer in its principles, while in religion he was of the Presbyterian faith and Mrs. Blood also holds membership with that denomination. A lady of attractive manner and kindly disposition, she has won many friends since coming to the coast and has a high position in Inglewood social circles.

ALEXANDER SCHELLING. The wealth and prosperity of Southern California are wholly due to the men whose judgment singled it out as an eligible point for business, being in the midst of a country possessing vast resources ready for development by master hands and minds. Prominent among these men is Alexander Schelling, who has for many years been actively identified with the horticultural and business interests of Los Angeles county, and is now one of the leading horticulturists of Burbank, where he has a most pleasant and attractive home. He was born, October 10, 1841, in Switzerland, where he grew to man's estate, living there for a number of years after his marriage. For some time he was engaged as a teacher, also held a prominent state office for several years.

In 1885 Mr. Schelling came to America to see the country of which he had heard so much, and for the benefit of his health. Being especially impressed with the wonderful climate and the rich resources of California, he returned after a few months to his native country for his family, bringing them to Los Angeles September 17, 1886. Very soon after his arrival he bought forty acres of land in the San Gabriel valley, ten acres of which was a vineyard, which he operated for a short time. Selling out, he purchased a half (and later on the whole) interest in the California Vinegar and Pickle Works, with which he was connected until 1895, when he sold out. Embarking then in business as a real-estate agent and notary public, he rented an office at No. 139 North Spring street, where he was located a few months. In 1887 he had purchased the corner of Fifty-first and South Main streets, making his home there until January, 1902, during which time he engaged in horticultural pursuits on a small scale. In the month and year just mentioned he sold the property, although he continued his residence there for two years longer. In February, 1904, he removed to Burbank, where in 1894 he had purchased twelve acres. This he improved by erecting his beautiful residence and also set out vines and trees and has since made this village his home. In addition to caring for his vineyard and walnuts, he also has a valuable apiary, and as a bee raiser is meeting with excellent success.

In Switzerland, May, 1875, Mr. Schelling married Ursula Muller, and of their union five children have been born, of whom we mention the following: Oscar, educated in Switzerland and at the Los Angeles high school, is now foreman in the electric department of the Los Angeles City Electric Railway Company; Armin, also educated in his native country and at the Los Angeles high school, is bookkeeper in the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, at Los Angeles; Eugene, educated in Los Angeles, is now a street grading contractor in Los Angeles; and Minnie and Lucy are living at home. In politics Mr. Schelling is Independent, voting for the best men and measures. By a former marriage in Switzerland Mr. Schelling was united with Katherine Muller, who died in 1874, and by the union one son, Gottfried, was born. He received his preliminary education in his native country, and obtained his degree of M. D. in Los Angeles, where he was successfully employed as a physician until his death, in April, 1894. Both Mr. and Mrs. Schelling are consistent members of the German Evangelical Church of Los Angeles.

JOHN E. LOGAN. In 1887 John E. Logan came to California, and in the same year located in San Pedro, Los Angeles county, remaining in this locality for one year, after which he removed to Los Angeles and made that city his home until 1901, when he returned to San Pedro. Mr. Logan is a native of Newport, Vt., his birth occurring on his father's farm, December 25, 1865. His father, Martin C. Logan, engaged in farming in the Green Mountain state until his death, which occurred when his son was about nine years old. His wife, Mary A. (Golden) Logan, survives him and now makes her home in San Pedro. Of the seven daughters and one son born to her, all but one daughter are now living.

Until attaining the age of nineteen years John E. Logan remained on the paternal farm, receiving his education in the public and high school of Newport. He then engaged as brakeman on the Boston & Maine Railroad, being located at Lowell, Mass., from which position he was promoted to that of conductor after one year. He performed the duties of this position for two years, when he came to California, in San Pedro engaging with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for one year. Locating in Los Angeles he became a switchman and later engine foreman. Step by step he advanced to higher positions, becoming assistant yard-master and following this as night yard-master. His fidelity to duty and his loyalty to the interests of the company he was serving continued to bring him reward and in 1901 he was transferred to San Pedro, where he became master of the yard which was just at that time established, as up to that time all work had been done by the road crew. The business has continued to grow, the number of switch engines being increased from one to four in the four years in which the yard has been established.

In addition to his railroad interests Mr. Logan has also become identified with real estate operations in this city, now owning a home on Ninth street, near Palos Verdes, presided over by his wife, formerly Lena Schlenker, a native of Des Moines, Iowa, whom he married in Los Angeles. They are the parents of two children, Helen M. and Jack. Fraternally Mr. Logan is a charter member of the Elks Lodge of this place; was made a Mason in San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M., and belongs to Los Angeles Division No. 111, O. R. C., and Los Angeles Lodge No. 2, K. O. T. M. Politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party.

VICTOR MOLLE. Since coming to California Victor Molle has acquired a success which has made him look upon this as the land of opportunities, and his adopted city, San Pedro, the place for a man to develop his native talent in many lines of business. He is a native of France, his birth having occurred in Haute-Garonne, near Toulouse, September 30, 1867. His father, Louis Molle, was also born in that locality, the son of Frank, the representative of an old and honored family. Both were blacksmiths by trade, which occupation they followed throughout their entire lives in that section. Louis Molle married Pugo Pujo, also a native of that locality, who survives her husband, being the mother of six children, of whom Victor Molle is the fourth in order of birth.

Reared in France Mr. Molle learned the blacksmith's trade under the instruction of his father, after which he traveled as a journeyman throughout various portions of his native country. Deciding to emigrate he came to America in 1889, locating at once in Los Angeles, Cal., where he engaged at his trade for the ensuing three years. In Tehachapi, Kern county, he was next engaged as a blacksmith until 1897, in which year he came to San Pedro, where he has since made his home. He began at the bottom in his work, renting a shop, and taking up the business in an energetic manner. With the passing of time he has built up a profitable trade, and has also become interested in the real estate of the city, building a residence for himself on Sixteenth street, between Mesa and Pacific.

In Tehachapi Mr. Molle married Mary Maritinto, a native of France, and they have one child, Euphrosia. Fraternally Mr. Molle is a member of the Knights of David, and in his political affiliations adheres to the principles of the Republican party.

GAWN JACKSON LINDSAY. As a machinist Gawn Jackson Lindsay has developed his native talent and is considered a man of exceptional ability in his line, his position now being superintendent of the E. K. Wood Planing mill at San Pedro. He is a native of Ireland, his birth having occurred in Belfast, April 25, 1862, the seventh in a family of nine children, of whom eight attained maturity and are now residents of the Pacific coast country. His father, George Mathews Lindsay, was born in County Down, of Scotch descent, and engaged as a farmer until his death. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which faith he had been reared. He was survived by his wife, Alice, also a native of County Down, but of English descent, whose death occurred in San Francisco in December, 1903.

Reared on the farm in County Down until he was thirteen years old, Gawn Jackson Lindsay received his preliminary education in the public school in the vicinity of his home. He was then sent to London, England, where he was apprenticed to learn the trade of carpenter and builder. He remained in that city until 1880, when he came to California in Pasadena, Los Angeles county, engaging at his trade with two brothers, George and Charles, under the firm name of Lindsay Brothers. They then built a shop and three years later a planing mill, in which business they engaged for two and a half years, when it was destroyed by fire. In 1889, with his brother George he went to Redondo and built the first planing mill in that place, there carrying on business for five years. The death of his brother at this time left him alone in the work, when he built a feed mill and an electric light plant, furnishing light and power for Redondo for five years. He then sold out to the A. B. Steel & United Gas & Electric Light Company, after which he engaged in the foundry and machine business in Pomona, same county, in partnership with a Mr. Addison, under the firm name of Lindsay & Addison. They built up a fine business, which Mr. Lindsay managed successfully for two years. In April, 1904, he sold out and in Los Angeles accepted a position with the

E. K. Wood Lumber Company, serving first as superintendent of the mill in Los Angeles, and in January of the following year assuming the same position at San Pedro, where they then began the construction of the mill, which was opened in April of the same year.

Mr. Lindsay's home, which is in Los Angeles, is presided over by his wife, formerly Nellie Leonard, a native of England, whom he married in Pasadena. They are the parents of four children: Genevieve, Cecelia, George Mathews and Charles. Fraternally Mr. Lindsay was made a Mason in Redondo Lodge No. 328, on the 29th of November, 1900, and in religion is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

ALEXANDER OLSEN. An old citizen of San Pedro, Los Angeles county, and a man of liberality and enterprise, Alexander Olsen has assisted in the growth and upbuilding of this western country. Like many of the citizens whose best years have been spent in this section he is not a native of this country, but has brought with him to his western home the qualities which distinguish the best nations of the European countries. He was born in Carlstadlæn, Sweden, near Arvika, on the Byelven, June 1, 1850, the youngest of a family of five children and the only one in America of the four who are now living. His father, Ole Olsen, was born on the farm where he spent the ninety-one years of his life, while his mother, Annie (Person) Olsen, also a native of Sweden, died at the age of sixty-nine years.

Alexander Olsen was reared on the paternal farm and received an education in the common school in the vicinity of his home. He learned the bricklayer's trade under the instruction of an older brother, a contractor, with whom he worked until the spring of 1871, when he came to America. Landing in New York City, he continued west to Nevada, where he began work in the mines, and finally drifted north into the mines of Idaho, being located in Silver City. After one year he returned to Nevada and engaged in clerking and farming, improving three different farms in Star valley. He built irrigation ditches under great difficulties, but this proved a source of revenue to him. A sheepman, who owned two sections of land in that locality, offered him half of the property if he would bring water to it. He succeeded in the enterprise, after which he sold his property and bought land farther out. He built the ditch to this third piece of land and continued to improve it until February, 1882, when he sold out once more. These farms are still operated and are under the ditch irrigation which Mr. Olsen built. Following his last sale he went to Socorro, N. Mex., but after the brief stay of two months came on to California, passing through San Diego and coming on to Wilmington, Los Angeles county, in the spring of 1882. On the 10th of September he located in San Pedro, just about the time the town was laid out, and here entered the employ of John Swan. The following year he was able to purchase Mr. Swan's interest in the business, which he continued successfully for ten years. At the same time he purchased business and residence property and assisted materially in the development and upbuilding of the city. He is now one of the commercial factors of the place, being engaged with his son in the hardware business.

In Nevada Mr. Olsen married Emma McArthur, a native of Kansas, and a daughter of Daniel McArthur, who crossed the plains from Monroe county, Mich., and died at Humboldt, Nev. Mr. and Mrs. Olsen became the parents of the following children: C. Henry, proprietor of the Olsen Hardware Company, of San Pedro, located on Beacon street and pronounced one of the finest and most complete establishments of its kind in the city; Annie, wife of W. W. Speckler, of San Pedro; Roxie; Arthur and William, at home. Mr. Olsen is a Lutheran in religion, as were his parents, and fraternally is a charter member of San Pedro Lodge No. 126, K. P., in which he served as treasurer for four years. He has taken an interest in the affairs of the city, having served as a member of the board of trustees for one term.

JOSEPH F. BODWELL. Having by means of industry, wise management and judicious investment acquired a goodly share of this world's goods, Joseph F. Bodwell is now living retired from active labor, owning and occupying a well-improved ranch in Burbank, where he has an attractive home, it being situated on the Fernando road, about two miles south of the village. A native of Ohio, he was born, July 19, 1841, in Huron county, where, with the exception of ten years, from 1847 until 1857, when he lived with his parents in Wisconsin, he was brought up and educated.

As a boy and youth, Joseph F. Bodwell assisted his father in the various labors incidental to farm life, after which he learned the carpenter's trade. Going to Douglas county, Kans., in 1867, he lived there a number of years, following his chosen occupation the greater part of the time, although for six years he carried the United States mail. Coming to the Pacific coast in the spring of 1883, he spent a few months in Portland, Ore., after which he located in San Francisco, where he worked as a carpenter for two years. Proceeding then to Alaska, which at that time was a comparatively new and little known country, he worked as a millwright for the Treadwell Gold Mining Company, serving as foreman until 1901, and while thus employed made several trips to his California home. On one of these visits, in 1895, he purchased the ranch on which he now lives, located his family thereon, and in 1901 came here himself to reside permanently. His ranch contains fifteen acres, a large part of which is improved, having a vineyard of two acres, some small fruits, and the remainder devoted to the raising of alfalfa (a staple crop in this section), and grain. In the care of this property he now takes much pride and pleasure, and is continually adding to the excellent improvements already inaugurated.

While living in Ohio, Mr. Bodwell married Emma Barnum, and of the children born to their union five are living, namely: Grace, wife of Robert Brunson, of Nevada; Charles L., at home; Maude, wife of Charles Hill, of Chandler, Okla.; Catherine, wife of John Powers, of Franklin county, Kans.; and John L., of Burbank. Politically Mr. Bodwell is an active supporter of the principles of the Prohibition party, and religiously he and his family are members of the Holiness Church of Burbank, in which he is a deacon.

E. R. ERICKSON. In 1889 E. R. Erickson came to California and in the same year located in San Pedro, where he has since made his home. He is a native of Sweden, his birth having occurred near Fahlun, April 1, 1866, one of a family of three children, of whom another, Andrew, is also located in San Pedro. The father, Erick, a farmer in Sweden, died when his son E. R. was sixteen years old, being survived by his wife, who still makes her home in her native land. In the common schools of that country E. R. Erickson received an education, after which he worked on farms until his emigration to the United States. In Minneapolis, Minn., he learned the trade of butcher, serving an apprenticeship of two years. Following this he came to California and took up his residence in San Pedro. He first entered the employ of George Hinds and James Dodson, and finally worked for J. L. Griffin. In March, 1902, in parnership with Mr. Abbott, he bought out the market managed by Mr. Griffin and the two remained together until April, 1905, when Mr. Erickson became sole owner. The San Pedro market, of which he is proprietor, is one of the most extensive and thoroughly equipped in the city or surrounding country, having a large refrigerator capacity and other modern equipment. Mr. Erickson is carrying on a large business and is one of the commercial factors of the place.

In San Pedro Mr. Erickson married Christine Erickson, also a native of Fahlun, Sweden, who was brought to America when six years of age. They have had two children, only one of whom, Esther, is living. Fraternally Mr. Erickson is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and politically is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

JOHN VALLANDINGHAM FORD. In the days when Kentucky was attracting frontiersmen from the older commonwealth of Virginia the Ford family became established in the blue grass section, and from there Samuel Ford, a Kentuckian by birth and training, removed to the newer regions of Missouri. The tract of raw land, which he placed under cultivation, afterward was made the family homestead. With him from Kentucky came his family, including a son, Josiah P., who became a farmer in Missouri, and in 1850 crossed the plains to California with ox teams. An experience of two years in the mines did not prove profitable enough to induce him to remain, and he returned to his Missouri homestead. Next removing to Kansas he took up two hundred acres in Linn county, but later sold out and returned to Platte county, Missouri, where he died in 1887, at sixty years of age. Of southern blood and sentiment, he did not, however, believe in the institution of slavery, yet he loved the old south too much to take up arms against her during the war, hence he was placed in a position peculiarly trying. The respect in which he was held by all, whether of northern faith or southern views, alone removed him from suffering hardships and dangers. His wife, Minerva, was a daughter of John Estes, a pioneer of Platte county, Missouri, and she was born in that locality, but now resides at Redondo. In her family there are four daughters and two sons still living. One of her sons, Dee, enlisted in a California regiment at the opening of the Spanish-American war and died at the Presidio during the period of his service.

On the homestead, near Parkville, Platte county, Mo., John V. Ford was born March 21, 1863, and in neighboring schools he received a fair education. At the age of twenty-two years he came to California and secured employment on a ranch owned by the Los Angeles Farming and Milling Company, where he remained for ten years. On taking up farming for himself he spent a year near Compton, and in 1896 farmed near Redondo, after which he was similarly occupied at San Fernando, and in 1897 returned to the vicinity of Redondo, where now he cultivates a hay and grain farm, near Wiseburn. This ranch originally comprised four hundred and fifty acres, but he has sold a portion of it and contracted for the purchase of three hundred and twenty acres near the town of Tulare, in the great San Joaquin valley, being attracted there by the cheapness of the land and the fertility of the soil. On the latter ranch it is his intention to engage in more diversified farming, such as raising grain, fruit, alfalfa and also stock-raising. At this writing he owns twenty-five acres in the McDonald tract of the San Pedro ranch, and also owns a residence (erected by himself), at Ford's Crossing, on the Los Angeles & Redondo Railroad. After coming to Los Angeles county he married Miss Nettie May Howard, who was born, reared and educated in California, and is a member of the Redondo Congregational Church, and a devoted mother to their two daughters, Lucille and Mercy May.

FRANK KARR. Prominent among the active and capable lawyers of Los Angeles county is Frank Karr, a young man of culture and excellent mental attainments, who has already made for himself an honorable record in the legal profession, and is widely and favorably known. The family is of Scotch origin, the name, which was formerly spelled Kerr, having been anglicized to its present form. A native of Illinois, Mr. Karr was born February 18, 1875, in Heyworth, McLean county, a son of H. A. Karr, and grandson of Walter Karr, a pioneer settler of that place. He is distinguished not only for his own substantial qualities, but for the honored ancestry from which he is descended, the blood of patriots running in his veins.

Capt. John Karr, the great-grandfather of Mr. Karr, served as captain of a company in the Revolutionary war, taking an active part in the famous battle at Cowpens. He subsequently removed from Sussex county, N. J., to Ohio, settling in that state as a pioneer, but later in life he went to Illinois, where he died and was buried. The emigrant ancestor was a kinsman of Mary Queen of Scots, and, being obliged to flee his native land, came to America, locating in Sussex county, N. J.

Walter Karr was born and bred in Sussex county, N. J., and went with his parents to Hamilton county, Ohio, where he was for a number of years engaged in agricultural pursuits. Removing to Illinois, he settled as a pioneer in McLean county, and there followed his independent calling until his death, in 1879.

A native of Hamilton county, Ohio, H. A. Karr was but four years old when he was taken by his parents to Heyworth, Ill., to the very farm on which he has since resided, and in the improvement of which he assisted. He learned the trade of carpenter when a young man, and for a number of years carried on an extensive business as a contractor and builder. He is a man of influence in the community, and an active member of the Masonic fraternity. He married Martha Elizabeth Storey, who was born in Tennessee, a descendant of two of South Carolina's most prominent families, the Storeys and the Allens, her father, who died from injuries received in one of the engagements of the Civil war, having married a Miss Allen. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Karr, four children were born, namely: Grant, principal of the Normal school in New York City; Lyon, a banker at Eureka, Ill.; Mary, an actress, known on the stage by her maiden name, Mary Karr, and the wife of Robert McDowell, of New York City; and Frank, the subject of this sketch.

Completing his early education at the State Normal school at Normal, Ill., Frank Karr was subsequently employed in teaching for five years, being for four years employed in McLean county, and for one year as principal of the Garfield school at Pekin, Ill. In the fall of 1898 he entered the law department of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, and having taken the prescribed course of study was admitted to the bar in June, 1901. Locating in San Pedro in November, 1901, he immediately entered upon the duties of his profession, and so rapid and honorable was his advance that he soon won recognition as a young man of ability and promise. For four years he was city attorney, to which position he was appointed in May, 1902. He enjoys a large and lucrative practice.

In Los Angeles, in 1903, Mr. Karr married Dora Van Ordstrand, a native of McLean county, Ill., and they have one child, Frank Randolph. Politically Mr. Karr is a Democrat. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Illinois, joining Heyworth Lodge No. 251, from which he demitted, and is now a member of San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M.; of San Pedro Chapter No. 89, R. A. M.; of San Pedro Chapter, O. E. S.; and of San Pedro Lodge No. 966, B. P. O. E. Mrs. Karr is a woman of culture and refinement, and a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church.

EDWARD H. BAUTZER. The postmaster of San Pedro, Los Angeles county, Edward H. Bautzer, is a young man of ability and energy who bids fair to take rank with the successful men of this section. He is a native of Missouri, his birth having occurred in Linn, Osage county, January 31, 1876. His father, Edward F. Bautzer, a native of Wiesbaden, Germany, came to America when a young man and located in the state of Missouri. In Osage county he held the position of county recorder for twenty years, and since that time he has been engaged in the newspaper business in St. Louis, editing the Squib. In Missouri he married Nannie Benson, a native of Linn, that state, and the descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestry whose first emigrant located in the eastern states during the colonial period of our history. They became the parents of three children, all of whom are living, a brother, Paul, also being in San Pedro.

Edward H. Bautzer was reared in Linn, where he attended the public and high schools in pursuit of a preliminary education, after which he entered the University of Missouri at Columbia, from which institution he was graduated in 1893 from the normal course. Following this he engaged in teaching for one year and was then employed by the government in the engineering department of the Missouri river commission. For four years he engaged as payroll clerk for R. A. Crawford, when he came to California and located at once in San Pedro and became proprietor of the San Pedro News Company, while he at the same time engaged as reporter for the Los Angeles Times. In March, 1902, he was appointed postmaster of this office by President Roosevelt, the receipts at that time being about $4,000, since which time they have more than doubled.

Mr. Bautzer has also become interested in the real estate of San Pedro and is a motive power in the upbuilding of the place, being a member of the Chamber of Commerce. As a Republican he seeks to advance the principles he endorses. In fraternal relations he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and is a charter member of San Pedro Lodge No. 966, B. P. O. E., of which he is esteemed lecturing knight.

ROBERT M. LYNN, one of the old residents of Long Beach, is responsible for the first daily paper of the city, The Eye, which was established by him and published as a weekly, a well-edited, clean sheet, elegant in workmanship and in every way a credit to its manager. Mr. Lynn inherited his strong, literary traits of character, his forefathers being founders of many enterprises in the pioneer days of Kentucky, from which state the paternal grandfather removed to Indiana and became a factor in its upbuilding. His father, E. K. Lynn, a native of Kentucky, engaged in the Presbyterian ministry in Indiana after graduating from Hanover College, in his native state. About 1857 he removed to Allen county, Kans., and in the town of Iola built the first church, and later assisted materially in the establishment of colleges and schools throughout the entire state. He was a man of strong personality, highest integrity and honest purposes, and let nothing come between him and the fulfillment of his highest aim for the betterment of mankind. His death occurred in Kansas, as did that also of his wife, formerly Harriett B. Briggs, a native of Massachusetts and the daughter of George Briggs, a native of the same state but for many years a contractor and builder in Madison, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Lynn became the parents of eight children, two of whom are now surviving. Samuel, a participant in the Civil war in a Kansas regiment, now residing in Butler, Mo., and Robert M., of Long Beach, Cal.

Born in New Philadelphia, Ind., October 19, 1849, Robert M. Lynn received his education in the schools of Indiana, Illinois and Kansas, completing his schooldays in Iola. In the office of the Iola Register he learned the trade of printer and this work has occupied his attention for the greater part of his manhood years. He was employed for a time following his mastery of the trade on a Lyndon (Kans.) paper and in the same state later worked for the Ottawa Daily. He then employed his accumulated means in studying music, for which he had strong tastes and talent, entering a conservatory at Madison, Ind., and completing the course with honors. He then followed teaching of music for a time, eventually returning to his trade, however, in assuming charge of the Greenfield (Ind.) Republican; later he went to Franklin, Ind., and assisted in the publication of the Daily Star, remaining so occupied until 1894, when his decision to change his location resulted in his removal to Long Beach, where he has ever since resided.

Long Beach was then a very small beginning of what is now the city of that name, and only to a far-seeing judgment did the future offer returns for efforts put forth here. On the corner of Second and Pine streets Mr. Lynn put up a small building, 12x20 feet in dimensions, and established a weekly paper, known as The Eye, which was later published as a weekly and daily and continued successfully for eighteen months. For a time following his discontinuance of this publication he engaged as ticket agent for the Salt Lake Railroad Company, then was engaged in job printing, and later published the One-Horse Printer, a weekly which grew to a circulation of one thousand per week. In the meantime he had gradually assumed a place of importance among the representative men of Long Beach, and in 1902 he was honored with the election on the Republican ticket to the office of constable of Long Beach township for a term of four years. He also served as deputy city marshal under Marshal Williams, and in this public capacity proved his fitness for official duty, bringing to bear in the discharge of his work the strong integrity and honorable purpose which was his by inheritance. As a member of the board of education during the erection of the magnificent high school building on American avenue he proved a practical promoter of the good work.

In 1906 Mr. Lynn began a real estate enterprise which has been successful when viewed in the light of financial returns, and has evidenced his faith in the future of Long Beach by the erection of a comfortable home at No. 243 Locust street. In Whiteland, Ind., he married Miss Carrie C. Covert, a daughter of Dr. G. W. Covert, an early settler of Long Beach, and born of this union is one daughter, Theta Mae, who has inherited the musical talent of her father and has cultivated her talents to a high degree, not only having graduated from a conservatory in this country, but has also studied in Paris. Mr. Lynn is associated fraternally with the Knights of Pythias, having been a member of this organization for twenty-five years, and is now serving as prelate. He belongs also to the Uniformed Rank, Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Fraternal Aid Society, and in religion is active in the Presbyterian Church, which denomination has held his loyal allegiance throughout his entire life since manhood. He has served efficiently as musical director of the Presbyterian Church of Long Beach. He is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, but although strong in his allegiance does not allow this to prevent him giving his strongest support to men and measures best calculated in his opinion to advance the general welfare. Above all he is a patriotic and loyal citizen, intent upon the general good of the community, the city and the state which he has made his by adoption.

MATTHEW JONES AUSTIN. The family represented by this retired old settler of Pomona traces its lineage back to England, where its members were well known prior to the days of the Revolution. With convictions and independence of thought that would no longer brook adherence to the Established church, the great-grandfather left the home of his forefathers and established the family in America, locating in Virginia. All of his seven sturdy sons participated in the Revolutionary war, among the number being the grandfather, John Austin, who became a well-known and wealthy planter in Louisa county, Va. He in turn reared a stalwart family who were destined to shed even more lustre upon the family name. One of the sons of this Revolutionary soldier, David Shelton Austin, born on the home plantation in Louisa county thirty miles east of Richmond, entered the second war with England with no less ardor, and throughout his service in that conflict he was stationed at Norfolk, Va. With the return of peace he resumed agricultural affairs in Louisa county, but subsequently removed to the adjoining state of Tennessee, locating near Gallatin, Sumner county. There his death occurred, resulting from a runaway accident. In his young manhood he had married Mary Lowrey, like himself a native of old Virginia, and the daughter of Overton Lowrey. The latter was also a native of the same state, but some time after the birth of his daughter established his home near Nashville, Tenn., passing his entire life thereafter in that vicinity. Ten children were born to David S. and Mary (Lowrey) Austin, eight of whom grew to maturity, and of these seven were sons. Among the gold-seekers who crossed the plains in 1849 none set out with more enthusiasm than did five of the aforementioned sons, John O., Brice, A. W., T. J. and M. J.

At this time Matthew J. Austin was a youth of nineteen years, his birth having occurred on the old family homestead in Louisa county, Va. When he was two years old the family home was transferred to Tennessee, and near Gallatin, Sumner county, he was reared and educated. The death of his father when he was a lad of twelve years brought another change into his life. For a time thereafter he attended a subscription school, and later apprenticed himself to learn the blacksmith's trade in Russellville, Ky. When he was seventeen years old he was a full-fledged blacksmith and with this asset he established himself in business in Independence, Mo., following it there for two years. The rumors of the finding of gold in California put a quietus upon all other ambitions which he might have had, and all thought and surplus means were devoted to preparation for crossing the plains with his four brothers. With wagons drawn by four ox-teams they left Independence, Mo., May 10, 1849, following the Platte and Sweetwater routes to South pass, and from there by the Carson route to Sacramento, the journey consuming just five months. At Carson sink Matthew and two of his brothers abandoned the wagons and made the rest of the way on foot, reaching Sacramento ahead of the two other brothers. In order to replenish their depleted finances they worked at cutting hay for a number of days on the Sacramento river, hauling it to Sacramento, where it readily brought them $40 per ton. This good luck enabled them to lay in a supply of provisions and necessities preparatory to going to American bar, where they mined with excellent results, making on an average of one ounce per day. During the latter part of the winter of 1849-50 they went to Georgetown by way of Cañon creek, mining there with varying degrees of success until August of 1850. Later they went to San Francisco and boarded a boat for Panama, and after crossing the isthmus boarded another boat which landed then in New Orleans. By way of the Mississippi and Red rivers they made their way to Bonham, Fannin county, Tex., where each purchased land and engaged in farming. There Matthew J. bought eleven hundred acres of land upon which he carried on farming and stock-raising for three years, or until his second removal to California in 1853. Following the Platte route from Missouri, as he had done on the journey four years previously, he located this time near Yreka, Siskiyou county, where he remained for ten years engaged in mining. During this time the Modoc Indians gave evidence of their resentment of the invasion of the white man, and in the disturbances which followed Mr. Austin took a prominent part, serving as lieutenant of Company A, under Gen. John D. Cosby.

From Siskiyou county Mr. Austin subsequently went to Sonoma county and opened a copper mine, but the venture proved a failure and in 1865 he went to Virginia City, Nev., where until 1870 he carried on mining and also worked as an engineer. The latter year found him located once more on his farm in Texas, continuing farming there for a number of years, besides which he erected a building in Bonham. While there, too, he invented and patented a ditching machine, used for tile and fence ditching, and for the purpose of manufacturing this machine he removed to Danville, Ill. The Austin ditching machine was well received wherever introduced and proved a boon throughout Illinois, greatly facilitating the laying of drain tile. In 1886 Mr. Austin discontinued the manufacturing business in Illinois and the same year came to California, and for one year worked as a blacksmith in the Baker foundry and machine shop in Los Angeles. His identification with Pomona dates from the following year, when he bought ten acres of the Phillips tract, which was then a barley field, and set it out to deciduous fruits. Subsequently he substituted alfalfa and walnuts and now has a fine ranch devoted entirely to these commodities. He also erected the family residence on South Ellen street.

Mr. Austin's home is presided over by his wife, who was formerly Miss Annie Layton, a native of Vermilion county, Ill., and to whom he was married in Danville in 1881. Two children have blessed their marriage, William Shelton, who is an electician in San Pedro, and Grace, now the wife of W. B. Binkley, of Los Angeles. Fraternally Mr. Austin is an Odd Fellow, and politically he is a Democrat of the Jeffersonian type. With his wife he is a member of the Church of Christ, in which he is serving as elder, and both exemplify in their daily living the principles of the religion which they profess.

J. ROSS MALKIM. At first glance the name Malkim does not suggest the good old Scotch cognomen of Malcolm, but such was the spelling of the patronymic down to the time of the great-grandfather of our subject. For some reason not known to the writer the grandfather changed the spelling to its present form, and succeeding generations have adhered to the reformed usage. For many years the name was well known in Oakland county, Mich., which was the birthplace of the father, Crawford Malkim, and also of the mother, Susan Case. For many years the Case family was identified with the east, the immigrating ancestor coming from Germany and settling in New York state, and Grandfather Case was the first to represent the family in the west. He came to Los Angeles in 1887 and from then until his death was engaged in the real estate business in that city. Crawford Malkim also engaged in the same business in Los Angeles until his death.

The only child born to his parents, J. Ross Malkim is a native of Michigan, born near Pontiac, Oakland county, March 28, 1879. He was about eight years old at the time his parents came to California and settled in Los Angeles, and as he was then of school age entered at once upon his studies in that city. He remained at home until reaching his eighteenth year, having by this time determined to learn the trade of electrician and stage mechanism. It was for this purpose that he went to San Francisco in 1898, and as soon as he was competent he was made theatrical property man and electrician at Fisher's theatre in that city. The destruction of San Francisco by earthquake and fire on the morning of April 18, 1906, razed the Fisher theatre among hundreds of other buildings, and thus Mr. Malkim was thrown out of employment. In less than a month, May 10, he was located in Long Beach as proprietor of the Tally-Ho livery stable at No. 337 East Fourth street, having purchased the business from L. H. Moore. The stable, which has a frontage of sixty feet and a depth of one hundred and fifty feet, furnishes accommodation for boarding horses as well as the animals kept for hire. Feed of all kinds is also kept for sale, and all in all Mr. Malkim has one of the largest and best-patronized livery stables in Long Beach.

In Salinas, Monterey county, Cal., Mr. Mal-

kim was married to Miss Grace Munro, who was born in Hartford, Conn., the daughter of Wallace Munro. The latter was a native of Inverness, Scotland, while his wife, Catherine Thompson, was born in Glasgow, their marriage occurring in the latter city. Upon immigrating to the United States Mr. Munro settled in Connecticut, whence after some years he went to Chicago, Ill., where for a time he worked as an electrician. During the year 1893 he came to California and settled in San Francisco, from which city he traveled as salesman for a time, but at the close of the season of 1905-1906 was advance man with the Lewis James Company. Mr. and Mrs. Munro became the parents of two children, the only one living being Mrs. Malkim, who was educated in San Francisco. Mrs. Malkim is a member of Trinity Episcopal Church of San Francisco, in which city both Mr. and Mrs. Malkim are well known. He is a member of the Theatrical Mechanical Association and is trustee of the organization in San Francisco.

REV. HENRY WHITE JONES. The influence which emanates from a life of self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of the Christian religion is beyond human calculation, but the records of Heaven will show multitudes of souls turned thitherward by the spoken and written words of one filled with the Spirit. Though he has passed from earth the memory of the noble life of Rev. Henry W. Jones will ever remain to refresh and encourage those who were brought under his influence during the long years of his ministry in the Congregational Church. Though by reason of his professional affiliations his time and thought were devoted largely to the upbuilding of his denomination, yet his mind was never tinged by narrowness of views. With a broad outlook upon mankind and the destiny of the human race, he aimed within the chosen sphere of religious and intellectual activity to make the world better for his presence therein. To him religion was a harmonious rounding of the soul, the perfect indwelling of the spirit of love and truth, the unconscious imitation of Christ in daily acts and solitary thoughts. To such as he the ministry of the Gospel was a priceless privilege.

Among the sturdy band of Mayflower immigrants who came to our shores in 1620 was one Elder White Jones, from whom Rev. Henry White Jones was descended in the eighth generation. He was born in Southampton, Mass., October 17, 1830, the son of Bela B. and Sabina Jones, they also being natives of the Bay state. The father, who was by profession a practicing physician, removed from the east and established himself for practice in Hudson, Lenawee county, Mich., where his death occurred. The mother was born in Whately, Mass.

As have so many of the brightest lights in both the business and professional realms of activity, Rev. H. W. Jones had to work out his own financial problem. He was given a fair start in the primary and public schools in both Southampton, Mass., and Hudson, Mich., but all of his later training was gained as the result of his own labors in the line of telegraphy. He is credited with the establishment of the first telegraph connection between Hudson, Mich., and Chicago and southern Illinois. When he had accumulated sufficient means to warrant him in again taking up his studies he entered Monson (Mass.) Academy as a student and graduated from that institution in 1853. Subsequently taking a course in Amherst College, he graduated therefrom in 1857, and received his diploma from East Windsor Seminary (now Hartford Seminary) in 1860. In the meantime, however, in 1858, he had received his license to preach by the Michigan Association, although it was not until two years afterward that he entered regularly into the duties for which he had been fitting himself. During the years from 1860 until 1866 he supplied the pulpit of the Congregational Church in Hadlyme, Conn., and thereafter became associated with the Christian Commission board, from May 24, 1866, until June 4, 1871, serving in Hingham, Mass., from July 6, 1871, to June 17, 1874, in Swampscott, Mass., and from October 14, 1875, to October 8, 1885, in St. Johnsbury, Vt. With a record of over a quarter of a century of self sacrificing labor to his credit in the east he came to the Pacific coast in 1885, and from October 14 of that year until October 21, 1890, he filled the pulpit of the Congregational Church at Vacaville, Cal. From June, 1891, until July of 1893, he supplied pulpits throughout Southern California without holding any regular charge, and thereafter, from September 10, 1893, until February 23, 1896, he ministered to the spiritual needs of the congregation in Claremont. From the latter date until his death, February 14, 1904, he lived retired from active work in the ministry, though at no time did his influence for good cease. His example of high and noble living will ever be a benediction to those who came under his influence, and many there are who have cause to remember his many helpful acts in time of need. Large-hearted generosity was one of his most dominant characteristics, which he exercised to no better advantage, perhaps, than in assisting struggling young men to gain their ecclesiastical training.

Rev. H. W. Jones was first married in Windham, Conn., September 2, 1860, to Isabella Fanny Foster, the daughter of Sherlock and Abigail Gay (Bradford) Foster. Mrs. Jones died in Hingham, Mass., in 1867, leaving one son, H. Foster Jones, who graduated from Amherst College and is now professor of English in Emporia (Kans.) College. Mr. Jones' second marriage occurred in Grand Haven, Mich., December 25, 1872, and united him with Hannah E. Ferry was a native of Granby, Mass. He graddaughter of Rev. William M. and Amanda (White) Ferry, the latter a daughter of Thomas White. A remote ancestor, John White, was at one time lord mayor of London. William M. Ferry was a native of Granby, Masss. He graduated from Union College in New York and also from New Brunswick (N. J.) Seminary. His first ministerial work was among the Indians of Mackinac Island, from there in November, 1834, going to Grand Haven, Mich., where he served the congregation gratuitously until it was able to keep the pastor. In later years he engaged in the general merchandise and lumber business there, and there he and his wife died at advanced ages. Mrs. Jones' brother, Thomas White Ferry, was at one time president of the United States senate. During his early life Mr. Jones was a supporter of Republican principles, but in his later years he became a Prohibitionist. A woman of fine intellectual attainments, and a great reader and student, Mrs. Jones was indeed a helpmate to her husband.

JOHN JOHNSTON. Prominent among the pioneer settlers of California is John Johnston, who came to the state soon after the discovery of gold and has since been a respected and valued citizen in the various communities in which he has been located in business. In common with other pioneers he has experienced all the ups and downs of life in a new country and has watched with keen interest its transformation into one of the finest spots on the continent. For almost a quarter of a century he has made his home in Pomona, where at one time he conducted a large and lucrative hardware business, but is now retired from active business, finding his time sufficiently occupied in looking after the property which he has accumulated from time to time.

Mr. Johnston is of Irish birth and parentage, born in Comber, county Down, October 14, 1829, the youngest of four children born to his parents, George Washington and Sarah (Moore) Johnston, born in Lurgan, county Armagh, and Downpatrick, county Down, respectively, and both also were of Scotch descent. The father carried on a large distillery in Comber, and throughout his life remained in Ireland, as did also his wife, the latter passing away in Comber. The eldest of their four children, George, came to the United States one year prior to the finding of gold in California, and when he finally came to the state, in 1852, he was not lured into the gold fields; his tastes being rather in the channel of mechanics, he became well known as an inventor, his name being perpetuated in what is known as Johnston's concentrator, an apparatus employed in separating ore from the rock; he is now associated with the Risdon Iron Works in San Francisco. Peter Johnston also came to the United States in 1848, and like his brother George came to California in 1852; for a time he carried on a hardware business in Grass Valley, Nevada county, this state, was subsequently president of the Nevada County Narrow Gauge Railroad, but is now living retired in Grass Valley; the next child in the parental family, Eliza, still resides in the Emerald Isle.

The youngest child in his parents' family, John Johnston was given a good education in a private school in his native country, and when fifteen years old was apprenticed to learn the hardware and grocery business. It was with the knowledge of both of these substantial trades that he set sail for the new world when he was twenty-one years of age, in 1850, going direct to Farmington, Van Buren county, Iowa, where both of his older brothers were located, and there the three were engaged in the grocery business for the following two years. With the proceeds of the sale of their stock they purchased horse teams and other essentials preparatory for a trip to the coast, and between Council Bluffs and Placerville, the journey consumed just eighty days. From Placerville George and John went to Marysville and under the firm name of Johnston Brothers started a grocery business under conditions which seemed very favorable, but the location did not prove as desirable as they had expected and in 1853 they removed their stock to Grass Valley. Disaster in the form of fire overtook them in that place and they lost all of their investment. After this misfortune John mined for two years, but at the end of that time once more resumed mercantile life and from 1856 until 1883 was engaged in the grocery business in Grass Valley. During his life in that place he was looked upon as one of the town's stalwart citizens, and was one of the promoters and builders of the Nevada County Narrow Gauge Railroad. Upon disposing of his mercantile interests in Grass Valley in 1883 Mr. Johnston came to Pomona and established himself in the hardware business in a brick building which he erected for the purpose at the corner of Ellen and Second streets. Three years later, however, he disposed of his stock and thereafter spent one year in San Francisco, at the end of that time returning once more to Pomona, where he has since resided continuously. From time to time he has accumulated considerable property in Pomona, and aside from the store building which he erected for his own use as a hardware store in 1883, also erected two other stores on Second street, although he has since disposed of one of them. He has also built a number of residences, and has also included in his landed possessions a number of choice fruit ranches, his holdings now, however, comprising property in the city only.

In Grass Valley Mr. Johnston was married to Miss Annie Taylor, who though born in Ireland was reared in Kentucky and in 1863 came to California by way of Panama. In his religious training Mr. Johnston was reared in the faith of the Episcopal Church and throughout his life he has adhered to his early teachings. Politically he is a Republican, and at one time he was an active Mason, having joined the order in Grass Valley, but he is now demitted.

JOSE M. GONZALEZ. As a pioneer settler and one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Temecula Jose M. Gonzalez has a wide and favorable acquaintance throughout Riverside and San Diego counties. He owns and occupies a sixty-acre ranch two miles north of Temecula, where he also rents land and is engaged in the raising of beef cattle. On December 8, 1834, he was born in Cadiz, Spain, the son of J. M. and Candelaria (Pery) Gonzalez, both parents being natives of Spain. The father's death occurred in that country, but the mother came to the United States later and made her home in Nevada, where she died at the advanced age of ninety-two years.

The recipient of a good education in his native country, Mr. Gonzalez remained there until 1868, when he came to the United States and located in California in the San Joaquin valley. In 1874 he removed to the place where he now resides and bought a part of an old grant upon which he built his present home—a modern adobe house. In 1884, when this part of Riverside county was still embraced within the boundaries of San Diego, Mr. Gonzalez was appointed deputy assessor and with the exception of one term has continuously filled that office until the present time. Politically he is a leading man in the Republican ranks and is now serving his county as deputy clerk. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

By his marriage in Temecula in 1876, Mr. Gonzalez was united with Miss Grace Street, a native of the southern part of England, and of this union two children were born: Ormiston is married and lives in Palms, Los Angeles county; and Isabell is the wife of A. B. Burnett, of this place.

ALEXANDER M. HAM. By reason of its location in the midst of a prosperous and densely-populated region the city of San Bernardino offers excellent advantages for mercantile enterprises. Among its merchants to whose energy and sagacious judgment the commercial development of the place may be credited, mention belongs to Alexander M. Ham, for more than twenty years a progressive and influential business man of the city. Dating his residence here from November, 1882, he dates his identification with the grocery business from a period immediately following his settlement in the town. For a time he was associated with his brother, H. H., under the firm title of Ham Brothers, but after several years in that connection he purchased his brother's interest, and has since carried on a large trade alone.

Prior to removing to Southern California Mr. Ham made his home in Missouri, where he was born in Benton county, near Warsaw, September 19, 1848. The family is of southern lineage. His father, Harrison Howard Ham, was a native of Kentucky, whence he removed to Missouri as early as 1818 and devoted his attention to transforming a tract of raw land into a cultivated farm. For years he was successful as a farmer and his place was stocked with horses, cattle and mules of the best breeds. Throughout the remainder of his life he continued interested in and identified with agricultural pursuits, and made his home on the farm which he had transformed from the primeval condition of nature. During early manhood he married Lucy Frances Parazetta, who was born in Virginia and at an early age, in 1818, removed to Missouri in company with her parents, with whom she remained until her marriage. Eleven children were born of their union. Of these five sons and four daughters attained years of maturity. Of the sons, two are now living in Missouri, one in Kansas and two in California.

At an early age Alexander M. Ham became familiar with every detail of farm work and was instructed in the occupation, so that he was prepared for independent work. After having acquired a common school education, he left school when in his eighteenth year and thereafter assisted his father in the cultivation of the home farm. Subsequently he began independent operations in raising, buying and selling cattle and horses. On disposing of his interests in Missouri he came to California during the latter part of the year 1882 and settled in San Bernardino, where since he has built up a large grocery business. In addition to owning the store of which he is proprietor, he owns a fruit farm of forty acres, ten of which are in oranges, while the balance is devoted to other products. He is also a stockholder and director in the San Bernardino County Savings Bank.

Stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party, Mr. Ham is recognized as one of the active local workers of that organization, and has done much to promote party success in the locality. For four years he served as a trustee of the city and in other ways he has proved himself interested in the welfare of the town, as well as a forceful contributor to its commercial development. When in his twenty-eighth year he married Lenora Parazetta, of Henry county, Mo., a daughter of Thomas Parazetta. Three children came to bless their union, namely: J. Garfield, who is now a student in the University of Southern California; Frances, at home; and Howard, now attending the Harvard School in Los Angeles.

ERNEST F. FELLOWS. The business interests of Long Beach have an enterprising representative in E. F. Fellows, who has been located in this city since December, 1902, engaged in the grocery business at No. 120-122 West Second street. Mr. Fellows is a native of Newark, Wayne county, N. Y., being the second in a family of two sons and one daughter, of whom he is the only one now living. His father, Edgar B. Fellows, is also a native of the Empire state, where he is now making his home retired from the active cares of life. He is a very prominent man in Monroe county, having served for twelve or fifteen years as deputy sheriff. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served over a year in the One Hundred and Fifteenth New York Volunteer Infantry. His wife, formerly Samantha A. Osborne, a native of Wayne county, N. Y., died in her native state.

E. F. Fellows received his education in the public schools of Monroe county, N. Y., where he was reared from early childhood, after which he attended the Brockport Normal and also took a commercial course in Oberlin, Ohio. Following his business training he engaged in the grocery business in Brockport in 1877 and continued successfully in that location for sixteen years. On account of his health he gave up his business and coming to California located in Pomona, where he purchased a fruit ranch of citrus and deciduous trees. Two years later he sold and entered the employ of the Chino Valley Beet Sugar Company in the capacity of bookkeeper, in which position he continued for two years, when, in January, 1897, he came to Los Angeles and with a partner established a retail grocery business at the corner of Pico and Trenton streets. The new firm met with success in their enterprise and remained in that location for six years. In June, 1902, Mr. Fellows sold out his interests and in December of the same year came to Long Beach and purchased his present grocery business, located at No. 120-122 West Second street, where he has since built up an extensive and lucrative custom, enlarging his stock and in many ways improving the business. He has also taken an active interest in the real-estate development of Long Beach and has invested in several lots.

In Brockport, N. Y., Mr. Fellows was united in marriage with Jennie R. Hoyt, a native of that state, and they have one daughter, Maud, the wife of W. W. Martin of Pasadena. In his fraternal relations Mr. Fellows is a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M. Politically he is a Republican and in religion belongs to the First Methodist Episcopal Church. At the organization of the Sons of Veterans in New York he was elected captain of Milo Stork Camp No. 30, elected to major at the state encampment and the following year, 1888, elected colonel of the state division, taking a very active interest in the organization.

BLAS OLIVARES. Another of the residents of Sherman who are descended from a long line of Spanish antecedents is Blas Olivares, who was born in Los Angeles county in 1850, this also being the birthplace of his father, Esmerorgildo Olivares. On the ranch which he ran for a number of years in this county his earth life came to a close in 1851, when his son Blas was still a child in arms. He was the only child born to his mother, who before her marriage was Cornelia Lopez.

At the age of nineteen years Blas Olivares formed domestic ties by his marriage with Tomasa Toromio, and three children were the result of this union, named in order of birth, as follows: Phillip, Teofilo and Cornelia. Some time after the death of his first wife Mr. Olivares was united with Delia Limares, who was also born in Los Angeles county, in 1875, she being the only child born to her mother, who in maidenhood was Mary Morano. Michael Limares was also a native of the Golden state, and has known no other home. During his earlier years he obtained a grant of land from the Spanish government which became well known as the Limares rancho, and was located not far from Pomona. In addition to this property he also owned eight acres in Colegrove, but of late years he has disposed of all of his property and is now making his home with Mr. Olivares, the subject of this sketch.

Mrs. Delia Olivares died in Colegrove in 1899, leaving two children, Susie and Blas, since which time Mr. Olivares has made his home in Sherman, where he owns considerable valuable property.

ROBERT STRATHEARN. Preceded by nearly a quarter of a century as an architect and builder in the state of Montana, Mr. Strathearn came to Long Beach in 1905, and has already made a name and place for himself in his adopted city, regardless of his former accomplishments. A direct descendant of Scotch antecedents, he was born in Milwaukee, Wis., a son of William and Janet (Merrie) Strathearn, both natives of Ayrshire, Scotland. By trade William Strathearn was a builder, having mastered it in his native country, and after coming to the new world added contracting, following this dual occupation in Milwaukee, Wis., for many years. Not only in that city, but throughout Southern Wisconsin there are many fine specimens of his handiwork to be seen in large and valuable structures erected during his residence there. To himself and wife (the latter of whom died in Wisconsin) seven children were born, six of whom are living and have been trained to lives of usefulness.

Next to the eldest of the children born to his parents, Robert Strathearn was born February 4, 1857, and was reared to manhood in his native city, Milwaukee, Wis. His educational advantages were perhaps above the average, for in addition to attending the city schools he was given a course in the Spencerian Business college of Milwaukee. Inheriting from his father a predilection for work at the carpenter's trade as soon as he was out of college he began work at the trade in earnest, having prior to this time worked side by side with his father at the bench for many years. The same association was resumed and continued after his college days were over, and in much of the work previously alluded to in Milwaukee and Southern Wisconsin as performed by his father he assisted. A temporary change of occupation entered into his life when he accepted a position as foreman of the Wisconsin Valley division of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, a position which he held for three years. Leaving his native state in 1881, he first went to Livingston, Mont., later to White Sulphur Springs, and still later to Helena, in all of which places he worked as a contractor and builder, and remaining in the latter city from 1884 until 1896. His ability does not seem to be limited to any special character of architecture, planning and executing with equal facility the modern business structure and the palatial residence. During the year last mentioned, 1896, he was engaged in building for the Golden Sunlight Company, a mining corporation of Montana, and the year following went to Whitehall, that state, where for three years he did contracting and building continuously, and during that time practically built up the town. His next removal found him in Sheridan, Madison county, Mont., there, as elsewhere, continuing to work at his trade and meeting with uniform success until 1905, the year in which his name became associated with Long Beach. His worth and ability as a thorough artisan was immediately recognized, and it goes without saying that he has had unprecedented success and has built up a large and influential business, controlling much of the work of that character in Long Beach and vicinity.

While in Montana Mr. Strathearn was married to Miss Helena Meier, a native of Dubuque, Iowa, and two children have been born to them, Olive Lois and Roland J. Mr. Strathearn's political sympathies bring him into association with others of like faith, being a strong supporter of the Republican party. His fraternal associations are no less stanch, and among his associates in the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Knights of the Maccabees he is universally esteemed and respected.

ALBERT M. COSTNER. One of the progressive dairymen of Norwalk, Los Angeles county, is Albert M. Costner, who has made a success in his work by careful and steady attention to business and has won the esteem of his fellow citizens through the display of personal characteristics of merit during his residence here. Mr. Costner is a native of Blount county, Tenn., his birth having occurred sixteen miles from Knoxville, January 4, 1861. His parents, Philip and Mary (Hays) Costner, were both natives of North Carolina; the father enlisted in the Union army during the Civil war, and was captured and confined in Libby prison, where his death was caused through exposure. He had three sons in the same struggle, one of whom lost his life by drowning while attempting to ford a river, another was crippled through a wound received in the service. The mother died in Tennessee at the advanced age of eighty-one years, leaving a large family, of the eight sons and two daughters born to her two sons, Albert M., of this review, and Spencer, of Stanislaus county, living in California.

Albert M. Costner received his early education in Blount county, Tenn., where he spent the first twenty-three years of his life. He came to California in 1884 and from here went to Washington, where he remained a short time. Returning to California, for one year he had charge of a large wheat ranch in Modesto, Stanislaus county, then came to Los Angeles county, and after a brief time went north to Stockton, where he took a commercial course in the Stockton Business College. Returning to Washington he engaged in ranch work for a time and also in the sawmill business. After a few years he returned to Los Angeles county and in the vicinity of Norwalk established his present dairy business. He was married here to Miss Bessie Smith, a daughter of James A. Smith, a pioneer of California, whose biography is given at length on another page of this volume. She was born in Illinois and brought to this state when only three months old. Mr. and Mrs. Costner have three children, Sybil, Sylva and Ford. Fraternally he is a member of Lodge No. 331, I. O. O. F., of Artesia; and in national politics is a Republican. He has lived upon his present ranch for sixteen years and has placed upon it all the improvements which make of it one of the valuable properties of this section, having built a large barn and stable for the care of his dairy herd, consisting of twelve milch cows. He has a fine artesian well which supplies an abundance of water. Besides his dairy interests and the cultivation of alfalfa and pasture of thirty-five acres he engages extensively in the raising of poultry.

WILLIAM ELLIOTT BEWLEY. The earliest records of the Bewley family trace their ancestry to French soil, whence the emigrating ancestor located the name in Cumberland, England, and finally in Mount Mellick, Queens county, Ireland. In the city of Dublin the name became prominent in commercial activity, Mungo B. being the owner of large spice mills there. His son, Thomas B., who was born near Dublin, was reared to young manhood in his native country and trained to a practical business life in his father's establishment. Seeking broader opportunities, he immigrated to America and in Cincinnati, Ohio, engaged as a grocer. Later he followed a similar occupation in Butlerville, Ind., where he was also occupied as a lumber manufacturer and an extensive farmer. His death, which occurred in 1892, removed from the community a man of strong worth, his connection with public affairs always resulting in a movement towards advancement. He was a member of the Society of Friends. He is survived by his wife, formerly Ann R. Thomas, a native of Elkton, Ind., a representative of an old southern family long established on American soil. She makes her home in Long Beach. Of the seven sons and two daughters born to her, James is a railroad man of Indiana; Edward is a farmer in Indiana; Thomas is engaged in the lumber business in Indiana; George is a real-estate dealer of Long Beach; Charles is located in Cincinnati, Ohio; William E. is the subject of this review; Frank is located in Los Angeles; Elizabeth is the wife of Elmer Allen of Whittier, Cal.; and Isabelle is the wife of L. J. Neill and located in Westfield, Ind.

William E. Bewley was born August 18, 1875, in Butlerville, Ind. He was educated in the public and high schools of his native city, and after completing the course went to Cincinnati, where, under the instruction of G. N. Merryweather of that city he learned the tea and coffee business. After four years he went to Denver and in 1897 entered the employ of Sanders Brothers as a salesman in the tea and coffee department. He filled this position successfully for four years, when he came to Southern California and in Long Beach established a grocery enterprise under the firm name of Bewley Brothers. In 1903 he accepted a position in Los Angeles with the Wells-Fargo Company Express, continuing with them for two years, when he resigned to engage in the real-estate business in Long Beach. He has since been so occupied, his office being located in the Wells-Fargo Company Express office at 429 Pine street. He has made a success of his enterprise thus far and bids fair to take a prominent place among the business men of this city.

Mr. Bewley has been twice married, his first union occurring in Denver, Miss Carrie Wilhelmi of that city becoming his wife. Her death occurred in Long Beach. In Los Angeles he was united in marriage with Miss Luzina Kellum, a native of Indiana. Both are members of the Society of Friends. Mr. Bewley is a Republican in politics, and although not seeking personal recognition gives his active support to the men and measures of his party.

JOHN B. B. DeLONG. The life which this narrative sketches began in the city of Los Angeles May 11, 1852, and closed in the county of the same name May 11, 1905. The DeLong family is of French extraction, Martin DeLong having been born and reared in France, whence he came to America in early manhood and settled in the then Spanish town of Los Angeles. After coming to this city he met and married Miss Josephine Alinez, a native of California, but of direct Spanish descent. The remaining days of his life were passed in this locality and here he passed away at the age of forty-nine years. Among his children was a son, John B. B., whose name introduces this article, and who remained a lifelong resident of the county of his birth. Educated principally in St. Vincent's school in Los Angeles, he gained a knowledge of both French and Spanish, and used these languages in preference to the English language, with which he was less familiar.

When a young man and ready to start out for himself, Mr. DeLong received from his mother thirty-two acres of bare, unimproved land, then of little value. Through his efforts the land was made attractive, the soil produced excellent crops of their various kinds, improvements were made that greatly added to the desirability of the place as a homestead, and all in all the tract was transformed from its original appearance to an abode of comfort and simple content. Immediately before settling on the ranch he was married, February 8, 1875, to Miss Julia Ruiz, who was born in Los Angeles January 25, 1855, and received a fair education in the Spanish tongue. Her father, Martin Ruiz, was a native of Chihuahua, Mexico, and a son of a Spanish gentleman who came to the new world as a representative of the king of Spain; her mother, who bore the maiden name of Florence Raildez, was a native of Los Angeles and a member of a Spanish family.

Always interested in educational matters, Mr. DeLong officiated as a school trustee for years and maintained a warm interest in the building of schools. Politically he stanchly supported Democratic principles, while in religion he was an earnest Roman Catholic, and all of his family adhered to the same faith. Fraternally he was a member of the Foresters of America. Surviving him are his widow and the following children: Conception, Mrs. Joseph Cyprien, of Fullerton, this state; Constance, widow of Joseph Toussau, also of Fullerton; Alexander, at home; Jossie, who married Joseph W. Reve, of Los Angeles, her wedding and that of her eldest sister being solemnized on the same day; Charles, who makes his home at Sherman, this state; Ortense, at home; Henry L., who is employed in Los Angeles; Vernie, Mary, Josephine and Barnaby, who remain with their mother on the home ranch.

MICHAEL OSMUND. But a brief time has elapsed since the death of Michael Osmund, one of the enterprising and progressive ranchers of the El Monte district, where he had located about fifteen years ago and began the accumulation of the property which placed him among the successful men of this section. He was a native of Norway, his birth having occurred in Farsund, where his parents were born and married. The father died there, and the mother later joined her son in Iowa, where her death occurred. He was educated in the common schools of Norway, after which he went to sea, finally locating permanently in America, where he first engaged as a lumberman. Later followed farming in Cass county, Iowa, for some time and then came to California in 1891. For a time he was located in Pasadena, but later purchased the property now owned by his widow, improving the land from a wild state, and building a comfortable residence and substantial barns and outbuildings. While he carried on general farming, he made a specialty of raising celery and walnuts. He was a Mason fraternally, being identified with Lexington Lodge No. 104, of El Monte, and also belonged to the Order of Eastern Star and the Foresters. He was a Lutheran in religion and in politics a stanch Democrat. His death occurred January 16, 1906, and removed from the community a worthy citizen, a helpful friend, and one who tried to live according to the Golden Rule.

Mr. Osmund was married in Farsund, Norway, June 12, 1895, to Miss Christine Hansen, a native of that place, and daughter of Ole and Martina Hansen, her father being a builder and farmer in Norway, where both parents still live. Since her husband's death Mrs. Osmund has continued to conduct the ranch, which she has managed profitably. She is the mother of four children, May, Carl, Albert and Myrtle. In religion she is a member of the Lutheran Church.

JOHN McCLURE. In those rich and fertile districts of Southern California that are devoted to the raising of luscious fruits there has been established no more important branch of horticulture than that relating to the growing of grapes. Prominent among the men who are doing much to promote this special branch of horticulture is John McClure, a well-known resident of Los Angeles, pleasantly located at No. 3425 Downey avenue. Energetic, progressive, and a man of excellent judgment and ability, he is one of the leading vineyardists of Los Angeles county, and the proprietor of an extensive winery. A native of Ireland, he was born in 1854, in County Antrim, the home of his ancestors for many generations.

Immigrating to this country in early manhood, Mr. McClure came to California in 1875, and for a brief time resided at Los Angeles. Looking about for a favorable location, he settled in the San Fernando valley, buying land at Roscoe, which was then in its infancy, there being but very few houses in the entire valley, and for a while was successfully employed in grape raising. Here he demonstrated that by careful cultivation grapes could be raised without irrigation and was the pioneer in this undertaking. He subsequently carried on an extensive business in the same line as junior member of the firm of Dillon, Kenealy & McClure, the partnership continuing until 1902. In 1896 Mr. McClure purchased a thousand acres of raw land, lying just north of the village of Burbank, and on it has made noteworthy improvements. He has erected a fine set of buildings, and has set out three hundred and fifty acres to wine grapes, having one of the most extensive and best bearing vineyards in the vicinity. He also carried on a substantial business at Dolgeville, where he had a winery, with an annual capacity of one hundred thousand gallons of sweet wine, and where he also manufactured some dry wines. On his ranch, which is known as the "Sunnyside Vineyard," he also raises bees on a large scale, having three apiaries, stocked with about four hundred hives. On this ranch he erected in 1906, concrete wine cellars, with about five thousand tons yearly capacity and a complete modern manufacturing plant.

In 1891 Mr. McClure married Nellie M. Quayle, a native of Michigan, and a resident of California since 1889. Of their union five children have been born, namely: Mona, John Q., Edmund H., Robert G. and Marcus A. Politically Mr. McClure is independent, voting according to the dictates of his conscience, regardless of party prejudice. Fraternally he is a member of Los Angeles Lodge No. 290, F. & A. M.

ROLLIE FRANK De GARMO. Located in the vicinity of El Monte, Mr. De Garmo is engaged in the raising of alfalfa and the conduct of a dairy, in both of which enterprises he has met with success. He was born in the vicinity of Girard, Crawford county, Kans., June 8, 1877; his father, Robert M. De Garmo, was born near Bloomington, Ill., and there enlisted in the Fifty-fifth Regiment Illinois Infantry for service in the Civil war, after which, in 1867, he became a pioneer of Kansas, and in Crawford county engaged in general farming and cattle-raising until his death in the fall of 1893. The paternal grandfather, Marion, was also born in Illinois, and served in the Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry; he was the representative of an old New York family of French origin. Robert M. De Garmo married Elizabeth Willey, a native of Illinois, who survives and now makes her home in Marshall, Mo. She was the mother of five children, three of whom are living, Rollie Frank De Garmo being the youngest and the only one in California. He was reared in Kansas on the paternal farm and educated in the public schools, completing his education in Baker University, at Baldwin, Kans., after which, in 1894, he came to California and in Pasadena attended Williams Commercial College, from which institution he was later graduated. He then engaged in ranching near San Gabriel, purchasing a five acre tract, and later purchasing fifty-three acres adjoining El Monte. This was semi-damp land, upon which he engaged in general farming, remaining so occupied until 1899, when he leased the ranch and located in Long Beach. He established a dairy at the corner of State street and American avenue, where he purchased forty acres of land, and conducted the same successfully for four years. Disposing of this business at the time mentioned, he then engaged in the dairy business in El Monte, and also raised alfalfa without irrigation. He has installed a pumping plant on his ranch and is occupied in the raising of cabbage and potatoes, in addition to his ranch renting forty acres adjoining his property.

In Savannah, Cal., Mr. De Garmo was united in marriage with Miss Etta Renfro, a native of Missouri, and born of this union are three children, Alva, Glenn and Velma. Mrs. De Garmo is the daughter of George B. Renfro, an early settler of the state, who was born near Collinsville, Madison county, Ill., a son of James Renfro, who engaged as a farmer in that state. The elder man removed to Harrison county, Mo., in 1874, his death occurring in Bethany in 1881. He served in the Civil war in the Thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry and was wounded at the battle of Franklin. He was a Mason fraternally, and politically was a strong Republican. In religion he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife was Martha Reed, born in Missouri, and whose death occurred in California at the age of eighty-three years. They had three children, of whom the eldest was George B.; William is located in Los Angeles, and Thomas is in Missouri. George B. Renfro was born October 9, 1843, and reared in Illinois, where he attended the public schools. In 1862 he volunteered in Company E, Eightieth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and was an active participant in a number of important battles, among them Roseburg, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Buzzard's Roost and siege of Atlanta. In the fall of 1864 he went home on a furlough and was ill for about fifty days; rejoining his regiment in February, 1865, he served until the close of the war. He was mustered out of service and honorably discharged in Springfield, Ill., June 19, 1865, and upon returning to civic pursuits engaged in general farming in Jefferson county. In 1872 he removed to Missouri and in Vernon county purchased a farm, which he cultivated for four years. In 1876 he went to Harrison county, Mo., and this property he disposed of in 1882 and came to California. He located at Sierra Madre, where he set out an orchard and improved the property for two years, when he sold out and in the spring of 1885 purchased the property in Savannah. He owns twenty-four acres, of which twenty are devoted to alfalfa, raised without irrigation. He was married in Jefferson county, Ill., to Margaret Williams, a native of Kentucky, and they became the parents of four children: Alva, of Tonopah; Lutie, who became the wife of Brace S. Gibson, and is now deceased; Adella, wife of Charles Gidly, of El Monte; and Etta, Mrs. De Garmo. Mr. Renfro is a Mason fraternally and prominent in the order, his wife also belonging to the Order of Eastern Star. In politics he is a Republican.

Mr. De Garmo is associated fraternally with the Masonic organization, belonging to Lexington Lodge No. 104, F. & A. M., of El Monte; also Lexington Chapter No. 172, R. A. M. His wife is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. De Garmo is a stanch Republican.

ALBERT B. CLAYTON. The principal of the high school of Long Beach, Albert B. Clayton is a man eminently fitted for the position he holds, as he has made educational work his life study, at the same time bringing to bear the natural ability which has distinguished his efforts as a teacher. He is well and widely known throughout this section of the state, his birth having occurred near Downey, Cal., November 2, 1876, and in that location he spent the years of his boyhood. His father, P. O. Clayton, was a pioneer of 1850, who crossed the plains from Kentucky, his native state, and located in California, where he passed the remainder of his life. As a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South he gave his best efforts toward the moral uplifting of the community in which his life-work was directed, and became a popular friend of all movements which tended toward the upbuilding of the western statehood. His wife, formerly Lennie L. Walker, a native of Illinois, survives him, and now resides at No. 930 Pine avenue, Long Beach.

A. B. Clayton spent the first years of his life in Downey where he attended the public school until qualified to enter the high school of Los Angeles. He was graduated from this institution in 1893, when he went east to Franklin, Tenn., and enrolled as a student in the Battle Ground Academy. Three years later he was graduated from the classical course and immediately entered Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tenn. Graduating in 1900 with the degree of B. A., he returned to California and took the same degree in the University of California, at Berkeley. Subsequently, in 1902, he was secured by the Japanese government to work in the high schools and universities of Japan as a teacher of English, in which position he remained for two and a half years. Deciding to return to his native country and state he located in Long Beach about 1904, when he was made vice-principal of the high school here, holding the position for one year, when he assumed the duties of principal. Although but a brief period has elapsed since his assumption of these duties, yet he has evinced the qualities of leadership and the possession of executive ability, which is necessarily an essential factor in the accomplishment of results; both speak eloquently of future success which shall place the schools of this city in the front rank of those in Southern California.

Mr. Clayton, in addition to his educational work, has taken a prominent part in the social life of Long Beach, where he is granted the position won by his personal attributes. He is a valued member of the Methodist Church South, and fraternally is identified with Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M.; Chapter No. 84, R. A. M.; the Knights Templar and the Knights of Pythias. Throughout his entire career, even as a student, he was prominent in social orders, at Berkeley being an active member of the Young Men's Christian Association. Thus far in life Mr. Clayton has made his success by the exercise of his own ability and energy, starting in the world without capital, but allowing no obstacle to daunt nor dismay him. Whatever the future holds for him he carries that force within himself that enables him to give his best efforts toward the fulfillment of his desires—the betterment of humanity through educational forces.

JAMES G. COX. The citizens of Long Beach are a unit in their unquestioning and perfect faith in the future prosperity of the town and its increasing growth in population. A number of the influential men of the place have given evidence of this faith through their investments and their close identification with the buying and selling of real estate. Among this class stands James G. Cox, member of the firm of Cox & Cox, organized September 1, 1904, for the general handling of real estate, with loans and insurance as auxiliaries of the main business. Though primarily the removal to California was made for the benefit of the health of himself and wife, he has had no reason to regret the change from a financial standpoint, for he has met with a gratifying degree of success in his investments and has become an influential member of the Board of Trade and a contributor to the advancement of the city.

Indiana is well represented in the citizenship of Long Beach, and Mr. Cox is one of those who from that state have sought the wider opportunities of California. Born near Rockville, May 25, 1860, he passed the years of boyhood as a farmer's son, helping with the many duties connected with the care of a large tract of land and attending the country schools in the winter seasons. After having completed the studies of the common schools he had the privilege of attending the Indiana State Normal School, where he availed himself of the opportunities for study offered him. On leaving school he established himself in the mercantile business at Coloma, Parke county, and conducted a general store in that village. For sixteen years he also held the office of postmaster, having the office in his store, and superintending it with the same fidelity characteristic of him in other duties.

On coming to Southern California in November, 1899, Mr. Cox settled at Long Beach and later erected his present residence at No. 535 East Third street. The first business in which he engaged was that of merchandising, which he conducted in a brick block purchased by him for that purpose. However, the life of a merchant proved too confining and in a year he disposed of the stock of goods and the building at a fair advance. Gradually he drifted into the real-estate business through the buying of lots and improving of the same, and he still continues in the business, which as yet has been limited to his home city. In the future of the beach towns he has the greatest confidence. With their unrivaled climate and beauties of scenery he believes they will attract a constantly increasing number of guests, and the present rapid growth of Long Beach justifies his faith in its prosperity. Charities and churches receive his support, and his influence is given to all movements for the upbuilding of the city along lines of permanent advancement. He is a member of the Friends Church of Long Beach, which he has served in the capacity of trustee for the past four years, and was also treasurer of the Pasadena quarterly meeting. While living in the east he married Miss Sallie Lindley, of Illinois, and they have had two daughters, one of whom died at four years of age and the other, Mary Esther, is now the chief joy of their cozy home.

HON. FREDERIC W. GREGG. The lineage of the family represented by this influential attorney of San Bernardino and popular citizen of Redlands is traced back to the north of Ireland and to Scotland, but from an early period in American colonial history the family has been associated with the development of New England. The genealogy shows that Alexander M. Gregg was a native of Medford, Mass., and established the family in New Hampshire, where, to his marriage with a Miss Clark, there was born, January 21, 1823, a son, Robert M. During early manhood he met and married Eliza M. Buxton, whose ancestors came from England to America during the colonial era and settled in New England. When the second war began with England, her father, William Buxton, who was a stanch defender of American rights, enlisted in the service on board a privateer which captured many valuable British ships. His father was also a sailor in the American navy and served during the Revolutionary war.

Among the children of Robert M. Gregg there was a son, Frederic W., who was born in Vermont on Christmas day of 1856. It was his privilege to receive better advantages than fell to many of his day and locality, and of these privileges he availed himself to the utmost. On the completion of the studies of the common schools he matriculated in Dartmouth College, where he took the classical course of study and was graduated with the class of 1878. Immediately after leaving college he began the study of law in the office of Hon. Frank Plumley, United States district attorney for Vermont. Later he pursued his law studies in the Columbia Law School. On being admitted to the bar he sought a field of practice in the west and in June 1881, opened an office at Tucson, Ariz., where he soon acquired prominence through his high mental attainments and broad knowledge of the law.

Less than one year after he had established his office in Tucson Mr. Gregg was appointed United States commissioner for the first judicial district of Arizona, which position he filled for three years. In November of 1882 he was elected a member of the board of school trustees of Tucson. As the nominee of the Republican party in 1884 he was a candidate for district attorney, but was defeated by a few votes. Upon the petition of the bar of the county in March, 1885, he was appointed county judge of Pima county. At the expiration of the term of two years he was elected to the office as his own successor, being honored with a larger vote than any other candidate on the Republican county ticket.

On leaving Tucson in the summer of 1887 Judge Gregg removed to California and opened an office at San Bernardino, where he formed a partnership with William A. Harris under the firm title of Harris & Gregg. Since coming to this city he has acquired a large practice in all of the courts, and has won local distinction through high attainments and attractive personal qualities. After coming to California he remained a bachelor for some years, but July 31, 1901, he established domestic ties through his marriage to Miss Agnes Wilson, an accomplished and cultured young lady residing in Los Angeles, of which her father, Peter Wilson, was an early settler. Her death, which occurred April 30, 1906, was a bereavement not only to Judge Gregg and members of her father's family, but also to the large circle of warm personal friends to whom she had become endeared through the possession of refinement of manner, gentleness of temperament and a cultured mind.

CODY J. FREDERICK. A short distance north of Venice lies the homestead of Mr. Frederick, embracing a small tract which cost him only $47 an acre at the time of its purchase. Owing to the proximity of the markets, the place afforded ideal conditions for a dairy, and this industry has engaged the owner's attention. Alfalfa can be raised exceptionally well, hence hay is provided for the milch cows of excellent quality and in large quantities. On the building of the Short Line electric railroad, the track crossed one corner of the farm, giving fine facilities for reaching the city as well as other suburbs. Recently Mr. Frederick sold eight acres for $950 an acre, reserving for himself five acres on the car line, just outside of the city limits of Venice. The five acres are estimated to be worth $2,000 an acre, and he has erected thereon a comfortable residence, besides making other improvements of value.

The birth of Cody J. Frederick occurred in Branch county, Mich., February 5, 1854, his parents being Alexander and Emeline (Cody) Frederick, natives of New York. The paternal grandfather was born in Germany and the maternal grandfather, John Cody, was of Holland-Dutch extraction, while the maternal grandmother, who bore the maiden name of Hannah Hubbs, was of Scotch lineage. While Michigan was still a new country, on whose broad acres few furrows had been turned, Alexander Frederick sought its opportunities and identified himself with its pioneers, clearing a farm where for years he made his home. For a time he also engaged in teaming and in addition he carried on a hotel situated on the main thoroughfare between Clinton and Detroit. His death occurred when he was fifty-six years of age, and his wife survived him some time, passing away on the Michigan homestead at the age of sixty-five years.

When eleven years of age Cody J. Frederick was orphaned by the death of his father, and two years later he began to earn his own livelihood. To an exceptional degree, therefore, whatever of success he has attained may be attributed to his unaided exertions begun at a period when most boys are enjoying the advantages of mental training in school. For six years he worked out on farms for neighboring farmers and then he rented the old homestead, which he operated until the place was sold in 1893. During the latter year he came to California and settled at Santa Monica, where he was employed in teaming and sundry other occupations such as presented themselves for the obtaining of a livelihood. After six years in that town he came to his present location and purchased fourteen acres, a part of which forms his present homestead. While living in Michigan he married Sarah L. Purdy, who was born and reared in that state, and whom he had known from early childhood. They became the parents of three children, but two died young and only one survives, Alma, wife of William Lowe, who operates a large dairy at Palms. In politics Mr. Frederick always votes with the Republican party, while in fraternal relations he holds membership with the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Fraternal Brotherhood.

CLAUDIUS LEE EMERSON, cashier of the First National Bank of San Jacinto, Riverside county, is one of the foremost business men of this section, having risen to the position of esteem in which he is universally held by the demonstration of superior business ability. The institution with which he is connected was first organized as a state bank in 1886 and from a modest beginning acquired a financial standing, which in January, 1906, led to its establishment as a national bank, A. W. Wright being president; John Shaver, vice-president; C. L. Emerson, cashier; and J. C. Wright, assistant cashier. Mr. Emerson is a native of California, his birth having occurred in Fresno county in 1872; his parents, J. H. and Nellie (Neal) Emerson, natives of Missouri (the gateway for the vast tide of emigration which swept toward the Pacific coast in historic '49), crossed the plains with ox-teams, and after a six months' trip located in Grass valley, where, following the example of the majority who came west in that year, the father engaged in mining. This occupation he followed until injured by the caving in of a mine; at that period he located in Fresno county and made that place his home until 1886, when he came to Riverside county, and in San Jacinto engaged in business. Failing health induced his practical retirement from business activity some time previous to his death, which occurred in 1897, at the age of sixty-one years. He is survived by his wife, who is now seventy-one years of age, her home remaining in San Jacinto.

In the public schools of San Jacinto C. L. Emerson received a good education, after which, in young manhood, he engaged as a clerk in a general merchandise store of this place. In 1900 he went into business for himself, purchasing a grocery store which he operated for three years, when he was chosen assistant cashier of the First National Bank, which was then, however, the State Bank of San Jacinto. Upon its being made a national bank Mr. Emerson became its cashier and this position he is filling at the present writing. At the same time he has retained an interest in the agricultural life of the community, owning and operating a ranch in the vicinity of San Jacinto.

In San Jacinto Mr. Emerson was united in marriage with Miss Zelma Shultz, and born of this union are two children, Marjorie and Nellie. Mr. Emerson is identified with several fraternal organizations, being a member of San Jacinto Lodge No. 383, I. O. O. F.; Independent Order of Foresters; and San Jacinto Camp No. 100, W. O. W. He is also a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West, being associated with the San Jacinto Parlor. He takes a deep interest in the general welfare of the community, and gives his best efforts toward all forward movements, being particularly associated with the educational affairs as trustee of the public and high schools. He is in no sense a partisan, but seeks to advance the interest of the entire section in which he makes his home.

ALBERT JOHNSON. It has been a matter of frequent comment among the people of California that the young men who have come hither from Germany and who have learned their trades in the old country are unusually skilled in their special craft or occupation; as workmen they have few superiors, and their knowledge of their trades is both thorough and extensive. Such in general may be stated of Mr. Johnson, whose proficiency in the building business has brought him into prominence in Ventura county and given him a goodly proportion of such business in his home town of Oxnard. Of German birth, he had the advantage of serving an apprenticeship of three years at the carpenter's trade in his home land, begining to serve at the age of fourteen and remaining under a master carpenter until he was seventeen and thoroughly grounded in the occupation.

Oldenburg is Mr. Johnson's native place, and April 19, 1860, the date of his birth, his parents being John and Helen (Torhorst) Johnson, who were likewise natives of Germany and lifelong residents of that country, the father being a farmer in Oldenburg. Six children comprised their family and all but one are still living, Albert being next to the youngest and the only one in the United States. It was his good fortune to receive an excellent education in the German language in the schools of Oldenburg, and immediately after leaving school he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade. In 1878 he crossed the ocean to try his fortune in America. Proceeding west to Nebraska, he secured employment on a farm in Webster county, and remained in that postion for fifteen months. At the expiration of that time he began to work at carpentering at Guiderock, Webster county, and later was similarly employed in Milwaukee, Wis., from which city he came to the Pacific coast, arriving in Los Angeles February 6, 1885, and securing employment as a carpenter in that city.

Upon his removal to Hueneme in 1888 Mr. Johnson entered the employ of a contractor, with whom he remained for three years, meanwhile acquiring a valuable insight into the contracting business with its multitudinous details. After leaving his employer, Mr. Wilson, he began to take contracts to erect buildings and succeeded so well that he was encouraged to continue. At the time of the founding of Oxnard, in 1898, he came to the new town and commenced to build on contract. Since then he has erected scores of residences, some among them being as elegant and substantial as any to be found in Ventura county. In 1903 he brought his family to Oxnard, where he owns and occupies a neat residence near the corner of A and Third streets. In Ventura county he married Mrs. Freda (Bulla) Engle, who was born in Saxony, Germany, and is a lady of fair education and the highest refinement, an earnest member of the Lutheran Church and a contributor in missionary and charitable movements. Reared in the Lutheran faith, Mr. Johnson always has been identified with that denomination and gives his support to its doctrines. Well informed concerning the national government of the United States and the policy of each administration, he casts his ballot for Republican principles at all elections. Fraternally he hold membership with the Sons of Herman, and has been honored with the office of president, which he now holds.

RICHARD W. SERVICE. Associated with the real estate firm known as Service Brothers, of Los Angeles, with a branch office in El Monte, Richard W. Service is active in business affairs of the county and as a man of sagacious judgment and executive ability has proven a factor in the upbuilding and development of this enterprise. Mr. Service came to California in 1900 from his birthplace in Ontario, where he was born April 24, 1869, a son of Rev. Richard Service, of English and Scotch ancestry, the paternal grandfather, David, having emigrated from England and located in the province of Ontario. Richard Service became a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, attending the Niagara conference and later the London conference. His death occurred in Ontario. His wife, formerly Julia Bristol, was born near Tonawanda, N. Y., a daughter of Rev. Emerson Bristol also a native of New York and a lumberman in the northern part of the state on the Erie canal. Later in life he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, preached in his native state and later went to Ontario, where he served as presiding elder for thirty years. Mrs. Service still survives and makes her home in El Monte. She has three sons: Emerson, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, located in Howard Lake, Minn.; Richard W., of this review; and William E., in partnership with his brother in the real estate business.

Richard W. Service was reared in St. Mary's, Ontario, and received his education in the public and high schools. With his brother he engaged in a real estate enterprise in their native city, the two remaining there until 1900, when they came to California and in Los Angeles established a similar business, at the same time opening an office in El Monte, the first of its character in the place. In Los Angeles they are located at No. 302 Frost building, where they make a specialty of handling farm lands, being the exclusive selling agents for the E. J. (Lucky) Baldwin ranches. They have met with success in their enterprise, and have laid out Baldwin's addition to El Monte, also the Brockway tract.

In Los Angeles Richard W. Service was united in marriage with Miss Venie Ruland, a native of Colorado, who was reared in California, a graduate of the State Normal School in Los Angeles, where she engaged in educational work. Mr. Service is a Methodist, and politically votes the Republican ticket. In all matters of public import he takes an active interest and seeks in every possible way to advance the general welfare. He is a leading citizen in El Monte, and holds a high place in the regard of his fellow citizens.

JOHN G. FRENCH. A man of advanced ideas, practical and progressive, possessing mental vigor and business aptitude, John G. French occupies a fine position among the representative citizens of Venice, Los Angeles county, and is among the foremost to forward all enterprises conducive to the best interests of the place. A native of Ohio, he was born, October 22, 1855, in Miami county, a son of Asa D. French.

Having spent his earlier life in Ohio, Asa D. French subsequently moved to White county, Ind., buying land, and being extensively engaged in farming and stock-raising for many years. In 1880 he migrated to Oregon, locating in Morrow county, where he continued in agricultural pursuits for several years. On July 13, 1891, he died at his home in Oregon, where his widow, whose maiden name was Ruth E. Glancy, now lives, her home being in Heppner.

Brought up on the home farm, John G. French early became acquainted with the various branches of farming, including grain and stock-raising. He received excellent educational advantages, and after his graduation, in 1872, from the Brookston Academy, in White county, Ind., he taught school in that locality for three years. Going then to Kansas, he taught school for a year, and was afterwards engaged in the cattle business for awhile, shipping stock to different points. In 1877, in Halstead, Kans., he built the first steam elevator on the Santa Fe Railroad, and after operating it successfully for three years went to McPherson, Kans., where he built the first steam elevator on the line of the Union Pacific Railway. Selling out of the grain-receiving business in 1881, he located in Atchison, Kans., becoming buyer for the Atchison Elevator Company. Three years later, in 1884, he closed out his interest in the grain trade and embarked in the wholesale grocery business with W. F. Dolan & Co., having his western headquarters in Newton, Kans., and while thus engaged invested in Kansas property. Retiring from this business in 1887 he was for two years in the retail dry-goods business in Newton. Disposing of his stock in 1889, he opened a retail hardware and implement house in Pratt, Kans., where he was located two years. Selling out in 1891, he came to the Pacific coast as agent for manufacturing companies, his territory extending the length of the coast, with headquarters in San Francisco and Los Angeles. In 1898 he organized the wholesale department of the William H. Hoegee & Co. firm in Los Angeles, with which he was connected for five years. Severing his relations with this firm in 1904, he resumed his former position with the manufacturer's agency, and soon after was made general manager of the Abbot Kinney Company in the building of Venice, remaining as such from January, 1905, until July, 1905, when he assumed the management of the land department, with headquarters at Venice. On January 1, 1906, he organized the Venice of America Land Company, a corporation, paid-up capital $50,000, of which he is vice-president and general manager, and promoting along with other Venetian interests, East Venice of America, a beautiful residence suburb of Venice.

In the upbuilding of Venice Mr. French has taken an active part, lending his aid and influence toward the establishment of beneficial projects. He is a firm believer in the advanced ideas of education and was one of the first board of trustees, and the first president, of the Ocean Park school board, a position that he still retains. Many of the new ideas used in erecting, equipping and furnishing the first grammar school building in Venice were his, and have proved useful and practical, and of great benefit to teachers and pupils.

In 1879, in Kansas, Mr. French married Birdie L. Pence, of Leavenworth, Kans., a granddaughter of Louis Burns, a prominent citizen of Kansas, and of their union three children have been born, namely: Ruth E., Elma P. and Dorothy G. Politically Mr. French is a Republican, and fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias.

JOSEPH L. COLEMAN. Two and a half miles northeast of El Monte is located the ranch owned by Joseph L. Coleman, one of the progressive and enterprising citizens of this section of Los Angeles county. The family of which Mr. Coleman is the California representative is of English origin, the grandfather, Steven, having emigrated from England and located in Virginia, where he engaged as a farmer until his death. The father, Richard D., was born in Tazewell county, Va., there reared to manhood, when he followed a mercantile enterprise until the breaking out of the Civil war. He enlisted in the Union army in Company H, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Infantry, as first lieutenant and was killed at the battle of Round Bottom, in Kentucky, in 1863. He was survived by his wife, formerly Nancy King, a native of Kentucky, and daughter of Louis King, also a native of that state, who engaged in farming until the breaking out of the Civil war. He participated as a soldier in Company H, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Infantry, after which he removed to Minnesota. Still later he removed to Arlington, Tex., where his death eventually occurred. Mrs. Coleman died in Minnesota, leaving a family of eight children, of whom five are now living

Next to the oldest child in a large family, Joseph L. Coleman was born in Tazewell county, Va., July 9, 1852, and passed the first ten years of his life in Virginia, the family removing to Kentucky in 1862. After his service in the Civil war the father located in Hutchinson, Minn., with his family and there carried on farming until the death of the mother in 1864. Little more than a child in years, Joseph L. was forced to take up the burden of self-support, the only work at hand being on a farm or steamboating on the Mississippi river, both of which he did. In 1869 he went to Montana and near Helena worked on a stock range. Up to the time he was eighteen years old he had never had any educational advantages, but the desire for knowledge was strong within him, and when opportunity presented he attended the district school for about seven months, working on a farm during the summer. In 1875 he went to Northern California and near Yreka engaged in the stock business. Four years later he bought a ranch in Lake county and engaged in the sheep and horse business in which he was uniformly successful. In 1901 he sold his stock, leased his lands and came to Southern California, locating in Monrovia. In 1903 he purchased sixty-five acres of the Peck tract and Chicago Park, considered waste land with deep ditches through it, but undaunted by its uninviting appearance, he spent time and energy upon it and has turned it into a profitable walnut grove and alfalfa farm. He installed a pumping plant, the largest outside of the city of Los Angeles, and has one engine of sixty horse power.

In Los Angeles Mr. Coleman married Miss Lena Linder, a native of Switzerland, and they are the parents of three children, Nancy, Magdalene and Mary E. Mr. Coleman is a Republican in his political convictions and seeks to advance the principles he endorses, although he has never cared personally for official recognition. In his religious views he has endeavored to live up to the teachings of Christ and do the will of the Lord in his every movement, word, thought and act. Mrs. Coleman has devoted her time to spreading the Gospel for the past thirteen years.

CHRISTIAN KORTNER. From the picturesque mountains and bracing air of Norway have come many of the most capable ranchers in Santa Barbara county. The sea and farming have always been the special province of the people of the Northlands, steeped in their beautiful legends of sailors and knights, with their simple attitude towards life and its responsibilities, their love of home, and their appreciation of the common, homely virtues. It is to the call of the sea, however, that the Norseman listens most readily in his youth, and thus in mature life there are those who, living in our midst, and pursuing pastoral callings, still in memory recall the boom of the waves, the raging of the elements, and the joy of sighting distant ports. Such a one is Christian Kortner, an extensive rancher near Santa Maria, who came to this country with a seaman's stipend, speaking an alien tongue, knowing nothing of the habits or customs of his associates, and who now is the possessor of a competence won through untiring perseverance.

Mr. Kortner was born in Norway, January 14, 1845, and while still the school room should have claimed him, went to sea as a deck hand. In this he had a precedent in his father, who touched at many ports during a long sea-faring career, and who finally died of yellow fever on ship board, and was buried in the cemetery of the sea. Ole Kortner was forty-six years old at the time of his death, and he left a family of seven children, three of whom are living in California. His wife, in girlhood Gurna Nelson, survived him many years, her death occurring at the age of seventy-three. Christian Kortner followed the uncertain fortunes of the ocean for seven years, and finally touched at New York, from where he shipped in the American vessel Twilight for the long voyage around the Horn to San Francisco. Here terminated his nautical career, and soon after began his agricultural efforts in Alameda county.

After two years in Alameda county Mr. Kortner spent two years in the San Joaquin valley, moving then to Monterey county, where he remained four years. He next farmed for thirteen years in San Luis Obispo county, and in 1892 came to Santa Barbara county, locating on his present ranch of two hundred and fifteen acres. He also farms a tract of one hundred and forty acres, and another of eighty acres, devoting his land principally to grain, beans and stock. He is a studious and industrious farmer, and has always adhered to the first principle of saving as a guarantee of financial success. However, the habits of thrift and economy have not prevented his adoption of American comforts and conveniences, or his appreciation of the diversions and refinements made possible by the larger opportunities by which he is surrounded.

In 1887 Mr. Kortner married Mrs. Maria Hanson, who was born in Denmark, and who, through her former marriage, is the mother of four children: Ellen, wife of George Tunnel; Rasmus, Maria and Jens. To Mr. and Mrs. Kortner have been born four children: Olga, Laura, Christian and Henry. Mr. Kortner is a Democrat in politics and a member of the Lutheran Church. He is a public spirited and enlightened rancher, an enthusiastic supporter of schools and general improving agencies, and an admirer of the government and institutions of his adopted country.

CHARLES GROSJEAN. A lumberman of practical experience and judgment Mr. Grosjean is connected with the San Pedro Lumber Company as order clerk. Like many other enterprising young men of the east, he left home soon after attaining his majority to seek a new and wider field of operation, coming to the Pacific coast in search of a favorable opportunity for improving his financial condition. For the past twelve years he has lived in this thriving city, and during the time has labored with persistency of purpose and has acquired a nice property. A son of Edward Grosjean, he was born, October 2, 1854, at Mount Eaton, Ohio, where his paternal grandfather, Charles Grosjean, was a pioneer settler, and from the wild tract of land which he bought reclaimed a good farm.

Born in canton Berne, Switzerland, Edward Grosjean came with his parents to the United States when young, and in the clearing and improving of the parental homestead was an able assistant. He subsequently engaged in agricultural pursuits, carrying on general farming, and also owning and operating a saw-mill. In 1852 he came across the plains to California, and after mining for a time with good success returned, on the Golden Gate, which was subsequently burned, going home by way of the Isthmus. Erecting a large mill in Ohio, he was afterwards engaged in the manufacture of lumber until his death, at the early age of forty-one years. He was a man of sterling integrity and worth, and occupied a place of prominence in Masonic circles, having taken the thirty-second degree in that order. He married Caroline Wisen, who was born in Berne, Switzerland, and died in Mount Eaton, Ohio. Of the ten children born of their union, four sons and one daughter are living, Charles being the oldest son.

Brought up on a farm, and educated in the common schools, Charles Grosjean was trained in early life to habits of industry and thrift. As a boy he worked in his father's saw-mill, becoming expert in all departments connected with its management. In 1887 he came to California, locating at Guerneville, Sonoma county, where he engaged in the manufacture of lumber, in the mill running everything from the plane to the big saw, and serving as tallyman. Going to San Francisco in 1881, he was tallyman and foreman for the Moore & Smith Company for four years, and the following seven years was similarly employed in Oakland, with the Puget Sound Lumber Company. He was subsequently foreman for eight months for Simpson & Gray, in Stockton, afterwards being foreman for the Glenwood Lumber Company in San Jose. Coming to San Pedro in 1893, he accepted the position of foreman with the San Pedro Lumber Company, and in that capacity rendered acceptable service until 1899, when he resigned. He has since continued his residence here, and is now order clerk for the same firm. Familiar with the manufacture of lumber from his earlier years, he brings to the business experience, industry and a large amount of ability. He has accumulated some property of value, and at No. 270 Fifth street has erected a fine residence.

In Millersburg, Ohio, January 1, 1881, Mr. Grosjean married Lina M. Beckler, a native of that place, being the daughter of Eugene Beckler, who settled there on coming to this country from France. Fraternally Mr. Grosjean is a member of the Foresters of America, and of the Independent Order of Foresters. He is a man of high moral standing in the community, and belongs to the Congregational Church.

LEANDER COLUMBUS MILLER. Since 1886 L. C. Miller has been heavily interested in Los Angeles county property and in the past twenty years has bought and improved many pieces of land which he afterwards platted and sold as town lots. He is of German descent, his grandfather, John Miller, being a native of Germany, where in early manhood he was engaged as a potter and farmer. Later he emigrated to America and became a pioneer of Union county, Ind., where he pre-empted the first piece of government land, and resided until his death in 1851 at the advanced age of eighty-three years. His wife was Phoebe McClure before her marriage in 1792, and her death occurred in 1848, aged seventy-seven years. Mr. Miller's parents, Abraham and Susanna (Lybrook) Miller, were both natives of Indiana, the former born in 1810, died July 9, 1860, the latter born May 2, 1830, died October 30, 1883. They were the parents of seven children, six of whom are living, and the father was a firm believer in the principles of the Republican party.

In the middle of the past century when the central states were really the frontier borderland, it was not easy to secure an education. Mr. Miller who was born near College corner, Ohio, on the Indiana side, October 9, 1846, was obliged to be content with what he could learn in from three weeks to three months a year at the district school. His father died when the son was fourteen years old and until he was twenty-eight years of age he worked on the farm for his mother. He then married and came to California but soon returned to Indiana and again conducted the home farm, his mother being in ill health. After her death he sold the place, settled and divided the estate and came in Glendale, Cal., where he purchased twenty acres of land, subdivided and sold it and then in company with three others bought a tract of eighty acres and disposed of it in the same way. The Santa Monica district attracted him next, and selecting a tract of forty acres which was then bare and desolate he improved it and gradually added more acres to his original purchase until he had seventy-five acres. Again he decided to subdivide a portion of the land, and choosing the forty acres lying nearest to Venice he made the addition of East Venice. In addition to his other properties Mr. Miller also owns a fine residence on Thirtieth street in Los Angeles where he makes his home.

His wife was Katharine Smith whose parents and grandparents were natives of North Carolina, with the exception of her father, Alexander Smith, who was born in Butler county, Ohio, where he engaged as a farmer and stock dealer, later removing to Indiana, where he married and spent the rest of his life. Her mother came to California and her death occurred at Santa Monica. Mrs. Miller was born September 16, 1848, and became the mother of seven children, five of whom are still living. They are Olive Leona, married to Mr. Spencer, now deceased; Glen G., a dentist; Myron C., formerly manager of the telephone office, and now of Whittier; Laurel Revel, a high school student; and Zelma K., at home. Religiously the family attend and support the Methodist Episcopal Church, and politically Mr. Miller is a stanch believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party. He is accorded a prominent place in the ranks of the leading citizens of Los Angeles and has always been ready to lend a hand in the forwarding of progressive enterprises.

OLOF NELSON. The material upbuilding and practical development of San Diego have been promoted by the arduous efforts of the men who directly or indirectly are connected with the building business, and in this class Olof Nelson occupies an important place. Although fully competent to engage in any department of the building industry he has limited his attention to cement work and teaming contracts. For a time prior to 1905 he was a member of the firm of Engebretsen & Nelson, but during the latter year he sold his interest in the business to Mr. Engebretsen and since then has engaged independently in contract grading and teaming, for which purpose he utilizes about ten teams. As a contractor he has proved prompt and reliable and has carried out all work with energy and dispatch.

Near Gottenburg, Sweden, Olof Nelson was born April 11, 1858, being a son of Nels Anderson by his marriage to Caroline, daughter of Andreas, all natives of the same part of Sweden and farmers by occupation. In the parental family there were four sons and three daughters, all of whom are still living, Olof being the youngest of the seven and the only one to settle in the United States. During boyhood he worked on the farm in summers and attended school in the winter, receiving such educational advantages as the time and place afforded. After he had attained his majority he continued on the old homestead, but it was his ambition to emigrate to the new world, and at the age of twenty-five years he was able to carry out his wishes in that respect. April 20, 1883, he set sail for the western hemisphere, and May 14 he landed at Galveston, Tex., where for some months he remained as an employe of the Santa Fe Railroad Company.

From Texas removing west to California in February, 1884, Mr. Nelson settled in San Francisco, where he was employed in cutting stone blocks used in making pavements. November 27, 1887, he arrived in San Diego. Shortly after his arrival he began to take contracts for grading and opening roads. From quarries that he leased he secured blocks which he used in the paving of streets, and he soon came to be known as a reliable workman with a thorough knowledge of his work. In street paving and in cement work he was at first associated with another gentleman under the title of Engebretsen & Nelson, but more recently he has been alone in business. When he came to Southern California he was a single man, and here he established a home of his own through his marriage, December 1, 1900, to Miss Carrie Johnson, who was born in Helgebode, Varmland, Sweden, and like himself is of the Lutheran faith. They are the parents of one son, Chester Odell. Since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Nelson has voted with the Republican party and has displayed a deep interest in all measures relating to the progress and prosperity of his adopted country. On the organization of the Scandinavian Club of San Diego he became one of its charter members and still retains his connection with that body. Fraternally he holds membership with the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having been initiated into the latter order in Sunset Lodge No. 328, besides which he is also connected with the encampment and the canton.

PETER HORTON COVINGTON. In 1876 Mr. Covington came to California and since that time he has proven himself one of the most devoted upbuilders of the commonwealth and a citizen of unusual worth and ability. He was born near Grenada, Miss., April 4, 1847. His father, Daniel A., was born in North Carolina, March 27, 1812, and was thence taken by his father, Matthew, a native of the same state, to Huntingdon, Tenn., and there reared to young manhood. The grandfather, who was of English descent, was a farmer in North Carolina, and there gave his strength to the American forces in the war of the Revolution, 1775-83. Daniel A. Covington followed farming for a livelihood, being first located in Tennessee, and later, in 1835, coming south to Mississippi and locating in the vicinity of Grenada. He engaged as a cotton planter on a two thousand acre plantation until 1870, when he came to California and located in San Timoteo cañon and there homesteaded a ranch. After his retirement from public activities he removed to San Bernardino and made that city his home until his death, which occurred in 1897, at the age of eighty-five years. He was a Mason fraternally, and in religion was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He served in a Mississippi regiment during the Civil war. His wife, formerly Mary Horton, was born in Huntingdon, Tenn., a daughter of William Horton, a planter in that state; her death occurred in Mississippi in 1867.

Peter Horton Covington was reared in Mississippi and educated in a private academy, after which, in 1864, he enlisted in the Second Mississippi Cavalry, in Company E, and served until the close of the war. He returned home and continued with his father until attaining his majority, when he engaged in farming on his own resources. In 1870 he took charge of the old home, dividing up the property and disposing of the interests, after which, in 1876, he came to California. He entered forty acres of land in San Timoteo cañon, and purchased adjoining land and there he engaged as a horticulturist, raising principally peaches and apricots. In 1900 he grubbed out these fruit trees and set out seven acres in oranges, devoting forty acres to alfalfa and the remainder of two hundred and seventy-five acres to hay and grain. This ranch is situated three and a half miles from Redlands and is one of the valuable ranches of this section, being equipped with a pumping plant. He now rents this ranch and his dairy herd. Since 1897 he has made his home in Redlands, and in 1899 built his present residence at No. 104 East Fern street. For two years he was successfully engaged in the furniture business on West State street.

In Mississippi, near his birthplace, October 1, 1869, Mr. Covington was united in marriage with Miss Martha Cruthirds, a native of that state, and a daughter of Alexander Cruthirds, of Scotch ancestry, and a planter by occupation. He served in the Civil war as a member of a Mississippi regiment. Mr. and Mrs. Covington are the parents of the following children: William, a dairyman and horticulturist near Redlands; Anna, wife of William Best, of Santa Ana; Hester, a music teacher of Redlands; Walter, engaged in the undertaking business in Houston, Tex.; Archie, in the real-estate business in Redlands; and Harry, a student at home. Mr. Covington served for years as a member of the school board in the Railroad district and officiated as its clerk. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Chapel Hill Lodge No. 227, of Chapel, Miss., and is past master of the lodge. In religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he officiates as chairman of the board of trustees. Politically a Democrat, he has taken a keen interest in public affairs. He is a citizen who can always be counted upon to further any movement inaugurated for the benefit of the community, and is liberal and progressive in every sense of the word.

WAYMIRE BROTHERS. The above named gentlemen are leading citizens of Norwalk, where they are conducting a general hardware and implement store, carrying a very extensive stock in all articles usually found in an establishment of this kind, and also sell buggies and wagons and carry on a general plumbing and gas fitting business. Although young men they are decidedly progressive and enterprising and have risen to a high position among the citizens of the place, who holds them in esteem and respect for their straighforward methods in conducting their enterprise and for their integrity and uprightness of character. Their parents, David and Margaret (Urmston) Waymire, were natives respectively of Indiana and Ohio. After engaging in ranching in various states the father finally located in Kansas, where his death occurred in 1895. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in Company I, Forty-ninth Indiana Infantry, and served for three years, being wounded in one of the leading engagements. He was a member of the Masonic organization. Mrs. Waymire is still living and is a resident of Norwalk.

The eldest brother, Jack Waymire, was born November 19, 1873, in Clay county, Ill., also the scene of the birth of S. A. Waymire, who was born May 18, 1875. The brothers grew to young manhood together, receiving their preliminary education in the public schools, the elder learning the iron moulder's and tinner's trades, at which he worked in Illinois until he came to California. The younger brother completed his business education in the Gem City Business College of Quincy, Ill. He then came to California (in 1894), but returned to Illinois, coming back to California to make his home in 1901, accompanied by the youngest brother, F. D. Waymire, who was born in Clay county, Ill., August 24, 1878, and like him educated in the public schools and the Gem City Business College. He had been engaged in business in Illinois and after the three brothers came to California they engaged in ranching for some time, when they established their present business in Norwalk. The eldest brother, Jack Waymire, is the inventor of the Reliable Acetylene Generator, patented in January, 1906, this part of the brother's business being under his management. He has also followed the tinner's trade in California. He is identified fraternally with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Fraternal Brotherhood, the Fraternal Aid, and in politics is a stanch Republican.

S. A. Waymire was married in 1905 to Miss Ada Brissenden, a native of Illinois, and they have one son, Robert. He is a member of the Knights of the Maccabees and Modern Woodmen of America, and politically votes the Republican ticket. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

F. D. Waymire is also a Republican politically and with his brothers wields a strong influence in political circles in the town. He has been very successful and owns a half interest in several lots in Long Beach.

MERRITT H. DAILEY. Probably there is no one in Los Angeles county who takes more pride in his ranch than M. H. Dailey, his tract of forty acres at Lemon being equally divided among oranges and walnuts. The entire ranch is under irrigation, water for which is supplied from a pumping station on the premises. Mr. Dailey's advent into California came about as the result of a visit to the state in 1902, in that year meeting with the Shriners in San Francisco. The impressions which he then gathered concerning the country and its possibilities were lasting ones, and it was in the fall of that year that he carried out his intentions to locate in the Land of Sunshine and Flowers.

Mr. Dailey is a native of New York state, born in Oakfield, Genesee county, June 15, 1848, into the home of Morril T. and Adelia Ann (Moody) Dailey, both of whom were natives of the Empire state also. By trade the father was a mechanic. During the Civil war he enlisted in Company H, Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, in which he served for three years, and during the engagement at Maryland Heights received an injury which later resulted in his death. Politically he was a believer in Republican principles, and with his wife was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of the five children originally comprised in the parental family only two are now living, M. H. and his sister, Mrs. Alice Talbot, the latter residing in Akron, Erie county, N. Y.

Mr. Dailey received a good education in the common schools of Oakfield, N. Y., and thereafter attended the Oakfield Collegiate Seminary. At the age of eighteen, when his school days were over, he went to Akron, Erie county, that state, and took up the study of dentistry, completing the course in New York City, where he passed his final examinations and received the title M. D. S. Going back to Akron he began the practice of dental surgery, later removing to Buffalo, and during the twenty-eight years which he practiced in these two cities became known as a thoroughly competent and conscientious practitioner. It was during this time, in 1902, that he came to California to meet with the Shriners in San Francisco. During the fall of the same year he located on his present ranch of forty acres near Lemon, Los Angeles county. Twenty acres are in walnuts, and the remainder of the land is set out to valencia and navel oranges, all of which are well adapted to this special climate and soil, and it is needless to say that he is making a success of his ranch. To some extent he has resumed the practice of his profession since coming to the west, but merely as an accommodation to friends and to keep occupied, rather than for financial gain.

In 1868 Mr. Dailey was married to Miss Annie E. Wainwright, a native of Akron, N. Y., who spent her entire life in the east. It was in the fall following her death, which occurred in April, 1902, that Mr. Dailey came to California, and in 1903 he was married to Miss Ella M. Persons, she also being a native of New York state. Politically Mr. Dailey is a Republican, and it was on the ticket of this party that he was elected town clerk of Newstead, Erie county, N. Y. His fraternal associations are numerous and include membership in Blue Lodge No. 527, A. F. & A. M., in Akron, N. Y.; Western Star Chapter No. 34, Batavia, N. Y.; Lake Erie Commandery No. 20, Buffalo, N. Y.; Ismalia Temple of Shriners, Buffalo, N. Y.; and he is also a member of Pomona Lodge No. 789, B. P. O. E., of Pomona. Since locating in the west he has united with the Visiting Shriners Club of Los Angeles. In the vicinity of his old home in the east he still owns considerable valuable property. Personally he is a man who makes friends readily, and what is still better, has the happy faculty of retaining them.

JOHN H. SCHINTZ. While making his home in California ever since early boyhood the duties attendant upon his various positions as steamship electrical engineer have taken Mr. Schintz to various parts of the world and particularly to lands lying on the shores of the Pacific ocean. Through his travels he has acquired a wide knowledge of people and nations, for his habits of close observation have enabled him, during brief stops at prominent ports, to gain a comprehensive idea of the locality, climate and people. During the period of his employment as steamship electrician he visited the Isthmus of Panama, the countries of Japan and China and even traveled as far as the island of Australia, as well as northward along the American coast as far as Puget Sound. No land, however, of those visited by him during his voyages seemed as fair as California nor does any country in his opinion offer more desirable opportunities to young men.

The Schintz family was founded in America by an attorney from Switzerland, who became a pioneer of Wisconsin and secured the first Havana tobacco seed ever planted in that state. The crop proved a success and the ensuing year he furnished seed free of charge to neighboring farmers who wished to embark in the raising of tobacco. Eventually he returned to his native land and there died. His son, John Henry, was born at Zurich, Switzerland, and engaged in the banking business in that city in early life, but after coming to America he engaged in agricultural pursuits and was a pioneer tobacco raiser of Wisconsin, where later he followed the building business in Oshkosh. Removing to California in 1876 he settled in San Francisco and engaged in the manufacture and sale of cigars, remaining in that city until his death in 1898. While living in Wisconsin he married Bertha Isler, who was born in Switzerland, thence came to the United States with her father and is now a resident of San Francisco.

The third in order of birth among six children, John H. Schintz was born in Oshkosh, Wis., February 12, 1871, and received a public-school education in San Francisco. Upon leaving school he became an apprentice to the trade of electrical engineer in San Francisco under D. D. Wass, with whom he served for three and one-half years. The first practical experience which he gained of his trade as a salaried worker was when acting as assistant to an engineer on a boat running to Coos Bay. After a year in that capacity he went to Panama as steamship electrician, and later sailed as electrician on the Mariposa to Sydney, Australia, via Honolulu and Auckland. On his return to California he was employed as electrician with the American Steamship Refinery Company A year later he was sent to China as sugar electrician on the Peru and during that voyage visited Japan and Yokohama. Returning to the United States he sailed for seven months on the Walla Walla between San Francisco and Puget Sound. At the expiration of that period of service he left the sea and in 1896 came to Los Angeles, but soon went to Chino as electrician with the American Beet Sugar Company, later filling the position of mechanical engineer. His residence in Oxnard dates from 1898, when he came to the new town as superintendent of the wiring of this plant, and aided in installing the machinery. Upon the starting of the plant in 1899 he was appointed electrician and mechanical engineer, and the following year became assistant engineer, since which time he has remained with the company, and is regarded as a thoroughly trustworthy and efficient engineer.

The comfortable home owned by Mr. Schintz and erected under his supervision stands on South C and Seventh streets. It is presided over by his wife formerly Miss Claudia B. Portillo, who was born in Mexico, but from girlhood made her home in Pomona, where her marriage was solemnized. Their family consists of four children, John Henry, Irene Clara, Arthur and Marie Patricia. Since coming to Oxnard Mr. Schintz has affiliated himself with the Citizens Club and the Sons of Herman, and has given his support to all measures for the permanent advancement of the city.

S. A. CLINE. The interests with which Mr. Cline has been identified since beginning his business life have been of a varied nature and indicate his adaptability to different enterprises and the resourcefulness of his mind. By trade he is a cooper, a business which he followed more or less prior to coming to California in 1876, but after locating here gave his attention particularly to ranching until establishing himself in the express business, in which he is making an eminent success.

Born in New York state May 28, 1843, S. A. Cline is a son of John A. Cline, the latter a wheelwright by trade, who in his boyhood was a close friend of Peter Cooper, the noted inventor, manufacturer and philanthropist. Many of the wagons turned out of Mr. Cline's shop were shipped to the southern states. He gave up following his trade after locating in Rochester, becoming interested in the real-estate business instead. It was while a resident of the latter city that he was united in marriage with Catherine North, and to them were born two children.

When fourteen years old, his school days over, S. A. Cline began an apprenticeship at the cooper's trade, which he later followed for eight years in both New York City and Rochester. The call to arms to aid in the suppression of hostilities which had arisen between the north and the south caused thousands of young, able-bodied men to desert business for duty to home and country, and among this number was Mr. Cline. In April, 1861, he enlisted in the Thirteenth New York Infantry, and after the term of his nine months enlistment had expired he went to Detroit, Mich., and enlisted in the Seventeenth Michigan Infantry. After a service of two years in that company he was transferred to the Second Michigan Infantry. His war record shows him to have been a participant in numerous battles and skirmishes, among the former being the battle of Bull Run, siege at Knoxville, battle of Lowden, Vicksburg and Jackson, Tenn., and he was in the battles of the Wilderness and Petersburg. His honorable discharge was tendered him in Detroit, Mich., in 1865, after four years of faithful service.

Returning to New York state, Mr. Cline left there soon afterward to take up work in the oil fields of Pennsylvania, and three years later resumed work at the cooper's trade in the Empire state. His next removal was to Michigan, locating first in Detroit and then in East Saginaw. In that state he engaged in the stone business, taking out rock that was used in the construction of the state prison. From Black Rock, N. Y., a suburb of Buffalo, whither he later returned, he went to Rochester, going from there to Chicago, Ill., but soon afterward went to New York state and remained one year. He next went to Philadelphia, Pa., later returning again to the Empire state, whence he left for Iowa in 1871. From Iowa he went to Nebraska, taking up a homestead claim in the vicinity of Lincoln, after which he was in Des Moines, Iowa, for a short time. The next two years were spent in Nebraska, after which, in 1876, he came to California, as previously stated. In the vicinity of Kingsburg, Fresno county, he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land which at first he devoted to general farming, but later set out one hundred and forty acres to grapes and ten acres to prunes. From Fresno county he went to Hanford, Kings county, from there coming to Los Angeles in 1896. After one year's residence in the city he made his home in Pasadena for nine months, in 1898 coming to San Pedro, which has since been the scene of his activities. Although he has changed his place of residence many times since leaving the parental home it is safe to predict that he will spend the remainder of his life in this town, as he has erected a beautiful family residence and given evidence of his contentment with the locality in various ways.

In Iowa, in 1874, Mr. Cline married Elizabeth Case, who was born in Kansas, and they have three children, as follows: Fred and Harry, both of whom are married and live in San Pedro; and Edith. In memory of the years spent on the battle-field in the service of his country Mr. Cline finds recreation in associating with old comrades in Harbor City Post, G. A. R., of which he is a valued and interesting member.

WILLIAM REIMANN. The life history of William Reimann, who is one of the leading ranchmen of Oxnard, Ventura county, is a forcible illustration of the exercise of perseverance and resolution under the pressure of financial disaster as well as amid the sunshine of prosperity. Coming here from the Fatherland nearly twenty years ago, he embarked in agricultural pursuits, and, although he has met with reverses, at one time being entirely burned out, he has surmounted all obstacles, and is now numbered among the substantial farmers and the most respected citizens of this part of the country. A son of Christopher Reimann, he was born, January 5, 1844, in Sachsen, Germany, where he lived until six years old. His father spent his entire life in Germany, his birth occurring in 1800, in Sachsen, and his death in 1878. His wife, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Drost, spent her fifty years of life in the Fatherland dying in 1866.

Removing with his parents to Hanover, Germany, in 1850, William Reimann was there reared and educated. He subsequently learned the trade of a furniture maker, serving an apprenticeship of three years, in addition paying to his employer $30 in money. He afterwards followed his trade in his native land, but not finding it sufficiently remunerative determined to see what he could do in a newer country. Accordingly, in 1884, leaving his family at home, he came to California, and for two years remained here, in the meantime visiting the more important cities and towns. Going back to Germany in 1886, he spent two years in his native land, and May 27, 1888, he returned with his family to this state, coming with a party of twelve people. He located at once on his present ranch, starting in as a farmer by buying out the horses, farm machinery, etc., of a neighboring ranchman. He had just become well established in his agricultural venture when, November 5, 1888, he was entirely burned out by a prairie fire that began on Las Pasos hill, losing his house, furniture, farming machinery, wagons, six hundred and fifty sacks of barley, one hundred sacks of corn, all of his hay, and in fact nearly all of his property. Nothing daunted, however, he borrowed money, paying twelve per cent interest, and began life again, poor, indeed, and at one time being in debt to the amount of $10,000. Even with this heavy financial burden to carry, with the able assistance of his son John, he paid the entire sum, and has now a clear title to eighty-seven acres of choice land, in the managent of which he is meeting with well deserved success.

In 1868, in Rollshausen, Germany, Mr. Reimann married Catherine Kreis, who was born February 13, 1843, in Hanover, a daughter of John and Thesa (Truemper) Kreis. Her parents were life-long residents of Germany, her mother dying there in 1866, aged fifty-one years, and her father in 1891, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Reimann two children have been born, namely: John William, whose birth occurred March 20, 1869, in Germany, and Margaret, born May 4, 1874, and now the wife of G. Gisler, of whom a brief sketch may be found elsewhere in this volume.

John William Reimann was educated in Germany, and, when a young man, learned the barber's trade, which he followed for some time. On November 5, 1886, he started for the United States, crossing the ocean to New York, from there coming by way of New Orleans to Los Angeles. He subsequently worked at his trade in San Luis Obispo for a time, after which he joined his father on the home ranch, and in its development and improvement has since been a most capable and active assistant. He is a man of undoubted integrity and worth, much esteemed throughout the community as a loyal and true citizen of his adopted country. He is a member of the German National Society of California, and also belongs to the Sons of Herman Society.

J. C. SHERER. Active, energetic and enterprising, J. C. Sherer holds an assured position among the foremost citizens of Glendale, and is widely known as one of its most able business men. For twenty-five years or more he has been a resident of this locality and in its affairs has ever evinced a deep interest, generously devoting his energies, time and attention in aid of enterprises calculated to promote progress and prosperity.

Born and reared in the east Mr. Sherer received excellent educational advantages, attending the State Normal school at Millersville, Pa., and afterwards being graduated from Eastman's Business College in Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Subsequently acquiring a thorough knowledge of telegraphy, he secured a position as operator in Philadelphia, where he remained for awhile. In 1875 he came to California, and here followed his profession in different places, first in San Francisco, then in Yreka, from there going to Kibesillah, Mendocino county. In 1878 he located in Los Angeles, where for upwards of ten years he was telegraph operator for the Western Union Telegraph Company and also for the Postal Telegraph Company for three years. Giving up that business for a time he was connected with the Los Angeles Times as a reporter for a number of months, being afterward engaged in the water pipe business in Glendale prior to the collapse of the boom. When that came he returned to the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and for a time was also assistant agent in Minneapolis, Minn., for the Southern California Fruit Exchange, which he helped to organize, later continuing as a telegraph operator for several years.

With many of the improvements that have assisted in the upbuilding of Glendale within the last twenty-five years Mr. Sherer has been a promoter, contributing his full share as a loyal and public-spirited citizen. He assisted in developing the water supply of this locality, and filling at different times the offices of president, secretary and treasurer of the Paduga Canon Water Company. In May, 1905, when the State Bank of Glendale was organized, he was made cashier, and although without previous experience in this capacity, he has filled this position of responsibility in a most satisfactory and praiseworthy manner. This institution is favorably known and well conducted, the directors being J. C. Kays, of Los Angeles, president; Dr. D. W. Hunt, vice-president; J. F. McIntire, Capt. C. E. Thom, B. F. Patterson, Elias Ayers and James H. Wells.

Mr. Sherer was united in marriage in Los Angeles with Miss E. C. Parker, of Boston, Mass. Politically Mr. Sherer is a Republican, and religiously he belongs to the Presbyterian Church. He is connected with one secret organization, being a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood. He has accumulated some property, among his real estate holdings being a valuable deciduous fruit ranch of fourteen acres at the corner of Verdugo road and Ninth street. Since the organization of Glendale as a city he has filled the office of treasurer.

ROBERT EDWARD DANCER. Enterprising and progressive, Robert E. Dancer has succeeded in building up for himself a competence, while at the same time he has won a place among the representative citizens of Bassett. He is of southern birth and breeding, his birth having occurred in Alcorn county, Miss., April 18, 1868; his father, Elisha Dancer, was born in England and while still a child was brought to America by his parents, who located in Georgia, where he was reared to manhood. He eventually removed to Mississippi, where he followed his trade of machinist. He died in 1873, and his wife, formerly Jemima Wardlow, born in North Carolina of Scotch-Irish ancestry, in 1875.

The boyhood days of Robert Edward Dancer were passed in Mississippi, where he attended the public schools until thirteen years old, when his parents having died, he came to California with his Grandmother Bird. They located in Downey and he there continued his education, attending the public school at El Monte for a short time also, having removed hither in 1883. His first independent venture was as a farm hand, working by the month, and in 1893, with his accumulated earnings, he engaged in farming for himself. The raising of alfalfa and general farming occupied his time until 1904, when he purchased a thirty-four acre tract in Bassett and at once began its improvement and cultivation, putting in a pumping plant and installing a fifty-four horse power gas engine with a capacity of one hundred and seventy-five inches. He devotes his own ranch to walnuts and alfalfa, and also manages a ranch in El Monte.

In Artesia Mr. Dancer married Miss Carrie Law, a native of Illinois, and her death occurred in Artesia some time later. He was afterward married to Miss Edith Cuddeback, who was born in Tehachapi, Cal. They have three children, Vera, Vada and Lloyd. Mr. Dancer is a member of the Christian Church, while his wife belongs to the Baptist denomination. Mr. Dancer is a Democrat politically and fraternally belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America.

SAMUEL N. CURRY. With an unimpeachable record of about twenty years as a business man in Texas and Louisiana Mr. Curry came to Pomona in 1900 and began dealing in real estate, a business for which he seems to have a special aptitude, judging from the enormous volume of business which he has transacted during the last six years. This has not been accomplished, however, at the sacrifice of honor, but is the result of honest, painstaking efforts, and those in a position to know are responsible for the statement that he bears the reputation of being the most reliable real-estate dealer in Pomona.

A descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestors, Isaac Curry, the grandfather, was born in Virginia, where as a farmer he made his home until removing to Tennessee. In Maury county, in that state, his son Green B. was born, he too following farming throughout his active years. From Tennessee he enlisted as a soldier in the Civil war, being wounded in the course of his service. Up to the time of the war he had been a resident of Tennessee continuously, but afterward he removed to Texas, and at the advanced age of eighty-four years he still makes his home there. At one time in his career he was active in the Masonic fraternity. The wife and mother, who was of Scotch descent, was before her marriage Margaret Thompson, and was born in Tennessee. She survived to reach her eighty-fifth year, dying in Texas in May, 1906. Ten children were originally comprised in the parental family, but of the number only six are now living.

Next to the oldest in the family was Samuel N. Curry, who was born in Maury county, Tenn., May 23, 1853. His earliest recollections take him back in memory to the homestead farm in that county, where he was reared and educated, and he also recalls the blighting effect of the Civil war. He was then a lad of about eight years, and was attending private school, but owing to the unsettled condition of affairs in the south retrenchment was necessary on all sides and his schooling was therefore very limited. It was about 1871 that the family removed to Ellis county, Tex., and on the farm that his father purchased in the vicinity of Waxahachie he worked as his father's assistant until twenty-seven years of age. He then established domestic ties and at the same time located on an adjoining farm and engaged in general farming and stock-raising. Subsequently he relinquished agricultural life entirely, and removing into Waxahachie in 1880, followed the livery business for the succeeding five years. From there in 1890 he removed into the adjoining state of Louisiana, settling in the rice-producing section around Crowley, Acadia county. There he purchased a plantation devoted to rice culture and for nine years was a planter in that vicinity, besides which he engaged in the agricultural implement business in Crowley. It was with this business experience that he came to Pomona in 1900 and opened a real-estate office, the nucleus of the business now conducted under the name of S. N. Curry & Co. Since 1906 W. O. Rogers has been associated with Mr. Curry. Among the numerous transactions that have passed through their hands may be mentioned the ten-acre high school tract, which they laid out into lots, besides the Lothrop tract. While they do a general real-estate business, yet their specialty is dealing in orange groves, having handled upwards of $500,000 in this class of property alone. Of this amount $300,000 has come from settlers from Crowley, La., which is a high testimonial to Mr. Curry's judgment and shows the confidence in which he is held by his former business and social acquaintances. The firm also make loans on good security and write insurance, their office at No. 321 West Second street being a busy center of activity. Besides his interest in the business just mentioned Mr. Curry also owns a thirty-acre orange grove in Pomona valley and twenty-two acres in walnuts, both of which are in bearing condition and bring him in a handsome income. His interest in horticulture is further shown in his connection with the California Produce Company, of which he is a director.

Mr. Curry's marriage, which occurred in Waxahachie, Tex., united him with Miss Frankie Farrar, who was born in that state, and two children, Katie and Earl, have been born to them. The family find their church home in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Mr. and Mrs. Curry are members, and he is now filling the office of class-leader. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, and politically he is a Democrat and a member of the county central committee. He is also a member of the Board of Trade of Pomona.

JOHN W. CRUICKSHANK. It was in 1886 that John W. Cruickshank came to California and began to ply his trade as carpenter in San Bernardino, and in the twenty years which have since elapsed he has steadily pushed forward in his work and business until now he has reached a top place as a lumber manufacturer and has acquired a large amount of property. A native of Aberdeen, Scotland, born November 21, 1865, he is a descendant of an old family of Jacobites, his grandfather, James, having been an adherent of that faith. The father, William, was by occupation a farmer, and spent his entire lifetime in Scotland, he being a stanch Presbyterian in his religious faith. The mother, Helen Stephenson, was born in Iverness, Scotland, and also lived in that country until the time of her death. She was the mother of eight children, seven of whom survive, and one son, William, is now engaged in horticultural pursuits in Rialto.

The boyhood days of John W. Cruickshank were spent upon the farm in Scotland, and until seventeen years of age his time was devoted to securing a good common-school education. He was then apprenticed as a carpenter near Aberdeen, and for four years worked at that trade and in the planing mill of the firm to whom he was apprenticed. He was an ambitious young man and the hard work of the day did not deter him from acquiring additional education in a night school, taking up the study of architecture and drawing, for he realized that to attain the highest success one must be thoroughly equipped with a comprehensive knowledge of every line of the work one adopts. One month after the expiration of his time of apprenticeship he took passage to New York City, arriving there in the spring of 1886. September of the same year found him in San Bernardino, where he secured employment as a carpenter and worked at the trade until he became a foreman. He then took up independent contracting and built many residences in that city, among them being those of W. E. Leonard, F. A. Leonard, Will Curtis and Dan Dedick, and he also filled a contract for the erection of the Barton block and the Presbyterian Church.

Determining to branch out more extensively, Mr. Cruickshank in 1902 came to Long Beach and started the Alamitos Lumber Company, locating the plant on Alamitos and Second streets. Two years later he sold out to the Interstate Lumber Company, in which he in turn acquired an interest and was made a director of the company and superintendent of the plant, and although he resigned from his positions in 1905 he still retains an interest in the business. In 1906 he started and incorporated the Home Mill and Lumber Company, of which he is now president and manager, built the present mill and yards on Anaheim road and American avenue, installed modern machinery and a thirty-horsepower electric power plant in the quarters, which are 150x340 feet in dimensions. The mill and yards employ fourteen hands, and here are manufactured all kinds of finished lumber materials, including doors and window sash.

Mr. Cruickshank was married in San Bernardino to Miss Melissa Furey, a native of Pennsylvania, and they have become the parents of four children, William F., Bernard A., Helen E. and Ruth Marian. The family residence is located on Ocean and Alamitos avenues, and was erected by Mr. Cruickshank. He is a member of the Long Beach Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, and served one term as city building inspector, having been the first appointee to that office after the reorgaization. Fraternally he is a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 390, I. O. O. F., and a director and secretary of the I. O. O. F. Building Association; of the Woodmen of the World, and the Foresters. He is an active member of the United Presbyterian Church, of which he is treasurer and trustee. Politically he is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party, and in all matters of social or civic interest lends his support to those enterprises which tend to elevate and upbuild the community.

FRANCIS F. CULVER. Conspicuous among the early pioneer settlers of California was Francis F. Culver, late of Compton, who was a resident of the state for upwards of half a century, and in the development and advancement of its mining, agricultural, industrial and financial activities took a prominent part. He witnessed many wonderful transformations in the face of the country, the pathless forests and dreary waste lands being made habitable by the hard labor of the first settlers, and the small hamlets and mining camps of the early days developing into thriving villages and populous towns and cities. Of old colonial stock, and the descendant of a representative New England family, he was born, January 28, 1821, in Poultney, Rutland county, Vt., and died at his home in Compton, Cal., September 25, 1905, beloved and respected by the community in which he had so long resided. His parents, Isaac and Maria (Reed) Culver, were born and reared in New England, and were there married. After living in Vermont for several years, they removed to New York, and there spent the remainder of their lives.

Brought up beneath the parental roof-tree, Francis F. Culver received better educational advantages than many of boys of his times, being graduated from high school, seminary and university. While still a young man, early in 1849, he with several companions bought the Edward Everett, a sailing vessel, which was the first boat to leave Boston harbor for California. They came by way of Cape Horn to the Golden Gate, arriving in San Francisco on July 6. Their cargo included a small steamboat, the first steamer ever seen on the Sacramento river, where it remained in service for many years, being used for passenger and freight service. Going subsequently to the mines, Mr. Culver met with good success in his operations, and afterwards invested his money in land, finally turning his attention to agricultural pursuits. For a number of years he was thus employed in Compton, but in the latter part of his long life lived retired from active business, enjoying in comfort and leisure the golden fruits of his former years of labor.

May 17, 1852, in Lewiston, N. Y., Mr. Culver married Henrietta M. Raymond, a daughter of Caleb and Sophronia (Smith) Raymond, both of whom spent the closing years of their lives in New York state. Mr. and Mrs. Culver reared five children, namely: Ella R., wife of T. F. Ross, of Compton; Mae, wife of Benton Flood, living at No. 947 Georgia street, Los Angeles; Frank F., a wood and coal dealer, and with his wife, formerly Lizzie McMullan, is living at No. 1331 Hobson street, Los Angeles; William B., engaged in ranching in Newhall, this county, and who by his marriage with Eva Stevens, has nine children; and Frederick M., of Orange county, a ranchman, who married Agnes Fairchilds. Politically Mr. Culver was identified with the Republican party, and religiously he was an official member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his widow is also a member. Both Mr. and Mrs. Culver united with the Pioneers' Association several years ago, and contributed towards its support and its prosperity.

WILLIAM CAMERON DAVIS. In the vicinity of El Monte is located the walnut ranch of thirty-seven acres which belongs to William C. Davis, who came to this section in 1893 and has since accumulated a substantial property, and at the same time has built up for himself a place among the respected and esteemed citizens of the community. He is a native of Milton, Rock county, Wis., born December 24, 1843. The family was originally located in New York, where the grandfather, Jeremiah, lived and died. Jeremiah R. Davis was born in Allegany county, N. Y., and there married. With his wife he settled as a pioneer in Milton, Wis., and there both passed away at advanced ages. They became the parents of ten children, of whom eight attained maturity, two sons serving in the Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry during the Civil war. Both survived the perils and hardships of active warfare and returned to civic life, Joseph locating in Iowa, where his death occurred.

The youngest child in the large family born to his parents, William Cameron Davis was reared to young manhood on the paternal farm and was early instilled with the principles characteristic of his forefathers. Following his public-school training he entered Milton College, which he left in 1861 to become a soldier in Company K, Thirteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in at Janesville and with his regiment was at once sent to Kansas, engaging in various skirmishes during the first year; 1862 was passed in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi and the balance of the time in the southern states. He was mustered out of service in Nashville, Tenn., in January, 1865, when he returned to Wisconsin.

Casting about for a future, Mr. Davis was attracted to Pennsylvania by the oil excitement, and in Pitt Hole City was employed in every department of the oil industry. He purchased a boat and transported oil down Oil creek to Oil City, Reno and Pittsburg for some years, following which, from 1865 to 1893, he operated in various fields throughout Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio. Withdrawing his interests in that connection, Mr. Davis came to California and in the vicinity of El Monte purchased a tract of seventeen acres, which he has since set out in walnuts, improving and cultivating the property, and adding to it by the purchase of two ten-acre tracts, all in the same district and all being set to walnuts. All improvements have been made entirely by his own efforts and are a credit to this section of the country, evidencing both the industry and the ability of the owner. Besides giving his attention to horticulture he has also spent one year in the oil business in the Whittier field and two years in the Fullerton field, with the Puente Oil Company.

In Cedar Falls, Iowa, Mr. Davis was married to Miss Nancy B. Henry, who was born in Jamestown, Pa., and died in California in October, 1901. They became the parents of three children, of whom Lee W. died in youth; Frank H. died at the age of twenty-seven years; and Claude W. died at the age of twenty years. December 19, 1906, Mr. Davis was united in marriage with Miss Mary A. Newman, a native of Wisconsin. In his fraternal relations he is quite prominent, having been made a Mason in Oil Creek Lodge No. 303, in Titusville, Pa., raised to the degree of Royal Arch in the same city, and later to the degree of Knight Templar in Rose Croix Commandery No. 38, also in Titusville. He is now identified with Lexington Lodge No. 104, F. & A. M., in El Monte. He is a Republican in politics and a stanch adherent of party principles.

BARTON WALTER DANCER. The greater part of the life of Barton W. Dancer has been passed in El Monte and its vicinity, where he has improved three different ranches and has been largely instrumental in the upbuilding of this section. He was born in Corinth, Miss., January 17, 1870, a son of Elisha Dancer, who was born in England and brought to America by his parents in childhood. He was reared in Georgia, but in manhood located in Mississippi, where he engaged as a machinist until his death, which occurred in 1873. His wife, formerly Jemima Wardlow, was born in North Carolina, the representative of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and died in Mississippi in 1875.

Of the four children born to his parents, Barton Walter Dancer was next to the youngest and was but three years old at the time of his father's death and five when he lost his mother. In 1881 he came to California with his maternal grandmother, Mrs. Emily (Wardlow) Bird, who located in Artesia, and in that place he received his education in the public schools. His first employment was as a farm hand at the age of eighteen years, and shortly afterward he purchased ten acres of land three-quarters of a mile northeast of El Monte. This property he immediately set out to walnuts, put in a pumping plant, and at the same time raised alfalfa. Later he sold the property, realizing handsome returns from his efforts. His next purchase consisted of thirty acres in the vicinity of his first home, and here he also set out walnuts, installing a pumping plant, and proceeded to a cultivation of the place. After disposing of the property he purchased fifty acres at Bassett, and again installed a pumping plant, set out walnuts and began the raising of alfalfa. This property he sold seven months later at a profit of $7,000, in the three years thus occupied having cleared $15,000 above all expenses. These properties have since sold for additional profit.

In 1903 Mr. Dancer located in El Monte and is now engaged in the real-estate business. He built a residence on Tyler street, where he now makes his home, and which is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Bessie L. Beck, a native of El Monte. She is a daughter of John Beck, Jr., a native of Texas, and a granddaughter of John Beck, Sr., who removed from Indiana to Texas and thence crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1854 and located in El Monte. He engaged in freighting to Virginia City, being the pioneer freighter over the Tehachapi mountains. He had ten yoke of oxen to pull one thousand pounds, he having to break the trail. Later he removed to San Jose and engaged as a cattleman and farmer. After twelve years he returned to El Monte and followed farming for some years, finally locating permanently in San Jose, where he is now living retired from the active cares of life. He married Annie Burke, who was born in Texas and died in El Monte. She had eight children, all of whom are now deceased. John Beck, Jr., was a farmer and died in San Jose at the age of twenty-eight years. His wife, formerly Katie Powell, passed away in Orange, Cal. She was a daughter of John Powell, a pioneer of Los Angeles, where he died. They were the parents of three children, of whom Mrs. Dancer is the youngest. Mr. and Mrs. Dancer have three children, Winnie, Charles and Zola. Mr. Dancer belongs to the Christian Church, while his wife is a Baptist. Politically he is a Democrat.

CHARLES CHAPMAN COX. Very early in the colonial history of our county the Cox family became identified with the settlement of the Carolinas and aided in the development of raw tracts of land into valuable plantations. The genealogical records trace the lineage from John Cox, a native of South Carolina and a planter by occupation, to his son, William H., who was a civil engineer and planter and for thirty years held office as county surveyor. Next in line of descent was S. S., who was born in Chesterfield county, S. C., and followed his father's occupations of planter, civil engineer and surveyor. During 1857 he moved across the line into North Carolina and settled at Lilesville, Anson county. As a civil engineer in the engineering department he served under General Beauregard in the Civil war. Removing to Arkansas in 1868 he settled in Pike county, where he was engaged as a civil engineer and filled the office of county surveyor. Eventually he removed to Texas and settled on a grain and stock ranch near Jewett, Leon county, where he remained until his death in 1903, at the age of seventy-seven years. Fraternally he was a Mason and in religious connections, with his wife, held membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife, like himself, was a native of South Carolina and a descendant of an old southern family. She was a daughter of John Chapman, who was of English descent and who followed the builder's trade in the south. Two years before the death of her husband she passed away in Texas at seventy-eight years of age.

Four sons comprised the family of S. S. and Sarah (Chapman) Cox, and three are still living, Charles C. being the eldest of the family and the only one to settle in California. Born at Chesterfield, S. C., January 27, 1856, he was one year old when the family removed to Lilesville, N. C., and there he laid the foundation of his education in the common schools. Indelibly impressed upon his mind are the days of the Civil war, with their anxieties, privations and perils, and though he was but a small child at the time he has a keen recollection of what the war meant to his own people and to the country. At the age of twelve years, in 1868, he accompanied the family to Arkansas, where for a time he attended school. After moving to Texas in 1872 he was a student in the academy at Rogers Prairie, Leon county. At the age of nineteen years he began to teach school and for two years followed the occupation in Texas, after which he taught for one year in Clark county, Ark., and then turned his attention to the carpenter's trade. Considerable success met his efforts as a carpenter and thus he was led to take up contracting. In May of 1887 he came to San Diego, where he has since engaged in contracting and building. Among his contracts were those for the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium and the residences of L. Brinton, H. E. Mills and James Connell. Meanwhile he has erected two houses on his own property, one of these being at No. 3680 Fourth street, where he and his wife now reside. Mrs. Cox was formerly Miss Elizabeth Brinton, of Arkansas, and was born in Pennsylvania. In religious connections they are identified with the First Presbyterian Church of San Diego, while fraternally they affiliate with the Knights and Ladies of Security. Along the line of his chosen occupation Mr. Cox holds membership with the Master Builders' Association and maintains a deep and constant interest in all measures for the benefit of builders and the permanent progress of their work.

J. E. MORRELL. The commercial interests of Redondo have a capable representative in the person of J. E. Morrell, who since July, of 1902, has made his home in this place and has acted as agent for the wholesale grain firm of Newmark & Edwards, having charge of their business at this point. Since 1904 he has been in partnership with P. S. Venable, under the firm name of P. S. Venable & Co., street contractors. Another enterprise receiving his attention and financial co-operation is the Redondo Milling Company, in which he maintains an active interest.

In that portion of East Tennessee lying between Virginia on the north and North Carolina on the south Mr. Morrell first opened his eyes to the light. His parents, J. W. and Anna (Edwards) Morrell, were natives of Tennessee, the former descended from a colonial family of Virginia. By occupation a miner, after he came to California in 1887, he settled at Gonzales, Monterey county, and later became interested in the mines of Sierra county, where he still conducts a general mining business, but makes his home in Florida. While living in Monterey county he was bereaved by the death of his wife. Five children were born of their union, all still living, the eldest of these being J. E., who was born in Washington county, Tennessee., near Bluff City, February 18, 1875, and was fourteen years of age when the family established their home in the west. After completing the studies of the grammar schools he became clerk in a grocery and subsequently learned the grain business while employed by a grain company. In 1896 he entered the Los Angeles Business College and the following year was graduated, after which he became bookkeeper with the Southern Pacific Milling Company of Gonzales. In the employ of the same company he was stationed consecutively at Gonzales, Guadaloupe, Lompac and Oxnard. On his return to Los Angeles he became a bookkeeper with the grain firm of Newmark & Edwards, in whose interests he came to Redondo to assume the management of their business at this place.

The marriage of Mr. Morrell took place at Guadaloupe, this state, and united him with Miss Alice McPhaul, daughter of William and Alice (Battles) McPhaul, natives respectively of North Carolina and Erie county, Pennsylvania. When a young man Mr. McPhaul sought the opportunities of the then undeveloped coast regions and for years carried on an extensive business as a sheep-raiser. Since his death, which occurred at Guadaloupe, his widow has remained at the old homestead in that town. Mrs. Morrell was born and educated in Guadaloupe, and was the third in a family comprising four daughters and one son. Of her marriage there is one son, Lyman Hadley, who is receiving his education in the schools of Los Angeles county. While he has never been an ardent politician Mr. Morrell keeps thoroughly posted concerning the issues confronting our government and in his views coincides with the Democratic party.

CYRUS MASON PARSONS. A thoroughly successful man and one who occupies a conspicuous place in affairs is C. M. Parsons, who by his business ability and genuine worth as a man has become a prominent and influential factor in the well-being of Claremont. With a wealth of experience to his credit gained in the southern and middle-west states he came to Claremont in 1903 and as in his previous places of residence he threw his whole soul into the opportunities which awaited him, thus enriching and strengthening his own native capabilities and at the same time adding another pillar of strength to each and every organization to which he lent his name and influence. He is president of the Citizens' State Bank of Claremont, is interested in the Savings Bank and Trust Company of Pomona, is a director in the Citizens' Light and Water Company of Claremont, and is secretary and treasurer of the Claremont Inn. In addition to these numerous and important business connections he is also interested in the Crossett Lumber Company of Arkansas and the Jackson Lumber Company in Florida and Alabama.

Mr. Parsons is a native of the middle west, born near Davenport, Iowa, January 14, 1856, the son of C. M. and Eliza (Hazen) Parsons, both of whom were born in Massachusetts. On the maternal side he is descended from good old Revolutionary stock, Great-grandfather Hazen being a participant in that conflict. During the '40s C. M. Parsons, Sr., immigrated to what at that time was considered the frontier, and as a pioneer farmer in Scott county, Iowa, he cultivated the virgin soil in that vicinity until his removal to Tabor, that state, in the latter place becoming interested in the lumber business. He is now a resident of Claremont, Cal., as is also his wife, and at the respective ages of eighty-one and seventy-six years both are in excellent health, with faculties still acute. Seven children were born to this worthy couple, but two of the number are deceased. The eldest, C. H., is a resident of Pasadena; C. M. is the next in order of birth; A. H. is in the real-estate business in Salt Lake City; H. E. is a grain merchant in Philo, Champaign county, Ill.; and Walter M., a graduate of Grinnell College, has for many years been connected with the noble work of the Y. M. C. A. organization; for years he was assistant state secretary of Iowa, and is now one of the international secretaries, his territory covering southwestern Canada and the northwestern part of the United States, his headquarters being in Minneapolis.

The early years of C. M. Parsons were associated with the locality around Davenport, Iowa, and at the age of twenty years he began his self-supporting career by teaching school in Scott county, that state, following this for three years. From 1880 until 1893 he engaged in farming in Iowa, in the latter year removing to Fordyce, Ark., where he became interested in the lumber business. The Fordyce Lumber Company, with which he then associated himself and with which he was locally connected for four years, make a specialty of the manufacture of yellow pine, having a capacity for turning out one hundred and twenty thousand feet per day. Though still retaining his interest in the company he removed to Tabor, Iowa, in 1887 and established himself in the retail lumber business, but sold out six years later to take up his residence in the west. However, he still retains his interest in the Fordyce Lumber Company, as he does also with the Crossett Lumber Company of Arkansas, and the Jackson Lumber Company, which latter has offices in Florida and Alabama. In coming to Claremont Mr. Parsons had definite plans laid for making his permanent residence here, in evidence of which he purchased a fine residence on Alexander and Harrison streets, where with his family he now makes his home. The existence of the Citizens' State Bank of Claremont is a result of the personal efforts of W. N. Beach, who after working up the project enlisted the co-operation of Mr. Graham and Mr. Parsons. The officers of the institution are C. M. Parsons, president; George Jencks, vice-president; Mr. Graham, L. N. Smith, W. N. Beach, George Jencks and C. M. Parsons, directors. Mr. Parsons is also secretary and treasurer of the Claremont Inn, which was erected during the same year, is a director in the Citizens' Light and Water Company, and is connected with numerous other enterprises, both here and in Pomona.

In Scott county, Iowa, Mr. Parsons was married to Miss Mary A. Gates, a native of that county, and six children have been born to them: Jessie; Walter H., who graduated from Pomona College in 1904 and is now connected with the Crossett Lumber Company, of Crossett, Ark.; Nellie, a student of Pomona College, class of 1907; Hazen, who is a student in that institution and will graduate with the class of 1909; Cornelia, a member of the senior class preparatory; and Howard, the youngest of the family. Both Mr. Parsons and his wife are members of the Congregational Church, he being chairman of the board of trustees, and also a member of the building committee of the new church. The work of the latter body bore fruit in the erection of the beautiful house of worship which was dedicated and occupied for the first time in June of 1906. Politically Mr. Parsons gives his support to the Prohibitionist cause, and fraternally he affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America, belonging to the camp at Claremont.

NIELS PETER JOHNSON. Perhaps no example could be found on Los Angeles county more significant of the opportunities offered by this portion of the state than that furnished by the life of Niels P. Johnson, who settled on his ranch near Pomona at a time when there was nothing to intercept the view from his ranch to the heart of the city. His ranch is a part of what is known as the Kingsley tract, and was formerly used as a sheep range. At the time he took possession of it in 1883 it held forth little inducement as a future garden spot, but Mr. Johnson had wisely chosen this particular portion on account of the water facilities, which he observed were excellent, and the wisdom of his judgment and foresight has been borne out in the results of later years. The Kingsley Tract Water Company, Limited, supplies the adjacent country with an abundance of water, and this too at a much lower rate than prevails in any other part of Southern California.

As is the case with many of California's thrifty ranchers, Mr. Johnson is of foreign birth, born in Aalborg, Jutland, Denmark, February 3, 1843, the descendant of an old Copenhagen family. In that city his step-father, Ferdinand Nielson, was born and followed the trade of butcher. His wife, Petrea Nielson, was a native of Aalborg, she too coming of an old-established family in Denmark. Of the three children born to his parents Niels P. was the eldest, and was educated in the public schools of Aalborg. From the age of fourteen until seventeen he applied himself to learning the butcher's trade, but instead of following it he went to sea and for about three years was engaged in the coasting trade, visiting many of the principal European ports. Subsequently he returned to Denmark and worked at his trade until May, 1866, when he set sail from Copenhagen, by way of Hamburg and Liverpool, for New York. He arrived at his destination without mishaps to mar the journey and from New York proceeded direct to Chicago, Ill. Soon afterward, however, he made his way to Oconto, Oconto county, Wis., where he was employed by a lumber company for six years. Later he became interested in farming in that vicinity, clearing a thirty-acre farm from the wilderness and making of it a valuable tract. Disposing of his Wisconsin interests in 1878 he went to Franklin county, Iowa, that year, purchasing eighty acres of new land ten miles west of Hampton. Three years later, however, he removed still further west, coming to the Pacific coast in 1881, and after spending one year in San Francisco and the same length of time in Bridgeport, Mono county, he began his career in Pomona in 1883. His first purchase in the Kingsley tract consisted of five acres and was located east of San Antonio and south of San Bernardino avenue. Two shacks constituted the only improvement on the place, but he immediately erected a two-room house for the accommodation of his family. From time to time additions were made to this structure and a very commodious and comfortable residence has been developed therefrom. San Antonio cañon furnishes an ample supply of water for irrigating purposes, while two artesian wells supply an abundance of pure and deliciously cool water for domestic purposes. During the fall of 1883 Mr. Johnson set out a small portion of his ranch to oranges, continuing to improve his ranch in this way from year to year, until in four seasons he had the entire tract of five acres in Washington navels, and now he justly claims one of the finest and most productive orange groves in this part of the state. Mr. Johnson was one of the most earnest workers in behalf of the organization of the Pomona branch of the Southern California Fruit Growers' Association, of which he has been an influential member ever since it became a reality.

In Oconto, Wis., September 6, 1868, Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Anna Marie Lasson, like himself a native of Aalborg, Denmark, and a daughter of Peter Lasson, a native of Jutland and a brickmason by trade. Both Mr. Lasson and his wife, formerly Christine Mathiason, also a native of Aalborg, are deceased, and of their eight children, Mrs. Johnson was the only daughter. She was reared in her native place, Aalborg, Denmark, receiving a good education in the public schools there, and has been a resident of the United States since 1868, having settled in Wisconsin during that year. One child, John Christian, has been born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. He formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Alta L. Snyder, and they and their two children, Otho S. and and Ardath U., make their home in Pomona. The family are Lutherans in their religious belief, and politically Mr. Johnson is a Republican. He was made an Odd Fellow in Pomona Lodge No. 246, in 1890, and for two terms served as noble grand of his lodge; he is also a member of San Antonio Encampment No. 88, I. O. O. F., of which he is past chief patriarch, and also belongs to Heliotrope Rebekah Lodge No. 183, of which Mrs. Johnson is also a member.

TOVEY BROWN HIMROD. Standing high among the capable and systematic horticulturists and ranches in Los Angeles county who have met with undisputed success is Tovey B. Himrod, of Pomona, who is the owner of an orange grove and has a thirty-acre alfalfa ranch within the city limits of Pomona, from which he reaps a splendid income, his average yield being between six and seven crops per season. Since taking possession of the property in 1897 he has worked courageously in its improvement, and by the exercise of his native industry and his able business capacity he has rendered it one of the most productive estates in the neighborhood.

Of German descent on the paternal side, Tovey B. Himrod is a grandson of Moses Lattimore Himrod, who was born in Pennsylvania. He was a farmer in Erie county, that state, and on the homestead near Waterford his son John L. was born. He, too, followed agricultural pursuits for his life calling, first in Pennsylvania and later in Kingsville, Ohio, but subsequently returned to his native state. It was in 1868 that he severed his connection with the east by his removal to Kansas, settling upon a farm in Woodson county, which he improved until its value was enhanced many fold over its original cost. From Kansas he removed to Humboldt county, Iowa, in 1882, remaining there for six years, when he removed to the Pacific coast, locating in Pomona. His active labors ceased with the disposal of his Iowa farm, and from the time of coming to Pomona in 1888 until his death, January 7, 1906, he lived retired, in the enjoyment of the accumulations of former years. The wife and mother, formerly Mary E. Brown, was also a native of the Keystone state, born in Warren county, the daughter of Robert Brown, who followed farming in Pennsylvania during earlier life and finally removed west to Iowa, in which state his death occurred. Mrs. Himrod died in Ohio in 1867, having become the mother of eight children, of whom seven are now living.

Next to the oldest in his parents' family, Tovey B. Himrod was born in Waterford, Pa., August 19, 1853, and was reared principally in Pennsylvania and Ohio, attending public school in the latter state until he was fifteen years of age. His mother having died in 1867, the following year the father took the family to Kansas, and from that year until 1875 he worked on his father's farm in Woodson county. A desire to strike out in his own behalf became evident in the latter year, when he went to Red Wing, Goodhue county, Minn., and carried on a farm there for two years. In 1878 he removed to Humboldt county, Iowa, and bought a new farm of eighty acres, improving it from raw prairie land into one of the fine farming estates in that part of the country, having in the meantime added an adjoining tract of eighty acres. He sold his one hundred and sixty acre farm in 1897 and came to California, whither his father had preceded him about nine years. Soon after coming to Pomona he purchased an orange grove in this vicinity, and later purchased two others, which he sold. He now makes his home on the four-acre ranch on Kingsley avenue. He also owns a thirty-acre alfalfa ranch two miles south of the postoffice and within the city limits, which produces a remarkable yield of from six to seven crops per season. An excellent pumping plant furnishes an abundance of water, which is distributed to all parts of the ranch by means of a twenty-five horsepower gas engine.

In Red Wing, Minn., November 13, 1877, Mr. Himrod married Miss Dorcas A. Williams, who was born in Mankato, Minn., the daughter of William Riley Williams, born in Indiana of Welsh descent. From Indiana he removed to Minnesota during the early history of its settlement by the whites and participated in the New Ulm massacre. During the Civil war he enlisted as a member of a Minnesota regiment, but did not survive the hardships of warfare to return to his family, dying on the battlefield at Little Rock, Ark. His wife, formerly Jeston Alcorn, was also born in Indiana, and she died in North Dakota. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams, three of whom are living. The youngest of the family, Mrs. Himrod was educated in Red Wing, Minn., and for two years she taught school in that city. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Himrod, of whom one died in childhood, and Nellie died in 1904, at the age of sixteen years and six months. The others are: James Lattimore, in New Jersey; William Brown, attending Pomona College; Minnie Almyra and Edwin Ray, both at home. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically Mr. Himrod is a Republican. As one of the most prominent and successful orange growers in this part of the state, Mr. Himrod's membership in the Southern California Fruit Exchange is a decided acquisition, as it is also in the Kingsley Tract Water Company, Limited, of which he was at one time president.

JOHN Q. ADAMS. As Pomona lies in the heart of one of California's richest fruit belts it is a natural consequence that the greater number of its residents are horticulturists, among whom mention belongs to Mr. Adams. His residence in the valley dates from the year 1894, at which time he purchased his present ranch of seventeen acres, all of which is devoted to oranges with the exception of three acres in vineyard. At the time he bought the property it was devoid of any improvement, and all that is visible today is the work of his own hands, for, aside from planting his orchard and setting out his vineyard, he erected the family residence and ranch buildings.

As is true of so many of Pomona's residents, Mr. Adams is not a native of California, but comes from the Mississippi valley. Although his parents were natives of the east, almost their entire lives were associated with the middle west, where as a minister in the Congregational denomination the greater part of the father's active life was spent. Born in Saratoga Springs, N. Y., September 14, 1815, Amos B. Adams was reared and educated principally in Ohio, and was one of the first graduates of Oberlin College, receiving his diploma from the classical course in 1840 and from the theological department in 1843. His ordination as a minister of the Gospel followed soon after his graduation, and about this time also, October 18, 1843, occurred his marriage with Miss Charlotte Merrell, a native of Connecticut, although they met as students in Oberlin College. Mr. Adams was first sent as a missionary among the Indians in what is now the state of Iowa, and was later transferred to the Chippewa Indians of the north. Traveling in those early days was attended with considerable difficulty and danger. Before the present locks were constructed he sailed up the Great Lakes in a small schooner, landing on the west end of Lake Superior, where is now located the present flourishing city of Duluth, Minn. From that point he went by canoe on the Mississippi river to his charge as minister and teacher among the Indians. His work among the Chippewas was ruthlessly broken in upon by the hostile Sioux during the Civil war, and he with the other white settlers in the vicinity were obliged to seek safety in Fort Ripley. Subsequently, in the summer of 1863, he took up life anew amid the forbidding conditions of northern Michigan. From Milwaukee, Wis., he crossed Lake Michigan on the schooner Stronach and finally took up his residence at Benzonia. There he became identified with Grand Traverse College, a Congregational institution, and in addition to his duties therein he followed farming and fruit raising. It was while there that he was deprived of the companionship of his wife, who passed away in 1892, at the age of seventy-six years. Subsequently he went to Manistee, Mich., and from then until his death, September 5, 1906, made his home with his daughter, Mrs. J. J. Hubbell. His life had been an active and useful one, and although he lacked but nine days of reaching his ninety-first birthday, was in full possession of his mental faculties. As the last surviving member of the Oberlin class of 1840 he was laid to rest in the family lot in Benzonia Cemetery. Five of his six children still survive him: W. H. and John Q., of Pomona, Cal.; Charles F., of Benzonia, Mich.; Mrs. J. O. Beach, of New Britain, Conn.; and Mrs. J. J. Hubbell, of Manistee, Mich. Another son, Albert B. Adams, was a resident of Manistee from 1887 until 1892, during which time he assisted in the survey and location of the Manistee and Northeastern Railway; his death occurred in Long Beach, Cal.

While his parents were living in Benton county, Minn., John Q. Adams was born, July 20, 1856. His recollections of his birthplace are rather vague, for he was only seven years old when his parents left there and located in Benzie county, Mich. After a course in the common schools of Benzonia he became a student in Grand Traverse College, of which institution his father was one of the trustees. Subsequently he became interested in the fruit enterprise which his father also carried on, remaining at home until attaining his majority. Subsequently he engaged in the raising of peaches independently, and it was with all of these years of experience as assets that he came to Pomona in 1894 and established the nucleus of his present successful enterprise.

In 1885 Mr. Adams was married to Jennie E. Miner, a native of Canada, and five children have been born to them, Bessie, John, Paul, Wilbur and Donald. Mr. Adams still owns about forty acres of land in Michigan, although he has sold all of his fruit land. While a resident of that state he advanced the interests of his community by a whole-hearted interest in its governmental affairs, and was a valuable acquisition to the school board of Benzonia. This same interest in the welfare of his adopted home in the west has always been apparent, and he is counted among her most active and respected citizens. Politically he is a Republican, and with his wife is a member of the Congregational Church. During the summer of 1906 Mr. Adams and family returned to Michigan for a visit, spending about two and a half months among the scenes of his earlier years.

EDWARD ABPLANALP. The Swiss family of Abplanalp became transplanted in America during the early half of the nineteenth century, when Jacob Abplanalp emigrated from Switzerland to the new world and settled among the pioneer farmers in the southeastern part of Indiana. Accompanying him to the United States was his son, Peter, a native of Switzerland, but from boyhood a resident of Indiana, where he engaged in farming until his death. During the Civil war he enlisted in the Union army and served as a private in the Sixty-fourth Indiana Infantry. From the organization of the Republican party until his death he never swerved in his allegiance to its platform and principles. In the old country the family had become identified with the religious movement inaugurated by Martin Luther and he was reared in the Lutheran faith, which he always supported. In young manhood he married Martha Garrison, who was born in Franklin county, Ind., and died there in 1905. The Garrison family was among the pioneer families of Franklin county and her father, James, was for years and until his death a leading agriculturist of that locality.

In a family consisting of seven sons and three daughters, Edward Abplanalp was the oldest and he was born November 27, 1865, on the farm occupied by his parents, Peter and Martha Abplanalp. The family being large and their means very limited, it became necessary for him to begin at an early age to assist in the support of the younger children. When only fourteen he began to learn the carpenter's trade in the vicinity of Sunman, Ripley county, Ind., not far from the old home farm, and from that time onward he was self-supporting. During October of 1886 he arrived in California and secured employment at Santa Ana in horticultural work. From there three years later he removed to Chino, San Bernardino county, and took up carpentering in addition to farm pursuits. While living in that town he married Miss Mary Bostleman, a native of Ohio, and a woman possessing many pleasing traits of character. Two sons, Arthur and Henry, bless their union.

While following his trade in 1891 Mr. Abplanalp was engaged to assist in the construction of a beet factory for the American Beet Sugar Company, and from that beginning he continued for seven seasons as foreman in charge of the company's boilers. When it was decided to establish a plant at Oxnard he was one of the first men to come to the place and built the first house in the town, a cottage on the corner of Sixth and A streets. From the arrival of the first carload of material for the Oxnard factory he was employed as a foreman in the work of construction and for a time he held a position as engineer in charge of the hoisting engine. On the completion of the plant he took up general contracting and building and continues in the same occupation to the present time, having since October of 1902 been a partner of J. H. Myers under the firm title of Myers & Abplanalp.

The partners not only carry on a large contracting business, but also own and operate a planing mill, Mr. Myers having charge of the mill, while Mr. Abplanalp superintends all building operations. Among the buildings which he has superintended may be mentioned the Union Oxnard high school, Stephens residence, the Cohn and H. K. Snow residences, and his own residence on Fifth street; also the steam laundry, Wineman block, Schmitz building, Cohn building, water tanks for the water company, and the Lutheran, Christian and Episcopal churches, all of which work has been done in a reliable, efficient and workmanlike manner. In addition, he has erected many houses in the country and he also superintended the building of the grammar school before he began to take contracts. His attention has been given very closely to business affairs and he has had little leisure for participation in local politics, but he is a pronounced Republican and always votes the straight party ticket. Fraternally he affiliates with the Knights of Pythias and holds office as past chancellor in the local lodge.

Reared in a home where the doctrines of the Lutheran denomination were taught to the children, he was early confirmed in that church and ever since has been an active member thereof, contributing generously of time and means to its maintenance.

WILLIAM T. NEELY. Early in the nineteenth century the Scotch family of Neely became established in the United States, and John Neely, representative of the first generation born in America, was a native of Philadelphia, where he grew to manhood and learned the hatter's trade. During the memorable year of 1849 he started across the plains with a comrade from St. Joseph, Mo., the two traveling on horseback, and having only one horse with which to cross the desert. On his arrival in California he at once engaged in prospecting and mining and met with good success in his efforts to discover gold in paying quantities. During 1853 he returned east via Panama, but the next year found him returning by the same route to the mines, where he remained until 1856, and then went back east to remain. After a brief sojourn in Philadelphia in 1857 he became a pioneer farmer of Iowa, where he bought a tract of land near Burlington and engaged in farming. Though never active in politics, he always kept posted concerning national issues and always voted the Republican ticket. Fraternally he was a Master Mason. After a long and industrious life he passed away in 1899, having for twenty-three years survived his wife, who was Maria Barton, a native of Philadelphia, descended from Welsh ancestry.

Among the seven children of John Neely (all of whom are still living) William T. Neely of San Diego was fourth in order of birth, and was born on the home farm near Burlington, Iowa, June 3, 1860. As a boy he received fair advantages, being a student first in the common schools, then in Denmark Academy and later in Elliott's Business College at Burlington. After leaving school he taught for three years and then, in 1885, began to learn the carpenter's trade. The following year he visited California for the first time and while in the state followed his trade for brief periods at Santa Barbara, Pasadena and Los Angeles, returning to Iowa in the spring of 1888. Removing to Salt Lake City in 1889 he followed his trade, also took contracts for building houses and stores, furthermore had mining interests in the locality, and for two years acted as deputy county sheriff.

On coming to California the second time Mr. Neely settled in San Diego in 1897 and since then has engaged in contracting and building, being now a member of the firm of Willard & Neely. The present partnership was begun in 1886 and has continued at intervals since. Interested in everything pertaining to his chosen occupation, Mr. Neely holds membership in the Master Builders' Association and keeps posted concerning every advance made in the building business. While making his home in Salt Lake City he married Miss Laura Koontz, who was born in Ohio, and is a faithful member of the Baptist Church. They are the parents of five children, John, Glenn, Harry, Charles and Ruth. Since coming to San Diego Mr. Neely has been made a Mason in Silver Gate Lodge No. 296, F. & A. M., and has also become identified with all the bodies of the Consistory in this city, besides being connected with the Woodmen of the World. Though like his father in respect to taking no part in politics, he nevertheless gives his allegiance stanchly to Republican principles and his ballot is always to be depended upon as an aid to the candidates of the party in local and general elections.

CASPER BORCHARD. The success which has accompanied the efforts of Casper Borchard, one of Ventura county's representative citizens, has been such as to denote his possession of ability of more than ordinary calibre, for he began life against heavy odds—without means or friends, in a new country and with a new language to learn, beginning at the foot of the ladder and working his way step by step to the topmost rung—to-day holding rank with men of wealth and influence, both of which he can always be counted upon to give of freely toward the advancement of his adopted land.

Mr. Borchard is a native of Germany, his birth having occurred in 1842, in Werxhausen, province of Hanover. The family is one of the oldest of that locality and many of the name still reside there. Ambition as well as ability have always been distinguishing characteristics in members of the family, and Casper Borchard was no exception to the general rule. Realizing the fact that the western world afforded many more opportunities to the young man of to-day, he early decided to emigrate and accordingly came to America in 1867, locating in California and in Ventura county establishing his home. As his means accumulated he purchased property, continually adding to his land, until at the present writing he owns over four thousand acres in the Conejo valley. Here he has a herd of two thousand goats, while he also raises other stock on an extensive scale. It is needless to say that he has been successful; energy and patience have gone to make up his years of effort and the large financial returns are but just equivalents for that which he has given. Better still to say of his character, he has won the esteem of those among whom his lot has been cast for nearly forty years, a true appreciation of his ability, his liberality, his practical citizenship being given him by those who know him best.

Mr. Borchard was married in the Fatherland to Miss Theresa Maring, a native of Germany, and born of this union are the following children: Rosa, wife of Silas Kelly, of Conejo valley; Mary, at home; Leo, who is married and lives near Santa Ana, Orange county, Cal.; Casper, Jr., residing near Santa Ana; Antone, an enterprising young ranchman who has charge of the home ranch in the Conejo valley; Frank, a partner in the management of the home ranch; and Charles and Theresa, with their father. The mother passed away in 1898, at the age of forty-nine years. The home of the family is now located near Huntington Beach, where Mr. Borchard owns about eight hundred acres of land, although they have a comfortable country home in the Conejo valley. As one of the oldest settlers of the Conejo valley Mr. Borchard has witnessed its development and has indeed been one of the most potent factors in its advancement to its present high position among agricultural localities of this part of the state. He takes a keen interest to-day in its improvement and seeks in every possible way to enhance property values, spending large sums annually on his own vast acres which adds in turn to the adjoining lands. He is loyal to the interests of Ventura county and can always be counted upon to further any plan for its advancement.

EDWARD D. ROBERTS. Among the leading financiers and business men of Southern California the name of Edward D. Roberts of San Bernardino stands pre-eminent. Of a strong personality, great force of character and rare mental attainments, he is justly entitled to the honorable position which he holds in financial circles, and this, too, apart from any reflected honor from his illustrious father, J. W. Roberts, whose connection with banking interests in San Bernardino forms a part of the city's history, and whose biography will be found elsewhere in this volume.

It is the privilege of but few men to stand at the helm of three large banking institutions and guide them with safety over the financial sea, weathering storm and threatened shipwreck, incidents which every mariner at some time in his career has to contend with. As president of the San Bernardino National Bank, the San Bernardino County Savings Bank and of the First National Bank of Colton, Mr. Roberts has not only proven himself a capable captain, but has established beyond doubt the seaworthiness of his noble ships. The history of the San Bernardino National Bank dates back to the year 1887, at which time it was formed, and February 28, 1888, it opened its doors for business, with officers as follows: J. G. Burt, president; A. H. Hart, vice-president; E. H. Morse, cashier, and W. S. Hooper, teller. In 1892, at the time of the fire in the Stewart building, in which the bank is located, some of its records were destroyed, but the disaster caused no serious inconvenience to the bank. Among its early stockholders were such men as Ambrose Hunt, I. R. Brunn, Richard Gird, J. G. Burt, S. E. A. Palmer, J. W. Davis, Jr., Seth Marshall, H. L. Drew, E. H. Morse, A. H. Hart, Henry Goodcell, Sr., W. S. Hooper, Richard Stewart, W. E. W. Lightfoot, L. A. Grant, John Patterson, W. W. Stow, J. W. Roberts and H. E. Harris. The first change in the presidency of the bank occurred in 1891, in which year J. W. Davis became head of the institution, but his career was short, owing to his death, which occurred August 8, 1893. J. W. Roberts was then elected to the presidency, a position which he filled with efficiency until his death about ten years later, January 9, 1903. The latter's son, E. D. Roberts, had been associated with the bank for a number of years, first as bookkeeper, later as assistant cashier and still later as vice-president, and his election to the presidency at the close of his father's career was a most natural sequence. The other officers at this writing are: H. E. Harris, vice-president, and W. S. Hooper, cashier. The San Bernardino National Bank claims the distinction of being the largest and strongest financial institution in the county, and the following figures will substantiate the claim: Capital stock, $100,000; surplus and profits, $150,000; deposits, over $1,000,000; and total resources, $1,500,000.

Although a younger institution the San Bernardino County Savings Bank is on an equal footing with the San Bernardino National Bank in the matter of reliability, for the officers of the latter are also in charge of the newer organization. It was opened for business July 6, 1903, with officers as follows: E. D. Roberts, president; Seth Marshall, first vice-president; A. C. Denman, Jr., second vice-president; A. G. Kendall, cashier, and directors, E. D. Roberts, Seth Marshall, A. C. Denman, Jr., W. S. Hooper, G. W. Parsons, H. E. Harris, A. M. Ham, T. A. Blakely, J. B. Gill, H. B. Smith and W. J. Curtis. The capital stock of this institution is $55,000; surplus, $15,000, while the deposits have exceeded the half million mark. A fact worthy of note in connection with this bank is that from the start it has paid dividends to the stockholders, the first year six per cent, and ever since then eight per cent. To the depositor it pays four per cent on term deposits, while on ordinary deposits three per cent is paid.

The foregoing facts in regard to two of San Bernardino county's monetary institutions have been read with interest and profit, and the reader may peruse the life history of their president, Edward David Roberts, to even greater advantage. He was born in Cambria, Columbia county, Wis., July 18, 1864, a son of J. W. and Eliza (Williams) Roberts, both natives of North Wales. Up to the age of fifteen years he was reared and educated in Cambria, and in 1879 went to Pittsburg, Pa., to further pursue his studies in the preparatory department of the Western University of Pennsylvania, an institution which was founded in that city in 1819, but which in 1888 was removed to Allegheny City. He concluded his sophomore year in the latter institution, and in the meantime had also completed a course in Duff's Commercial College in Pittsburg. It was with this preparation for business life that he went to Milwaukee, Wis., in 1882 and accepted a position in the claim department of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad under J. P. Elliott. The following year found him in Bridgewater, McCook county, S. Dak., drawn thither, no doubt, from the fact that his brother-in-law, J. W. Davis, was interested in business there. Besides interesting himself in the stock and land business there, Mr. Roberts bought an interest in the McCook County Bank, in which his brother-in-law was also interested. The removal of Mr. Davis to California in 1884 made a change in the personnel of the bank, and at this time Mr. Roberts was made cashier. Mr. Davis' object in removing to California was to establish the First National Bank of Colton, which he did in conjunction with his father, J. W. Davis, Sr., and in 1885 Mr. Roberts closed up his affairs in South Dakota and also removed to Colton, to accept the position of assistant cashier in the bank just mentioned. Subsequently he was made cashier, and while a resident of that town also served on the board of town trustees.

It was in 1892 that Mr. Roberts and his father, J. W. Roberts, became interested in the San Bernardino National Bank, the former rising gradually from the position of bookkeeper, until in January, 1903, upon the death of his father, he was made president of the institution. Since then, July 6, 1903, he organized the San Bernardino Savings Bank, of which he is president, and he also holds the same position in the First National Bank of Colton. Notwithstanding the demands upon his time and thought which these positions involve, he is nevertheless active in business along other lines, and with Seth Marshall assisted in the organization of the Arrowhead Hot Springs Company, in which he is a director. The company is incorporated for $1,000,000 and is building up one of the most substantial institutions of its kinds in the state. Mr. Roberts is also a director in the San Bernardino Valley Traction Company, director of the Colton Fruit Exchange, president of the San Bernardino Hotel Building Association (the latter being owners of the Stewart Hotel block), besides which he acts as manager of his father's large estate and assists in the management of the J. W. Davis estate.

In Colton, Cal., in 1891, Edward D. Roberts was married to Miss Maud Adams, who was born in Bloomington, Ill., the daughter of Dr. Henry F. Adams, the latter a practicing physician of Colton at the time of his death. Mrs. Roberts received the latter part of her education in Willamette University, at Salem, Ore. Two children, Louise Eliza and Maud Marie, have added brightness and cheer to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roberts. In Colton Mr. Roberts was made a Mason in Ashlar Lodge No. 306, but he is now a member of Phoenix Lodge No. 178, Keystone Chapter No. 56, and St. Bernard Commandery No. 23, all of San Bernardino, and he also belongs to Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles, and to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of San Bernardino. The Republican party finds in Mr. Roberts a most dependable and loyal supporter, and twice he has served as chairman of the county central committee. In 1904 he was a delegate to the Republican national convention that met in Chicago for the purpose of nominating our present chief executive, Theodore Roosevelt. Mr. Roberts is also a member of the Board of Trade, is a valued member of the State Bankers' Association, as he is also of the University Club of Redlands. Man's best friend, the horse, has indeed a true friend in Mr. Roberts, and in his stalls may be seen some of the finest breeds of trotting and standard-bred horses to be found in the country. His residence in San Bernardino is without exception one of the most palatial in the city, and the grounds are an added feature of beauty, the whole combining to form one of the most beautiful and restful spots in the county. Mrs. Roberts shares in the esteem in which her husband is held, and is an active member of the Episcopal Church, to which both contribute with a generous hand. She is also a prominent member of the Woman's Club, and was chairman of the building committee which had in charge the building of the new home for the latter club.

Though comparatively young in years, Mr. Roberts' strong personal attributes have long since been generally recognized, and these characteristics, taken in conjunction with his manifest public spirit, his breadth of mind in viewing all public affairs, and his generosity of heart, have given him a place in the esteem of thoughtful and discriminating men which few men attain at his time of life. The work which he is accomplishing in the various avenues of finance and commerce in which he is engaged is making a marked impress upon the trend of events in California, and the record of his life is entitled to a place of distinction in the annals of the state.

THEODORE E. HASS. The first location of Mr. Hass on coming to California in 1886 was in Pasadena, which at that time did not boast its present population, but the incoming of settlers gave an impetus to the building trade, and, as a carpenter, Mr. Hass found employment readily. He later went to Downey, and having in the meantime become interested in agricultural affairs, he there sought to find a ranch which would suit his needs and requirements. This he found a few miles from the above-mentioned village, and so satisfactory were his efforts that he remained there for sixteen years, or until coming to Palms in 1904. At that time he purchased thirty-three acres and at once began its improvement and cultivation. His ambition soon outgrew his possessions, however, and he was obliged to secure adjoining land in order to carry out his plans. He now has three hundred and thirty-three acres under his control, all of which is in oats and lima beans.

Mr. Hass was born in Vinton county, Ohio, November 2, 1855, the only child of his father's first marriage. Samuel Hass was also a native of Ohio, born February 16, 1834, and was reared and educated in the latter state. He was obliged early in his career to hoe his own row, making his start in life on a farm of forty acres in his native state. Going to Kansas in 1871, he purchased a farm of two hundred and forty acres, on which he resided the remainder of his life, his death occurring in 1902. His first wife, and the mother of our subject, was in maidenhood Elizabeth Millirons, a native of Ohio. She died soon after the birth of her son. In 1860 Mr. Hass married Miss Martha Spelman, and all of the eight children born of this marriage are living.

Theodore Hass attended the common schools of Ohio and Kansas in the neighborhood of the parental homestead in those states, and when he was twenty years old began to make his own way in the world. The initial step in this direction was homesteading a quarter section of land in Kansas, to which he later added eighty acres of land by purchase. Favorable reports of unlimited opportunities in the west resulted in the sale of his Kansas property and his removal to California. His location on his present ranch was not by chance, but followed a long and careful observation as to the merits of various localities. His selection was a wise and satisfactory one and his ranch is one of the most imposing in this part of the county.

A marriage ceremony celebrated in Concordia, Kans., in 1880, united the destinies of Theodore E. Hass and Maryetta E. Wright. Four of the five children born to them are living and are named in order of birth, as follows: Ralph, (who married Mabel Barnett); Everest S., (who married Girlie Jenison), Arthur C. and Gertrude. All of the family are active workers in the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which they are members, and politically Mr. Hass is a Republican.

THOMAS WILLIAM COATES. Prominent among the representative business men of San Diego is Thomas William Coates, who has, mayhap, had charge of the erection of more of the notable business blocks and private residences of this city than any other one contractor. During his twenty years' residence in this place he has been actively identified with its best interests, and in the development and advancement of its growth and prosperity has been an important factor. A son of John Coates, he was born November 28, 1859, in Chicago, Ill., coming from English ancestry.

Born, reared and educated in England, John Coates made wise use of his talents, studying architecture, and having also learned the carpenter's trade, came to America. Settling in Chicago, Ill., he was there profitably employed as an architect and supervising builder for a number of years. He became quite noted in his profession, being frequently called to other places, among others going to Ottawa, Canada, to superintend the erection of the parliament building in that city. On its completion he returned to Chicago, where he continued as a contractor and builder until 1886. Locating in San Diego in that year, he resided here until his death, in 1892, at the age of sixty-two years. He married Annie Marsh, who was born in Worcester, England, a daughter of Thomas Marsh, England's pioneer railway builder. She died in Oakland, Cal., leaving three sons and one daughter, all of whom are living.

The second child of the household, Thomas William Coates was educated in the Chicago public schools, after which he began working with his father at the carpenter's trade. Becoming familiar with the details of the trade he started in business on his own account in 1877, and during the next ten years built many residences and business houses in Chicago. Coming to California in 1887 he established himself as a contractor and builder in San Diego, and in this line of industry has since been busily and profitably employed. Many of the prominent buildings and residences of the city bear evidence of his skill and ability, not only as a mechanic, but as an artist, he having originated and drawn many of the plans used in their construction.

In Rockford, Ill., Mr. Coates married Amelia Coates, and they have two children, Silver Cloud and Senora Frances A. Mr. Coates belongs to two of the leading business organizations of San Diego, the Chamber of Commerce and the Master Builders' Association, in the latter being a director. Politically he is active in the Democratic party, being an ex-member of the Central Committee, and fraternally he belongs to the Foresters of America.

RAYMOND LUDDEN, D. O. Osteopathy is that science or system of healing which emphasizes, (a) the diagnosis of diseases by physical methods with a view to discovering, not the symptoms but the causes of disease, in connection with misplacements of tissue, obstruction of the fluids and interference with the forces of the organism; (b) the treatment of diseases by scientific manipulations in connection with which the operating physician mechanically uses and applies the inherent resources of the organism to overcome disease and establish health, either by removing or correcting mechanical disorders and thus permitting nature to recuperate the diseased part, or by producing and establishing anti-toxic and anti-septic conditions to counteract toxic and septic conditions of the organism or its parts; (c) the application of mechanical and operative surgery in setting fractured or dislocated bones, repairing lacerations and removing abnormal tissue growths or tissue elements when these become dangerous to the organic life.

Dr. Raymond Ludden, of Colton, has been practicing osteopathy for a number of years in different parts of the country, and his flattering success wherever he has been located is conclusive proof of the value of extensive preparatory work in a profession. He was born December 9, 1878, in Kirksville, Mo., a son of David H. and Sarah (Litchfield) Ludden, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter born in Indiana. Prior to the Civil war the father was engaged in agricultural pursuits. He served three years in the Sixty-fourth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, which was the regiment known as Yates' Sharpshooters, and after his return to civil life in Illinois he established himself as a nurseryman, continuing in that occupation up to the present time, having in the meantime, however, removed to Kirksville, Mo., where he and his wife are both still living. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and in politics holds stanchly to Republican principles.

There were five daughters and six sons in the family of which Dr. Ludden was a member and he is the only one residing in California. His early education was received in the Kirksville public and high schools, and after completing his studies there he attended the state normal located in the same city. Later he fitted himself for professional work in a line of studies at the Columbian Osteopathy College, after which he engaged in practice for two years at Newton, Kans. Following this he attended the St. Louis University of Medicine for the same length of time, specializing on the subjects of anatomy, physiology and chemistry, at the same time he was pursuing his studies, also holding the position of assistant demonstrator of anatomy in the college. In 1904 he came to California and located in Redlands, but one year later removed to Colton, where he is now in command of an extensive practice.

In 1902 occurred the marriage of Dr. Ludden and Miss Gertrude, the only daughter of Judge Adrian L. and Anna (Baker) Greene, both natives of Missouri, the former being supreme judge of the state of Kansas. Mrs. Greene died when her daughter was but twelve years of age. Mrs. Ludden was born in Newton, Kans., and is an active member of the Presbyterian Church. While Dr. Ludden's time and attention are largely given to his profession, he is yet interested in the progress of his city and lends his influence to the forwarding of all matters tending toward its upbuilding. He is an advocate of Republican principles and is highly esteemed both as a citizen and a professional man.

HARRY J. OHLSEN. A seafaring man during his entire active career, there is probably no person in Southern California more familiar with the coasting trade of this section than Harry J. Ohlsen, of San Pedro, who is secretary of the San Pedro branch of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific. Wide-awake, active and enterprising, taking a genuine interest in everything pertaining to nautical matters, he is ever ready to assist any movement tending to promote the welfare of the sailors, and in his present position is performing his duties in a manner satisfactory to all concerned. A native of Germany, he was born, December 24, 1863, in Cuxhaven, the descendant of an old and well known family. His father, Master John Ohlsen, was the owner of two coasting vessels that sailed from Cuxhaven, where he spent his entire life. His paternal grandfather, a native of Helgoland, Germany, settled at Cuxhaven when a young man, and during his active life was employed in piloting vessels from that port to Hamburg.

The second child in a family consisting of seven sons and one daughter, Harry J. Ohlsen was educated in the public schools of Cuxhaven, and like every one of his six brothers chose the life of a sailor as the one most desirable, from earliest boyhood going out in fishing boats, or on his father's coasting vessels. At the age of fifteen years he made his first long sea voyage, going by way of the Cape of Good Hope to the South Sea Islands. Fascinated with the sea, he subsequently twice crossed the Atlantic to New York, after which, on the stanch vessel Clara, he sailed around Good Hope to China and Japan. Returning from Japan to Hong Kong he there left the Clara, embarking on an American vessel, which brought him to California. Arriving in San Francisco in 1883, he was there paid off, and has ever since been a resident of the Pacific coast, since 1886 having made his home in San Pedro, his residence being now at the corner of Third and Center streets. For a number of years he was agent of the San Diego branch of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, but since that was given up, in 1898, he has been secretary and agent of the San Pedro branch, the only branch of the union in Southern California, being re-elected to the position at the expiration of every term. As secretary, he attends to all the correspondence of the society, and as agent is shipping master, boarding every vessel that comes into the harbor.

In Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Ohlsen married Edith Allison, who was born in England, of Scotch ancestors, and they have two children, Alma E. and Harry J., Jr. Fraternally Mr. Ohlsen is a member and past lecturer of the Foresters of America, a trustee of the Eyrie of Eagles, and the treasurer of the Fraternal Brotherhood. Religiously, true to the faith in which he was reared, he is a Lutheran.

WILLIAM S. ELLIS. Among the influential and prominent citizens of San Diego county who are indebted for their present prosperous condition to their own industry and energy, is William S. Ellis, a leading farmer of Fallbrook, and one of its foremost business men. He has seen life in all its phases, has lived in various parts of the Union, and wherever he has resided has proven himself a useful member of the community. He is now extensively engaged in general ranching and fruit raising, and as president of the Fallbrook Hardware Company is identified with its mercantile interests. He was born March 6, 1852, in Warren, Mo., the son of Joseph and Nancy (Netherton) Ellis, who were born, reared and married in Kentucky. About 1830 they emigrated to the western frontier, settling in Missouri, where they cleared and improved a homestead, on which both spent their remaining years, the mother dying at the age of fifty-four years, in 1865, and the father in 1891, at the venerable age of eighty-three years.

Obtaining his early education in a private school in Missouri, William S. Ellis remained at home until after attaining his majority. In 1874, resolving to try his fortune in a newer country, he came to California, locating near Visalia, where he remained a year. Not quite satisfied, however, with his prospects, he went back to his old home, and was there employed in tilling the soil for three years. In 1878 he went to Texas, but after a brief stay removed to the Black Hills, where he first followed mining and afterwards worked as a wage-earner. Returning to Missouri in 1881, he continued his residence there a year, and in 1882 came again to the Pacific coast. For about three years thereafter he resided in the Carpinteria valley, Santa Barbara county. Locating not far from his present home in the fall of 1885, he purchased land that was in its primitive condition, improved it, and lived there until 1893, when he went to Lower California, where he remained two years. Coming back to Fallbrook in 1895, he assumed possession of his present home ranch, and has since been actively engaged in his chosen vocation. He has a productive vineyard of five acres and an orchard of the same size, besides which he owns one hundred and sixty acres of farming land, mostly devoted to the raising of grain. In addition to caring for this ranch, Mr. Ellis leases eighteen hundred acres of the Santa Margarita grant, and has this vast tract in grain also. He is a man of excellent business ability, and three years ago took an active part in organizing the Fallbrook Hardware Company, of which he is the president and one of the directors, and is also one of the directorate of the Fallbrook Mercantile Company. He is a stanch Democrat in politics, and has served on the school board.

Mr. Ellis was first married October 22, 1876, in Warren county, Mo., to Laura Burton, who was born in Wisconsin, and died February 17, 1889, in California. Seven children were born of their union, three of whom are living, namely: Burton W., of Fallbrook; Thomas Graves, at home; and Lee C., at home. February 9, 1890, Mr. Ellis married Adelle Burdine, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of five children, namely: William Henry, who was born December 8, 1890, and who attends the Fallbrook high school; Raymond N., born December 23, 1894; Edna Roberta, born January 3, 1897; Nellie M., born October 10, 1898; and Stephen, born January 6, 1905. Mrs. Ellis is a most estimable woman, highly esteemed in social circles, and is a member of the Baptist Church. Mr. Ellis has recently erected a fine modern residence, in which he and his family enjoy life, and extend a gracious hospitality to their many friends and acquaintances.

THE COLTON DAILY NEWS. The history of the Colton Daily News dates back to the year 1889, when Albert Thompson founded and published the first newspaper issued in Colton, which was called the Colton Weekly News. Six years later he disposed of the plant, J. H. Martin continuing to issue the sheet under the same name for the following eight years. The next change in its management dates from January 1, 1903, when the present owner and publisher, Willard Beebe, assumed control. Under his management the paper still continued as a weekly until September 1, 1905, from which time it has been issued daily as the Colton Daily News, with a circulation of five hundred copies. It is a clean, straightforward sheet, viewing broadly the world-wide, national and local happenings, and is accepted by all, regardless of political leanings.

DR. J. ALLEN OSMUN. The New Jersey annals of dentistry contain no name more worthy of perpetuation than that of Dr. Osmun, who during a long professional career maintained the confidence of a large clientele and at the same time rose to the highest honors within the gift of the members of the dental fraternity. When, at the close of his successful professional career, he retired from practice and removed to the Pacific coast in order to enjoy the pure and balmy air of the west, he was followed by the admiration and esteem of the many whom he had known in the east and who possessed an appreciative knowledge of his ability and broad information. Although professional labors have been relinquished, he has not retired from life's activities, but finds an abundant sphere for commercial enterprise and profitable investment in Whittier.

The success which has rewarded the efforts of Dr. Osmun proves what it is within the power of young men to accomplish when blessed with health, perseverance and determination of character. A native of Fall River, Mass., he was a small child when his parents removed to Illinois and when only twelve years of age he left home, going to New Jersey, where he received a fair education. When eighteen years of age he came to California the first time and remained a few years at San Francisco, where he began to study dentistry under the preceptorship of V. McAllister, D. D. S. It was the opinion of many that he would have better advantages for acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession if he went back east than if he remained on the Pacific coast. Following this advice he returned to New Jersey and prosecuted his studies with an uncle, Dr. S. R. Osmun, of Morristown, that state.

After having been admitted to practice by the state boards of New York and New Jersey in 1875, Dr. Osmun opened an office at Newark, where he remained in continuous practice until 1903, meanwhile building up such an extensive practice that, in addition to his own work, he had his son and two assistants in the office to aid in the care of patients and the routine of dental work.

The high success which came to Dr. Osmun in professional labors in Newark brought him to the attention of other members of the profession throughout the state, among whom his reputation was enhanced by frequent and scholarly contributions to the leading journals of the profession. Papers and articles to the number of about one hundred appeared in professional papers over his signature during the years of his active work as a dentist, and all of these contributions showed not only literary ability, but remarkable professional knowledge. Prominent in the profession, he was chosen to act as secretary of the board of dental examiners of New Jersey and was also honored with the office of secretary of the National Board of Dental Examiners. In addition he was elected president of the New Jersey State Dental Society, over whose deliberations he presided with dignity and impartial spirit, as he did also while acting in the capacity of president of the Central Dental Society of Northern New Jersey. The various positions which he was holding in 1903 and the large practice which he had established he relinquished in order to become a citizen of Southern California, where, as in his former place of residence, he has become a property owner and a leading factor in many important commercial undertakings.

While living at Newark, N. J., Dr. Osmun married Miss Mary Eva Graves, daughter of Rev. David Graves, an honored preacher in the Methodist Episcopal denomination in northern New Jersey many years ago. In religious views Dr. and Mrs. Osmun sympathize with the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal denomination, but since coming west attend the Presbyterian Church of Whittier. They are the parents of seven children, namely: David Allen, deceased; Leighton G.; Mary Anna, deceased; George Kent, J. Allen, Jr., Robert A. and Richard Graves. In political attachments the doctor is of the Republican faith. Shortly after his arrival on the coast he purchased Venturilla rancho, a tract of eighty acres at Rivera, where he makes his home; the greater part of the ranch is under cultivation to walnuts. At the opening of the year 1905 he acquired by purchase the controlling interest in the Whittier National Bank, of which he is president, holding the same position in the Home Savings Bank, is vice-president of the Whittier Light and Fuel Company, president of the Rivera Land and Water Company, and a large holder of real estate in this vicinity.

AARON A. COX. A well-known orange grower of San Bernardino county is Aaron A. Cox, who resides on a two-acre plot in San Bernardino and has a fine home with all modern improvements. His birth occurred September 11, 1860, in Vandalia, Fayette county, Ill., where he received his education and lived under the parental roof until twenty-one years of age. He is the son of John and Nancy (Farmer) Cox, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Illinois, in which state their marriage occurred, and where they lived the rest of their lives, the mother being forty years of age, and the father living to the advanced age of eighty. They were the parents of twelve children, two of whom, John H. and Aaron A., live in San Bernardino county. The father was a member of an Illinois regiment during the last two and one-half years of the Civil war and took part in many important engagements. He was a politician of some prominence locally in the Democratic party and served two terms as sheriff of Fayette county. During his residence in Illinois A. A. Cox was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and after his removal to Colorado took up a government claim. On his present property in San Bernardino he makes a specialty of fruit-raising, and is especially well posted on orange culture. From time to time he has added to his holdings, until he now has over one hundred acres.

Mr. Cox was married in Illinois to Miss Rose Dunham, a native of that state, and they have become the parents of seven children, namely: Mabel L., Harold D., William L., Roy, Clifford C., Donald A. and Geraldine D. Mr. Cox is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood and Royal Mystic Legion at Rialto; and the Woodmen of the World and Independent Order of Odd Fellows at San Bernardino. Politically he is an advocate of Democratic principles. All progressive enterprises have his cordial support and he is recognized as a citizen of sterling worth to the community in which he resides.

GEORGE B. CASTER. A leading contractor and member of the board of trustees of Colton, George B. Caster is one of the most prominent citizens of this community, in which he has resided about five years. His native state is Iowa, his birth having occurred in Davis county, November 25, 1863. He was the son of Andrew J. and Lucinda (Hutchinson) Caster, the former born in Ohio, and the latter in Missouri. His father was a member of the state militia in Missouri, and when the Civil war broke out enlisted in Company E, Forty-fourth Regiment of Missouri Volunteers, and was killed soon after entering the service, in the battle at Franklin, Tenn. George B. was the only child of his parents and his mother now resides with him in Colton. She is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Although born in Iowa the earliest recollections of Mr. Caster are of his home in Missouri, for he was but a year and a half old when his parents removed to Sullivan county, in that state, where the son was reared and received his education in the public schools. When his school days were over he remained at home until he had attained his majority, when he went to South Dakota and there learned the carpenter's trade. He continued to reside in Mitchell, Davidson county, for a number of years, during which time he plied his trade, then returned to Missouri and in Lexington county engaged in ranching and stock raising for twelve years. In February, 1901, he came to Colton and having sold his ranch in Missouri purchased a fine residence in this city, and has been identified with the upbuilding of this section of the state since that time.

By his marriage in 1883, Mr. Caster was united with Miss Sarah Bailey, a native of Illinois, and of this union two children have been born: Ira B., who married Catherine Corbett, and is living in Colton, where he is engaged in the grocery business; and John A., who resides at home. Mrs. Caster was the daughter of John and Mary (Hall) Bailey, both of whom were born in Illinois and died in Missouri, in which two states her father was continuously engaged in agricultural pursuits during his lifetime. There were eleven children in the family, two of whom died in infancy, and one son now resides in Colton. Mr. Caster is prominent in fraternal orders, being a member of Ashlar Lodge No. 306, F. & A. M.; San Bernardino Chapter R. A. M.; of Colton Lodge No. 326, I. O. O. F., and the Encampment at San Bernardino; of the Modern Woodmen of America, Order of the Eastern Star and Rebekah lodges all of Colton, and of which Mrs. Caster is also a member. Politically he is affiliated with the Republican party and has always taken an active interest in public affairs. At one time he served as constable and for eight years was tax collector for Medicine township, Livingston county, Mo., and the people of Colton have signified their confidence in his abilities by electing him to the board of city trustees. He is a man of strong principles and liberal views, has a pleasing personality and is held in the highest respect and esteem by all who know him.

CHARLES ROWE. Every nationality of the civilized world is represented in the citizenship of California and the cosmopolitan population thus given to the state has been productive of the most gratifying success, for the thrift of the Scotchman, the determination of the Englishman, the cheerfulness of the Irish race, the suavity of the French, supplemented by the qualities of other races, combine to produce beside the sunset sea a concourse of people offering the highest qualifications as citizens. Being of the English race, Mr. Rowe has the characteristics predominating in his countrymen, added to which is the enterprise peculiarly American and resultant from a residence of more than twenty years in the United States.

It was during 1882 that the Rowe family became established in the new world, Herbert Rowe, a farmer of England, at that time removing to Ontario, Canada, with his family, and settling near London. Eighteen months later he came to California and settled near Santa Barbara in 1884, after which he engaged in farm pursuits until his death. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Eliza Popplestone and claimed England as her birthplace, has also passed from earth. All of their six sons are still living, Charles being third among these. While the family were living at Plymouth, England, he was born March 18, 1871, and in the local schools he received his primary education. At the time of coming to America he was eleven years of age, and for a short time he attended the schools in Ontario, but after arriving in California in 1884 he was a student in the public schools of Goleta, Santa Barbara county.

He and his brother became interested in raising grain and beans in the Santa Clara valley, and for a time he continued to raise beans and beets near Oxnard. In 1901 he bought out Glenn Brothers and embarked in the livery business, having charge of the oldest and most centrally located livery barn in Oxnard. The stable stands on a lot which he owns and which has a frontage of seventy-five feet, thus giving ample accommodations for the needs of the business. In addition to the conduct of a livery, boarding and sales stable, he is manager of the Oxnard Importing Company, owners of the French Percheron stallion Clovis and the French coach Arbrite, and importers of animals with high pedigrees. Besides all of his other activities he is interested in the cattle business, and with his brother owns a ranch at Santa Ynez, Santa Barbara county. An experience in the buying and selling of cattle which covers many years of practical work well adapts him for the successful management of a cattle ranch, and in the best breeds of cattle, as in horses, his judgment is regarded as excellent. As yet he has not given much attention to politics, but he votes the Democratic ticket in national elections and keeps posted concerning matters affecting the prosperity of the country. Fraternally he holds membership with the Knights of Columbus, also with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Santa Barbara. While making his headquarters near Hueneme he married Miss Mary Donlon, who was born and reared near that village, and they are the parents of two children, Margaret and Joseph Donlon.

LEWIS G. BUTLER. The owner of a highly improved ranch in the San Jacinto valley, Lewis G. Butler is a man of large acquaintance in this section of Riverside county, and as one of the organizers of the Hemet Deciduous Fruit Association and its efficient manager for seven years (dating from the time of its inception and continuing until April, 1906, when he resigned the position) he has conclusively proved his more than usual business ability, for that enterprise has been one of the most successful of the kind yet instituted in this part of the state. He is still a stockholder in the association, but is now devoting his time to the prosecution of his private business interests. He is a native of Wisconsin, born in 1851, the son of G. W. and E. E. Butler, neither of whom are now living.

The boyhood days of Mr. Butler were spent in De Kalb county, Ill., where he was given the benefit of a good common school education, that state having been his home until 1870, when he removed to Nebraska and farmed for a period of four years. In 1874 he yielded to a desire to locate in California, and coming to Orange county secured employment for a couple of years, after which he purchased twenty acres of land, a part of which he planted to oranges, the remainder being devoted to nursery purposes.

After some time, desiring to conduct operations on a larger scale, he purchased four hundred and eighty acres of land near Westminster, in the same county, and engaged in stock-raising for a short period. Locating subsequently in Santa Ana he lived there a season and finally purchased one hundred and twenty acres of raw land in the San Jacinto valley and began its improvement. This was in 1884, at the time when fruit raising was in its infancy. He erected a comfortable house and the other necessary buildings, planted fruit trees, being one of the first to engage in horticultural pursuits. With the passing of years he has continued to add improvements to his ranch, until it is now regarded as one of the most valuable and attractive in this beautiful valley.

In Nebraska in 1872 Mr. Butler was united in marriage with Miss M. E. Selby, a native of Ohio, and they have one child, Chester G., at home. Fraternally Mr. Butler is a member of Riverside Lodge No. 643, B. P. O. E., and politically he is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party. In every enterprise instituted for the improvement of his section he takes a leading interest, and is a public-spirited citizen who is held in the highest esteem throughout the community.

THOMAS JOBBITT. When the Jobbitt family became established in America from England its members selected Canada as the sphere of their activities and it was not until the present generation that they became transplanted in the United States. Descended from the original English settler in Canada was James Jobbitt, who was born and reared in Toronto, followed the trade of a merchant tailor in that city, conducted a large business for a very long period, and eventually passed from earth when lacking only four years of having rounded out a full century. At the same age occurred the death of his wife, Elizabeth (Bright) Jobbitt, a native of Toronto and a descendant of an English ancestry. Of their nine children six are still living, Thomas being third in order of birth. From their parents the sons and daughters have inherited rugged constitutions and sturdy health and as an instance of this it may be stated that Thomas, though now lacking but a few years of seventy, has never suffered with toothache or headache, but in his advancing years, as in his youth, has enjoyed exceptional health.

In the city of Toronto Thomas Jobbitt was born January 11, 1830, and there he attended the city schools, receiving fair advantages for the acquisition of a broad fund of general information. From childhood he proved himself to be a natural mechanic and his ability in that direction led him to take up carpentering, which he followed in Toronto and vicinity. During 1864 he left home and removed to Chicago, where he followed his trade, and after the great Chicago fire he took contracts for replacing buildings lost in the memorable catastrophe. For years he followed contracting in Chicago with fair success, but eventually he chanced to come to San Diego on a visit, and the desirability of the place as a location for a home led him to remove hither in December of 1888, since which time he has engaged in contracting and building in the city and vicinity. He has superintended the erection of the Granger and Keating buildings, numerous other public structures, as well as many of the finest residences here, and is universally recognized as one of the most extensive builders of the city.

While never active in politics nor solicitous to hold office, Mr. Jobbitt has kept himself posted concerning national problems ever since he became a citizen of the United States and he has been unswerving in his allegiance to the Republican party. With his wife, who was Miss Catherine Heap, a native of Iowa, he enjoys the esteem of associates and the friendship of many of the most cultured people of the city. Mrs. Jobbitt has been active in the work of the Baptist Church and he has contributed regularly to its missionary and benevolent enterprises. Along the line of his chosen occupation he has maintained a warm interest in the work of the Master Builders' Association, with which he has been connected ever since its organization. After coming to the coast he became connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was initiated in Sunset Lodge No. 328, to which he now belongs, in addition to being associated, with his wife, in the work of the Order of Rebekahs.

JOHN C. BLAKE. For more than thirty years John C. Blake has been a resident of San Bernardino county and been identified with the development of this part of the state. He is a native of Canada, and was born May 12, 1850, the son of Irish parents, Patrick and Bridget (Burns) Blake, who in 1846 immigrated to Canada, and there engaged in farming. There were three children born to them, the daughter dying in infancy, one son living in Canada, and John C., of Colton. The father was sixty years of age at the time of his death, while the mother outlived her husband many years and was eighty-six when she died, both being members of the Catholic Church.

Both public and private schools were attended by Mr. Blake in pursuit of an education in Canada, and when not quite twenty years of age he left his native land for the western coast of the United States, arriving in Humboldt county, California, in 1870. For several years he engaged in the lumber business in that location and in 1874 removed to Los Angeles, where for one year he worked at the carpenter's trade, and then came to Colton in 1875, having charge of a section gang for the Southern Pacific Railroad, and becoming the first resident of this now thriving city. Eleven years later he gave up railroad work, and in 1887 purchased the ranch upon which he now resides. It comprises fifty acres of fertile land, six acres being devoted to fruit and forty-four acres to grain and pasture. He has been very successful in his ranching operations and is a highly respected citizen of the community in which he has so long made his home.

Mr. Blake's marriage to Charity Coburn, a native daughter of California, occurred in 1877, and they have been blessed with four children, as follows: Henry, who married Jennie Brown, has one child and lives in Los Angeles; Herbert and Norman, both at home; and Grace, who is the wife of S. J. Stanfield. Mrs. Blake passed away in 1894, when only thirty-four years of age. Mr. Blake is a Democrat politically and is an active participant in matters of public interest.

CHESTER W. CURTIS. A wide-awake business man, thoroughly posted on financial matters, and fully acquainted with the most up-to-date banking methods, Chester W. Curtis, cashier of the First National Bank of Colton, is highly esteemed for his worth and integrity. The Curtis family is one which has been identified with New England history and development for many generations, and it was in August, 1857, that Chester W. was born in Stratford, Conn., that state being also the native home of his father, William T. Curtis. When news of the discovery of gold in California reached the Atlantic seaboard the elder Curtis became desirous of entering the race for wealth, and accordingly in 1849 came via Cape Horn to the Pacific coast and engaged in mining operations for a few years. He was only fairly successful, however, and upon returning to Connecticut he engaged in the mercantile business until 1891. In that year he returned to the west and permanently located in Riverside, where he has lived retired from active business ever since.

After acquiring his education in the Easthampton (Mass.) schools Chester W. Curtis was occupied as a merchant until 1889, when he came to California and entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railway Company, filling positions in various departments until 1902, when he resigned to become bookkeeper in the First National Bank of Colton, and remained at that post until 1905, when he was elected cashier, the position which he now fills with credit to himself and the officials of the bank. He is a member of several prominent fraternal orders, among them being the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Ashlar Lodge No. 306, F. and A. M.; and Colton Lodge No. 137, K. of P.

JOSEPH STEPHEN STRAWSER. Owning and conducting one of the largest steam laundries in Southern California, Joseph Stephen Strawser, of the Santa Fe Laundry in San Bernardino, is known as one of the most successful and enterprising business men and progressive citizens of this municipality. He was born September 13, 1873, in Danville, Ill., the son of Abraham and Martha (Bainbridge) Strawser, both natives of Illinois, in which state the death of the mother occurred. The father was a member of an old Pennsylvania family, and in former years he was a farmer. In 1886 he removed to California, later went to Colorado, but finally returned to this state, and is now a grocery merchant in Los Angeles. Three of his five children are now living, as follows: Lewis, associated with him in the Los Angeles business; Burt, president of the Troy Laundry in Los Angeles; and Joseph Stephen, engaged in the laundry business in San Bernardino. The latter, the youngest member of the family, attended the public schools until twelve years of age, when it became necessary for him to provide for his own support.

It was in 1886 that Mr. Strawser first came to California, locating in Corona, which was then just being laid out and the building started. Later he returned to Illinois and was occupied for a time as a sign painter and decorator, subsequently engaging in railroad work as fireman on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois. From there he went to Greeley, Colo., remaining one year, and in 1895 was once more in California. After spending a short time in mine prospecting he entered the employ of the San Bernardino Steam Laundry for the purpose of learning the business in all its details. He soon worked himself up to the foremanship of the plant, and in February, 1903, he and Mr. Miller leased the Santa Fe Laundry, the company which owned it having been organized in 1901. A year later Miller & Strawser purchased the plant, which they enlarged to more than double its old capacity, making the building 60x100 feet, erected barns for oil tanks, installed modern machinery, new boilers and engines, electric irons, etc. The large business handled by the Santa Fe Laundry extends over Riverside and San Bernardino counties and even into Arizona. Mr. Strawser is president and general manager of the firm and Mr. Miller is treasurer.

The marriage of Mr. Strawser, which occurred in San Bernardino, united him with Miss Winnie L. Clems, a native of that city and a daughter of Joseph Clems, who was of English birth and a prominent pioneer in this county. One child, Helen, was born of this union. In fraternal circles Mr. Strawser holds a prominent place, being a member and past grand of Token Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F., also belonging to Morse Encampment, of which he is past chief patriarch; a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and of the Woodmen of the World. His wife belongs to the Rebekahs. Mr. Strawser is a member of the Southern California Laundrymen's Association, and of the San Bernardino Board of Trade, and politically he is a Republican.

THOMAS H. CARROLL. Various of the public residences that give a substantial appearance to the architecture of Oxnard are the result of the skill and efficiency of Thomas H. Carroll, who for a number of years has devoted his attention to the building business and has taken contracts for the erection of structures of every kind. Though not one of the earliest residents of Oxnard, he has been identified with the development of the town since his arrival in June of 1901, and has been engaged in contracting since August of 1903, meanwhile establishing a reputation for reliable workmanship. Among the contracts which he has filled may be mentioned those for the Roman Catholic Church and parsonage, the Knights of Columbus building, the Livingston hospital and various residences that are models of tastefulness and comfort.

The Carroll family is of English ancestry. Capt. Richard Carroll, who was born in Liverpool, England, followed the sea throughout all of his active life, first sailing out from England, but later making his home in Nova Scotia, where he died. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Alice Dolhentry, was born in Nova Scotia and died there. They were the parents of nine children, but only four are now living. The only one to settle in California was Thomas H., who was fifth among the nine children, and was born in Antigonish county, Nova Scotia, November 28, 1852. After having received a fair education in the common schools he apprenticed himself to the carpenter's trade at the age of fourteen years, and by diligent application he gained a practical knowledge of the occupation in all of its details. Going to Newfoundland, he secured employment in the Betscove mines and remained there as mechanical superintendent for ten years.

Coming to the United States in 1883, Mr. Carroll remained for one year in Boston, Mass., and during 1884 he crossed the continent to the Pacific coast, settling in Los Angeles and working at his trade by the day. In time he began to take contracts for building, and later for nine years he worked as a stair builder in a mill owned by J. M. Griffiths. From Los Angeles he came to Oxnard and has since won a place among the enterprising business men of this growing city. It is his practice to study harmony in effect in planning a building, while in filling the contracts he shows skill, efficiency, promptness and reliability, so that a contract once filled serves as an advertisement for the high character of his work. While living in Los Angeles he there married Miss Leonora Horan, who was born in Canada and grew to womanhood in Wisconsin, coming from that state to the Pacific coast and residing with other members of her family in Los Angeles. Born of their marriage are three children, namely: Ethel, now a student in a business college in Los Angeles; Russell and Evangeline. The family hold membership with the Santa Clara Catholic Church and contribute to its maintenance, as well as to other measures and organizations for the upbuilding of the race. In fraternal relations Mr. Carroll affiliates with the Knights of Columbus, in whose activities he is warmly interested and to whose permanent welfare he is a contributor of time and influence.

JACOB HUFF. Nowhere are the attractions of California more apparent than in the thickly-populated region lying from Los Angeles to the east as far as the sandy plains. On this valley nature has bestowed her choicest charms, and the sun smiles from unclouded skies upon thousands of acres of orchards and citrus-fruit groves, giving to the orange its own golden glow and imparting to ever variety of fruit a richness and flavor surpassed by no region. Along the well-kept roads may be seen beautiful homesteads, with their cottages built in the southern style of architecture, combining comfort and symmetry of proportions. A few acres suffice to provide for the maintenance of the owner, for the returns from each acre are large under proper cultivation.

To many of the state's best citizens such homesteads furnish an ideal means of livelihood, and Jacob Huff is one of the large number engaged in the cultivation of a small orange grove in the midst of surroundings so nearly approaching the ideal as are to be found in his locality. The eight-acre tract which he owns is situated in close proximity to Highland and under his care has been transformed from the original wild state to its present improved condition. The land was purchased in 1884 and seven years later he erected the cottage he now occupies. The substantial barn also was built under his supervision. Six acres are planted to deciduous fruits, one and one-half acres to navel oranges, and the balance in lemons, which, however, he now is cutting out and budding to navel oranges. The trees have been raised from the seed and are of the finest varieties, so that the fruit commands good prices in the markets. Water for irrigation is brought from Little Sand cañon and carried through every part of the orchard as needed, thus furnishing satisfactory condition for promoting the growth of the trees and the ripening of the fruit.

While he has spent the greater part of his life in California, Mr. Huff is a native of Iowa and was born January 12, 1862. When one year old he was taken to Montana by his parents, Jacob and Elizabeth Huff. His father died there in 1865 and two years later the mother brought the family to San Bernardino county, Cal., where she died in 1879, at the age of forty-nine years. Reared in this locality and educated in the common schools, Jacob Huff selected horticulture for his life work and from an early age he has devoted himself to this calling, meeting with an encouraging degree of success as a result of industry and painstaking application. In 1888 he was united in marriage with Miss Viola Zimmerman, who was born in Missouri and came to the Pacific coast with her parents, Daniel B. and Elizabeth (Lewis) Zimmerman. At this writing Mrs. Zimmerman owns a small homestead near Highland, where she has four acres in oranges. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Huff consists of three children, namely: Mazie Elizabeth, Jacob C. Loyal and Nona Viola, all of whom are at home.

BENJAMIN M. ATKINSON. Two miles south of Palms lies the ranch of five acres which is the home of Mr. Atkinson and which forms one of the many small estates of Los Angeles county, the high development of which has added greatly to the county's prosperity. In addition to the homestead, which a conservative valuation places at $600 per acre, Mr. Atkinson is the owner of mining stock that brings him a fair income each year, and in addition he owns considerable undeveloped mining property. Loyal to the county and state of his residence, he maintains the keenest interest in any movement calculated to promote local progress and views every advance made, whether from an educational, religious or moral standpoint, as a step in the right direction; yet his views are somewhat different from those of many citizens, for he is a believer in socialistic doctrines and years ago left the Democratic party to give his support to the movement so intelligently promoted by Henry George and others.

In Van Wert county, Ohio, Benjamin M. Atkinson was born September 18, 1840, being a son of Jesse and Mary (Done) Atkinson, natives of Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather, William Atkinson, was a native of England; the maternal grandfather, who it is supposed was a native of Pennsylvania, followed the trade of a wagon-maker in that state for many years. As early as 1830 Jesse Atkinson became a pioneer farmer of Ohio and aided in the development of large tracts of land in that state; for, although he was a tailor by trade, much of his life was devoted to agriculture and he was a practical and enterprising farmer. At the time of his death he was eighty-five years of age; his wife, who died in 1859, was an earnest member of the Baptist Church.

At eighteen years of age Benjamin M. Atkinson started out in the world to earn his livelihood. Chance directed his steps to Kansas, which then was attracting a large number of settlers and home-seekers. Although he took up a claim and devoted one year to its improvement, he was not satisfied with the environment and traded his claim for a horse, on which he rode to Iowa. For two years he worked on a farm in Fremont county. Next he went to Montana and took up land near Virginia City, where, in addition to farming, he became interested in mines. After seven fairly successful years he returned to Fremont county, Iowa, where for four years he engaged in farming. Next he removed to Kansas and took up land in Norton county, but again his experience of Kansas was not gratifying. Repeated droughts destroyed his crops, and in seasons where the amount of rainfall was sufficient to produce and mature a crop, the grasshoppers came like an invading army and left naught behind but destruction and distress. After fifteen unprofitable years he left his Kansas ranch and removed to the San Luis valley in Colorado, where he worked on a ranch about eighteen months. From there he came to California and settled on a farm in Ventura county. During the spring of 1896 his attention became somewhat diverted from farming by his connection with the development of the Sunshine mine, which proved to be an excellent producer and which he operated, in connection with other owners of shares, until 1900. Since then his sons have had charge of the mine under lease. In the meantime he has had other mining interests and among his undeveloped claims he now has the Excelsior, Klondike and Topsy Rustler, all of which are promising propositions. In July of 1905 he came to

Los Angeles county and purchased the property where now he makes his home.

While living in Fremont county, Iowa, Mr. Atkinson married Miss Malinda Ferrell, who was born in Floyd county, Ind., her father being a native of Kentucky. She died in Ventura county in 1890. Nine children were born of their union, namely: Thomas Watson, a partner of his father in the Sunshine mine; William Norris, manager of the Sunshine mine; Edward Cleveland, who operates the three-stamp mill connected with the same mine; Clemmons Jesse, who died at the age of fourteen years and six months; Elmira C., who is the wife of O. A. Kreighbaum, of Fullerton, Cal.; Mary E., wife of J. F. Pitt, of Indian Territory; Malinda J., Mrs. C. G. Ferrell, of Palms; Ina M., who married Ernest Case and resides in Ventura county; and Sylvia Lenore, who has charge of the house and ministers to her father's comfort.

JOHN HYLAND MYERS. The business interests represented by the firm of Myers & Abplanalp are among the most important in the town of Oxnard, Ventura county. On the organization of the present firm in 1902 a planing mill was erected, and, by the purchase and consolidation of two other mills, a large trade was established at the outset. In all of its equipments the mill is modern, power being furnished by an electric motor. The capacity of the plant is sufficiently large to permit of the manufacture of all kinds of material in large quantities. While the mill comes under the personal supervision of Mr. Myers, his partner has charge of their contracting and building business and makes a specialty of contracts for brick and concrete work.

Mr. Myers comes of a family of lumber manufacturers. His father, Henry, and grandfather were both interested in the manufacture of lumber, and the former, working his way up in the business from early boyhood, built and conducted lumber mills near Manitowoc, Wis., and owned the vessels used in carrying his lumber to the city markets. Though only twenty-seven years of age when he died at Racine, his energy and wise judgment had rendered possible, at that early age, the accumulation of a competency which in those days was considered a small fortune. At his death he left two sons, John Hyland, of Oxnard, and Foster D., who died in Nevada City, Cal. The wife and mother, who bore the maiden name of Clarinda Raymond, was born in New York and removed to Wisconsin with her parents. After her marriage she remained in Racine and reared her sons there until 1876, when she came to Santa Barbara, Cal., her present home. Now, as Mrs. Stafford, she is widowed a second time, her second husband having died in California.

Born in Racine, Wis., July 11, 1862, John Hyland Myers was fourteen years of age when he arrived in Santa Barbara, Cal., October 21, 1876, and there he attended a private academy as well as the city high school. At the age of seventeen he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade under Thomas Nixon, with whom he remained in Santa Barbara for five years. At the expiration of his time he began to work at his trade in Los Angeles, but a year later, in 1887, he went to Arizona, where he helped to rebuild Flagstaff after it had been burned down. Returning to California, he became one of the first contractors and builders in Saticoy, which had been laid out very recently. For about three years he remained in that town, meanwhile erecting the large hotel there. In the fall of 1889 he began to work in San Francisco. One year later, when the Charles hotel at Saticoy burned down, he was solicited to return and rebuild the structure and consented to take the contract, which brought him back to Saticoy. Many of the most important contracts were given to him for the putting up of private houses and business structures, and he remained in the place, busily engaged at his trade, until the spring of 1899, when he came to Oxnard as a contractor and builder. Erecting a residence in the town, he moved his family here in 1900, and has since become known as one of the reliable and capable business men of the place. While living at Saticoy he married Miss Artemisia L. Bither, a native of Maine and, like himself, an Episcopalian in religious views.

The Republican party always has had the earnest support of Mr. Myers, who ranks among its local leaders. In 1904 he accepted an appointment to serve as member of the town council of Oxnard, to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Parrish. Since becoming a councilman he has supported all movements for the development of the town and the expansion of its commercial affairs, yet at the same time he has safeguarded the welfare of taxpayers and has been as solicitous to avoid reckless expenditures as he has been anxious to promote necessary improvements. His fraternal relations are varied and important, and include membership in the Independent Order of Foresters; Oxnard Lodge No. 341, F. and A. M.; Oxnard Lodge, I. O. O. F.; also the Encampment and the Order of Rebekahs.

GLEN HOLLY DAIRY. What push and enterprise when rightly directed can accomplish has nowhere been better illustrated than in the history of the Glen Holly Dairy of Long Beach. In the spring of 1905 the plant was established as an off-shoot of the parent establishment known by the same name in Los Angeles. It was carried on for a number of months with indifferent success, when, in September, 1905, the plant was purchased by H. N. Williams and F. E. Norman, since which time it has been increased in size until it is now one of the largest dairy industries in the county outside of Los Angeles. The plant is located at the corner of Third and Alamitos streets. They handle the product of five hundred cows, which supplies both the wholesale and retail trade, and in the transportation of which they keep five wagons constantly employed. A number of the smaller dairies in Long Beach have been added to the plant from time to time, until the Glen Holly Dairy handles practically all of the business in that line throughout Long Beach and surrounding country. The office and storeroom are located at No. 223 Pine avenue.

One of the prime movers in the success of the Glen Holly Dairy is H. N. Williams, who spent the greater part of his life in Lyons, Kans., where he attended the common and high schools, later taking a course in Washington and Jefferson College, a Presbyterian institution in Washington, Pa.

F. E. Norman is a native of Illinois, where for many years he had been engaged in the life insurance business. For some time after coming to the west he followed this business in San Francisco, coming to Los Angeles in 1904 as a general agent for the Germania Life Insurance Company. He resigned this position in September of the following year to become associated with Mr. Williams in the purchase of the Glen Holly Dairy, with which his name has since been associated.

DOCTOR M. BREEDLOVE. In giving a résumé of those who have taken a prominent part in the upbuilding of San Diego county, and especially that part in the vicinity of Escondido, prominent mention belongs to Mr. Breedlove, whose ranch and chicken farm are among the model enterprises in this part of the county. He is one of six children born to his parents, William and Susan (Haggard) Breedlove, both of whom were born and reared in Kentucky. In later years they removed to Missouri, and on the large ranch which the father owned in that state his earth life came to a close in 1892, when in his seventy-fourth year. His wife also died on the home place when seventy-three years of age.

Of the five children, two still reside in the east and three are in California. D. M. Breedlove was born in Webster county, Mo., February 26, 1859, and until after attaining his majority he had never left his native state. His application to the duties which fell to his lot as a farmer's son, however, gave him a knowledge of agricultural affairs which stood him in good stead when, at the age of twenty-two years, he launched out on an independent career. Leaving Missouri in 1879 he came direct to Paradise Mountain, San Diego county, and took up a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres, which became the nucleus of the ranch he now owns. As his means permitted he purchased eighty acres adjoining and now has two hundred and forty acres devoted to diversified farming. A part of the land is in grain and orchard (the latter comprising seven hundred almond trees), cattle and horses are raised and pastured on another portion, but the part of the ranch that is given over to the raising of chickens is perhaps the most profitable, for this branch of agriculture claims Mr. Breedlove's particular attention.

A marriage ceremony performed in Escondido in 1883 united the destinies of D. M. Breedlove and Laura Harrison, the latter a native of Illinois, and five children have been born to them: Edward, Waldo, Inez, Harry and Myrtle. In his political belief Mr. Breedlove is a Democrat, on the ticket of which party he was elected to the office of constable, a position for which he is well fitted.

DANIEL McNIVEN. Some men are born great, and some have to achieve greatness. Evidently Daniel McNiven, an esteemed resident of North Glendale, Los Angeles county, was destined to be the architect of his own fortune. Beginning at the foot of the ladder of attainments as a boy of fourteen years, he has made diligent use of his natural talents and given opportunities, and by untiring energy, sturdy application, wisdom and sagacity, has won a position of prominence and influence in social, fraternal and financial circles. A son of Donald and Mary (McLeod) McNiven, he was born in New York state, where his parents settled on coming to the United States from their native land, Scotland, and where they lived a short time before taking up their permanent residence in Prince Edward Island.

Brought up in the Canadian province of Prince Edward Island, Daniel McNiven received meagre educational advantages as a boy, attending school until fourteen years old. Starting in life then on his own account, he worked in Halifax, Nova Scotia, for two years, and from there migrated to Boston, Mass., where he served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade with a skilful contractor and builder, in whose employ he continued a number of years. Leaving Boston in 1876, he went first to Rhode Island, thence westward, finally locating in Manitoba, Northwestern Territory, where he secured a position as foreman of a gang of laborers, and had charge of building the station houses on the Canadian Pacific Railroad. In 1879 he went to Leadville, Colo., where for twenty-five years he was actively and successfully engaged in mining. An expert in mining matters, he was made manager of the Chrysolite Silver Mining Company, a New York concern, with mines at Leadville and Fryer Hill, and this responsible position he still retains, although he now resides in California. In 1905 he met the secretary and treasurer of the company, they representing the board of directors, and sent by them his resignation as manager. This the company refused to accept, and as Mr. McNiven is not a stockholder the refusal was a great compliment to his ability and trustworthiness. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1901, he bought thirteen and thirty-seven hundredths acres of land in North Glendale, and having made considerable improvement has now a valuable ranch, on which he has resided for two years.

In Leadville, Colo., Mr. McNiven married Alice Cunningham, who was born and educated in St. Louis, Mo. She died in Leadville, leaving three children, namely: Alice, wife of William Howie, who was born in Leadville, but now resides in Los Angeles; Margaret; and Lester. Mr. McNiven is prominent in Masonic circles, being a Knight Templar and a Shriner. In the lodges of which he is a member he has passed all the chairs, and while in Leadville served as eminent commander of Mount Holy Cross Commandery No. 5. On leaving the chair of master of Leadville Lodge No. 51, he was presented with a beautiful jewel, which he prizes highly.

JOHN JAY NESTELL. Without exception John Jay Nestell is the most enterprising and energetic business man in Avalon, where he is a large property holder and has done and is doing much to make Catalina Island one of the finest and most up-to-date resorts in the country. His own home is the largest and finest in the city, fitted with every modern improvement, and artistic in its furnishings and appointments. He has named his residence "Tio Juan," the Spanish for Uncle John, by which title Mr. Nestell is popularly known in Avalon. His birth occurred August 14, 1840, in New York City, where the early years of his life were spent. The Nestell family is of Holland-Dutch extraction, although the last six or seven generations have been natives and residents of New York City. The great-grandfather was a patriot in the Revolutionary war, and the grandfather fought in the war of 1812. The latter was a tobacconist, having been connected with the Lorillards in that business. The father, John Joachim, was engaged in business as an architect and builder, and resided in his younger years on Attorney street, in New York City, later removing to St. Mark's place and subsequently built his home on One Hundred and Twenty-fourth street, where his death occurred. His wife was Ann Jane Schultze, in maidenhood, a native also of New York City. She was a member of an old Dutch family, and lived in her native city until the time of her death, she and her husband both living to advanced ages. Of the nine children born to them seven grew to maturity, but John Jay Nestell is the only son of the family now living.

The fourth child in order of birth, after finishing his studies in the grammar schools of the city John Jay Nestell was sent to a private academy for a time. As a very young boy he evinced decided ambitions for a business career and when only thirteen years old used to read the "boy wanted" advertisements appearing in the daily papers. He finally secured a position as messenger boy at a salary of $15 a year, and performed his duties so well that the sum was doubled the second year. The firm soon failed in business, however, and the lad turned his attention to other work. Having a taste for building he decided to learn the carpenter's trade and became a pupil of his father in that work. After seven years he became manager of the business. One day in 1862 he was asked to call at the old Lorillard real estate office, being sent from there to the office of the Eagle Fire Insurance Company, where he was offered a position as surveyor at a salary of $700 a year. He accepted the offer and continued at the work for two years at an increased salary. He was then made assistant secretary of the company, which position he resigned three years later to organize the Manufacturers and Builders' Fire Insurance Company. Upon the receipt of his resignation the president of the Eagle Company sent for Mr. Nestell and asked him to continue with them at his own salary, but he had made promises to Mr. Loew that he did not care to recall. Accordingly the new company was organized and incorporated with Mr. Nestell as its secretary and Mr. Loew as president. They built up a good business, established agencies in all the important cities of the United States, and for twenty-seven years Mr. Nestell continued as secretary, traveling over the country from east to west and north to south, working up business. In 1892 he sold out to the Palatine Insurance Company of England, continuing to hold his position as secretary for three years, when he resigned in order to devote himself to other business interests.

While traveling in the south Mr. Nestell became interested in iron manufacturing with the Sloss Steel and Iron Company of Birmingham, Ala., acquiring a large amount of stock, but declining the presidency of the company. The business was a great success from the start and J. Campbell Maben, who filled the office of president, was also an officer with General Early in the Civil war on the Confederate side. Mr. Nestell served in the Twenty-second New York militia and met him in an encounter in Pennsylvania when that officer was detailed with a field force to keep the enemy in check until Early had made his escape. Mr. Nestell had been a member of Company B, of the old Twenty-second Regiment of New York militia, which was ordered to the front in 1863, and took part in early engagements, passed through the Gettysburg campaign and was later ordered to New York to quell the riots there.

It was in 1888 that Mr. Nestell made his first trip to California, coming here on business for the insurance company, and from that time on made the state yearly visits. He was in the Lake Lobish accident on the Southern Pacific when the trestles five miles north of Salem, Ore., gave way and the train fell through, killing or maiming for life every other passenger in the car, although Mr. Nestell was fortunate enough to escape without injury. For nearly twenty years he has been interested in raisin growing near Fresno, where in 1888 he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of raw land located seven miles west of the city, near the Kearney vineyard, and had it planted to Muscat, Sultanas and Thompson's seedless varieties of the raisin grape, which are now producing large crops yearly. Mr. Nestell still retaining his ownership of the land. He has also large property interests in Los Angeles. Five years ago he began operations on Catalina Island and owns and has improved many properties there since that time. He owns the Pacific hotel, has built numerous first-class residences of the apartment class on Sumner avenue, and is the proprietor of Campus Virginia, an attractive tent village, modern in all of its appointments and strictly up-to-date. All of his improvements are of the highest class, for he believes in making Avalon a place that can compete with any of the eastern resorts, no matter how extensively they may be improved. He holds an interest in the Meteor Glass Bottom Boat Company also.

Fraternally Mr. Nestell was made a Mason in Bunting Lodge No. 655, A. F. and A. M., in New York City; is a member of Sylvan Chapter No. 48, R. A. M., in New York; and of the Constantine Commandery, K. T., of New York; is an honorary member of Nestell Lodge No. 37, F. and A. M., at Providence, R. I., which was named for his uncle, Christian M. Nestell. Politically he votes the Republican ticket in national affairs, but exercises considerable independence in local public matters. Religiously he affiliates with the Congregational denomination, being a member of Pilgrim Church in New York City. When living in New York he was for twelve years manager of the Fire Patrol Committee of that city, and also a prominent member of committees of the Board of Fire Underwriters.

Mr. Nestell's marriage, which united him with Emma E. Ball, a member of an old New York family, occurred in New York City, and they have become the parents of three children, all of whom live in the country's metropolis: Isabelle is the wife of Warren A. Leonard; Edward Victor is a broker; and Raymond Jay is a chemist in New York City. Although the greater part of his time is necessarily devoted to the management of his widely extended business interests Mr. Nestell does not neglect his duties as a leading citizen and is actively interested in all matters of public import, lending his time and influence to the furthering of every upbuilding and progressive enterprise. He is a man of high principles, broad and liberal views and is held in the highest esteem and respect by hosts of friends and acquaintances throughout the United States.

W. HORACE AUSTIN. Since September, 1894, W. Horace Austin has been a resident of Long Beach, where he has acquired a success in his line of builder and contractor. He is a native of Kansas, his birth having occurred March 11, 1871, in Abilene, Dickinson county, from which place his father, Dr. W. H. Austin, removed to Long Beach, where he is now living retired from the active cares of life. He received a preliminary education in the public schools and academy of Abilene, and for two years attended St. John's Military School at Salina, Kans. After his location in Long Beach, where his parents removed on account of their health, he attended the public schools of this place. At the age of fourteen years he was apprenticed to learn the trade of carpenter and for the ensuing seven years remained in the employ of one man. He became thoroughly proficient in every department of the work and upon the departure for England of Mr. Green, he began the business on his own responsibility in partnership with W. T. Barton. From December, 1902, they continued together for one year, when Mr. Austin succeeded to the business in Long Beach, where he has since carried on the work. With his work as a journeyman he also took up architectural drawing and later a complete course through the medium of the International Correspondence School. He began on a small scale and as his means permitted enlarged his operations until he is now employing on an average twenty men a year. A small part of his work has been the erection of the residences of Charles Heartwell, Mrs. Carpenter, F. E. Shaw, W. B. Julian, L. Jakes, T. A. Stevens, Miss I. A. Kimball, the Bank of Commerce building, the flat of R. W. Martin, and R. H. Martin, and many others of equal note. He is self made in the best sense implied by the term, and while he is winning his way to the front among the business men of the place he is also gaining an enviable position as a man of integrity, energy and business ability.

Mr. Austin's home is in Long Beach, where he has invested his means in considerable unimproved property, a manifestation of his faith in the future of this section. He maintains an office at the corner of Fourth and Chestnut streets and looks after his business with ability and energy. He is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M.; Long Beach Chapter No. 88, R. A. M.; and Commandery No. 40, K. T.; while he is also identified with Long Beach Lodge No. 888, B. P. O. E., and with the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is broad and gives his support to the men whom he considers best qualified for public duty.

JOHN AERICK. The genealogy of the Aerick family is traced to Sweden and the first of the name in America was John, Sr., a native of the capital city of Stockholm, but from the age of nine years a resident of the United States. After making the long journey from his home land in company with his sisters he settled in Illinois and hired out to a farmer, working for board and clothes. Among strangers in a strange land, far from his kindred and uncheered by the sight of any of his relatives, he yet was buoyed up by the optimism of youth and the possession of a hopeful spirit. When news came of the discovery of gold in California he, having no ties to bind him to the locality of his residence, at once made plans to cross the plains, and in the spring of 1849 started with a party of emigrants traveling with oxen and wagons. On arriving at his destination he took up mining, but the work did not prove profitable and he soon turned his attention to freighting, in which he was interested for a number of years.

During the '60s John Aerick, Sr., became a pioneer of Los Angeles county and secured one hundred and sixty acres of land lying at the west end of Vernon avenue, Los Angeles, but later it developed that the land was a portion of the Sanchez grant, and he therefore lost it. Next he purchased one hundred and twenty acres adjoining the other property, six miles from the Los Angeles court-house and just outside of the present city limits, and this tract is now owned by his widow, Elizabeth (Hunter) Aerick, who resides on West Thirty-seventh street between Normandie and Western avenues. Ere yet old age had brought its attendant infirmities, Mr. Aerick passed away April 5, 1895, leaving considerable property and a reputation for honor, integrity and irreproachable character. Mrs. Aerick was born in Los Angeles and was the daughter of Jesse Hunter, a pioneer of California and a stockman in this locality for a long period.

In a family of eight children, all but one of whom still survive, John Aerick, Jr., was the eldest son and the second child, and was born April 6, 1872, at the homestead beyond the limits of Vernon avenue, in the city of Los Angeles. Primarily educated in the public school, he was later a student in the Baptist College of Los Angeles and the Woodbury Business College. After leaving school he secured employment on the Baldwin ranch, where for six years he had charge of the cattle. On the death of his father he returned home and for two years managed the farm in the interests of the heirs. Coming to Inglewood in 1897, he has since made his home in this locality and now owns two and one-half acres in the town, which property he has improved with a neat residence. Ever since living here he has rented land from Dan Freeman and now operates four hundred acres, devoted to the raising of barley and corn, and to the pasturage of stock, his specialty being mules. Movements for the benefit of his town receive his stanch support, as shown by his connection with various important enterprises. He is a stockholder in the First State Bank and the Citizens' Home Water Company of Inglewood and in addition acts as secretary of the latter concern.

The marriage of Mr. Aerick took place in Los Angeles December 23, 1897, and united him with Miss Lulu Dosta, a native of that city. Her parents, Mitchell and Barbara (Jones) Dosta, were natives respectively of Germany and Norway, and came to America in childhood, the latter in company with her mother. After crossing the plains to California Mr. Dosta engaged in mining, but soon removed to Los Angeles county and bought a farm of eighty acres, establishing his home on what is now South Vermont near Vernon avenue. On that place his death occurred when he was sixty-seven years of age, and his wife passed away in January, 1905, aged sixty years. Of their five children four are living, namely: Mrs. Josephine Russell, of Manhattan Beach; Lillie, of Inglewood; Charles, who is engaged in engineering in Mexico; and Mrs. Lulu Aerick, the youngest of the family. The latter is prominently connected with the Women of Woodcraft and officiates as banker of the local lodge, while Mr. Aerick is an officer in the lodges of the Woodmen of the World and the Independent Order of Foresters. Politically he votes with the Republican party and gives his influence to its candidates. The Inglewood Commercial Club numbers him among its members, and his energetic encouragement is given to this organization, as well as to all movements for the upbuilding of the town and the development of its business interests.

HENRY H. HARRIS. Possessing large business ability, the recipient of a good education and superior training, Henry H. Harris is well fitted to take a leading position in the life of the community in which he resides. An extensive and successful ranchman, he farms five hundred acres of fertile land near Elsinore, which he devotes to the raising of grain, hay, cattle and hogs, shipping about two carloads of stock each year. On July 29, 1855, he was born in La Grange, Wis., the son of Henry H. and Jane M. (Ward) Harris, both natives of New York and who died in Wisconsin, the father in Madison in 1858, and the mother in Milton in 1874. The senior Harris was one of the first merchants of Milwaukee, and later removed to Madison, Wis., where he was engaged in the buying of grain. After completing a high-school course in Whitehall, Wis., the son engaged in farming until 1885, after which he went to Janesville and conducted an implement business, handling farm machinery, buggies, etc. In 1897 he disposed of this business and came to California, locating in Orange county, near Fullerton, where he bought a twenty-acre orange ranch and lived until June 14, 1902. On this date he came to Elsinore and bought two hundred and fifteen acres of land which is embraced in the ranch upon which he now resides with his family.

In 1884, in Milton, Wis., occurred the marriage of Henry H. Harris, uniting him with Miss Sophia Walker, a daughter of William Walker, a Presbyterian minister of that city. Two children have blessed this union, Harry H. being married and making his home with his parents; and Walker W., also residing under the parental roof. Politically Mr. Harris is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and fraternally is a member of Janesville Lodge No. 14, I. O. O. F. He was elected a trustee of Elsinore high school in 1904 and is president of the board at the present time. He is a man of many fine personal qualities and a public-spirited citizen and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

ARTHUR BRIDGE STEEL. Back through several generations the Steel family has furnished surgeons both to the army and navy of England, and among these few were more prominent than R. Steel, M. D., for years an army surgeon, also a member of the Royal College of Surgeons. Among the children of this army surgeon was a son, Dr. R. J. Steel, a graduate of Oxford University, who was connected with the Royal College of Surgeons as an influential member and practiced his profession in London until he died. For a wife he chose Emma Bridge, daughter of a horticulturist in Kent, where she was born and educated; her death occurred in 1898 in London. Of their marriage two sons were born, the elder of whom, F. W., continues to reside in London. The younger, Arthur Bridge, was born in Cambridge, England, in 1869, and received his education at Malmesbury College, East Dulwich, London, graduating in 1883 in belles lettres, and at the same time taking a course in engineering. For three years he was employed as clerk in a wholesale fancy goods importing house, after which, in 1886, he came to the United States and settled in California. Horticulture occupied his attention for the first two years of his sojourn on the Pacific coast. Later he was employed in the track department of the Southern Pacific Railroad at Riverside, Horseshoe Bend, San Onofre in San Diego county, Redondo and other places, filling the position of foreman until he resigned in 1899. During the latter year he purchased from G. J. Lindsay a planing mill on Beryl and Dominguez streets, Redondo, and continued business at that point until October 1, 1905, when he bought a block of ground on Pacific avenue and erected a new planing mill.

With his brother-in-law, A. A. McGuffie, as a partner under the name of the Redondo Planing Mill Company, Mr. Steel carries on an increasing business in his line. The equipment of his mill is the best and most modern. Power is furnished by a one hundred horse-power steam engine. At one time he operated a barley rolling mill in connection with the planing mill, but these two industries are now separated, the Redondo Milling Company being organized in 1905. They have erected warehouses with a sixty thousand sack capacity and the barley mill is run in connection with the same. Besides his business holdings he owns residence property, including his homestead on Catalina avenue.

While living at Santa Ana he married Florence B. McGuffie, who was born and reared in Los Angeles. Four daughters have been born of their union, Ethel E., Hazel A., Mabel B. and Viola B. Politically Mr. Steel is a firm Republican and in every respect loyal to the highest interests of his adopted country. In the spring of 1904 he was elected a member of the town board of trustees, where now he renders capable service on the auditing and street and lighting committees. Fraternally he has varied connections, including membership in the Independent Order of Foresters, in which he served as chief ranger for three terms. Some years ago he was made a Mason in Evergreen Lodge, F. & A. M., at Riverside, and is now affiliated with Redondo Lodge No. 328, F. & A. M., of which he is past master. In addition he holds membership with the Royal Arch Chapter at San Pedro and with the Order of the Eastern Star, in which latter body he is past patron, while his wife has held the office of matron.

EDWARD S. ABBOTT. As head of the firm of Abbott & Anderson, wholesale and retail meat dealers, Edward S. Abbott is intimately identified with the mercantile interests of San Pedro, doing his full share in promoting its business prosperity. Enterprising, liberal-minded and of undoubted integrity, he merits and receives the warmest confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens, being well liked and popular throughout the community. A native of Iowa, he was born November 12, 1875, in Hopkinton, Delaware county. On another page of this work, in the sketch of his father, O. C. Abbott, a brief history of his parents and ancestors may be found.

His parents removing to Colorado when he was a boy, Edward S. Abbott was there educated in the public schools, living in that state until 1890, when the family settled at San Pedro, Cal. At once entering the employ of Mr. Piltz, he learned the trade of a butcher under his instruction, after which he worked five years for J. L. Griffin. In 1901 he bought out his employer, becoming senior member of the firm of Abbott & Erickson, and for four years ran the San Pedro market, carrying on a successful business. Selling his interests in the company to his partner in the spring of 1905, Mr. Abbott spent a few months in traveling, visiting many of the more important points of interest in the northwest. Returning to San Pedro, he formed a partnership with Mr. Anderson, and on October 1, 1905, opened the Bay City meat market, which is finely equipped, having a new refrigerator of large capacity, electric lights, and all of the appointments and improvements necessary in an up-to-date market. He is located at No. 114 Sixth street, where he and his partner are rapidly building up an extensive business, their patronage being large and lucrative.

Mr. Abbott is an able and skilful business man and a member of the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce. Politically he is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M.; and to the Benevolent, Protective Order of Elks. He is also an exempt member of the San Pedro Firemen's Company, which he formerly served as foreman and secretary.

JAMES P. HANSEN. Holding an honored position among the industrious and prosperous citizens of Inglewood, Los Angeles county, is James P. Hansen, widely and favorably known as one of the leading blacksmiths of this vicinity. He is in all respects a self made man, having begun life a poor boy entirely without capital, and having by sturdy toil and able management accumulated an easy competency. A native of Germany, he was born January 9, 1873, in Sleswick-Holstein, near Scarbeck, which was also the birthplace of his parents, Andreas and Maren (Schmidt) Hansen. His father, who was a sailor, and one of the officers of the ship, was drowned at sea in 1877, and his mother died during the very same month, unaware of the death of her husband. Of their five children, three survive, James P., the special subject of this sketch, being the second in order of birth of those now living.

Left an orphan at the age of four years, James P. Hansen spent his early life in his native town, attending the public schools until fourteen years old. Coming to California in 1887, he arrived in San Francisco early in the season, and for two years thereafter worked on a fruit ranch in Haywards. The next two years he was similarly employed at Mayfield, in Santa Clara county. Being a natural mechanic, and desirous of making use of his talent in that line, he served an apprenticeship of a year at the blacksmith's trade in Mayfield. In 1892 he located in Riverside county, and six months later came to Inglewood, establishing himself on the ranch of D. Freeman, for whom he worked at his trade five years. Starting in business on his own account in 1897, he bought a lot in Inglewood and erected his present blacksmith's shop. His business increasing with surprising rapidity, he has since made noteworthy improvements, having now one of the most modern, up-to-date establishments of the kind in this locality, and as a general blacksmith and horseshoer has no rival, his work being noted for its excellence and durability. He has a finely equipped machine shop, including a lever, an emery stand and a band saw. In his smithy he keeps two fires going, and has a large trip hammer. His plant is likewise furnished with a gasoline engine, with which he runs his machinery. Thrifty and a wise manager, he has accumulated considerable property, and in addition to owning five city lots he has erected a fine residence in Inglewood.

In Inglewood, January 26, 1898, Mr. Hansen married Octavia Gallateau, who was born in Michigan, of French ancestry, and they have one child, Myrtle Hansen. Politically Mr. Hansen is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he is a member and the treasurer of the Independent Order of Foresters, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Religiously he belongs to the Lutheran Church.

THOMAS M. HILL. "The days of old, the days of gold, the days of forty-nine," is to the ordinary mind the beginning of the history of California, so far as native-born Americans are concerned; but when one harks back to the twenties of the nineteenth century, a generation before the forty-niner's time, it takes us into the romantic days when those who lived on the large grants of land, surrounded by servants without number almost, lived like feudal lords. The grandfather of the subject of this review, Daniel Hill, was born in Massachusetts, crossed the continent in the early twenties, when emigrants were obliged to travel through hundreds of miles of Indian-infested wilderness, across seemingly endless plains, over trailless mountains, and through burning deserts before reaching the civilized spots marked by the Spanish missions. Daniel Hill located in Santa Barbara county near Goleta, and became owner of the La Patera grant and engaged in farming and stock-raising, as did most of those people who owned the large ranches. He married Rafella Ortega, a member of one of the old families whose name is familiar in the history of Spanish days.

The father of Thomas Hill was one of the youngest of their thirteen children, all of whom were raised on the ranch at Goleta. John Hill, the father of Thomas, was born here in 1834, and was among the first white native sons of California. He died when Thomas was but two years of age, from injuries received in an accident. The mother, too, was a native Californian, her father, James Burke, having emigrated from Ireland to Santa Barbara, where Maria Burke, the mother, was born. She is one of those interesting old settlers who still reside in Santa Barbara. There were but two children, and Thomas is the only one now living. He was born in 1864, on the 7th of March, at the old Hill ranch near Goleta, but was raised in Santa Barbara, where he received a public-school education only. When still a boy he went to work on a farm and when grown to manhood engaged in ranching at Goleta, which occupation he followed until the ranch was sold, when for several years he was in the employ of Mrs. W. R. Broome of Santa Barbara, superintending her ranch of twenty-five thousand acres, known as the Guadalasca ranch, and located in Ventura county east of Hueneme. When Oxnard was laid out he removed to this location, being one of the first dozen families to settle here. He bought a livery barn and established the first livery of the town of Oxnard and after conducting it for three years, sold out and engaged in the real estate and insurance business. In this occupation, too, he was a pioneer, for his firm was the oldest in the city. He was associated with Mr. Peile, the company being styled Peile & Hill, with offices in Los Angeles and Oxnard. This partnership continued until December 20, 1905, when it was dissolved, retaining the Oxnard office, having formed a partnership with Mr. Laubacher. Under the title of Hill & Laubacher, the firm have conducted an insurance business with flattering success and now represent forty old-line companies.

Mr. Hill was married in Santa Barbara to Miss Elizabeth Maginnis, who was born in Ireland, but was reared in Santa Barbara. They have a residence in Oxnard, and own as well other valuable property in this city. He is a member of the Santa Clara Roman Catholic Church, and a charter member of the Knights of Columbus. Politically he has always been a loyal Republican and has done his share of active work in the party. He was a member of the first board of trustees of Oxnard, and was the father of the first ordinance passed in Oxnard, but the press of other business obliged him to resign before his term expired. Mr. Hill has always been a prominent and progressive citizen of whatever community he has called home and a commendable interest in the business, social and political life of his locality has been an invariable characteristic of the man.

HENRY F. KAISER. The pioneer builder and contractor of Colton is Henry F. Kaiser, who has been engaged in this business here for nineteen years. His work has always been of a first-class order, giving perfect satisfaction to his patrons, and this fact is what has made his long continued success possible. Mr. Kaiser is a native of Belgium and was born January 27, 1857, the son of John and Anna G. (Jacques) Kaiser, both of whom were born in Belgium and spent their entire lives there, the father dying at the age of fifty-eight years, and the mother at seventy-nine. All of the eight brothers and sisters of Henry F. Kaiser are now living in their native country, he being the only member of the family in America.

Mr. Kaiser was fortunate in receiving the advantages of a fine education in Belgium, where he completed a general course in college before learning a trade, without which the education of no man of that country is considered complete. Selecting the carpenter's trade as most congenial to his tastes he mastered all of its details, and with this equipment came to America in his twenty-seventh year. Locating in Topeka, Kans., he secured his first employment with the Santa Fe Railway Company, being occupied at cabinet work in their shops for about two years. He then came to California and spent a short time in San Bernardino, in 1887 permanently settling in Colton, which place has since been his home. He began to ply his trade immediately upon his arrival and was not long in making himself known as a master workman, and secured all the work he could do.

Mr. Kaiser was happily married to Miss Arnold Lambotte and three children have blessed this union, namely: Anna, Harry and Lilian. Mr. and Mrs. Kaiser are members of the Catholic Church and their children of the Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Kaiser is an adherent of Republican principles, and fraternally is a member of Colton Lodge No. 326, I. O. O. F., and the Fraternal Brotherhood Lodge at the same place.

JAMES C. CLEWETT. As one of the large number of men who have found business opportunities in Los Angeles county, and in turn have endeavored to promote the commercial development of this portion of California, mention belongs to James C. Clewett, who as a member of the firm of Clewett Brothers, proprietors of the Long Beach Steam Laundry, is known as one of the most successful business men in this section and as a prime factor in many of the most important movements leading up to the general welfare of the community. Like many of the men who have found success in western fields he is not a native of the state in which he now resides, but was born in Adams county, Neb., November 8, 1877. Prior to the birth of James C. the family had resided in Wisconsin, but upon locating in Nebraska the father, C. C. Clewett, settled upon a farm which he operated until coming to California in 1893, coming to Long Beach that year on account of the climate. With his wife, who before her marriage was Hattie Sanford, he is living retired from the cares and worries of business, being pleasantly located in Long Beach. During the Civil war Mr. Clewett was a participant in the ranks of the Union army, rendering valiant service in his country's cause.

The early life of James C. Clewett was associated with his father's farm in Adams county, Neb., and when he was sixteen years old he removed with the family to the west. While in Nebraska he had attended school to some extent, and this training was followed by a course in the Long Beach grammar school, from which he received his diploma of graduation. Thus far his education had been of a general character, and in order to obtain a specific business training he entered a business college in Los Angeles, a course which qualified him in every way for the life which he was about to enter. His first venture in business was in the Long Beach Laundry, wherein he was associated with L. B. Morgan. In January, 1900, he became interested in the business financially, his association with Mr. Morgan in this way lasting about a year, or until March, 1901, when J. F. Clewett became a partner, the firm name becoming Clewett Brothers. The equipment of the Long Beach Steam Laundry leaves nothing to be desired for the proper handling of all fabrics, no matter how fine in texture they may be. Modern machinery of the most approved design has been installed throughout the plant, not the least important of which are the electric irons, which are vast improvements over the irons heated by either coal or gas. In all, fifty hands are employed in the laundry, the majority of whom are experts in their particular line of work. No better idea of the popularity of the Long Beach Steam Laundry could be given than to mention the territory from which it draws its custom. Besides handling the local trade in Long Beach it has the patronage of Terminal and Wilmington, in addition to other surrounding towns, which keeps four wagons in constant service. The details of the inside management devolve upon J. F. Clewett, while the outside matters are under the supervision of J. C. Clewett, the two working together harmoniously and with results in a business way that might do credit to men many years their senior.

James C. Clewett and his wife, formerly Lulu B. Coughran, have become the parents of two children, Wiley D. and Byrl, and have a pleasant family residence at No. 1127 East Seventh street. Politically Mr. Clewett is a Republican, and in his fraternal relations he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. In view of the fact that his father served in the Civil war he is eligible to the Sons of Veterans, and is a member of Henry W. Lawton Camp No. 10. The family attend the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Mr. Clewett is a member.

The elder of the firm of Clewett Brothers, J. F. Clewett, was born in Dane county, Wis., in 1872, and was therefore a small boy when his parents settled in Adams county, Neb., in 1875. The education which he acquired in the common schools of his native county was followed by a course in the high school in Pipestone, Minn., and after his graduation he lost no time in putting his knowledge to use in the business world. Coming to the west with his parents he soon found employment at Oceanside, where for eight years he held the position of superintendent in the water works. Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Clewett, the latter formerly Ruth Martin, have a commodious home at No. 426 Lime street, and their marriage has been blessed with one son, Chester M. Like his brother he is a Republican in politics and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is identified with the Fraternal Brotherhood. In both public and private capacities Messrs. Clewett have won the respect and good will of their associates, and though they have been established in business in Long Beach but a short time comparatively, their names have become well known among the high-minded and successful men of Los Angeles county.

SAMUEL P. ROWLAND. The Rowland family is pre-eminently a part of the pioneer element of Southern California, the first of the name to locate here being John Rowland, who was born in Maryland, the descendant of an old eastern family. He became a pioneer in an early day, locating in New Mexico and following mining occupations for some time, thence in 1841, in company with William Workman, his partner, locating in California, where he remained for but a short time. Returning to Taos, N. Mex., they remained there only long enough to settle their affairs, and then with their families they came again to the Pacific state, this time being accompanied by B. D. Wilson, D. W. Alexander, John Reed, William Perdue and Samuel Carpenter, all of whom became residents of Los Angeles county. In partnership with Mr. Workman, Mr. Rowland secured a grant of the Puente ranch, comprising forty-eight thousand acres, and there settled and spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. Rowland was twice married, his first wife being Dona Incarnacion Martinez, by whom he had the following children: John, Jr.,; Thomas; Robert; Nieves, wife of John Reed; Lucinda, wife of James R. Barton, and William R. In 1869 Mr. Rowland divided his property among his children, giving to each about three thousand acres and one thousand head of cattle.

Thomas Rowland married Zenobia Yorba, the daughter of an old Spanish family, and born to them was a son, Samuel P. Rowland, a native of Puente, where he was born April 28, 1865. He received his education in his home and the common schools of the section, after which he entered St. Vincent's College, which he attended for two years. He was later employed in a drug store and subsequently established a store for himself, this being the first of its kind on Boyle Heights, in Los Angeles. He conducted it successfully for six years, when he sold out to Dr. Campbell and returned home to the management and improvement of the property given him by his father, while he also owns an interest in a fine pumping plant with a capacity of one hundred and fifty inches. He also owns a cottage at Ivanhoe, which property is well improved. He is now engaged in raising stock and meeting with success in his efforts. In 1889 Mr. Rowland was united in marriage with Miss Maggie A. Temple, a daughter of F. P. F. Temple, and they have five children, namely, Rowena C., Theresa, Samuel, Jr., Margarette and Evangeline. Mr. Rowland is a Republican in politics and has served as deputy sheriff of the county and justice of the peace of Rowland township, and school trustee for seventeen years. He is a member of the Catholic Church at San Gabriel, and is a charter member of the Native Sons of the Golden West, and charter member of the Foresters lodge here. Mr. Rowland is a man of broad liberality and progressive spirit, and takes a most active and helpful interest in the general upbuilding of the community. He is specially active in educational affairs, having been largely instrumental in securing first class buildings for school purposes in Puente. He inherits the courtesy inherent in his Spanish forefathers, the manly dignity which distinguished the career of his paternal grandfather, and with have won him a large circle of friends.

HORACE B. GARRISON. One of the best-patronized business places in Palms is the blacksmith establishment owned and managed by Horace B. Garrison, who is well-known for his comprehensive knowledge of the trade, which he applies in the best and most skillful manner, and it is through his reliable work alone that he has come to enjoy the confidence of the people and receive their patronage.

Born in Minnesota in 1874 Horace B. Garrison is a son of Herman S. Garrison, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1852, remaining in his native state until he was eighteen years of age. Up to this time he alternated attendance at school with farm work, and when he was obliged to strike out in the world he felt no hesitancy as to his future occupation. The newer states of the west held more attraction for him than his native state, however, and following his inclinations he located in Minnesota about 1870. For a number of years he was very successful with the farming enterprise which he had established there, but once more he was seized with the desire to go further west, and in 1889 he carried out his plans, reaching San Diego county in October of that year. There he became interested in raising olives, and is today one of the successful orchardists in the southern part of the state, having two ranches aggregating seven hundred and fifty acres, eighty acres being in olives and the balance devoted to grain and as range for stock. His marriage united him with Miss Susan Annetta Marcy, who, like himself, was born in Pennsylvania, and their three children are as follows: Horace B., whose name heads this article; Katherine, who became the wife of George B. Charnock, Jr., and John, who makes his home in Palms.

Horace B. Garrison was about eighteen years of age, when, with his parents, he came to California, all of his school days having been spent in Minnesota, for as soon as he came west he began to fit himself to become a professional blacksmith. His perseverance and determination were large factors in enabling him in a short time to open his present shop in Palms, which is now known as one of the busy and thriving centers of activity in town. He is a member of Palms Camp, No. 567, W. O. W. As is his father also Mr. Garrison is a Republican in his political preferences. He was married September 14, 1906, to Lulu B. Goldsmith, who is a native of Massachusetts, but since 1890 a resident of Los Angeles.

JAMES VOLNEY BARTOW. Recognized as a man of business ability and one whose wide experience in the commercial life of the country has given him keenness of judgment and decision of character, James V. Bartow is an important factor in the progress and development of Long Beach, where he was among the first men to take advantage of the unusual opportunities presented. Since 1896 he has been a resident of California, being located principally in Long Beach, where he began an investment which has brought him large financial returns, while he has also given to the city his best efforts in the promotion of all movements calculated to advance the general welfare.

Mr. Bartow was born in Cattaraugus county, N. Y., November 15, 1842, and until he was ten years old received his education in the common school in the vicinity of his home. In 1852 his parents located in Wisconsin, where he completed his education and also assisted his father on the home farm. He grew to manhood and in 1864 enlisted in Company G, Thirty-second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, Second Army Corps, and served until the close of the war, participating in several battles, and without injury. Returning home to Wisconsin he engaged in farming until the spring of 1871, when he disposed of his interests in that section and went to Nobles county, Minn., there taking up government land and improving a farm from the undeveloped country. In the course of time he became a speculator in the lands of the northwest, improving the lands and disposing of them at a fair profit. Deciding to engage in the commercial life of the country he went to Ellsworth, Minn., and purchased a warehouse, embarking in the implement and general merchandise business. He met with success in his new enterprise and continued so occupied until 1886, when, on account of impaired health through overwork, he was compelled to dispose of his interests and seek a rest. For ten years he remained retired from active business and about the end of that time he made a trip to California. Attracted by the multifold opportunities presented to the energetic business man, he immediately located in the west, and later disposed of his entire property in the Mississippi valley and invested his means in property on the coast. He has become largely interested in property on American avenue, on the corner of Ocean Park and American avenues erecting a forty-five room house known as the Del Mar hotel, strictly modern and up-to-date in all its appointments. On the corner of American avenue and First street he built a three-story brick building, the lower floor to be used for stores, second floor for offices, and the third for the Long Beach Business College. He also owns considerable other property in Long Beach and is interested in keeping it in fine condition, thus enhancing its value and adding prestige to the city. He is intensely interested in the promotion of all movements tending toward the betterment of the city, and is always among the citizens who give practical assistance in such measures.

Mr. Bartow has been twice married, his first wife being Adelaide Freeburn, a native of Wisconsin, by whom he has two children, Wallace, the manager of the Del Mar hotel, and Mrs. Mary Reeves, of Fargo, N. Dak. Subsequently he married Jennie Williams, also of Wisconsin, and they are the parents of the following children: Elvia, wife of C. C. Stanesifer, of Long Beach; Gertrude, wife of H. A. Mosier, of Los Angeles; Blanche, wife of H. G. Ravenscroft, of Long Beach; and Roy O., clerk in the First National Bank of Long Beach. Mr. Bartow has been an adherent of Republican principles all his life, and although interested in the movements of his party would never allow his name to be used in connection with public office. He is a member of Long Beach Post, G. A. R., and is well known socially throughout this section. He is a man held in high esteem by all who know him, either socially or in a business connection, and is justly named among the representative citizens of Long Beach.

JOSEPH E. COURTNEY came to California in 1873 and during the intervening years has proven himself a citizen of worth and ability, lending his aid in the advancement of the best interests of his community and giving freely of both time and means in the promotion of upbuilding enterprises. His sterling traits of character are an inheritance from southern lineage, his birth having occurred near Fredericksburg, Va., July 19, 1844; his parents were John and Mary (Butler) Courtney, both natives of Virginia, where they passed their entire lives, the father dying at the age of seventy years, and the mother at eighty-two. They were the parents of seven sons and three daughters; six of the sons participating in the Civil war, John serving in the Union army and the others in the Confederate. One son, Calvin, died in Johnston Island; Maywood was in the Black Horse cavalry; Lemuel L. belonged to Stafford's cavalry; David was in Company G, of the Rough and Ready Riflemen; and Joseph E. Courtney enlisted in Company I, Eleventh Virginia Infantry, of the First Virginia Brigade, in Picket's division of Longstreet's corps. He participated in the battle of Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, Petersburg and other important battles, serving three years and thirteen days, and was wounded in the battles of Fredericksburg and Gettysburg.

Following the close of the struggle Joseph E. Courtney went to Missouri in 1866, and there rented seven hundred acres of land and engaged in grain and stock-raising. He made that section his home for six years, then returned to Virginia for one year, and thence in 1873 came to California, for a time engaging in wheat-raising in Napa county. In 1874 he brought the first stock for Van Nuys to start his San Fernando ranch. In 1875 he located on his present ranch near Artesia. This comprises ninety-one acres, of which twelve acres are devoted to a vineyard, the balance being in corn, alfalfa, barley and general farm products. He has been very successful in his work and has accumulated a competence. August 29, 1877, he married Miss Mary F. Denman, a native of California and a daughter of Zenas Denman and born to them were the following children: Edward E., in 1880; Minnie, in 1882; Jean, September 23, 1884; and David Leland, in 1886, the last-named dying at the age of seven years. Mr. Courtney is prominent fraternally, his membership in Artesia Lodge No. 377, F. & A. M., dating from 1872; has been a member of Downey Lodge No. 197, I. O. O. F., since 1871 and he joined the Foresters in 1891, now being associated with Norwalk Court; and is also identified with the Fraternal Aid, the Rebekahs and Order of Eastern Star. Politically he is a stanch Democrat and has served in the interests of this party as road overseer, having received the appointment twice and held the position for twelve years. In 1903 he made a visit to the old home in Virginia, where his boyhood and young manhood were spent.

JOHN METCALF. Though a native of Yorkshire, England, John Metcalf has lived in the United States since his early childhood, having come with his parents to this country in 1849, when he was six years of age. Upon locating in America, his parents, Thomas and Mary (Harker) Metcalf, settled in southwestern Wisconsin, purchasing a farm not far from the town of Galena, Ill., where the father met with an accident in the lead mines which resulted in his death. John Metcalf was then but twelve years old and being the oldest of six children the burden of the support of the family fell largely upon his young shoulders; but with a brave heart he set to work to help his mother rear and educate the other children, continuing faithfully at his post until they were all grown and married. Remaining on the farm with his mother until after he reached his majority, he then enlisted in the Union army and served his adopted county efficiently and well in Company A, Ninety-sixth Illinois Infantry, during the last year of the Civil war. After the war closed he returned home, and soon afterwards went to northwestern Iowa, where he took up some government land and purchasing other land near it, became a factor in the development of that portion of the country. As his means accumulated he bandoned the farm life and going to Paullina, Iowa, engaged in the grain and real estate business, shortly after his location there assuming an active place in business offices, and assisting materially in the development of that section. In 1883 he organized the Bank of Paullina, of which he became president and is still acting in that capacity, while he is also president of the Bank of Merrill, Iowa, and is the principal stockholder in both these institutions.

Twelve years ago Mr. Metcalf came to Southern California and demonstrated his faith in the future of this portion of the state by investing extensively in real estate near where Venice of America now stands, the land being known as the Gateway tract. A portion of his interest in this property was sold to M. J. Nolan of Los Angeles, when they established the business firm known as Nolan, Metcalf & Simpson. This tract is platted and improved and is very valuable property, the portion which has been sold by the firm having brought satisfactory returns. Aside from his property interests near Venice, Mr. Metcalf is promoting and developing other important business enterprises in real estate and other property in various towns of Southern California, notably Long Beach and Pasadena, all of his efforts in this direction proving very successful.

In Dubuque, Iowa, Mr. Metcalf was united in marriage with Mary A. Simpson, who at her death in 1892 left three children. Some time afterward he married Mrs. Belle Raw Carpenter, also of Iowa, and she is the mother of two children. In his fraternal relations Mr. Metcalf is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and politically he is a Republican. He has always taken an active interest in educational matters, and while in Iowa served on the school board of his district and as chairman of the finance committee of Morningside College of Sioux City. Mr. Metcalf is a broad-minded and progressive citizen, his work demonstrating his belief that whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well, and he has thus won for himself not only a competence, but also the lasting regard of his fellow-citizens.

ALBERT ROUCHLEAU. Far removed from his old Canadian home and from the birthplace of his ancestors in France, Mr. Rouchleau finds in Southern California a climate surpassing that familiar to his childhood years and he finds as well an opportunity to earn a comfortable livelihood for his family in the midst of an attractive environment. The property which he owns and occupies is situated three miles northeast of Redondo and comprises eleven acres under cultivation to vegetables, strawberries, blackberries and a small orchard. The value of the place is enhanced by the fact that the Redondo & Los Angeles electric car line runs in close proximity, thus bringing the residents of the farm into close touch with the city as well as with their postoffice town of Redondo. At the time of the building of the road Mr. Rouchleau sold the company the right of way across one corner of his place and in addition he sold seven and one-half acres, so that his original purchase of twenty acres has been reduced to the present dimensions. A neat house has been built on the homestead and forms a comfortable abode for the family.

As his name indicates, Mr. Rouchleau belongs to a French family. Indeed, French has been the favorite language of the home and, although using English in business intercourse, he still retains for domestic use the language familiar to his childhood. Born in Canada, January 15, 1854, he was three years of age when the family removed to Michigan and settled at Hancock, where he passed the years of boyhood. When about sixteen years old he began to work as a farm hand. For several years he worked on farms in the summer near Duluth and spent the winters in the lumber woods. On leaving the north he spent eight months in Arizona and from there came to California, securing employment at Riverside, but left there in 1902 to settle upon the fruit ranch he now owns. With his wife (a native of France and formerly Miss Dedie Mull) and their two children, Amelia and Louis, he has a pleasant home, which represents the efforts of a busy life. There was no one to aid him in getting a start in the world, and his present standing may be attributed to his own energy, perseverance and wise judgment.

L. C. EATON. Located in San Jacinto, L. C. Eaton owns a fine twenty-acre ranch, cultivates one hundred acres of land, and has three hundred acres in pasture. He has seventy head of cattle and milks about twenty cows, delivering cream to the San Jacinto creamery, and receiving a good income from the produce. A first-class pumping plant has recently been installed on his ranch, he has planted twelve acres to alfalfa and is making many other improvements on his holding, which is now one of the desirable properties in this section. Mr. Eaton was born May 20, 1856, in Iowa City, Iowa, the son of Henry and Melissa (Lohr) Eaton, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of Ohio. The parents came to California in 1876 and located at Fulton Wells. One of Mr. Eaton's brothers, Isaac Eaton, had a long military career, having fought in the Civil war, and earlier in the Mexican war, in the last named conflict being with General Scott at the capture of the city of Mexico. Isaac Eaton was a resident of Iowa, and there he died in 1901. Henry Eaton's death occurred April 17, 1895, in Pasadena, at the age of seventy-two years. His wife is still living in that city.

In his boyhood L. C. Eaton attended the public schools of Iowa City, finishing his studies with one year in the academy at that place. He removed to California with his parents and for the first nine years of his residence here was a farmer near Los Nietos. Subsequently he engaged in the livery business in Lamanda Park, later in Pasadena, and in 1895 removed to Hemet. For three years he was foreman on the Maple Leaf ranch and finally purchased the ranch on which he has since resided near San Jacinto.

The marriage of Mr. Eaton occurred on June 30, 1890, in Fullerton, Mary L. Hudson, a native of this state, becoming his wife. Her father, Thomas W. Hudson, is a ranchman near San Jacinto, where he owns twenty acres of land devoted to the raising of alfalfa, grain, potatoes and some fruits, the crops being irrigated with water purchased from the San Jacinto Water Company. Mr. Hudson was born September 23, 1828, the son of John H. and Mary Page (Wilson) Hudson, both of whom were natives of Virginia. The mother's father came from England on a sailing vessel in 1800 and was for nine months out of sight of land, the boat having been driven out of her course in a storm. The Hudsons were for many generations natives of Virginia and the grandfather fought in the war of 1812. John H. Hudson was originally a farmer in Virginia, and later in 1833, removed to Jackson county, Mo., where he took up a section of land upon which he engaged in agricultural pursuits; he died in 1848, at the age of forty-six years. His wife survived him many years, she being seventy-eight at the time of her death. It was the fortune of Thomas W. Hudson to receive a very good education, his first schooling being secured at a subscription school in Jackson county, Mo., later taking a course at Chapel Hill College. In 1849 he took a trip to Dallas, Tex., and upon his return to Missouri formed a partnership with Jacob G. Heald in the purchase of a horsepower mill, and together they engaged in the manufacture of lumber. Mr. Hudson finally bought out his partner and conducted the business alone for a time.

In 1852 Mr. Hudson fitted up an outfit and in the spring of that year started on a trip across the plains to California, coming via Salt Lake and Beckwith Pass. Traveling with ox-teams his progress was necessarily slow and five months' were consumed in the journey. He located first at Healdsburg (which town was named for a brother of his former partner in the sawmill), purchased one hundred acres of land, and engaged in the raising of grain until 1881. In the meantime, in 1871, Mr. Hudson had returned to Missouri to visit his mother, and on the journey passed many of the scenes of his old camping grounds. During his life in Healdsburg he was active in public affairs and attained considerable prominence. For many years he was a member of the school board, and in 1869 was honored with an election to the legislature on the Democratic ticket. He served one term, and it was during his tenure of office that the fifteenth amendment to the constitution was adopted, he being one of the members who voted against it.

In the fall of 1881 Mr. Hudson came to Southern California and located on a grain ranch of six hundred and forty acres, twenty miles from the city to Los Angeles. He continued to operate this place for five years, then spent two years in Anaheim, in 1890 coming to the San Jacinto valley and purchasing the ranch upon which he now resides. It was at that time an unimproved place, covered with sage brush, and when one remembers this it is hardly possible to believe that in so short a time it could be converted into the finely improved home it now is. By his marriage, June 5, 1851, he was united with Martha E. Shaw, a native of Harper's Ferry, Va., and they became the parents of seven children. They are: David W., now of New Mexico; Henry H., engaged in the livery business on San Pedro street, Los Angeles; George R., traveling agent for the Diamond Coal Company of Los Angeles; Emma, the wife of J. P. Kirby, of San Jacinto; William T., operating a threshing machine in Salano county; Edmund R., traveling agent for Brownstern & Co., of Los Angeles; and Mary L., the wife of L. C. Eaton. Mrs. Hudson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Fraternally Mr. Hudson was made a Mason in Healdsburg in 1871, and is now a member of the San Jacinto Lodge. He is now a trustee of the Hemet union high school, and was at one time president of the board. He has also been a director of the San Jacinto and Pleasant Valley irrigation district.

Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Eaton, Madge and Thomas. Mr. Eaton is a member of San Jacinto Camp, No. 100, W. O. W., and his wife belongs to Lodge No. 486, Women of Woodcraft. Politically Mr. Eaton is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. He is a progressive citizen, possesses many admirable personal qualities, and is held in the highest esteem in the San Jacinto valley.

HENRY W. OLD. Generations of association with the mining districts of Cornwall, England, caused to be inbred into the Old family the traits of industry, perseverance and uncomplaining fortitude characteristic of the people whose lives were devoted to work in those mines. Eventually James Old, after years of struggle to maintain his family through his labors in the mines, decided to seek a home in the new world, where better opportunities were offered to poor men. When the necessary means had been saved for the payment of traveling expenses he and his family left the associations of former years, crossed the ocean to the United States and settled on a farm near Elizabeth, Jo Daviess county, Ill., where in the midst of surroundings widely different from those of their old home they earned a livelihood from the tilling of the soil. Prior to their removal from Cornwall the wife and mother, Elizabeth (Williams) Old, had died at the old homestead, and of the family of four sons and three daughters, only one son and one daughter now survive.

The eldest of the family was Henry W. Old, who was born in Cornwall, October 5, 1834, and died in Ventura county, Cal., June 2, 1889, when little more than fifty-four years of age. While a boy he learned the occupation of mining in Cornwall and after he came to the United States he worked in Illinois mines for a time, after which he found employment in the copper mines of Michigan. During 1863 he came via Panama to California and engaged in mining at Copperopolis, Calaveras county, but the next year he removed to the mines of Grass valley, where he readily found employment at fair wages. In company with a brother-in-law, Richard Cox, he came to Southern California in July of 1869, and selected the Santa Clara valley, in Ventura county, as a desirable location for a home, after which he returned for his family and settled here permanently in September of the same year. The first purchase which he made comprised one hundred and sixty acres in the Oceanview district and later he acquired another quarter-section, thus giving him a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, situated four miles southeast of Oxnard in the heart of a rich farming territory.

While living in Wisconsin Mr. Old was married at Dodgeville, that state, in 1856, his wife being Miss Keturah, daughter of George and Mary (Thomas) Cox, and a native of Devonshire, England. For some years Mr. Cox operated a smelter in Devonshire, but during middle life he brought his family to the United States and settled in Wisconsin, where he had charge of a smelter at Dodgeville, and remained in that city until his death. His wife was born, reared and married in London, and died in Wisconsin. Four children were born of their union, namely: Richard, who died in Ventura county in 1900; Mrs. Arthur, who died at Auburn, Cal.; Mary, who died in Wisconsin; and Keturah, Mrs. Old, who was the youngest of the four children and was born in 1838. In early years she accompanied her parents across the ocean and settled in Wisconsin, where she grew to womanhood beneath the parental roof. For many years she has been a resident of Ventura county. On leaving the farm in 1892 she established her home in Hueneme, but in July of 1902 came to Oxnard and erected the attractive residence she now owns and occupies. Besides the home place, she and her children own the old home farm of three hundred and twenty acres, which is devoted principally to beans and beets, and has been brought under irrigation by means of an artesian well. The property is very valuable, not only by reason of its improvements, but also on account of its remarkable fertility of soil.

Throughout all of his active life Mr. Old gave earnest support to the Presbyterian Church and was a member of that denomination, to which Mrs. Old also belongs. In fraternal relations he was connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, while politically he voted the Republican ticket, never, however, taking a prominent or active part in public affairs or local politics. Surviving him are his wife and their five children, named as follows: James, who has charge of the home farm; George, now living in Berkeley; Elizabeth, who resides with her mother in Oxnard; Eliza, who married Burt Wilson, of Oxnard; and Edith, wife of Ira J. Oswell, secretary of the Patterson Ranch Company, owners of a large ranch in this vicinity.

HEINRICH MAULHARDT. The thrift for which the German nationality is noted is nowhere better illustrated than in the life and achievements of Heinrich Maulhardt. When he took possession of the ranch on which he now lives in 1888 there was nothing in its appearance to commend the serious attention of anyone looking for a future home, but with keen foresight Mr. Maulhardt realized its possibilities under proper conditions and forthwith began its improvement. The ranch comprises three hundred and thirty acres, all of which is in lima beans with the exception of thirty acres in beets. The close proximity of the ranch to Oxnard is also an important feature and greatly facilitates the disposition of his produce.

A native of Hanover, Germany, Heinrich Maulhardt was born October 24, 1856, a son of John and Magdalena (Smalstich) Maulhardt, also natives of the Fatherland, and there also they passed their entire lives, the father dying in 1881, at the age of seventy years, and the mother in 1876, when in her sixty-fourth year. When his school days were over Heinrich Maulhardt prepared to fulfill the requirements of his native land in regard to learning a trade, and when he was fourteen apprenticed himself to a man to learn slate roofing. As he lived in a country where this method of roofing was used almost entirely there was considerable demand for competent roofers, and he had no difficulty in securing employment, and followed his trade there continuously up to the year 1883, which was the date of his immigration to the United States. Landing at the Golden Gate, he took passage on a boat at San Francisco bound for Ventura, for five years thereafter working by the month on ranches throughout the county. This experience gave him an excellent opportunity to learn and appreciate the value of land and its location, all of which knowledge was brought to bear in the selection of his present ranch in Ventura county.

January 10, 1888, was the date of the marriage of Heinrich Maulhardt and Augusta Wucherpfennig, the latter being a half-sister of John Sholle, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume. All of the six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Maulhardt are living and are named in order of birth as follows: Gustave, Anna, Ida, Hugo, Bertha, and Alfred, ranging in age from nineteen to nine years (1906). On May 10, 1906, Mr. Maulhardt, his wife and two youngest children took a trip to Europe, visiting different parts of Germany, and returning home August 20 of the same year. The family are communicants of the Roman Catholic Church at Oxnard.

JAMES A. COLE. Among those who braved the dangers and hardships of a trip across the plains in the latter '50s was James A. Cole, September 23, 1859, witnessing his settlement in San Bernardino county, when this section of the state was little more than a barren wilderness. From that time until his death in 1888, at the age of fifty-seven years, he followed ranching continuously. His high principles of honor and probity were exemplified in his daily living, with the result that he was respected by all who knew him. Public-spirited and progressive, he was always in favor of measures which tended toward the advancement of his community.

Mr. Cole was born March 8, 1831, in Butler county, Ohio, his education being received in Butler county, Iowa, whither he removed with his parents when a boy. In that state also he was married in 1852 to Miss Mary E. Kelly, who was born in Quincy, Ill., her father later removing to Chicago, where he was engaged in carpentering and contract work. Six children were born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cole. John Albert, deceased, married Henrietta Waters, who lives in San Bernardino; James C. married Abby Davies, and also resides in that city; Henry married Mary Curtis; Arthur Edgar married Mina Dell; Joseph M. married May Cram, and lives near his mother; and Walter D. is an attorney in San Francisco.

Mr. Cole was an advocate of the principles of the Republican party and was reared in the Episcopal Church. During his residence in the state he accumulated extensive property holdings and at one time owned 160 acres adjacent to what is now Loma Linda, also an eighteen-acre orange grove at the home place near Redlands. Mrs. Cole has resided in San Bernardino county on the same place since 1860. She is a woman of superior talents and intelligence and is noted for her liberality and benevolence.

JULES CALLENS. A place among the representative ranchers of Ventura county has been won by Jules Callens, whose association with the agricultural interests of this section has resulted in a personal success and necessarily has added to the prestige of this community as a bean and beet growing locality, in which business he is engaged. Mr. Callens is not a native of this country, but being a lad of only ten years at the time of the immigration of his parents he is practically a Californian and gives to his adopted state a stanch loyalty. His father, August Callens, a native of Mynde, Belgium, was a farmer throughout his entire life, after locating in California in 1888 engaging in agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Hueneme, Ventura county, for two years or until his death. He is survived by his wife, formerly Leona Martens, a native of Besseham, Belgium. Some time after her husband's death she purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres in the Ocean View district, where she is now located, the large property being devoted to general farming and the raising of stock. She is the mother of five sons and one daughter: Jules, the eldest; Udoxie, wife of Remie de Yunge, of this vicinity; Remie and Rena, conducting the home ranch; and Joseph and Albert, in France.

Born July 8, 1878, in Mynde, Belgium, Jules Callens received the greater part of his education in the public schools of Ocean View, this being supplemented by a commercial course in the Ventura Business College, where he graduated in 1896. Until attaining his majority he remained on the paternal farm, four days later, on the 12th of July, 1899, marrying Miss Emma Trick, a native of St. Paul, Minn. Her father, Theo Trick, a native of Germany, emigrated to the United States and located in St. Paul, where for the ensuing twenty years he engaged in contracting and building. With his wife, formerly Minnie Neubawer, he is still a resident of that city. Mr. Callens' first home after his marriage was on a farm which he rented from his mother; industry and application enabled him to acquire means to purchase property, and after one year spent on the Eddings ranch he located upon his present place, a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres six miles southeast of Oxnard, and has since made this his home. His entire property is given over to the cultivation of beans and beets, which bring him large financial returns each season. He has improved his ranch and takes pride in keeping it up to a high standard. He merits the position he holds as a rancher of this section, because won by his own efforts and held by the strong purpose of his life to do well whatever he undertakes.

Mr. and Mrs. Callens are the parents of three children, namely: Leonia Mary; Minnie Margaret (called Florence by her father); and Arthur W. A. Politically he adheres to the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party, and although he is occupied to a large extent with his private affairs, still finds time to take an interest in the movements of this organization. Personally he is a popular man, carrying within a well-built, sturdy frame a whole-souled, genuine manhood which wins for him the friendship of those about him, whose constant association with him has taught them to look for the reliable citizenship which he has always manifested.

ELIJAH HARRISON PIERCE. For more than half a century Elijah Harrison Pierce, of Ethanac, has been identified with the history of California, having served in official capacities at various points, and in those days of lawlessness when personal and property rights were placed in jeopardy by a reckless and criminal element he became a member of the San Francisco United Defenders of Public Safety, or the Vigilance Committee, as it was popularly called, and helped to save the reputation of that section of the state and make it a safe place in which to live. He is a native of New York, having been born in Jefferson county, in July, 1831. His father, Jonathan Pierce, removed with his family to Wisconsin in 1838, in which state both parents died.

In 1850, after securing a common school education, Mr. Pierce left Wisconsin and crossed the plains to California, starting April 8, and arriving at his destination in Eldorado county the first day of September. For about six years he engaged in mining on the American and Feather rivers, then located in Plumas county, where he filled the office of deputy sheriff for three years, and later was elected to the office of sheriff, discharging the duties of the latter position four years, between 1860 and 1864. Two years later he removed to Santa Barbara and the following twenty years was occupied as a farmer and fruit-grower in that locality. During this time he was supervisor of Santa Barbara county for three years, giving him opportunity to again demonstrate his efficiency and good judgment in official capacity. In 1886 he came to Perris valley, filed on a homestead, and has since made the place his home. He later added one hundred and sixty acres of land to his holding, his ranch now comprising three hundred and twenty acres. He began as farmer and stock-raiser, gradually working himself into the dairy business, and now has about twenty-five full-blood Holstein cows. He has a separator on the place and ships the cream from his dairy to San Jacinto, receiving a good price for the product.

Mr. Pierce was first married in Plumas county in 1858, Elizabeth Sharp becoming his wife. Two children were born of this union: William, now residing in Kansas City, Mo., and Mary Ann, deceased. The mother's death occurred in Santa Barbara county. His second marriage took place in 1885 in Santa Barbara county, uniting him with Mary Colby, and she also became the mother of two children: Florence, the wife of Herbert Crooks, of San Fernando; and Mattie, the wife of Frank T. Hollenbeck, of San Diego. Mr. Pierce has served on the school board of Perris valley for many years, and in other ways has proven his interest in the elevating and upbuilding enterprises of the community, which is fortunate in naming him among its citizens.

J. E. COUNTS. The association of J. E. Counts with the real-estate interests of Long Beach dates from March, 1902, the time of his location in this city, he now being actively identified with the Counts Realty Company and Secretary of the Stearns-Counts Investment Company, and many other corporations that have done much toward the upbuilding of this city. Of southern lineage, he was born in Granbury, Tex., October 13, 1871, and in childhood was taken by his parents to Erath and Eastland counties, receiving his education in the public schools. Until he was sixteen years old he remained on the paternal ranch, and then engaged as clerk in a mercantile business in Ranger, Tex., later entering the employ of the Texas Pacific Railway, at Ranger and Thurber junction, where he remained for five years, and during this time became actively identified with the interests of the Democratic party, whose principles he espoused. He filled acceptably the position of deputy county clerk for one term of two years, in Eastland county, and was also prominent in other affairs. Following this he located in Arizona and in Globe engaged in mining and prospecting, but on account of his health finally came to California. This climate proved so beneficial to him that he soon fully recovered, after which he decided to locate permanently in Long Beach. For a time he worked in a real-estate office, after which he became interested with Frank W. Stearns, with whom he incorporated the Stearns-Counts Investment Company. They succeeded in establishing an extensive business, which proved an important factor in the upbuilding of Long Beach and surrounding country. August 1, 1905, this company dissolved partnership, Mr. Counts, however, retaining the secretaryship until the affairs of the firm shall have been closed. In the organization of the Long Beach Home Land and Water Company he was also a prominent factor.

The home of Mr. Counts at No. 627 Elm street, is presided over by his wife, formerly Willie Shelton, with whom he was united in marriage in Texas, of which state she was a native. They are the parents of two children, Carroll and Gerald. Mr. Counts has become prominent in public affairs in Long Beach and takes a keen interest in the promotion of all movements calculated to advance the general welfare of the community, giving time and means freely in his efforts. He is a member of the Cosmopolitan Club and Board of Trade, and supports all churches and charities. Fraternally he is a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M., Long Beach Chapter No. 84, R. A. M., and Long Beach Commandery No. 40, K. T., and with his wife is identified with the Eastern Star. He also belongs to the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Ranger, Texas, and Fraternal Brotherhood of Long Beach. Politically he gives his support to the men whom he considers best qualified for public office.

JOSEPH SAILER. Upon the establishment of the plant of the American Beet Sugar Company at Oxnard a number of their most valued workers at Chino were transferred to the new factory, among these trusted employes being Joseph Sailer, who from the first has occupied the responsible position of chief engineer of the Oxnard factory. Mr. Sailer is of Austrian birth and ancestry and was born in the village of Prutz, Tyrol, January 10, 1867, being a son of Carl and Catherine (Traxsailer) Sailer, natives of the same locality. For many generations the family had lived within the shadow of the Tyrolese Alps in a region famous the world over for the magnificence of its scenery and the rugged sublimity of its mountains. From the male representatives of one generation to those of the next was handed down the secret of manufacturing smoking pipes out of German silver, and some of the name still follow that occupation in the vicinity of the ancestral homestead, among them being Carl Sailer, who is yet an active business man.

The eldest in a family of eight children and the only one to settle in California, Joseph Sailer was born January 10, 1867, and passed the years of boyhood uneventfully in the quiet community where Destiny had cast his lot. When only fourteen years of age he bade farewell to relatives and friends and started out on the long journey which would place the great ocean between himself and the home of his early days. Upon arriving in the United States he proceeded to Chicago and at once became an apprentice to the machinist's trade with Russbach & Co., under whom he served for three years, and later worked as a journeyman in the same city. From there in 1886 he came to California and sought employment vainly in Los Angeles. Discouraged by lack of success he went to San Francisco, where he at once procured work with the Fulton Iron works as a machinist. Afterward he became a machinist in the plant of the American Sugar Refining Company in San Francisco, where he belonged to the night corps of workers in the plant. During 1891 he went to Chino and assisted in installing the machinery, afterward holding a position as machinist in the factory for two years. In recognition of his efficiency he was promoted to be chief engineer in 1894 and continued as such until he was transferred to Oxnard three years later. After having superintended the installation of the machinery in the Oxnard plant he was appointed chief engineer and since then has filled the responsible position with marked ability and faithfulness.

After many years of constant labor at his trade Mr. Sailer finally allowed himself a vacation in 1903, during which year he enjoyed a visit to the old Tyrolese home and also toured the continent. With that exception he has labored unremittingly and constantly at his trade, yet the continuous labor has not been a hardship, for to him work is a pleasure and he is happiest when most deeply engrossed with the details of his chosen occupation. As a citizen he has been progressive, interested in beneficial movements, a contributor to the improvement of Oxnard by the erection of a flat building and two houses, and in every respect a man whose presence is a distinct acquisition to a community. Formerly he served as a member of the county central Republican committee and always he has been stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party. While living in San Francisco he married Miss Katherine E. Schoffel, who was born in Bavaria, and by this marriage he has three children, Katie E., Joseph, Jr., and Carl R. Besides being a member of the Citizens Club of Oxnard he affiliates with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, of Santa Barbara, and the Knights of Pythias, Uniform Rank, in which latter fraternity he holds office as past chancellor of the local lodge.

CAPT. JOHN W. ASPE. Especially worthy of honorable mention in this volume is Capt. John W. Aspe, a highly respected resident of San Pedro, who is in truth a self-made man, having started in life with no other endowments than good health, a vigorous muscle and a clear, cool brain. Thus equipped, a man need have no fears; filled with a determination to succeed, success is assured him from the start, although it may be that years of patient waiting and hard toil are necessary before the goal of his ambitions is reached. A native of Germany, Captain Aspe was born December 3, 1851, in Rendsburg, Holstein, which was likewise the birthplace of his father, John Aspe. In 1848 John Aspe took an active part in the Holstein-Schleswig war, after which he followed the trade of a blacksmith in Kiel, Germany, until his death. He married Dora Muller, a native of Schleswig, and they became the parents of twelve children, of whom John W., the subject of this sketch, was the first-born. One son, Christ Aspe, employed as an architect by the German government, died at Breslau, Germany, in 1903.

At the age of ten years John W. Aspe began the battle of life for himself as a sailor, going as deck boy on a coaster. He subsequently crossed the Atlantic, sailing to Boston, Mass., from there going on the sailing vessel Brewster, via the Cape of Good Hope, to the East Indies and back. In 1863, on the same vessel, he came around the Horn to California, and for awhile was employed in the coasting trade along the Pacific coast. Turning his attention then to land pursuits he was for eight years engaged in both quartz and placer mining, operating in northern California, Idaho, Utah and Nevada. He was quite successful at times, at Silver City, Idaho, with three companions, taking out $40,000 from a quartz mine. Returning from the mining regions to San Francisco, he again engaged in coasting, sailing as second mate for awhile, and then as first mate of his vessel. In 1883, as master of the Sarah, he embarked in the lumber trade, sailing from San Francisco to different ports along the coast. He was subsequently master of several other vessels, including the John Russ, the Bangor, the Charles A. Moody and the Wempe Brothers. The latter was wrecked off the coast of Vancouver, British Columbia, but no lives were lost. On giving up seafaring pursuits, Captain Aspe resided in Oakland for a time, but in 1895 took up his residence in San Pedro, which he first visited as early as 1876, sailing into the harbor when mate of the Elenora. Since 1903 he has been prosperously employed in sail making, his home being on Twelfth street, where he has erected a good residence.

March 14, 1892, in Redondo, Cal., Captain Aspe married Gencina Petersen, a native of Denmark, and into their household five children have been born, namely: Carl, Frederick, Dora, Elsie and John. Politically the captain is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of Golden Gate Lodge No. 30, F. & A. M., of San Francisco.

CLARENCE C. ADAMS. A resident of California since 1889, Clarence C. Adams has profited by the rapid growth and development of this Pacific state and a part of the prosperity he has made his own. He is a native of Minnesota, his birth having occurred near Albert Lea, Freeborn county, April 12, 1875, his parents, Charles B. and Mary S. (Shauney) Adams, having settled as farmers in that section. On account of his father's health the family located in Long Beach, Cal., where his death occurred in 1899, his wife surviving him and making her home in this city at the age of sixty-eight years.

Clarence C. Adams received a substantial education in the public schools of Minnesota and the high school of Austin, to which city his parents removed when he was but three years old. Upon their removal to California they settled in Anaheim, where Mr. Adams followed teaming after completing a business course in a commercial college of Los Angeles. Following the removal of his parents to Long Beach he came to this city and here took up the work of a plumber, becoming an apprentice under W. B. Joy. January 1, 1903, he purchased the interest of Edward Kay, of the firm of Kay & Smith, after which for three and a half years business was conducted under the name of Smith & Adams. Since Mr. Adams' withdrawal the business has been continued as the Edwin W. Smith Company. In the meantime Mr. Adams has taken a keen interest in the growth and development of the city and has invested his means in real estate from time to time, building three residences since his location here. When he first came here (in 1899) there was a population of six hundred in the winters and from three to four thousand during the summers. Since that time Long Beach has been found to be as desirable a winter residence as one could wish and the population has grown to numbers that are remarkable in that they do not mark the itinerant inhabitants. Mr. Adams has unbounded faith in the continued prosperity of his adopted city and has manifested it in the most substantial manner.

The home of Mr. Adams is located at 721 Chestnut avenue, and is presided over by his wife, formerly Theora Pearl Ailman, whom he married November 1, 1902. She is a native of New Mexico, and a daughter of H. D. Ailman. They have one son, Henry David. Mr. Adams was reared in the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which he gives his financial support. In politics he is a stanch Republican and although active in his efforts to advance the principles he endorses has never cared for official recognition. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World, Fraternal Brotherhood, and F. O. E.

OLIVER CLARENCE SWAN. An expert in the erection and operation of sugar manufacturing machinery Oliver Clarence Swan is the efficient general foreman of the factory of the American Beet Sugar Company at Oxnard, and is esteemed as a leading citizen of this place. The birth of Mr. Swan occurred June 29, 1872, at Troy, Mo., where his father, William H., a native of Kentucky, carried on a blacksmith shop. The father served in the Union army with a Missouri regiment during the Civil war, belonged to the Grand Army of the Republic and was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was also a member of the Christian Church, and his death in 1903 removed a highly respected citizen of Troy. The mother, who was Eliza C. Shew before her marriage, was born in Illinois on the farm of her parents, who afterwards removed to Lincoln county, Mo., where she was married and still resides. There were seven children in the family, all of whom are still living, Oliver Clarence being the third in point of age. The greater part of his boyhood was spent in Troy, Mo., where he received his education in the public schools, and when a young man he commenced his business career by clerking in a St. Louis grocery store. He moved successively to Louisiana, Mo., and Bowling Green, that state, and then went with a surveying party to Arizona, where for one year he assisted in making surveys for the South Gila Canal Company.

In 1892 he came to Chino, Cal., and secured a position with the American Beet Sugar Company, beginning at the very bottom of the ladder and continuing with the firm for five years, at the end of that time having become a competent machinist. He then severed his connection with the firm and went to Crockett, Cal., where he was employed by the California and Hawaiian Refining Company, and after one season in their factory he was engaged by the Union Iron Works of San Francisco to go to Butte, Mont., and assist in the erection of machinery at that place. That took him but a few months and from there he went to Kealakekua, Hawaii, and for nearly two years was engaged in the construction of machinery for the Kilby Manufacturing company of Cleveland, Ohio. Following this he returned to California in 1897, locating at Oxnard, assisting in the construction of the sugar factory at this place. He has been with the American Beet Sugar Company ever since, and is now the general foreman or assistant superintendent of the factory.

Fraternally Mr. Swan affiliates with the Knights of Pythias lodge at Oxford, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at the same place. He is an earnest advocate of the principles represented by the platform of the Republican party and is an influential participator in all matters of public interest to the community. He was married to Miss Ollie H. Hedges, a native of Missouri, who died at Oxnard December 24, 1903.

ARTHUR J. DRAPER. An unexpected and unfortunate incident connected with Mr. Draper's arrival in California might have discouraged some from making a permanent settlement in the state, but he possesses an impartial, calm temperament that remains unbiased by circumstances beyond his control. Twenty years have come and gone since he landed in the west and during all of that period he has made his home in Ventura county, where since 1895 he has owned a ranch of seventeen acres near Simi and has improved the property by putting in a pumping plant for the irrigation of his alfalfa fields and gardens. The position of justice of the peace came to him by appointment in 1895 and three years later he was elected to the office, which he still fills, having been re-elected at the expiration of his first elective term of four years. Since 1899 he has also served as a notary public.

The Draper family is of old English stock, and the subject of this narrative was born in that country in September, 1861, being a son of Joseph S. and Christina Draper. When his father was only thirty-two years of age he died in 1865 and fifteen years later the mother passed away at the age of forty-two. The three sons of the family, Arthur J., John A. and Walter S., left their friends in England during the early spring of 1886 and came to America upon a tour of inspection with a view to possible location. The first named had been a teacher in English schools for five years and was a young man of excellent education, intelligence and fine qualities of citizenship. Landing in Los Angeles they purchased a team and wagon, as well as the supplies necessary for a trip up the coast, and soon started for Ventura county. Unfortunately while they were yet in Los Angeles they had attracted the attention of two desperadoes, one of whom was a ruffian named Louis Clark. These two men concluded that the young Englishmen probably carried with them considerable money and would therefore be excellent subjects for robbery, with which purpose in view they followed them along the coast through Ventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo and Monterey counties.

About ten o'clock on the night of the 18th of May, 1886, when the brothers were encamped near Soledad, Monterey county, while sleeping, they were attacked by the desperadoes. Walter was shot in the left foot and thigh; John escaped without injury; and Arthur received four bullets, one in the back of the neck (which he still carries), one in the right arm, and two in the left shoulder (one of which latter he also carries). With considerable difficulty they managed to get to Soledad, where the wounds were dressed and they were given medical care, but it was not until July that they were able to travel. Afterward Clark was caught and sent to prison for twenty-one years. Two of the brothers returned to England, where Walter now occupies a responsible position as manager of Lloyd's Bank of London; the eldest brother, Arthur, remained in California and settled near Simi, where he has since lived, unmarried, on his neat little ranch, honored by the many acquaintances he has made during the long period of his residence in the same locality and respected as a man of high principles, impartial spirit and progressive citizenship.

HUGH HENRY. Occupying a place of prominence among the prosperous agriculturists and the leading citizens of Ventura county is Hugh Henry, of Oxnard. Commencing life at the foot of the ladder, he has steadily climbed upward, rung by rung, the history of his achievements being a splendid example of the grand success to be attained by sturdy toil, perseverance and close application to business. Since assuming possession of his home ranch, in 1896, he has made all of the important improvements on the place, in 1904 erecting his handsome, modernly equipped ten-room house, this, with the other improvements, rendering his property one of the best in the Santa Clara valley. In business, social, political and fraternal circles, Mr. Henry stands high, and as one of the best known and most influential Odd Fellows of Southern California has done much to promote the good of the order. A son of Hugh Henry, Sr., he was born July 12, 1858, in Glasgow, Scotland, and from a long line of honored ancestry on the maternal side has inherited those sterling characteristics that have won for him the respect and esteem of his fellow men and a noteworthy position in life.

Born and reared in Ireland, Hugh Henry, Sr., later went to Scotland, where he was married, and in 1860, with his family, came to the United States, the reputed country of plenty, and located in St. Lawrence county, N. Y. Turning his attention to farming, he was subsequently engaged in tilling the soil until his death, at the age of sixty-eight years, in 1902. His wife, whose maiden name was Jane Watson, was born in Scotland and died in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., in 1871.

Completing his early education in the district schools, Hugh Henry earned his first money as a farm laborer. Deciding to settle permanently as an agriculturist, he bought land in St. Lawrence county and was there a resident until 1883. Coming in that year to the Pacific coast, he worked by the month until familiar with the ways of farming as carried on in California, where soil, climate and conditions are so entirely different from those in any other part of the Union. In 1896 he purchased his present ranch, which is advantageously located about two miles northwest of Oxnard, and contains seventy-four acres of valuable land. He has placed this in a good state of cultivation, and in addition to carrying it on successfully also rents one hundred and sixty acres of near-by land, which he also manages with satisfactory results. He devotes about two hundred acres of land to the raising of lima beans, and has twenty acres planted to beets and each season he has large and profitable crops of these vegetables, the income derived from them being large. He has recently installed a fine electric pumping plant, which will make irrigation of the farm easy.

On January 18, 1878, Mr. Henry married Mary Jane Beatty, who was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., and they are the parents of three children, namely: George, living just across the road from his parents, and who married Maria Sutter, a native of California; and Anna Jane and Elizabeth Maria, pupils in the grammar school. Mr. Henry was initiated into Ventura Lodge No. 201 some years after its establishment, and was serving as noble grand in that lodge when Oxnard Lodge No. 89 was established, he initiating its first members. He is also a member of Ventura Encampment No. 79, which he has served as master three terms: of Ventura Canton No. 29; and of Ventura Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah, No. 314. He has passed all of the chairs of the subordinate lodges of Odd Fellows, and is past district deputy, and is also a member of Oxnard Lodge No. 44, M. W. A. He takes great interest in public affairs, and for the past three years has been school trustee.

HENRY C. FEDER. One of the leading industries of Redondo is the Redondo Carnation Company, whose manager, Henry C. Feder, has given years of time and painstaking effort to the propagation of choice and new varieties of carnations, among his original specialties being the Los Angeles (white), Jim Corbett (salmon pink) and the Dr. Choate (scarlet). Since embarking in business for himself in 1898 he has made a specialty of raising carnations, propagating sixty thousand each year, and setting out from forty to fifty thousand plants, besides which he has raised acres of violets. The flowers find a ready sale in local markets and shipments are also made to Arizona.

A native of Westphalia, Germany, Henry C. Feder was born in Rothenufeln, August 23, 1862, and is a son of Frederick and Louisa (Veith) Feder, natives of the same kingdom, and farmers by occupation. The mother died some years ago, but the father is still living at the old home. Both were reared in the Lutheran faith and always adhered to that religion. Among their five children, all of whom still survive, Henry was next to the eldest. As is the custom in his native land, he was given good advantages for obtaining an education. At the age of twelve years he left school and began to learn the miller's trade, at which he served a full apprenticeship. During 1879 he crossed the ocean to the United States and proceeded west from New York as far as Indiana, where he secured employment on a farm. Always keenly interested in gardening, he devoted considerable attention to plants and flowers while yet in the east.

For the first few months after coming to California in 1887 Mr. Feder engaged in teaming, but as soon as another opening presented itself he turned to different work. The Redondo Beach Company, owners of the town site of Inglewood, gave him employment in their gardens and orchards, and he continued in their employ until he came to Redondo in 1891. Two years later he was appointed manager of the flower gardens and greenhouse in this place and continued until 1898, when he resigned in order to embark in business for himself. A year later he organized the Redondo Carnation Company with J. B. Mullen, and in 1905 took into partnership George Hessen and A. M. Jones. This partnership continued until July 1, 1906, when the original owners took charge of the business. The original gardens embraced ten acres, but this tract was sold in 1905, and the company has now leased other lands with which to continue the business. Always assiduous in his devotion to business matters, Mr. Feder has allowed himself only one vacation from his post of duty, this being in 1901, when he returned to the old homestead in Westphalia and also visited many points of interest on the continent and in England. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Rickie Strohm, is like himself a native of Germany, her childhood home having been in Baden, but as a girl she came to the United States and later was married at Inglewood, this state. Two daughters bless the union, Ida and Lulu. The family are earnest members of the Lutheran Church and give of their means to the work of that denomination. Since coming to Redondo Mr. Feder has been a member of the Board of Trade and an active worker in all enterprises for the upbuilding of the town. Politically he gives stanch support to the Republican party and in fraternal relations holds membership in Redondo Lodge No. 328, F. & A. M.; Tent No. 7, K. O. T. M., of Redondo, and the Independent Order of Foresters.

FRANK A. MATSON. Although a resident of his present location for but a brief period, Mr. Matson has made his home in Southern California for a considerable number of years and with the persevering industry characteristic of his Swedish forefathers he has worked his way from the position of laborer for others to that of land-owner. The property which he acquired by recent purchase consists of fifteen acres situated three miles northeast of Redondo at the postoffice of Perry, Los Angeles county, his residence standing on the corner of Redondo and Dominguez avenues, while near by are the buildings utilized for the prosecution of the poultry business, which he makes his specialty.

About the year 1849 George and Ellen (Peterson) Matson crossed the ocean from their native land of Sweden and settled in Minnesota, where their son, Frank A., was born near Clearwater lake, not far from Minneapolis, December 3, 1862. When the latter was still a very small child the family removed to Illinois and settled in Knox county, near the village of Altona. The next removal occurred when he was about ten years of age and took the family to Nebraska, where they built up a home in the then undeveloped regions of Polk county. The parents continued upon a farm during the balance of their active years; the father lived to be seventy-five and the mother was eighty when she passed away.

After having assisted his father in the improving of a farm from a tract of raw land, Frank A. Matson was well qualified to take up agricultural pursuits for himself, and he continued near the old Nebraska home for some years. While living in that state he met and December 21, 1886, married Hildora Freeberg, a native of Sweden, who crossed the ocean to the United States at twelve years of age and settled with other members of her family twenty miles east of St. Paul. While still a young girl she removed to Stromsburg, Polk county, Neb., and there married Mr. Matson, their union being blessed with two children, Florence E. and Raymond F. The family came to California in 1888 and settled at Clearwater on a ranch, but after three years removed to Riverside, where Mr. Matson was variously employed for three years, and later he worked for others in the city of Los Angeles, remaining in the latter city until July of 1905, when he purchased and removed to his small farm near the coast. In the purchase of this property he invested the savings of previous years, so that the home he now owns possesses for him an especial interest as representing his own unwearied labors and tireless energy.

PERCY N. ARNOLD. No more public-spirited Canadian has transferred his allegiance to the Pacific coast or more enthusiastically entered into the diversified interests here represented than Percy N. Arnold, a rancher in the vicinity of La Ballona, although his postoffice and market town is Palms. Born in New Brunswick, Canada, January 27, 1852, he was the only child of his father's marriage with a Miss Vail, who was born in Canada, dying there at the birth of her only child. Nelson A. Arnold subsequently married Anna Smith, a native of England, and the seven children born of this marriage all lived to attain years of maturity. The father was also born and reared in Canada, and when he had completed his schooling he settled down on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, in that country, and, with the exception of a few years prior to his death, carried on farming throughout his entire life. His earth life came to a close in 1902, when eighty-four years of age.

During his young manhood Percy N. Arnold possessed an abundance of the venturesome spirit which directed the footsteps of so many sturdy men to this western country, and the first step toward self-maintenance was his coming to California in 1874. For six years thereafter he was occupied in various lines of business, but in 1880 he homesteaded a tract of land from the government, upon which he located and settled down to follow agriculture for his life business. By purchasing adjoining land he increased his holdings considerably, now owning two hundred and twenty acres in that ranch, although he makes his home on a one-hundred-and-fifteen-acre tract which he owns near La Ballona. By renting adjoining property he has now four hundred acres under his control, all of which is planted to beans, hay, etc., which yields a good income annually.

June 16, 1881, occurred the marriage of Percy N. Arnold and Miss Phebe Tibbet, who was born in California, the daughter of Jonathan Tibbet. At the time of the gold fever Mr. Tibbet was one of the throng who came to the state from Ohio, but he did not remain long, for the year 1850 found him back in his native state. When he returned to California in 1852 it was not the attraction of the mines that brought him hither, for he at once turned his attention to the cultivation of the ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, which he purchased that year near El Monte. Besides this half section of land he bought eighty acres near La Ballona, but it was in Santa Monica that he passed away in 1903. Since the death of Mr. Tibbet Mr. Arnold has purchased the eighty-acre ranch and now makes his home on the property. Four of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Arnold are living and are still at home with their parents, as follows: Nelson L., Bessie I., Percy W. and Laurence F. The third child, Edgar R., was accidentally killed July 4, 1901, by being thrown from a wagon. In his political preferences Mr. Arnold is a Republican and is a member of the Ancient Order United Workmen, Woodmen of the World and Independent Order of Foresters.

EDWIN W. SMITH. Unbounded faith in the possibilities of Long Beach and surrounding country induced Edwin W. Smith, of the Edwin W. Smith Company, plumbers and tinsmiths, to invest his means here and also to give his best efforts toward the development of its resources. His arrival in the state of California is dated from October 16, 1887, although not until 1902 did he locate permanently in Long Beach; since that time, however, the most rapid growth of this city has taken place and with it his own financial success and increased business standing.

Mr. Smith is of southern birth and lineage, his parents, William B. and Lucy (Kade) Smith, being residents of Corinth, Miss., where he was born January 22, 1869. The mother is now deceased, while the father is residing in Downey, Cal. While still young in years he was taken to Texas and in that state attended the public schools of Wise county. After ten years in that state the father brought his family to California, where he followed his trade of painter and decorator until his final retirement from active duties. Edwin W. Smith learned the tinner's trade upon leaving school and later the plumber's trade, and after coming to California engaged in various parts of Los Angeles county. In Glendale, where he made his home for six years, he engaged for one year as tinner and plumber, after which he came to Long Beach, which was just then evidencing the signs of rapid development. Upon his location in this city he purchased an interest in the plumbing business of Edward Kay, and later became sole proprietor of same, finally taking into partnership, C. C. Adams, who was associated with him in business for about three and a half years. Since Mr. Adams' withdrawal the business has been continued as the Edwin W. Smith Company.

In Glendale Mr. Smith married Miss Harriet Iman, and their home is now located at the corner of Appleton and Gaviota. In his political affiliations Mr. Smith is a Republican and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he is associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Long Beach, in the latter organization having passed all the chairs, and also having been sent as a delegate to the Grand Lodge. In the line of his trade he is a member of the National Association of Master Plumbers, and is ex-secretary of the local association. In 1904 he was sent as a delegate to the National Association at St. Louis. The position accorded him among the business men of Long Beach has been won entirely by his own efforts, his judgment and ability winning him recognition, while his interest in the progress of Long Beach and the promotion of its welfare have given him a place among the influential citizens.

T. E. RICKARD. Retired from active business life, T. E. Rickard lives in a fine new residence in the San Jacinto valley, on his thirty-two and a half acre ranch three miles southeast of Hemet, which is planted to oranges. He has amassed a comfortable fortune during his life and is now enjoying the fruits of his labors content with what he has gained. The Rickard family is one of the old established ones of central Illinois, T. E. having been born in that state in Sangamon county, July 2, 1850, the son of Simon P. and Sophia (Earnest) Rickard, natives respectively of Virginia and Kentucky. The elder Rickard became a pioneer of Sangamon county in 1832, when he bought wild land and engaged in farming, continuing in that occupation and in the same location until the time of his death, in May, 1891, having attained the age of seventy-eight years. His wife is still living at the advanced age of eighty-five years and resides on the original Illinois homestead.

It was the privilege of T. E. Rickard to receive a very fine education, and after his graduation from the high school of Springfield, Ill., he entered the University of Illinois, becoming a member of the first class graduated from that institution. When his education was completed he returned to his home and engaged in farming until 1901, in the summer of which year he removed to California and purchased an apricot orchard in Hemet valley. After holding this property one year he resided in Pasadena for a like period, then returned to Illinois for a time. This land of sunshine proved too alluringly attractive to be resisted, however, and he soon decided to make his permanent residence here, and upon his return settled in his present home near Hemet.

In 1879, in Illinois, Mr. Rickard was united in marriage with Kate E. Boardman, the daughter of Lucius M. Boardman, of Ohio, whose family came originally from Connecticut. Seven children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Rickard: Lucius S., at home; Lawrence E., on the old home farm in Illinois; those still under the parental roof being Frances Beatrice; Ernest W., who is ready to enter Stanford University; Howard B.; Raymond W. and Katharine Helen. The family attend the Presbyterian Church. During their residence here they have demonstrated their progressiveness, being willing at all times to lend a hand to further the advancement and upbuilding of the community.

ALFRED H. OWENS. A liberal and enterprising citizen and one whose faith is unbounded in the future of Long Beach, Alfred H. Owens is engaged with the Inter-State Dock & Lumber Company, of this place, becoming associated with the lumber business in 1894. He was born January 14, 1861, in Missouri, from which state he was taken by his parents to Jefferson county, Kans., when only three months old. He grew to young manhood on the paternal farm in that locality and received his education through the medium of the district school in the vicinity of his home. His father, J. H. Owens, is now residing in Pomona, Cal., at the age of sixty-eight years, while his wife, formerly Margaret J. Varney, died in that place in 1900.

Following the family to California, to which state they were attracted by the glowing reports which are constantly finding their way back to the states of the middle west, whose rigorous winters detract much from the pleasure of living there, Alfred H. Owens began as a farmer upon his arrival. He located on the Bixby ranch near the present site of Long Beach, and was an eyewitness to the beginning of the city and its subsequent growth. In 1894 he became associated with the lumber business as teamster, and after working in the yards of the Long Beach Lumber Company for five years, became foreman, which position he occupied for two years longer. Leaving that company he engaged with the Inter-State Dock & Lumber Company as checker, after which he assisted in the laying out of the present yards, then spent six months in the office, subsequently becoming foreman of the yards, which position he still occupies. He is a man of honor and integrity and enjoys the confidence of those with whom he is associated.

In Long Beach, in 1883, Mr. Owens was united in marriage with Laura L. Martin, a native of Indiana, but a resident of California from girlhood. They became the parents of the following children: Clyde Sherman, a teamster in the yards; William H., a machine hand in the employ of the Star Lumber Company; Agnes May and Ethel. With his family he is a member of the Baptist Church, and politically is a strong adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. Fraternally he is associated with the Independent Order of Foresters and the Woodmen of the World. Mr. Owens has been interested personally in the growth and upbuilding of Long Beach, he having put up three residences, one on Sixth and American avenue; one on Locust between Fourth and Fifth; and in 1904 one at No. 935 American avenue.

ANDREW K. RUTTER. There is perhaps no resident of Southern California whose experience as a lapidary has been more varied or whose knowledge of stones is more diversified than that of Mr. Rutter, who for some years has been the owner and proprietor of the Redondo shell store. To promote work at his specialty, which is that of cutting and polishing beach stones, he has introduced a modern polishing plant operated by electric power furnished by his own dynamos. With the keen eye of a student of stones, he was the first to notice the beautiful stones on the Redondo beach and at once began to develop the business, polishing the first sardonyx, or agate jaspers, and moonstones here, and selling the same to tourists. At the same time he has gathered together a collection of sea shells. At his store may be seen a rare and valuable collection of Indian relics, including implements taken from old Indian graves at Redondo which have found no duplicates at the Smithsonian Institution or elsewhere in the world.

In Medina county, Ohio, Andrew K. Rutter was born September 16, 1850, being the eldest of the six children of Isaac N. and Mary (Kollar) Rutter, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Tuscarawas county, Ohio. His father, who followed the tailor's trade in Ohio, took up farm pursuits after removing to Cowley county, Kans., and at this writing he and his wife are living in quiet retirement at Pawnee, Okla. After completing the studies of the public schools, Andrew K. Rutter took a course in the Mycrantz Academy at Bryan, Ohio. From the age of twenty-two until twenty-seven he engaged in teaching school, and with the savings of that period he embarked in the grocery business at Montpelier, Williams county, Ohio. Next he went to Kansas and from there in 1879 proceeded toward the southwest. For some years he engaged in exploring in the states of Sonora and Chihuahua, Mexico, and in the territories of Arizona and New Mexico, during which time he located more than forty claims, but only one of these, the Youngman, proved to be a paying proposition. The year 1886 found him in Portland, Ore., where he remained for two years. Next he explored in the Rocky mountains for crystals and gems, which he shipped to the markets. About this time he discovered a topaz crystal forty-six inches long and six inches thick, which was the largest stone of the kind ever found in Colorado. The news of his discovery was noised throughout the country and the Santa Fé Railroad Company borrowed the stone for the purpose of exhibiting it in their collection, but while in their hands the stone was lost.

After coming to Los Angeles in 1897 Mr. Rutter engaged in the hotel business and then resumed lapidary work, but in 1901 left that city for Redondo, where he has since engaged in business and has been a member of the Redondo Board of Trade. Though not active in politics, he is pronounced in his adherence to the Republican party and always votes the regular ticket. During the period of his sojourn in Colorado he met and married Miss Harriet Fical, who was born in New York state and who shares with him the esteem of the people of their home town.

EDWIN P. DEWEY. In a direct line Edwin P. Dewey can trace his ancestry back to Charlemagne, the present generation being the forty-first removed from that illustrious king. In 1833 Thomas Dewey of Kent county, England, came to Boston and later removed to Connecticut. One of his descendants moved to New Hampshire and then reared fourteen sons, one of whom, David, was the great-grandfather of Edwin P., and another son was the same relation to Admiral Dewey of present military fame. William Dewey was at one time colonel of a Vermont company of militia. Edwin P. Dewey was born June 9, 1859, in Hanover, N. H., the son of Ira and Isabelle (Knapp) Dewey, the former a native of Williamstown, Vt., and the latter born in New York, the daughter of Sylvester Knapp, who lived his entire life in that state. The death of Mrs. Dewey occurred in New Hampshire. The father was by occupation a farmer and also served as town clerk for many years. At the outbreak of the Civil war he enlisted in Company B, Fifth Regiment of New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. At the battle of Cold Harbor he was wounded and captured by the enemy and confined in Libby prison, from which he was released by exchange. He was a member of the Congregational Church, a man of upright character and high principles, and his death which occurred in New Hampshire, was universally mourned by all who knew him. There were two sons in the family and Charles S. is now a resident of Vermont..

Edwin P. Dewey spent his boyhood days on a farm within sound of the old Dartmouth College bell. He received a preliminary education in the public schools of Hanover and Lebanon, afterward entering Dartmouth College, from which institution of learning he graduated in 1882 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. Subsequently he took a course in The Thayer School of Civil Engineering in Dartmouth, after which for five years he was principal of the Marcellus street school in Boston. He next taught a public evening school in that city, at the same time occupying a position as civil engineer in the city surveying department. A part of the time he was connected with the engineering department of the Boston & Maine Railroad and was at one time assistant city engineer of Malden. In 1894 he came to California and located in Pasadena, where he was occupied as a civil engineer for several years, then removed to Long Beach, where, until February, 1906, he filled the office of deputy city engineer. At that date he resigned to become one of the incorporators of the Harbor Iron Works, of which he is secretary and treasurer. The works are now located at No. 237 Olive avenue, but will soon remove to the corner of Riverside Drive and Third street, which site has a harbor frontage. As a specialty they will manufacture gasoline marine engines. Besides sharing in the ownership of this manufacturing business he also has real estate interests in the thriving city of Long Beach.

The first marriage of Mr. Dewey united him with Miss Emma Philbrick, a native of Boston, and her death occurred in 1899 in Pasadena. Later he was married in Boston to Miss Louise Milne, also a native of that city. In 1883 he was made a Mason in Franklin Lodge No. 6, A. F. & A. M., at Lebanon, N. H., and is now master of Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M.; he also belongs to the Order of Eastern Star and the Cosmopolitan Club. Politically he is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party. Interested in all enterprises tending toward the higher development and upbuilding of his city, and possessed of many admirable personal qualities, Mr. Dewey is held in the highest esteem by his fellow-citizens.

ABRAHAM L. KING. Prominent among the representative citizens and prosperous agriculturists of Los Angeles county is Abraham L. King, of Palms, who owns and occupies a highly improved and well managed farm. He has achieved success in his vocation by his own unaided exertions, and is, in fact, a self-made man, starting out in life with nothing but youth in his favor, and his endowments of fine health, a vigorous muscle, and a clear, cool brain. After all, a man possessing these is rich, indeed, from the beginning, and need fear nothing. A son of Abraham N. King, he was born December 24, 1866, at Mason City, Iowa.

A native of Wisconsin, Abraham N. King became a farmer from choice, and the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of land. Moving to Iowa, he there followed his independent occupation in different places, being engaged in grain and stock raising. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1882, he bought one hundred and fifty acres of bottom land, lying one and one-half miles west of Palms, and there by sturdy industry improved a good ranch, on which he lived a number of years. He is now retired from active business cares, making his home at Sawtelle. He is highly respected as a man and a citizen, and is a warm supporter of the principles of the Republican party. In Wisconsin he married Alice Thompson, and they are the parents of seven children, namely: Abraham L., the subject of this sketch; Frank, who resides near Venice; Fred, foreman of the Jotham Bixby ranch at Long Beach; Walter; Edith, wife of S. G. Hall, of Inglewood; Mamie, wife of Edward Wade, of Gardena; and Oscar, of Fowler, Cal.

Completing his early education in the schools at Cherokee, Iowa, Abraham L. King came with the family to California in 1882. On coming of age, in 1887, he started out for himself, working by the day or month, and saving money. Accumulating a small sum, he invested it in land, buying fifteen acres, and in addition to carrying this on, he rented nine hundred acres and embarked on his chosen career. Succeeding well in his operations he subsequently purchased his present home ranch of one hundred and thirty acres at Palms. Energetic and enterprising, he has been exceedingly prosperous in all of his undertakings, gaining experience and ability as the years have passed on, and now in the prime of life, has won an honored position among the successful and influential agriculturists of the community. Mr. King married Frankie LeForge and they have four children, namely: Shirley, Harry, Alta and Ruth. Politically Mr. King is a straightforward Republican.

JOHN J. PECKHAM, M. D. The oldest and leading physician of Avalon is John J. Peckham, M. D., who has been a resident of California since 1883. He is a man of broad education, has traveled much, encountering many interesting experiences, and has many friends all over the country. His family is of English descent, the early immigrants to this country belonging to the Society of Friends, and settling in Rhode Island, where the grandfather of Dr. Peckham was born. Later he removed to a farm in Washington county, N. Y., and there the son, Joseph W., was born, engaged in farming during his lifetime, and there his death occurred. His wife, who was Elizabeth Gifford before her marriage, was born in Easton, Washington county, N. Y., and died there at the age of seventy-eight years. Her father, Allan Gifford, lived to the remarkable age of ninety-six years.

There were seven children in the family of which Dr. Peckham was a member, three of whom are now living. He was the youngest and was born July 8, 1851, in Easton, Washington county, N. Y., his boyhood days being spent on his father's farm. For his preliminary education he was sent to the public schools, later entered Marshall Academy, then studied medicine for a time under his older brother, Dr. Allan G. Peckham. He afterwards took a course at Hahnemann Medical College in Philadelphia, from which he graduated in 1874 with the degree of M. D. The succeeding two years he practiced his profession in Saratoga county, N. Y., and from there removed to Albany, where he was connected with the Homes City Hospital and practiced for seven years. At this time his health failed and he sought the climate of the Pacific coast in the hope of bettering it, spending two years each in Los Angeles, Sacramento and San Diego. In 1889 he went to Antelope Valley, Los Angeles county, and tried the plan, which was original with him, of taking the outdoor treatment in a tent house. While rusticating there it gradually became a habit with the people who were scattered over the surrounding country to call upon him for medical services and his practice soon covered a country embracing territory fifty miles in extent. He was appointed by President Harrison postmaster of Alpine, the name of which station was changed to Harold at the suggestion of the doctor, and held the position for two years. Having recovered his health, in 1891 he went to San Francisco and engaged in practice for a couple of years, and for one year subsequent to 1893 acted as surgeon for the English Mountain Gold Mining Company in Nevada county. The condition of his wife's health demanding a change at this time they again came to Southern California and located on Big Rock creek, in the Antelope valley, remaining there for two years. The continued ill health of his wife decided him to locate directly on the coast and he located at San Pedro, where he was employed as physician by Helmyer & Neu, the contractors for the old and new breakwaters at that point. Later the government changed contractors and in 1900 Dr. Peckham located in Avalon, where he has ever since continued his medical practice. He is also engaged in the drug business, being one of the proprietors of the Island Pharmacy Company, which carries a full line of drugs and sundries, having the largest stock of drugs in the county outside of Los Angeles. He fills the office of deputy health officer of Catalina township, and is at the same time deputy county recorder. He is also medical examiner for several of the old line life insurance companies, including the Phoenix Life of Hartford, the Mutual Life of New York, and the New York Life. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Avalon Eyrie of Eagles No. 1385, of which he is examining physician; he was made a Mason in Temple Lodge No. 14, A. F. & A. M., at Albany, N. Y., and also was raised to the Royal Arch degree in that city. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party.

The first marriage of Dr. Peckham occurred in Albany, N. Y., uniting him with Emma Clay, who was born in Syracuse, and his present wife was, before her marriage, Frances Mackey, a native daughter of Los Angeles. Dr. Peckham is a successful physician and business man, honest and upright in all his dealings and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

ELMER HERMAN THOMPSON, M. D. A resident of Burbank since May, 1905, Elmer Herman Thompson, M. D., has acquired a position of considerable prominence in professional, business, and social circles. A young man of talent and culture, he has an extensive knowledge of the science of his chosen profession and is fast establishing an enviable reputation for his skill and ability in the diagnosis and treatment of diseases. He was born March 7, 1878, in Wisconsin, and in the public schools of that state laid a substantial foundation for his future education. Deciding to fit himself for a medical career, Mr. Thompson studied for two years at the American Medical College in Battle Creek, Mich., prior to which he had spent a year at the Battle Creek Sanitarium. In December, 1900, he entered Rush Medical College, at Chicago, Ill., from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in the class of 1903. Opening then an office at Superior, Wis., he remained there two years, when, on account of ill health, he was obliged to give up the large practice which he had established and seek a more congenial climate. Coming to Los Angeles county, he located in Burbank in May, 1905, opening an office, and has now a substantial and rapidly increasing practice. He is very successful as a physician, being painstaking in every particular, carrying his own drugs and filling the prescriptions himself. While in Wisconsin, he was surgeon for a railway company, and November 15, 1905, he was appointed emergency surgeon for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

June 19, 1904, in Chicago, Ill., Dr. Thompson married Louise Kindig, and they have one child, a daughter named Dorothy. Politically Dr. Thompson is a strong Republican. He belongs to the Wisconsin State Medical Society, and to the Douglas county (Wis.) Medical Society, and fraternally he is a member of both the Modern Samaritans and the Mystic Workers.

ABRAHAM RAPHAEL. Situated one and one-half miles from Moneta lies the Raphael ranch of forty acres, which for some years has been under the active management of Abraham Raphael. The property has been improved with a neat set of buildings and a pumping plant that furnishes an abundance of water for the alfalfa and other products of the land. By reason of these improvements and the excellent quality of the soil, the land is easily worth $500 per acre, ranking among the most valuable tracts of its size in the vicinity of Moneta and Gardena, and owing much to the energetic supervision of its present manager, who came to this place from Los Angeles after an experience of ten years in that city at the trade of stationary engineer.

The life history of Mr. Raphael's father, Charles, shows what it is within the power of a talented and energetic man to accomplish, though poor and friendless and alone in a strange country. Born in Germany April 13, 1844, he received a fair German education and then learned the glazier's trade, receiving registered papers from the government of his native land certifying to his ability as a machinist and glazier. At fifteen years of age he went to England, where a year later he had charge of a large glass factory employing fifty men. In 1865, at twenty-one years of age, he crossed the ocean to New York, but sought in vain in that city and Boston for profitable work at his trade. After two years marked by steady lack of success he came to California via the Panama route and brought with him the first art glass showcase ever in this state. At San Francisco he started in the plate-glass business, but soon removed to Los Angeles, where for many years he conducted a growing business in his specialty.

When Charles Raphael landed in San Francisco, his worldly possessions consisted of only $1, and seventy-five cents of this he paid for his first meal in the city, giving the remaining quarter to the waiter. Though penniless, he was not discouraged, for he had youth, health and the knowledge of an important trade. That he utilized the following years to advantage is shown by the fact that in 1887 he sold his interest in the glass business to his nephews for $100,000. Since then the business has continued under the old name of Raphael & Co., and still ranks among the leading enterprises of the city. After he had disposed of all his stock in the company he frequently assisted his nephews and enjoyed following the routine of work familiar to him through so many successful years. While thus engaged, May 26, 1905, he was killed by a crate that weighed one thousand pounds falling on him. The estate is now in the hands of trustees and has not been divided among the heirs. Shortly after coming to Los Angeles he built on Second street and Broadway one of the very first frame houses erected in the town and later he took stock in the first street-car line established at this point. Other infant industries owed much to his encouragement and financial assistance, and at the time of his death he still owned considerable property in Los Angeles, as well as stock in various concerns. In religion he was a member of the B'nai Brith congregation and did much to assist in the establishment and maintenance of the church of his faith in his home town.

After coming to California Charles Raphael met and married Bertha Coleman, who was born in Germany and came to the United States in childhood, settling at Providence, R. I., whence she came to California by way of Cape Horn. A devoted wife and mother, liberal to the poor, generous toward the needy, her death June 7, 1893, was mourned as a loss to family and friends. In addition to rearing seven children of her own, she gave a home to two nephews and also took care of a number of poor boys at other times, her husband assisting her in this charitable work. They were the parents of the following-named children: Rosa, who married H. W. Altman, of Los Angeles; Aaron C., who is employed in the business founded by his father; Nellie, Mrs. I. Oppheimer, of San Francisco; Rachel, who married J. E. Fulton, of Los Angeles, employed as a conductor on the Southern Pacific Railroad; Abraham, who was born in Los Angeles, October 17, 1875, and after completing a high school education took up the trade of stationary engineer, but is now manager of a ranch belonging to himself and his two brothers; Meyer, who is employed in the house established by his father; and Flora, who resides in San Francisco. All of the family were given excellent advantages and hold positions of importance in their several communities, the son whose name introduces this article bearing a reputation for energy and capability, and holding membership in various organizations, including the Fraternal Brotherhood.

LEWIS F. RANKER. Of an active and enterprising disposition, endowed by nature with a resolute will and an unlimited stock of energy, Lewis F. Ranker began life for himself when a mere lad and has met with deserved success in his undertakings. Well known in the business circles of Pomona and the surrounding country for miles, he has the distinction of being the most up-to-date and practical horse-shoer in this part of the country and is one of Pomona's most thriving and esteemed citizens. Of German birth and parentage, he was born in Mittelbach, Saxony, August 17, 1874, a son of Joseph and Margaret (Schmidt) Ranger, they too being natives of that part of the Fatherland. With their family the parents immigrated to the United States in 1888, first settling in Cleveland, Ohio, and later in Tiffin, that state, in both of which cities Mr. Ranker followed his trade of blacksmith. He had gained a fairly good start at his trade when death called him from his labors in 1906, and his wife also died in Tiffin in 1892.

Of the nine children born to his parents Lewis F. Ranker was the fourth in order of birth, but of the number only seven are now living. Up to the age of fourteen his life was associated with his native land, being well trained in the schools and gymnasium of Mittelbach, and in the meantime also he had been an apt pupil in his father's blacksmith shop. By diligent application mornings and evenings he learned the trade, which included the manufacture of nails and horse shoes by hand. His knowledge of the trade proved a wise provision, both for himself and for the family, for they had not been in Cleveland long before the entire family fell ill with typhoid fever with the exception of Lewis F., and upon him depended the family support for the time being. Without difficulty he secured a position at his trade, and from the first received what for a boy of fourteen years was considered a munificent wage, his employer paying him $1.50 per day. He continued to work at his trade in that city until 1901, when he opened a shop in Clyde, Ohio. He remained there only two years, however, for in 1903 he came to Pomona. Purchasing the shop then owned by Jacob Ranker, his brother, he continued the business of his predecessor at the same stand for three months, and then removed to larger quarters at No. 280 West Third street, the same which he occupies today. Not only is Mr. Ranker a practical horse-shoer, but he understands treating weak and diseased feet, and all cases of interfering and knee-knocking in horses brought to him receive the most careful and experienced attention.

Mr. Ranker's marriage occurred in Pomona and united him with Miss Martha J. Thornton, who was born in Illinois. Mr. Ranker is affiliated with a number of fraternal organizations, among them the Independent Order of Foresters, and the Fraternal Brotherhood.

LOUIS S. DART. When Mr. Dart came to San Bernardino county in 1887 and established his dairy ranch near Redlands it was with the determination to succeed and make a place and name for himself as one of the best in his line in the county. With this as his goal he has spared no efforts to attain the highest point of excellence in the production of his dairy commodities. Cleanliness is a marked feature of the plant, and that, with the care displayed in handling the products, makes an impression upon the customer which is lasting, and stimulating to trade. Fifty milch cows supply the dairy, besides which he has about seventy-five head of cattle.

Of eastern birth and parentage, Louis S. Dart is a son of Sidney T. and Theodosia (Ray) Dart, born in Chenango county, N. Y., September 1, 1854. The parents were also natives of the Empire state, and there the death of the mother occurred. The father is still living in his native state and is now in his eighty-fifth year. In his earlier years he joined the Masonic order and is still a member of that body. In his religious views he is a Universalist.

Supplementing the education gleaned in the common schools of Chenango county by a five-year course in Sherburne Academy, Mr. Dart later followed teaching for five years. This, however, was not the line of work most agreeable to him and in the meantime he had decided to master the carpenter's trade. With this at his command he readily found all that he could do, and for three years worked at his trade in his native state. Removing as far west as Illinois at the end of this time, he taught school in Lake county during the winter, and with the opening of spring crossed over into Iowa, where for fourteen years he worked at his trade in Marshalltown continuously, in addition to contracting and building. His next removal found him in Nebraska, working at his trade in Lincoln, that state, as well as in Colorado, whither he went seven months later. From there in 1887 he came to California and in 1895 purchased the ranch of thirty acres which has been his home ever since. Besides himself there were three other children in the parental family, but he is the only one of the number in the west.

In Marshalltown, Iowa, in 1877, Mr. Dart was married to Della N. Sanford, a native of that state, and six children were born to them, as follows: Fred (deceased), Bessie, Earl, George, Guy and Frank. Mr. Dart's political views are in accord with Republican principles. Fraternally he is a Mason, having been made a member in Marshalltown Lodge No. 108, and now belongs to the chapter and commandery of that place.

MARSHALL G. STONE. Riverside is one of the best counties in the state of California and Valle Vista is one of the most attractive parts of the county. Located at the foot of the San Jacinto range, at an elevation of about eighteen hundred feet, it has a most perfect climate, cool and free from wind and rain storms. Valle Vista is located on the road from Hemet to Idyllwild, and is recognized as one of the most beautiful spots in this section, and an ideal situation for a town. Marshall G. Stone, who is engaged in the real-estate business in Florida, or Valle Vista, as the place is now known, is the father of this town and takes great pride in the natural advantages surrounding the place of his choice and lends the greater part of his time and energy to the development of this section. He is a native of Canada, his birth having occurred in Toronto in 1848. His parents, Mathew and Sarah (Greenhill) Stone, removed to Milwaukee, Wis., when Marshall G. was but four years of age, and later resided in Dodge county of the same state. Both parents are now deceased. The son received his education in the public schools of Columbus and Milwaukee, and in 1867 located in Iowa, where for twenty years he followed stock raising and farming with good success.

His residence in California dates from 1887, when he came to his present location, four and one-half miles east of Hemet, and has considered it a good enough place to remain ever since. He was one of the organizers of the Fairview Land and Water Company, serving first as vice-president and later as president of the company. He superintended the development of a part of the San Jacinto grant, three thousand acres of which was purchased by the company, improved it by the laying out of streets, planting of trees and the laying of nineteen miles of iron pipe for water mains. The acreage was divided into twenty-acre plots and sold to fruit growers. Store buildings were erected and also a fine hotel was built, the latter being now occupied as a residence by Mr. Stone. By his marriage in Iowa in 1873 he was united with Miss Eliza Champion, who now presides over his home in Valle Vista.

LAWRENCE L. GARNER. The ranch which for a considerable period has been the headquarters of Mr. Garner and which is operated by him under a lease comprises four hundred and sixty acres situated four and one-half miles southwest of Inglewood and commonly known as the Vossburg ranch. The raising of barley is made a special feature of Mr. Garner's farming operations and in addition he has engaged successfully in the raising of corn, his ranch being excellently adapted for almost any variety of general farm product. In striking contrast with the majority of the farmers of this region, he has not engaged in extensive agriculture, but has followed the methods used in the eastern states and has given his attention to general crops rather than to horticulture or market gardening.

Indiana is the native home of Mr. Garner, and Putnam county the place of his birth, which occurred March 12, 1864. Nothing of especial importance occurred to mark the years of his boyhood and youth, which were passed in the schoolroom during the winter months and in farm work during the summer seasons. At the age of twenty-one years he started out to make his own way in the world and proceeded to Missouri, where he secured employment on a farm in Bates county. About the same time he also worked in the mines at Rich Hill. When he took up farm pursuits as a renter he secured a tract of land and began the raising of general farm products, remaining in the same vicinity for nine years. At the expiration of that period he came to California and for a year worked on the wharf at Redondo, after which he acted as manager of a ranch for two years, and then leased the ranch where now he is busily engaged in agricultural pursuits.

While living in Bates county, Mo., Mr. Garner met and married Miss Mary F. Riley, who was born in Kansas, but accompanied her family to Missouri at an early age and passed the years of girlhood in Bates county. Three sons were born of their union, Buford G., Levi Lester and Lawrence. Ever since attaining his majority Mr. Garner has voted the Democratic ticket and has given his support to its men and measures, but he has never solicited office at the hands of his fellow-citizens, having little inclination toward public responsibilities. In fraternal relations he holds membership with the Woodmen of the World and the Knights of the Maccabees, in both of which organizations he maintains a warm interest.

MICHAEL MAYER. As the name indicates the Mayer family is of German extraction. Michael Mayer is a native of Heidelberg and a member of a family long identified with manufacturing industries in that part of Germany. In the city where he was born, January 28, 1855, he received an excellent common school education, supplemented by a complete course of study in Heidelberg College, from which he was graduated at the completion of his course.

Subsequent to graduation Mr. Mayer engaged in the wine business with his father, and after the latter's death he took charge of the estate, continuing the store for a time. Coming to the United States in 1902 he bought the old Casino in Redondo and rebuilt it on a larger scale with modern improvements, making of it the largest casino on the coast. Modern bowling alleys have been built and the resort has been made one attractive for tourists and the general public. Besides owning the building and business he is the owner of residence property in Redondo and is a director in the First National Bank of Redondo. Politically, since becoming a citizen of the United States, he has voted the Republican ticket at all elections, and in fraternal relations he affiliates with the Eagles.

WILMOT GEORGE BROWN. The cashier of the First State Bank of Inglewood is a member of an old eastern family whose identification with American history dates back to the colonial period. Very early in the settlement of the Mississippi valley Stephen H. and Margaret (Coiany) Brown, natives of New York state, became pioneers of Toulon, Stark county, Ill., and from there in 1859 they removed to Winona, Minn., where again they bore a part in the development of a frontier region. Both have passed from earth's activities, but all of their four children survive, the only one on the coast being Charles H., the father of our subject.

While the family were residents of Blue Earth, Minn., Wilmot George Brown was born June 30, 1873. When he was ten years of age he accompanied his parents to Owatonna, where he was graduated from the high school, and later became a clerk in the Farmers' National Bank of Owatonna. At the age of eighteen years he was made paying teller, being the youngest to hold that position in the entire state. Resigning in 1898 he removed to Dodge Center, Minn., where he assisted in organizing the Farmers' National Bank and held the office of cashier in the concern. Upon resigning that position in 1903 he came to California, and spent a year at Ocean Park and Santa Monica, after which, in 1904, he settled at Inglewood. Since then he has been interested as treasurer in the Inglewood Realty Company, promoters of Palm place of ten acres and East Acres, a tract of eighty acres. In May, 1905, he assisted in the organization of the First State Bank of Inglewood, which was opened for business on the 14th of October of that year, with a capital stock of $25,000. The bank occupies a two-story structure, 50x60 feet, constructed of solid brick, and equipped with Debolt safe and steel vault and other modern appliances.

The marriage of Wilmot G. Brown took place in Owatonna, Minn., and united him with Miss Nora I. Montgomery, who was born in that city and is a graduate of the college at Carlton, Minn. The only child of their union is a son, Stanley Henry. While living at Dodge Center Mr. Brown was initiated into Masonry and ever since has been a warm believer in the high principles for which the order stands. The Republican party receives his ballot and its candidates have his stalwart support. In religious views he is of the Universalist faith.

JULES J. DELPY. A substantial residence with modern improvements and attractive appointments forms the home of Mr. Delpy and ranks among the most elegant country houses in its district. Surrounding the grounds and convenient to the commodious winery may be seen the vineyard of seventy-five acres planted to grapes of the most select varieties, while in addition the ranch also contains a considerable amount of grain land, its entire extent comprising four hundred and forty acres. Improvements are made each year, so that the estate has an increasing value, while its cultivated appearance bespeaks the thrift of the owner. The success with which he is meeting in the wine business proves that the industry may be profitably prosecuted in the locality.

Born in the south of France, September 5, 1867, Jules J. Delpy is a son of Bernard and Anna Delpy, natives of France and both now deceased. An uncle, B. T. Delpy, came to San Diego county in 1875 and took up a homestead from the government. Later he started a vineyard and operated a winery, which he carried on until his death, in 1891, at the age of fifty-nine years. Meanwhile he had become widely known through all this part of the country and the fertile valley where he lived became known by his name. A genial, companionable man, he possessed the affable traits for which the French are noted, and he won many warm friends among his American associates.

On the completion of his education Jules J. Delpy left his native land at the age of sixteen years and came to the United States, landing at New Orleans. The same year, 1884, found him in California, where he learned the winery business under his uncle, and at the latter's death inherited eighty acres of valuable land. In 1893 he was united in marriage with Miss Maria Hauret, of Los Angeles, and they have three sons, Louis, Frank and Jacques. The family are identified with the Roman Catholic Church and contribute to its charitable organizations and general maintenance. Not only in Delpy valley, but also wherever known, they have friends among the most refined and intelligent people and are respected for genuine worth of character.

DAVID G. WEBSTER. One of the large ranchmen of the San Jacinto valley is David G. Webster, who has ninety acres of land on the Idyllwild road devoted to the raising of crops. He was born August 3, 1861, in Paris, Ill., the son of William B. and Mary (Nevell) Webster, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Athens, Ohio, her father having been an officer in the war of 1812. The Websters became early settlers of Illinois, took up government land there and engaged in farming in that state until 1875, when Mr. Webster removed with his family to California, landing first at San Francisco, from which point he came by water to San Pedro, remaining through the summer in Los Angeles and Compton. In September of that year he settled in the San Jacinto valley, in which section he filed on government land and purchased a part of the San Jacinto grant, until he at one time owned twenty-eight hundred and sixty acres of land, upon which he raised a great many sheep, cattle and horses. He erected buildings and otherwise improved his holding and lived on the place until his death, in April, 1885, at the age of sixty-seven years. He was one of the best known men in Southern California during his life and made friends with everyone with whom he came in contact. Helen Hunt Jackson chose him as the original of her character Merrill in her noted novel Ramona. Mrs. Webster lived to be seventy years of age, her death occurring in November, 1898.

Until the age of fourteen David G. Webster spent his life in Illinois, attending the public schools there. Coming to California with his parents in 1875 he worked with his father until 1897, then engaged in independent farming operations and has continued as an agriculturist ever since. His marriage to Miss Nannie B. Robinson, a native of St. Louis, Mo., took place March 10, 1897, and they have become the parents of one child, Mary, aged eight years. Mr. Webster is now a member of the Florida (or Valle Vista) board of school trustees, and he takes an active interest in all matters of public interest to the community in which he resides. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party.

ARTHUR G. WOODMAN. Among the prominent contractors and builders located in Avalon, on Catalina Island, is Arthur G. Woodman, who has been a resident of this place since 1902. He is a native of Nova Scotia, having been born in Digby, February 22, 1867, the son of John C. and grandson of Robert Woodman, both of whom were born in the same location. The immigrating ancestor of the family, came from England in an early day and settled in New England, the family belonging to what was known as the United Empire Loyalists. The grandfather was a large landowner in Nova Scotia, and the father was by occupation a builder, his death occurring in Nova Scotia. The mother of Mr. Woodman was before her marriage Mary Ann Rice, born in Digby, Nova Scotia, the daughter of Samuel Rice, a native of the same place. Her family was also an old established one, of French extraction, and her death occurred in the same province in which she was born.

Three of the four children born in the family of which Arthur G. Woodman was a member are now living. He was the youngest child and was reared in Nova Scotia until twelve years of age, when his parents removed to Massachusetts, where the son received his education in the public schools. In his sixteenth year he returned to Nova Scotia and clerked in a grocery store for a year, after which he began to learn the carpenter's trade. After completing his apprenticeship he went to East Douglass, Mass., plying his trade there for a time, later becoming an independent contractor and builder. Changing his location he was occupied for two years in the woodwork department of the Draper Manufacturing Company in Hopedale, Mass. In 1901 he came to California, locating first in Los Angeles and in the spring of 1902 removed to Catalina. After following his trade for a time, he branched out as a contractor and builder, and is now the most extensive contractor in Avalon. He has an attractive residence on Whitley avenue, presided over by his wife, who was before her marriage Viola Bridges, a native of East Douglass, Mass. They have one daughter, Lydia Lolita. Mrs. Woodman is a finely educated woman and a graduate nurse from the Worcester (Mass.) City Hospital. As an enterprising business man and a public-spirited citizen Mr. Woodman is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

HOWARD MILTON TODD. There have been but few places even in this enterprising section of California where greater interest has been taken in real estate dealings than in Ocean Park during the past few years, where the sales and transfers of realty have been numerous and notably large. One of the most active men engaged in this remunerative business is Howard Milton Todd, a citizen of prominence. A son of Joshua Todd, he was born and reared in Howard county, Mo. His father was born in Maryland, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and after his marriage with Margaret Jeffrey, who was of German descent, he immigrated to Missouri, settling in Howard county, where both he and his wife spent their remaining years.

Next to the youngest of a family of six children, Howard Milton Todd acquired a practical education in the public schools of New Franklin, Mo. While yet a young lad he became interested in the stock business, joining his oldest brother, Theodore H. Todd, S. B. Tinsley and B. E. Nance when he was but fifteen years old. Possessing an almost intuitive knowledge of the business, and showing such keen, shrewd judgment, he was very soon entrusted with the buying of cattle and hogs, and before attaining his majority was a well-known figure in several counties. Beginning for himself at the age of twenty-two years, he was very fortunate as a stock buyer and dealer, handling cattle and hogs by the train loads and building up an extensive business. Selling out in 1900, he came with his family to California, locating on a ranch near Sherman, where he resided for a while. Subsequently disposing of his farming interests at an advantage, he opened a real estate office at Ocean Park, where he has since been numbered among the influential residents of the place. He succeeded well in his new line of occupation, and since his association with his present partners, B. T. Allyn and R. B. Yaple, has carried on a substantial business, with office at No. 180 Pier avenue. He takes great interest in local affairs, is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood, and in his political affiliations is a loyal Democrat.

In 1875 Mr. Todd married, in Franklin, Mo., Mary Hanson, and into the household thus established nine children have been born, namely: Cecil (deceased), Roberta, Howard M., Grover Cleveland, Benjamin W., Margaret J., Louise M., Percy E. and Clifton H.

SAMUEL R. McCREERY. At the time of purchase in 1886 the McCreery ranch of eighty acres, one and a quarter miles south of the city limits of Los Angeles, at the corner of Vermont and Florence avenues, was a barley field, for which was paid $50 per acre. This same property was sold in 1906 for $135,000. Mr. McCreery has purchased property in Los Angeles, where he intends to make his home.

Born in Pecatonica, Winnebago county, Ill., March 30, 1858, Samuel R. McCreery is a son of Rufus K. and Mary (Bull) McCreery, the former a native of Maryland. In his native state as well as in Illinois, to which state he subsequently removed, the father carried on agricultural pursuits, but finally the desire to come west and try his luck in the mines became too strong to be withstood any longer, and hither he came, working in the mines in and around La Porte, Plumas county, for about ten years. When he had become fairly established he sent for his wife, who followed him to the west in 1862, when her son Samuel was a child of four years. (A more complete account of the parental family will be found in the sketch of Rufus K. McCreery, which appears elsewhere in this volume.)

Until he was old enough to be of use to his father on the home ranch Samuel R. McCreery attended the public schools of Los Angeles, later becoming his father's assistant in improving the ranch. The combined efforts of father and son as general ranchers and dairymen netted a substantial income, and in fact made them financially independent. When he was thirty-seven years old the son formed domestic ties and thereafter, until selling the property in 1906, made his home on a part of the tract he and his father had cultivated together for so many years. While to some extent he carried on general ranching, his specialty was the raising of alfalfa, of which he cut from six to seven crops per season.

Mr. McCreery's marriage, September 4, 1895, united him with Miss Anna Taggart, who though a native of Belfast, Ireland, has been a resident of the United States almost her entire life, having come to this country with her parents when a very small child. Mrs. McCreery's brother, Fred Taggart, was librarian in the Mechanics' Pavilion in San Francisco. Two children have been born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. McCreery, Maurice Elliott and Walter King, who are the pride of their parents, and are being carefully trained for future citizenship. Mrs. McCreery is a member of the Episcopal Church, which her husband also attends, and toward the support of which he contributes. Politically he is a Republican, and while he takes a helpful interest in the party's well-being, this is not to be understood as seeking office, for at no time has he had any desire for public life. The only fraternal order with which he is connected is the Independent Order of Foresters, affiliating with the lodge at Los Angeles.

ROBERT L. BEARDSLEY. The possibilities of achievement on the part of industrious application and intelligent energy find exemplification in the life of Robert L. Beardsley and his twin brother, Richard, young men who by their own efforts have gained a foothold in agricultural affairs in Ventura county and are recognized as enterprising farmers. While they are yet on the sunny side of life's prime, already they have gained gratifying success, and their farm of six hundred acres is one of the most carefully tilled in the vicinity of Oxnard. One-half of the entire tract is under cultivation to lima beans, and the other half is in barley, the income from the two crops forming a valuable addition to the financial standing of the young men each year. Those who are most familiar with their work testify as to their energy, uprightness and intelligent cultivation of their land, while at the same time they occupy a distinct position in the best society of the county.

The Beardsley family is of eastern stock. At an early age George Beardsley, father of the brothers, removed from his native Ohio to Wisconsin and settled upon a farm. Prior to his removal he had served as a soldier in the Union army during the Civil war, enlisting in 1862 as a private in Company E, Seventh Ohio Infantry. With his regiment he marched to the front and took part in various battles of historic importance. While he was wounded in battle, the injuries were of an unimportant nature, and at the close of his time of service he returned to resume agricultural pursuits at the old homestead. After thirteen years in Wisconsin he came to California in 1887 and settled at Santa Paula, but for some years past he has been an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, this state, while his wife is living in Salt Lake City. Their sons, Robert and Richard, were born in Pepin county, Wis., October 28, 1875, and were about twelve years of age when the family removed to California, where they attended the Hueneme schools. Later Richard also had the advantage of one term of study in Woodbury College at Los Angeles. After leaving school they began to work by the month on ranches and meanwhile acquired a thorough knowledge of the soil and its needs and possibilities.

The first independent undertaking entered upon by the brothers occurred in 1898, when they began to farm in Pleasant valley, and in 1900 they removed to their present ranch near Oxnard. The ranch-house is under the capable supervision of Mrs. Robert Beardsley, who prior to her marriage in June, 1902, bore the name of Vesta Richardson, being a member of a well known family of the coast country. Surrounding the dwelling are the other buildings necessary for the proper management of farm affairs, while all of the improvements made by the brothers are of a substantial character. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church and contribute to religious, educational and missionary measures to the extent of their ability. In fraternal relations Robert holds membership with the blue lodge and chapter of Masonry at Oxnard and is a stanch believer in the principles of the brotherhood and philanthropy for which the order stands. In 1906 Richard Beardsley married Miss Clara Durr, of Oxnard.

NILS ANDERSON. The sons of Sweden are vigorous, energetic and enterprising, and those whose ambitions lead them to seek the larger opportunities to be found in the United States rarely fail to make a success of their undertakings. Nils Anderson, who has been a resident of California for twenty years, is now ranching twelve hundred acres of land in Perris, all but eighty acres of which is devoted to the raising of barley for hay, which commodity he ships to Los Angeles and sells at a good price, the remaining eighty acres being planted to oats. He has all modern machinery necessary to the conduct of this large ranch, among which is a header. There are also two warehouses on the place, one being 60x100 feet, the other 50x76, and in these are stored the hay which he buys and afterwards markets.

The birth of Mr. Anderson occurred June 14, 1867, in Lund, located in the southern part of Sweden, of which country both his parents were natives. Long life is the rule among the people who live in this northern country, where the climate demands vigor and hardihood of its inhabitants, and the father was eighty-five years old at the time of his death, in January, 1905, his wife also dying in Sweden at the age of eighty-seven years. Mr. Anderson received a good common-school education in his native country, and at the age of seventeen years was apprenticed to a carpenter and mastered that trade. In 1884 he came to the United States, locating first in Wright county, Iowa, where he followed carpentering for two years, in 1886 removing to California and locating in Riverside, where he became a contractor and builder and erected a great many residences. He purchased his ranch in Perris valley in 1890, and now owns one hundred and fifty acres of land. He built all of the improvements now on this place, including the house, barns, store houses, etc., and for the succeeding ten years carried on a combined business of ranching and contracting. In 1900 he gave up the latter and has since then given all of his time and energy to the management of the large ranch which he now operates.

In August, 1889, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage with Miss Tillie Dolhberg, who was born in Sweden, and of this union three children have been born, Nellie, Malinda and Edith. Fraternally Mr. Anderson is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World at Riverside and the F. O. E. at the same place. He is an advocate of the principles embraced in the Democratic party, and is especially interested in school matters, having served for three years as trustee of the Snyder district. He is a supporter of the Congregational Church and lends his influence to the furthering of all elevating and upbuilding enterprises, and is held in the greatest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

EARL F. VAN LUVEN. For a decade and a half the name of Earl F. Van Luven has been associated with the fruit industry in and around Colton, whither he came about 1888. At that time he invested in property which has since increased in value, and he is now the owner of one of the oldest groves in the celebrated Colton Terrace. During the sixteen years in which he has engaged in the packing and shipping of citrus fruits he has handled thousands of carloads of oranges and lemons, chiefly through his association with the Southern California Fruit Exchange and the California Fruit Growers Exchange, of which he is a director, and the San Bernardino County Fruit Exchange, of the latter being secretary and manager. He has been connected with the above enterprises ever since their organization, and in 1893, upon the organization of the Colton Fruit Exchange, became one of its charter members. From the year of organization until 1902 he held the position of secretary, but was then compelled to resign owing to the pressure of other obligations. However, he is still vice-president and a member of the board of directors, among whom he is considered an authority on all subjects connected with the fruit industry.

Mr. Van Luven is a Canadian by birth, and was born in the province of Ontario January 13, 1861. After receiving an education in the common schools and commercial colleges of Canada, he came to the United States in 1888, having in the meantime gained an excellent insight into business methods from his father, Zara Van Luven, a successful merchant. In Colton, in 1891, Mr. Van Luven was married to Miss Helen Edith Shepardson, a daughter of J. B. Shepardson, who is a well-known banker of Iowa, but who spends his winters in Colton. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Van Luven has been brightened by the birth of two children, both sons, Jed S. and Donald Earl.

REV. FR. JOHN PUJOL, rector of Santa Clara Catholic Church at Oxnard, is one of the best loved and most venerated men in the whole community, where he has been ministering to the spiritual necessities of his parishioners for more than twenty years. He was born November 2, 1844, at Moya, Catalonia, Spain, being a member of an old and prominent family there, and the youngest of nine children. He was educated in the primary schools of his home town, and in Latin at the College of Pious School at Moya. His medical and theological training was secured in the seminary at Vick, and in February, 1871, he left Spain for Ireland, where for five months he attended All Hallows College in Dublin, and then crossed the seas and landed in Los Angeles, September 8, 1871.

In 1872 he was ordained to the various offices of the church, receiving the minor orders March 17, 1872; was made subdeacon June 23; deacon, June 24; and priest, June 29, all in the same year, and by the Rt. Rev. Fadeus Amat. He said his first mass July 2, 1872, and was made assistant at the Santa Barbara parish, where he remained until 1877. From there he was sent to San Diego, where he performed duties as assistant pastor until 1881, and June 1 of that year assumed duties as assistant to the rector of Our Lady of Angels Church in Los Angeles. February 1, 1885, he was given full charge of the parish at New Jerusalem, as the village of El Rio was then called, and thus became rector of Santa Clara Church, which position he still occupies. This church was at first conducted as a mission and its communicants were served by a supply from San Buena Ventura from the time when the first mass was celebrated in October, 1877, until 1885, when Rev. Fr. John took charge of it as its first resident pastor. During this time he served the Missions of Santa Paula, Lancaster and Camulos and built the church at the former place. With commendable zeal and energy he went to work to add to his flock and strengthen every department of the church interests, and in 1895 it became apparent that the little church building which had been in use so long was quite inadequate to accommodate the ever-increasing number of worshippers and more commodious quarters became a necessity. The original church was then enlarged and remodeled and was used until 1903. In 1898 Father John expressed a need of assistance in his now exceedingly heavy duties, and Fr. J. S. Laubacher was appointed as his assistant.

When the town of Oxnard was established so near to El Rio it was at once apparent that this would become the center of population, and it soon became necessary to build a school there. Before the erection of this school mass had been celebrated for over a year, twice a month, in Pioneer hall, but after the completion of the school building the large hall on the first floor served as a church. The congregation soon outgrew these quarters, however, and it was decided that a new church must be built. The parishioners generously responded to the urgent appeal for funds, and in a few weeks' time over $30,000 were subscribed. This was in 1903, and in August the ground was broken and on September 27 the cornerstone was laid. On the 14th of August, 1904, the new edifice was solemnly dedicated to the service of God under the patronage of St. Clare. The growth of the small parish at El Rio (which is still served by Rev. Father Pujol) into the magnificent parish at Oxnard is in large measure the result of the faithful and energetic work of the rector, and upon the occasion of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate at El Rio a large congregation attended the high mass to honor their beloved priest with their presence.

PETER GANO. The visitor in Avalon will immediately find his attention attracted to the beautiful residence of Peter Gano, which is called Lookout Cot and is situated on one of the most prominent points on Santa Catalina island, overlooking the ocean, bay and mainland. It is an ideal site for a home, and standing out on an eminence as it does, looks like an old castle. A large circular lookout built above the third story of the house is twenty-two feet in diameter and one hundred feet above sea level, and from this tower the view is unlimited and very beautiful.

The Gano family is of French Huguenot extraction, the original name having been spelled Gerneaux. Soon after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, which deprived the Huguenots of their liberties, the first member of the family to come to America settled in Rhode Island and the names of several of the Ganos may be found in the roster of the patriot army at the time of the Revolutionary war. The great-grandparents of Peter Gano lived to be very old, passing by several years the century mark, the great-grandfather dying at the age of one hundred and nine years, and his wife was but three years younger. Peter Gano was born December 11, 1839, in Cincinnati, Ohio, the son of W. G. W. and Nancy (Willis) Gano, the first-named a native of New Jersey and the latter of Virginia. The father was a business man and banker in Cincinnati and died in that city at the age of seventy-two years, the death of the mother also occurring at that place. There were fourteen children in the family, six of whom are now living. One son, J. W., served as an adjutant in the Seventy-sixth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers during the Civil war and now resides in Cincinnati.

The education of Peter Gano was acquired in the public schools of Cincinnati and when nineteen years old he learned the machinist's trade in the Cincinnati locomotive works of Moore & Richardson and pursued that occupation for a time. At twenty-five he entered the office of the civil engineer of the city of Cincinnati, having previously taken a course of instruction in that profession. Later he followed railroad work, engaging in bridge building and sewer work, in 1869 removing to St. Paul, where for five years he continued the prosecution of civil engineering.

The residence of Mr. Gano in California dates from 1880, when he came to Pasadena, and purchasing two hundred acres of land at Altadena, started a ranch. Seeing at once the necessity of securing water for irrigation purposes he assisted in the organization of the Los Flores Water Company, and superintended to its successful completion the tunneling, fluming and piping necessary to bring the water from Los Flores canyon. Twenty-six acres of the land were devoted to a vineyard and a small orchard was also planted. In 1886 he disposed of the ranch and took up his residence in Pasadena. It was the year previous, in 1885, that he first became interested in Avalon, there being at that time no settlement or wharf on the island. The first work on the foundation of his present residence there was begun in 1888 and two years later found the house completed and ready for occupancy. At first it was used only a part of the year, but for some time past he has made it a permanent abiding place. Mr. Gano is a man of scholarly attainments and high principles and is greatly respected by all who know him. In politics he exercises considerable independence, preferring to cast his ballot for the man whom he believes will best fulfill the duties of an office rather than vote for him because of party affiliations.

AL LARSON. In San Pedro, a thriving seaport, we find many energetic, thorough-going business men who have attained success through their own tact, good judgment and persistency. Prominent among this number is Al Larson, a man of artistic and mechanical ability, who is carrying on a substantial business as a builder of boats of all kinds. A native of Sweden, he was born December 9, 1874, in Mariestad, where his father, Olof Larson, was engaged in farming during his active life.

The youngest of a family of nine children, Al Larson received a practical common school education, remaining in his native country until about sixteen years old. Coming to California in 1890, he attended school for a short time in San Francisco, where he subsequently served an apprenticeship at the trade of a boat builder, for twelve years working the yards of George Kneass. In January, 1903, he located in San Pedro, and for two years thereafter was in the employ of H. E. Carse, being foreman of his yards. Resigning his position in January, 1905, he embarked in business for himself as a boat builder, and in his operations has been very successful.

Mr. Larson is artistic in his tastes, has a very true eye, and draws all of the designs for the different kinds of boats which he makes. Since starting for himself he has built the noted launch Eagle, two launches for Captain Duffy, and a number of fishing boats, his work in this line keeping him busily employed. Politically Mr. Larson is a Republican, and religiously he is a Lutheran.

RICHARD WEIR. Since 1887 Richard Weir has been a prominent architect and builder in San Bernardino to which place he came from his native home in London, Ontario, where thus far his life had been spent. He was born at that place July 17, 1854, the son of John and Jane Ann (Talbott) Weir. The father, who was born in Connaught, Ireland, was brought to Canada by his father, Samuel Weir, a native of Armagh, Ireland, who settled there in 1810. Later his wife and five children were sent for and the sailing vessel on which they took passage had a most unfortunate voyage, being lost in a storm and so disabled that it drifted for three weeks, during which time the oldest son died and was buried at sea. Settling in London township Samuel Weir remained there the balance of his lifetime. One of his sons, Robert, removed to Whitehall, Muskegon county, Mich., became a large and successful lumber manufacturer, and continued to reside there until his death; Alex and John died in Ontario. The mother of Richard Weir was a daughter of Col. William Talbott, who was an officer in the British army and served on the Canadian frontier and in the Lake country until his retirement from the army, after which he became a large land owner near London, in which city there is a Talbott street, which was named for him. Mr. Weir's father was seventy-nine years old at the time of his death in February, 1883, while his mother lived to be eighty-five years old, and died in London in 1898. Of their ten children eight are living, Richard being the only one who resides in California.

Reared on his father's farm in London, Richard Weir attended the common schools until twelve years of age, when he was apprenticed to a carpenter to learn the trade. The first year he received $40, the second $60, and the third year $100 for his services. After the expiration of the term of his apprenticeship he engaged in farming on his father's place and at the same time took contracts to erect buildings in the neighborhood, meeting with very good success. On December 28, 1882, he was married to Miss Sarah Jane Heck, a native of Kingston, Ontario, and the daughter of John Wesley Heck, who was born at the same place and engaged in agricultural pursuits. The Heck family is of German origin, this branch being descendants of Rev. Paul and Barbara Heck, the noted Methodist family. Rev. Mr. Heck was one of the first ministers in this country and established the first church, and traveled through Pennsylvania to Canada. Mr. Heck now resides in San Bernardino, his wife having died in Ontario. Mr. and Mrs. Weir have a very attractive residence at No. 1560 Birch street, where they reside with their family of four children. The oldest son, Herbert H., is a graduate of the high school and now holds the position of bookkeeper in the San Bernardino National Bank; Emma Edna is a graduate of the high school; Helen J. belongs to the class of 1907; and John Wesley completes the family. Mrs. Weir is a member of the Congregational Church.

It was in 1887 that Mr. Weir located with his family in San Bernardino and entered the employ of the old Southern California Railroad, now the Santa Fe, being connected with the building and bridge department. He continued with this company for eight years, and during that time suffered several strokes of misfortune. The second year of his residence in San Bernardino his house with its contents was burned and later he was the victim of an accident which disabled him for four months. While engaged as foreman of a gang of men occupied in unloading old railroad ties to be used for fence posts along the track he fell from a moving car and was crushed between the bumper and drawhead, mashing his bones and breaking them at four places. After his recovery from his injuries he engaged exclusively in contracting and building and has ever since been thus employed. Among other houses which he has erected are the Smith and Dr. Rowell residences in San Bernardino, C. B. Morris and C. B. Fuller residences in Colton, and the C. F. Kelly residence in Loma Linda. Fraternally Mr. Weir affiliates with the Independent Order of Foresters, having passed the chairs of the lodge in San Bernardino. He is an active member of the Mt. Vernon Improvement Association and served as its first secretary upon its organization several years ago. He is also one of the stockholders in the Canadian Building and Improvement Association, which built the Canadian club house on Mt. Vernon avenue at a cost of $2,000. He drew the plans for the house, and was the second president of the association, his son Herbert now filling that office. Although his life is largely taken up with business duties he still finds time to aid in the upbuilding of the community in which he resides and is accounted one of its most important citizens.

THE COLTON FRUIT EXCHANGE. With a membership of about fifty the Colton Fruit Exchange was organized in 1892 for the purpose of packing and shipping their own fruit at actual cost. It now has a membership of about one hundred and twenty-five and controls seventy-five per cent of the oranges around Colton. The corporation is controlled by a board of nine directors, elected annually, the directors electing their own officers. At this writing, 1906, the board consists of the following-named gentlemen: James Barnhill, Earl Van Luven, W. W. Wilcox, E. D. Roberts, Wade Purdum, L. C. Newcomer, T. E. Moon, W. S. Bullis and J. B. Hanna. The president of the organization is James Barnhill, Earl Van Luven vice-president, First National Bank of Colton treasurer, E. B. Wilkerson secretary and W. F. Sharp manager.

The headquarters of the Exchange are in the old pavilion, which was originally erected for the State Fair, but is now owned by the Exchange, and affords a floor space covering two hundred square feet, in fact is the largest building used for a similar purpose anywhere in Southern California. The most modern and complete equipment for this special line of business has been installed in the plant, which insures the careful handling of fruit, indeed, with the many modern appliances now in use the fruit is handled very little. From the orchard boxes it is dumped into a canvas receiver and rolled or lifted carefully from one process to another, until it is finally laid in the shipping boxes. The packing house has a capacity for shipping from eight to ten cars per day. Three brands of oranges are packed and shipped by the Exchange, named in order of their superiority as follows: Tiger, Floral, and Rancho.

The growers associated with the Colton Fruit Exchange receive all money over and above the actual cost of packing and selling their product, there being no profits paid to anyone. This Exchange is affiliated with the San Bernardino County Fruit Exchange.

PIERRE POURROY. It was in 1898 that Pierre Pourroy came to Riverside county and purchased the nucleus of his present ranch of six hundred and forty acres near Auld, which is mostly in grain crops, and yields him a fine income. His birth occurred January 3, 1862, in Hautes-Alpes, France, he being the son of John and Rosa (Pourroy) Pourroy, both of French birth. The father came to California in 1886, remaining until 1888, when he returned to his native land, where his death occurred in April, 1899, at the age of eighty-two years. The mother died at the age of forty-two years, when the son Pierre was but two years of age. While he ultimately acquired a considerable amount of learning, the opportunities for securing an education in youth were limited, and at nineteen, in 1880, Pierre Pourroy came to Los Angeles county, Cal., and spent the first eighteen months of his residence in this country in Azusa, herding sheep upon the land now embraced in the city of Long Beach. From Azusa he went to Temecula, Riverside county, remaining for a time, and subsequently located near the state line between California and Nevada, where for sixteen years he was employed as a shepherd. Returning to Riverside county in 1898 he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land in the Los Alamos valley, improving it and adding to his holdings from time to time, until now he owns a ranch comprising six hundred and forty acres.

April 14, 1899, in Reno, Nev., Mr. Pourroy was united in marriage with Mary (Jaussaud) Nicolas, a native of the same part of France as is her husband. She is the daughter of Frederick and Mary (Martin) Jaussaud, both of whom were born in France, the father dying there in 1898, at the age of seventy-two years; the mother still makes her home in her native land, being in her seventy-first year. Mrs. Pourroy became the mother of three children by her first marriage, their names being Edmee, John and Marius Nicolas. Mr. and Mrs. Pourroy are also the parents of three children, Bertha, Frederick and Pierre. They are devout members of the Catholic Church and their influence upon the community in which they live is an elevating one. Fraternally Mr. Pourroy became a member of the Masonic order in Vallee de France Lodge No. 329, F. & A. M., in Los Angeles. He is a man who possesses many admirable qualities and fulfils creditably his duties as a citizen and is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

HARMAN JEFFERSON MAYO. Conspicuous among the younger generation of active and progressive agriculturists of Southern California is Harman Jefferson Mayo, who is successfully engaged in general farming and dairying near Compton. Industrious and thrifty, he has made improvements of value on his estate, and in his chosen occupation is meeting with satisfactory results, year by year adding to his wealth, at the same time growing rapidly into the esteem and respect of his neighbors, and winning an assured position among the valuable members of the community. He is a native and to the manner born, his birth having occurred, June 17, 1880, in Compton, a son of Henry J. Mayo, a well-known pioneer of this part of Los Angeles county.

A native of Missouri, Henry J. Mayo was born, in 1848, in Ridgely, Platte county, where he grew to manhood, receiving exceptionally good educational advantages. Coming to California in 1872, he settled in Compton, where he became a citizen of prominence and influence, serving many years as deputy assessor, and being deputy road commissioner a number of terms. He was active in fraternal organizations, being a member of Anchor Lodge No. 273, F. & A. M., and of Campton Lodge, I. O. O. F. He married Augusta Higgins, who was born in Oregon, a daughter of Harman Higgins, a native of Missouri, and into their household four sons and one daughter were born. Politically he belonged to the Democratic party, and both he and his wife were members of the Christian Church.

Educated in Compton, Harman J. Mayo completed the course of the grammar and attended the high schools for a short time. Choosing the free and independent occupation to which he was trained in his youthful days he worked for four years on the home ranch, obtaining practical experience in the many branches of agriculture. Purchasing then his present ranch he has since been actively employed in farming and dairying, keeping about thirty cows, and raising alfalfa in large quantities. Prosperity has smiled upon his every effort, and now, although yet a young man, he occupies a fine position among the most thrifty and successful ranchmen of his community.

January 1, 1903, Mr. Mayo married Mary W. Taylor, daughter of John L. Taylor, a native of Kentucky, and they have one son Lewis Harman. Politically Mr. Mayo is an adherent of the Democratic party, supporting its principles at the polls. Fraternally he was made a Mason in the winter of 1901, joining Anchor Lodge No. 273, F. & A. M., which he has served two terms as master; is a charter member of Long Beach Chapter, R. A. M., has represented his lodge at the Grand Lodge; and Los Angeles Consistory Scottish Rite; and belongs also to the Independent Order of Foresters. Mrs. Mayo is a most estimable woman, and a valued member of the Christian Church.

GEORGE HINMAN. A skilful and capable agriculturist, and a man of enterprise and intelligence, George Hinman is closely associated with the industrial interests of Los Angeles county, his well-cultivated and well-appointed ranch, located near Clearwater, evincing in a marked degree the thrift, ability and wise management of the owner. A native of New York state, he was born February 16, 1845, a son of Enoch F. and Pamelia (Ingersoll) Hinman, the former of whom was born in Massachusetts, and the latter in New York state.

Spending the first few years of his life in his native town, George Hinman there obtained his rudimentary education. Subsequently removing with his parents to Illinois, he received exceptionally good advantages, being graduated from the State Normal school at Normal, Ill. Well fitted for the position of a teacher, he subsequently followed that profession successfully for a number of years, being employed in Illinois five years, in Colorado one year, and in Ohio one year. Turning his attention then to the pursuit of agriculture, he farmed for a time in Ohio, then moved to Illinois, where he tilled the soil six years. Going thence to Nebraska, he bought a farm, which he managed for two years. Upon selling his landed possessions he came direct to Los Angeles county, locating on Pico Heights, where he remained for awhile, doing odd jobs of any kind while looking about for a permanent place of settlement. Subsequently buying twenty acres of land near Clearwater, he has since been actively and profitably employed in general ranching and chicken-raising. During his residence here he has diligently improved his property, continually adding to its value, his ranch, with its substantial buildings and good appointments, giving ample evidence of his skill and good taste as a practical farmer and rural householder.

Mr. Hinman's first marriage, which occurred in Ohio in 1871, united him with Electa Wright, who was born in Ohio, the daughter of Frank Wright, he being a native of New York. Mrs. Electa Hinman died in 1874, leaving one son, Clayton Hinman, M. D., a practicing physician in Chicago, Ill. Mr. Hinman married for his second wife, in 1878, Helen Barlow, who was born and educated in Indiana. Politically Mr. Hinman is a Prohibitionist, and religiously he is in sympathy with the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He takes great interest in local affairs, being specially interested in educational matters, and has served as school director.

WILLIAM USREY. Early in the nineteenth century Philip Usrey, Jr., the son of a hero of the two wars with England, removed from Tennessee to Indiana and became a pioneer of Sullivan county, where his son, James Kelly Usrey, was born and reared. After having followed the carpenter's trade in Indiana for some years, the latter removed to Kansas and cultivated a farm in Cherokee county, eventually removing to California and in the spring of 1887 settling at Redondo, where he now lives in retirement. His wife, Mary Ann Griffin, was born in Indiana, and died at Redondo. Descended from old Virginian stock, she was a daughter of Col. Richard Griffin, a farmer in Tennessee and a pioneer of Indiana, who won his title through service as an officer in the war of 1812.

The family of James K. and Mary Ann Usrey consisted of ten children, nine of whom attained mature years and still survive, namely: Sarah Catherine, Mrs. B. F. Arnold, of Columbus, Cherokee county, Kans.; William, of Redondo; Philip, of Redondo; Hattie, who married Elihu O. Hathaway, and lives in Redondo; Nancy, wife of Owen Gorham, of Moneta; Lillie, Mrs. Alfred B. Herring, of Redondo; Henry, manager of the wharf at Redondo; Sylvester, living in Los Angeles; and Ollie, who married George Greer and makes Los Angeles her home. The second among these children, William, was born in Sullivan county, Ind., September 3, 1857, and received a fair education in public schools. Accompanying the family to Kansas in 1872, he remained with his parents until twenty-two years of age and then took up independent farming, which he followed for a considerable period. On coming to Redondo in 1887 he was employed by the company in a survey of the town, and later had other business connections in the town until 1904. At this writing he owns mining interests at Searchlight, Nev., where he owns three-eights of the stock of the San Pedro Mining Company, also owns several claims, as well as three-eights of the town site of Leastock, Cal., situated on the Nevada line, at the junction of the Salt Lake and Santa Fé roads. At this point he has platted one hundred and sixty acres and is engaged in selling lots and making improvements.

The first marriage of Mr. Usrey took place in Kansas and united him with Miss Betsey Moore, who was born at Pleasant Gap, Mo., and died in Redondo, Cal. Five children were born of their union, namely: Effie, who married Richard Campbell, of Los Angeles; Jessie, Mrs. C. B. Horton, of Los Angeles; Lillie, wife of Milton Saxton, of San Pedro; Grace, deceased; and Frederick, who resides with his father. May 22, 1895, at Redondo, occurred the marriage of William Usrey to Miss Josephine Wilkinson, who was born in Los Angeles, the only child of Joseph and Jennie (McLarty) Wilkinson, natives respectively of Galena, Floyd county, Ind., and Iowa. The paternal grandfather, John Wilkinson, was an Indiana farmer, and Joseph Wilkinson was reared to agricultural pursuits, but chose the law for his profession, and in 1872 came to Los Angeles. Eventually he returned to the east and there died. The only child of Mr. Usrey's second marriage is a daughter, Gladys. In politics Mr. Usrey votes with the Democratic party and fraternally holds membership with the Order of Eagles.

GEORGE EASTON. Located two miles north of Perris, George Easton operates one of the best dairies in Riverside county. He has forty-five head of high-grade dairy cows, which produce an average of one pound of butter each per day, the dairy being fitted with separator and the necessary butter-making machinery to enable Mr. Easton to turn out a fancy product. His ranch consists of one hundred and thirteen acres, seventy acres being devoted to the raising of alfalfa. A large pumping plant, fitted with a forty horse power Fairbanks & Morse gas engine, is used to pump the water from two wells, which have a capacity of one hundred and fifty inches, and the machinery has sufficient power to lift it seventy feet, thus securing ample force and an adequate supply.

Utah is the native state of Mr. Easton, his birth having occurred there October 22, 1852. His parents, Alexander and Mary (McDougal) Easton, were of Scotch nativity, he being from Glasgow and she from the Highlands. They immigrated to the United States in 1846, landing at New Orleans, where they remained for five years. Their next move was to Utah, the father being a believer in the Mormon religious faith, with the exception of the polygamy doctrine, which was then advocated. In 1854 the Easton family became pioneer settlers in San Bernardino county, where Mr. Easton engaged in farming and also invested in some city property. His wife died in 1863, at the age of forty-five years, and he at the age of fifty-five, in 1872.

A subscription school in San Bernardino was the medium through which George Easton received his education, and his first employment after school days were over was as teamster between San Bernardino and the mining camps on the Mojave desert. He followed this business for about ten years, later engaged in farming, and in 1894 located in San Jacinto and established himself in the dairy business. He continued there for ten years and in 1904 removed to his present location, where he conducts the largest dairy in the valley, the enterprise and energy with which he pursues his business giving him very great success.

In December, 1873, Mr. Easton was united in marriage with Princetiea Brooks, a native of Utah, and the union has been blessed by the birth of nine children: Mary, now the wife of G. Thomas, of Perris valley; Sarah, the wife of Henry Robertson, of Rialto; Emma, the wife of John Tedford, of Perris valley; Margaret; Mabel; Pearl; Alexander; Samuel, and Raymond. Mr. Easton is a Democrat in politics and lends his enthusiastic support to the furthering of all progressive and elevating enterprises of social and civic importance. He has always been an advocate of good schools and served as a director in the district when he lived near San Jacinto.

SAMUEL R. HANCOCK. Although a nonresident of California at the present time, Samuel R. Hancock holds large property interests in Los Angeles county, where he has owned investments since 1892. He was born June 26, 1832, in New Hampshire, where he received his early education through the medium of the common schools. At the age of sixteen he began to work on a farm for an aunt, and in 1855 came to California and engaged in mining for two years, having located on the north fork of the American river. He then returned to New Hampshire and took charge of the four hundred acre farm which has been owned by his family for one hundred years. He continued to work this farm until 1898, when he retired and has since been enjoying the fruits of a successful career.

The property which he now owns in California embraces a large number of developed oil wells that pay a handsome income. His wife, who was Gratia Eames in maidenhood, is a native of New Hampshire, and to them have been born six children.

The son, John Hancock, was born in New Hampshire in 1876, receiving his education in his native state through the medium of the common and high schools. He now resides in Colegrove, Los Angeles county, Cal., and is engaged in managing his father's oil interests. He is one of the prominent men of Colegrove and has gained the highest respect and esteem of both business associates and social friends.

WILLIAM FOOTE SPRINKLE. The ancestral record of this well-known business man of Redondo Beach points to an honored family identified with the colonial settlement of Virginia. His father, W. H., who was a native of the Old Dominion, settled in Indiana at an early day and became a traveling salesman, with Greencastle as his home. When the Civil war was casting its blighting influence over the industries of both north and south, he was a stanch supporter of the Union and would have enlisted had his obligation to wife and children permitted. At the time of Quantrell's raid on Lawrence, Kans., he was living in the latter city, engaged in the pump business, and at the same time serving as a member of the state militia. When the war came to an end he removed to Topeka and built a lime kiln, but later purchased and removed to a valuable farm near Silver lake. Removing to California in 1875, he settled on a ranch near Vacaville. Four years later he transferred his attention to the mines near Yuma, Ariz., along the Colorado river, and in 1885 became interested in farming at Colton, Cal. At this writing he occupies a small ranch near Burbank, Los Angeles county. In politics he votes with the Republican party, in religious views holds membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church and fraternally affiliates with the Masonic Order. During early manhood he married Isabelle Jump, who was born in Connecticut and died in Indiana, leaving two children. She is descended from a patriot of the Revolutionary war, thereby entitling her descendants to membership in the Daughters of the Revolution. Of her children the only survivor is William F., who was born at Greencastle, Ind., February 22, 1863, and was an infant when death deprived him of a mother's loving care. When he came to California he was about twelve years of age, and afterward attended the grammar and high schools of Oakland.

Upon entering the world for himself, Mr. Sprinkle secured a livelihood by doing office work with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Bowie, Ariz., and after a year he was transferred to train service as a brakeman. From that position in 1883 he was promoted to be conductor between Tucson and Yuma and continued until 1887, when he resigned from that road. Coming to Los Angeles, he became a conductor on the Santa Fé Railroad out from this city and continued until 1897, when he resigned and took a position on the Redondo branch, holding this until August of 1905. During his entire service with both roads he had no wreck of any consequence and never received a serious injury. He dates his residence in Redondo from December 12, 1897, and shortly after his arrival he began the building of the house on Catalina avenue which he now occupies. He organized and became manager of the Redondo Milling Company, manufacturers of rolled barley feed, which is one of the most important enterprises in the town. By his marriage to Lola N. Long, who was born in Valparaiso, Ind., and reared in Los Angeles, he has one child, Emma Bessie, who is a student in the grammar school of Redondo. Mrs. Sprinkle passed away at her home June 10, 1906, aged thirty-six years. She was an active member of the Congregational Church and he contributes to the maintenance of the same, also to other worthy movements for the advancement of the town and the welfare of its residents. After coming to Redondo he was made a Mason in Redondo Lodge No. 328, F. & A. M., and also has been prominent in the Order of the Eastern Star, of which he is past worthy patron, while his wife officiated as secretary, also as lady commander of the L. O. T. M., and was also president of the P. E. O. Society at the time of her death. While connected with the road he became affiliated with the Order of Railway Conductors, having his membership in San Bernardino. Though not a partisan in his views nor an office-seeker, he stanchly favors Republican principles and may always be depended upon to support the doctrines of the party.

JOSHUA ANDREWS. One of the leading contractors and builders of Glendale, Joshua Andrews has been an important factor in promoting the building interests of Los Angeles county for many years, successfully following the trade that he learned in the east. Possessing much mechanical ingenuity, and skilled in the use of tools, he has proved himself a master workman, and since coming to the Pacific coast has been constantly employed. A native of Canada, he was born December 15, 1867, at Windsor Mills, Quebec. His father, Joseph Andrews, was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and his wife, whose maiden name was Silence Marion, was of Canadian birth. They reared a family consisting of seven sons and two daughters, and two of their sons, Llewellyn and Joshua, reside in Glendale. On his mother's side Joshua Andrews comes of New England stock, for her father was born and reared in Vermont, although he afterwards removed to Canada, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits for many years.

Having obtained a practical education in the public schools of Windsor Mills, Joshua Andrews served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, working first in his native town, and then in Clinton, Mass., where he remained two and one-half years. Remaining in the east he followed his trade successfully for three years, and then came to California. Locating in Los Angeles, he worked there as a contractor and builder, erecting many buildings in that city and its suburbs, winning for himself a fine reputation for his artistic and durable work. Coming to Glendale in August, 1904, he formed a partnership with E. K. Grant, and they have since had their full share of the large amount of building done annually in this thriving city.

In Canada Mr. Andrews married Ethel Varney, daughter of Albert and Phoebe (Scott) Varney, now residents of Glendale, their pleasant home being located at the corner of Third street and Verdugo road. In politics Mr. Andrews is a loyal supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JOHN CARNER. A man of persistent energy and good business ability, John Carner is numbered among the sturdy, energetic farmers of Los Angeles county who thoroughly understand the vocation which they follow, and he is carrying on his ranch with both profit and pleasure. It is finely located about three miles south of Inglewood, and is well improved and well equipped with the necessary machinery for its cultivation. A native of New York state, he was born January 6, 1864, of German ancestry, his father, Henry Carner, having been born in Hanover, Germany, October 18, 1836. After obtaining a good common school education in the Fatherland, in 1855 he immigrated to the new world, settling in New York state, where he worked as a farm hand for about fifteen years. Going westward with his family in 1870 he bought land in Iowa upon which he carried on farming for about four years. When his son John was about eight years old the family removed to Minnesota by wagon, the son making the trip on horseback, swimming across the river on his horse. The marriage of Henry Carner united him with Catherine Roeder, who was born April 18, 1833, in Nasan, Germany, and who immigrated to the United States in 1854. About three years later, December 10, 1857, in Albany, N. Y., occurred her marriage with Mr. Carner. Six children were born of their marriage, named in order of birth as follows; Carrie T., born in Rensselaer county, N. Y., October 14, 1858; Mary E., born in the same county January 20, 1862, and dying in the same year; John, born January 6, 1864, in Rensselaer county; Harvey, born October 10, 1865, in Iowa, and who died the following year; William, born June 17, 1873, in Minnesota; and Henry, born May 12, 1876, in Minnesota. After living on his homestead claim in Minnesota for several years the father retired from active pursuits and came to California to spend his later years, making his home on Figueroa street in Los Angeles for eighteen years, and now lives on Confidence and Hill streets. The mother is an excellent woman and a faithful member of the Nazarine Church.

Brought up on an Iowa farm, thirty miles from the nearest railway, John Carner acquired his early education in the district schools, remaining at home until attaining his majority. Starting then on his own account, he rented land, and was successfully employed as a tiller of the soil in Minnesota about four years. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1888 he continued his chosen occupation, for thirteen years renting land. Succeeding well in his labors, he purchased his present ranch, lying three miles south of Inglewood, in 1901, and in its management has met with excellent results, reaping a good annual income from his abundant harvests.

In Los Angeles county, Cal., Mr. Carner married, October 1, 1890, Carrie M. Anderson, a daughter of Frank E. Anderson, who was born October 29, 1852, of English descent. He served in the Civil war as sergeant in the barracks. In Dodge City, Kans., in 1869, he was united in marriage with Mary A. Holland, who was born July 21, 1851, the daughter of Benjamin and Mary Elizabeth (Davis) Holland. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, as follows: Carrie M., born August 7, 1871, in Lawrence, Kans.; Lydia A., March 14, 1874, in Mississippi; Elma, September 24, 1878, in Kansas; Alfred Gordon, October 8, 1879, and who died during the same year; Oria Bell, born December 21, 1881, in Kansas; Charlie, September 10, 1884, in Kansas; and Frank, Jr., born in the same state September 27, 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson traveled quite extensively prior to coming to California in 1889, and are now making their home in Santa Ana, Orange county.

Benjamin Holland was married in Maryland April 20, 1840, to Sarah Grace Pitts, who died in 1848, having become the mother of four children, Martha E., Julia M., John B. and Hilry P. His marriage in 1850 united him with Mary Elizabeth Davis, of Maryland, and to them were born the following children: Mary A., born in Maryland July 21, 1851; Moses, born in the same state January 20, 1854; Maggie, also born in Maryland, December 15, 1856, and who died at the age of thirty-seven; Sophia, born in Iowa July 18, 1859; Amanda, who was also born in Iowa, and died when two years of age; and Elizabeth, born in Iowa February 28, 1864. When their first child was five years old Mr. and Mrs. Holland removed to Iowa, making their home in that state for fourteen years, when they again took up the westward march, going from there by wagon to Kansas. Seven years later, in 1877, the family removed to Los Angeles, Cal. In the following year Carrie M. Anderson came to California in company with an aunt and made her home with her grandparents, Benjamin and Mary E. Holland, remaining with them until her marriage with John Carner October 1, 1890. February 26, 1902, the grandmother died, leaving the grandfather alone, save for his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, by all of whom he is beloved and revered. For one of his age, having been born July 9, 1817, he is remarkably well preserved, is hale and hearty and writes a very legible hand. Mr. and Mrs. Holland were members of the Congregational Church, and Mr. and Mrs. Anderson belong to the Methodist Church. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Carner three children have been born: Irvin W. was born August 6, 1892, and was baptized in Los Angeles November 13, 1892, by W. B. Stradley, the minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Clarence H. was born January 11, 1896, and was baptized April 19, 1896, in the Harmony school house in Los Angeles by A. Hardie. Walter E. was born February 9, 1900, and was baptized September 16 of the same year in Harmony Methodist Episcopal Church by A. Hardie. Politically Mr. Carner is a steadfast supporter of the principles of the Republican party, but has never been an aspirant for official honors.

JOSIAH D. BRUBAKER. The largest and most successful poultry raiser in Hemet is J. D. Brubaker, who has been engaged in the business since 1903 and finds it very profitable. In April, 1858, he was born in Salem, Va., the son of John and Mary (Neff) Brubaker, both natives of Virginia. The father, who was a farmer, located in Girard, Ill., in 1864, his death occurring at that place in October, 1905, he having attained the age of seventy-two years. His wife is still living in Girard. J. D. Brubaker received his early education in the common schools of Illinois, and when his studies were completed engaged in agricultural pursuits there until 1888, when he went to Nebraska and followed the profession of school teaching near Sidney the ensuing ten years. He then decided to come to California and take advantage of the opportunities which this country holds for the energetic man in all lines, and in 1898 he located at Hemet, where he soon purchased a residence on Florida avenue and has been living there ever since. He improved the ranch and engaged in raising crops until 1903, when he entered the poultry business on a large scale and now owns eight hundred birds, finding two of his largest customers for eggs in the Idyllwild and Hemet hotels. In addition to the management of his ranch Mr. Brubaker also works at the carpenter's trade and thus adds materially to his yearly income.

In 1879, in Illinois, J. D. Brubaker was united in marriage with Miss Susan, daughter of Isaac M. Gibbel, who was an early pioneer in California. This union has been blessed by the birth of six children, namely: Fannie May; Lawrence G.; Owen G., in the hardware business in Hemet; Viola; Darus; and Glenn. Mr. Brubaker is an active member and liberal supporter of the German Baptist Church and is interested in every enterprise tending to upbuild and elevate the community in which he resides. Politically he affiliates with the Republican party and is well informed on all social and civic matters of interest to the public.

CAPT. FRANK B. CLARK. Though not classed among the early settlers of the United States the Clark family has been identified with our country for the greater portion of a century and its members have contributed their quota toward the development of the resources of the new world. The first to settle in America was Francis Clark, who was born in England July 22, 1815, and in early youth learned the trade of leather manufacturer in his native land. On starting out in the world to earn his livelihood he came to the United States about 1835 and followed his trade in Connecticut for a brief period, but as early as 1844 he embarked in business for himself, purchasing a tannery at Brooklyn, Windham county, Conn., which he operated successfully throughout the remainder of his life. After becoming a citizen of the United States he voted the Whig ticket and upon the disintegration of that party he affiliated with the Republicans. At the time of his death, November 22, 1875, he was sixty years of age. On coming to this country he was single, but shortly afterward he met and married Sarah M. Heath, who was born in New London county, Conn., July 30, 1822, and died February 3, 1905. Through her mother she was descended from the Chapman family, colonial settlers of New England; her father was a native of that region and served in the war of 1812, afterward remaining in the east until his death.

Among the children of Francis and Sarah M. Clark there was a son, Frank B., born in New London county, Conn., February 4, 1843, but reared in Brooklyn, Windham county, from the age of one year. In addition to grammar-school advantages he attended an academy in his home town. At the opening of the Civil war his sympathies were at once strongly enlisted on the side of the Union, and August 6, 1862, he enlisted as a private in Company K, Twenty-first Connecticut Infantry, and afterward served for three years mainly in Virginia and North Carolina. Under General Burnside he took part in the first engagement of Fredericksburg. Later he was at Suffolk and Portsmouth in 1863, then on the peninsula, and from Washington, D. C., in 1864 to Bermuda Hundred, later at Drury's Bluff, and June 2 to 14, 1864, under Grant at Cold Harbor. After a long siege at Petersburg he was present at the taking of the Heights and about that time was promoted to be first lieutenant of his company. Later he was sent with his regiment to reinforce Sherman in North Carolina, going with the command that took Fort Fisher, and was with Sherman at the battle of Bentonville, N. C., after which he continued with Sherman until the downfall of the Confederacy. Shortly after his enlistment he was made acting hospital steward of the brigade and about a year before the close of the war he was promoted to be captain of his company, with a recommendation for promotion to brevet-major. After a service of four years and four months he was honorably discharged at Washington, D. C., December 5, 1866. During the long period of his service he was never wounded nor imprisoned, yet the hardships and exposures had undermined his health and he returned to his home an invalid. After a vain attempt to carry on a college course in a Baptist school in Connecticut, he was obliged to relinquish his studies and at once went to the mountains of Wyoming in the hope of being benefited by the change of climate.

Driving through from Laramie, Wyo., Captain Clark landed at Los Angeles February 23, 1869. Not far from the city he purchased a tract of eighty acres which he yet owns. The land was secured from settlers and from two holders of grants from the government. After a year in the mines in 1870 he returned to Los Angeles county and bought one hundred and sixty acres of unfenced and unimproved land. The only attempt made at improving the place had been the erection of an adobe house and when he came here only the walls of this primitive structure remained. As the years passed by he not only improved this property, but also bought and rented land to the extent of fifteen hundred acres, all of which was devoted to farm products. However, the building of the railroads and the incoming of settlers rendered the land too valuable for general farming and he then turned his attention to the development of his real estate interests. He now owns a store building in Hyde Park, as well as one hundred and sixty-five lots. Altogether he owns about three hundred acres in this vicinity, as well as an attractive modern residence; also one hundred acres in Riverside county, Cal.; three hundred and twenty acres of Oregon timber lands; and the old homestead in Brooklyn, Conn., which he purchased from the other heirs at the settlement of the estate.

The marriage of Captain Clark took place July 16, 1878, and united him with Miss Lizzie S. Leach, who was born at Pittsford, Rutland county, Vt., September 25, 1852, and came from the east to California about 1872. The only son of their marriage, Clarence, is a resident of northern California. Their only daughter, Cora H., a young girl of unusual promise, died February 9, 1897, at the age of fifteen years, and in memory of her beautiful life the parents erected the Memorial Congregational Church of Hyde Park. In the work of this church both are active, Captain Clark officiating as a deacon and also as the leader of the Bible class. As might be expected of a war veteran with a long and honorable record, he takes a deep interest in the Grand Army of the Republic, and is now identified with Stanton Post No. 55, in Los Angeles. Among other organizations in which he holds membership are the Society of California Pioneers and the Loyal Legion. Ever since attaining his majority he has given his vote and influence toward the Republican party in national affairs, but in local matters believes that the character and intelligence of the candidate are of greater importance than his opinions as to the tariff, etc. While always willing to help such of his friends as may be candidates, he never seeks office for himself and at no time in his life would he consent to take upon himself the burden of official responsibilities; yet he is public-spirited and progressive, interested in everything making toward the upbuilding of his community, a generous contributor to worthy movements, a man of temperance principles, and in every respect a worthy citizen whose presence has been most helpful to the permanent progress of his community.

LOUIS FERDINAND ROUSSEY. The development of the resources of Ventura county thereby bringing enhanced values to the lands and increased profits from the cultivation of the same, may be attributed to the energetic efforts and wise judgment of men intimately associated with the history of this part of the state. All citizens have benefited by the sagacity of the upbuilders of the county and all are a unit in appreciation of the prosperity of the present era. In the number of those who have been benefited financially by the development of the rich lands of this section, mention belongs to Louis Ferdinand Roussey, who came here in the fall of 1882 and has since engaged in agricultural pursuits with excellent success.

The Roussey family descends from French ancestry and was founded in America by John B. Roussey, who in young manhood came from France to Pennsylvania and there engaged in farming and lumbering, later following kindred pursuits in Kansas, where he improved large tracts of raw land. During 1885 he spent six months in California and in 1897 he again came to the coast, settling in Santa Paula, where he remained until death. His widow, now residing in Oxnard, bore the maiden name of Henrietta Petit and was born in France. Their ten children are still living, the third of these being Louis Ferdinand, who was born in Clearfield county, Pa., in 1862, and about 1866 was taken to Kansas by his parents. For a short time he lived in Douglas county, but soon removed with the family to Franklin county, Kans., settling on raw land near Wellsville. There he aided in the arduous task of improving a farm and during the leisure hours on the farm he was sent to the neighboring schools.

On coming to California in 1882 Mr. Roussey found that the leading crops in Ventura county were wheat and barley. Securing employment on ranches, he worked for different parties for some years. During 1885 he visited in Kansas for a few months. On his return to the west he resumed agricultural pursuits and later bought sixty-four acres one-half mile south of the present site of Oxnard, for which in 1894 he paid $125 per acre. A part of this tract is now included in the town site. Immediately he began to make improvements, sinking an artesian well, erecting a house and barn, and making such other changes as would facilitate the carrying forward of the beet and bean industry. During 1900 he sold the property to Mr. Milligan for $265 per acre. During 1895 he had made a second trip back to Kansas, and in 1900 he went there for the third time, later going east as far as Chicago, but he saw no locality that impressed him so favorably as California. Since his last trip east he has acquired other property and now owns one hundred acres three miles southeast of Oxnard, which he bought for $90 per acre, and on which he engages in raising beans and beets. In addition, he owns a tract of four hundred and thirty acres of grain land on the Simi, which he rents to a tenant, and he also owns two and one-half acres on the Savier road within the city limits of Oxnard, as well as a residence lot on the corner of Second and C streets, all of these various and valuable possessions representing the results of his energy and sagacity. In national politics he votes the Republican ticket, while locally he supports those men whom he deems best qualified to preserve the integrity of the body politic and promote the welfare of the citizens. The Citizens' Club numbers him among its active members and stanch supporters, while fraternally he holds membership with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks at Santa Barbara.

LEWIS A. PERCE, M. D. A place of importance is accorded Dr. Lewis A. Perce among the physicians of Long Beach, Los Angeles county, where he has been an esteemed resident for nine years, having located in this city upon his arrival in California in 1898. He is a native son of Illinois, his birth having occurred in Springfield March 8, 1854. His parents, William and Roxanna (Vittum) Perce, were natives respectively of Pickaway and Huron counties, Ohio, the father a descendant of French Huguenot stock and the mother of Scotch ancestry. William Perce became a pioneer of Sangamon county, Ill., in 1840, crossing the country from Ohio to the Prairie state by means of ox-teams. He engaged in the hardware and grocery business in Sangamon county and in the passing years built up a large custom which brought him satisfactory financial returns. In addition to his success in business he became prominent in Republican politics in the county and served acceptably as sheriff, and was also active in the convention that nominated Lincoln for the presidency. There is now in the possession of his son, Lewis A. Perce, a cane which was presented to him by Mr. Lincoln, who was his lifelong friend. Upon the breaking out of the Civil war Mr. Perce organized Company B, of the Seventieth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and served as its captain for twenty months, when he was discharged on account of disability. Returning to his home in Illinois he remained a resident of that state until 1875, in which year he removed to Russell, Kans., and there followed the grocery business until his death. His wife was born in Huron county, Ohio, and early in life removed to Columbus, where her father owned an old water mill on the Scioto river.

Lewis A. Perce was reared to young manhood in his native state and in the public schools of Springfield received his preliminary education, also attending commercial college in that place. Deciding to take up the profession of medicine for his lifework, he became a student in the Eclectic Medical Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1873, and after a thorough course of lectures returned home, which in the meantime was changed from Springfield to Russell, Kans., where he engaged in the practice of his profession. Continuing his studies he was graduated in 1882, after which he located in Forest, Ohio, for a time and later in Bucyrus, same state, and began the practice of his profession, which continued until 1898. In the meantime he had married in Russell, Kans., Sarah A. B. Miles, whose father (a second cousin of General Miles), with his five sons, served in the Union army during the Civil war.

Although having attained a marked degree of success in Ohio, where he had been located for sixteen years, Dr. Perce became interested in the future of Southern California, and accordingly, in 1898, he came to the Pacific coast, and after one month spent in Pasadena, located permanently in Long Beach. He began his practice of medicine with Dr. O. C. Welbourn, but after eight months in the partnership he purchased the entire interest and has since continued alone. He engages in a general practice, which has grown to lucrative proportions, but makes a specialty of eye, ear, nose and throat diseases, using the X-Ray to a large extent in his work. Besides attending to his personal practice he has taken a lively interest in all lines pertaining to his profession, contributing frequently to medical journals and becoming prominently known throughout the state.

In 1901 Dr. Perce was elected a member of the Board of Medical Examiners of the State of California and three years later was elected president, filling the position with efficiency. In 1905 he was made president of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce, which office he fills at the present time. He is examining physician for a number of old-line insurance companies, as well as fraternal societies, and is assistant surgeon of the Uniformed Rank of the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a member. He is also associated with the Masonic Lodge of Long Beach and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in social circles is prominent, being a member of the local Auto Club and others, in which he takes a lively interest. In business he is a stockholder in the Long Beach National Bank and the Citizens Savings Bank of the same place, and has unbounded confidence in the future of the city he has made his home, investing his means liberally in real estate. In politics he has always been a party wheel horse, taking a lively interest in the advancement of Republican principles, which he heartily endorses. While a resident of Ohio he stumped the state with the late Senator Hanna and President McKinley, giving time and means liberally in the support of his friends for public office, although personally the manifold duties and interests of his profession have so engrossed his attention that he has not cared for recognition along these lines.

MRS. MARTHA J. HOBBS. One of the oldest residents of San Bernardino county is Mrs. Martha J. Hobbs, who came here in 1869 on one of the first overland trains. The Cline family, of which she is a member, was among the first that settled in New York even before the United States was an independent nation, her grandfather, John Cline, having been born in New York, served in the war of 1812, and at the time of his death had attained the remarkable age of one hundred and four years. Her father was born in Rochester, N. Y., where he followed the carpenter's trade, later removing to Lenox, Ohio, from there to Henderson county, Ill., and finally in 1850 crossing the plains with a four-horse outfit, the trip consuming six months. For two years he was interested in mining in Placer county, then came to Temecula and engaged in the cattle business with a Mr. Moody, continuing the partnership for sixteen years. They had succeeded in accumulating a very large number of cattle scattered over a wide range of country, and when they decided to divide the herds and continue business independently, with a generous disregard of a possible discrepancy in numbers which might occur, they rounded up the cattle in one large bunch and directed two Mexicans to ride through the herd as near the center as possible and each man took a half as thus divided. That the method was an entirely satisfactory one to both parties was proven by the fact that Mr. Cline and Mr. Moody remained friends ever afterwards.

Taking his share of the cattle Mr. Cline removed them to Ft. Mojave and placed them on the range, but the Indians molested them so frequently and stole so many that he decided to remove to Cucamonga, where he kept them until 1872. Taking them again to Mojave he kept them there for several years, after which he sold the entire herd and spent the remainder of his life on his ranch at Rincon. His death occurred June 8, 1892, at the advanced age of ninety-two years. He was a justice of the peace in Illinois and later at Temecula, and his political affiliations were with the Republican party. His wife was Elizabeth Pratt, a native of New York, and the daughter of Jacob Pratt. Mrs. Cline's death occurred December 30, 1841, in Illinois, two of her three children being still alive.

The birth of Martha J. Cline occurred in New York, and when she was one year old she was taken by her parents to Ohio, and she was five years old at the time of the removal to Henderson county, Ill., where she attended a subscription school. In 1853, in Oquawka, that county, she was united in marriage with Thomas Giles, a German by birth, who had made his home in Illinois from an early age. By trade he was an upholsterer, a business which he followed for many years. During the Civil war he joined an Illinois regiment, acting as bodyguard to General McClellan; after the close of the war he resumed civil life in Illinois and there died. Two children were born of that union, namely: Sophia R., who married A. A. Dexter, became the mother of eleven children, and now has seven grandchildren; and William, a resident of Chicago.

In 1869 Mrs. Giles came to California with her father and became a resident of Rincon. In San Bernardino December 30, 1870, she was married to William A. Hobbs, who was born in North Carolina April 2, 1838, and came to California via Panama in 1853. For many years he engaged in mining and later teamed between Prescott, Ariz., and Los Angeles, and it was while thus employed that he became acquainted with the Cline family. For eleven years Mr. Hobbs was engaged in farming at Rincon, and in January, 1881, removed to San Bernardino, bought the hotel site, a year later built the Hobbs house and continued to conduct it until 1901, when it was turned over to Mrs. Hobbs' grand daughter, Mrs. W. C. Foster, who in 1906 put it into the hands of her niece, Mrs. Emma Hewes, who is now the proprietor. Mr. Hobbs' death occurred November 2, 1904, he being at that time seventy-six years and seven months of age. Fraternally he was a Mason, and politically affiliated with the Democratic party. Mrs. Hobbs is an extensive property owner, and besides the three residences which she owns (two adjoining the Hobbs house and one on F street in San Bernardino), she has a house and lot in Santa Monica. She is an active member of the Methodist Church, a woman of many fine personal qualities and possesses unusual business ability.

EDWARD WASHINGTON PECK. Although filling the position of foreman of Taylor Brothers' brick yards in San Bernardino, Edward Washington Peck is a resident of Pasadena, which city has been his home for the past fifteen years. His grandfather, Hon. Washington Peck, a native of New York, was a pioneer settler in the then territory of Washington and was a man well known all over the northwestern part of the United States. He made four trips across the plains with ox teams and was thoroughly familiar with the mountainous country over which he did so much traveling and frequently acted as guide to others less well acquainted with the roads. For eight years he served as a guide to the United States troops in Arizona and was twice sent as a delegate to congress from the territory of Washington. He was at one time interested in mining operations near Prescott, Ariz., and helped to develop the old Peck mine near that point. In Washington he was engaged in extensive agricultural pursuits near Sedalia, and was living in that state at the time of his death.

David Peck, the father of Edward Washington, was born in New York state and crossed the plains to San Francisco in 1849. As a cattle dealer he made several trips east in the course of his business operations, spending a little over one year in Canada. In 1861 he became a pioneer farmer in Page county, Iowa, and lived in that state forty-six years. He was a man of considerable influence and prominence in that county and was recognized as the arbiter of all neighborhood disputes, the justice of his decisions giving general and mutual satisfaction to all interested parties. He was popularly known all over the country as Uncle David Peck and his death, at the age of seventy-two years, removed a man who was universally loved and respected. Religiously he was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically he advocated the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. His wife was Eliza, daughter of Francis Carey, her father having established himself as a merchant in London, Canada, where his death occurred. Mrs. Peck died in Iowa.

There were six children in the family of which Edward Washington Peck was a member, four of whom are still living. He was born February 23, 1858, in London, Canada, but was reared on the farm in Iowa. He received a superior education, first in the district schools of Page county, then at the Keokuk high school, and finally took a course at Shenandoah College. He remained under the parental roof until twenty-two years of age, then went to Ness county, Kans., and located on a homestead, pre-emption and tree claim eleven miles north of Ness City, upon which he proved up in due time, being meanwhile engaged in the stock business. In 1892, having endorsed paper to a large amount for a friend, he was obliged to make the endorsement good and in doing so found it necessary to dispose of all of his stock and farm property with the exception of the land which at that time was worth almost nothing. He recently sold this land, which is now valued at $10 per acre. After settling his financial obligations Mr. Peck came to Pasadena and for a time drove teams for Simon Brothers, until he secured the position of foreman of the Pasadena brick yards. He worked in this capacity for some time, later was made collector for the firm in Los Angeles and in 1905 resigned this position to accept his present place as foreman in Taylor Brothers' brick yard at San Bernardino. He is the owner of several pieces of valuable real estate in Pasadena, and has a fine residence on South Euclid avenue in that city. He also has an interest in the Colorado River Gold and Copper Mining Company, having been president of the company until coming to San Bernardino, and operates quartz mines near Parker, which are making a fine showing.

The marriage of Mr. Peck occurred at Hamburg, Iowa, and united him with Miss Fannie Simons, who was born there. They are the parents of four children: Walter, an electrician for the Pacific Electric Railway; Lawrence, a plumber; Carey, who lives at Pasadena; and Marie. Mrs. Peck is a member of the Baptist Church, which is liberally supported by the family. Fraternally Mr. Peck affiliates with the Woodmen of the World, and politically believes in the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He is a man of pleasing address, of no mean business ability and a public-spirited citizen who is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

ROBERT NELSON. The life which this narrative sketches began in Kent county, England, near the city of London and closed in Sunderland, England. Though born and deceased in Great Britain, Mr. Nelson spent the active years of his life in the United States and regarded himself as a true American, being ever loyal and patriotic to his adopted country. The son of a sea captain, he did not have any inclination toward his father's occupation, but served an apprenticeship of seven years to the trade of an upholsterer and at the expiration of his time began in the furniture and upholstering business for himself at Darlington, England. While there he married Miss Margaret Weatherall, a native of that city. In 1865, accompanied by his wife and one son, he crossed the ocean to the United States and settled at Elmira, N. Y. For a period of about twenty years he carried on an upholstering establishment in that city and also filled orders for cabinet-work, meanwhile gaining a reputation for reliable workmanship and sagacious business methods. Constant attention to details connected with the business eventually undermined his health and, hoping that a change of climate might prove beneficial, he returned to England to visit among the scenes familiar to his boyhood and early manhood. However, the change did not bring the favorable results hoped for, and he died while still in that country.

After having sold out the business which her husband had conducted for many years, Mrs. Margaret Nelson removed to Missouri and bought a tract of eighty acres in Douglas county, in addition to which she took up a homestead of one hundred and twenty acres. In the development of the land she had the capable assistance of her sons, Joseph and Arthur, the only survivors of her eight children. At the death of her husband these two boys were fifteen and seven years of age respectively. Though mere lads, they proved themselves efficient assistants to their mother, and the three worked together in harmony and with success. In 1894 Mrs. Nelson came to California in the interest of her health. The climate and surroundings proved so attractive that she decided to remove permanently to the coast, and thereupon in 1896 disposed of her property in Missouri, came to California, and settled at Hyde Park, where now she makes her home, having still with her the younger son, while the elder, who is married, lives near by in the same town. The sons own a number of lots in Hyde Park and operate the Baldwin ranch of several hundred acres, a portion of which is under cultivation to grain, while the remainder of the land is under alfalfa. In political faith they follow the example of their father, who became a Republican upon taking up the duties of American citizenship. Like him, too, they are energetic, capable and persevering, and fully merit abundant success. The Presbyterian denomination represents the religious faith of the family, and Mr. Nelson until death remained a faithful member of that church, with which his widow continues to be identified.

JESSE H. CASE. The lineage of the Case family is traced to Germany, whence many years ago one of the name came to the new world and settled in Pennsylvania. A son of the first immigrant removed to Ohio while that region was yet in a condition of primeval wildness. Gasham C., grandson of the original immigrant, was born in Hamilton county, Ohio, and learned the cooper's trade in boyhood. After his removal to Illinois in 1835 he followed his trade at Quincy, Adams county, and later was similarly employed in Brown county, that state, but in 1847 he removed to Iowa and the following year settled in Council Bluffs. When emigration began to turn toward the unknown west he disposed of his holdings in Iowa and in the spring of 1849 started across the plains with ox-teams. Arriving without accident at Salt Lake City he secured employment there and established a temporary home, but some years later he proceeded to California and June 1, 1854, he arrived at San Bernardino with his wife and seven children. In addition to following the occupation of a freighter he carried on a large business as a horse doctor. Though he was not a graduate veterinary he possessed a thorough knowledge of diseases affecting the horse and was remarkably successful in restoring sick animals to health. As the years passed by he accumulated a competency and became one of the well-to-do men of his region, where he was known for his remarkable generosity of disposition and kindness of heart. At the time of his death he had reached the age of eighty years, six months and four days.

The marriage of G. C. Case united him with Susan C. Fitchett, who was born in Maryland and died in Shasta county, Cal. Nine children were born of their union, seven of whom yet survive, the second in order of birth being James Hillman Case, who was born in Brown county, Ill., January 31, 1840, and came to California with the family at the age of fourteen years. For two months he was a pupil in a school held in a log building containing only a crude equipment for educational work. At an early age he began to drive teams for his father and in the course of his work frequently camped out at night with the snow for a blanket. In 1856 he enlisted under Capt. Robert Clifts in the First Light Dragoons of First Brigade, First Division of California Militia, and made a trip to Utah with the regiment. During December of 1861 he enlisted in Company E, First California Cavalry, and served with his regiment in Indian wars in California, Arizona and New Mexico and as far away as Texas, being honorably discharged at Santa Fe December 20, 1864. During the battle of Cook's Cañon he was one of nine cavalrymen who successfully resisted sixty-two Indians, of whom they killed eighteen, with a loss in their own little company of only one killed and two wounded. On being discharged he traveled from Fort Craig down the Rio Grande river to Las Cruces, thence across the country to Tucson, and down the Gila river to Fort Yuma, thence across the desert to Warner's ranch, arriving at San Bernardino February 7, 1865, more than three years after he had left home for service in the Civil war.

Not long after his return from the army James H. Case established domestic ties. His marriage, June 9, 1865, united him with Mary Elizabeth Folks, who was born in Madrid county, Mo., January 16, 1845, but from the age of six years made her home in San Bernardino. Out of a family of ten children she and one other alone survive. Her father, Jesse Folks, was born in Worcester county, Md., in 1808, and followed farming and carpentering. Though deprived of educational advantages he became a scholarly man, the possessor of a broad fund of general information which made him an interesting conversationalist and cultured companion. During 1848, with his wife and six children, he traveled in a wagon drawn by oxen across the plains as far as Salt Lake City, and in 1851 came on to San Bernardino. Soon after his arrival he built a small house on what is now First and D streets. Securing work as a carpenter, he erected some of the first houses in the town, and also engaged in farming, teaming and mining. After a useful and honorable life he passed away at his home aged eighty-three years. His wife, Mary Ann, was born in Maryland in 1815 and died at San Bernardino when eighty-two years of age; she was a daughter of William Livingston, a Revolutionary soldier and a life-long resident of Maryland.

After having completed her education in local schools Miss Folks engaged in teaching and for a time had a small school at her father's home, but later taught on E street, each pupil paying a small sum as tuition. As far as can be ascertained, it is believed that she is the oldest teacher now living in San Bernardino county. A woman of refinement and culture, she has always numbered among her friends the most intellectual people of the town, and in such circles her rare charms of mind have won lasting admiration. In her home, where her labors have chiefly centered, she has been a devoted wife and self-sacrificing mother, and now in life's afternoon she has the happiness of seeing her children well-established in San Bernardino, occupying high positions in social circles. The eldest child, Jesse H., whose name introduces this article, is custodian of the San Bernardino jail. The second child, Lelia, died at nine months of age. The others reside in San Bernardino, namely: Susan Stella, Mrs. George Heap; Florence, Mrs. John B. Smithson, Jr.; Mary Serena, Mrs. Thomas A. Smithson, and Stephen M.

By trading a small riding mule with saddle and bridle for four acres of land in 1866 James H. Case became a property-owner in San Bernardino. On the land he erected a small house which was destroyed by fire in 1893. Later he built his present residence on the same site. Until 1896 he engaged in freighting and the transfer business and ran the 'bus line between this town and Colton. Meanwhile he acquired twelve acres on I and Ninth streets, but some of this he sold and some he gave to his children, so that now now he retains only one acre. The San Bernardino County Pioneer Society of California numbers him among its leading members and in addition he holds membership with Cornman Post No. 57, G. A. R., in his home city, while politically he always has been stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party.

The oldest member of the family is the gentleman whose name introduces this sketch and who claims San Bernardino as his native city, his birth having occurred here December 29, 1866. At the age of fourteen years he began to haul freight from Colton to San Bernardino and soon became the trusted assistant of his father, who was then in ill health. After having continued in the freighting business for fourteen years, in January of 1895 he received from Sheriff Holcomb the appointment of deputy county sheriff and jailer. On a change in the administration and the election of a Democratic sheriff, he gave up his position and went to Los Angeles, where for two years he was in charge of the retail trade of the Globe flouring mills. In January, 1903, Sheriff Ralphs tendered him the appointment of deputy sheriff and jailer, and on the completion of the new jail (as fine a building of the kind as the state can boast) he became its custodian in 1904, since which time he has devoted all of his time to his duties as jailer. Politically he gives stanch support to Republican principles and is a local worker in the interests of the party. Socially he is a prominent member of San Bernardino Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West, and maintains a deep interest in the welfare of the organization. His marriage was solemnized in San Bernardino June 14, 1906, and united him with Mrs. Dora (Cram) Barnes, who was born in Kansas and came to California with her father, Henry V. Cram, of Los Angeles. By virtue of her qualifications as a graduate trained nurse and her fine mental endowments, she is admirably adapted to fill the position of matron of the institution, in which capacity she now gives efficient service.

WILLIAM E. TROSTLE. Although a recent acquisition to the citizenship of Southern California, William E. Trostle has already demonstrated qualities of mind and heart which have won him a place of distinction among his fellowmen. He has lived in the state about three years, having removed from Illinois to take up his life among the pleasant surroundings of the Pacific coast country, and came at once to the vicinity of San Gabriel, where he purchased a ranch of nineteen acres, all of which is devoted to the cultivation of oranges. Born in State Center, Iowa, June 7, 1868, Mr. Trostle is a son of J. W. and Sarah (Van Orsdel) Trostle, both natives of Adams county, Pa. The father was a minister throughout his active life, combining with this agricultural pursuits. He came to California in 1894 and purchased an orange orchard, and has since accepted the position of assistant pastor in Pasadena, where he is now living at the age of seventy-five years.

William E. Trostle received his preliminary education in the public schools in Iowa, and graduated from the high school at Kingsley. He then became a student in Mt. Morris College, in Illinois, and after a three years' course in the theological department graduated therefrom, and began his duties as a minister in the German Baptist Brethren, or better known as the Dunkard Church. He filled the pulpit at Pine Creek, in Polo, Ill., and also in Kingsley, Iowa, having been located in Illinois just prior to his emigration to the Pacific coast. Upon his arrival in the state he at once located near San Gabriel and purchased his present ranch, sixteen acres being in full bearing and three acres in young trees. He has built a fine ten-room house, and put other valuable improvements on the place, and it is his intention to erect a fine automobile barn. Mr. Trostle has a charge at Pasadena, holds the bishopric of South Los Angeles in his church, and is presiding elder over the First Brethren Church of Long Beach.

In 1895 Mr. Trostle was united in marriage with Miss Katie Rowland, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Benjamin Rowland, who died in that state, while her mother is still living and making her home with Mr. and Mrs. Trostle. In his political views Mr. Trostle prefers to reserve the right to cast his ballot for the man he considers best qualified for official position. He takes an interest in all progressive movements and lends his aid heartily to the advancement of the general welfare.

PIERRE DELPY. Ranking among the most intelligent, energetic and progressive agriculturists of San Diego county is Pierre Delpy, of Vista, who is actively employed in general agriculture in Delpy valley, which was named in remembrance of his uncle, Bernard Delpy, a pioneer settler. For upwards of thirty years he has lived in this vicinity, and during the time has been associated with the growth and upbuilding of this part of the county, and by the exercise of his native industry and frugality has accumulated a fair share of this world's goods. A son of Bernard and Anna Delpy, lifelong residents of France, he was born, May 19, 1856, in that country, and there spent his boyhood days, receiving limited educational advantages.

In 1874, thinking to improve his chances for acquiring a fortune, Pierre Delpy came with the uncle previously mentioned, Bernard Delpy, to the United States, landing in New York City, and from there coming directly to California. The uncle took up a government claim in San Diego county, near Vista, and in the valley now bearing his name improved a ranch, on which he lived and labored until his death, at the age of fifty-five years, at one time being the owner of three hundred and twenty acres of finely improved land. Having a natural aptitude for agricultural pursuits, Pierre Delpy subsequently purchased a part of the estate which his uncle had improved, and began farming on his own account. Toiling vigorously, he met with good results, and as he accumulated money wisely invested it in adjoining land, having now in his home ranch four hundred and forty acres of rich and valuable land, on which he successfully pursues his favorite occupation. He is extensively and profitably engaged in grain and stock raising, and also has vineyards and orchards, and as a fruit grower is meeting with splendid success, his vines and trees yielding bountiful crops each season. He also manufactures wine.

In 1888 Mr. Delpy married Marie Ravauter, a native of sunny France, and they have five children, namely, Nellie, Emma, Emil, Ernest and Clara. Politically Mr. Delpy is a stanch adherent of the Republican party, but has never been an aspirant for official favors. In religion he and his family are Catholics, and attendants of the San Luis Rey Mission.

MRS. PAULINE MARY SCHOLLER. A woman of strong personality, active, energetic and possessing keen perceptive faculties, Mrs. Scholler is well known in the mercantile life of Los Angeles county, and now, with her husband, is conducting a general store in East San Pedro. A daughter of the late Daniel Sorensen, she was born in Los Nietos, Los Angeles county, near Whittier, of Danish ancestry on the paternal side, and coming of thrifty German stock on the maternal side of the house.

A native of Copenhagen, Denmark, Daniel Sorensen began life as a sailor, following the sea from boyhood. While yet a young man he came around Cape Horn to America, and for awhile after his arrival in California was employed in mining. Subsequently, with his brothers, Charles and Anton, he came to Southern California, locating near Whittier, where he bought land and for a few years was engaged in raising grapes, the ranches belonging to himself and brothers being just opposite the reform school grounds. He also set out walnut groves, and for a time devoted himself to raising nuts, a profitable industry. He was a man of great enterprise, practical and capable, and was one of the first to use the water from the river and mountain streams as a motor power. He developed the water power for the South Riverside Light and Water Company and for R. B. Taylor, of Corona. Before completing his work for the latter, Mr. Sorensen, while prospecting in Death Valley, where he owned land, lost his way and perished in the desert, his death occurring in August, 1893, at the age of sixty-three years. Mr. Sorensen married Sebina Roache, who was born in Boston, Mass., of German parents, and is now a resident of Los Angeles, Cal., her home being on South Figueroa street. Of the five sons and two daughters that she bore her husband all are living with the exception of one son, Mrs. Pauline Mary Scholler being the oldest child.

Brought up in Anaheim, Orange county, Pauline Mary Sorensen received a practical education in the public schools. In 1887 she married Frank Armbruster, who was born in St. Paul, Minn. Learning the trade of a carpenter and builder in his native city, Mr. Armbruster came to California when young. He subsequently turned his attention to mining pursuits, before many years becoming an expert amalgamator. Removing with his family to Cripple Creek, Colo., in 1896, Mr. Armbruster was there employed in mining until his death, in 1897. Mrs. Armbruster soon after started in business for herself, remaining in Cripple Creek as a horticulturist for about five years after her husband's death. Returning to California in 1902, she located in East San Pedro and very soon afterward embarked in the mercantile business. Meeting with such encouraging success in her venture she opened a general store at the Salt Lake depot, which she conducted until being burned out. She was married April 9, 1906, to E. T. Scholler, who has been a resident of San Pedro since 1903. Mrs. Scholler has two children by her first marriage, namely: Eva Marie and Robert.

GAIL E. MOON. As a resident representative of the Bayside Land Company, which has its headquarters in Los Angeles, Gail E. Moon, of Long Beach, is one of the most prominent real estate men in this city. He was born March 18, 1877, in Otisco, Ionia county, Mich., where his grandfather, James Moon, settled in an early day, cleared land for civilization and lived upon it during the remainder of his lifetime. His parents, A. L. and Anna May (Gardner) Moon, were both natives of Michigan, the former born in Otisco, and the latter of Lowell, where her father, James Gardner (who was born in London, England, and later settled in Canada) finally located permanently. A. L. Moon was principal of schools for several years, subsequently engaging in mercantile and manufacturing pursuits until he came to California in 1886, when he located in Santa Ana and was for a time a real-estate dealer. Afterwards he became a farmer south of that city, then removed to Los Angeles and took up successively a windmill business, newspaper work and insurance, and is now engaged in mining in Colorado, his residence being in Denver at the present time. Of his three sons, two grew to maturity, and Charles L. is a broker in Los Angeles.

When brought by his father to California Gail E. Moon was a lad of nine years and accordingly his education was obtained in the public and high schools of Los Angeles. At the commencement of his independent business career he secured employment in the advertising department of the Times and traveled for them four years. He then began in the real-estate business and later combined with this loan and brokerage lines. It was in 1905 that he became connected with the Bayside Land Company as clerk and since that time he has had charge of that firm's Long Beach office. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. As a progressive and enterprising young business man and a public spirited citizen he has earned the good will and respect of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

WILLIAM T. ROWE. In Elsinore, where he is living as a retired prospector and mine owner, William T. Rowe is accounted one of the prominent citizens of his community. The father, Asa, and the mother, who was Judith Thomas before her marriage, were both born in Phillips, Franklin county, Me., and lived there during their entire lives, the father being a builder by trade. They became the parents of six children, three sons and one daughter surviving them. William T., who was born at Phillips, Me., October 3, 1848, made for himself a fine record during the Civil war, three of his brothers also doing valiant service. Winthrop, who resides in Elsinore, was in the Sixteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers; Eben, now residing in Maine, was a member of the Twentieth Regiment of the same state; while Allen, who was killed in service in Florida, belonged to the Second Regiment of Maine Cavalry.

The boyhood days of William T. Rowe were spent at his birthplace and he was attending the public school at Phillips when the war broke out. He ran away to enlist in the army, but was obliged to make two attempts before he was accepted by Company C, Sixteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered in at Augusta in 1863, and as a member of the Army of the Potomac took part in engagements from Rappahannock to Appomattox, marched through the wilderness and was in the siege of Petersburg. He took part in the grand review at Washington, and was mustered out at Alexandria, Va., on June 5, 1865. He then returned to his home and re-entered school, later attending the Wesleyan Seminary at Kents Hill for two years. In the spring of 1868 he went to Chicago, remaining there during the summer, and then went to Minneapolis and Anoka, Minn., where he engaged in the lumbering business for six years.

Following this Mr. Rowe returned to Phillips, Me., remaining there for a time, then spent one year on the Atlantic coast. Subsequently he crossed the continent and during the winter of 1875 was in San Francisco. The following spring he went to Prescott, Ariz., traveling by stage, and engaged in mining with his brother in Yavapai county. They located a number of valuable claims and opened the New Era mine, twelve miles from Prescott, which sold not long ago for $175,000. He also located a group of eight claims on Lynch creek, which he sold for $15,000. Successful operations in this line were continued until 1901, when he came to California and lived at Sawtelle for one year. In 1902 he finally located in Elsinore, purchased property and has been a resident of this place ever since. He still owns valuable mining interests, but is now retired from active business operations. He is a strong adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, takes an active interest in matters of public import and was in 1904 elected to a position on the Elsinore board of trustees, which he resigned in 1906.

JOHN C. BRYAN. The family represented by this enterprising agriculturist of San Diego county became established in America during an early era of its colonization and has been identified honorably with its development. Both in peace and in war its members have proved loyal to their country. Col. George W. Bryan of Ohio won high distinction as an officer in the war of 1812 and his son, Henry Clay, served in the ranks of an Ohio regiment of infantry during the Civil war. The most distinguished member of the family is Hon. William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska, who is a second cousin of John C. Bryan of San Diego county; but others of the name, though lacking the eloquence of the "silver-tongued orator," have not lacked his wide knowledge of public affairs and his earnest convictions upon national problems.

After having taught school in his native Ohio and having gained also by experience a thorough knowledge of farming, in 1865 Henry Clay Bryan removed to Missouri, accompanied by his wife, Mary (Seeks) Bryan, a native of Ohio, and with their children, among whom was John C., who was born in Adams county, Ohio, December 19, 1858, and was a boy of less than seven years at the time of the removal to Missouri. The family settled in Atchison county, where the father taught school during the winter months and in the summer seasons engaged in farming. When forty-six years of age he passed away, August 30, 1871; he was long survived by his wife, who died in Missouri April 22, 1895, aged seventy-one years. Their son, John C., was not yet thirteen years of age at the father's death, but he at once assumed his share of the work, and with his brother, George Washington, took charge of the homestead. In 1885 he disposed of his interest in the estate to William H. Bryan, a younger brother, and shortly afterward removed to Nebraska, where he took up a homestead claim in Hitchcock county. For a few years he engaged in making needed improvements on the land and in bringing the soil under cultivation, but in 1888 he disposed of the property and returned to his old home neighborhood in Atchison county, Mo., where he bought an improved farm and engaged in farming and stock-raising.

Selling out his Missouri possessions in 1895 Mr. Bryan loaded his household effects in wagons and journeyed overland to Ogden, Utah, from which point he traveled by railroad to Los Angeles, and from there drove with teams to Escondido, San Diego county. For a year he remained at Lacosta and then spent five years in Gopher Cañon. Later he bought one hundred and twenty acres which he still owns and which is known as the old Bonsall ranch. However, instead of residing on that place, he rents it to a tenant and makes his home on a rented tract of five hundred acres near Bonsall, where he engages in raising grain and corn, also to some extent is interested in the dairy business and in the raising of stock. For a brief period, from May of 1902 to June of 1903, he made his home in Santa Ana, where he engaged in the insurance business, but with that exception he has devoted himself exclusively to agricultural pursuits. Though constantly busy in matters connected with his farm pursuits he finds leisure to keep posted upon subjects of governmental importance and gives his support to socialistic principles, believing them to possess the qualities making for the permanent prosperity of the people.

The first marriage of Mr. Bryan took place May 10, 1881, and united him with Miss Catherine S. McNair, who was born in Canada, but from early girlhood was a resident of Tarkio, Atchison county, Mo., and there died March 24, 1884. His second marriage was solemnized in Tarkio August 26, 1889, and united him with Miss Lena M. Shackelford, a native of Missouri, and there reared and educated. Two daughters bless their union, Mary Ruth and Mabel Fern.

JACOB BROWN. Among the prosperous farmers of Los Angeles county, the record of whose lives fills an important place in this volume, it gives us pleasure to place the name of Jacob Brown, of Palms, who is now living retired from active business on the ranch which he has improved. For nearly a quarter of a century he has resided in this locality, and during that time he has witnessed many wonderful changes in the face of the country, and in the development and advancement of its agricultural interests has actively participated. A son of Charles Brown, he was born, June 25, 1836, in Cambridgeshire, England, and was there educated. Born and reared in Cambridgeshire, Charles Brown learned the trade of brick mason and a plasterer when young, and followed it during his entire life of seventy-three years, in England. He married Mary Stinton, a woman of much force of character, and a member of the Baptist Church. She bore him seven children, six of whom grew to years of maturity, namely: Robert, Ellen, Sophia, Amy, Jacob and George.

Having very limited advantages in his native land, Jacob Brown remained at home until seventeen years old, when, in 1854, he came across the sea to the United States, spending the eighteenth anniversary of his birth on the Atlantic ocean. From New York City, where he landed, he went to Illinois, locating first in Chicago, then a small hamlet giving slight promise of its present greatness, and next at Rock Island. Not liking his prospects in either place, he left Illinois, going to Sabula, Jackson county, Iowa, where he resided for twenty-five years, being busily employed as a mason and plasterer, and in farming. Removing thence to Plymouth county, Iowa, he homesteaded eighty acres of government land and engaged in farming, remaining there until 1883. While in Iowa he had been ordained as a minister in the United Brethren Church, and upon coming to California in that year he entered upon the work of an evangelist and did much to advance the cause of religion and morality. Subsequently investing his money in bottom lands, he purchased one hundred acres near Palms, and by means of well-directed toil and wise management he improved a valuable ranch, which he has devoted for many years to general farming. Having labored hard during his active life, Mr. Brown is now living retired, spending his closing years in ease and comfort.

Mr. Brown married Mary Stinton, whose maiden name was identical with that of his mother before her marriage, and into their home sixteen children have been born, and of these fifteen grew to years of maturity, Charles, living in Plymouth county, Iowa, married Edith Bristow; George, also a resident of that county, married Addie Richardson; Newton, of San Luis Obispo county, Cal., married Ellen Rose; Mercy is the wife of Louis Stephens, of Los Angeles county; Sarah is the wife of Joseph Tabor, of Humboldt county, Cal.; Caroline, deceased, married Gilbert Kidson, of Palms; Mary is living at home; Thomas, deceased, married Lillie Munger; Martin and Luther were twins, the former being deceased; Allen is living in Los Angeles county; Jacob, Jr., is at home; Rebecca, deceased, married George Atrel; Eric, of San Bernardino county, is shipping clerk for a mining company; and Clara Amelia is deceased. Politically Mr. Brown is a strong Prohibitionist, and religiously he is a valued and conscientious member of the United Brethren Church.

GEORGE W. LYNN. During the colonial period of our national history "Teddie" Lynn came from his native country of Ireland to the new world and settled in Virginia. Shortly after he had acquired land in the Old Dominion the Revolutionary war began and he promptly offered his services to his adopted country. For seven years and six months he fought under General Washington, meanwhile enduring every hardship and constant exposure such as fell to the brave men fighting in that long and sanguinary struggle. With the close of the war he was honorably discharged and shortly afterward he migrated to the then frontier of Ohio, where he took up a tract of farm land and turned the first furrows in the primeval soil. It was his good fortune to long survive the era of the Revolution and when at last he passed from earth at ninety years he had seen the second victory of our country over England, the sound establishment of our national government and the extension of our possessions beyond the great Mississippi river.

When the family removed to the unsettled regions of Ohio Andrew F., a son of the Revolutionary soldier, and a native of Virginia, was a child of five years; hence as a boy he was familiar with the development of the frontier, the incoming of settlers, the cultivation of vast tracts of raw land, the clearing away of timber, and all the environments that marked the period of transition from savagery to civilization. On the homestead which his father had taken up from the government he engaged in general farming and in raising horses, and on that same place he died at eighty-five years. In early manhood he had married Nancy J. Bunnell, who was born in Pennsylvania of German extraction and died in Ohio at sixty-seven years. Fourteen children were born of that union, George W. being the youngest son and the twelfth child. He was born on the homestead in Guernsey county, Ohio, near the county-seat, Cambridge, February 24, 1848, and during boyhood attended country schools held in primitive log buildings illy equipped with facilities for the instruction and comfort of the pupils. At the age of sixteen years he began an apprenticeship in a general store, where he remained for three years at a salary of $100 per year.

Removing from Ohio to Illinois Mr. Lynn began to clerk in a store in Piatt county and there continued until 1871, when he came to the Pacific coast on a short visit, and in 1889 came again to the state, locating in Los Angeles. During the six years of his residence in Los Angeles he was connected with A. Hamburger & Son as floor walker, but resigned his position in 1895 and removed to Palms, Los Angeles county, where he engaged in ranching. January 1, 1905, he embarked in the livery buisness at Palms, where he conducted a boarding and sales stable until selling out the business April 1, 1906. He is now superintendent of the Palms Water Company. In politics Mr. Lynn votes with the Republican party. His home at Palms is presided over by Mrs. Lynn, formerly Ella J. Richardson, of Jacksonville, Ill., whom he married in 1883, and by whom he has one daughter, Bonnie V., now residing with her parents.

BERT PAUL. Among the enterprising citizens of Long Beach, Bert Paul holds a prominent place in the real estate interests advancing the values of the city and surrounding country and adding materially to the development of this section. Mr. Paul is a native of Glasgow, Scotland, born April 7, 1880, a son of John Maxwell Paul, a commercial traveler, who came to San Diego, Cal., for his health. He died in England, survived by his wife, who now resides in San Diego. In Preston, England, Bert Paul received his education in private schools, where he remained a resident until 1893. In that year he accompanied his parents to California and in San Diego attended and graduated from the public schools. Following his graduation he took up clerical work and in 1900 came north to Los Angeles, where he entered the employ of Strong & Dickinson, a well-known real-estate firm of that city, and with whom he remained as agent for two years. Locating in Long Beach in 1902 he became a member of the real-estate firm of Gary, Paul & Kenyon, with whom he continued for a few months, when he sold his interest to the firm and began independent operations. In August, 1904 he formed a partnership with W. H. Butters, and in this connection purchased and opened the Riverside tract of thirty acres, the Inner Harbor tract of eleven hundred lots, and the Nash tract of eighty-seven acres. In 1906 they organized and incorporated the Strand Investment Company, capitalized at $50,000, and also built the Long Beach skating rink, which has proven a success. They carry on a general real-estate business and are more or less interested in the majority of the incorporations in Long Beach.

Mr. Paul is prominent in public affairs in Long Beach, now serving as a member of the Board of Trade and of the Cosmopolitan club. In politics he supports the Republican party, and fraternally is associated with Long Beach Lodge No. 888, B. P. O. E. The success which has come to him has been the result of his own efforts and experience, for as a very young man he took up business life without special training or instruction, working his way from a subordinate position to the independent one which he occupies to-day. He has seen considerable of western life, having spent two years as a cowboy in Mexico before taking up business pursuits, and has profited by all associations, whether on the range or his present occupation.

CAPT. CHARLES A. SEABERG. Thoroughly acquainted with the sea and all matters of business connected with it, whether relating to navigation, commerce or transportation, Capt. Charles A. Seaberg, of San Diego, is especially fitted for the responsible position which he holds with the Spreckles Company as captain on the Coronado Ferry. Quick-witted, cool-headed and trustworthy, he performs the duties devolving upon him in this capacity with ability and fidelity. Large-hearted and generous, by his genial nature he has won a large circle of friends, and as a man and a citizen is held in high esteem. A native of Sweden, he was born May 3, 1861, in Stockholm, where he received his early education. He was the only child of his parents, August and Brigitta (Sondval) Seaberg, both of whom spent their entire lives in Sweden, his father during his lifetime being engaged in the fishing business and owning a line of boats.

When fourteen years of age Charles A. Seaberg shipped as a sailor before the mast, and for a while was engaged in coasting, both on schooners and steamers. Going then to England, he made a voyage to Spain and the West Indies, after which, sailing from London, he made two trips to Australia, one trip to China, and one to Valparaiso, South America. Returning to his native land, he spent the winter at Stockholm, and then went to Hamburg, where he shipped on a German vessel for a three years' cruise. Returning to England, he made another trip to Australia, and from there, in October, 1888, came to San Francisco to locate. Shipping as mate on the schooner commanded by his uncle, Captain Sondval, Mr. Seaberg was engaged in sealing for a year. On his return to San Francisco he was ill for three months, after which he made two trips on a coaster. The following three years he was one of the crew of the Spreckles yacht, Lurline, on which he came to San Diego in 1893. Entering then the employ of the Spreckles Company in this place, he was for six years purser on the ferry, of which he has now the sole charge, having served as captain since 1899.

In 1895, in San Diego, Captain Seaberg married Louisa Johnson, who was born and reared in Sweden. Politically the captain is a stanch Republican, and religiously he is a Lutheran. He is a member of the Scandinavian Society, and is identified with several of the leading fraternal organizations, belonging to Sunset Lodge No. 328, I. O. O. F.; to San Diego Encampment; to San Diego Canton; to the Ancient Order of United Workmen; and to the Knights of Pythias.

FRANCIS PORTER SARGENT. A few miles out from San Bernardino, on rural route No. 1, Mr. Sargent is successfully engaged in the bee industry. It is his experience that this industry may be made one of the most pleasurable lines of business in which one can engage, and for nearly twenty years he has conducted an apiary on the ranch he now occupies.

Of New England birth and parentage, Francis P. Sargent was born in Boston, Mass., July 14, 1832, a son of Tappan and Sarah (Bagley) Sargent. Mr. Sargent was a lad in school when the discovery of gold in California was heralded throughout the country, and as soon at it was possible for him to accumulate the necessary means he started for the gold fields from New England. After paying his passage and other expenses via the Isthmus of Panama he arrived in San Francisco in 1855 with just $150 in his pocket. After fourteen years of earnest endeavor on his part he returned east in 1869 with $40,000 to his credit, all of which he had made in the mines. Misfortune overtook him, however, in the form of unwise investments and dishonest partners, so that his fortune was depleted considerably during the years which he spent in the east. March of 1887 again found him a resident of California, for it was at this time that he came to San Bernardino county and purchased the property which from that day to this has been his home. This consists of twenty-five acres, and bears little resemblance to the place which he purchased nearly two decades ago, for instead of a sand ridge, which it then was, it is now covered with trees and shrubs, all fruit bearing, besides which he has sown considerable alfalfa. Fruit farming, however, is not Mr. Sargent's principal business, the greater part of his attention being given to the care of his bees, of which he has one hundred and fifty colonies. Pleasure and profit are combined in the work in which he is engaged, and no one in this part of the county is more thoroughly informed on the subject of bee culture than Mr. Sargent, for he has made a scientific study of the subject and has put his theoretical knowledge into practical use. In 1888 Mr. Sargent purchased a tract of one hundred acres one half mile east of his present place, but this he subsequently traded for four sections of land in Texas, which he still owns.

In Greene county, N. Y., Mr. Sargent was married to Roselyn Hitchcox, a native of New York. Of the four children born to them we mention the following: Porter E. is a graduate of Harvard College and is engaged in touring with classes of boys preparing for college; Rose, a musician of note, lives in Redlands; Arthur E. is a journalist and publisher of biographical works, the latter relating more particularly to Utah and Salt Lake, although he has also published a work on Los Angeles; Alice W. is the wife of William W. Fisher and lives at the Potter hotel, Santa Barbara. During young manhood Mr. Sargent joined the Odd Fellows and for thirty-five years has been a member of that body. For over thirty years he has served as an elder in the Presbyterian Church, with which he also united in earlier years.

WILLIAM THOMAS BARTON. A man of fine mental attainments, well educated and well informed, possessing great artistic talent and ability, William Thomas Barton is carrying on an extensive and lucrative business at Long Beach as a contractor and builder, and is justly entitled to the honored position which he holds among the esteemed and influential citizens of this part of the county. A native of Indiana, he was born May 22, 1860, in Waveland, Montgomery county. His father, Robert Barton, a native of Flemingsburg, Ky., settled in Indiana when a young man, and has since been actively employed there in agricultural pursuits. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Groves, was born in Kentucky, a daughter of Samuel Groves, and died in Indiana. Five children were born of their union, four of whom are living, William Thomas, the subject of this sketch, being the oldest child, and the only one residing on the Pacific coast.

Brought up on the parental homestead, William Thomas Barton received his elementary education in the district schools, completing it at the Central Indiana Normal School, in Ladoga. The following eight years he was engaged in teaching in Parke county, Ind., being principal of the schools at Coloma two years, and at Mecca for the same length of time. Abandoning his professional career in 1896, he came to Long Beach, Cal., and for four years worked at the carpenter's trade, serving as foreman of construction work for Mr. Green. Embarking in business on his own account in 1900, he has since been prosperously engaged in contracting and building, and has acquired a wide and favorable reputation as a talented and skillful workman. He is a fine architect, drawing his own designs and making his own plans, giving much time and thought to this branch of his business, which is one of the utmost importance to himself and to his patrons. In addition to erecting many of the larger and finer buildings of Long Beach, he has recently completed the handsome Marsh & Strong hotel and pavilion buildings at Alamitos Bay.

In Waveland, Ind., Mr. Barton married Lena Hunter, who was born and reared in Greencastle, Ind., and they are the parents of six children, namely: Raymond, Myrtle, Guy, Robert, Leland and Norma. Politically Mr. Barton is actively identified with the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of Long Beach Lodge No. 327, F. & A. M., and of the Knights of Pythias. Both Mr. and Mrs. Barton belong to the Christian Church, being faithful and consistent followers of its teachings.

JOHN OLHASSO. Amid scenes far removed from the place of his birth and from the home of his ancestors, Mr. Olhasso is actively engaged in the raising of sheep in the Bernardo valley, where he is known as one of the progressive young ranchers of San Diego county. Although not a native of the United States, he has been a resident of this country almost from the earliest period of his childhood recollections and is intimately identified with the agricultural interests of his home county, where he has lived since early boyhood. The family of which he is an honored representative came from France. His parents, Domingo and Fannie (Etchegarry) Olhasso, were natives of the Pyrenees region of France and in early life were students in the schools of the south of France. When the father was a youth of seventeen years he crossed the ocean to South America and settled in Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, where he learned the trade of a butcher and at a later date became extensively engaged in the sheep business. On the plains of Argentina he had a large ranch with two thousand head of sheep, and for six or more years he carried on important sheep interests, but finally sold out in order to remove to California. Both he and his wife are still living and make their home in Los Angeles, where two of their four children yet remain with them. The other two members of the family are engaged in the sheep business in San Diego county.

While the family were making their home in Buenos Ayres the gentleman whose name introduces this article was born November 6, 1877, and he was four years of age when his parents brought the children to the United States, settling in California. After a year in San Francisco the family moved to Santa Maria and a year later moved to Bernardo. He received his education in the Escondido grammar and high schools. On leaving school he turned his attention to the sheep industry, in which he received a thorough training under the experienced supervision of his father, and for four years the father and son worked in partnership. At the expiration of that time the latter bought out his father's interests and since then has had a brother associated with him in the work. Starting out for himself in 1902, he has since leased land for a sheep range and carries two thousand head grazing on the range. The excellent price of wool has made the industry profitable for him, in addition to which he has received fair prices for the mutton when shipped to the large markets. Keen, capable and resourceful, he has already won recognition as a rising and progressive young agriculturist and holds a high position among the other sheepmen of the country. From boyhood he has been identified with the Roman Catholic Church of Escondido, while his parents are members of the Roman Catholic Church in Los Angeles. After his father became a citizen of the United States he allied himself with the Republican party, and the son was reared in this faith. A careful study of political problems has deepened his belief in the wisdom of Republican principles and he uniformly gives his ballot for the men and measures pledged to the support of the party platform.

JAMES A. COBURN. Southern California was little more than a wilderness of wild mustard and cactus when James A. Coburn was born at Elmonte, March 18, 1852. His father, James M. Coburn, a native of Indiana, and his mother, formerly Mrs. Lucinda (Swarthout) Kinyon, born in New York, crossed the plains to California with the same train of emigrants, but their marriage did not take place until after their arrival in 1851. Immediately after their marriage they settled in Los Angeles county on a piece of government land, upon which they made their home for two years. Deciding to go further into the interior of the state they chose San Bernardino county for their home and purchased a ranch in this vicinity. Mr. Coburn was a stanch Democrat, and both he and his wife belonged to the Pioneers' Society of Southern California, and in the early days were active members of the Church of Latter Day Saints. The father died in San Bernardino at the age of seventy-six years, having been preceded by his wife two years, she being the same age as he at the time of her demise. They were the parents of four children, three of whom are living in San Bernardino county.

James A. Coburn was a young child when his parents brought him to San Bernardino county, in which place he received his education and has spent his life thus far. He worked on the home ranch until twenty-two years old and then, in 1874, was united in marriage to Miss Euphama Brown, who was born in Oregon, the daughter of William Brown, an early pioneer of that state. Mr. Coburn ranched for a time after his marriage, then took a position as foreman of the railroad section for the Southern Pacific, holding this for eight years. He then decided to return to the ranch and now has a very nice property, being the owner of forty-two acres, forty acres being devoted to the raising of corn, hay and to pasturage purposes, while two acres comprise the home lot and is planted to all kinds of fruits. Mr. Coburn is a Democrat in politics and fraternally affiliates with the lodge of Fraternal Brotherhood at San Bernardino. Mr. and Mrs. Coburn have a family of five children, as follows: Ada, the wife of George A. Roach, of San Bernardino, and the mother of one child; James W., residing at Stockton; Lovina, Jesse, and Clarence, all of whom still live under the parental roof. Mr. Coburn has identified himself with the upbuilding enterprises for this section of the state and is a man who is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

SAMUEL B. McFARLAND. As assistant postmaster in Avalon Samuel B. McFarland is one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of that city. He was born February 8, 1857, in Warrensburg, Mo., the son of Robert and Elizabeth (Gillam) McFarland, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. The parents were married in Lafayette county, Mo., where Mr. McFarland settled in 1844, becoming a farmer near Lexington. Making his home there until 1860, he then removed to Warrensburg, in which city he engaged in merchandising. He died in 1902, at the age of seventy-eight years; the mother's death occurred in Lafayette county. The McFarland family is of Scotch descent, the first member coming from Scotland and settling in Virginia before the Revolutionary war, in which the great-grandfather fought. Robert McFarland, although of southern birth, had strong Union sympathies at the time of the Civil war. He and Senator Cockrell were warm friends from boyhood and were married upon the same date in the same log house in Missouri. Religiously Mr. McFarland was of Presbyterian faith and was one of the founders of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Warrensburg.

The youngest of three children, Samuel B. McFarland was reared in Warrensburg, received a preliminary education in the public schools of that city, finishing with a course in the Warrensburg normal-school. After the completion of his school work he joined his father in the mercantile business, subsequently becoming sole proprietor and conducting the store alone for a time. Disposing of his interests there he removed respectively to Lyons, Kans., and Butler, Mo., engaging in the same line of business. His residence in California dates from 1897, locating originally in Los Angeles, and a year later accepting a position as clerk in an Avalon business house. In 1900 he received the appointment of deputy postmaster, N. B. Stanton having been the duly appointed postmaster, and when Edward Stanton was made his successor Mr. McFarland retained the position of deputy, having proven himself an efficient and trustworthy official, a courteous and obliging public servant.

By his marriage in Clinton, Henry county, Mo., in 1900, Mr. McFarland was united with Emma Buck, a native of that place. Her father, Thomas Buck, was born in London, England, and came to the United States when twenty-two years of age, settling in Missouri, where he secured a piece of raw land, improved it and engaged in farming, ultimately acquiring a large acreage in Butler county. Mrs. McFarland, who was one of eight children, received a very fine education, graduating from the Warrensburg (Mo.) State Normal in 1887 with the degree of B. S. D. She began her educational work in Ballard, Mo., serving for several years as head of the schools of that city, and in 1898 was elected principal of the Avalon schools, and was the real organizer of the grammar schools of Catalina. She began teaching in a small room in the back of the Congregational Church, there being about thirty pupils. In 1901 the new school building was erected and she very materially assisted in the planning of the structure. After retaining the principalship for six years, during which time the attendance had grown to an enrollment of eighty-five, she resigned her position in 1904 to become clerk in the Avalon postoffice. She is universally admired for her superior qualities of heart and mind and is active in social and club circles, being at the present time president of the Avalon Women's Club. She is the mother of one child, Robert Victor. Fraternally Mr. McFarland was made a Mason in Lyons, Kans., still retaining his membership in the lodge there, also belongs to the Royal Arch Masons in Sterling, Kans., and is a member of the Knights of Honor. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party. He is greatly interested in the development of the city in which he resides and lends his liberal support to the furthering of all upbuilding enterprises.

DAVID BUESSER. Until selling his property in February, 1906, Mr. Buesser was prosperously engaged as a horticulturist at North Glendale, where he improved a valuable ranch. As an orchardist he met with satisfactory results, year by year adding to his wealth. Since selling his ranch he has made his home in Glendale, where he has purchased property. A native of Germany, he was born in Wetzlar, Prussia, where his parents, David and Elizabeth (Rau) Buesser, spent their entire lives.

Having completed the prescribed course of study in the public schools, David Buesser learned the trade of a harness-maker, after which he served four years in the Ninth Hussar Cavalry. When the Franco-Prussian war was declared, in 1870, he was in Belgium, but prompted by love of the Kaiser and the Fatherland, like all true sons of Germany, he returned home, and for five months served as a cavalryman in the corps of Reservists, being stationed in Cassel. When a young man he traveled extensively in Europe, being in Paris from 1863 until 1866, going from there to Belgium, where he conducted a large business, being foreman for a widow, whose husband he had previously worked for. Both as a patriotic soldier and as an honest, conscientious business man, he made a splendid record while living in his native country. In the army, he was promoted to the first grade for his good conduct and bravery, and has now his certificates from two nations.

Leaving Belgium May 12, 1872, Mr. Buesser crossed the Atlantic with his wife, landing in Boston, Mass., and from there going to New York City, where he worked for six months. Subsequently visiting his brother, Rev. F. Buesser, in St. Peter, Minn., he spent a year in that place, and then accompanied his brother to Cleveland, Ohio, where he established himself, following his trade there for eleven years. In June, 1884, he came to California in search of a favorable opening for business. Selecting Los Angeles as a place of residence, he purchased a house on Bunker Hill avenue and lived there two years, being in the meantime employed as foreman for George Peachy, a harness manufacturer, who is now living in Redondo. Deciding then to try a change of occupation, he bought a ranch of twenty-one acres at Hollywood, and after managing it four months sold out to Mr. Wilcox, taking in exchange an orange grove and peach orchard at North Glendale, where he resided until selling out in February, 1906. He improved the property with a fine residence, which, with other improvements, cost him $4,000. In 1895 he sold ten acres of his ranch and was engaged in raising oranges and apricots on the remainder, meeting with signal success in his undertakings. As has been previously stated he sold his property in February, 1906, and has since resided in Glendale, where he has erected a modern cottage on Central avenue, in which he has since lived.

Previous to coming to this country, in Verviers, Belgium, Mr. Buesser married Louisa Hoch, a native of Alsace, France, and she has proved herself a true helpmeet to him at all times. Mr. and Mrs. Buesser have never had children of their own, but they adopted two, a little girl, who lived only a few years, and a boy, Frank Gustav Buesser, an especially bright and attractive child, who was accidentally killed when nine years and six months old. Mr. Buesser is a man of high moral principles, and with his wife is a consistent member of the Evangelical Church.

WILLIAM JESSE CURTIS, is the eldest son of Hon. I. C. and Lucy M. Curtis; his father was a prominent member of the bar of Marion county, Iowa, for many years, and represented that county in the state legislature for several terms. His mother is the daughter of Jesse L. Holman, one of the early justices of the supreme court of the state of Indiana, and a sister of Hon. William S. Holman, who for more than thirty years was a member of congress from that state.

Mr. Curtis was born in Aurora, Ind., on the 2nd day of August, 1838. In 1844 he moved with his parents to the then territory of Iowa and settled in Marion county, near the present city of Pella. He was educated at the Central University of Iowa, studied law in his father's office, was admitted to the bar in 1863, and became a partner of his father. In 1861 he married Miss Frances S. Cowles, of Delaware, Ohio. In 1864 he crossed the plains with ox and mule teams, came to California and settled in the city of San Bernardino, where he has resided ever since. The first five years after his arrival in California he devoted to teaching school. In January, 1872, he opened a law office in the city of San Bernardino. In 1873 he was elected district attorney of San Bernardino county and was re-elected in 1875.

Mr. Curtis has been associated at different times during the practice of his profession with Judge H. C. Rolfe, Hon. J. W. Satterwhite, Judge George E. Otis and Judge F. F. Oster, and is now associated with his son, Jesse W. Curtis. The various firms with which he has been connected all occupied prominent positions at the bar of Southern California, and were retained in many important civil cases tried in San Bernardino county, and frequently in cases tried in adjoining counties, and the United States circuit and district courts. He is now and has been one of the directors of the San Bernardino County Savings Bank ever since its organization. He is also engaged in growing and shipping oranges, and he and his son Holman have one of the finest and largest orange groves on the Colton Terrace, about midway between the city of San Bernardino and the town of Rialto.

Mr. Curtis has always taken an interest in matters pertaining to the welfare of the city, county and state, and especially in the subject of education, and served for a number of years as president of the city board of education. He is president of the bar association of the county, and one of the trustees of the law library.

FREDRICH JOEHNCK. The Joehnck family formerly flourished in Schleswig-Holstein, the ancestral home being at Eckernforde, not far distant from the Kiel canal that brings the waters of the North sea into navigable connection with those of the Baltic. Claus was the first of the family to emigrate from the old world and he became a farmer in Clinton county, Iowa, where he and his wife both died at the age of ninety-three years. In religion both were faithful adherents of the Lutheran denomination. Their son, Henry, was born at Eckernforde, Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and was a youth of eighteen years when the family sought the larger opportunities offered by America. Shortly afterward he became a pioneer in what is now Grand Island, Neb., where he participated in numerous struggles with hostile Indians and proved himself as brave as he was enterprising. By wise management he has acquired the possession of several farms near Grand Island and now gives his attention to their supervision. In politics he is a Republican.

After coming to the United States and securing the means necessary for the establishment of a home, Henry Joehnck married Margareta Goos, who was born in Kappaln, Schleswig, Germany, and at the age of eleven years came to America with her parents and settled in Scott county, Iowa. She still survives and is hale and hearty in spite of her sixty-six years of active life. All of her ten children are living, there being six sons and four daughters, all married, of whom Fredrich was second in order of birth. On the home farm near Grand Island, Neb., he was born April 15, 1862, and there he passed the uneventful years of boyhood. After having completed common-school studies he began to learn the trade of a brick-layer in Grand Island, and on the completion of his apprenticeship he went to Denver, Colo., to work at the trade. From there he came to Southern California, arriving at Los Angeles March 1, 1891, and immediately securing employment at his trade. For some years he worked by the day or by contract in that city, but in 1898 he came to Oxnard to work under Carl Leonardt in the construction of the American Beet Sugar Company's plant. The following year he embarked in the manufacture of brick, having his first yard on the Savier road, but later removing to Montalvo, where he has a yard of four acres furnishing a fine quality of clay for the manufacture of brick. The plant has a capacity of about one million brick per year. In addition to manufacturing brick he takes contracts for brick work and has furnished the material used in practically all of the brick buildings in Oxnard.

The residence which Mr. Joehnck erected on First street, Oxnard, and which he still owns, is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Annie C. Mumm, of Denver, Colo. Mrs. Joehnck's father, Detlef, is a prominent citizen of Hohn, Schleswig-Holstein, and for years has been intimately identified with the Lutheran Church there as its secretary and treasurer. His daughter was born July 4, 1864, in Schleswig-Holstein and was reared in the Lutheran faith, to which she adheres with the utmost loyalty, and in which she is training her only child, Henry Detlef Joehnck, who was born July 4, 1896. During the period of his residence in Colorado Mr. Joehnck was initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Denver Lodge No. 14, but since then has transferred his membership to Oxnard Lodge No. 89, I. O. O. F., and in addition, with his wife, he affiliates with the Order of Rebekahs. For some time he has been active in the work of the Sons of Herman and formerly held the office of president, in which position he accomplished much for the upbuilding of the order.

GEORGE P. LYMAN. The Lyman family, represented in Long Beach by George P. Lyman, a successful real estate dealer of this city, was established in Massachusetts by Richard Lyman, an Englishman who located at Northampton during the colonial period of our history. Succeeding generations flourished in that location, whence Samuel Lyman, a farmer by occupation, removed to Illinois in 1856 and in the vicinity of Onarga, Iroquois county, passed the remainder of his life. By marriage he allied his fortunes with those of another old and honored family of New England, his wife being in maidenhood Lucetta Burt, who was born in Massachusetts and died in Illinois. They were the parents of the following children: Samuel Burt, who served as sergeant in the First Pennsylvania Rifles (known as the old Bucktail regiment) during the Civil war, was taken prisoner, but survived the horrors of incarceration and returned to civic life at the close of hostilities, his death occurring eventually in Minnesota; John D., who served in the Twenty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Infantry, and died in 1862 at Bentonville, Ark.; George P., of this review; and Edward M., a native of Massachusetts, who engaged in farming in Illinois until 1894, when he came to California and in Covina engaged in the cultivation of oranges. In 1901 he located in Long Beach and has since engaged in the real-estate business with his brother.

George P. Lyman was also a loyal soldier during the Civil war. His birth occurred in Southampton, Mass., January 29, 1843, but he was a resident of Illinois at the time of the breaking out of the Civil war, having been taken to that state by his parents in 1856. His education was received in the common schools of Illinois and the Grand Prairie Seminary at Onarga, after which he farmed until 1864, when he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Regiment, Illinois Infantry. Mustered in at Chicago, he served in Missouri and Kentucky for a period of six months, when he was honorably discharged and returned again to civic pursuits. He again engaged in farming, establishing a home in 1866, when he married in Massachusetts Helen M. Searle, of that state. In 1869 he sold his farm and enaged in the hardware and lumber business in Roberts, Ford county, Ill., for a period of fifteen years. Disposing of these interests in 1884 he came to California, and in Pasadena engaged in the same enterprise, the firm being known as Lyman & Stevens, one of the most extensive hardware stores on Colorado street. This engaged his attention for the ensuing two years, when he sold out and became connected with the Pasadena Milling Company. In the meantime, in 1887, he became interested in the real estate business in Pasadena, and this interest led him, in 1901, to locate in Long Beach, where with his brother he established the firm of Lyman Brothers & Rowe. Their enterprise has resulted in much material development for Long Beach, one of their most extensive movements being the platting of the Wilson & Lyman's subdivision of six acres on East Fourth street. Mr. Lyman has erected a fine residence on American avenue, while his brother has built five houses in Long Beach in the last five years.

The death of Mr. Lyman's first wife occurred in Pasadena, Cal., June 2, 1896. In Long Beach, March 16, 1904, he was united in marriage with Miss Isabelle E. Rowe, a native of Illinois. Mr. Lyman is a member of the John F. Godfrey Post No. 93, G. A. R., of Pasadena. He is a stanch Republican in national politics, although locally he is far too loyal a citizen to give his support to any man or measure that in his judgment is not best calculated to advance the general welfare. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in his religious affiliations. Mr. Lyman takes a lively interest in public affairs, exerting his influence as a member of the Chamber of Commerce, is liberal and enterprising to an unusual degree and is looked upon as representative of the best type of citizenship by those who have known him throughout his residence in Southern California.

JOHN GOELZ. The care exercised in the discharge of all duties connected with his occupation proves Mr. Goelz to be the possessor of qualities admirably adapting him to work where skill, accuracy and efficiency are the principal essentials. Doubtless his natural endowments made the development of these qualities possible, and probably also their presence in his character is due to the excellent training he received during the period of his apprenticeship in the formative period of his career. German masters have a reputation for the careful training of their apprentices, and those who have been under their oversight usually possess the requisite preparation for practical success.

Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, is the native place of Mr. Goelz, and October 6, 1869, the date of his birth, he being the fifth son among nine children, all of whom still survive. His parents, Walter and Eliza Goelz, were born, reared and married in Hesse-Darmstadt, and the mother died there in middle age. The father who still remains in that part of Germany, followed farm pursuits and the grain business during the active period of his life, but now is retired from business responsibilities. At the age of fourteen years John Goelz was taken from school and apprenticed to the trade of a cabinet-maker, at which he served the full period. When he was seventeen years old he came to the United States and settled in Los Angeles, where he followed his trade for two years. At the expiration of that time he began to be interested in the cement business, working in the employ of various contractors.

On coming to Oxnard in 1898 Mr. Goelz entered the employ of Carl Leonardt and assisted in the construction of the American Beet Sugar factory. Four years later in 1902 he became superintendent of the cement works at Oxnard owned by Mr. Leonardt, which position he has since filled with the utmost skill and energy. Since coming to Oxnard he has erected a residence on the corner of Fifth and D streets, and here he and his wife, with their three children, Emil, Lena and Gusta, have a comfortable and attractive home. Mrs. Goelz was formerly Mary Otto and at an early age left Germany, her native land, for the United States, settling in Los Angeles, where she married and for some years made her home. Reared in the Lutheran faith, she adheres to that belief and contributes to the missionary enterprises and general support of that denomination. Though not active in politics, Mr. Goelz has pronounced opinions upon all questions of national importance and gives his support to the Democratic party in local and general elections. Fraternally he holds membership with the Sons of Hermann, in which order he holds official position. To those with whom business dealings have brought him in contact he has a reputation for energy, careful judgment and prompt dispatch of work, and his presence in Oxnard adds another to the list of the city's skilled workmen.

ANDREW YOUNG may be classed as one of the old settlers of Wilmington, Cal., and has for many years been in the employ of the Wilmington Transportation Company as superintendent of engineers, a most valued and trusted employe. His father, also named Andrew Young, was a native of Ayrshire and with his family came to Canada, settling near Quebec. He was a flax-dresser by trade and followed that occupation at La Prairie, Quebec, and later at Champlain, N. Y., where they resided for a time. He enlisted and served as a member of a Canadian company during the Rebellion in Canada, and died at Sherbrooke, Quebec. His mother, Jane Fenton, was a native of Montrose, Scotland. The family came of Presbyterian stock on both sides of the house and their children were brought up in that denominational faith. There were four children in the family, three daughters and one son, all still living.

Andrew Young is the only son and second child in his father's family. He was born at La Prairie, Quebec, Canada, October 24, 1849. Soon after his birth the family removed to Champlain, N. Y., where he attended the public schools, and when the family returned to Canada he continued school at Sherbrooke. When he was sixteen years of age he was apprenticed to learn the machinist trade in a large machine shop at Sherbrooke. In 1870, when he was twenty years of age, having served his term of apprenticeship and mastered the trade, he went to Bay City, Mich., and procured employment at the McDowell Iron works. In 1874 he returned to Sherbrooke and the following year, 1875, married Carrie Kent, a native of that place.

The western country seemed to hold out inducements for the young couple to leave their old home, and in the year of their marriage they came to California. Mr. Young obtained employment with the Fulton Iron works at San Francisco, but only remained in their employ six months. With the idea that he would be better suited he went to Seattle, Wash., and engaged with the Seattle Transportation Company as machinist and engineer, continuing with them until 1878, when he returned to San Francisco and for two years was chief engineer of tow-boats on the bay. In 1880 he came to Wilmington and went to work for the transportation company as chief engineer on their steamers in San Pedro bay. One year later, 1881, the company promoted him by giving him charge of the machinery and making him superintendent of engineers. For many years the company's shops were at Wilmington, but in 1903 they moved them to San Pedro. Mr. Young retains his position with the company, though his home is at Wilmington.

Mr. Young is thorough master of his line of work and the years he has remained in the employ of the company with whom he is now engaged attest their appreciation of his services. He is a man of sterling worth and integrity of character and has gained the respect of the people in whatever community he made his home. In politics he is a Republican; in religion, the family are Presbyterians, following the creed of their fathers and maintaining the faith they were brought up in. Their family consists of six children. Mabel, George Andrew (apprenticed machinist in Los Angeles), Phineas Banning, Fenton Kent, Carrie Amelia and Hudson Lawrence. Mr. Young has been a member of the Masonic order for many years, having taken his degrees in Victoria Lodge, Sherbrooke, Canada. Both Mr. and Mrs. Young are members of the Eastern Star at San Pedro. He is a member of Wilmington Lodge No. 198, F. & A. M., and has served as master four terms. He is a member and past grand of Bowen Lodge 138, I. O. O. F., of San Pedro, and is also a member of the Benevolent, Protective Order of Elks. He has been a member of the Marine Association of San Francisco since 1882.

CHARLES WILLIAM LONGMIRE. In 1896, when Charles William Longmire established his present livery business in Highland, it was on a very small scale, with three horses and a little frame building. Gradually but steadily the business grew, however, and now, with a fine brick barn 37x105 feet in dimensions, twenty first-class driving horses and numerous new and up-to-date rigs, some of them with rubber tires, he conducts one of the most extensive livery enterprises in this section of the state. For several generations Tennessee has been the ancestral home of the Longmire family and it was in Anderson county, that state, that both Charles William and his father, Rufus Albert Longmire, were born. The last named was a son of Reuben Moss and Elizabeth (Wallace) Longmire, and was reared on a farm near Clinton, on the Tennessee river, in the vicinity of which place he obtained an education in the public schools. In that place and the adjoining county he lived until 1883, when he came to California, arriving in Highland on January 4. He began ranching immediately upon his arrival in the state and in 1887 made his first purchase of land, securing ten acres on the Base line road at $60 per acre. Upon this land he raised potatoes until he purchased his present ranch of ten acres, when he sold the former place. This latter property was unimproved, and its present fine condition is entirely the result of the personal efforts of Mr. Longmire. The grove of over a thousand naval orange trees and a few lemons was grown from seeds planted by him. He also erected the present nine-room residence and substantial barn, the buildings being located on the corner of Bolder and Highland avenues. In 1905 the ranch yielded a net income of $100 per acre.

Reuben M. Longmire's marriage, January 1, 1868, united him with Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Charles and Selitha (Moore) Shinliver. Her father died in 1857, and her mother in 1896, at the age of seventy-six years. Mr. and Mrs. Longmire are both of German-Scotch descent. They became the parents of seven children: Ida Ann, now the wife of Charles Hadden, of Highland; Lassie, who died at the age of nineteen years and is buried in San Bernardino; Mattie Elizabeth, who married John Coy, of Highland; Charles William, a resident of Highland and the subject of this sketch; Kittie, the wife of Frank Cram, of East Highland; Maggie, who died when nineteen years old and is buried in San Bernardino; and James E., who lives under the parental roof.

Born May 30, 1873, Charles William Longmire was ten years of age when he was brought by his parents to Highland, and his education was obtained in the common schools here. After completing his studies he stayed with his father on the ranch for a time and later engaged in the butchering business in Messina for two years. Subsequently he returned home, remaining with his father for a couple of seasons, and in May, 1896, he located in Highland and established his present business, in 1904 building the new brick barn. Fraternally Mr. Longmire is a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge of Highland, and politically, like his father, is a stanch Democrat. On February 11, 1902, he was united in marriage with Catherine (Maloney) Bell, the widow of Albert Bell and daughter of Michael and Jennie (Shirtey) Maloney, and of this union one child, Vivian Lucile, was born April 1, 1904.

JOSEPH H. KELLY. An early pioneer in San Bernardino county and one of the largest and most substantial ranchmen in the county is Joseph H. Kelly, who owns and operates a ranch of four hundred acres, which is devoted to grain and stock-raising, he being especially interested in the breeding of fine horses. He has been in the horse business for about forty years, and holds the distinction of having trained the first race horse ever tracked in San Bernardino county. Besides twenty high grade brood mares he now owns three valuable stallions—Bolock, of the famous stock of Zolock; a large draft horse named Mascot; and a French coach named Charlatan. In 1876 he built a race track on his ranch, which was the first one in the county, and from that was organized the present racing course. The first horse, Valentine, he ever trained for track purposes was entered in twenty-seven races and took money twenty-six times. This horse was finally sold and taken to Australia and there defeated Fritz, who had challenged any trotter or pacer in the world.

The birth of Mr. Kelly occurred in Hancock county, Ill., July 28, 1842, he being the son of Joseph and Matilda (Hull) Kelly, the former's birth having occurred in Ohio, and his death in Utah; the latter was a native of Illinois, in which state her death also occurred. There were five children in the family, and Joseph H. has now but one brother living, his home being in Nevada. Mr. Kelly was taken by his father to Utah in an early day and when a young man of twenty he pushed his own way still further west, coming to San Bernardino county, Cal. He bought land from the larger ranchers and has ever since been engaged in agricultural pursuits and stock-raising. Mr. Kelly's first marriage took place in 1866, uniting him with Sarah Keller, a native of California, who died ten years later, leaving five children, namely: Arthur, Nathan and Hazen, all of whom are married; Hiram, who is single, and the daughter, Druzella, is the widow of Benjamin Arthur. In 1880 Mr. Kelly married Alfretta Dewitt, born in California, and she too has become the mother of five children, Harold, Ernest, Nettie, Harry and Pearl. While he is a believer in Republican principles he exercises considerable independence in the casting of his ballot, believing that men are as important as measures in the government of the country. He is a member of the Elks of Redlands.

JACOB POLHEMUS. A pioneer of Colton, Jacob Polhemus, now deceased, came to this city in 1875, when the only buildings in the place were a saloon and eating house, and the Pioneer lumber yard office. A carpenter and builder by trade, he was employed in the erection of the pioneer buildings of Colton, among them being the Hathaway and Davenport store, which was the first one established here. In 1877 he purchased lots on the corner of Eighth and I streets, on which he built his residence and shop. As the city grew this location became valuable and in 1886 he erected the well-known Polhemus block, a fine two-story structure devoted to business and office purposes, the building being the first one of brick erected in Colton. He was a strong and liberal supporter of the various development enterprises instituted from time to time and became a stockholder and one of the original incorporators of the Colton Building and Loan Association, which has done so much to encourage improvement in the city. In his business enterprises he was successful and secured a modest, though well-deserved, competency, and his methods in his dealings were of a manly and straightforward character that secured him hosts of friends and gained for him the highest respect of the community.

The birth of Mr. Polhemus occurred in New Jersey in 1822, both his parents, Theodorus and Leah (Cooper) Polhemus, being natives of the same state and descended from old colonial families from Holland. The son was reared and educated in New Jersey, where he early learned the carpenter's trade, engaging in it as an occupation for twenty years in Jersey City. It was in 1871 that the attractions of California irresistibly appealed to Mr. Polhemus and he decided to settle in that state. His first location was in San Francisco, where he remained but a few months, however, soon coming to Southern California. He settled successively at San Diego, Los Angeles and San Bernardino, and in 1875 established himself in Colton, where his death occurred December 12, 1889. Politically he was a stanch Republican, having been a supporter of that party from the time of its organization in 1856. He was strong and liberal in his support of churches and schools, being a member of the Baptist Church, and serving as treasurer of the society in Colton.

By his first marriage Mr. Polhemus was united with Miss Jane Tier in 1843. She died in 1870, leaving three children: Lizzie, now the wife of Frank D. Sweetser, of San Francisco; George, a resident of Plainfield, N. J.; and William, living in Colton. In 1879 he married Mrs. Lucretia (Ford) Bent, who was born in Florida, N. Y., in 1826. Her early ancestors were from Holland and settled in New Amsterdam on Manhattan Island. When seven years of age her parents removed to Rochester, in which city she was educated, and at the age of sixteen years was married to Heman J. Spring. They lived on a farm in New York for a little over three years, and in 1846 moved to Fox Lake, Wis., later returning to New York. Mr. Spring held the position of depot agent at Millers Corner for a number of years. Resigning that position he again went to Wisconsin, from which state he enlisted in Company E of the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, and was killed on the battlefield. There were three sons born of this union: DeLos A., born December 31, 1845, was married to Eunice Mallory, a native of Savannah, Ga. He made his home in Georgia until his health began to fail, when he came to California and died in Colton at the age of thirty-eight years. He left a widow and three children, who returned to their native state after his death. DeLos Spring served three years in the Civil war, having enlisted in the same regiment with his father when seventeen years of age. Adolphus D. Spring, born January 8, 1848, married Miss Sarah Wright, has three children and resides in Colton, where he is a city electrican. Byron L. Spring married Clara M. Washburn, has one child, and lives in Madison, Wis. About four years after the death of Mr. Spring his widow was married to Joseph Bent, who was accidentally drowned in Fox Lake, Wis. In 1876 Mrs. Bent came to Colton, and three years later was united in marriage with Mr. Polhemus. After ten years of happy married life, death removed a devoted husband and a man loved and respected by all who knew him. Mrs. Polhemus died December 7, 1906, at the home of her son in Colton. She was noted for her kindness and generosity and had a host of friends.

GEORGE B. MacGILLIVRAY. The principal of the grammar schools of Ramona is a member of a Canadian family and a descendant of Scotch ancestry. Both of his parents, John and Catherine (Groat) MacGillivray, were born in the village of Kirkwall, in the north of Scotland, and the paternal forefathers had been identified with that country as far back as the genealogy can be traced. The maternal ancestors, however, originally came from the continent of Europe, for the maternal grandfather, Robert Groat, was a descendant of one of three brothers bearing the name of de Grotia, who left Denmark in the sixteenth century and established the family on the shores of Scotland. During their early life the parents crossed the ocean to Canada and settled at Smith Falls, Ontario, where their marriage was solemnized and where they settled upon a farm. The mother never left that province and died there in 1883, at the age of fifty-seven years. Seven years after her demise the father departed from the scenes familiar to him since early youth and sought the milder climate of California, settling in San Diego county near the village of Alpine, where he now lives at the age of eighty-seven, in fairly good health.

While the family were living at Smith Falls, Ontario, a son was born May 12, 1860, and he it is who forms the subject of this narrative and who is known as the efficient principal of the Ramona grammar school. Primarily educated in country schools near the home farm, he was not satisfied with the extent of the opportunities there afforded and sought something more broadening and thorough. With that object in view he matriculated in the Collegiate Institute of Smith Falls and there carried on the regular course of study, graduating with the class of 1882. Afterward he taught in Canadian schools for three years, and with the money earned by this period of work he paid his expenses in the Ottawa normal school, from which he was graduated in the fall of 1888 with an excellent standing for scholarship and knowledge of pedagogy.

Immediately after completing the normal school course of study Mr. MacGillivray left Canada for the United States and settled in San Diego county, where at once he secured a position as teacher in the Japilna district. The excellence of his work and the satisfaction afforded patrons of the school by his services may be proved by the statement that he remained for ten years the teacher of the same school, eventually resigning in order to accept his present position, at which time he removed from Descanso to Ramona. Coincident with his removal he sold his ranch in the former neighborhood. His cozy home in Ramona is presided over by his wife, with whom he was united at Los Angeles January 13, 1896, and who was formerly Miss M. W. True, descended from New England ancestry and a native of Sherbrooke, province of Quebec. Of their union two children were born namely: Laura Belle, whose birth occurred in 1899, and F. True, born in 1904.

Ever since becoming a citizen of the United States Professor MacGillivray has voted with the Democratic party, but at no time has he displayed partisanship of spirit, and his interest in politics is that of the public-spirited citizen, not the office-seeker. Both he and his wife were reared under wholesome and sincere religious influences and both are believers in the doctrines of Christianity, his sympathies being with the doctrines of the Presbyterian Church, while she is an attendant at the Congregational Church. For some years both have been interested in the work of the Eastern Star and have been active in the local chapter, while he also maintains relationship with San Diego Lodge No. 35, F. & A. M., and is further identified with the Ancient Order of Foresters No. 8520, at Ramona, and Sunset Lodge No. 328, I. O. O. F., in San Diego.

F. MORETTI. In no country in the world has the art of dairying been brought to the point of perfection more truly than in Switzerland, and of those trained in the art under native skies none is more thorough or painstaking than F. Moretti, who owns and manages one of the finest dairies in San Diego county. On his ranch of two thousand acres in close proximity to Santa Ysabel he has two hundred and sixty cows, in the care of which he employs ten men throughout the year. A market for the cream is found in San Diego and the butter sells readily in the home market. With the exception of the land necessary to grow hay and grain for the cattle, the entire acreage is given over to grazing.

As has already been intimated, Mr. Moretti is a native of Switzerland, born January 18, 1872, a son of Antona and Martinoia (Domenica) Moretti, natives also of the same country. The father died at the age of fifty-two years, but the mother is still in the enjoyment of good health and is now in her fifty-fifth year. Of the seven children comprising the parental family two are in California, our subject and Philip, who is now attending the business college in San Diego.

Mr. Moretti set sail from Switzerland in 1888, when little more than a lad, and landed in New York city a stranger, unfamiliar with the language and customs of his new home. His idea was to settle in the west, and he soon made his way to the Pacific coast. The first employment which he was able to secure was in the marine service in San Francisco, three years later becoming interested in the dairy business in Santa Cruz county. Eleven years in that locality was the means of giving him a well-rounded knowledge of the soil and climate, as well as proving to him his ability to manage successfully a business of larger magnitude. Coming to San Diego county, he selected and purchased his present ranch of two thousand acres, and the substantial business of which he is now the head is his as the result of principles rightly applied and a careful guard over details.

Fraternally Mr. Moretti belongs to the Odd Fellows lodge at Santa Cruz and to the lodge of Foresters at Julian. He has made a study of the principles laid down in the platforms of the two great political parties and his decision is in favor of the Republican party. His religious training in boyhood was in the Catholic Church, to whose teachings he has always adhered, and he worships in the church of that denomination in Santa Ysabel.

CAPT. ALBERT A. POLHAMUS. Actively identified with the valuable government improvements that have been made along the Southern California coast line is Capt. A. A. Polhamus. A man of great intelligence and with exceptional mechanical ability, as a government contractor he has built many large breakwaters on the Pacific coast. A thorough master of his business, faithful to the trusts reposed in him, and strictly honest in all his dealings, the captain has won well-deserved success in his career, and the respect in which he is held gives evidence of his upright and manly life.

Albert Polhamus was born October 1, 1837, in Albany, N. Y. He is of thrifty Holland ancestry, being a direct descendant of the immigrant ancestor, Johannes Polhaemus, who came from Holland in 1660 with his friend, Peter Stuyvesant, the last of the Dutch governors, and settled in what is now Brooklyn, being the first minister of that city.

Another Johannes Polhamus, a descendant many generations removed from the first ancestor, was the grandfather of Albert Polhamus. This Johannes Polhamus was born in New York and for many years had charge of vessels sailing on the Hudson river. His son, Isaac Polhamus, father of Albert Polhamus, succeeded to the occupation in which he was reared. For many years he was captain of sailing boats on the Hudson river and after the steamboat was invented he sailed on the Paragon, the third steamer that was ever built. Isaac Polhamus married Agnes McQueen, a native of Scotland, a woman of excellent education. To this marriage there were born eight children, the youngest son being Albert, with whom this sketch is concerned.

Brought up in Albany, N. Y., Albert A. Polhamus was educated in the public schools, and at the Albany Academy. From boyhood he was familiar with boating in all of its phases. Interested particularly in mechanical pursuits, he studied engineering and at the age of seventeen years was made assistant engineer of an ocean steamer. He followed the sea in that capacity for a number of years and in 1860 came through the Straits of Magellan to California as engineer on the steamer Granada.

The Granada was to have run between San Francisco and Panama in opposition to the Pacific mail steamers, and Albert Polhamus was to have been chief engineer. After performing her long journey in safety the Granada was run on the rocks by the pilot in charge while entering the Golden Gate, and completely wrecked.

In November, 1860, at the urgent request of General Banning, Mr. Polhamus came from San Francisco to Wilmington to assist in starting a traction engine, which the general had purchased for the purpose of hauling trains of provision wagons across the desert to Arizona in fulfilling army contracts. Mr. Polhamus did not succeed with the steam wagon and the project was abandoned by Banning. The friendship then formed between the two men was destined to be of long standing, as Mr. Polhamus stayed with General Banning for the next twenty-four years, first as engineer, then as master of his steamers, and afterwards for many years as one of the superintendents of Banning's Transportation Company of Wilmington and San Pedro. In 1884 Captain Polhamus entered into a manufacturing business, but this not proving successful he removed, four years later, to San Diego, where he accepted the positions of superintendent of the Coronado Beach Ferry Company and of Spreckles Brothers Ballast Company.

Of later years Captain Polhamus has devoted most of his time to government contracting. Among the first contracts executed by him was the first breakwater built at San Pedro, connecting Terminal with Dead Man's Island. He was the first to bring rock from Catalina Island for breakwater purposes. Some of the oldest and strongest built bridges in Los Angeles county were constructed by his engineering skill and nearly all of the government breakwater at Port Harford was built by him. The deepening of the harbor bar at San Diego and at San Pedro and the dredging of the Middle Ground, besides many pieces of like work, stand as monuments to this man's engineering ability.

In Wilmington, in November, 1869, Captain Polhamus married Georgiana V. Monteith, who was born in Jefferson City, Mo., a daughter of Hiram and Lena (Smale) Monteith. The Captain and Mrs. Polhamus have had four children, namely: Isaac, in business in Los Angeles; Lena, wife of W. M. Crouse, of San Diego; Agnes, a graduate of the New York College of Dental Surgery, who is now practicing her profession in New York City; and Caroline, a brilliant musician, with a strong, sweet, soprano voice, who is engaged in concert singing in New York City. Politically Captain Polhamus is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member and past master of Wilmington Lodge No. 198, F. & A. M.

FRANCISCO M. MORENO. When in the development of Mexico there began to be interested Spanish families of proud old Castilian pedigree and the scions of nobility crossed the ocean to identify themselves with the unknown possibilities of their American dependency, the Moreno family became an integral part of the Mexican colony, and succeeding generations lived and labored far from the original home of the race. After long and eventful connection with Mexican history one of the name, Francisco Moreno, came to the United States in 1872, joining his father-in-law, Sylvester Gomez, who ten years before had crossed the border into the States, settling in the San Luis Rey valley in California. On his arrival in San Diego county Mr. Moreno found that his father-in-law had settled in a fertile valley, but had made no attempt to improve or secure by title the land on which he lived. Acting without delay, in 1872 Mr. Moreno took up the tract of three hundred and twenty acres. As the years passed by he made necessary improvements on the land and a part was brought under cultivation to grain, while the balance was utilized as a vineyard and in walnut and orange groves. Before leaving his native land he had gained a knowledge of the manufacture of wine, and as soon as he found that the grapes raised in his valley vineyard were well adapted for wine he at once turned his attention to the business. Gradually he relinquished other activities in order to concentrate his attention upon his winery and this he conducted until 1902, the year of his death. The widow was left in her old age without children to continue the business, but there was not lacking a relative with the ability and energy necessary for the work, and this was Francisco M. Moreno, a nephew of the founder of the winery, being a son of his brother, Edward.

Through his mother as well as on the paternal side Francisco M. Moreno is of Spanish extraction and descended from early Mexican settlers. When only eleven years of age he left Sonora, Mexico, where he was born in July, 1875, and crossed the border into the United States, joining his uncle in the San Luis Rey valley, where he was sent to a public school in Pala. After leaving school he gave his entire attention to assisting his uncle on the ranch and in the winery. In 1898 he returned to his old home in Mexico, but three years later he came back to the San Luis Rey valley and now has full charge of the ranch and winery, relieving his aunt of its many anxieties and responsibilities unsuited for one of her years. The ranch is said to be one of the best in this part of San Diego county and bears improvements of value, made by the former owner during his long residence at the place. Following in the footsteps of the original owner, the present proprietor exercises a close and rigid supervision of the entire property, maintains first-class improvements, cares for the vineyard and the fruit trees with unceasing vigilance, and oversees the manufacture of wine of the purest quality. In religion he was reared in the Roman Catholic Church and, like all other members of his family, supports its charities and contributes to its maintenance. Since coming to San Diego county he has been identified with the congregation at Pala and attends worship at that church.

H. K. DAY. Numbered among the active agriculturists of San Diego county who have met with good success in their independent calling and are now enjoying a comfortable competency, acquired chiefly through their own efforts, is H. K. Day, of De Luz. He is the owner of a productive farm, which he has carried on for nearly a score of years with excellent pecuniary results. A son of the late E. M. Day, he was born October 4, 1852, in Erie county, Pa., coming from patriotic stock, his paternal grandfather having fought in the war of 1812.

A native of New York state, E. M. Day came to California with his family in 1858. He first engaged in mining in Placer county, then in farming in Lake county for ten years, and was afterwards engaged in general farming elsewhere until his death, at the age of seventy-eight years. He married Caroline Beardsley, who was born in the Empire state, and who is now a venerable woman of fourscore years.

Coming with his parents to this state when but six years old, H. K. Day received but limited educational advantages, attending first the pioneer schools of Placer county, and later of Lake county. He was subsequently located in San Jose, where he learned the machinists trade and for ten years worked in a foundry and machine shop. Coming to De Luz in 1888, he took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land, from which he has improved his present valuable ranch.

In 1875 Mr. Day married Ida May Belle Finch, who died September 22nd 1903, leaving three children, namely: Frank, who married Lulu Adams; Jessie, the wife of D. M. Tittle; and Edith, the wife of Louis Garnsey. In his political affiliations Mr. Day is independent, voting with the courage of his convictions. Mrs. Day was a member of the Episcopal Church, and was a rapidly ripening christian. Full of good works she made for herself a place in the community which will be very hard to fill.

ELMORE C. SHIPLEY. Among the pioneer settlers of Fallbrook no one is more worthy of notice in a work of this kind than Elmore C. Shipley, a well-to-do farmer, now living retired from active pursuits. Coming here nearly a quarter of a century ago, he has opened up a good ranch from the uncultivated soil, and is today enjoying a competence. His ambition to build up a creditable homestead has resulted in the improvement of a productive ranch, the erection of a substantial residence, and the gathering together of the many conveniences and comforts upon which the health and happiness of a household so largely depends. He was born October 20, 1841, in McMinnville, Tenn., a son of Thomas Shipley.

Removing with his family from Tennessee, his native state, to Missouri in 1850, Thomas Shipley lived for eight years in Cass county, employed during the time in tilling the soil. In 1858 he went to Miami county, Kans., where he was employed in agricultural pursuits until his death, in 1886, at the venerable age of four score years. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah Elizabeth Thomas, was born in Kentucky, in 1806, and died in 1880 in Kansas, at the age of seventy-four years.

Going with his parents to Missouri when about nine years old, Elmore C. Shipley had few of the educational advantages enjoyed by the boys of these days, his knowledge of books being obtained at a subscription school. Going with his family to Kansas in 1858, he assisted his father in the pioneer labor of improving a farm, remaining at home until twenty-three years of age, during which time he had not seen a railroad. In 1862 he made a trip from Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to Fort Union, N. Mex., hauling freight for the government with an ox-team, and being five months going and coming. In 1883, on account of continued ill health, Mr. Shipley came to San Diego county, locating near Fallbrook, where he purchased land, on which he lived for a while. Subsequently selling that, he bought his present ranch of sixty acres, and in 1887 erected his present pleasant residence.

In Paola, Kans., February 9, 1865, Mr. Shipley married Clarissa Maria Cook, who was born August 1, 1848, in Richfield, Adams county, Ill., a daughter of Oliver H. Cook, and a granddaughter of Ralph Cook. Born and brought up in New York state, Ralph Cook migrated to Illinois in 1830, settling on the present site of the city of Quincy, which then contained but three dwelling houses, those being rude log cabins built by the original pioneers of the place. Taking up land, he improved a farm, on which he lived until his death, at the age of eighty-eight years. He married Dolly Van Buren, who was born in New York, a daughter of Martin Van Buren, a cousin of President Martin Van Buren. She survived him, dying in Quincy, Ill., at the venerable age of ninety-three years.

Oliver H. Cook was born November 15, 1818, in Oswego county, N. Y., and when a boy of twelve years accompanied his parents to Quincy, Ill., where he had but limited educational advantages. He was hired out by his father until twenty-two years old, and when his time was up went to Jersey county, Ill., where he worked three years. Returning to Adams county, he remained there until 1859, when he migrated to Miami county, Kans., where he traded his five pairs of oxen, his sole capital, for one hundred and sixty acres of land. Beginning the improvement of a farm, he met with good success, in 1883 being the owner of three-fourths of a section of good land. Selling out his possessions in that year, he came to California, bought land near Fallbrook, and was actively engaged in general ranching until 1900. He has since lived retired from active business, and is now making his home with Mr. and Mrs. Shipley. In 1843, in Adams county, Ill., Mr. Cook married Clarissa Quincy, by whom he had two children: Mary, deceased, who married Joseph Chilson; and Clarissa Maria, wife of Mr. Shipley. Mrs.

Cook died December 13, 1903, aged seventy-six years. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Shipley, two children have been born. Thomas Jefferson Shipley married Katie Gird, daughter of H. H. Gird, of whom a brief sketch may be found elsewhere, and they have four children, Ronald G., Mark G., Verne G. and Della. Andrew Bailey Shipley, living in San Diego, married Minnie Andrews Bryant. Mrs. Shipley has considerable property in her own name, owning a valuable ranch of two hundred and ten acres, and one of the finest residences in Fallbrook. Politically Mr. Shipley is identified with the Democratic party, and religiously both he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church.

HORACE EVERETT HARRIS. Ever since identifying himself with the city of San Bernardino as a permanent resident Mr. Harris has held a high position in commercial, financial and horticultural circles, and it is the universal testimony of the people that few men have accomplished as much as he in behalf of the town's material development. Included among the responsibilities which he has assumed and the positions he has filled may be mentioned those of vice-president of the San Bernardino National Bank, and a director and chairman of the loan committee of the San Bernardino Savings Bank, which positions he now holds. During 1905 he organized the Home Gas Company, of which he now acts as president and which owns a well-equipped gas plant with mains extending through all parts of San Bernardino. Recognizing the importance of the horticultural interests of the locality, he has been a factor in the development of its possibilities, and at this writing officiates as president of the Globe Farming Company, operating several thousand acres, also as president of the Fontana Land and Water Company, owning more than twenty thousand acres of improved land.

The Harris family became established in New England during the colonial period of our country's history. Stephen Harris, who was a native of Northampton, Mass., became a farmer in Vermont. In his neighborhood he won a reputation for indefatigable industry and great energy, and it was said of him that he could cradle fifteen acres of rye in one day, while with other work he was proportionately rapid. A son and namesake of this pioneer farmer was born in Brattleboro, Vt., and also followed agricultural pursuits. On retiring from farm work he went to Connecticut, where he spent his last days. His wife, Maria F., was born in Massachusetts and died in New Hampshire. Descended from Puritan ancestry, she was a daughter of Josiah Abbott, who was born in Andover, Mass., and became a farmer in Vermont. Throughout the Revolutionary war he served as a commissioned officer.

In the family of Stephen Harris, Jr., there were eight children, all of whom attained years of maturity, and two are now living. One of the sons, Warren, was a member of a New York regiment during the Civil war. Another son, Horace Everett, whose name introduces this narrative, was born near Lemington, Essex county, Vt., August 6, 1842, and was fourth in the family circle. Life to him passed uneventfully through the years of boyhood and youth, but the opening of the Civil war broke into the even tenor of his quiet existence. During November of 1861 he enlisted in the Fifth Maine Battery of Mounted Artillery and spent the first winter at Augusta and Portland, Me. Early in 1862 he accompanied his regiment to Washington and from there to Virginia for service with General Pope, under whom he participated in the battles of Cedar Mountain and Rappahannock Station, also Thoroughfare Gap. He was present at the second engagement at Bull Run, and during the battle the battery lost four out of six pieces and he was wounded in the side of the neck by a bullet that he still carries. Soon he recovered from the effects of the wound and rejoined his regiment, with which he participated in the battle of Chancellorsville, the three days' engagement at Gettysburg, and the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Courthouse, North Anna, South Anna, Cold Harbor and Petersburg. In the fall of 1864 his corps was sent after General Early, and followed him from Washington back through Maryland and down the Shenandoah to Winchester. Afterward he served under General Sheridan until the close of the war. September 19, 1864, he took part in the battle of Opequan; September 22, 1864, was at Fisher's Hill; and October 19, at Cedar Creek, was wounded in the left leg above the ankle by a minie ball, which confined him to his bed for one hundred and eighty days, first at Baltimore, then in Philadelphia, and eventually at home. When honorably discharged in the fall of 1865 he was still obliged to use crutches in walking.

On regaining his strength, Mr. Harris attended a business college at Augusta, Me., and later traveled for his health in Cuba, thence going to New Orleans and on to Galveston. In the latter city he was employed for six months as a clerk in the marine quartermaster's department and continued in the government employ until the department was disbanded. Later, with Captain Palmer, he bought horses in Texas and drove them overland to Missouri, where he sold them from Springfield to St. Louis. Shortly after disposing of the stock he returned to the east, and settled at Coaticook, Quebec, after a brief sojourn in New Hampshire. During his residence at Coaticook he met and married Miss Priscilla Parker, who was born and educated in that town. Though of Canadian birth, Mrs. Harris is of colonial New England ancestry. Her parents, Alfred and Zerniah (Whitcomb) Parker, were of honored Revolutionary lineage, the latter being a daughter of a major in the patriot army, while the former was a son of Aaron Parker, a soldier from Massachusetts in the defense of the colonies.

During the year of his marriage, 1871, Mr. Harris brought his wife back to the States and settled at Newell, Buena Vista county, Iowa, where he engaged in buying grain and shipping to Chicago. From that occupation he drifted into the banking business, and with N. W. Condron, established the private bank of Condron & Harris. After two years his brother-in-law, S. A. Parker, removed from Vermont to Iowa and purchased Mr. Condron's interest in the bank, which was conducted in such a conservative and judicious manner that every financial panic was safely weathered and every check presented was paid immediately upon presentation. The bank gained the confidence of farmers and business men, and its deposits increased with the prosperity of the country.

The ill-health of his wife caused Mr. Harris in 1885 to sell his interest in the bank to Mr. Parker and remove to Arizona, establishing his home in Prescott, where the climate proved beneficial for the purpose desired. Meanwhile, not enjoying release from business activities, he took up mining, the principal occupation of the region. For some time fortune went against him, but he continued until he had sunk $53,000 in mines and quartz mills in Yavapai and Yuma counties. When the investments had reached their lowest ebb of depression fortune changed for the better through his interest in the Harquahala mines in Yuma county. On the incorporation of the company owning these mines he was elected secretary, and in the next twenty-six months $936,000 was taken out of the mines and he paid out over $500,000 in dividends. For the prosecution of the work a twenty-stamp mill was erected. The first bar of bullion taken out, $10,200, was the smallest in twenty-six months, and the largest was $96,000 in value. After a fortune had been made from the mines the company sold out to a syndicate.

Coming to San Bernardino in 1893, Mr. Harris now owns and occupies one of the finest homes in the city, a residence with modern appointments set in the midst of five acres of grounds, on G and Tenth streets. Here he and his wife entertain their hosts of friends and enjoy every comfort which ample means can provide. Their only child, Pearl, is a graduate of Pomona College and is now the wife of Ralph E. Swing. In the midst of his many activities of the past and present Mr. Harris has never found the leisure necessary for participation in political affairs, in which he takes no part aside from voting the Republican ticket at all elections. Old war days are kept in mind through his association with Corinman Post No. 57, G. A. R., of San Bernardino, and Mrs. Harris also participates in the activities of the Woman's Relief Corps. While making his home in Quebec he was initiated into Masonry in the blue lodge at Coaticook, but of late years has not been active in the order, finding his time fully occupied with the many financial and business enterprises in which he has engaged with significant success.

ULYSSES GRANT PRICE. Not far from San Bernardino lies the ranch of fifty-four acres which for four years, from 1902 to 1906, was the property of Mr. Price. Assuming the responsibilities of ranch life with little or no experience, the results which have followed his efforts have been remarkable and compare favorably with what men twice his years and with twice his experience need not be ashamed to lay claim to. Mr. Price made a specialty of raising blackberries, having eight acres in this fruit alone, while the rest of the land was given to the raising of corn, tomatoes and pieplant.

Born in Sangamon county, Ill., September 14, 1869, Mr. Price is a son of Josiah and Jeanette (Hutchinson) Price, both of whom were born in New Jersey and are now making their home in Kansas City, Mo., well advanced in years. At the time the war cloud spread a heavy gloom over the land Josiah Price was living in Illinois and it was from the latter state that he enlisted his services in behalf of the northern cause. As a volunteer in the One Hundred and Fourteenth Illinois Infantry he served for three years, participating in the battle of Gettysburg, under General Meade, while during the latter part of his service he was under the command of Gen. U. S. Grant. In memory of the days spent in camp and field he is a member of the Grand Army Post at Kansas City, Mo., where events and experiences are recounted which the passing years have not dimmed. Politically Mr. Price is a Republican, on the ticket of which party he was elected to the office of road overseer, a position which he now holds. Both Mr. and Mrs. Price are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Kansas City, Mo.

Ten children originally comprised the parental family, but four of the number are now deceased, and of those living Grant is the only resident of California. Born in Sangamon county, Ill., he was only one month old when his parents removed to Champaign county, same state, where they remained for ten years, in 1879 settling in Kansas. His school life was passed principally in the latter state, and upon leaving the common schools he turned his attention to learning the trade of engineer. Following this he ran a stationary engine in Glenelder, Kans., for ten years, thereafter removing to Missouri, where for two years he carried on farming and for the same length of time filled a position as engineer. After four years spent in Missouri he went to Arizona, where for two and a half years he conducted a creamery very successfully. For a number of years he had been gradually working his way to the far west and in 1902 he arrived in California. Coming direct to San Bernardino, he selected the property upon which he made his his home until recently, purchasing it and removing upon it the same year.

In 1895 Mr. Price established a home of his own by his marriage with Miss Adeline Carson, who was also a native of Sangamon county, Ill. The five children who have been born to them are named in order of birth as follows: Edgar, Lester, Linwood, Gertrude and Elwood. Following in the footsteps of his father in the matter of politics Mr. Price is a Republican. Personal qualities of a high order have been bequeathed to Mr. Price in rich measure, the possession of which makes him a man among men and all who know him respect and honor him.

HERMAN D. VAIL. Associated as one of the proprietors of the Model Laundry of Long Beach, located at No. 644 West Fifth street, Herman D. Vail has been a resident of Southern California since 1892. He was born in Keokuk county, in the town of Coak Creek, June 26, 1880, a son of John N. and Lydia M. (Garwood) Vail, the former of whom is deceased, while the latter is living in Pasadena, the wife of J. F. Harrison. The family came to California in 1892 in search of health for the father, who was a veterinary dentist and who followed his profession in Pasadena until his death, which occurred in February, 1904. Herman D. Vail received his education in the public schools of Iowa and California, and after the close of his schooldays he sought employment in a bakery in Pasadena. He finally came to Long Beach and found employment with L. B. Morgan, who was conducting the Long Beach Steam Laundry, then returned to Pasadena, and from there went to Redlands, where he embarked in the laundry business. In the meantime Mr. Morgan, having disposed of his interest in the Long Beach Steam Laundry, organized the Model Laundry. September 27, 1902, he came to Long Beach and purchased an interest in the Model Laundry with Mr. Morgan and carried on the work for a time, when a company was organized and incorporated and has since been conducted successfully here.

Mr. Vail was united in marriage with Miss Anna H. Roos, in Pasadena, and they have one daughter, Rose E. Their home is located at No. 1126 East Fifth street, where he has erected a comfortable residence. Mrs. Vail is a native of Buffalo, N. Y. Both are members of the Baptist Church and Mr. Vail is associated with the Young Men's Christian Association. Politically he is a stanch advocate of Prohibition principles.

OSCAR BENNETT. A man of ability, enterprise and intelligence, Oscar Bennett is a most able and valued worker in the interests of the San Pedro Lumber Company, with which he has been connected for many years, being now employed as surveyor of lumber. His faithfulness in all of his duties, his integrity, and his excellent good sense in all matters pertaining to industrial, financial or social matters have caused him to be highly respected and esteemed by all with whom he has dealings. He is distinguished as a native-born son of California, his birth having occurred November 11, 1870, in San Francisco, where his father, Michael Bennett, was a pioneer settler.

Emigrating from Germany, his native country, when a young man, Michael Bennett located in San Francisco in 1849, coming to the Pacific coast with the gold seekers. A shoemaker by trade, he subsequently established a large business in that city as a shoe manufacturer, making a specialty of doing fine work for customers. Removing to Wilmington in 1879, he continued there as a shoe manufacturer until his retirement from active pursuits. He subsequently settled in San Pedro, where he resided until his death, in 1893. During the Civil war he served in a California regiment, being sergeant of his company, and was wounded by the Apache Indians in Arizona. In politics he was a stanch Republican, and was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife, Bertha, died in Los Angeles, Cal., in July, 1904. She bore him fifteen children, nine of whom are living, Oscar, the subject of this sketch, being the sixth child in order of birth.

Having completed his early education in the public schools of Los Angeles and Wilmington, Oscar Bennett, at the age of fifteen years, entered the employ of the San Pedro and Wilmington Transportation Company, for whom he worked until 1890. Since that time, a period of fifteen years, he has been associated with the San Pedro Lumber Company, for the past six years being employed as a surveyor of lumber, a work at which he is an expert, being quick, skilful and very accurate. A man of good financial ability, he has invested his means in property to some extent.

In Los Angeles, Mr. Bennett married Mary Gomes, who was born on Madeira Island, Portugal, and they have two sons, Oscar Arthur and Gerald Winchester. Politically Mr. Bennett is a Republican, and fraternally he is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, being past chancellor of his lodge and district deputy of District No. 69. He was a member of San Pedro Parlor, N. S. G. W., as long as it was in existence, and likewise belonged to the Benjamin Harrison Camp, S. of V., serving as first lieutenant until the organization was disbanded.

L. J. QUINT. The religious persecution which drove the Huguenots from France caused the Quinte family to seek refuge in Ireland and during the same generation the name became transplated into Maine. At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war one of the family, Benjamin Quinte, who was engaged in the coasting trade in Maine, enlisted for service in the aid of the colonies and sailed the seas on the Bon Homme Richard under that gallant admiral, John Paul Jones, and served in the famous battle between the Seraphis and the Bon Homme Richard. A son, Thomas, enlisted under George Washington in the Revolutionary army at the beginning of the war and followed him until its close. Afterward he received a pension until his death. When the war closed the family moved from Portsmouth to Oxford, being among the first pioneers of the town and received a tract of land from the original proprietors of the township, which has ever since been called by their name as Quinttown.

Josiah Quint, another son of the Revolutionary soldier, was born and reared in Maine, and became an early settler of South Ryegate, Caledonia county, Vt., where he followed the millwright's trade until his death. The next generation was represented by Josiah, Jr., who was born at South Ryegate on the Connecticut river, and there engaged in farm pursuits through all of his life, with the exception of the years from 1852 to 1859, when he engaged in mining in California. Stanchly devoted to the Republican party, he was elected on that ticket to various local offices. In religion he was of the Presbyterian faith. Either during his lifetime or that of his father the family name was shortened to its present form by the dropping out of the final "e." In his early manhood he married Adeline Hancock, who was born at Woodsville, N. H., and died in Vermont. Her father, Thomas, a farmer by occupation, was a member of the family whose most illustrious representative was John Hancock, signer of the Declaration of Independence. One of the brothers, the late Major Henry Hancock, served as an officer under General Taylor in the Mexican war and also is entitled to the distinction of having laid out the city of Los Angeles.

In the family of Josiah Quint, Jr., there were four children, all still living. L. J., who was third in order of birth, was born at the old homestead at South Ryegate, Vt., February 11, 1865, and received public-school advantages, supplemented by attendance at a seminary at Newbury, Vt. On starting out to earn his livelihood he secured employment in granite works and remained as salesman or office clerk for seven years. During 1893 he came to California and began ranching at Sherman, where he owned twenty acres and rented adjacent tracts until he had the control of eight hundred acres of grain and stock land. At the time of the building of the electric railway he sold his land. In 1898 he bought the stock of goods owned by the first merchant in Sherman and engaged in general merchandising until 1902, when he sold out, removed to Redondo and embarked in the grocery business in the bank building. After sixteen months he sold his grocery and bought the Redondo Bazaar, which he now conducts, carrying in stock a large collection of shells, curios, etc., and occupying a central location at the entrance of the wharf.

The marriage of Mr. Quint took place at Los Angeles in 1898 and united him with Laura, daughter of J. Bilderain, a pioneer of Los Angeles, where she was born. They are the parents of one child, Consuela. Politically Mr. Quint gives pronounced allegiance to the Republican party. In 1904 he was elected a member of the board of trustees, of Redondo and at the same time was chosen president of the board, which position he now fills. In fraternal relations he hold membership with Redondo Lodge No. 328, F. & A. M., and is also associated with the Order of Eagles.

E. VIEWEGER. San Bernardino was only a small town when Mr. Vieweger located there in 1881 and began to work at his trade, later becoming a building contractor, a calling which he has since followed with marked success. A native of Germany, he was born in Mittweida, Saxony, October 23, 1838, a son of Ernst Vieweger, a contractor and builder in Germany, where both parents spent their entire lives. But three of their ten children are now living and E. Vieweger is the only member of the family in America. After the completion of his education, which was received in Kamnitz, Germany, he was apprenticed to a stone-mason to learn that trade, which he plied in that place and Mittweida until 1871, when he immigrated to America, locating first at Norwich, Conn., and then in Boston, after the historic fire at that place. During all this time he was employed at his trade.

In 1881 Mr. Vieweger came to San Bernardino and secured his first work on the Bear valley dam, which was then in process of construction. Later he began to take building contracts and assisted in the buildings of the county hospital, the Katz block, Stewart hotel block, Southern hotel block, Farmers' bank building, Ruffin block and other structures in that city, having a hand as well in the making of the city reservoir. Fraternally he affiliates with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and politically believes in the doctrines embraced in the platform of the Democratic party.

By his marriage in Germany in 1866 Mr. Vieweger was united with Miss Flora Koehler, a native of that country, who was born in 1846, and they have become the parents of three children: Meleta, who lives at home; Margaret, residing in Pasadena; and Ernst, engaged in the laundry business at Ocean Park. Mr. Vieweger is a man of strong principles and stable character and is held in the highest respect and esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

JOSEPH W. MYZELLE. Although a comparatively recent resident of San Bernardino, Joseph W. Myzelle has proven himself a worthy citizen and has gained many friends in both social and business circles. His natives state is Arkansas, his birth occurring in White county, January 8, 1862. His father, who was of French extraction, was a farmer until the opening of the Civil war, when he enlisted for service and was killed in the performance of his military duties. His mother, who was a native of Illinois, died in that state when her only son, Joseph W., was but six years of age. His boyhood days were spent in Perry and Jackson counties, and his education was acquired in the common schools. Deprived of his parents when a mere child and left with no inheritance save pluck, energy and ambition, he began when fifteen years of age to work for his own support. Going to Murphysboro, Ill., he worked at the carpenter's trade for one year, then continued this employment at Memphis, Tenn., for a time, later engaging as an independent contractor and builder there, and continuing in this business until 1892. Returning to Murphysboro, Ill., he bought a two hundred and twenty acre farm five miles north of that city and engaged in agricultural pursuits, eventually bringing the property to a high state of improvement.

In 1902 Mr. Myzelle rented his farm and located in San Bernardino, Cal., where for one year he worked at the building trade, then began to take contracts for the erection of residences. He has built many fine houses in San Bernardino and his own home is an attractive example of his work, located at No. 1180 Bellevue avenue. His marriage in 1888 to Maude E. Eakin, a native of Illinois, occurred at Murphysboro, that state, and they have four children living, Nathan, Ray, William and Minnie. Mr. Myzelle is a member of the Foresters and Eagles, and belongs to the Baptist Church. Politically he affiliates with the Democratic party and is interested in all matters of public import to the community in which he lives.

GEORGE E. HEAP. The entire lifetime of George E. Heap has been spent in Southern California, his birth having occurred October 27, 1867, in San Bernardino, where his father, Parley W. Heap, Sr., a native of Sheffield, England, settled in 1851. During the first years of the father's residence in this locality he was occupied as a general farmer, teamster and freighter, but later he turned his attention to the business of well-boring and is still so employed in San Bernardino county. His wife, who was Miss Eliza Bottoms before her marriage, was born in Cleveland, Ohio, the daughter of John Bottoms, a native of England, who came to this section in 1851 and until the time of his death was engaged as a farmer here. Mrs. Heap died in San Bernardino in 1885.

After completing his studies in the public schools of San Bernardino, his boyhood days having been spent on the farm, George E. Heap served for two years on the police force of this city under Huse Thomas, chief of police, retaining his position for a like period under John Ralphs when the latter was appointed to the position of chief of the force. Mr. Heap resigned this position to become deputy county sheriff under Frank Holcomb, filling this office four years, when he was elected township constable for a term of four years. After the expiration of this time he declined to again become a candidate for the office, desiring to take up other lines of work. He secured the contract for installing the machinery for the Edison Electric Company in their plant No. 2, at Santa Ana cañon and he also handled all of the material and cement for the five-mile tunnel, which is 8x10 feet in dimensions, the work requiring sixteen months. Following this he spent a short time in Redlands, but returning to San Bernardino he bought an interest in his present transfer business, forming a partnership with R. F. Berryman, and conducting the business under the firm name of Berryman & Heap. They have the largest and most important business of the kind in San Bernardino and keep four wagons continuously busy in the prosecution of their work. Besides this business Mr. Heap owns property in the city, including two residences on F street.

By his marriage in San Bernardino Mr. Heap was united with Miss Estella Case, a native of this city. A sketch of the life of her brother, Jesse H. Case, appears elsewhere in this work. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Heap has been blessed in the birth of three children, namely: Roy, Hazel and Bessie. Mr. Heap is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows here, and of San Bernardino Parlor No. 290, N. S. G. W. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party and is actively interested in all matters of social and civic interest to the community at large.

DANIEL M. HATHORN. Numbered among the skilful and progressive agriculturists of Los Angeles county is D. M. Hathorn, living near Compton, who has met with well-merited success in his chosen occupation, and is at present retired from active pursuits, enjoying a comfortable competency, acquired chiefly through his own exertions. Coming from excellent New England ancestry, he was born, July 18, 1861, in Maine, which was likewise the birthplace of his parents, J. G. and Martha (Durell) Hathorn. They came to California in 1869, settling in Los Angeles county, and are now residing in Redondo, the father being eighty-two years of age, and the mother seventy-seven years old. They have but two children, a daughter living with them, and D. M., the subject of this sketch.

Coming with his parents to California in 1869, D. M. Hathorn crossed the Isthmus of Panama on New Year's day, subsequently landing in San Francisco. For a time the family lived in Marysville, coming from there to Compton, where Daniel M. attended the public schools, and afterwards he assisted his father in caring for the home farm. When ready to begin the battle of life on his own account he selected farming as his occupation, and having bought forty acres of land began its improvement. By industry and persevering application he raised large crops of hay, alfalfa and fruit, and as he accumulated money he invested in other land, buying a ranch of forty acres. In the management of his ranch, he met with undisputed success, and was actively and profitably engaged in general farming and dairying until 1905, when he leased the land for a term of three years. Although practically retired at present from agricultural labors, he has plenty to take up his time and attention, being financially interested in various Compton enterprises. He is public-spirited, progressive and liberal, and has won for himself a good record as an honest man and a valued citizen.

In 1885, in Compton, Mr. Hathorn married Margaret Johnson, who was born in Canada, a daughter of Levi Johnson, and they have one son, Roy, born in 1886. Mrs. Hathorn is a woman of refinement, and a member of the Congregational Church. Politically Mr. Hathorn is independent, voting with the courage of his convictions, regardless of party affiliations. Socially he is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters and of the Fraternal Aid Association.

JAMES FRANKLIN FERGUSON. As superintendent of the water system of the Hemet Land and Water Company and an extensive property owner James Franklin Ferguson is one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Hemet. He was born August 24, 1869, in Chariton county, Mo., the son of John W. and Mary Ellen (White) Ferguson, the former a native of Indiana and of Scotch descent, and the latter of Bartholomew county of the same state. The elder Ferguson served in the Civil war as a member of Company C, Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was a contractor and builder who removed from his native state to Chariton county, Mo., and later to Meeker county, Minn., where he died in 1875, when the son, James Franklin, was six years of age. The mother survived her husband many years, her death occurring in Los Angeles county, Cal. Of the five children in their family three grew to maturity and two are now living.

The oldest child of the family and the only son living, James F. Ferguson was reared in Minnesota from the age of five years, in which state he received a preliminary education through the medium of the public schools, and attended the high school at Litchfield after the completion of his studies in the lower branches. He was born with pronounced natural talents in mechanical lines and when only sixteen years old became a stationary engineer in a Minnesota woolen mill. In 1888 he came to Whittier, Cal., attended the Friends Academy for a short time and later engaged in clerking in general stores at Norwalk and Artesia, at the same time filling the position of assistant postmaster in each of these towns. In 1896 he came to Hemet for a change and rest, but one of his energy could not long remain quiet. Soon recuperating his strength he went to work in a grocery store, later engaging in merchandising and the jewelry business. His strong liking for mechanics led him to seek an opening in that line, however, and he accepted a position with the Lake Hemet Water Company which he has filled since 1898. For the past four years he has had charge of the pipe department, with about one hundred and fifty miles of pipes and flumes in the Hemet tract, carrying water from Lake Hemet and branches of the San Jacinto river. Among his property interests are the Ferguson block, which he built and owns, and a ten acre orchard.

The marriage of Mr. Ferguson occurred in Los Angeles, in 1895, when Miss Hattie M. Cassady, a native of Minnesota, became his wife. They are the parents of two children, Elmer Franklin and Lowell Cassady. Fraternally he is a member and junior warden of San Jacinto Lodge No. 338, F. & A. M.; is also a member of the San Jacinto Chapter No. 87, R. A. M.; of Hemet Lodge No. 90, I. O. O. F.; Independent order of Foresters; and Knights of the Maccabees. In national politics he votes with the Republican party, but exercises considerable independence in the casting of his ballot on local affairs and for city and county officers, believing that the man who has the best qualifications for the office should be elected to it. He is a charter member and deacon of the Christian Church, has strong temperance principles and exerts an elevating influence upon the community in which he lives.

FREDERICK ALONZO KNIGHT. Many years have passed since the Knight family left Holland and established themselves on the bleak Canadian shores and later generations assisted in the agricultural development of the province of Ontario, where Louis Wartman Knight labored in the tilling of the soil through much of his earlier life. Eventually, however, he sought a more favorable climate and came to the Pacific coast. For a time he made his home at Riverside, then lived in other sections of the state, but finally returned to Riverside, near which city he now operates and owns an orange grove. During his young manhood he married Maria Sproule, who was born in Ontario, Canada, descended from a North of Ireland family. They became the parents of four sons and one daughter: Margaret, wife of Stan Guess; Harry; O. Bruce and F. A., twins, and L. Lorne. F. A. Knight was born in Westbrook, Ontario, February 16, 1878. He received fair educational advantages, and after graduating from the Sydenham high school taught school near Odessa for two years. In his leisure hours while following the calling of a teacher he took up the study of law, toward which his tastes inclined and which he had selected for his profession.

On coming to California in 1899 Mr. Knight joined his uncle, A. A. Adair, a well-known attorney of Riverside, and engaged in studying law with the firm of Purington & Adair. In May of 1901 he was admitted to the bar and in October of the same year he came to Long Beach, where he has since conducted a general professional practice. In addition to his private practice, for two years he held the office of city attorney. A number of enterprises calculated to promote the material development of the city have received the impetus of his counsel and encouragement, among these being the Ocean Heights Investment Company, Incorporated, of which he is the president, and the Long Beach Hotel and Sanitarium Company, upon whose directorate he now serves.

The marriage of Mr. Knight was solemnized June 27, 1905, and united him with Miss Jessie A. Pasmore, who was born in Wisconsin, but has resided in the west since early childhood, having been educated in the Pomona schools. Both are identified with the First Congregational Church and contribute to its maintenance, as well as to uplifting movements of an undenominational nature. On the organization of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks Mr. Knight became a charter member and officiated as the first Loyal Knight of the lodge. In Masonry he holds membership with the blue lodge, chapter and commandery at Long Beach, and maintains a warm interest in all movements for the upbuilding of the order. Other organizations with which he holds membership are the Cosmopolitan Club, the Long Beach Bar Association and the Knights of Pythias. Political affairs receive his close attention and as a member of the Republican party he has been actively associated with local politics and has served as a delegate to conventions, as well as in other capacities connected with the political history of his home city.

HERMON D. WILLIAMS. Through his labors as a business man, and later as editor of an important newspaper, Hermon D. Williams has accomplished much for the upbuilding of Whittier, his home town, where he is known and honored as a citizen solicitous for the highest development of the city, and the greatest prosperity of its people. The paper of which he was editor for many years, and in the management of which he is still active at this writing, is the Whittier Register. It is conducted with conspicuous ability and vigor, and is widely recognized as one of the leading weekly papers of Southern California. The Register is independent of politics, has decided convictions on all moral questions, and has been a potent agency in moulding public opinion in Whittier, especially on the line of temperance and kindred reforms.

Mr. Williams was born at Richland, Keokuk county, Iowa, October 17, 1842, being a son of James and Angelina (Hunt) Williams, who were married at Annapolis, Ind., and for several years lived upon a farm near Terre Haute, in that state. After moving to Iowa the father occupied the position of postmaster at Richland and later was engaged in contracting and building.

Educated in Iowa schools, Hermon D. Williams added to the knowledge acquired from text books the broader education gained in the school of experience, and he may rightly be called a self educated man, the possessor of ripened culture and fine mental attainments. While his home was in Jasper county, Iowa, he was married to Miss Jennie Hiatt, a native of Indiana, who has always been in close touch with his various lines of work, and who by her timely help and wise counsel has contributed much to his success.

During the early years of manhood Mr. Williams taught school, but later became interested in carriage and wagon manufacturing, conducting the business for a number of year. Upon relinquishing these interests he removed to Des Moines, Iowa, and with his brother-in-law, B. F. Arnold, bought the Weekly Iowa Capital, which they conducted as a daily, and which continues to be one of the leading papers in the state, under the editorship of Hon. Lafe Young. Upon disposing of his interest in the Capital Mr. Williams became traveling representative of the Friends Publishing Association, of Chicago, and represented their interests in Iowa and Nebraska. Next he was induced to accept the position of field secretary of the Iowa Prisoners' Aid Association, an organization designed to assist discharged convicts to employment and promote prison reform. For several years he traveled throughout the state in this interest, giving lectures and organizing local associations. Largely through his efforts widespread interest was enlisted in the cause and the work was placed on a permanent basis.

On his removal to California during 1887 Mr. Williams resided for a time at Riverside, but in the following year came to Whittier, where he established a broom manufacturing business in partnership with Addison W. Naylor, now president of the First National Bank of Berkeley, and which he conducted successfully for two years. At the expiration of that time he took a leading part in establishing the Whittier Register, under the auspices of an incorporated company, and soon after he became the sole owner of the paper and its publishing and job printing business. He has now been engaged in the business for fifteen years, during which time his son, Harry A. Williams, who has now succeeded to the editorship, has been associated with him. Mr. Williams has constantly pursued high ideals in this varied public work, and through the medium of his paper, as well as by an energetic personality, he has been a helpful factor in the upbuilding of Whittier, and has efficiently aided in bringing it to a position of prestige and influence among surrounding towns.

JOHN L. SCARLETT. Wide and favorably known throughout the length and breadth of the Santa Clara valley of Southern California as a successful farmer and stock-raiser, John L. Scarlett is engaged extensively in agricultural pursuits and is one of the largest land holders in the vicinity of Oxnard. He is the son of John and Anna (Lyster) Scarlett, whose marriage occurred at Dougherty, Alameda county, Cal., September 22, 1864. John Scarlett was a native of Inneskillen, Ireland, and when only an infant lost his father by death. The family being left with limited means their home was destitute of many of the comforts of life, a livelihood being earned only by the severest toil. When he had succeeded in saving sufficient money with which to defray his expenses to America, Mr. Scarlett crossed the ocean to the United States, settling in Philadelphia, where he became a dyer in a woolen manufacturing plant. As soon as he had accumulated sufficient means to secure the passage of his mother from Ireland, he sent for her and she joined him in his Philadelphia home, where she remained until her death, in January, 1865. In the meantime, in 1857, he had become a pioneer of California, settling in San Francisco, where he was employed in a sugar refinery for some time, afterwards making his home in Alameda county for six years, thereafter returning to San Francisco. He eventually established a permanent home in Ventura county near Oxnard, where, in 1875, he brought his family to the ranch on the Colonia which he purchased from W. I. Rice. Here he engaged in general farming and stock-raising, later making a specialty of Lima beans and sugar beets, and this extensive ranch is considered one of the most valuable in the valley. Mr. Scarlett passed away February 14, 1902, and his wife, who survives him, soon afterward removed to Oxnard, where she erected a comfortable and commodious home in which she still resides with her younger daughter, Anna, the elder daughter, now Mrs. Elizabeth Williams, also residing in Oxnard.

Born on the ranch near Oxnard, December 5, 1877, John L. Scarlett is the only son in a family of three children. He was educated in the common schools, taking a final course in college at Ventura, and after leaving college returned home to take charge of the large ranch, well equipped by education and training to make the most of the management of seven hundred acres of fine land which composes the estate. A great portion of the farm is devoted to raising lima beans and sugar beets and the yield of the former averages twenty sacks to the acre. Mr. Scarlett also devotes much time and attention to raising horses and cattle and is justly proud of his success in that line. A loyal son of California, he naturally looked among the native daughters of the state for a life companion, and choosing Miss Evelyn Kennedy, who was born in San Francisco, his marriage with her was solemnized in June of 1902. Two children have been born of this union, Evelyn and John Richard. Mr. Scarlett adds his support to the charities of the Catholic Church at Oxnard, of which he is a member, and in politics casts his votes for the Republican platform. The only fraternal organization with which he is identified at this writing is Cabrillo Parlor, N. S. G. W., of Ventura. Personally Mr. Scarlett is of a genial, sunny disposition, with a cheery word for all, and considered by his friends a prince of good fellows. Still a young man, he has met with unusual success in his undertakings and holds an enviable position in the social life of his community.

ELLIS T. BYRAM. Since coming to Glendale, Los Angeles county, more than twenty years ago, Ellis T. Byram has been an important factor in promoting its growth and improvement, and is well entitled to the prominent position he now holds among its more enterprising and able citizens. In the places in which he has resided, and in the different industries in which he has been interested, he has ever been regarded as a man of strict integrity and honesty, always ready to give generous aid toward the establishment of any beneficial project. A son of William Byram, he was born, January 8, 1839, in Union county, Ind., coming of Revolutionary stock, and being a descendant of John and Priscilla (Mullen) Alden, who came over on the Mayflower in 1620.

William Byram followed the trade of a brickmason when young, but later in life was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits in Union county, Ind. He was prominent in political circles, being an old-line Whig, and for nine years served as treasurer of Union county. He was one of the leading men of his times, and for a long while was associated with Judge Burnside, father of Gen. Ambrose E. Burnside, who during a portion of the Civil war was commander of the Army of the Potomac. He married Abby D. Miller, who died at the age of sixty-seven years. She bore him five children, one of whom, Capt. John C. Byram, died in Los Angeles.

Reared on the home farm, Ellis T. Byram received a practical education in the common schools of his native town, and during his minority assisted in the care of the parental homestead. After his marriage he settled as a farmer in Union county, Ind., remaining thus employed until 1881. Going then to Dallas county, Iowa, he established himself in business as a hardware merchant in Perry, where he remained two years. In the fall of 1882, his wife, two sons and one daughter, came to California, and in the spring of 1883 he joined them, settling in Glendale in November of that year. Purchasing land, which is included in the present site of the city of Glendale, he improved it, and engaged in agricultural and horticultural pursuits, meeting with success. To this he added other land, which he improved by setting out an orchard, and also continued his former occupation. He has dealt to some extent in real estate, but has devoted the most of his attention to horticulture, and is considered an authority on matters connected with the tilling of the soil.

In local affairs Mr. Byram has exerted great influence, to him the city and county being indebted for many of its beneficial organizations. With Capt. C. E. Thom, Judge E. M. Ross, H. J. Crow, and B. F. Patterson, he formed the Verdugo Springs Water Company, of which he is the secretary and treasurer; he helped to organize the Bank of Glendale; and he was one of the incorporators of the Glendale Narrow Gauge Railroad, now owned by the Salt Lake Railway Company. Since its organization he has served as president of the Independent Water Company, which absorbed the Childs Tract and Reservoir Company, the latter organized in 1885.

In Preble county, Ohio, in 1864, Mr. Byram married Huldah Miller, daughter of John D. Miller, who spent the last years of his life in Southern California, dying at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Byram, in 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Byram are the parents of five children, namely: Mrs. Eva B. Banker, William D., George E., Ruth A. and Rolph M., all of Los Angeles county. On account of failing eyesight Mr. Byram has practically retired from all active business. Of those who comprised the first settlement in this locality in 1883 there are only three now living in the vicinity: J. C. Sherer, B. F. Patterson and Mr. Byram.

Politically Mr. Byram is a stanch Republican, and cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and in September, 1884, assisted in organizing the first church of that denomination in Glendale, which he subsequently served as elder many years, being the first elected to the position. Rev. W. S. Young was the first minister to fill its pulpit, and Rev. S. Lawrence Ward is its present pastor.

ANTON K. MARUSCH. Along the coast of California where the fishing industry is of great importance the Union Fish Company of San Pedro is known as one of the largest wholesale dealers in fish in Southern California. The firm consists of Anton K. Marusch, manager of the company, and his brother, Baldo Marusch. From a very small beginning they have built up a large and prosperous business. They buy, sell and ship all kinds of fish and lobster, their trade extending inland as far east as the Mississippi river.

The Marusch brothers are sons of Matthew and Frances (Marovich) Marusch, the former a native of Austria. The father was for many years a sea-faring man, holding a position as mate of a vessel in the East India trade, which in the early days was of great importance in the commercial world. In that capacity he visited nearly every country within reach of navigable waters, touching at Mediterranean ports and crossing the Atlantic and Pacific oceans many times on his numerous voyages. He was in San Francisco as early as 1845, four years before the discovery of gold made the name of California famous throughout the civilized world, and started the tide of emigration toward the Pacific coast. Returning to his native land he settled at the old home place and there married and reared a family of five children. Four of the children are living, Anton K. and Baldo being the only ones in America. Baldo Marusch was born September 27, 1868, in Orebich, Dalmatia, Austria, and remained there until 1891, going in that year to Australia. In 1900 he came to California and since then has lived in San Pedro.

Anton K. Marusch was born in the city of Orebich, Austria, September 27, 1872, and lived in his native town until he was nine years of age. The desire to follow in his father's footsteps and seek his fortune on the ocean must have been strong in the boy, for at that youthful age he left home and went on board ship as a cabin boy and for years followed the eventful life of a sailor, working his way up from a cabin boy to able seaman, engaging almost entirely with English sailing vessels and steamers and doing business along the Mediterranean coast and in English waters. In 1886 he shipped on the Sampol of Bath, Me., and came around Cape Horn to San Francisco, where he remained for a time and attended night school. Again he sought employment on the ocean and made fourteen trips to Honolulu as able seaman on board the barkentine Planter, under command of Captain Jorgensen; and later engaged as seaman on steamers plying along the coast out of San Francisco. Becoming weary of the sea he engaged in the restaurant business in San Francisco; then as salesman for a fish company in San Francisco, remaining in that business for seven years and thoroughly familiarizing himself with the fish trade.

Mr. Marusch has lived an eventful life and a narrative of his numerous ventures and adventures would make interesting reading. He has seen the world as the tourist and mere sightseer can never see it. He has followed the lead to new lands and endured the hardships incident to life in new countries where the necessities of life become the luxuries and men stand or fall according to their strength to endure privation. He was in Seattle in 1896, when the exciting news of the discovery of gold in Alaska started crowds of men to the Klondyke. He was among the first to go, taking passage on board the City of Seattle to Skagway, packed across the famous Chilkoot Pass to White Horse rapids, shooting the rapids and arrived safely at Dawson. He followed the occupation of mining until 1896, then went to Circle City and remained until 1899, when he returned to California. In 1901 he came to San Pedro and purchased the Union Fish Company business of G. O. Taylor and has continued in that business ever since, enlarging, improving and branching out until he has made of it a success and is reaping the reward of his energy, foresight and perseverance.

Mr. Marusch is identified with several organizations. He is a member of the Eagles, of the Red Men, and is an ex-president of the Slavonian American Benevolent Association. He is also a member of the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce. In politics he is a Republican.

GERMAIN GRIMAUD. Known and honored as one of the pioneers of that portion of Los Angeles county now occupied by the village of Hyde Park, the late Germain Grimaud was of French birth and lineage and was born October 25, 1849. After having completed the studies of the country schools and gained an excellent knowledge of the French language, he left home at seventeen years of age and came to the United States. During the year 1866 he began to herd sheep near Bakersfield, Cal., and as time passed he acquired a thorough knowledge of the industry, so that he was qualified to engage in it for himself with reasonable hopes of success. At first he raised grade animals, but soon he became interested in fine blooded stock, and gradually gained a reputation as an authority on the subject of sheep. However, being of a kindly, generous nature, he was more than once imposed upon, and lost considerable money through kindnesses to others who failed to appreciate his generosity or return his loans. About 1878 he came to the present site of Hyde Park and bought three hundred acres, where he engaged in raising sheep and general farm products. On this place he died, February 22, 1896, ere yet age had laid its heavy hand upon him.

The marriage of Mr. Grimaud took place August 6, 1878, and united him with Miss Antoinette Aubert, who was born in France August 6, 1855, and came to the United States in 1878 very shortly before her marriage. Five children were born of their union, all natives of Los Angeles county, viz.: Alice H., who married Gustave Escallier and resides at No. 2235 West Fourteenth street, Los Angeles; Emma, who holds a responsible position as chief operator of the Sunset Telephone Company in Los Angeles; Marie T. and Camilla, who reside with their mother one mile from Hyde Park; and Louise, who died at five years of age. After many years of unwearied devotion to farm and home cares, Mr. and Mrs. Grimaud allowed themselves the pleasure of a visit to France, where they remained about three months and renewed the associations of earlier years. At his death Mr. Grimaud left three hundred acres where his widow yet resides, the land being cultivated by tenants. In addition she owns three lots in Hyde Park and since the death of her husband she has purchased a residence at Pico Heights, Los Angeles. Ever since childhood she has been a faithful member of the Catholic Church and a contributor to its many charities, Mr. Grimaud having been also identified with the work of that church and a believer in its doctrines.

FRANK HAROLD OTT. Since 1902 Mr. Ott has been manager of the Anderson & Chanslor store in Avalon, a branch of the Los Angeles establishment and in which he is a stockholder. He was born January 18, 1873, in the Shenandoah valley, Va., the son of D. A. and Susan (Moore) Ott, both of whom were natives of the same locality. At eighteen years of age the father was a member of a Virginia regiment in the Confederate army during the Civil war, losing an arm in the conflict. He was teacher by profession in Virginia and later near Austin, Tex. In 1887 he removed with his family to Los Angeles and soon engaged in horticultural pursuits in Orange county, where he died at the age of fifty years. The death of Mrs. Ott occurred in Santa Ana.

Frank Harold Ott was the second of the four children in the family of his parents, and after securing his education in the public schools of Pasadena he went to Riverside county and purchased ten acres of raw land in Corona, set it to lemon trees and otherwise improved it, still owning the property, which is in fine condition and bearing good crops. After the death of his father he had charge of the home ranch for one year, and then in 1896 removed to Los Angeles and entered the employ of Anderson & Chanslor, taking charge of the shipping department. In 1900 he was among the number of employes of the firm who bought out their employers and incorporated the business under the name of the Anderson & Chanslor Company. In 1902 the new firm bought out J. S. Pitman, who was conducting one of the oldest established mercantile enterprises on Catalina Island. Mr. Ott secured a quarter interest in the branch and became its manager, ever since filling that position to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

In Santa Barbara Mr. Ott married Ethel Ennis, a native of Michigan. He is an active member of the Presbyterian Church and is identified with the progressive and elevating influences of the community in which he resides. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party.

JOHN DOUGLAS McLEAN. A successful contractor and builder and representative citizen of Avalon, John Douglas McLean has been a resident on Catalina Island since 1888. The family is of Scotch descent and the clan is of the McLeans of Duarte. The grandfather, Neil McLean, was born on the isle of Skye, Inverness, Scotland, and as a member of the British army for twelve years fought throughout the Peninsular war. Upon the receipt of an honorable discharge he left his native land and settled in Cape Breton Isle, Nova Scotia, where he engaged in farming and died after having attained the remarkable age of ninety-six years. He was a man of strong principles and belonged to the Presbyterian Church, the faith of so many of Scotch birth in the present day. The father, Roderick McLean, was born in Cape Breton Isle, where he was engaged as a ship carpenter and later became a farmer, his death occurring in his sixty-eighth year. His wife, who survives him, was before her marriage Margaret McLennan, a native of Nova Scotia. Her father, John McLennan, was born in Loch Aise, Scotland, and settled on Cape Breton Isle, where he was first a schoolmaster and later followed agricultural pursuits.

Next to the oldest of a family of ten children, eight of whom are now living, John Douglas McLean was born April 1, 1860, on Cape Breton Isle, Nova Scotia, and attended the district schools in his youth. He also learned the carpenter's trade as a boy, in 1882 going to Manitoba, where he followed the occupation for a time, at the same time doing stone cutting. After spending a season in Winnipeg he entered the employ of the Canadian Pacific Railway and assisted in the construction of the rockway along Lake Superior. His residence in California dates from 1887, when he came to Los Angeles and plied his trade for a year, in 1888 removing to Avalon to assist in the erection of the first part of the Metropole hotel for Shatto. He bought property and built a residence here and has since made this city his home. As a prominent contractor and builder he has erected a large number of residences here, the workmanship on them showing him to be a master of his trade. His property holdings in Avalon include six houses and five tents, from the rent of which he secures a good income. Mr. McLean's marriage, which occurred in Los Angeles, united him with Miss Winnie Morris, born in Tahiti, the daughter of Rev. George Morris, one of the first missionaries on that South Sea island. He was also the first settled minister of the Congregational denomination in Avalon and now resides in Alameda. Mr. and Mrs. McLean are the parents of three children, Margaret, Catherine and Roderick. They hold membership in the Congregational Church, in which Mr. McLean is a deacon and a member of the board of trustees. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles of the Prohibition party. As a successful business man and progressive citizen whose influence is exerted at all times in the elevating and upbuilding of the community he is held in the highest esteem by all.

CAPT. JOHN EVERETT MATHEWSON. The business men of Avalon are of a progressive and energetic class and a leader among them is found in Capt. John Everett Mathewson, proprietor of the Mathewson boat yards. He is a member of an old and prominent New England family, his birth having occurred July 3, 1867, in Brookfield, Mass., the son of Henry and the grandson of Daniel, both natives of Rhode Island and of Scotch descent. The father, who is still living, early removed to Brookfield, Mass., and engaged in farming, that state being now his home. His wife was in maidenhood Susanna Allen, a native of Brookfield, and a daughter of Zebediah Allen, who was born in Sturbridge, Mass. Her family was one of great prominence in Revolutionary days, Ethan Allen being a great uncle. Mrs. Mathewson died in Massachusetts.

Of the five children born in the family of which John Everett Mathewson was a member, four are still living, and he was next to the youngest. He was reared in his native town, where he received his preliminary education in the public schools, then entered the Worcester Academy, after which he studied civil engineering at the Polytechnic Institute. After graduation he engaged in boat building in Brookfield for a time, and in 1889 went to Seattle, where he continued to ply his trade for two years, when he was burned out and lost all of his possessions, having but $10 in money after the catastrophe. Thereafter he worked until he had earned sufficient money to buy a ticket to his Massachusetts home, but the spirit of the west had become too firmly implanted within him to be long resisted, and 1891 found Mr. Mathewson in Los Angeles, it being his intention to spend the winter here and return to Seattle in the spring. He grew to like the place so well, however, that he decided to remain, and while on a short trip to Catalina he accepted a contract to build a small row boat, and thus started the business which has grown to such large proportions. The plant is thoroughly modern and up-to-date, fitted with steam boiler and gasoline engines, and there have been turned out from the yards many row boats and sixty power launches. Mr. Mathewson built the yawl, Avalon, which has a large capacity and is used to carry excursionists, cruising among the surrounding islands and along the coast. He also owns a string of row and glass boats and owns considerable property on the island and in Los Angeles. He is a member and ex-treasurer of the Sophia Yacht Club at Avalon.

Mr. Mathewson was united in marriage with Ada Hayes Pratt, a native of Pennsylvania, the ceremony taking place in Los Angeles, and they have an attractive residence on Whitley street, which he built. Politically he is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party and takes an enthusiastic part in the furthering of every enterprise tending to upbuild the community on which he resides.

THOMAS LE FEVRE. Among the well-to-do and thriving ranchers of San Diego county, who have accumulated a competency through their own exertions and economy, and who are carrying on general farming in a praiseworthy manner, is Thomas Le Fevre, of Fallbrook. A pioneer settler of this locality, he has seen the wild and uncultivated land of this region transformed into rich and productive farms, the straggling villages developed into towns of respectable proportions, and has watched these wonderful changes with the interest which every man of intelligence feels in the growth and advancement of a new section of our great land. He was born, January 29, 1838, in England, where he lived for nine years, being reared by his grandparents after the death of his parents.

Born, reared and educated in England, John Le Fevre, the grandfather, spent the earlier years of his life in his native shire. In 1847, thinking in the United States, which is the poor man's paradise, to better his condition, he started with his family on a voyage across the ocean. Making his way to Liverpool, he was taken ill, and died in that city, while waiting for the ship on which he was to take passage. His widow, who was a woman of much force of character, came to this country bringing her son and grandson, Thomas. After living for five years in St. Louis, Mo., she moved to Parowan, Utah, in 1852, and there spent the remainder of her life.

But nine years old when he came with his grandmother to the United States, Thomas Le Fevre completed his studies in the public schools of St. Louis, after which he migrated with his grandmother to Utah. Leaving Salt Lake City in 1859, he came overland to California, arriving in San Bernardino in the fall of that year. Engaging in teaming, he made frequent trips across the desert, going to both Salt Lake and the Missouri river, and during the White Pine excitement going to the mines in search of gold. Locating at Fallbrook, San Diego county, in 1879, he entered a government claim, but this he subsequently sold, and took up the land which he now owns and occupies, later buying an adjoining tract of twenty acres. At once beginning its improvement, he has brought it to a good state of cultivation, and has erected a neat and substantial set of farm buildings, which greatly add to the value and attractiveness of the ranch.

Mr. Le Fevre has been twice married. He married first, in Parowan, Utah, about 1860, Susanna Davenport, who died in January, 1871, leaving five children, of whom we mention the following: Thomas A., born August 22, 1863, is assisting in the management of the home ranch, he married Mrs. Elmer Richardson, and they have two children, Clarence and Helen M.; Ann Elizabeth, born February 17, 1865, lives at home; Robert D., born January 19, 1867, is also at home; Susanna R., born February 11, 1869, is a teacher in the public schools of Mendocino county; and Sarah Jane, born January 10, 1871, is the wife of Hiram Hilton, of Utah.

June 8, 1873, Mr. Le Fevre married Amelia R. Gavin, who was born in London, England, a daughter of Michael and Amelia (Robinson) Gavin. Her parents immigrated with their family to this country in 1853, and for eleven years resided in St. Louis, Mo. Going back to visit their old home and friends in 1864, they remained in England a year, and in 1865 returned to St. Louis. In August, 1869, they removed to Utah, where both Mr. and Mrs. Gavin spent their remaining days, both passing away at the advanced age of eighty-three years, his death occurring June 2, 1902, and hers October 20, 1902. Five children were born of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Le Fevre, namely: Herbert Andrew, who was born June 13, 1874, and died in September of the same year; Maud Amelia, who was born in November, 1875, and died the next month; Francis Edgar, who was born in October, 1877, and died in July, 1878; Jessie, born in June, 1879, and died in July, 1890; and Oscar, living on the home place. Politically Mr. Le Fevre is a steadfast Democrat, and has served as a member of the local school board.

EUGENE MATHEWSON, M. D. A man of culture, talent and scholarly attainments, Eugene Mathewson, M. D., stands deservedly high in professional circles and is one of the leading physicians and surgeons of the El Cajon valley, his home and his office being at Bostonia. Familiar with the most modern views upon medical surgical science, and careful in his study and diagnosis of the various diseases that have come under his observation, he has met with marked success in his chosen career, gaining a fine reputation for skill and ability. A son of Smith Mathewson, he was born at Pascoag, R. I., October 18, 1860, coming from a long line of New England ancestors, one of whom was a Mayflower passenger, while another was Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island. His father, who died in 1896, at the venerable age of ninety years, married Zerviah Potter Miller, who is still living, making her home in the state founded by her ancestor, Roger Williams, and in which she was born seventy-two years ago.

Laying a substantial foundation for his education in the public schools of his native city, Eugene Mathewson afterwards took a course of study at the University of Colorado. Entering then the Gross Medical College, now known as the Gross & Denver Medical College, he was there graduated with the degree of M. D., April 12, 1894. After practicing his profession in Denver for a few months, his health began to fail, and he was forced to leave the city. Going, therefore, to Ordway, Otero county, Colo., he remained there a year and a half, in the meantime practicing medicine, and serving as health officer for the county. His health becoming more and more impaired, when almost a physical wreck, he came in 1896 to California to recuperate if possible. Being very favorably impressed with the location of Bostonia and with its bright, exhilarating climate, he determined to make this place his home. Buying lots in one of the most attractive portions of the village he erected a conveniently arranged, modern house, in which he has, in addition to his home and his office, an operating room and a drug room, all of which are finely equipped and well furnished with all of the conveniences and appliances demanded by those most familiar with medical and surgical science. Regaining his health in this invigorating climate, he has here been successfully engaged in his chosen profession for a number of years, his patronage throughout the valley being extensive and remunerative.

In Denver, Colo., Dr. Mathewson married Alice Colburn, daughter of Rev. Alfred Colburn, a native of New England. Her father died in Worcester, Mass., in 1891, and her mother, whose maiden name was Isabella Waterman, still makes that city her home. Mrs. Colburn is an accomplished woman, and as an artist has acquired more than local fame. Mrs. Mathewson is a musician of rare ability and skill, and after her graduation from the Boston Conservatory of Music was for a number of years affiliated with the Worcester Musical Festival, a noted New England organization. For several years she was successfully employed as a music teacher, giving lessons on both the piano and the pipe organ, and while living in the east played the accompaniments for many of the leading musical celebrities of our own country and of Europe. The doctor and his wife are both members of the Baptist Church. He is a medical examiner of the Ancient Order of United Workmen; a member and medical examiner of the Order of Pendo; of the Modern Woodmen of America; of the Woodmen of the World; and is likewise medical examiner for several of the old-line insurance companies.

MRS. P. E. KITCHING. Since 1886 Mrs. P. E. Kitching has been a resident of San Diego county and has during the past twenty years reared a family of fine children and demonstrated as well her superior business ability in the management of her ranch. This consists of one hundred and seventeen acres and is devoted entirely to stock and grain raising. Mrs. Kitching was born in southern Arkansas, the daughter of James M. and Sarah (Black) Griffin, who removed to Texas when she was a small child and remained there for seventeen years, during which time she was educated and married to A. C. Kitching, a native of Texas. In 1886 she came to California with her parents, who first settled at Campo, San Diego county, a year later the father removing to San Luis Rey, where he conducted a farm until his death, in October, 1901, at the age of seventy-seven years. In the early years he had much trouble in securing title to his land, which was claimed by the Pico family as a part of the large land grant given them, and it took five years of litigation in the courts to secure his rights. During this time they were much annoyed, their houses being pulled down and removed from the land, and the Indians frequently raiding the premises and carrying off provisions. Mrs. Griffin is now living at the age of seventy-six years.

Mrs. Kitching's family consists of four children, two sons, Jeremiah and Charles, residing at home; one son, Roy, who is married to Ethel James, and living in Los Angeles; and a daughter, Sadie, who is now the wife of B. B. Higgins and lives at Mt. Serat. Mrs. Kitching is a devoted member of the Christian Church at San Luis Rey, and is deeply interested in the promotion of all influences which tend to develop and elevate the community in which she makes her home.

RALPH EMERSON SWING. Only a few of the men now prominent in the commercial and professional life of San Bernardino can claim this city as their birthplace. The majority have come from the east and have selected this region because of its manifest attractions. An exception is found in the case of Mr. Swing, who was born in San Bernardino November 4, 1875, and has known no other home than this. Upon entering the practice of law he decided that his home town offered advantages surpassed by none, and therefore resolved to remain here, a decision which he has no reason to regret. Since admitted to the bar in 1897 he has built up a large practice in the courts and has risen to a high position in the profession. Besides taking charge of his private practice he acts as attorney for the Home Gas and Lighting Company, the Del Rosa Water Company, and other corporations.

The family represented by this popular attorney has been identified with San Bernardino since 1866, when his father, Rev. James W. Swing, a native of Ohio and a life-long minister in the Methodist Episcopal denomination, came to this place, where he had charge of the building of the first Holiness Church. From that time he officiated as pastor of the church until he died in 1896. His was a life of self-sacrifice and patient devotion to the cause of Christianity, and he counted no day lost whose labors bore fruit in the uplifting of a human soul. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary F. Garner, was born in Illinois and now makes her home in Riverside county. Their son, Ralph E., received his education in the grammar and high schools of San Bernardino, and after leaving school took up the study of law under the preceptorship of George B. Cole, then a leading resident of San Bernardino, but now of Seattle, Wash. After having gained a thorough knowledge of the principles of the law he was admitted to the bar in 1897, being then twenty-two years of age, and immediately embarked in professional work, having John P. Hight, Sr., as his partner for a time, under the firm title of Hight & Swing. A few years later, however, the partnership was dissolved, and since then he has practiced alone. To aid in his labors he has a large and carefully-selected library of law books, including the highest authorities in their various specialties.

State and county political affairs have received careful consideration on the part of Mr. Swing, who possesses pronounced Democratic opinions and has given the party the benefit of his services in its local upbuilding. For four years he was attorney for the public administrator of San Bernardino county, and since 1903 he has been attorney for the city of San Bernardino, to which office he was elected for a term of four years, and is conceded to be one of the most efficient attorneys who have ever served the city. His success is due to his hard work and to his absolute honesty and integrity. In fraternal relations he holds membership with Arrowhead Parlor No. 110, N. S. G. W., of which he is past president, and in addition he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Lodge No. 836, at San Bernardino.

LEONIDAS W. COLEMAN. In San Bernardino county are found some of the best lemon groves in California, and one of the finest of these is owned by Leonidas W. Coleman of Rialto, who himself, in May, 1894, planted the ten hundred and ninety trees now growing on his eleven-acre ranch. When he first purchased the place it contained twenty-one acres of land, one-third of which was planted to grapes, but he soon sold one-half of the acreage and on the remaining half replaced the vineyard with lemon trees. From this grove he takes very large crops, seven thousand boxes having been gathered in 1904 and 1905 and six thousand in 1905 and 1906. Mr. Coleman was born July 26, 1842, in Alabama, the son of James A. and Sarah A. (Kennedy) Coleman, his mother being a native of South Carolina. The Coleman family is one of the oldest and most prominent of Virginia, where the father and grandfather, Thomas, were born, the grandmother having been Miss Randolph, of the noted pioneer Randolph family of that state. After his removal to Alabama, James A. Coleman became the owner of a large cotton plantation, and in that state he married Sarah A. Kennedy. He served as a private in the Seminole Indian war in Florida, was a member of the Baptist church, and died in Kansas at the age of seventy-two years. His widow came to California with her son, with whom she lived until her death in 1899. There were seven children in the parental family, four of whom lived to maturity. One son is a prominent attorney in Chicago, and has become noted as the author of the treatise, "Mechanics' Liens on Real Estate."

The early education of Leonidas W. Coleman was received in Alabama and he finished his studies with a general college course at Centenary College in Dallas county, that state. At the outbreak of the Civil war he was in business in Marion, Miss., and from there he enlisted in Company A, Fourteenth Mississippi Volunteers, becoming captain of his company, but unfortunately he met with an accident which incapacitated him for active service. He came north to Kentucky with Sherman's army and after his discharge engaged in merchandising, respectively, at Paxton, Ind., and Henderson, Ky., becoming at the latter place editor and publisher of the Henderson Reporter, and during that time was also president of the Western Kentucky Press Association. From Henderson he removed to Kansas and engaged in ranching in Chase county, near Emporia, remaining in that state for twenty years, during which time he owned three different farms. After disposing of his first farm, which comprised one hundred and sixty acres, he purchased another twice as large; upon selling the latter acreage he purchased another containing six hundred and forty acres.

Mr. Coleman's first marriage, which took place in 1868, united him with Miss Isophoena Martin, a native of Kentucky, and whose death occurred in Henderson, that state. She became the mother of five children, one of whom died in infancy. William J., who graduated as a civil engineer at Lawrence, Kans., is general secretary of the Lawrence (Kans.) Young Men's Christian Association; he married May Rush, of that city, and they have one child: Fannie, who took a medical course at St. Louis and Denver, became the wife of Dr. F. M. Cooper, who conducts the Ruxton house at Manitou, Colo.; John A. is engaged in railroad work for the Santa Fe at Needles, Ariz.; and Leonidas M., who for two years taught school in San Bernardino, died at Berkeley at the age of twenty-three years. In 1888, at Cottonwood Falls, Kans., Mr. Coleman was married to Alice Rockwood, who was born in Wisconsin and was brought by her father, William W. Rockwood, to Kansas when she was but three years old. She is the mother of one son, Herbert R., who resides with his parents at Rialto. The Rockwood family is prominent in Masonic circles and by virtue of their membership, Mrs. Coleman belongs to the Order of Eastern Star.

Politically, Mr. Coleman is an independent voter, casting his ballot for those whom he considers the best men. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church at San Bernardino for nine years, but after his removal to Rialto both he and his wife joined the Congregational Church. For five years Mr. Coleman was a member of the Rialto Fruit Association, having been one of its charter members, but he finally withdrew from that organization and joined the Rialto Citrus Fruit Union at Rialto, and is now an independent shipper. He is a stockholder in the Lytle Creek Water and Improvement Company, has the best interests of the business and social life of his community at heart, and is held in high esteem by all who know him.

HENRY H. EVANS. One of the most enterprising and progressive ranchmen in the Menifee valley is Henry H. Evans, a native son of California, who was born November 27, 1863, in San Jose, the son of Thomas Jefferson and Cynthia (Fowler) Evans, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Maine. In 1849 the father crossed the plains with the government train and located in Santa Fe, N. Mex., where he bought land and was engaged as a government police for two years. Returning to Indiana in 1851 he remained but a short time before starting on his second overland trip west, this time reaching California. He located first in San Francisco and mined on the Feather river for a number of years, later removing to San Jose, where his marriage occurred. He conducted a wood, coal and grain business at this point until 1868, when he changed his residence to Castroville, living in that city for six years. Coming to San Bernardino in 1874 he engaged in the raising of hay and grain and finally retired from active business. He died October 21, 1903, when seventy-five years old, his wife having preceded him on June 12, 1894, at the age of fiftv-four years. They were the parents of eight children: G. W., of San Bernardino, who is exstreet supervisor and lives on a ranch near town; Cora E., the wife of R. J. Varley, of San Bernardino; Henry H., of this sketch; Thomas A., residing in Menifee valley; Newton, an engineer in the Fulton Iron Works of Los Angeles; Florence G., residing in Los Angeles; Edna E., wife of J. E. Ferrell, of the Menifee valley; and Minnie A., wife of W. R. Ferrell, of the same place.

The first schooling of Henry H. Evans was received in the Castroville public schools and after the removal of the family to San Bernardino he finished his education there, attending business college for one year. His studies completed, he engaged in the livery business in San Bernardino until 1890, when he began farming in the Menifee valley, in 1891 purchasing one hundred acres of land. After clearing away the brush he began to improve the land, and gradually added to his holdings until he now owns four hundred and twenty acres. He rents a large tract, also, having fifteen hundred acres of grain and four thousand acres of pasture land. He has his own combined harvester and sells all of the wheat he raises to the Globe Milling Company of Colton. He also raises quite a number of cattle, horses and mules.

The marriage of Mr. Evans occurred February 5, 1884, in San Bernardino, uniting him with Miss Ella May Ferrell, daughter of J. B. Ferrell, of Iowa, who came to San Bernardino in 1874. Seven children have been born to them: Emma May (who died when sixteen months old), Fredrick H., Grover C., Richard V., Frances E., George Dewey, Pattie M. Fraternally Mr. Evans is a member of Perris Lodge No. 190, K. of P. He has been for the past six years a member of the Menifee board of school trustees, and in all matters of import to the social and civic welfare of the community takes an active interest.

ARTHUR G. KELLY. As the owner and manager of a ninety-five acre ranch devoted to the raising of alfalfa and grain Arthur G. Kelly is known as one of the successful young men in San Bernardino county. He is the son of one of the earliest pioneers of this section of the state, his father, Joseph H. Kelly, who is a native of Illinois, having come to San Bernardino in 1861. He is still living in the county on a ranch of four hundred acres, devoted to the raising of grain and to stock-raising. By his marriage in 1866 Joseph H. Kelly was united with Sarah Keller, whose death occurred in 1876, when only thirty-three years of age. Of the five children born to these parents Arthur G. was the eldest.

July 20, 1867, Arthur G. Kelly was born in San Bernardino county, where he received his education through the medium of the public schools, and after his studies were completed he worked on the home ranch until 1900, in which year occurred his marriage to Miss Rebecca Lawrence, a native of Nebraska. He then went to Redlands and engaged in the livery business for a time, subsequently locating on the ranch which has since been his home. He is a member of Arrowhead Parlor No. 110, N. S. G. W., and politically advocates the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party. He has many friends in this section of the country, where he has spent his entire life, and is a public-spirited citizen, interested in the upbuilding of his section of the state.

JOSEPH JONES. If in a degree worthy of praise success has crowned the efforts of Mr. Jones, this gratifying result may be attributed to his own unaided and ceaseless application from early childhood through all the years of manhood's prime. In his boyhood he had little to encourage and none to aid him. His parents, Edward and Jane (Williams) Jones, were poor and there were thirteen children in the family. Hardships were their common lot and grim want often hovered near their humble door. In the mining district of Wales where they lived the wages were meager and each child was obliged to work as soon as old enough to earn a few pennies. Of the thirteen children three died in infancy; five of the sons came to the United States and met in this country a success impossible in their native land. Joseph, who was born in Wales October 27, 1838, was only eight years old when he was sent to work in a woolen mill near home, and there he toiled day after day, receiving only the most meager wages, and deprived of what now would be considered the necessities of existence, yet cheered by family affection to bear trials difficult for one of tender years to endure.

While still quite young Joseph Jones determined to come to the United States in the hope of securing an environment more favorable for success. In 1856 he landed in New York City and from there proceeded to Illinois, where he worked on a farm in Marshall county about two years. Afterward he worked for a similar period in mines near St. Louis, and then returned to Illinois, where he worked in the mines of Randolph county, continuing in the same position from 1859 until 1878 with the exception of three years spent in California. From Illinois he moved to Minnesota and took up farm pursuits, in time becoming the owner of an improved farm of three hundred and fifty-five acres. After ten busy and somewhat profitable years on the Minnesota farm, he sold the land and in 1888 came to California, settling at Oceanside in order to give his children the advantages of the excellent schools of that town. Meanwhile he purchased one hundred and sixty-two acres in San Luis Rey valley, where in 1893 he erected a residence and established his home. Instead of devoting his attention to a specialty he has engaged in mixed farming, and has raised cattle and hogs, has conducted a small dairy business, has raised grain, and to some extent has been interested in market gardening and in the raising of fruit.

The marriage of Mr. Jones took place in Illinois in 1869 and united him with Ann Talitha McKenzie, who was born and reared in Randolph county, that state. They are the parents of three children, Nancy, J. E. and D. E. The daughter married Walter Myers, a stock-raiser near Santa Ana, and the sons are living in San Diego county. In his political views Mr. Jones is a believer in socialism and holds that the many evils threatening our body politic today might be alleviated by a practical experiment with the doctrines he espouses. While living in Illinois he was made a Mason in 1870 and now affiliates with Silver Gate Lodge, F. & A. M., at San Diego. Though not identified with any denomination he is in sympathy with religious work and was reared by his parents in the Presbyterian faith.

JOHN SULLIVAN. In his work as rancher and dairyman John Sullivan has acquired both a financial success and a high position among the esteemed and respected residents of San Bernardino county, his well-known integrity and demonstrated benevolence winning him a wide friendship. He owns a ranch of fifty acres devoted to general farming and dairy purposes, twenty Jersey cows forming his dairy herd, the butter produced being disposed of in local markets.

A native of Ireland, John Sullivan was born June 12, 1847, and in public and private institutions in his native country he received his education. While still a youth he decided to immigrate to the new world and landed in New York City in due time. Going at once to the farming districts of that state, he followed the occupation to which he had been trained from early childhood. After four years spent in New York state he went to Montreal, Canada, from which point he came to California via the Isthmus of Panama in 1868. Disembarking at San Francisco, he soon afterward came to Southern California, becoming one of the pioneers in Little Bear valley, San Bernardino county, and in the mountains he engaged in the lumber business. After three years in that locality he settled in the city of San Bernardino, but continued to conduct his sawmill for a time, finally, however, purchasing the land upon which he has since carried on his farming and dairying interests. In addition to general agricultural pursuits he also raises horses to some extent.

Mr. Sullivan and his sister, the latter a resident of Alameda county, are the only survivors of a family of six children born to their parents, James and Mary (Castello) Sullivan, both of whom are now deceased. In New York City, in 1868, John Sullivan was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Enright, a native of Ireland, and born of this union are the following children: Mary, who married A. L. Casey, of Colton, and has five children; Lizzie, who married John McInarny, of Los Angeles, and has one child: Nora, who married R. T. Burr, of Los Angeles, and has one child; Kate, who married A. F. Giroux, of Santa Monica, and has one son; John James; and Ellen and Evelyn. Mrs. Elizabeth Sullivan died in 1888, and for his second wife Mr. Sullivan married Rose E. Flannigan, a native of Ohio, but a resident of California since 1890, the year of her marriage to Mr. Sullivan. They have two children, Genevieve and Charles Edward. The family are members of the Catholic Church, of San Bernardino. Politically Mr. Sullivan is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party, although he is very broad-minded in the matter of local affairs and reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for the discharge of public duties. For the past twenty-five years he has served as a member of the school board, for ten years acting as clerk of that body. He is distinctly public spirited and alive to the advancement of the community's best interests, and is named among the best citizens of this section.

ALFRED H. TILTON, of San Bernardino, has a fine ranch of one hundred and fifty acres on South Waterman avenue, of which one hundred acres are devoted to the cultivation of barley and oats, and fifty acres at present are used as pasture, but it is his intention to devote it all to alfalfa raising in the near future. In addition to the interests just mentioned he also raises horses. Mr. Tilton is a native of New Hampshire, and was born in Bridgewater May 22, 1870, one of five children born to his parents, Hiram S. and Lydia P. (Worthen) Tilton, both also natives of Bridgewater, N. H. The eldest child in the parental family, a son, died at the age of thirteen months. The next child, Della, born May 2, 1864, became the wife of Daniel Whittemore in January, 1896, and still resides in Bridgewater. Alfred H. and Alice M. were born May 22, 1870, the former being the subject of this sketch; the latter was married in July, 1893, and has one son, Harold Tilton Breck, who was born April 2, 1895. Frank H. was born April 4, 1877, and in September, 1898, was married to Cora G. Marston. Until October of 1904 the father continued to live on the farm which he purchased in his early married life, at that time selling the property to his son Frank. Following this, Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, accompanied by their daughter, Mrs. Breck, and her son, Harold, came to California, residing at Perris until August, 1906, when they came to San Bernardino and are now making their home on Waterman avenue.

Alfred H. Tilton received a preliminary education in the public schools of Bridgewater, supplementing this by a course in the New Hampton literary institution and graduating from the business college. His first independent employment was in Boston, as clerk in the veneer store of Johnson Brothers, but as he did not care particularly for the work he returned home after a couple of years, and the following three years were spent on the parental farm. February 10, 1897, he formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Eva S. Cummings, who was born in Ashland, N. H., May 26, 1876, the daughter of S. B. and Lucina E. (Draper) Cummings, who were born respectively in New Hampton, N. H., February 3, 1851, and Plymouth, N. H., May 14, 1852. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cummings occurred November 11, 1874, and thereafter they lived on a farm in Ashland, Mr. Cummings also dealing in agricultural implements and dairy goods. In 1905 he disposed of his holdings in the east and came to California, locating first at Perris, and later in San Bernardino, and with his wife now makes his home on D street. During her girlhood Mrs. Tilton was educated in the public schools of Ashland, graduating from the high school in 1891. She also received instruction in painting in oil from local artists, as well as in Worcester, Mass., besides which she learned the milliner's trade. Mr. and Mrs. Tilton have one daughter, Grace Cummings, who was born at Ashland, N. H., October 2, 1899. After their marriage Mr. Tilton purchased a farm in the vicinity of Ashland, but five years later, in 1901, he sold out and came to California, locating at once in the vicinity of Perris, Riverside county. There he made a specialty of raising grain and hay, farming between three hundred and seven hundred and fifty acres in the different years. In 1903 he purchased a twenty-acre ranch near Perris, but he now rents this property. In 1905 he purchased his present ranch, near San Bernardino. Fraternally Mr. Tilton belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being a member of Cardigan Lodge in Bristol, N. H., in which he has served as warden and conductor. He also belongs to the Grange in New Hampshire, and in his political sympathies is a stanch Republican.

MARVIN BEMISS HIATT. Among the industrious, persevering and thrifty men who have taken an active part in the industrial development of San Diego is Marvin B. Hiatt, a well known builder and contractor. Beginning life at the foot of the ladder, without means or influence, he has step by step ascended the rungs of prosperity, until now he is an honored and esteemed member of society, and one of the most respected citizens of his community. A son of Caleb Hiatt, he was born, March 17, 1837, in Rainsboro, Highland county, Ohio. His paternal grandfather, who was of German descent, and belonged to the Society of Friends, spent the larger part of his life in North Carolina, settling there when a young man.

Born and brought up in North Carolina, Caleb Hiatt, who was public-spirited and patriotic, served as a soldier in the war of 1812, enlisting before he attained his majority. Subsequently settling in Highland county, Ohio, he followed his trade of a cabinet-maker, and for many years was engaged in the manufacture of furniture. Investing then his money in land, he carried on general farming in Highland county until his death, February 28, 1849, at the age of fifty-six years. He married Elizabeth Knight, who was born near Lynchburg, Va., and died in Ohio. Her father, Joshua Knight, was a pioneer builder of Virginia, being in partnership with his brother, who was a stone mason. Removing to Cincinnati, Ohio, he built the Broadway hotel, the first hotel erected in that city.

Until after the death of his father, in 1849, Marvin B. Hiatt lived on the home farm, attending the common school during its brief terms. He subsequently entered the employ of his uncle, James Knight, a newspaper agent, and for two years sold and delivered the daily papers. As soon as old enough he began learning the carpenter's trade, serving a full apprenticeship, and the ensuing five years was engaged as a contractor in Troy, Ohio. Coming from there to San Diego in January, 1888, he continued that occupation, the first year that he was here doing $40,000 worth of carpenter work. In his work he has met with success, having his full share of the building and contracting of this vicinity. The family home is at No. 335 Webster avenue.

In Cincinnati, Ohio, Mr. Hiatt married Margaret Clough, who was born in Troy, Ohio, a daughter of William Clough, and granddaughter of Jeremiah Clough, a Revolutionary soldier. William Clough was born in Virginia, learned the trade of a stone and brick mason, after which he removed to Troy, Ohio, where he lived a few years. He subsequently settled in Kentucky, and there spent his last days, dying in Covington. He was a soldier of the war of 1812. His wife, whose maiden name was Sarah McCarthy, was born in Kentucky, coming from a Maryland family of prominence, and died in Troy, Ohio. She bore her husband ten children, of whom two are living, Mrs. Hiatt being the youngest child. Mr. and Mrs. Hiatt are the parents of four children, namely: Willis, a miller in Indiana; Ellsworth, of San Diego, a carpenter; Grant, working with his father; and Harry, a blacksmith, living in Lowell, Ariz. Mr. Hiatt belongs to the Master Carpenters' Association, of which he is a charter member. Politically he is a Socialist. Like his ancestors he has served his country in time of need. On September 22, 1864, while living in Ohio, he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Eighty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served, under General Schofield, in the Twenty-third Army Corps, with which he remained until mustered out, and was honorably discharged, July 14, 1865, at Salemburg, N. C.

JAMES MILLER. As superintendent of the Santa Fe steam laundry in San Bernardino James Miller holds a prominent position in business circles in this city. The plant is one of the largest in this part of the state outside of the city of Los Angeles and draws a liberal support from San Bernardino and the surrounding country, as well as securing work from various points in Arizona. Mr. Miller is a native Canadian, his birth having occurred in Galt, Ontario, and he being the third from the youngest in a family of ten children. His father, who was born in Scotland, removed in an early day to Ontario, where he followed the occupation of farmer, and in which province he still resides. The mother, who was before her marriage Esther Aitken, and is now deceased, was of Scotch parentage, her father, Robert Aitken, having also become a pioneer farmer in Canada. The elder Millers were adherents of the faith of the Presbyterian Church, exerting a beneficial and elevating influence upon all with whom they came in contact. Two sons beside James and one daughter have homes in California; George is vice-president of the Troy Laundry Company in Los Angeles; Robert is a farmer near San Bernardino; and Mary resides in the latter named place.

Reared on a farm and educated in the public schools, when sixteen years of age, James Miller began to occupy himself as an independent farmer in Ontario and continued to pursue that work until 1896, when he came to California and engaged in agriculture. The following year he entered the employ of his brother in the San Bernardino laundry, devoting the succeeding five years to that work and acquiring a detailed and comprehensive knowledge of the business. In 1903, in company with Mr. Strawser, he leased the Santa Fe steam laundry, a year later purchasing the plant and in various ways adding to its equipment to meet the needs of an ever-increasing business. Among other improvements was the sinking of a three hundred and twenty-five foot artesian well, the making of a large storage reservoir, and the installation of modern pumping machinery. Mr. Miller is treasurer of the firm.

Mr. Miller belongs to the Southern California Laundrymen's Association and the San Bernardino Board of Trade, and is actively interested in the development of this section of the state. Religiously he holds membership in the First Presbyterian Church, and politically advocates Republican principles when applied to national affairs. He was made a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Token Lodge No. 290, in San Bernardino, and also belongs to the Encampment here; is a member of the Rebekah lodge, and belongs to the Independent Order of Foresters in Glenmorris, Ontario. As a man of high principles, honesty and integrity, he is greatly esteemed throughout the community.

AMOS H. BEMIS. The advantages of San Bernardino county early attracted many settlers within her borders, and among those whose foresight and sagacity led them to locate in this section of Southern California was the family of which Amos H. Bemis is a member. He is one of the substantial and well-to-do ranchers in this section and creditably sustains the reputation for honor and integrity and square dealing in all matters which his father handed down to him. Amos W. Bemis, the father of Amos H., was born June 3, 1828, in Jefferson county, N. Y., and when eight years old began the westward march with his parents, who remained in Council Bluffs, Iowa, about two years, the death of the grandfather occurring during this time. His widow accompanied the family to San Bernardino, where she died many years later. From Council Bluffs the family moved on to Salt Lake City, where they remained for several years. Here the son was married to Miss Julia McCullough, who was born near Buffalo, N. Y., her father having been a member of the Mormon battalion which came to California and New Mexico, helped drive out the Mexican governor of the former state and build the old fort at Los Angeles in 1847. Mr. McCullough left Los Angeles in company with another man, starting out with three horses, but they encountered the Indians at an early stage of the trip, lost two of their horses in the skirmish and were obliged to make the rest of the trip to his home in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on foot. He later removed to Utah and freighted from Los Angeles to Southern Utah. Mr. and Mrs. Bemis came to California in 1854, later returned to Utah for a visit, and in 1856 joined the train of emigrants which followed the one massacred at Mountain Meadows and reached San Bernardino in the fall, after undergoing many hardships. During the first trip the family consisted of the grandmother of A. H., her seven sons and three daughters. In the course of the journey they ran out of water and almost perished from thirst, at one time being obliged to drink from the pools at the roadside filled by a sudden shower.

Arriving at their destination the father purchased a two hundred and twenty-five acre ranch from the Mormon elders and made his home on the place until his death May 1, 1905, when he was nearly seventy-seven years old. The mother died in 1893, at the age of sixty-six years, her burial occurring on the forty-eighth anniversary of the settlement of the family in this county. They were the parents of ten children, six of whom are living and have homes in this county. Frances L., the wife of Milo Brooks; Amos H.; Levi; Ervin A., who married Adelaide Osborne; Clarissa and Clarina, twins who died young; Wilson J.; George, who died at the age of twenty-one years; Loren M., and Esther, who died in infancy.

The birth of Amos H. Bemis occurred September 27, 1858, in San Bernardino county, where he received the advantages of a common school education, and after his studies were completed assisted his father on the ranch until twenty-one years old. At that age he started on an independent business career, buying a claim of one hundred and sixty acres from the man who had originally homesteaded it. Mr. Bemis brought it to a high state of improvement and now has twenty acres in sweet and navel oranges, ten acres in lemons, ten acres in apricots, and a five-acre vineyard, the rest of the land being cultivated and planted to grain crops. It is his intention, however, to ultimately have the entire ranch planted to fruit. He owns ten shares in the Rialto Water Company, from which he has sufficient water to irrigate sixty-five acres.

By his marriage, May 28, 1884, Mr. Bemis was united with Miss Jennie Leedom, a native of Iowa, and the daughter of Andrew Leedom, an early pioneer in California. Of this union six children were born: Frank, Katie, Fred (who died when five years old), Isabelle, Nellie and Clarence. Mr. Bemis is a member of Arrowhead Parlor No. 110, N. S. G. W., and belongs to Token Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F., at San Bernardino, of which he is past grand. He is a strong advocate of the principles of the Republican party. Being considered an expert on roads he was appointed road overseer by the supervisors. He is actively interested in the promotion of enterprises tending to upbuild his section of the state, and as one of the public-spirited citizens of San Bernardino county is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

MARCUS L. FRINK. One of the extensive ranchmen of San Bernardino county, located near Bryn Mawr, is Marcus L. Frink, who is a member of one of the oldest pioneer families in California and in his own right holds the highest respect and esteem of his fellow-citizens. He is a native son of California, having been born March 14, 1860, in San Bernardino county, the son of Horace M. and Polly A. (DeWitt) Frink. His mother was a native of Indiana and came with her grandfather, Martin Potter, to San Bernardino, where, in 1857, she was married to Mr. Frink. The father, who was born May 31, 1831, in New York, was the son of Jefferson Frink, an accomplished drummer, and after securing his education and learning the mason trade, started west, stopping first in Illinois, later going to the mining sections of Missouri. In his travels he met Brigham Young, with whom he later had business relations, and as driver of one of the wagons in the train was one of the first persons to reach Salt Lake City in 1847. He did not remain in Utah, however, but returned to Missouri for a time, and then pushed his way to the western coast, reaching Hangtown (now Placerville) in 1852. He remained in that section of the state for two years, and in 1854 came to San Bernardino, where he and his brother secured three hundred and twenty acres of land in the San Timoteo valley, at what is now Elcasco. There they raised stock until 1866, when Horace M. sold out, having by that time accumulated about sixteen hundred head of cattle. In 1862 he acted as guide to the United States troops under Captain Prentice, on the march from San Bernardino to Fort Yuma, he being thoroughly familiar with the lay of the country in that direction. He also discovered the springs now known as Frink Springs, which became a favorite watering place for travelers. In 1867 he purchased the Wallace place, comprising one hundred acres of land in old San Bernardino, where he lived until his death, July 28, 1874. Three of the seven children in the parental family are now living, Alonzo M., Marcus L. and Polly A., the latter the wife of H. F. Gansner. The mother is still living on the home place at the age of seventy years.

After completing his studies in the common schools of San Bernardino county, Marcus L. Frink worked on the home ranch until his father's death, and since that time he and his brother, Alonzo M., have been jointly interested in the ownership of their real estate. They have a ranch of one hundred and thirteen acres in San Bernardino county, forty acres of which is devoted to seedling, navel and valencia oranges, and the remainder to grain and alfalfa crops. A second ranch, located in Riverside county, comprises one hundred and ninety-three acres, which with the exception of a five acre peach orchard is given over entirely to grain and hay raising. Mr. Frink came to the place on which he now resides in 1867, and he was born on that part of the land which was formerly used as a race track. He is a member of Token Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F., at San Bernardino, and belongs to Redlands Parlor, N. S. G. W. Politically he is a believer in the principles of the Republican party, and has served as a member of the board of school trustees of his district.

By his marriage in 1880 at San Bernardino Mr. Frink was united with Samantha C. Wilson, a native of that city, and the daughter of Joseph Wilson, who was originally from Ohio, and settled in California in 1854. Mr. and Mrs. Frink have become the parents of seven children, three of whom died in infancy, those now living being, Lena A., Amy (the wife of G. A. Murphy, of San Bernardino), Milton J. and Howard L.

HIRAM SMITH DAVIDSON. On the corner of Highland avenue and G streets, in San Bernardino, Mr. Davidson has made his home for more than two decades, having seventy acres of land originally in this location. Of recent years he has sold off portions of the tract, however, until he now has only twenty-nine acres. The residence is a fine modern structure, which he himself erected, in fact all of the improvements are his handiwork.

Hiram S. Davidson is a native of Illinois and was born in Hancock county May 22, 1840, the son of George and Nancy (Lytle) Davidson, the parents being natives of Pennsylvania. When Hiram was a lad of ten years his parents removed to Utah, and as he was then of school age he at once became a student in the schools in that then territory. From the time after leaving school until he was eighteen years old he followed teaming, a business which brought him in contact with many who were making their way across the country to the far west. This was a suggestion to the lad and the year 1858 found him carrying out his cherished plan. From that time until coming to San Bernardino county in 1875 he had visited various parts of the state, his choice for a permanent location falling on this favored spot after a thorough canvass to find a combination of advantages, such as climate and soil. He at once erected a commodious home for the family, and the barn and other building, which he also erected, are in keeping, all combining to make one of the substantial and well-ordered ranches in this vicinity.

Mr. Davidson's marriage in 1877 united him with Mrs. Elizabeth (Bain) Swarthout, the widow of George Swarthout, and three children have been born to them, as follows: Walter Melvin, who is in Arizona, an employe of the Santa Fe Railroad Company; John Andrew, who operates a cigar store in San Bernardino; and Nettie, at home. By her former marriage Mrs. Davidson became the mother of five children, named in order of birth as follows: Charity, Mrs. Stephen Kelley, of San Bernardino; Susan, who died at the age of nineteen years; Charles, who lives in the state of Washington; George, who is a conductor on the Santa Fe road and resides at Needles; and Albert Riley.

J. J. HANFORD. The largest manufacturing establishment in San Bernardino, with the sole exception of the Santa Fé shops, is the Hanford iron works, occupying three acres, with a brick building erected in 1904, on the corner of C and First streets. The structure is 100x283 feet in dimensions and is thoroughly modern in equipment, furnishing a plant complete in every detail. The products of the foundry find a ready sale not only where iron work is needed in San Bernardino, but also in Redlands, Highland, Ontario, Pomona, and to some extent also in Los Angeles. The foundry has a capacity of seven tons per day and furnishes employment to about twenty-four workmen, each of whom is skilled in his special department.

Born in New York City June 12, 1845, J. J. Hanford is a son of Peter Hanford, a moulder in the Novelty iron works in that metropolis. It is natural that he should be an expert foundryman, for he has been familiar with iron works from boyhood. After having completed the grammar school studies in New York City and Brooklyn, in May of 1859 he became an apprentice to the moulder's trade in the Novelty iron works in New York City. From August until December of 1863 he was employed in the Algers works of South Boston, extensive manufacturers of government engines, shot, shell, etc. On his return to Brooklyn from Boston he took up work at his trade and continued at the same until 1873, when he was chosen a clerk in the comptroller's office, and later engaged in business in Brooklyn.

Coming to California in 1882 Mr. Hanford found Los Angeles a sleepy Mexican town of ten thousand inhabitants. However, he was charmed by its climate and location and believed it offered a favorable point for real-estate speculation. Accordingly he bought and sold, handling large tracts of city property. When the boom collapsed in 1889 he was interested with four others in the subdividing of the General Sanford ranch, which they had purchased. The decadence of the boom stopped their enterprise and Mr. Hanford returned home with only a dollar. In 1889 he went to San Diego and entered the employ of the Coronado Foundry and Machine Company, of whose foundry he soon was made foreman. While filling this position he was ever on the alert for a desirable point in which to embark in business for himself, and in 1892 he selected San Bernardino as the center of his future activities. With Mr. Wade, then the general manager of the Santa Fé Railroad, he made a contract to manufacture and furnish the castings for this division of the road. The foundry was built and the plant started on C near Second street, but at the expiration of three years he purchased his present property of three acres, erected necessary buildings, and has since developed a large business in structural iron work, taking orders from all parts of the county.

The marriage of Mr. Hanford was solemnized in New York City and united him with Miss Joan Gregg, who was born and educated there. One son blesses the union, William J., who assists his father in the supervision of the works. Mrs. Hanford is a woman possessing broad culture and refined tastes. One of her specialties has been the collection of Japanese curios and art treasures, of which it is said by excellent judges that she has the finest exhibit in this country.

Although formerly a Democrat, since 1904 Mr. Hanford has voted the Republican ticket. During his residence in the east he was a leader in local politics and wielded a large influence throughout his district. Since coming west he has been interested in movements pertaining to the political life of his county and state. For six years he was a member of the city council and during four years of that time he officiated as president of the board. The San Bernardino Board of Trade has numbered him among its leading members ever since its organization and at this writing he acts as chairman of the manufacturers' committee. During 1904-05 he officiated as president of the board and at the expiration of his term declined renomination, thus establishing a precedent for a one-year term in the president's chair. While living in New York City he was made a Mason in Munn Lodge No. 190, A. F. & A. M., and later became connected with the Sanctorum in Brooklyn. Other organizations in which he has wielded an important influence are the Eagles, Improved Order of Red Men, Fraternal Brotherhood and Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

MOSES B. GARNER. During the early portion of the nineteenth century there came to the United States a young German bearing the name of Moses Baumgarner and possessing the qualities of thrift and perseverance for which his countrymen are noted. After a brief sojourn in Kentucky he removed to Illinois and took up a farm in Hamilton county near McLeansboro, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. Ere he had reached the success toward which his ambition pointed sudden death overtook him and removed from the community a capable farmer and progressive citizen. It was at the time of the cholera plague in 1851 that he and his wife on the same day fell victims to the dread discase. The family name had been shortened to its present form by the original immigrant, shortly after his arrival in the new world.

Reared on an Illinois farm and educated in country schools, M. B. Garner had no special advantages in youth, but was obliged to earn his own way from an early age. For a long period he resided in his native county of Hamilton, where he followed farm pursuits and for a time served as deputy sheriff. Later he cultivated land in White county and from there removed to Fairfield, Wayne county, where he engaged in conducting a hotel and carrying on a livery business. On removing to Xenia, Clay county, Ill., he carried on a hotel as well as a general store. Meanwhile in early manhood he had established domestic ties. His marriage was solemnized August 25, 1852, and united him with Miss Hannah Heard, a native of McLeansboro, Ill., and a daughter of John H. and Mahilda (Crouch) Heard, also natives of Illinois. The family was founded in America by her grandfather, Charles Heard, who was born in England and died in Illinois. The maternal grandparents, Adam and Hannah (Buck) Crouch, made their home upon a large farm near Shawneetown, Ill., remaining there until they passed from the scenes of earth. When twenty years of age John H. Heard enlisted as a volunteer in the struggles with the Indians and rendered faithful service in the Black Hawk war. Throughout active life he followed agricultural pursuits and made a specialty of raising and selling thoroughbred horses. His death occurred in Illinois when he had reached an advanced age.

The family of John H. Heard consisted of two children, but Hannah was the only one of these to attain maturity, and she was orphaned at three years of age by her mother's death. In childhood she was sent to neighboring schools which were conducted in log buildings destitute of conveniences and scantily equipped for the purposes desired. Public schools had not yet become popular and teachers were engaged by patrons to be paid on the subscription plan. In spite of disadvantages incident to the day and locality she acquired a fair education, besides which she was carefully trained in housewifely arts. About eleven years after her marriage she accompanied her husband and their five children to the west, traveling with horses and oxen during the summer of 1863 and settling near Virginia City, Mont., at Alder Gulch. For a brief period Mr. Garner carried on a mine which he had purchased at Pine Grove.

During the spring of 1864 the family started for Los Angeles, but on their arrival at San Bernardino the illness of a child caused them to stop. A house was bought, the family established themselves comfortably, and for years Mr. Garner engaged in the butcher business. With the profits of his work he invested in a company that built the motor railroad to Redlands and also to Harlem Springs, and he further became a stockholder in the First National Bank of San Bernardino, of which he was elected vice-president. The decadence of the boom caused the failure of the bank and, to meet its obligations to depositors, Mr. Garner willingly donated all of his property, leaving nothing whatever for all of his work. Though disheartened by the financial catastrophe, he bravely began once more, and in time retrieved his losses and by buying and selling lands again accumulated a competency. His death occurred in September, 1900, when he was seventy-two years of age, and since that time his widow has remained at the old home in San Bernardino. Both were from early life identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church South and contributed generously to religious movements.

The ten children comprising the family of Mr. and Mrs. Garner were named as follows: Mary, Mrs. James Swing, of Riverside; Lucy, Mrs.

Harry Bryant, of San Bernardino; Maggie, Mrs. John Barton, who died in San Bernardino, leaving three children; Will C., who is engaged in the real estate business in this city; Robert F., who is one of the leading cattle-buyers in this part of the country; Mrs. Jennie Lemaster, of El Paso, Tex.; Emma, who died at eighteen years of age; John T., who is engaged in the wholesale meat business at Riverside; Florence, Mrs. Fred W. Park, of San Bernardino; and Joseph, who died at the age of thirteen years. Identified with the early American occupancy of San Bernardino, Mr. Garner held a prominent place among its early business men and progressive citizens, and contributed largely to the development of its material resources. Its prosperity and reverses he shared, rejoicing in the one, deploring the other; yet retaining, even when the reaction from the boom brought unwonted financial depression, a stanch faith in the ultimate prosperity of his home city and county. While he never sought political prominence, he kept posted concerning party issues and gave his support to the Democratic party. The high principles of Masonry received his stanch support and for years he was an active local worker in the order. Another organization in which he maintained an interest was the Illinois Society of California. It was not his privilege to live to witness the prosperity of the twentieth century, yet it may well afford pleasure to his family to realize that his energy, enterprise, wise judgment and keen foresight contributed materially to the consummation enjoyed by the present generation.

WILLIAM SPEED. A successful ranchman of San Bernardino is William Speed, who has been a resident of this section since 1876. He is a native of England, and was born February 27, 1841, a son of William and Mary (Turner) Speed. At the age of thirty years he immigrated to this country, settling first in Pottawattamie county, Iowa, and remaining there five years. Attracted by the opportunities offered on the Pacific coast he decided to move further west and in 1876 arrived in San Bernardino, Cal., which place has since been his home. In 1881 he purchased the ranch upon which he now lives, the land at that time being uncultivated and unimproved. He built an attractive five-room cottage on the place and erected the necessary outbuildings, and has about five acres now planted to alfalfa. Before the water became scarce he raised six crops of hay in a season, cutting about nine tons to the acre, but since the water has been less plentiful the yield has fallen to about one ton to the acre.

The marriage of Mr. Speed, which occurred in England, united him with Ann, a daughter of Richard and Elizabeth (Hodges) Mollard, her birth occurring there December 6, 1842. Seven children were born of this union: Henry Richard, who died in 1881, at the age of sixteen; Elizabeth, the wife of O. J. Sessions, residing in Los Angeles; Mary, whose death occurred in 1871, in her second year; Mary, now Mrs. D. Wilson, her home being at Long Beach; Anna, the wife of W. C. Garner, of San Bernardino; Margaret, who lives at home; and Mabel, who died at the age of seven years, in 1886. Mr. Speed is a man possessing many fine qualities of heart and mind and is highly respected by his friends and neighbors in San Bernardino.

JOHN HEBER LYTLE. The war between the United States and Mexico which grew out of the annexation of Texas to the Union in 1845 was indirectly the cause of bringing the Lytle family to the west, for in 1846 Andrew Lytle, the father of our subject, left his Iowa home and came to the scene of hostilities, in which he participated until the signing of the treaty of peace in 1848. Instead of returning to Iowa, in 1851 he came to California and settled in San Bernardino county near a little creek which later became known as Lytle creek, so named in honor of the family. By trade he was a blacksmith, and after coming to San Bernardino he erected a shop in which he carried on a good business the remainder of his life. He died in 1874, when only forty-eight years of age, while his wife, who before her marriage was Hannah Hull, lived to reached her seventy-seventh year, passing away in 1893.

John Heber Lytle was an infant when his parents left Iowa, where he was born April 16, 1846, so that his only knowledge of his birthplace is what has been handed down to him by his parents. His primary education was received in the schools of San Bernardino and of Salt Lake City. As manhood years approached and it became necessary for him to select a business which would enable him to provide for his own support, he tried various lines of work, including farming, and it was the latter that he finally decided he was best adapted for. After working for others for some time in 1884 he purchased twenty acres one quarter of a mile from the city limits of San Bernardino, at the corner of I street and Highland avenue, the same property upon which he has made his home for over twenty-two years. Besides erecting a house and barn he set out about one and a half acres to various kinds of fruits, all of which have grown to the luxuriant proportions known only to this land of never-ending sunshine.

In San Bernardino, January 20, 1884, John

H. Lytle and Sarah Louisa McCrary were united in marriage. Mrs. Lytle was born in San Bernardino April 24, 1865, and is a daughter of William and Emma (Mapstead) McCrary. Of the five children born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Lytle all are living and at home with their parents with the exception of John Milton, who died in 1886, when five months old. In order of birth the others are named as follows: Emma, Ena, Stewart and Serena. Mr. Lytle's early religious training was in the Mormon Church.

WALTER FREMONT GROW. No citizen of Highland is more closely identified with the development and upbuilding of this community than is Walter Fremont Grow, who has been a resident here since 1882, has acquired large property interests and has assisted in the promoting of an irrigation system that has been of untold benefit to this section. He was born July 19, 1856, in Maine, the son of Samuel Lorenzo and Harriet Fulker (Currier) Grow, and was taken by his parents to Monona county, Iowa, when nine years of age. After obtaining a high-school education he adopted the occupation in which he had been trained from boyhood and engaged in farming in that state until 1881, when he came to California. The first year here was spent on a large grain ranch near Fresno, and later he came to Highland and worked as a horticulturist for a year, thereafter purchasing his present ranch of eighty-six acres. He has put all of the improvements on the place, including thirty acres of navel oranges and grape fruit, commodious barns, and a fine residence of eleven rooms.

It was in 1898 that Mr. Grow with others established a domestic irrigating water system, sinking wells and installing large pumps, and altogether making it one of the most perfect water systems in use. All of the developing was done under the supervision of Mr. Grow, who was the first superintendent. The company is incorporated for $50,000, and its officers are L. C. Waite, of Riverside, president; Herbert W. Johnstone, of Highland, vice-president; John Browning, of Highland, secretary, the latter being also at the present time the managing superintendent. Mr. Grow, who owns eleven-twenty-fourths of the stock, is one of the directors and the head of the collection committee. He is a stockholder in the Northfork Water Company, and has a number of houses in Highland which he is renting. As director of the Chamber of Commerce, and chairman of the transportation and street and highways committees he is one of the leading members of that body. In 1894 he was nominated and elected to the office of supervisor of San Bernardino county, running against George M. Cooley.

Fraternally Mr. Grow is a member of the Knights of Pythias at Highland, has taken all of the degrees, and in 1904 represented his lodge in the Grand Lodge at Bakersfield. A member of the Congregational Church, he is a liberal supporter of the various charities and benevolences of that denomination, and his influence is found on the side of all enterprises tending to elevate the community in which he lives. On July 11, 1880, he was married to Carrie Ella Burroughs, a native of Iowa, whose birth occurred May 21, 1861, and her death August 7, 1890. Three children were born of this union: Edna May, now Mrs. William E. Bromelow, who resides in Highland; Ernest Prentiss, who died at the age of three months; and Laura Myrtle, at home. Mr. Grow was again married, December 15, 1900, Caroline Lowrie Wilson becoming his wife. She was born in Pittsburg, Pa., August 27, 1852, the daughter of William Work and Caroline (Lowrie) Wilson. Of this union two children have been born, one who died in infancy and Walter Lowrie, born June 4, 1904.

CLARENCE C. McCOLLUM. Conspicuous among the younger members of the farming community of Compton is Clarence C. McCollum, who settled here about two years ago, and in the pursuit of his chosen vocation is meeting with good success. A son of I. McCollum, he was born December 23, 1880, in Iowa, where the first three years of his life were passed.

Born in 1832, in North Carolina, I. McCollum learned the carpenter's trade when young, and for a few years followed it in the south. From there he removed to Iowa, but soon thereafter he went to Indiana, remaining there one year, when he once more located in Iowa. In the latter state he followed farming until 1883, when he located with his family in Pasadena, Cal., and is now living in Long Beach, Los Angeles county. He is a man of sterling integrity and worth, much esteemed in the community. Politically he is a Republican, and both himself and wife are members of the Friends Church. His first wife, Eunice (Hadley) McCollum, died in early life, having become the mother of two children, one of whom died in infancy, and the other, Elmina, now lives in Pasadena, Cal., and is single. Mr. McCollum's second wife was Luzena Ballinger, a native of North Carolina, and they became the parents of eight children, of whom two died in infancy. Those living are: Emma, the wife of John Byers, of Pasadena; Tillie, the wife of Charles Mathews, of Olympia, Wash.; Luella, Mrs. Conrad McDaniel, of Pasadena; Rhoda, wife of W. Z. Taber, of Pasadena; John, who married Mettie King and is living in Los Angeles; and Clarence C., the subject of this sketch.

Scarce three years old when he came with his parents to California, Clarence C. McCollum was reared and educated in Pasadena, where he began life for himself as a teamster. Industrious, prudent and thrifty, he accumulated some property, and now owns a house and lot in Pasadena. In December, 1904, wishing a change of occupation, he came to Compton, and having rented fifteen acres of land has since been prosperously employed in general ranching and dairying, selling his milk at the Compton cheese factory. Since locating here he has purchased a ranch of twenty-five acres. Wide-awake, active and ambitious, he is carrying on a substantial business, and has already obtained an assured position among the enterprising young business men of his community.

January 9, 1902, Mr. McCollum married Lottie Edna Lee, who was born in Illinois November 22, 1880, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Lee, who came from the Prairie state to California in 1886, locating in Pasadena, where they still reside. Mr. and Mrs. McCollum have two children, Clarence Milton and Margery Lucille. Politically Mr. McCollum is a Republican, and both he and his wife are attendants of the Christian Church, Mrs. McCollum having been a member of the First Christian Church of Pasadena since her fourteenth year.

JAMES L. GRIFFIN. Experience gained through a long sojourn in Southern California has given to Mr. Griffin a thorough knowledge of real estate values and makes his judgment in transactions of buying, selling or exchanging especially sound and important. In the upbuilding of San Pedro and Gardena he has been particularly active, and his name is associated with the transfer of many lots in his subdivisions, the platting of additions and the sale of lots having been among his specialties for a long duration of years. Although he has recently established his home in Los Angeles, he has not relinquished his interests in the towns named, but continues active in negotiating sales or exchange of properties, and is regarded as an authority concerning values.

Descended from an old southern family, Mr. Griffin was born in Greene county, Ind., July 30, 1869, and is the eldest among four children, all of whom still survive. His parents, Richard F. and Sarah E. (Inman) Griffin, were natives respectively of Tennessee and Indiana, and both died in Missouri, where for years the father followed the trade of a carpenter and cabinet-maker. At the time the family removed to Missouri James L. Griffin was a lad of fourteen years, and, with the exception of a brief period spent at Little Rock, Ark., he remained in Missouri until 1889, the year of his removal to California. Immediately after his arrival he secured employment in Los Angeles, and in 1891 learned the butcher's business with the Redondo Beach Company. After six months with that company he started a shop of his own at Redondo, where he carried on a growing business.

Immediately after removing to San Pedro, December 5, 1895, Mr. Griffin opened a butcher shop on Sixth near Beacon street, and later bought the shop owned by George Hinds on Fifth and Front streets. The latter market he conducted until May of 1902, meanwhile building up the largest business of its kind in the town and establishing a reputation for reliability and keen business methods. In the meantime he had become interested in the handling of town property both in San Pedro and Gardena. Among his enterprises was the purchase of the James L. Griffin subdivision to Gardena, a tract of forty acres, which he sold off in lots from one to ten acres in size. In addition he became owner of the Griffin and Kitzman tract of twenty-six acres, which has been sold off in town lots. At this writing, with Messrs. McDermott and Quinn, he is interested in the San Pedro Villa tract of twenty-five acres on the Weston road, which he has divided into lots of two and one-half acres. Besides buying and selling he has improved considerable property. Some years ago he erected the Griffin block, 25x100 feet in dimensions, on the corner of Fifth and Front streets, San Pedro, and in it he conducted his meat market for a time, but the block eventually was sold. The home building was another of the structures erected under his supervision. Since moving to Los Angeles he has made his home at No. 2027 Halldale avenue, and continues to be interested in real-estate transactions in this city and elsewhere.

When he was a lad making his home at Bonneterre, Mo., Mr. Griffin formed the acquaintance of Miss Abby Smith, who was born and reared in that old French town. In establishing domestic ties he chose her as his wife, and they have worked their way together in Southern California, until now they enjoy a deserved prosperity and a large circle of warm friends. To their only child, Ural, they have given excellent educational advantages in the schools of Southern California. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church and are contributors to religious and philanthropic movements. The only fraternal organization to which Mr. Griffin has given allegiance is the Independent Order of Foresters, in which he has been an active member for some years.

URBAN AMASA TYLER. From the commencement of his independent business career Urban Amasa Tyler has preferred the occupation of farmer and has been engaged in the cultivation of various crops since completing his education. He is a native son of California, having been born March 6, 1872, in San Bernardino, the son of Uriah Urban and Rachael (Moore) Tyler. The father was one of Southern California's earliest pioneers, and as such became an important factor in the progress and upbuilding of his locality. In his sketch, given elsewhere in this locality, more details concerning his useful life will be found. After completing his studies in the public schools Urban A. Tyler took a course at San Bernardino Academy, conducted by D. B. Sturgess, and when his studies were finished immediately began his occupation as a ranchman. In 1902 he purchased ten acres upon which he built a house and placed other improvements, setting out five acres to various kinds of small fruits and devoting the remainder to the growing of barley for his own use.

The marriage of Mr. Tyler, February 1, 1899, united him with Miss Rose A. Alvarado, a daughter of Ignatius and Sarah A. (White) Alvarado, and they have become the parents of three children: Clarice, Elmira and Eunice. Mr. Tyler is a member of Arrowhead Parlor, No. 110, N. S. G. W., in which society he has held several offices. While he had no taste for politics he intelligently and faithfully fulfills his duties as a citizen and takes an active interest in all elevating and upbuilding enterprises instituted for the benefit of his community.

WILLIAM P. WILLIAMSON. The fact that Mr. Williamson came to California eight seasons before finally taking up his residence here marks him as a careful, thoughtful man, and the fact that after all of these investigations he finally selected Pomona as the one place of all others where conditions and climate are most harmoniously combined is at once a compliment to the town. After a life of many busy and useful years as a tiller of the soil in Iowa he came to Pomona in 1900, and has since lived retired, enjoying a well-earned respite after many years of labor and responsibility.

A native of the Emerald Isle, William P. Williamson was born in County Derry, September 8, 1837, one of six sons born to his parents, James and Margaret (Peyton) Williamson, they, too, being natives of Ireland. The father was a stanch Presbyterian and in defending his faith was often involved in the religious disturbances which were frequent occurrences in Ireland during his day. During one of the Catholic massacres he was taken prisoner and placed in Londonderry jail, and during his incarceration there suffered untold hardships, being compelled to live on rats in preference to death by starvation. He died at the age of sixty years, and his wife when seventy. Three of their sons are still living, and of those who came to the United States one is in Pomona, Cal., one in Iowa, and the other returned to Ireland on a visit and died there. William P. received a common-school education in his native country, and at the age of fourteen came to the United States and settled in Cincinnati, Ohio, where without difficulty he secured employment in the rolling mills, receiving a man's wages from the beginning. At the end of two years he left Ohio and located in Illinois not far from Chicago, where for about four years he worked as a farm hand. Thereafter he spent about five months in Minnesota, then in the throes of an Indian uprising, and among others he assisted in driving the foe from the white settlements.

Subsequently returning to Illinois, Mr. Williamson about this time (in 1857, when he was twenty years old) formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Margaret Williamson, who was born in County Antrim, Ireland, April 20, 1838, a daughter of John and Martha (McClennen) Williamson. John Williamson was a practicing physician in the old country, a profession which he relinquished in 1847 to come to the United States. In Will county, Illinois, where the family settled, the mother died at the age of fifty-eight years, and thereafter the father removed to Tama county, Iowa, there living to attain the remarkable age of ninety-four years. His family comprised one son and six daughters, and of these three daughters are now living, one in California (Mrs. W. P. Williamson), one in Illinois, and one in Indiana. As Mrs. Williamson was only nine years of age at the time of her removal to the United States, she has little knowledge of her native country, and in fact the greater part of her life has been spent in the middle west. Reared and educated in Will county, Illinois, after their marriage she remained in the same county for about six years, Mr. Williamson then removing to Tama county, Iowa. Purchasing a farm of four hundred and forty-two acres, he settled down to life in that locality, and for thirty-five years raised successful crops, not one failure marring the record. In addition to raising grain he was equally successful as a hog and cattle raiser, and was rightfully classed among the most successful and thrifty farmers of that state. He erected two residences on the farm and a complement of outbuildings adequate for the needs of his business. He still owns his Iowa property, although for the past six years, or since locating in California, it has been under the care of a tenant.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Williamson, but only one is now living. James Hugh, the first born, died at the age of two years and seven months; Lillie B. is the wife of Dr. G. W. Forester, a physician of Pomona, and they have three children living; Maggie May became the wife of Augustus Schroder, and at her death, which occurred in Pomona, September 25, 1905, at the age of thirty-nine years, she left one child. The family are communicants of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Pomona, of which Mr. Williamson and his wife are members, and in their daily living exemplify the teachings of their religious belief. In his political leanings Mr. Williamson is a Republican, casting his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, and it was on the ticket of his chosen party that he was elected town councilman of Elberon, Iowa. The keynote of Mr. Williamson's success is without doubt due to the high principles of honor which have entered into every transaction, to the end that his life has been upright and honorable, and in the evening of his days he can look over the past without remorse and forward to the future without fear.

EMMO C. BICHOWSKY. Since coming to Pomona in 1899 Mr. Bichowsky has demonstrated the possession of qualities which make for good citizenship, and as an enterprising, wide-awake business man he has won a name and place for himself in the commercial world which is worthy of his efforts. Among the various enterprises with which his name is associated are the Pomona Implement Company, of which he is president, and the Pomona Valley Hospital.

Mr. Bichowsky was born February 29, 1856, in Terre Haute, Ind., where his father, Francis, a native of Berlin, Germany, had settled upon his emigration to the new world in 1849. For thirty-five years he was associated with the business life of that city as a merchant, and his death in 1906 was deplored as a public loss. His wife, Mathilde Gust, was also a native of Germany, born in Frankfort-on-the-Oder, Prussia. Emmo C. Bichowsky was their only son who grew to manhood, and he was given a good education in the common and high schools of his native city, graduating from the latter with honors when seventeen years of age. His ambitious spirit would not permit him to be content in idleness, and although the circumstances of his parents were such as to admit of a short respite after his arduous school life, he nevertheless sought occupation at once. His first position was as cashier for the firm of Hulman & Co., of Terre Haute, later accepting the position of teller in the bank of McKeen & Co., of the same city. During the nine years he remained with the latter employers he was advanced steadily until at the time of his resignation, in 1885, he had been filling the office of assistant cashier for some time.

The year which witnessed the close of his business connections in Indiana was the beginning of a new career in the Golden State, and one with which he has every reason to feel proud. He first located in San Gabriel, Los Angeles county, and for a time he was employed as deputy in the county tax collector's office at Los Angeles. In the fall of 1886 he became associated with L. J. Rose & Co., owners of the largest winery on the coast, the products of Sunny Slope, at the vineyard was called being sent to all parts of the country. For about eleven years Mr. Bichowsky was manager of this large foreign corporation, and upon resigning his position in August of 1897 he went to Santa Monica, remaining there two years, in the meantime associating himself with the California Green and Dried Fruit Company at Los Angeles as manager. Believing that a larger opening awaited him in Pomona, he gave up the latter position in 1899 and the same year came here, in August buying out the implement business of Philip Stein & Co. With this as a nucleus he organized a new company which was incorporated as the Pomona Implement Company, with himself as president. From the first the business has had a steady growth which has been gratifying in the extreme, and he now occupies the whole of the Brady building as well as the annex, which includes two stores and a floor space 105x97½ feet. In addition to implements of all kinds and makes he also carries a complete stock of the goods manufactured by the Studebaker Brothers Manufacturing Company. Another enterprise with which Mr. Bichowsky is associated is the Pomona Valley Hospital, of which he is president. It has been in active operation since December of 1904, and is conceded to be one of the finest small hospitals in this part of the state. He is also vice-president and a director of the San Gabriel Cemetery Association. During the time he had charge of the Sunny Slope ranch in the San Gabriel valley he purchased an orange ranch of twenty-four acres and he still owns this property.

In Boston, Mass., Mr. Bichowsky was married to Miss Ella Mason, a native of that state, and four children have been born of their marriage: Carl (deceased), Foord, Francis and James. In their religious affiliations the family are Unitarians and in the church of that denomination at Pomona Mr. Bichowsky is a trustee and is chairman of the finance committee. Politically he is a Republican, and fraternally he is a charter member of Pomona Lodge No. 789, B. P. O. E. Enterprising and successful, he has not been content with gaining prosperity for himself, but has taken an active part in plans for the upbuilding of his community, and in 1900 was one of the organizers of the Board of Trade, of which for three successive years he has been president.

WILLIAM HALE MUNROE. As one of the leading contracting painters and decorators of San Pedro, William Hale Munroe is conducting a successful and well-established business, which occupies an important place among the various industries of this thriving city. A man of strictly honest principles, with a fine record as a soldier in the Civil war, he stands high in the estimation of the community in which he resides, and is looked upon as a useful and honorable citizen. A native of New England, he was born April 19, 1840, in Bristol, R. I., where his parents, Caleb and Lemira (Luther) Munroe, spent their entire lives. The father, a farmer by occupation, was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, while his mother was of English descent. Grandfather Munroe served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

The youngest of a family of eleven children, William H. Munroe was brought up on the home farm and educated in the common schools of Bristol. At the age of seventeen years he began learning the trade of painter in Fall River, Mass., where he was employed until after the breaking out of the Civil war. Enlisting, in June, 1862, in Company D, Third Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, he was in camp at Readville, Mass., for a year, and then, with Burnside's expedition, was sent to North Carolina, where he took part in the battles at Roanoke Island and Newbern. Returning home at the expiration of his term of enlistment, he at once re-enlisted, becoming a member of Company D, Sixtieth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and was for a short time stationed in Maryland. He was subsequently promoted to the rank of second lieutenant, and with his regiment was sent to Indianapolis to guard prisoners. At the close of the war, after serving five months with his company, he was honorably discharged, and then returned home.

Settling in New England, Mr. Munroe followed his trade either in Massachusetts or Rhode Island for a number of years. Desiring a change, he went to Yankton, S. Dak., in 1876, and was there engaged in painting and contracting for a while. Removing from there to Hutchinson county, S. Dak., he bought a large tract of land, and for a number of years was prosperously employed in agricultural pursuits. Selling out in 1894, he went to Salt Lake City, where he followed his trade of painter and contractor for seven years. Coming to California in 1901, he located in San Pedro, purchasing a residence at No. 1325 Center street, and has since built up a substantial business as a contractor in painting and decorating, his artistic and durable work being appreciated by his patrons.

Mr. Munroe has been twice married, his first marriage, in Somerset, Mass., uniting him with Augusta Brooks, a native of Vermont. She died in Yankton, S. Dak., leaving one child, William F., now engaged in business at Trinidad, Colo. In Yankton, S. Dak., Mr. Munroe married Mrs. Calista (Kelly) Bartlett, who was born of Scotch-Irish and English ancestry and reared in Ohio. By her first marriage she has five children, one son, Van Velsor Bartlett, being a resident of Santa Rosa. Politically Mr. Munroe is a loyal adherent of the Republican party, and while a resident of Yankton served as auditor of Yankton county. While there he organized Phil Kearney Post No. 7, G. A. R., which he served as commander, and he is now a member of Harbor City Post No. 108, G. A. R. He is likewise a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent, Protective Order of Elks.

Since writing the above Mr. Munroe has disposed of his holdings in San Pedro and intends to locate in Santa Rosa, Sonoma county.

MARSHALL POSEY SULLENGER. A pioneer ranchman of San Bernardino county is Marshall Posey Sullenger, a native of McLeansboro, Hamilton county, Ill., born October 7, 1845. His father, Alexander T. Sullenger, a native of Kentucky, in addition to following farming, also dealt in marble for many years. He lived to reach the ripe old age of ninety-one years and passed away in 1893. The wife and mother, who was born in Fairfax county, Va., died at the early age of thirty years. The education of M. P. Sullenger was gleaned in the district schools of Illinois, and even that privilege was not secured without great effort, for schools were few and far between at that time, the lad being obliged to walk four miles to the schoolhouse. Until the breaking out of the Civil war in 1861 his life was spent on the farm, but on August 12 of that year he enlisted in Company A, Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under command of Col. S. G. Hicks. He served faithfully until the end of his term of enlistment in 1864, when his company and regiment re-enlisted as a body, retaining their old organization, and Mr. Sullenger continued in the service until the close of the war, receiving an honorable discharge in June, 1865. He participated in a number of important battles, including Shiloh, Corinth, Holly Springs, Vicksburg, Jacksonville, as well as in many minor engagements. He was with Sherman on his famous march to the sea, at that time being under marching orders and in the firing line for one hundred and twelve days in succession.

At the close of the war Mr. Sullenger returned to his home in Hamilton county, Ill., and engaged in agricultural pursuits for a number of years. Removing to California in 1883, he purchased a ranch of two hundred and twenty acres, which he has brought to a high state of development, and is now growing thereon hay and grain crops. He is also the owner of a fine residence in the city of San Bernardino. In 1892 occurred his marriage to Miss Eliza M. Snider of San Bernardino, who was born in Ohio and for twenty years was an educator in the schools of Illinois, Pennsylvania and in San Bernardino. Mr. Sullenger is a member of Cornman Post No. 57, G. A. R., and politically is a stanch believer in the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He is a man who is deeply concerned in all matters of social and civic interest and is highly respected by all who know him.

JOHN BLODGETT. The proprietor of the City Stables, John Blodgett is one of the old settlers of Redlands and one of the important factors in the upbuilding of the business interests of the place. He is a native of Fulton county, Ind., his birth having occurred in that location September 16, 1856; his paternal grandfather, Morris, was a native of New England who became a farmer in Ohio, later in Indiana, and finally came to California and after some years spent in San Jacinto located in Tehama county where his death eventually occurred, at the age of eighty-eight years, his wife having died at the age of eighty-four. His father, George W. Blodgett, was born in Ohio and in young manhood became a farmer in Indiana. The pioneer spirit was strong upon him and the further attractions of the discovery of gold in the west impelled him to come as far west as Pike's Peak in 1859. Later he went to Montana and from that point he was drawn to Virginia City at the time of the gold discovery at that place. He sent his family east during the time spent in Virginia City, and the following year he returned to Indiana by mule-teams, but immediately afterward brought his family to Montana traveling in a train of one hundred and fifty wagons. This was at the time of the Sioux, Cheyenne and Arapahoe outbreak, but the journey was made in safety because of the large train, in which were three hundred armed men. They made the trip by way of the Bozeman cut-off, the Big Horn and Yellowstone Park, at Bozeman, crossing the Yellowstone river, where a son, Bruce, was drowned. They located in the vicinity of Virginia City where the father had taken up a large hay ranch, and there he built a hotel and conducted a stage through Madison valley to Virginia City, a distance of about twelve miles. After one year he discontinued these efforts and moved to Radersburg, Mont., thence came overland to Utah, where he engaged as a large contractor for the Union Pacific Railroad Company. He was living at Corinne at the time of the completion of the railroad, shortly after which he removed to Colorado and on the Divide engaged in the cattle business. While thus occupied he located at Colorado Springs and built one of the first dwellings in that city, which property he sold in 1871, and in July of that year came to California and in the San Jacinto valley engaged in general farming, the raising of alfalfa and the management of a large dairy. Their trading point was first at San Bernardino and later at Glendale. It was here that his wife, formerly Letitia Mcclure, a native of Indiana, passed away. Mr. Blodgett passed his last days with his son in Redlands, where his death occurred in 1903 at the age of eighty-four years. They were the parents of four sons and two daughters, of whom one son is deceased.

Frontier life has always been the part of John Blodgett, for from Indiana the family removed to various places in the west, and it was because of this that he early learned the management of horses and also his judgment regarding their possibilities. His actual knowledge of booklore is scant, because of an injury received in childhood which compelled him to seek an outdoor life. But in this he acquired what has been of more service to him than the best school training, for with added years has come the knowledge he could not then learn and in the meantime experience had fitted him for a proper understanding and use of it. When a mere lad he received $150 a month for herding stage horses, and also rode race horses for Hank Brown. He was present at the ceremony of the driving of the golden spike in 1869, and witnessed much of the growth and development of the west before and after that important event. He engaged with his father in the cattle business in Colorado, Utah and Montana, and followed his parents to California in 1871. From the San Jacinto valley he was accustomed to drive stock to Utah and the Panhandle in Texas. He took up a homestead near San Jacinto at the head of the valley and there improved a ranch, and in the meantime took a trip back to Colorado and bought cattle at Durango, and while there was married to Minnie Jacobs, a native of Ohio. He engaged in the cattle business in that section of Colorado, where he still owns cattle. Later he started a horse ranch in Arizona on the Verde and still has animals there. Returning to San Jacinto he again engaged in the stock business until 1900, when he located in Redlands and here engaged in dealing in horses, his reputation as a correct judge of equine flesh extending throughout the country. In June, 1906, he purchased the business of the City Livery and has since continued the business at No. 123 State street, where he has fine vehicles of every description. Mr. Blodgett had the honor of driving Helen Hunt Jackson through the Hemet valley to the ranch owned by Charles Thomas, at the time she was gathering material for her famous novel "Ramona."

Mr. and Mrs. Blodgett are the parents of four living children, three, Stella, Vivian and May, having died in Fresno; those living are Arthur, Frank, Gladys and Grace, the two sons being engaged with their father in business. Mrs. Blodgett is a member of the Baptist Church, whose charities are liberally supported by the family. Mr. Blodgett is a Democrat politically and was elected through these interests to the position of road overseer of the San Jacinto district, which duties he discharged with efficiency for six years.

MATHEAS BLUMEARE. One of the most extensive ranchmen in the Moreno valley is Matheas Blumeare who is farming three thousand acres of land to barley and wheat and in harvesting his crops uses a thirty-two horsepower combined harvester. He was born in Alsace Lorraine, France, June 16, 1847, being the son of John and Susan Blumeare, both natives of the same country. The father was occupied as a farmer during his lifetime, his death occurring in Algeria, Africa, in 1863, at the age of forty-seven years, his wife also dying there at the same age and in the same year. Matheas Blumeare received a good education in the French and German languages and after the completion of his studies took up the occupation of farming in his native country. In 1889 he emigrated to America and locating in Los Angeles county engaged in farming and dairying. Continuing in business at that point for one year he next when to Fullerton for two years and in 1893 came to the Moreno valley which has since been his home.

In 1897 Mr. Blumeare was married to Angela (Becker) Blumeare, a native of France, and who was in that country in 1878 wedded to Peter Blumeare, a brother of her present husband, the three coming to this country at the same time and the death of the brother occurring in this place in 1897 at the age of forty-two years. Mr and Mrs. Blumeare are devout members of the Catholic Church in San Jacinto. They are enterprising and progressive people, anxious to keep pace with present day methods and are held in the highest esteem by all who know them.

ALPHEUS B. WISE, V. S. One of the oldest residents and most favorably known professional men of San Bernardino is Dr. A. B. Wise, who is actively engaged in a large and lucrative veterinary practice. He is located on D street, near the old postoffice building, his office being fitted up with all modern appliances for surgical work, having an automatic operating table and all instruments necessary to his profession. He gives special attention to horses, cattle, hogs, sheep and other domestic animals, and his reputation as a practitioner has spread over the entire southwestern part of this state and into Arizona. He has served for many years as county veterinarian.

Born in Wetzel county, W. Va., December 7, 1839, Dr. Wise is the son of Jackson and Nancy (Ingram) Wise, the mother being a native of Pennsylvania and the father born in Virginia, following the occupation of farmer and blacksmith throughout his entire life. The son received only a limited education in the common schools in his early youth, having been obliged to make his own way in the world from the age of fourteen. He was of an ambitious and enterprising nature, however, and resolved to overcome the lack of early advantages, and while filling a position as clerk in a general store, at the same time attended a private school. In 1859 he joined a party of emigrants on a trip across the plains, engaging to drive one of the ox teams. Starting from St. Joseph, Mo., after a seven months' trip they landed at Placerville, then known as Hangtown, and Dr. Wise engaged in placer mining for two years. He was fairly successful in the undertaking and later continued mining in Virginia City. In 1863 he located in San Bernardino and with the exception of two years spent in Arizona, this has been his home ever since. When he first settled here he established himself as a blacksmith and also conducted a repair shop, continuing it successfully for seventeen years. Having taken up the study of veterinary surgery during his spare time, he soon became proficient and entered upon its practice, having in the meantime given up his blacksmith shop.

In 1865 Dr. Wise was united in marriage with Miss Harriet L. Roberts, who was born in Mississippi, and their one daughter is now the wife of Ernest E. Hott, of San Bernardino. Dr. Wise owns much valuable business and residence property here and is considered one of the most firmly established men in the city. In social, business and professional circles he is held in the highest esteem and as a public-spirited citizen is a supporter of every enterprise tending to upbuild his section of the state.

JOHN HELANDER. Properly ranked among the self-made men of Los Angeles county is John Helander, who began his career at the foot of the ladder of attainments, without other resources than his own indomitable will and resolute spirit. From the humble position of his youthful days he has risen to that of one of the representative men of a thriving and prosperous community, at the present time being prominently associated with the mercantile interests of San Pedro as a successful grocer. For a number of years he was engaged in seafaring pursuits, as a sailor visiting many of the important seaports of the world, and having many thrilling experiences and escapes from danger and death. In October, 1882, while on board the barque James B. Bell, from San Francisco, he was wrecked during a hurricane in the harbor of Acapulco, Mexico, but all of the crew, with the exception of the second mate, was saved. Eight days afterwards, when about one hundred miles from the Mexican shore, the barque Antioch, on which he was a seaman, sprung aleak, having been damaged by the hurricane just mentioned, but fortunately was taken into a small harbor and all on board were rescued from their perilous position. Five months later, in the early part of 1883, the schooner on which he was employed was wrecked between the Mild Rocks, in the Golden Gate harbor, but the vessel, and all of the crew excepting three men, were saved. With this record of dangers braved, it is needless to speak of Mr. Helander's courage and fearlessness, to which are also added industry, honesty and integrity.

A native of Finland, Mr. Helander was born October 12, 1856, in the city of Abo, which was also the birthplace of his father, Henry Helander. When a boy he began working in a printing office in Abo, and was afterwards for three years employed in a match factory. At the age of sixteen years he began his seafaring life, going first as cook on a vessel engaged in foreign trade. Subsequently, on the Elliott, an English vessel, he went before the mast to Calcutta, India, going and returning by way of the Cape of Good Hope, after which he sailed from France for New York and Baltimore. Subsequently, as one of the crew of the American ship Oriental, he sailed from Baltimore, Md., around the Horn to Callao, Peru, and return, and later, on the same vessel, came around the Horn with a cargo of coal, one-half of which he delivered in Mexico, bringing the remainder to San Francisco, arriving in port in 1879. Locating in that city, he continued as a sailor for a few years, becoming first mate. He visited various ports, including those of Mexico and the Sandwich Islands, and, as above mentioned, met with numerous disasters. As early as 1887 he landed in San Pedro, at that time experiencing two or three earthquake shocks. From 1883 until 1885 he lived in Portland, Ore., where he settled after his marriage, being there employed in fishing. Locating in San Pedro in January, 1887, he built a residence on Second street, and for three years was in the employ of Banning & Co., the ensuing two years being engaged in the lumber business, during which time, in 1892, he began the erection of his present store building, on Fourth street, near Beacon street. Since its completion, in July, 1893, he has been successfully engaged in mercantile business, having a large and well stocked grocery, which is well patronized.

In 1883, in San Francisco, Mr. Helander married Mary Fahler, a native of Finland, and their only child, Victor Helander, a graduate of Woodbury's Business College, is a plumber in San Pedro. Politically Mr. Helander is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Foresters of America.

GUY MONROE FLORY. One of the most popular and successful contractors and builders in San Bernardino is Guy Monroe Flory, who has lived the greater part of his life since four years of age in this community. His parents, M. M. and Mary (Armstrong) Flory, were both members of old Virginia families, and became early settlers in Independence, Mo., where the son, Guy Monroe, was born May 12, 1872. The father served in the Federal army during the Civil war and made a fine military record. A sketch of his life appears in another part of this volume.

It was in 1876 that Guy Monroe Flory was brought by his parents to San Bernardino. The public schools of this city he attended until fourteen years of age, from which time until eighteen he was employed in various capacities. He then apprenticed himself to a blacksmith and worked at that trade for three years there and in Stockton, and after attaining his majority commenced to work at the carpenter's trade, which he had learned from his father when a young boy. The years of his young manhood were restless ones, however, and a short time later he went to the State of Chihuahua, Mexico, and was superintendent of the Santa Margareta mines there for two years. Returning to San Bernardino he continued to work at the carpenter's trade until 1903, when he began business as a contractor and builder and has since that time been erecting residences in this city. His own home, at No. 152 Seventh street, is an example of his work.

The marriage of Mr. Flory in San Bernardino in 1894 united him with Miss Ellen Warden, who was born in Phoenix, Ariz., a daughter of Thomas C. Warden, who was an early settler in that territory and was sheriff of Maricopa county at one time. He came to San Bernardino at the time of the Indian troubles and served as deputy sheriff and police officer, and was killed in an accident while serving as a special officer on the Santa Fé Railroad at Seligman, Ariz., in March, 1906. He discovered and named the Calico mine, and also found the King mine, in which he sold his interest. Mr. and Mrs. Flory are the parents of three children, Alberta, Gladys and Frank. Fraternally Mr. Flory is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at San Bernardino and the Woodmen of the World. He has been a member of the San Bernardino fire department at different times during the greater part of the past fifteen years, has served as treasurer of the company and was also at one time the foreman. Politically he is an active Republican and is a leading influence in the councils of his party in that section of the state.

CHARLES HUDSON TYLER. During the half century and more that Mr. Tyler has been a resident of California he has been an interested witness to the marvelous changes that have transformed a country in its infancy from every standpoint, through the adolescent to the mature age, until to-day it stands full-fledged and upon equal footing with the older commonwealths of the Union. Far from being an idle witness, he has done his share in bringing about present conditions, and as a reward for industry and frugality in years gone by he is now enabled to live practically retired, making his home on a small ranch near San Bernardino.

A son of John S. and Eliza (Hudson) Tyler, Charles H. Tyler was born on Long Island, N. Y., October 21, 1831, and was educated both in the schools of his native town and in the more advanced schools of New York City. After his graduation, when he was about seventeen years of age, he went to sea, being under the immediate instruction and guidance of his father, who was a sea captain and the master of the ship on which he sailed. Three years on the water, however, satisfied him that seafaring was not the life for which he was adapted, and at the age of twenty he struck out in the world for himself, going direct to New York City, where for a number of years he clerked in a store. Although the records do not so state, it is safe to presume that his removal to California came about as a result of the wonderful stories of the finding of gold in the state, stories which reached the most remote corners of our own and other countries. This prediction is strengthened by the fact that after landing at San Francisco from the old ship Golden Gate he made his way immediately to Georgetown, where he tried his luck at placer mining. Fortune smiled rather than frowned upon his efforts, for he continued mining for fifteen years, from 1854 until 1869. It was in the latter year that he came to San Bernardino and purchased a ranch, intending to follow an agricultural life, but his knowledge along that line was so meagre that he decided to give it up. Selling his property he bought an interest in a lumber mill in Little Grass Valley, and subsequently with his brother, under the name of Tyler Brothers, bought out the entire interest in the mill. Under this name business was conducted until 1891, when the plant was sold to the Arrowhead Company.

It was in the year just mentioned, 1891, that Mr. Tyler purchased the four-acre plot of Mr. Stoddard upon which he now makes his home. There had been very little expenditure made for improvements when the property fell into Mr. Tyler's hands, so that in reality he has made it what it is, erecting his house and barn and planting all of the trees upon the place. He also owns property in the vicinity of Highland, which he purchased of Mr. Seely, the original purchase comprising four hundred acres, although he now owns only twenty acres, having disposed of portions of it from time to time. Much of this land he had purchased as low as $4 per acre. The orange trees on the Highland ranch he planted in 1892 and he now has one of the finest orchards in the county, both in point of productiveness and quality of fruit. For almost fifteen years he has devoted his attention exclusively to the cultivation of oranges on the Highland ranch, although his home has always been in San Bernardino, where he is now living retired from the active duties connected with the management of his ranch. At the time of the Civil war he offered his services, but was never called into action.

In San Bernardino, July 4, 1880, Mr. Tyler was united in marriage with Jerusha Hancock, the daughter of Joseph and Nancy (Guernsey) Hancock, and two children have been born to them, Mary Hudson, at home with her parents, and Don Charles, a student in the high school at San Bernardino. Fraternally Mr. Tyler was at one time a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. In his religious views he is a Christian Scientist.

WILLIAM CHARLES GREELY. Among the well known men of San Pedro is William Charles Greely, formerly president of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California, and an important factor in the development of the industrial prosperity of this section of the state. Distinguished as a native son of California, he was born, April 23, 1859, on Rattlesnake bar, north fork of the American river, in Placer county, a son of William Greely. His Grandfather Greely was born in Ireland, but when a young man immigrated to the United States, locating in Boston, Mass.

William Greely was born in Boston, Mass., and there followed mechanical pursuits for many years. In 1851, lured to the Pacific coast by the wonderful stories told concerning the discovery of gold, he came by way of the Isthmus of Panama to this state, and for about nine years was engaged in mining. Settling permanently in Placer county in 1860, he bought a ranch about four miles from Auburn and engaged in horticultural pursuits, becoming one of the earliest fruit growers of that region. In this occupation he met with some success, continuing it until his death, at the age of sixty-six years. He married Mary Haley, who was born in Boston, and died in California. Of the four children born of their union, three are living, William Charles, the special subject of this sketch, being the third child in order of birth.

Completing his studies in the district schools, William Charles Greely remained on the home farm for some years, being principally employed in buying and shipping fruits. He was subsequently engaged as a wholesale dealer in fruits in Montana for a time, but in June, 1885, changed his residence and occupation, going to The Dalles, Ore., where he was for three months employed in a sawmill, afterwards working for two months with the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company. On December 24, 1885, with but $5 to his name, he came to Los Angeles, Cal., expecting to take a position as clerk in a railway office. He was disappointed, however, in getting the position, and so took the next best thing offered, for five months driving a team for Charles Ellan. Securing a situation then with the Kirchkoff Lumber Company, he began at the foot of the ladder, and gradually worked his way upward, remaining with that firm two years. Going then to San Francisco, he was associated with the California Bridge Company for a short time, after which he entered the employ of the Pacific Pine Company, for which he was lumber inspector nine years, from 1888 until 1897.

Becoming an expert in his line of industry, Mr. Greely went to Mendocino county, where he first had charge of the shipping department of the Kasper Lumber Company, and later of that of the Empire Redwood Lumber Company, at Bowens Landing. November 13, 1902, Mr. Greely came to San Pedro on the ship Samoa, and has since been busily and profitably engaged as tallyman and inspector of lumber. He subsequently became identified with the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California, which is composed of twenty-three members, and on the resignation of its president, Mr. Coleman, in July, 1904, Mr. Greely was appointed his successor, and to this position he was elected in January, 1905.

Politically Mr. Greely is a stanch Republican. Fraternally he is a member of Alder Glenn Parlor, No. 200, N. S. G. W. of Fort Bragg; a member and past chancellor of Newcastle Lodge, K. P. a member and past sachem of Newcastle Tribe, I. O. R. M., and is also identified with San Pedro Lodge No. 332 F. & A. M.

ROYAL MILTON ARMSTRONG. One of the most popular men in San Bernardino county is Royal M. Armstrong, deputy county clerk, who has been filling that position since 1902. He was born December 7, 1877, at Topeka, Kans., the son of James and Mary Frances (Ragland) Armstrong. His father was a native of Napierville, Canada, and when a young man learned the blacksmith's trade, which he followed after his removal from his native country to Topeka, where his death occurred. His wife survives him and now lives at Ocean Park, Cal. Until he had attained the age of fifteen years Mr. Armstrong attended the public schools of Topeka, and as it then became necessary for him to assume the responsibility of his own support, he secured a position with the Santa Fe Railroad Company, working in different positions and at various points in the state for several years.

In 1899 he was transferred by the company to San Bernardino, Cal., where he filled a position in the mechanical and transportation department until December, 1902, when he severed his connection with the Santa Fe to accept the appointment of deputy county clerk at the hands of Louis A. Pfeiffer, the county clerk. He is an earnest advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, takes a prominent part in all matters of a political nature and is active in the Republican councils of the county and state.

Mr. Armstrong's marriage to Miss Nellie V. Shipp, a daughter of Joseph Shipp, of Ottawa, Kans., took place in December, 1898, and they with their two sons, Harry Maxwell and Jack Milton, reside in their beautiful residence at No. 698 Sixth street, San Bernardino. Fraternally, Mr. Armstrong affiliates with a number of orders, holding membership in the Ancient Order of United Workmen, Modern Woodmen of America; San Bernardino Lodge No. 348, F. and A. M., and is very prominent in the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, serving at the present time as secretary of that organization. He is a man of genial disposition and liberal views and has a host of friends who hold him in the highest esteem.

JOHN ALLISON PRIVETT. An industrious, energetic young man, possessing excellent ability and good judgment, John Allison Privett is identified with the leading interests of San Pedro as agent for the Lumber Surveyors' Association. Being an earnest worker, upright and of good principles, he is almost sure to make for himself an enviable reputation before many more years have passed over his head, both in the business and social affairs of his adopted city. A native of Arkansas, he was born April 4, 1880, in Fayetteville, the city in which his father, the late James H. Privett, first saw the light of this world. His grandfather, Willis Privett, was born in Nashville, Tenn., but when a young man settled as a farmer in Arkansas.

Born and reared in Arkansas, James H. Privett followed the independent occupation to which he was reared, becoming a prosperous farmer. He was a strong anti-slavery man, and during the Civil war fought under the stars and stripes, serving in the Union army. He married Sarah A. Peerson, who was born in Arkansas, the daughter of Jones Peerson, a farmer, and she is still living. Of their union thirteen children were born, eleven of whom survive, John Allison, the subject of this sketch, being the ninth child in order of birth.

Brought up on a farm, and educated in the public schools, John Allison Privett remained at home until nearly seventeen years old. Beginning the struggle of life then for himself, in March, 1897, he went to Cripple Creek, Colo., where he remained several months. Not satisfied with the outlook in that region, he came to California, arriving in Los Angeles on November 7, 1897. The following January he came to San Pedro, and for two years and a half was in the employ of the San Pedro Lumber Company. Later becoming associated with the E. K. Wood Lumber Company, he worked for them for seven months, and then for about nine months had charge of the company's yards at Los Angeles. Returning then to San Pedro, he was tallyman for the same firm until December 10, 1903, when he resigned the position. Entering then the employ of the Lumber Surveyors' Association, he has since been the business agent of this organization, and has served with great credit to himself and to the acceptation of all concerned.

January 25, 1905, in Montecito, Santa Barbara county, Cal., Mr. Privett married Ellis Shook, who was born in Springfield, Mo., a daughter of Rev. Philip T. Shook, a well-known Methodist minister, and a granddaughter of Rev. Rufus Shook, who went to Missouri as a pioneer minister of the Methodist denomination, and there spent the remainder of his life engaged in ministerial labors. Rev. Philip T. Shook married Lizzie Baker, who was born in Missouri, where her father, Rev. R. M. Baker, located as a pioneer minister of the Methodist Church. She survived her husband, and now resides in Houston, Tex. Mrs. Privett is the youngest of a family of five children, four of whom are living, and she has one daughter, Kathryn Lenora. Fraternally Mr. Privett belongs to the Order of Eagles.

WILLIAM J. ULRICK. A well known, enterprising agriculturist of San Diego county, William J. Ulrick is successfully engaged as a general farmer on a part of the old El Cajon ranch, which originally consisted of forty-three thousand acres of land situated in the El Cajon valley. On Mr. Ulrick's estate, which is known as Canado de Loscochis, stands the original dwelling house, which was built more than a hundred years ago, and is now one of the ancient landmarks of this vicinity. It is built of adobe, contains five rooms, and in the time of its Spanish occupants was the scene of many revels and festivities. This house Mr. Ulrick will rebuild, and preserve as far as possible the style in which it was first built. A son of John Ulrick, he was born in Clark county, Ohio, where he spent his earlier life.

A native of Pennsylvania, John Ulrick settled in Ohio when young, and having learned the trade of a machinist followed it during his active years, being also engaged in improving and managing a farm. He lived to a good old age, passing away in his Ohio home, in 1899. His wife, Catherine Ulrick, survived him, dying in 1903, at the age of eighty-five years, being then one year older than her husband was when he died. One of their sons, John Ulrick, Jr., enlisted in an Ohio regiment during the Civil war, and gave to his country valiant service, taking part in many of the noted engagements of that conflict.

Educated in the public schools of Ohio, William J. Ulrick began life for himself as a farmer, and for many years carried on a good business as a stock buyer and dealer, shipping cattle to various markets. Coming to San Diego county in 1890, he lived for four years in San Diego, and then located near Lakeside, purchasing that part of the El Cajon rancho on which he now resides. On his ninety acres of land he raises grain and alfalfa, besides which he has considerable fruit growing on his ranch, his orchard being quite large and valuable. Mr. Ulrick has made many excellent improvements since taking possession of his property, his fine residence, with its environments, being very attractive, while the buildings are substantial. His land is rich and fertile, and is well supplied with running water, so that he has no need of artificial irrigation.

JEREMIAH LEWIS HATTERY. The Hattery family dates its ancestral history in this country from the early colonial settlement of Virginia, and is of English extraction. Ephraim Hattery, the grandfather of Jeremiah Lewis, was born in Virginia, and it was his father who was the early colonist. On September 11, 1845, occurred the birth of Jeremiah Lewis Hattery, he being a native of the section near Massillon, Stark county, Ohio, where his parents, John and Mary (Baumgarden) Hatterv, were then residing. The father, who was born in Tuscarawas county, Ohio, was a carpenter, builder and millwright, and after his removal to Stark county he made a specialty of contracting, erecting many residences, stores and public buildings. The large flour mills in Orrville, Wayne county, Ohio, stand as an excellent example of his ability as a millwright.

The boyhood days of J. L. Hattery were spent in Wayne county, Ohio, where he attended the district schools and when it became time for him to learn a trade he chose his father's calling, becoming a carpenter and machinist, in Canton, Ohio. In the spring of 1864, although less than twenty years of age, he demonstrated his patriotism by enlisting in Company E, One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Col. William Haines, and served his country faithfully in the Army of the Potomac under General Grant until the expiration of his term of enlistment, when he was honorably discharged. Returning to Stark county, Ohio, he entered the employ of C. Altman & Co., manufacturers of agricultural implements, working as a machinist in their factory in Canton for five years.

It was in 1887 that Mr. Hattery came to San Bernardino, Cal., and engaged in carpentering and building, meeting with flattering success in this work until discontinuing it in 1894. In that year he located on his ranch of forty acres in East Highlands, which is improved with good buildings and ten acres of orange trees in full bearing, the balance of the ranch being devoted to hay and grain crops. In his horticultural methods he is decidedly progressive and his manner of fertilizing the soil gives the trees a wonderful growth and insures large crops of fruit. His fruit is of the finest quality and commands the highest prices in eastern markets.

In 1866 Mr. Hattery was united in marriage with Miss Mary E. Barnhardt, a native of Ohio, who engaged in school teaching before her marriage. She is a woman of superior intelligence and social qualities and is much interested in the work of the Veteran Association, having at one time been president of the ladies' auxiliary of that body. Mr. and Mrs. Hattery are the parents of five children: Lewis O., living on his father's ranch; Henrietta, now a widow; Lillian M., deceased; Bessie E., principal of one of the San Bernardino schools, and living at home; and Rollin E., an apiarist of East Highlands. Mr. Hattery is a member of Valley Lodge No. 27, K. of P., and W. R. Cornman Post No. 57, G. A. R. of which he is past commander; and is also connected with the Southern California Veteran organization of the Grand Army of the Republic. He is a man well informed on all matters of general interest, is a public-spirited citizen active in all upbuilding enterprises, and is held in the highest esteem by his hosts of friends.

JOSEPH BENTON TYLER. The year 1859 is a memorable one to Mr. Tyler, for it was then, when a young man of twenty-two, that he left the parental home in the east and sailed by way of Cape Horn with California as his objective point. The years which have intervened have found him engaged in various lines of endeavor, first as a miner, later employed in a sawmill, and finally as the owner of one of the finest orange orchards in San Bernardino county.

Joseph B. Tyler is a native of the Empire state, born in Suffolk county, September 14, 1837, into the home of John S. and Eliza (Hudson) Tyler. His boyhood and youth were spent in New York, where he was also educated, and during young manhood he engaged in business with his elder brother, Charles H., the two carrying on a successful wholesale wooden and willow ware business on Maiden Lane, New York City. Subsequently he learned the trade of ship carpenter, but instead of putting it to practice he came to California with his father, landing at San Francisco July 2, 1859, after a perilous voyage around the Horn of one hundred and eighty-eight days. July 3 he set out for Sacramento, where he celebrated his first Fourth in the west. There he met his brother, Charles H., who had come to the state in 1854, and for some time had been engaged in mining near Dutch Flats, whither they at once proceeded. For about twelve years Joseph B. Tyler carried on placer mining there with a fair degree of success, in the meantime also erecting a quartz mill for a neighboring miner. Giving up mining altogether in 1871 he came to San Bernardino county and bought a sawmill in Grass valley, which he ran in connection with a lumber yard for twenty years, the latter being located in San Bernardino. The mill was sold to the Arrowhead Company in 1891, the latter intending to use it for water and power purposes.

Since the year 1875 Mr. Tyler has made his home on his present property in San Bernardino, purchasing at that time four acres, for which he paid $300 per acre. He has since sold one acre, but the three remaining leave ample space to properly set off his fine residence and other buildings, all of which he erected himself, and, in fact, all of the improvements which embellish the property are the result of his own ideas. Besides the home place he has an orange orchard of ten acres at Highland.

At Gold Run, Placer county, Cal., Mr. Tyler was united in marriage with Louise A. Thorne, the ceremony being celebrated October 21, 1868. Mrs. Tyler is a native of Canada and the daughter of Edwin and Amelia (Richmond) Thorne. All of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Tyler lived to attain mature years, and all are still living with one exception. Lizzie Josephine is the wife of William T. Russell, the latter a grocer of San Bernardino; Lydia Evalyn, Mrs. Casper Rensch, lives on the corner of Ninth and C streets, San Bernardino; Charles Beach, the only son, resides in Highland; Bertha Amelia, who became the wife of Arthur B. Jones, passed away February 1, 1905, at the age of twenty-five years, leaving one daughter, Dorathalewe; the youngest child in the parental home is Carrie Louise, now the wife of John C. Hansen, the latter a tailor in this city. Since 1887 Mr. Tyler has been a member of the Odd Fellows, of which body he is an active and interested member, having passed all of the chairs, and at one time represented his lodge in the Grand Lodge at San Francisco. In retrospect Mr. Tyler can look back upon a life well spent and with no regrets over accumulating at the expense of his fellowman. With the wife of his youth he is spending his declining years in the old family home at the corner of Tenth and C streets, their second daughter, Mrs. Rensch, living in the immediate vicinity.

G. H. BUBLITZ. As indicated by the name, the Bublitz family is of Teutonic origin. The founder of the race in the United States was Charles Bublitz, who came from Germany to the new world at the age of sixteen years, settled in Wisconsin and became a farmer. Some years after his arrival in the United States he was united in marriage with Louisa Foltz, also of German lineage. Settling on a farm near Milwaukee, they engaged in agricultural pursuits and reared their children, of whom there were eight (six now living). The mother died in 1904, at the age of eighty years, and the father, who is now eighty-two years of age (1906), makes his home in the city of Milwaukee. Their son, G. H., was born near Milwaukee September 9, 1858, and received his education in grammar schools, the Milwaukee high school, and Concordia College at Fort Wayne, Ind., which latter institution he attended until the junior year.

After having graduated from the Spencerian Business College in Milwaukee, Mr. Bublitz went to St. Paul, Minn., where he was employed by Noyes Bros. & Cutler, wholesale druggists. Later he returned to Milwaukee, where he engaged as a bookkeeper with the wholesale drug firm of Dohmen & Schmidt. June 30, 1881, he married Miss Caroline Maurer, of Fort Wayne, Ind. Soon afterward he entered the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad under Sir Thomas G. Shaughnessy, now president of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. His special task was the organization of the store department of the entire system, in which department he had the aid of six clerks. Owing to the ill-health of Mrs. Bublitz he was compelled to resign his position and seek another climate. Removing to California in 1886, he entered the employ of J. F. Holbrook, of Los Angeles, with whom he remained as bookkeeper and for eighteen months as foreman of the Holbrook pipe shops. After three and one-half years with the same employer he became bookkeeper for the Fulton engine works, in Los Angeles, where he remained for six years, until the incorporation of the business, when his position was taken by a member of the new firm.

Next he was employed as traveling salesman in the interests of Schlitz beer for the firm of Adloff & Hauerwaas, bottlers.

In 1897 Mr. Bublitz was sent to take charge of Adloff & Hauerwaas' sub-agency, which he continued in the interests of others until 1901, and then purchased the business. In 1906 he erected a new plant, the building being of cement blocks or artificial stones, thoroughly equipped with the most modern machinery; also a refrigerator with a capacity of four cars, and an ice machine with a capacity of three tons. The structure stands on the corner of E and First streets, is 86x110 feet in dimensions, and was erected at a cost of $10,000, forming altogether one of the most modern plants of its kind in the west. Shipments are made to different points in San Bernardino and Riverside counties. In addition to maintaining a keen and intelligent supervision of every detail connected with the business, Mr. Bublitz is interested in the work of the San Bernardino Board of Trade and takes a warm interest in local Republican affairs. In religion he is of the Lutheran faith. Since coming to this city he has erected the residence which he now occupies at No. 670 D street, and in addition he has acquired other property interests in his home town.

LOUIS KAHN. As janitor of the San Bernardino county court house and as constable, Louis Kahn is a well known and highly respected citizen of the city of San Bernardino. He is a native son of California, having been born in Calaveras county, July 3, 1870, the son of Herman and Jennette (Weild) Kahn, both natives of Germany, the birth of the father occurring in Baden. He came to America in 1863 and two years later located in Calaveras county, Cal., finally, however, removing to San Francisco. For some time he was successfully engaged in business in that city, but finally retired from active life.

After completing his education with a course in high school, Louis Kahn secured employment in a wholesale dry goods and furnishing house and filled the position of traveling salesman for sixteen years. Upon resigning this position he went to Sacramento and engaged in an independent mercantile enterprise and when he sold his interests there came to Los Angeles and was employed as watchman on Terminal Island for the Salt Lake Railroad for some time. He relinquished this position to locate in San Bernardino, and this city has been his home ever since. He has filled his present office as constable and janitor of the court house since 1904 with entire satisfaction to all concerned. He possesses a courteous and cheery disposition that easily makes friends, and wins him the esteem of all with whom he comes in contact. Mr. Kahn has six brothers, one of whom is Hon. Julius Kahn, member of Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of this state. He is a member of Arrowhead Parlor, N. S. G. W., and in both social and business circles enjoys much popularity.

SILAS L. GOWELL. Although but a brief time has elapsed since Silas L. Gowell entered upon the work of contracting and building in San Bernardino he has ably demonstrated his ability in this line and has built up an extensive and lucrative business. He has been a resident of this section only since November, 1903, having sought a change of climate at that time in order to benefit his health. He is a native of Maine, his birth having occurred in Bowdoinham, Sagadahoc county, October 29, 1857, his paternal great-grandfather having emigrated from England in the colonial days of our country and established the family fortunes in the Pine Tree state. A son, Samuel, born there, became a farmer in young manhood and reared a family to useful pursuits, his son, Daniel, becoming in turn a carpenter and builder. The marriage of Daniel Gowell united him with Miss Martha Cooper, a native of Chelsea, and a daughter of George Cooper, and born of this union were three daughters and one son. Both Mr. Gowell and his wife passed away in Maine.

Silas L. Gowell was reared in his native town and educated in its public schools, after which, at the age of fourteen years, he began to learn the carpenter's trade under the instruction of his father. Until he was twenty years old he remained at home and then engaged in building for himself, being located one year in Bowdoinham and later in Richmond for a like period. The five years following were spent in Gardiner, Kennebec county, and in Orlando, Fla., three of the five winters being passed in the tropical climate of the "sunny south." About this time he located in Norfolk, Va., and engaged in the hotel business, and also for eighteen months was proprietor of the bottling works of that place. Later he became interested in the breeding of standard horses and was thus occupied for over three years, during which time he owned many valuable animals, among them Baron Wood, by Baron Posey, whose record was 2.16¼ at four years, and valued at $2,500. Disposing of this interest he engaged in a mercantile enterprise in Hampton, Va., but met with an entire loss by fire, after which, in Newport News, same state, he followed the livery business for six months. Entering the employ of the Huntington shipyard as ship-fitter, he remained in this connection for a time, when he returned to his old occupation of contracting and building, engaging as foreman for a contractor. Until November, 1903, he was variously located in Porto Rico; Pensacola, Fla.; Selma, Ala.; Newport News, Va.; and Lawton, Okla., engaged in the prosecution of his trade. Coming to Southern California at that time he located in San Bernardino and by the use of the waters of the Consoles Mineral Springs entirely recovered his health. In April, 1905, he again entered upon the work of contracting and building and in the twelve months following conducted business on a more extensive scale than any other contractor in the city. Besides contracting and building, he does brick and cement work, in all of his efforts bringing to bear an energy and ability which could not fail to insure his financial success.

The home of Mr. Gowell, located at No. 626 G street, San Bernardino, is presided over by his wife, with whom he was united in marriage in Maine. She was formerly Miss Flora A. Wyman, a native of Litchfield, that state. Born of this union is one son, Joseph, a resident of Los Angeles. Mrs. Gowell is a member of the Congregational Church, whose charities are liberally supported by Mr. Gowell. In his fraternal affiliations he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

WILLIAM W. WHITE. As far back as the record of the White family can be traced, its members have been associated with agricultural and horticultural affairs, and have been identified with the material development of the various localities of their residence. In this respect William W. White has proved himself an honored member of an old family. Possessing the tastes that led him into agricultural enterprises in early life, he further possessed the energy and intelligence calculated to bring him a gratifying degree of success. For years he gave his attention to the raising of stock and grain, but after his removal to California, he specialized in horticulture, and now ranks among the progressive fruit-raisers of San Bernardino, where he owns a tract of twenty acres, partly situated within the city limits. Since establishing his home on this place, in 1893, he has made many improvements and has greatly increased the value of the property. The commodious two-story frame residence has been improved, substantial outbuildings have been added as the need for them arose, and trees of fine varieties of fruit have been planted. The problem of irrigation has been solved satisfactorily by means of two flowing wells two hundred and fifty feet deep. The water from these is conveyed by pipes to a large concrete reservoir, where it is stored and turned on the land as needed, furnishing an abundance of water for the entire tract. While a part of the land is rented, the greater portion he superintends himself.

A native of Kentucky, Mr. White was born in Hart county in 1838, being a son of Harmon B. and Margaret (Wright) White. His father was a Virginian by birth and ancestry, but at an early age he migrated across the mountains into the forests of Kentucky, becoming an early settler of Hart county. As he was a planter, he operated his land with the aid of slaves. His wife was born in Green, Ky., of ancestry that early settled in Maryland. Both parents passed away in Missouri, where they were making their home. Among their six children there was a son, William W., who was sent to public schools and later studied in a private school, thus receiving what was for his day an excellent education. After starting out for himself he remained in Kentucky for some time, and among other things he made a specialty of raising mules, which he sold to the planters. Leaving his native state in 1870, he removed to Missouri and settled in the northern part of that state in what was known as the Platte purchase. Taking up a claim he engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and by degrees his farm of one hundred and sixty acres was transformed into one of the best-improved in a region boasting some of the finest farms in Missouri. The soil was rich and the district one of the finest for agricultural purposes to be found in all of that state. When the cares of the estate became too weighty for his advancing years and he sought an occupation less taxing upon his physical strength, he sold his farm in 1893, removed to Southern California, and purchased land in the south edge of San Bernardino, where since he has improved a valuable ranch. Neither in this city nor in his former home in Missouri was he actively identified with politics or solicitous of official honors, yet always he has kept posted concerning national issues and always has his ballot been cast in the interests of the Democratic party. He is a member of the Odd Fellows in Missouri.

ROBERT R. SIMPSON. For many years Robert R. Simpson has been identified with the business interests of San Bernardino county and has also engaged in prospecting and mining, meeting with very good success in all of his undertakings, and by his integrity of character and straightforward methods making friends of all with whom he comes in contact. His birth occurred in June, 1848, in Unionville, S. C., he being the son of William and Caroline (Crad-ock) Simpson. The father, who was of Scotch-Irish descent, and by occupation a farmer, removed with his family to Penetanguishene, Canada, the death of both parents occurring in the province of Ontario.

A member of a family of seven children, three of whom are now living, Robert R. Simpson received a preliminary education in the common schools of Ontario, then took a course in Lexington College, and after his graduation from that institution went to Ontario, and later to Montreal, where he engaged in the dry goods business. From there he removed to Chicago, Ill., and secured a clerkship with Marshall Field & Co. Coming to California about 1890 he spent some time in San Bernardino and several coast towns, clerked in Los Angeles and mined and prospected in the eastern part of San Bernardino county. Finally he settled in San Bernardino, where he successively clerked, engaged in the real estate business, mined and worked as salesman for the Southern California Music Company. In 1906 he was appointed superintendent of the city cemetery, which position he now fills. In San Bernardino he married Miss Della Carter, and they own a nice residence at No. 428 Church street. Mrs. Simpson's father, Barney Carter, was one of the earliest pioneers and most widely known men in this part of the state. He had engaged in mining in various sections and was considered one of the best posted men on that subject in the country. He discovered and developed several properties, among them being the Gold Mountain mine, and was largely instrumental in the building of the mountain roads for the county. His death occurred here in his sixty-eighth year, being survived by his wife, formerly Olive Nichols, who is now residing in San Bernardino. In national politics Mr. Simpson supports the Republican party. He is a man of strong and independent principles and takes an active interest in all matters of social and civic interest to the community in which he resides.

ALBERT GLATZ. Probably no man in San Bernardino is better known than Albert Glatz, the oldest fireman in the city and a man who has held one position almost continuously for seventeen years. He was born October 4, 1859, in Wheelersburg, Scioto county, Ohio, of German parentage. His grandfather, Cornelius, was born in Frankfort, Germany, and was a viticulturist on the Rhine. He served in the army under Napoleon and was with him on the famous march to Moscow and return. Theodore Glatz, the father of Albert, was also born in Frankfort, Germany, where he was engaged as a jeweler and watchmaker until 1848, when he emigrated to America, settled in Ohio, and secured his first employment under O. B. Gould at Franklin Furnace. He later removed to Wheelersburg and engaged in farming and stock raising until 1896, when his death occurred at the age of seventy years. He was a member of the Masonic order, in which he had attained the master's degree. His wife, Mary E. Huger, was also of German birth, and the daughter of Moses Huger, a farmer at Frankfort, Germany, which was his lifetime home. Mrs. Glatz lived to be seventy-two years of age, her death occurring in Portsmouth, Ohio, in 1898. Of her eight children six are still living, one son, E. B., being a sheet-metal worker at Seattle; another, Frank, a grocer at Portsmouth, Ohio, and Albert, who is the oldest living son, is located in San Bernardino.

Until he had reached his twenty-third year Mr. Glatz remained on the home farm, having attended the public schools during his boyhood and later assisted his father in the farming operations. In 1882 he went to Colorado and engaged in ranching, being employed by Major Downing. Later he accepted a position with John McKane, a brick manufacturer of Denver, and while there made the brick used in the construction of the exposition building. In January, 1884, he came to San Bernardino and worked successively for James H. Petitt in his Urbita nursery, and two years for Valentine & Frederick in the milling business, following which he was employed in the grocery store of Mr. Valentine for one year. He next helped in the erection of the new county hospital building, after which he was engaged as foreman of the farm for one year. He next joined a party of eight surveyors and assisted in the survey of the toll road from Redlands through to Little Bear valley. They started on July 18, and when the party returned on October 6 Mr. Glatz was the only member left of the original corps who had started, the other members having dropped out one by one. He continued in this work under W. C. Clark, who was foreman of the company, until 1888, when he decided to spend a year at his old home in Ohio.

Upon his return to San Bernardino in 1889 Mr. Glatz was, on May 1, appointed driver of the only fire engine then in the city, and has continued with the department ever since. He was on duty twenty-four hours a day the year around. When the reservoir was built he was appointed driver of hose cart No. 1, is still filling that position, and to him belongs the credit of having broken in all new horses taken into the service since that time. He is also secretary of the fire department, an office he has held fifteen years out of seventeen. No other man at present in the fire department has seen more than half the years of service that Mr. Glatz has.

Politically he is a strong believer in the principles advocated by the Democratic party, and fraternally he affiliates with San Bernardino Lodge No. 348, F. & A. M., and Token Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F. He is interested in horticultural pursuits, and among his property interests is a fine twenty-acre orange grove. In numerous ways Mr. Glatz has proven that he has the best interest of his city at heart and no citizen is held in greater respect and esteem than he.

DAVID C. STRONG, M. D. It is unusual that a professional man meets with so much success in so short a time as has attended the career of Dr. David C. Strong, who although young in years, is creditably filling the position of superintendent of the San Bernardino county hospital, and at the same time attends to a large private practice as physician and surgeon in the city of San Bernardino. Dr. Strong was born August 26, 1879, in Paxton, Ill., the son of Robert and Martha (Miller) Strong. His early years were passed on the farm of his father, who was a prosperous farmer and stock-raiser, and in the winter time attended the district school in his neighborhood, acquiring a good knowledge of the common branches, after which he attended Rice Collegiate Institute for four years. The first two years of his medical course were spent in Rush Medical College, Chicago, and the last two years at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in the same city.

Upon acquiring his medical degree Dr. Strong located at Wichita, Kans., and for eighteen months conducted a successful practice. He then came to California and built up a large and lucrative business at Redlands. In 1905 he received the appointment to his present office of superintendent of the county hospital at San Bernardino, in which institution the number of patients ranges from seventy-five to as high as one hundred and thirty-five on some occasions. Dr. Strong has identified himself with the various medical societies of the state, holding membership in the San Bernardino County Medical Society, the State Medical Society and the Southern California Medical Society. His marriage to Miss Mary Glenn of Chicago took place in 1901, and they have one son, Robert Glenn.

MAJOR ORIN PECK SLOAT. One of the most highly respected citizens of San Bernardino is Maj. Orin Peck Sloat, who for the past ten years or more has been division storekeeper for the Santa Fé Railroad Company, having charge of the Santa Fé and Los Angeles divisions. A native of New York, he was born in 1859, in Hobart, Delaware county, the son of William Henry and Permelia (Peck) Sloat, the father having late in life moved to San Bernardino, where he died in 1905. Until his sixteenth year Major Sloat attended the common schools of his native state, and for several succeeding years was employed on farms. In 1881 he came to Los Angeles, Cal., where he became an employe of the W. C. Furrey Hardware Company as clerk, remaining in that position five years. The following four years he spent in the employ of the C. W. Mettler Hardware Company in the same city, and subsequently he served as deputy county clerk under C. D. Hamilton for two years.

In 1895 Major Sloat became connected with the Santa Fé Railway Company, and was sent to San Bernardino to take charge of the stores here, a position which he has retained from that time until the present. He is a stanch believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party, and he has always taken an especial interest in military affairs. In July, 1889, he was elected a member of Company K, Seventh Regiment of California National Guard, of which company he was soon made captain, and was afterwards commissioned major, which office he still holds. At one time he served as secretary of the regiment for eight months. In 1898 he was appointed captain of a company of United States volunteers. Fraternally he is a member of San Bernardino Lodge No. 348, F. & A. M., and he is recognized in his city as a man who is always willing to lend his efforts toward the furtherance of any enterprise tending to build up the community in which he lives.

EARL L. AMES. A well-to-do mining man of San Bernardino and one who has made the whole of his $35,000 fortune within the past five years in this city is Earl L. Ames, whose life, with the exception of about two years, has been spent in San Bernardino county, where he was born February 9, 1857. The life of the Ames family is linked prominently with the pioneer history of that section of Southern California. The parents, Ellis and Olive J. (Gibbs) Ames, the former a native of Ohio, and the latter of Rutland, Vt., were married in Jackson county, Mo., where the elder Ames was engaged as a farmer for several years. He later removed to Salt Lake City and finally pushed on across the desert and mountains to California. The trip across the plains was a very long one and full of hardship, for at one time they ran out of water and were obliged to kill a heifer and drink the blood from it in order to keep from dying of thirst. They at last reached Bitter Springs, and there the teams gave out, necessitating a stop at that point. The family landed in San Bernardino in 1854. Mr. Ames soon established a grocery and dry-goods business, becoming the first merchant in San Bernardino, and continued in business here for several years. He at one time owned Slover mountain near Colton, which today produces fine marble and cement stone, and was also an early official in the county, held the office of district attorney and was the first public administrator for the county. Politically he affiliated with the Republican party. At the time of his death, at the age of seventy-four years, he was living retired from active business. His wife, who lived to the advanced age of eighty-five, was a member of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints. They were the parents of fifteen children, nine of whom are still living. C. E. Ames is a resident of Santa Ana; Edson, Ellis, Don A. and Carlos are living in San Bernardino; Mrs. Nettie Garner lives in Los Angeles; and Mrs. Sydney Mee has her home in San Bernardino.

After attending the common schools of San Bernardino county Earl L. Ames learned the trade of brick mason and followed it for three years in that city, after which he went to Arizona on a prospecting trip, crossing the Colorado river sixteen times on this occasion. Later he was engaged in running a fruit wagon into the mining camps of Arizona, where he sold apples at the high price of ten cents apiece. After two years at this employment he returned to San Bernardino and took up his old trade of stone mason, and prospected on the nearby mountains during his spare time, continuing this for about twenty years. In July, 1901, he discovered the Native Son mine, which he disposed of in 1905, and now owns other claims that he considers just as good as the Native Son. He also holds in his possession several mining claims on the west slope of Old Baldy mountain, at an elevation of about seven thousand feet, which hold an untold wealth of quartz, and is still conducting prospecting operations in the same locality. Some of his other claims in the desert district of the county also show good quartz. He has a number of valuable property interests in San Bernardino city, where he owns a house and lot on F street, and is a stockholder in the Home Gas company. He bought an eleven acre tract of land containing a good house and other improvements, located in the city limits, and recently sold three acres of the ground at a handsome profit. In 1901 Mr. Ames was a poor man and the fortune which he has accumulated in the intervening years has been made in mining and judicious investments, in real estate and other lines.

Mr. Ames' marriage united him with Miss Sadie, a daughter of J. M. Sanders, of Riverside, and they have become the parents of six children: Myrtle, Mabel, Lena, Robert E., Dale and Thelma. Politically Mr. Ames is an adherent of the Republican party. He is an expert workman at his trade, a good business man, possesses sound judgment and is held in the highest esteem by all who know him.

BENJAMIN F. McLEOD. The proprietor of the leading nursery establishment in San Bernardino is Benjamin F. McLeod, who started this business in 1904 and has in this short time built it up to its present large proportions, doing both a wholesale and retail business. Mr. McLeod was born of Scotch-American parentage in August, 1869, in Laingsburg, Shiawassee county, Mich., the son of Rev. James and Emeline (Whitmore) McLeod, the father being a native of Scotland and the mother of New York City. Rev. Mr. McLeod was educated for the ministry in his native country, graduating from the Glasgow University, in which he received special training in the study of modern and ancient classics. He was a man of strong personality, a ready and forceful speaker and became prominent in his profession in several different states of the Union. After a most successful career, in which he came in contact with a host of people who learned to love and respect him, he passed away in 1889. His wife is yet living and resides in Bakersfield, Cal.

Benjamin F. McLeod was reared in a refined and intellectual atmosphere and was surrounded by elevating home influences. His education was received in the public schools of Laingsburg and when his school days were over was variously employed in his native state until 1894, when he came to California and settled at Bakersfield, engaging in business there for many years. In 1903 he disposed of his interests there and removed to San Bernardino and established a nursery and florist's business, in which he is now engaged. He is located at No. 655-659 G street on a lot 150x300 feet, which contains his family residence as well as the greenhouses, and the well with a modern pumping plant, which forces the water into the large reservoir to be used for irrigating purposes. He carries a very select stock of the finest foreign and American flowers and plants, many of them being of his own propagation. He has a very large local trade and also ships to neighboring towns in the state, besides which he receives orders from other states, even as far away as Missouri. Mr. McLeod has given plants and entomology considerable scientific study and has discovered a valuable destroyer of the various enemies to flowers and plants.

The wife of Mr. McLeod was Miss Grace E., daughter of Timothy T. and Sarah E. (Stiles)

Cates, of Bangor, Me., and they are the parents of one child, Nellie F. Mr. McLeod is fraternally a member of San Bernardino Camp No. 79, W. O. W., of which he is now (1906) serving as council commander. He has a fine residence and takes a prominent part in the social, business and public life of his city, in which he is held in the highest esteem by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance.

HENRY F. GANSNER. The popular and successful well contractor of San Bernardino, Henry F. Gansner, was born in St. Louis, Mo., July 13, 1863, but his earliest recollections are of life in California. His father, Florian Gansner, was a native of Switzerland, and his mother, who was Christina Pohle, was born in Germany. Both parents came to America when quite young and settled in St. Louis, from which city in 1850 the father removed to California and settled in Plumas county, there engaging in gold mining. Later on he located on the east bank of Feather river and there continued operations for seven years. From there he returned to his old home in Missouri and engaged in building operations, he having learned the carpenter's trade when a young man. Life in the east never seems the same to one who has lived for a long period in California, and thus it was that the year 1865 found the Gansner family back in San Francisco. After a short time spent in that metropolis, they settled in Plumas county, where Mr. Gansner operated a sawmill for the manufacture of lumber, his mills being located near Quincy, which is now the county seat of Plumas county. In these mills he sawed principally white and sugar pine, and he remained in that vicinity until his retirement from business. He is now living there at the age of fourscore years.

The education of Henry F. Gansner was acquired through the medium of the common school in Quincy, and at Lauden's Business College in Oakland, where he took a commercial course. After his graduation he returned to Quincy for a short time and in 1887 came to San Bernardino, where for four years he was associated with William Manson in artesian well contracting. After the expiration of this period he formed a partnership with George Renwick and under the firm name of Renwick & Gansner continued in the well business for six years, when Mr. Gansner began independent operations. The latest and most improved machinery composes his equipment, including gas engines for power, and in the prosecution of his work he gives employment to a large force of men. His services are not confined to this part of the state only, but include contracts in Arizona and southern Nevada. The wells range in depth all the way from fifty to twelve hundred feet and are from six to ten, and some even twenty-four inches in diameter. One especially fine well, located two and one-half miles northwest of the city of San Bernardino, is fifteen inches in diameter, eleven hundred feet deep, self-flowing, and furnishes three hundred and twenty-four thousand gallons of water in twenty-four hours. The average depth of the wells at Phoenix is two hundred feet.

On December 6, 1892, Mr. Gansner was married to Miss Polly Ann Frink, a native of San Bernardino, and the daughter of Horace M. Frink, one of the earliest settlers in this county. The two children born of this union are Freda and William George. The home residence is a neat and substantial one, located at No. 596 D street, and Mr. Gansner also has an orange grove to which he gives considerable attention. He is a member of San Bernardino Lodge No. 348, F. & A. M.; of Token Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F.; and of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks No. 836. He is a man of progressive ideas and in keeping pace with the newest methods of the day has provided himself with a fine automobile, so that he may readily reach the different places where his men are at work.

PETER J. FILANC. Among the younger generation of ranchers in San Bernardino county who are making a name and place in the world Peter J. Filanc deserves special mention. His entire life has been spent on the homestead ranch which he now occupies, and which he has had entire charge of since the death of his father in 1896. Independent of any reflected honor from his worthy father he is respected and esteemed by all who are brought into business relations with him, for principles of a high order have dominated his life, the result being that he has established a reputation for square dealing which is as well known as his name. Besides having charge of the home ranch he is also interested in the buying and selling of real-estate in Los Angeles.

Of the three children born to Peter J. Filanc, Sr., and his wife, who before her marriage was Elizabeth Lughan, Peter J. Filanc was the youngest and was born on the old homestead in San Bernardino county January 5, 1866. His course in the common schools of that county was supplemented by a year's study in the University of Southern California at Los Angeles, still later taking up a business course in the Pacific Business College in San Francisco. The death of his father in 1896 made it necessary for him to return home and assume control of the homestead, his only brother having died also. The entire tract of two hundred and thirty acres is tillable land, devoted to raising hay and alfalfa, besides which cattle are raised extensively. The facilities for marketing his produce are especially favorable, as the ranch has a splendid location, lying close to Colton, and good roads add a further advantage.

In 1903 Mr. Filanc established a home of his own by his marriage with Miss Stella J. Hebbard, a native of Kansas City, Mo., and a daughter of W. C. Hebbard, the latter a well-known wholesale grocer in Colton. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Filanc is brightened by the presence of one son, to whom they have given the name of Pierre Hebbard. The family are communicants of the Catholic Church in San Bernardino. In his political affiliations Mr. Filanc is a Democrat, and the only fraternal order to which he belongs is the Independent Order of Foresters, his membership being in the lodge at Colton.

CHARLES E. HOLLAND. Santa Monica has in Charles E. Holland one of its successful real-estate operators, who since 1902 has engaged actively in the promotion of enterprises calculated to be of permanent benefit to the community and its citizens. Establishing his home in the city in July of the year above mentioned, he immediately became identified with others in important movements in the matter of real-estate development, receiving both substantial and sympathetic aid from moneyed institutions here and elsewhere, and putting on the market lots offered for $75 and $125 each, which afterward sold for $3,000—an advancement due to the upbuilding forwarded by the enterprising and progressive men of the section.

Mr. Holland did not come to California to make his first success in life, for he had been identified with business enterprises ever since 1887—two years before attaining his majority. He was born in Saginaw, Mich., May 28, 1868, the oldest in a family of four children (Charles E., Andrew J., Harry F. and Edward J.), who blessed the union of his parents, Albert Leslie and Mary A. (Merrill) Holland; they were natives respectively of Albion, N. Y., and Niagara county, N. Y., her father, Andrew Jackson Merrill, removing with his family to Tuscola county, Mich., where he and his wife are still living on property which they have occupied for forty years. Albert L. Holland followed his trade of carpenter and joiner in Saginaw for many years, and in 1894 located in Southern California, where in the city of Los Angeles he is now passing his declining years amid the prosperity which industry and good management have brought him.

In early life Charles E. Holland became dependent upon his own resources, developing the trait of self reliance so noticeable in the sons of the middle west, and on the Fourth of July, 1887, he landed in Leadville, Colo., with a small amount of capital, an unlimited supply of courage and energy, and the determination to succeed. Although it was the middle of summer the air was full of snow and the ground white, but the vigor of the atmosphere served to strengthen the young man's purpose. Because of his capital he was enabled to enter into partnership with an old mining engineer, R. W. Miller, with whom he began the development of the Forest Queen mine, which turned out to be such a profitable venture that before Mr. Holland attained his majority they were offered $60,000 for it. Mr. Holland made a thorough study of all branches of the mining business and rapidly rose to a position of note and prominence among the mining engineers of Colorado. He became associated with a few of the prominent mining men of the state, associations which proved profitable. Because of failing health, however, he was forced to withdraw entirely from his former employment, and accordingly in 1902 he came to California, in search of a more congenial climate. This he found in Santa Monica, where he has ever since resided. Among his most important enterprises have been his association with the building of the Club House and the Venice View, while later he was associated with T. W. Aisbitt, who supported the Equitable Trust & Improvement Co. as the first sole agent for the magnificent Venice property, and many of their ideas have been carried out by a later management of the enterprise. Property has risen steadily in value until to-day it is worth many times its original price, an increase due to the judicious investments and management of the men at the head of real-estate operations in this section of the coast. In November, 1905, Mr. Holland established an office at No. 304 Third street, in Santa Monica, where under satisfactory conditions capital may be secured by honest workingmen desirous of acquiring a home independent of debt and obligations.

In Colorado Mr. Holland was united in marriage with Miss Laura L. Knouse, a native of Holland, but educated in Ohio, where she grew to womanhood. They have a pleasant and comfortable home in Santa Monica, where Mrs. Holland is prominent in local society. Mr. Holland has taken time to identify himself with fraternal organizations, being a member of the Knights of Pythias and Fraternal Brotherhood, while politically he is a Republican. Success has accompanied the efforts of Mr. Holland, and deservedly, for he has combined irreproachable traits of manhood with unusual business ability, making every public effort for success consistent with his inherent ideas of right and equality. He is still a young man and gives promise of much future success.

SAMUEL C. SLANKER. Pomona is indeed fortunate in claiming the citizenship of Mr. Slanker, who since the spring of 1901 has filled most acceptably the position of superintendent of streets. During his incumbency thus far vast changes have taken place in the condition of the roads and drives, and as long as he is retained in the position his fellow-citizens may continue to look for innovations tending toward the beautifying and improving of the road service.

A native of Berks county, Pennsylvania, born January 4, 1853, Samuel C. Slanker is a son of Daniel Slanker, also a native of the same county and state. After his marriage and the birth of some of his children the father disposed of his farm in the east and settled down to agricultural pursuits in Edgar county, Illinois, near Paris. His service in the Civil war as a member of the Seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Company A, broke in upon the routine of his peaceful life, but when his term of service was over he returned once more to his former pursuits, at this time, however, taking up farming in Henry county, Missouri, where he had purchased a large farm. That was his home throughout his remaining years, and his death occurred there in 1882. His wife also passed away on the Missouri homestead. Prior to her marriage she was Lydia Lenhart, a native of Pennsylvania and the descendant of a long line of ancestors on both sides of the family who had flourished in that commonwealth. Of the twelve children born to these parents seven are living, and of these three sons are in California.

The boyhood years of Samuel C. Slanker were passed successively in Pennsylvania, Illinois and Missouri, following his parents in their migrations from the east to the middle west. When he became old enough he attended the public schools near his home and became fairly well educated, considering his advantages. As he was the oldest of a large family, his help on the home farm was greatly appreciated and he gave his services to his father until attaining his maturity. In company with one of his brothers, he started for California in 1875, and for a year he worked as a farm hand in Los Angeles county. The next year he secured a position with a freighting company in charge of R. N. Nadeau, in whose employ he remained for ten years, carrying supplies between Cerro Gordo, Inyo county, Cal., and Mojave, Ariz., the latter city being the headquarters of the company. Many and thrilling were his experiences with the Indians in that frontier country, and more than once he was reported dead. He met the enemy frequently in making the trip from Mojave to Tombstone, Ariz., and subsequently, at Lordsburg, they met in altercation, the Indians having stolen three of the mules belonging to the company and in his charge. Tiring of the hazardous life which he had followed for so many years, he came to Pomona and settled down to quiet pursuits. He first opened a livery stable at the corner of First and Main streets, and later removed to larger and more commodious quarters at the intersection of Second and Gordon streets, remaining in the latter location until May 1901, when he sold out his business to accept his present position of superintendent of streets of Pomona to which he had been appointed by the council, and every two years thereafter he has been reappointed his own successor. This fact in itself is sufficient evidence that his services are appreciated, and much praise is due him for what he has accomplished. To bring about these results he was instrumental in securing, through the trustees, the necessary outfit for grading, sprinkling and oiling the streets. The latter method of settling the dust in the roads is used almost entirely throughout the city.

Mr. Slanker has a pleasant and modern residence at the corner of Main and Tenth streets, embodying in its construction and architecture his own ideas as to beauty and utility. He and his wife, formerly Miss Sarah Kelty, have become the parents of six children, as follows: Bessie, Frank, Margaret, Catherine, Jenerose and Raymond. Mr. Slanker is well known in fraternal circles, belonging to Pomona Lodge No. 439, I. O. F., in which he has passed all the chairs, and also to the Fraternal Brotherhood, in which at one time he served as president of his lodge.

EMILE VACHE. The success achieved by Emile Vaché, one of the old and honored residents of Redlands, has been entirely the result of his own efforts, for with nothing but ability and industry to presage a success he started out in the world for himself in young manhood, round by round worked his way up the ladder, and to-day holds without question a high place among the business men of this city. He was born in France, in the department Chavente Infereuire, February 24, 1834, a son of Jean Vaché, a manufacturer of cognac and cream of tartar, until his death, which occurred in that location. His mother was in maidenhood Jeannette Mafieta, France being also her lifelong home. They were the parents of six children, of whom three are now surviving.

The eldest in the family of his parents, Emile Vaché was reared in the paternal home and after leaving the common schools was instructed in his father's business. He had not much more than attained his majority when he decided to try his fortunes in the western world where relatives of the family had already located, and accordingly in August, 1855, he took passage on a sailing vessel, the Washington, bound for San Francisco via Cape Horn. In January of the following year they anchored in the harbor of the Golden Gate, and Mr. Vaché at once went to Monterey, where an uncle was located and engaged in a mercantile enterprise, and there he found employment in his store as a clerk for the ensuing year. He then returned to San Francisco and thence journeyed to the mines in Siskiyou county, and because of illness a year later returned to Monterey county. With $10 in his pocket he came to Los Angeles in 1859 and for a year worked at his trade, in 1860 establishing a business for himself on Alameda street as a manufacturer of cream of tartar and in the conduct of a distillery. Later he purchased a place on Alameda street and there built up a distillery, winery and warehouse. In 1879 he came to San Bernardino county and leased the vineyard owned by Dr. Barton and there conducted a winery for the period of six years. In the meantime he purchased his present ranch, consisting of one hundred and fifty acres in the San Timoteo cañon, adjoining Redlands, then wild land with cacti growing over it, and no promise of its present luxuriant cultivation. Water for irrigation is secured from the Bear Valley Company, he having a reservior on the hill, with a capacity of seven hundred thousand gallons and a pressure of one hundred and sixty-two feet to his place, and he is also connected with the San Timoteo Cañon Water Company. He has developed a beautiful ranch, setting out thirty-five acres in grapes, ten acres in oranges, and otherwise improving the property, and has built a winery with a capacity of two hundred thousand gallons, and is engaged in the manufacture of brandy and sweet wines. In 1902 he incorporated the E. Vaché Company, which own the Brookside Winery only, the ranch of that name being an individual interest. In 1891 he was instrumental in the building of the Brookside Wholesale Liquor House in San Bernardino, but later disposed of his interest to his partners, Ingersol & Esler.

In San Francisco Mr. Vaché was united in marriage with Miss Corinne Lukon, a native of Montreal, Canada, and their home is now on the beautiful ranch in Southern California. Mr. Vaché is a member of the French Benevolent Association of Los Angeles. He is independent in politics, reserving the right to cast his ballot for the man he considers best qualified for the discharge of official duties.

ROBERT LINDSAY TRITTON. As a successful veterinarian Robert Lindsay Tritton has firmly established himself in his line of work and in the friendship and esteem of the people in Redlands although but a brief time has elapsed since his residence here. He is a native of England, his birth having occurred in Oxford Seven Oaks, in Kent, December 9, 1850; his father, Robert Tritton, was also born in England, a son of Robert , a banker of London. He graduated from Oxford in young manhood and became a clergyman in the Episcopal Church and was so occupied until his death. He married Charlotte Lindsay, a native of Surrey, England, and a daughter of Sir Alexander Lindsay, a member of Parliament. Mr. and Mrs. Tritton became the parents of three daughters and two sons, of whom one daughter is deceased, the other son, Arthur, being a banker in London at the present writing.

Robert Lindsay Tritton was the eldest in the family of his parents and was reared in his native place. He received his education at Harrow School and King's College, London, from which institution he was graduated in 1871. In 1873 he came to America and purchasing a farm in Virginia engaged in the raising of tobacco and stock, making a specialty of thoroughbred saddle horses. Through this connection he became interested in veterinary surgery and accordingly entered the New York College and graduated therefrom in March, 1891, with the degree of V. S. He still owned his farm in Virginia but disposed of it at this time, and locating in Richmond, Va., began the practice of his profession. He remained in that city for about ten years, when he removed to Boonton, Morris county, N. J., and there engaged in the practice of his profession. He was attacked by rheumatism, however, and in search of a milder climate came to California in the following year, spending the first three months in Los Angeles, when he came to Redlands and has since made this city his home. He established a practice here in his profession and later founded a veterinary hospital, the only one in the county, located at the corner of Fourth and Central streets, where he is now conducting an extensive business. He is active in the Southern California Veterinary Medical Association, of which he is a valued member.

In Virginia Dr. Tritton was united in marriage with Miss Lillian Ogden, a native of that state, and a woman of rare culture and refinement and an addition to the society of Redlands. Dr. Tritton is identified fraternally with the Masonic organization, having been made a member in Amelia Lodge in Virginia; he is also associated with the Eagles of Redlands. He is a member of the Episcopal Church in religion, and politically adheres to the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party. He is a member of the Board of Trade of Redlands and active in his efforts to further all movements tending toward the advancement of the general welfare of the community.

GEORGE CLINTON THAXTER. The upbuilding interests of Redlands have in Mr. Thaxter one of its most important factors, the greater part of his time and attention being given to the advancement of the city through his connection with the Board of Trade as its secretary. He is the representative of an old New England family of English and Irish descent, his birth having occurred in Bangor, Me., October 14, 1842; his father, Joshua, was born in Limington, Me., and in manhood became a marble manufacturer in Bangor, where his death eventually occurred. His mother was before marriage Joanna Hayes, a native of Maine, and daughter of Captain Hayes, who participated in the Aroostook war in that state; she is now surviving and makes her home in Redlands at the advanced age of eighty-five years. They were the parents of four children, of whom two attained maturity.

George Clinton Thaxter, the only son of his parents now surviving, was reared in Bangor and educated in its public and high schools, at the age of fourteen years beginning to work in his father's marble yard. In June, 1858, he entered a drug store to take up the work of a pharmacist, remaining so occupied until August, 1862. Resigning from this position he enlisted in Company E, Eleventh Regiment Maine Infantry, and was made the company's hospital steward on arriving at the front and joining the Army of the Potomac. They participated in the second battle of Bull Run and the Peninsula campaign, where they met with such awful disaster that no regiment was left of the name. Later Mr. Thaxter was stationed at Yorktown, Va., where the regiment was recruited. It was there that his health broke down and because of physical disability he was honorably discharged in November, 1862. Upon returning to Newport, Me., he engaged in the drug business for himself, and succeeded in building up a large custom, to which he catered until February, 1868. In the last named year he disposed of his business interests and removed to Iowa, locating in Moingona and engaging in a similar occupation. When the Transcontinental railroad was completed in June, 1869, he removed to Carson City, Nev., and engaged as a lumber manufacturer with a brother-in-law, the firm being known as the Glenbrook Mill & Lumber Company. They built a steam sawmill on the shore of Lake Tahoe, with a large capacity, having made a run of 150,776 feet of lumber in a day of eleven and a half hours. Their finished product was sent to Virginia City, at first by means of teams and later by flume and rail. Their enterprise was destroyed by fire in 1878, when Mr. Thaxter returned to Carson City and established a drug business, continuing in that location until the spring of 1893, when he came to California and in Palo Alto engaged in a mercantile enterprise. Disposing of these interests in June, 1896, he came to Southern California and in Redlands purchased the drug store owned by Dr. D. W. Stewart on Orange street, and conducted the same for two years, when because of impaired health he sold out and has not since engaged in active business. In 1901, on the 7th of January, the organization of the Redlands Board of Trade was perfected, in which enterprise Mr. Thaxter was one of the most prominent citizens, and of which he became secretary, being re-elected each year to the present time. He has had entire charge of the work and has arranged a most excellent and complete display, having made up and sent a magnificent exhibit to the expositions at Buffalo, St. Louis and Portland. To no one is more credit due than to Mr. Thaxter for the successful upbuilding and development of this organization.

In Newport, Me., Mr. Thaxter was united in marriage with Miss Mabelle Davis, a native of Dexter, Me., and born of this union are the following children: Homer D., an electrical engineer who is superintendent of the Edison electric power house at the corner of Fourth and Los Angeles streets; Harry C., a graduate of Stanford University and an electrical engineer now located in San Francisco; Berta, wife of Paul T. Carroll, of Oakland; and Curtis H., in charge of the machinery in the establishment of J. R. Newberry, of Los Angeles. Mr. Thaxter was made a member of the Masonic organization in April, 1869, in Jordan Lodge No. 158, at Moingona, later became a member in Carson Lodge No. 1, F. & A. M., and now affiliates with Redlands Lodge No. 300. He was raised to the degree of Royal Arch in Carson, being a member of Lewis Chapter No. 1, R. A. M., and also belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Uniformed Rank of the K. of P. Politics have had more than the usual interest for Mr. Thaxter, as a Republican taking an active interest in the advancement of his party's interest. While a resident of Nevada he was appointed by President Harrison receiver for the United States Land Office, having previously served as an alternate delegate to the National Republican Convention in Chicago, in 1888, where Harrison was nominated for the presidency. He is likewise prominent in the Grand Army, having served as aide-de-camp on the staff of the national commander, General Palmer; he has been a member of Custer Post No. 5, G. A. R., of Carson, and is now a member of Bear Valley Post No. 162, of Redlands.

WILLIAM J. TENCH. Prominent among the old settlers of Mentone, San Bernardino county, is William J. Tench, who has been a resident of Southern California since 1888 and one of its practical upbuilders. He was born in Buffalo, N. Y., the eldest in a family of nine children, of whom six are now living. His father, William E. Tench, was born in Dinard, France, the grandfather, Capt. Humphrey John Tench, being an Englishman and an officer in the Fifty-seventh Regiment of the Horse Marines. In 1834 he located in Ontario and in Queenstown passed away in 1852. His wife was formerly Maria Caruthers, a daughter of Major Caruthers, of the Fifty-fifth Regiment of the Horse Marines. William E. Tench was reared in Canada and in manhood engaged as a conductor on the Great Western Railway between the suspension bridge and Detroit. He continued in the railway service for about twenty-five years, when he engaged in the real estate business in Niagara Falls, where he died in 1893. Fraternally he was a Mason and in religion belonged to the Episcopal Church. His wife was formerly Ellen Murray, who was born in Clifton, England, a daughter of John Murray, a general in the English army, until his retirement, when he came to Ontario, Canada. The maternal grandfather was a captain under Wolfe at Quebec and at one time was governor of Demerara.

William J. Tench was born December 16, 1858, and reared at Niagara Falls, where he received his education through the medium of the public schools. He first followed farming and then began railroading, in 1881 being employed in the construction of the Detroit, Mackinac & Marquette R. R.; later he worked on the Northern Pacific, and then returned to the first named company, and engaged as purchasing agent with headquarters at Marquette. He was next located in St. Joseph as general purchasing agent for the St. Joe & Grand Island Railway. Coming to California in 1888 he located in San Bernardino and acted as assistant purchasing agent for the Santa Fe for one year, and in the meantime bought a ranch of waste land and moving upon it began its improvement and cultivation. During the dry years he prospected for water, sinking a shaft one hundred and ninety feet deep, striking water at a depth of one hundred and sixty-three feet. He now has an abundant supply of water, it being within one hundred and thirty-nine feet of the surface. He has a twelve horsepower gasoline engine with an Osborn pump with a capacity of fourteen inches. This furnishes water for his ranch and also for the tanks of the railroad company, and for five years supplied Mentone with water for domestic purposes. He has eight acres in navel oranges and the balance of the land under cultivation to various products. He is also serving as agent for the Santa Fe Railroad at Mentone.

In Chippawa, Ontario, Mr. Tench was united in marriage with Miss Florence Ellen Allen, born in Pembrokeshire, Wales, and daughter of a Welsh squire who came to Niagara Falls in childhood, where she attained maturity. They are the parents of two sons and two daughters. Mr. Tench is identified fraternally with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Ontario, and belongs to Redlands Lodge No. 341, I. O. O. F. He is a member of the Episcopal Church of Redlands and in his political convictions votes the Republican ticket.

NEWTON WELLS BEST. The success achieved by Newton Wells Best has been the result entirely of his own efforts, for he brought nothing to bear in his work but energy and ability, and a determination to win for himself a position of financial independence as well as prominence in the citizenship of whatever section he made his home. That he has succeeded none can deny and he now owns valuable residence and business property in Redlands, in which city he makes his home and is rounding out a well spent and prosperous career. He was born in Cornwallis, Kings county, Nova Scotia, October 12, 1838, the second in a family of six children, of whom all attained maturity and three are now living. His father, Elisha Best, was born in Horton, Kings county; the paternal grandfather was a purser in the English army and came from the Isle of Wight during the Revolutionary war and after the close of that historic struggle located in Nova Scotia to spend the balance of his days in retirement. He died there as an advanced age. Elisha Best became a farmer in Nova Scotia, where he made his home until his death, which occurred at the age of seventy-two years. His wife, formerly Mercy Ann Bishop, was a native of that province and a daughter of Silas Bishop, of English descent, and who engaged as a farmer until his death at the advanced age of ninety-two years. The Bishop family came from the North of England originally and were United Empire Loyalists. Mrs. Best survived her husband and in her old age came to California and died in Santa Ana in September, 1905, at the age of ninety-five years.

Reared on the paternal farm and educated in the district schools, Newton Wells Best remained at home until attaining his majority, when he engaged in farming on his own resources. In 1868 he decided to come to California and accordingly took passage on a vessel bound for Panama, thence to San Francisco, where he arrived on the 19th of April. His first summer was spent at San Jose, after which he came to Southern California with the intention of establishing a home, and in San Benito county he entered one hundred and sixty acres of government land and improved and cultivated it until 1873, when he sold out and removed to Guadaloupe, Santa Barbara county, and purchased a farm. A year later he disposed of this purchase and bought a squatter's title to one hundred and sixty acres, proved upon it, and farmed for five years in that section. After disposing of this farm he located in the vicinity of Santa Ana, Orange county, here purchased a farm three miles from the town, and farmed this for a period of seven years. In the fall of 1883 he returned to Nova Scotia on a visit and on his return west brought his mother with him. In the fall of 1884 he traded his farm for a ranch near Beaumont, and there later purchased another farm, and continued to purchase adjoining land until he owned three hundred acres in one body and one hundred and sixty acres in the vicinity. He improved the property, set out orchards, etc., and engaged in grain and stock-raising. He continued there for fourteen years, and in 1898 rented the ranch to a son and located in Redlands, purchasing property at No. 217 East Citrus avenue, where he now makes his home. Later he purchased a half interest in the feed and fuel department of the Redlands Commercial Company on Orange street, and helped to improve and build up a large business. He took an active interest in the work and served as manager of that department of the enterprise. In 1901 he sold his interest, when he became identified with the real estate operations of the place, and then purchased a grocery store of the Dunn Brothers and conducted the same for one year, and then sold out to F. A. Morgan. He owns with his son an eight hundred acre ranch eight miles north of Beaumont, of which seventy acres are devoted to the raising of apples, and there is a small cherry orchard on the place; of this fruit acreage his son, W. H., owns one-half interest in forty acres. He is also interested in the dry goods business in Corona, the firm being Austin & Best, and likewise owns property in two residences in Newport Beach, besides a twelve-room flat building and the building known as the Armory block in Redlands.

Mr. Best has been twice married, his first wife being Emma Smith, a native of Nova Scotia, where she died. In the same place he married Miss Annie Holmes, a native of Hansport, Nova Scotia, and a daughter of Capt. Kendall Holmes, whose ancestry can be traced back to the Mayflower. Born of this union are the following children: William H., a farmer in Imperial valley; Frank S., a dairyman near Holtville; Fred N., in Newport Beach; Charles E., conducting a feed corrall in Redlands; Arthur L., died at the age of fourteen years; Maude, Mrs. Austin, whose husband is a merchant of Corona; Pearla M., Mrs. Hively, of Los Angeles; Lluella, wife of H. H. Moore, of Redlands; and Joseph, who died at the age of two and a half years. Mr. Best is a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and is a member of the priesthood. Politically he is a stanch advocate of Prohibition principles.

R. C. ANDREWS. The Bixby dairy ranch at Clearwater consists of eleven hundred acres, devoted to the raising of alfalfa, beets and corn, and the pasturage of hogs and cattle, and is under the personal supervision of R. C. Andrews as manager, assisted by a force of fifteen employes. A specialty is made of the dairy industry and for this purpose a herd of one hundred and fifty milch cows are kept, the revenue from the same forming the principal source of income from the estate. He also owns a ranch improved with substantial buildings and said to be one of the best farms in this section, this property being under the management of a brother.

The Andrews family is of eastern ancestry. W. H. and Martha (Curtis) Andrews, natives of Ohio, came to California via the ocean route as early as 1865 and settled in Northern California, where he followed the trade of machinist and also became interested in ranching. During the year 1884 he came to the southern part of the state, where he died in March of 1904. During all of his active life he was a firm believer in the principles for which the Republican party stands. Since his death his widow has continued at the old home, affectionately cared for by her children and esteemed by acquaintances. In religious belief she is a sincere member of the United Brethren denomination and in her life has exemplified the doctrines which she supports. Of her eight children all are living except one daughter and the entire seven are residents of California.

While the family were living at Sacramento, Cal., R. C. Andrews was born September 27, 1870, and as a boy he spent a number of years in Colusa county, but at the age of fourteen accompanied his father, W. H., to Southern California, where he has since made his home. About 1894 he first became connected with the Bixby lands, being then made an employe on a ranch where grain, hogs and cattle were raised. The property comprised eight thousand acres and about 1896 was sold to the sugar beet corporation. At the same time Mr. Andrews was transferred to the ranch of eleven hundred acres near Clearwater. A large portion of the land was covered with willows and it was an enormous undertaking to clear the ground and remove the timber, but, with a large corps of workmen, Mr. Andrews at once set about the task, and at this writing has eight hundred acres cleared and in fine condition for pasture or for cultivation. The successful prosecution of so large an undertaking proves the manager to possess exceptional business qualifications and untiring energy. The transformation of the tract into a profitable ranch may be attributed largely to his perseverance and judicious oversight.

The marriage of Mr. Andrews in 1895 united him with Miss Viola M. Aken, who was born in Ohio, the birthplace also of her father, John Aken. The family was large and now has numerous representatives along the Pacific coast. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews have four daughters, Elta, Dora, Josie and Nellie. The family attend the Presbyterian Church and Mrs. Andrews is a member of the same. In national politics Mr. Andrews has always been a stanch advocate of Republican principles, but in local matters he considers questions affecting the national prosperity are not vitally affected, hence he supports the candidates whom he considers best qualified to represent the people. Always interested in educational matters, he has proved helpful to the local work through a long service as school trustee. In fraternal relations he is connected with the Independent Order of Foresters.

RICHARD J. FARQUHAR. Located at the corner of Fifth avenue and F street, in Redlands is the home of Richard J. Farquhar, one of the enterprising and substantial horticulturists of this section of Southern California. He is a native of Ohio, his birth having occurred in Coshocton county June 12, 1865, next to the youngest in a family of three sons and two daughters born to his parents, William R. and Marion (Renfrew) Farquhar, whose personal history appears at length on another page of this volume. He received his education in the public schools of Ohio and after the close of his schooldays engaged in general farming in his native state. He came to California in 1891 and in Redlands began the improvement and cultivation of a ranch, with his brother engaging in horticultural pursuits. They first improved forty acres of raw land, setting out an orchard of oranges, and after four years thus occupied, Mr. Farquhar returned to Ohio, and there managed the home farm for his father. Three years later he disposed of the property in Ohio and in 1899 located permanently in Redlands, where he now owns twenty-six acres devoted to navel and valencia oranges, and has improved the place with a good residence, barns and necessary outbuildings. He is interested in the Crafton Orange Growers' Association, and the packing house at Mentone, of which he is acting as director and vice-president.

In Toledo, Ohio, Mr. Farquhar was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Glann, a native of Toledo county, Ohio, and born of this union are three children, namely: David Glann, Mildred Ethel and Eleanor Lewis. Fraternally Mr. Farquhar is a member of Redlands Lodge No. 341, I. O. O. F., and is also identified with the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of Redlands, and politically is a stanch advocate of Republican principles. He takes a keen interest in the progress and development of his adopted city and as a member of the Board of Trade is foremost in all measures looking toward the general welfare of the community.

WILBUR W. AYERS. The leading merchant of Highgrove, Wilbur W. Ayers belongs to the younger generation of business men, and being energetic and progressive in his methods is meeting with splendid success. His store carries a full stock of groceries, kitchen goods, hardware, ladies' and gents' furnishings, gloves, feed and grain, and in addition to the management of this business Mr. Ayers also fills the office of postmaster of Highgrove. Previous to assuming control of his present business he was a resident of Riverside, where he was engaged as manager of the Great American Tea Company for a period of five years. The birth of Mr. Ayers occurred September 25, 1874, in Linn county, Kan. His parents, William Henry and Minnie (Newell) Ayers, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of Iowa, are both now living at Highgrove, Cal. The father was engaged in farming and later in general merchandising in Kansas and sold out his business in Moran, Kan., in 1905, when he came to Highgrove. He served two years in Company M, Fifteenth Regiment of Kansas Volunteer Cavalry during the Civil war and has always taken a great interest in political matters, being a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. The family are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, one son being a minister of that denomination at the present time in Colorado Springs, Colo. There were five children in the family. The early studies of Wilbur W. Ayers were prosecuted in the public schools of Linn county, Kan., and his professional education received in the Normal School. He followed teaching for two years in Kansas, then went to Albany, Ore., where he secured employment in the woolen mill located at that point. From there he removed to San Francisco, where he was engaged with the Great American Tea Company, and after spending nine months at that point, he came to Riverside, in 1897. In 1899 he was united in marriage with Miss Stella Stephenson, of Riverside, Cal., who was born in Kansas, her father, Homer Stephenson, and mother now residing in Riverside. Mr. and Mrs. Ayers are the parents of three children, namely: Roland Warren, Arthur Merrill, and Wilbur Walter, Jr. Politically Mr. Ayers is a Republican and fraternally he affiliates with Camp No. 8713, Modern Woodmen of America, in Riverside, Cal. He is a supporter of all enterprises of a social or civic nature that tend to elevate and upbuild the community in which he lives and is held in the highest esteem by his fellow citizens.

SYDNEY Y. WYNNE, M. D., a prominent physician of Redlands, was born in Rockland county, N. Y.; his father, Henry Wynne, was a descendant of Welsh ancestry, born in Massachusetts, where also he was educated and became an attorney-at-law. He practiced in Boston before the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted for service and became major of a Massachusetts regiment. On his return to civic duties he was elected to the state legislature. He now resides in Malden, Mass., where he has served the city as mayor. His father was also a lawyer in Massachusetts and one of the prominent men in public affairs. Father and grandfather were the first to depart from the original manner of spelling the family name, the present generation returning to the quaint Welsh style. Dr. Wynne's mother was before marriage Madeline Yale, a native of Massachusetts, a writer of note and now a leader of Arts and Crafts, of Boston and Chicago, many of her articles appearing in The Outlook. Her father, Linus Yale, a descendant of a brother of Elihu Yale, the founder of the Yale University, was the inventor of the Yale lock. Dr. Wynne's brother, Philip, is now assistant professor of Physics in the University of Texas.

Sydney Y. Wynne was reared in Deerfield, Mass., receiving his preliminary education in the Deerfield Academy and at St. Mark's School, Southboro, and after graduation from this latter institution he entered Harvard and was graduated from the Medical Department in the class of 1894. He had served for three years in various hospitals in Boston, and after his graduation he began the practice of medicine and surgery in Redlands, where he has ever since resided. He is connected with the Redlands Hospital in addition to his large general practice, which has constantly increased, many of his patients being numbered among the winter visitors in this beautiful city of the south. He is identified with the American Medical, the State Medical and County Medical Societies, and takes a keep interest in advancement along the lines of his profession.

In Philadelphia Dr. Wynne was united in marriage with Miss Mary Burchard, a native of that city, and they are the parents of four children: Sydney, Madelene, Dudley and Philip. Dr. Wynne is a Republican politically; he occupies a high place among the citizens of Redlands, is a member of the Board of Trade, and is active in movements tending toward the development and upbuilding of the city.

EUGENE WILKERSON. Located near Colton in the center of one of the finest orange growing districts in Southern California is the ten-acre ranch of Eugene Wilkerson, who is one of the most successful men engaged in that industry. He does not confine himself to the raising of one variety of the fruit, but on his ranch will be found navels, valencias and sweets, each kind having its admirers. Mr. Wilkerson is a native of Scott county, Ia., his birth having occurred December 31, 1848, near Buffalo. His father, James, was born in Kentucky, and his mother, who was before her marriage Margaret Baker, was a native of Indiana, where her marriage occurred. The parents later removed to Iowa and when the son Eugene was six months old they settled in Illinois, where Mr. Wilkerson engaged in agricultural pursuits and where both remained until they died. Of their family of fourteen children Eugene Wilkerson is the only one living in California, two sons reside in Idaho, one in Missouri, and a daughter lives in Iowa.

The early days of Mr. Wilkerson were spent in Jo Daviess county, Ill., the same county in which General Grant spent his boyhood, and there he received his education in the public schools. For his higher education he was sent to the Wesleyan University at Bloomington, Ill., and studied law. After his admission to the bar in Iowa, where he went after the completion of his studies, he located in Missouri and began the practice of his profession continuing for two years. He then became clerk in the office of Secretary McGrath in Jefferson City, Mo., retaining that position for fourteen years. The following eight years he lived at Cheyenne, Wyo., where he went in 1894, being interested during that time in the raising of cattle and horses on a fine ranch of which he was part owner. His wife's brother, Hon. A. B. Conway, who lived in Cheyenne was chief justice of the state at the time of his death in 1907. In 1902 Mr. Wilkerson came to Colton and purchased the ranch property which he now owns, and a fine home on an acre tract in the city, and has since identified himself with the interests of this section. He has always been an active participant in political affairs and is a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He served as justice of the peace in Iowa and Wyoming and is at present a member of the board of trustees of the city of Colton. His marriage to Elizabeth Conway occurred in Iowa in 1874. She was born near Bloomington, Ill., in which state occurred the marriage of her parents, William and Emily D. Porter Conway, both of whom were natives of Kentucky. They became the parents of five children, one daughter living in Los Angeles at the present writing. Mr. and Mrs. Wilkerson have one son, Eugene B., who was born December 31, 1879, and graduated from Wyoming State University in 1901. He is now secretary of the Colton Fruit Exchange. Mr. Wilkerson is held in the highest esteem by all who know him, being universally recognized as a broad-minded and cultured gentleman, who has the best interests of his city at heart.

H. S. WALKER. It is quite safe to state that no one in Pomona is better informed in regard to the Cascade and Sierra regions than H. S. Walker, who prior to coming to California to make his home had been interested in that country both as freighter and miner. For the past fifteen years he has been a continuous resident of Pomona, and as a dealer in oils of all kinds he has built up a large business, besides which he handles real-estate to some extent.

Ten generations of the Walker family claim Liverpool, England, as their birthplace. There were nine children in the parental family, and of the number H. S. Walker was next to the oldest, his birth having occurred in Liverpool July 20, 1852. Inheriting from his father a fascination for nautical life, at the age of ten years he started out on his first sea voyage, shipping on the Garonne as cabin boy and going to ports in the Mediterranean sea. Subsequently he was made steward, and on the White Star line, Atlantic ocean steamers, he sailed between Liverpool and New York, making his first trip across the Atlantic in 1864. Upon landing in the latter metropolis four years later he determined to give up the sea and enter upon the life of a landsman, having also determined to begin his new career in the west. In order to reach that part of the country in which he wished to settle he left New York in 1868 on the Pacific mail boat Henry Chancey, as a messenger, and in due time was landed at Aspinwall. Crossing the isthmus, he embarked as messenger on the Montana, which finally dropped anchor in the port of San Francisco. Thereafter he was prevailed upon to make a number of voyages between San Francisco and Panama, but in 1869 he discontinued seafaring entirely. During that year he went to the mines of Virginia City, Nev., and still later was similarly interested at Pioche, Wallapai Mountain, Mineral Park, McCrackin and Tombstone, all in Arizona, and during the years there spent he also engaged in freighting. He was one of the earliest settlers in Tombstone, which has become known as one of the greatest mining centers of the country. The attractions of the mines were bringing thousands of newcomers into the country and he wisely foresaw the need of accommodations, especially in Charleston, where he erected a hotel, the first in the settlement, and later built the second hotel in Mule Mountain, now known as Bisbee, Ariz. During all of the time he was in Arizona he was interested more or less in mining, but probably the most valuable claim which he owned was in the Bonanza King mine, near Fenner, San Bernardino county, Cal.

Locating in Los Angeles in 1884, Mr. Walker had charge of the Gird butchering plant there for a time and was later transferred to Pomona. Since 1891, however, he has been interested in business on his own account, and as has been previously stated is dealing in oils of all kinds, making a specialty of mineral products. By his marriage with Jessie Hetherington Mr. Walker has one daughter, Jessie. Politically he is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Foresters and the Masons, having joined the latter order in his native city of Liverpool, England.

WILLIAM ELLIOTT. About a mile and a half southeast of El Monte may be seen one of the finest walnut groves of Southern California, the pride of its owner, William Elliott. When he purchased this property, consisting of seventy acres of wild, barren land, it gave little indication of its present beauty and productiveness. However, by a close application of the knowledge of California ranching which several previous years had given him, he has made his farm one of the finest in this section. He now owns two hundred and twenty-two acres all set to walnuts, which he has won foot by foot from the desolation that claimed it a score of years ago. Much credit is due him for the perseverance and energy with which he has accumulated his fortune, the development and beautifying of his place, and the high grade work for which his ranch is noted.

Mr. Elliott inherits his dominant characteristics from Scotch ancestry, his birth having occurred in Scotland, May 8, 1855, and in which country he spent the first sixteen years of his life. His father, Alexander Elliott, who was born in the North of Ireland, was foreman in a brick manufacturing plant in Paisley until his removal to America, where in Ontario he followed farming until his retirement from the active cares of life. He still makes his home in that place, hale and hearty at the age of eighty years. His wife, formerly Jane Thompson, a native of Scotland and a representative of the Thompson and Stirling clans, died in Ontario. The Elliotts had for their chief the Earl of Minto. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott were the parents of six children, four sons and two daughters, of whom William Elliott was next to the eldest. He was educated in the common schools of his native land, and after accompanying his parents to Ontario he engaged in farming with his father. He remained at home until April, 1883, in which year he decided to come to the Pacific coast and accordingly located in Westminster, British Columbia, where he remained until September of the same year. Coming to Southern California he spent one year in Los Angeles, and in 1884 came to the vicinity of El Monte, which was then an open plain with nothing to obstruct the view for many miles. He entered the employ of E. J. (Lucky) Baldwin and superintended his four ranches in El Monte and Puente, which were utilized in the raising of stock and grain. He continued in this employment for the period of nine years, when he resigned to look after the interests of his own property which he had purchased in 1887. He had in the mean time set it to walnuts, seventy acres in all, and to the cultivation of this place he gave his entire time and attention following his resignation from the superintendency of the Baldwin ranches. His trees thrived although every prediction had been made for his failure by those who had lived in the section for years and supposed the land he was attempting to cultivate was thoroughly untillable. In addition to this orchard which is one of the finest in Southern California he has one of seventy acres at Bassett, in walnuts, and eighty-two acres just across the San Gabriel river from his first ranch, also in walnuts, seventy acres in full bearing, making a total grove of two hundred and twenty-two acres, many of the trees measuring five feet and ten inches in circumference.

Mr. Elliott makes his home on the place at El Monte, where he has erected a comfortable residence, substantial barns and outbuildings, installed a pumping plant with a thirty-five horse power gasoline engine, and all other equipment for carrying on a modern ranch.

In Ontario Mr. Elliott was first married to Miss Margaret E. Mitchell, a native of that place, who died in California leaving two children, namely: William and Robert. After the death of his wife he married Miss Mary, a sister of his first wife, and they had one daughter, Elizabeth. Mrs. Elliott died in 1902. He was later united in marriage with Miss Carrie Thienes, who was born in Illinois, a daughter of William and Anna (Helfridge) Thienes. They were both natives of Westphalia, Germany, who emigrated to America and located in Evansville, Ind., thence removing to Mt. Vernon, Ill., in 1876, spending twenty years in that locality as farmers, when they came to California and now reside in the El Monte district. They had six children, of whom Mrs. Elliott is the fourth in order of birth. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott are the parents of two children, Royal Edward and Thompson Alexander. Mr. Elliott in conjunction with the late Mr. Maxson organized the Mt. View Walnut Growers' Association, and for several years served as its vice-president. He is still a member of the organization and active in its affairs. Fraternally he is associated with the Independent Order of Foresters and politically casts his ballot in the interests of the Republican party.

FREDERICK VELLON, of Los Angeles, was born in La Motte, Hautes-Alpes, France, July 24, 1848, and is the third youngest of a family of seven children born to Pierre and Josephine Astier, who were honorable and well-to-do farmers in the south of France.

Mr. Vellon's early life was passed on the farm in his native land and he received his education in the common schools. In 1869 he came to California via Panama, landing in San Francisco from the steamer Nebraska, spending the first year on the bay and in 1870 coming to Southern California, where he followed farm work until 1875, when he began the stock business and from that time until 1881 ranged his sheep in different parts of California as the seasons permitted. He then engaged in farming and horticulture in Los Angeles, purchasing twenty acres on West Pico between Albany and Valencia streets. This he farmed until 1885 when he sold all but 200x250 feet where he makes his home, the rest being laid out and sold out as the "City Center Tract." Since then he has been engaged in dealing in real estate, of which he is an extensive holder. In Los Angeles on May 15, 1879, Mr. Vellon was married to Mrs. Martha (Beckstead) Grant, a native of Illinois and a daughter of William and Mary (Winn) Beckstead. The father was born in Canada and the mother in Illinois and they were married in the latter state in 1849, when they removed to Council Bluffs, Iowa, and in 1852 crossed the plains to Salt Lake City, making the long journey overland with ox-teams. In 1861 he brought the family by teams to San Bernardino and was engaged in farming in what is now Riverside county, until he retired. He now resides in Colton at the advanced age of eighty years. The mother died several years ago in Riverside county. To Mr. and Mrs. Vellon have been born three sons, namely: Alfred, aged twenty-seven; Arthur, aged twenty-four, and Lafayette, aged twenty-one, all under the parental roof. After an absence of thirty-two years, Mr. Vellon in 1901 made a trip to France, accompanied by his wife and son Lafayette, visiting his childhood's haunts, relatives and friends for a period of six months and while there traveled on the continent and visited the Paris Exposition.

Mr. Vellon has been remarkably successful. He worked his own way beginning at the bottom without a dollar, having only his two hands, but nothing daunted, he went to work and step by step rose until in a few years he became a man of affluence. His ambition having been attained he now resides at his home, No. 1403 West Pico street, where he spends his time looking after his interests. He is well and favorably known and is ever ready to help and gives liberally of his means to the upbuilding of the city in which he resides and has so much faith.

JAMES E. WARD came to Redlands in 1887 and he has since made this city his home, giving to the horticultural development of this section of Southern California his best efforts and also assisting in the public welfare by officiating at the present writing as a member of the Board of City Trustees. He was born in Leslie, Ingham county, Mich., July 14, 1854, the youngest in a family of ten children, of whom three are now living. His father, Peter Ward, was born in Scranton, Pa., of German parentage; in young manhood he became an early settler of Michigan, where he engaged in farming until his death, which occurred in 1868. His wife, formerly Catherine Ash, was born in Bethlehem, Pa., of old Moravian ancestry, her death occurring in Michigan the year after her husband died. Two of their sons, C. E. and S. L., served in the First Michigan Light Artillery in the Civil war.

James E. Ward is the only one of the family in California. He was reared on the home farm in Michigan and educated in the district school in the vicinity of his home. Orphaned at the age of fifteen years he was thus thrown upon his own responsibilities, and from that time on received no assistance from anyone. He worked out on farms until he was seventeen years old, when he went into the lumber woods in the vicinity of Greenville. In 1875 he went to Texas and in Dewitt county engaged in the cattle and sheep buiness on what was known as the Weldon ranch, meeting with a success which justified his long continuance in the work. He was prominent in his business during the twelve years of his residence there, as a member of the Southwestern Texas Cattle Growers' Association advancing the interests of the business. Disposing of his interests in 1887 he came to California and locating at once in Redlands has ever since made this city his home. He followed the trade of carpenter and builder for four years, and in the meantime, in 1889, purchased his present property, consisting of thirty-one acres of land, which in 1890 he set in navel oranges. He has met with success in his efforts and has risen to a position of prominence among the orange growers of Southern California, now serving as president of the Orange Producers Association, which company has built a fine packing house on the Southern Pacific Railroad and carries on a large and constantly increasing business.

In Texas October 8, 1882, Mr. Ward was united in marriage with Miss Marietta Williams, a native of Delaware. Mr. Ward is identified fraternally with the Knights of Pythias; politically he casts his ballot for the interests of the Republican party. In 1902 he received the nomination on both the citizens and good government ticket and was elected without opposition to the office of city trustee for a four-year term, and was re-elected in 1906 on the citizens ticket. He is now serving as chairman of several important committees, among them the auditing, finance and park committees, and is also a member of the ordinance and judiciary. He is a member of the Board of Trade of Redlands and no citizen is more prompt to respond to the needs of the city in its efforts along the line of development and progress than Mr. Ward. He enjoys the esteem of a wide circle of friends, appreciated for the high qualities of character as displayed during his residence here.

CHARLES CLARK. One of the busiest and most thriving industries in Pomona is Clark's American bakery, which was established while the town was still in its infancy and which has grown and prospered in the same ratio as the town has grown in stability and importance.

A native of England, Charles Clark was born in Chelmsford, Essex county, February 6, 1848, and is a son of Benjamin and Emma (Auger) Clark. When he was a lad of only ten years he displayed a predilection for the trade which he has followed as his life work, and at the same time he began to master the tasks which fall to the apprentice of the baker's and confectioner's trade. Beginning the serious affairs of business at this early age would seem to preclude all possible chance of getting an education, but nevertheless he found opportunity for improving his mind and is today a well-informed, intelligent man whom it is a delight to meet. At the age of eighteen years he came to the United States and located at once in Chicago, Ill., where until the great fire of 1871 he followed his trade in the employ of others. After this disaster he started in business on his own account on Blue Island avenue, running a restaurant and bakery in that locality for the following five years. For the next ten years, from 1876 until 1886, he carried on a similar business in Des Moines, Iowa, disposing of his interests in the latter year to remove to the Pacific coast. Locating in Los Angeles, without loss of time he opened a restaurant and bakery in a central location and for three years carried on a very successful business. His identification with Pomona dates from the year 1889, at which time he started the nucleus of his present business at 264-266 West Second street, where for seventeen years he has furnished substantial refreshment and toothsome delicacies to the community. From a small, unpretentious beginning the business has grown to large proportions, until today the goods supplied by Clark's American bakery are as well known and highly appreciated in the surrounding towns as they are in Pomona. Two wagons are constantly employed in supplying the trade in Lordsburg, Ontario, Uplands, Claremont and Chino. At the time Mr. Clark came to Pomona in 1889 he purchased a ranch of five acres and set it out to oranges, but later he sold it in order to concentrate his efforts in the interests of his bakery.

In Beloit, Wis., Mr. Clark was married to Miss Alice P. Wells, a native of that state, and three children have been born to them: Arthur, in San Francisco; Frank, in Uplands; and Ralph, a resident of Pomona. The family are communicants of the Episcopal Church and politically Mr. Clark is a Republican. As one of the substantial business men of his home city he is a member of the Board of Trade of Pomona, in which body his opinion is highly regarded and carries considerable weight. His fraternal affiliations are numerous and include membership in the Fraternal Aid, Independent Order of Foresters, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and the Masons. He joined the latter order in Pomona, becoming a member of Pomona Lodge No. 246, F. & A. M.; is also a member of Pomona Chapter, R. A. M.; Southern California Commandery, K. T.; and to Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles.

LOUIS NAPOLEON DUNLAP. Inheriting the characteristics which have made of Louis N. Dunlap an upbuilder among the primitive conditions of Southern California in the early days of the state, this gentleman is now occupying an honorable place among the pioneers of Redlands, where he has been located since 1901. He is a native Californian, his birth having occurred in Visalia, March 4, 1858. His father, John Dunlap, was born in Illinois; he located in Missouri in young manhood and shortly afterward became a resident of Texas, where he was one of the famous rangers for the independence of that state, then a part of Mexican territory. He came to California by means of ox-teams in 1854, was one of the first settlers of El Monte, from which point he went on to Visalia, where for many years he engaged as a stockman. Locating in San Bernardino county in 1869 he purchased the Yucaipe ranch with William Standeford as partner, and this large ranch of thirty-eight hundred and forty acres they cultivated for several years. He engaged in the cattle business to a large extent, buying and selling horses, cattle and sheep. He was accidentally killed at the San Bernardino race track. Fraternally he was a prominent Mason and politically voted the Democrat ticket. His wife survived him, dying in Los Angeles in 1900. They were the parents of the following children: Calvin, of Bakersfield, Cal.; A. H., a walnut grower of Whittier, Cal.; F. P., a merchant of Rialto; Louis Napoleon, of this review; A. J., a farmer of Warm Creek; Mrs. Jennie Bowler, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Eagan, of Pasadena; Ida, of Los Angeles; and Mrs. Ella Collins, who died in Los Angeles.

Louis N. Dunlap was reared in Visalia to the age of fifteen years, when he was taken by his parents to San Bernardino county, his education being received in the district schools of the two localities, and an academy at Downey. From boyhood he was trained in the stock business and on the paternal ranch he engaged in that business for some years, renting the land in conjunction with his brothers, E. P. and A. J. After the death of their mother they incorporated the Yucaipe Land & Water Company, embracing the entire property, their sister Mrs. Eagan acting as president; Mrs. Bowler as vice-president; A. H., as secretary and general manager, the raising of stock and the conduct of a dairy occupying their attention. Alfalfa is also an extensive product. They are developing many large wells on the place, having it brought in pipes to the Chicago colony, Crafton and Redlands, for both domestic and irrigation purposes.

In 1901 Mr. Dunlap located in Redlands, his work on the ranch being the buying of the stock. Many years ago he became connected with the business interests of this city by the purchase of a livery business which he conducted until 1903 in addition to his other interests, disposing of the business in that year and leasing the stables. He has built business and residence property in this city and takes a keen interest in its development. Mr. Dunlap is a member of Redlands Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West; politically he is a stanch adherent of the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party.

JESUS LORETO CRUZ. Yet another of the old-time residents of the Golden State who have been spared to share in its latter-day prosperity is Jesus Loreto Cruz, who at the age of seventy-six years resides on his ranch at the head of Weid cañon, nestled at the foot of Cruz mountain, and not far from the beautiful city of Hollywood. He was born in Mexico September 8, 1830, a son of Santiago and Juana (Galindo) Cruz, both parents living to attain remarkable ages, the father dying in his ninety-seventh year, and the mother passing away in 1905 when one hundred and seven years old. They removed to the United States during the boyhood of their son, so that to all intents and purposes he is an American, and more particularly a Californian, for since settling here in 1849 he has known no other home. It was during this year that the father came to Los Angeles county to take charge of the Chino rancho as overseer, a position to which his son succeeded in later years. He held this position for eighteen months and then relinquished it, having in the meantime purchased a lot in Los Angeles. Still later he bought one hundred and sixty acres which is now the site of the depot in Los Angeles, the proceeds of the sale of this property being invested in eighteen acres between Grand and Figueroa street and between Pico and Twelfth streets, which he sold before it was subdivided. Mr. Cruz became deputy superintendent of city water works in Los Angeles under Mr. Morsilber for two years and then became superintendent and held it from 1865 until 1870, when he resigned of his own accord, having served with credit to himself and his employers.

In 1803 Mr. Cruz bought one hundred and sixty acres of land near Hollywood, half of which he gave to his sister, Mrs. C. Coronel. At her death this was divided between him and two nieces, and he now owns about one hundred and seven acres in all, about fifteen acres in vineyard and carrying most valuable water rights. All of the improvements on the property are the work of his hands, for he has planted all of the fruit trees which adorn the place and the residence and other buildings have been erected since the property came into his possession. During his early years he was married to Belle E. Warner, but their married life was destined to be brief, for she died when only twenty-eight years of age, leaving her husband and one daughter to mourn her loss. The daughter, Jennie Artemiso, grew to beautiful womanhood, but she too was taken from him by death in 1898, at the age of twenty-two years. At the time of her marriage Mrs. Cruz brought with her from her old home a servant who had been in the family for many years. Born in San Diego, she was of Indian birth, and when a very small child was given to Mr. Warner and was known as Fannie Warner. After the death of Mrs. Cruz she continued to fill the position of caretaker in the family and still has charge of the household affairs. With the exception of the two nieces previously mentioned Mr. Cruz has no living relatives, but both of these live within a short distance of his ranch. Alesa has three children and is the wife of Robert Woodward and they make their home in Los Angeles. The other niece, Mary, was first married to Julian Martinez, by whom she had two children; after his death she became the wife of George Hinsdell, and they reside at Redondo. Mr. Cruz is one of the oldest residents of the state, and as such is honored and respected by a large circle of friends and acquaintances, the associates of many years under conditions which were often trying in the extreme.

RENE BLONDEAU. For many years identified with the growth and upbuilding of Hollywood, Rene Blondeau was a man of much worth and integrity, who was much appreciated and beloved by his many friends for his many good qualities. He was born in Normandy, May 3, 1838, and was the son of Rene Blondeau, who, being an ardent Republican, was obliged to retire from Paris to Normandy when Napoleon III issued his decree in opposition to the party and there remained until his death.

Mr. Blondeau's great-grandmother was a daughter of the Marquis de Favrol, who with his family was assassinated during the Reign of Terror at the time of Louis XVI. The sixteen-year-old daughter was the only one who escaped and she was saved by their gardener, M. Mouton, who dressed her in one of his suits of clothes. She afterward married her rescuer and lived in Normandy. Mr. Blondeau being a grand-nephew of the Rev. Evremont de Favrol, was educated under his care at the Jesuit College. After completing his education he learned the perfumer and hairdresser trade in Paris. He traveled through Europe, Asia and North America. Returning to Paris, he engaged in business there until he came to New Orleans, La., in 1868, and established himself in business in that city, remaining there six years and becoming an American citizen. In 1874 he came to San Francisco, remaining two years in that city, when he went to South America, where he engaged in business and traveled through all Central and South America. Mr. and Mrs. Blondeau were very successful and in 1889 returned to California whereto they had always looked with fond eyes as a place where they could enjoy the fruits of their labors. They purchased seven acres in Hollywood on what is now Gower avenue and Sunset Boulevard, engaging in horticulture and farming. They also built the Cahuenga House, which was well patronized until they retired. Mr. Blondeau died at his home January 20, 1903. He had the confidence of the people in his vicinity and often his friends came to him to take care of their money, to which he always made an accurate accounting and never proved false to his trust. Mr. Blondeau was married in New Orleans May 1, 1870, to Mdll. Marie Lousteau, who came to New Orleans, La., from France in 1870. Since her husband died she continues to reside in Hollywood, looking after her interests, she still retaining her home here with its beautiful floral and vegetable gardens. Her only daughter, Louise E., was a graduate of the Hollywood high school, and is now attending Occidental College. Mrs. Blondeau is a member of the Ladies' French Charitable Association of Los Angeles and takes a great interest helping those who have been less fortunate than herself, and many are the little kindnesses that she is always rendering to others who little dream of the source of the charity. She is a woman of much business ability and has shown much sagacity in her business ventures.

WILLIAM JORRES. Through the long period of his identification with the development of California, extending back to the memorable days of the gold excitement and coming down to the era of twentieth century progress, Mr. Jorres has been an upbuilder and an honored citizen. Although now practically retired from business cares, he has not lost his interest in measures pertaining to the commercial development of the state, but keeps in touch with progressive movements and gives his support to worthy enterprises. Especially to those of the present generation, who are strangers to the early history of the state, it is interesting to hear him narrate stories connected with his early residence in San Francisco, which had attracted to it a turbulent and lawless population from all sections of the world, as well as thousands of honorable and law-abiding men solicitous to give to the new town a standing equal to the old-established towns of the east.

Of German birth and parentage, Mr. Jorres was born in Hanover, August 12, 1824, and at the age of seventeen years was apprenticed in Hamburg to the carpenter's trade, of which he acquired a thorough knowledge under a skilled master. In 1846 he went to South America and for six months followed his trade at Montevideo, Uruguay. While there the port was blockaded for several months by the combined French and English fleets. Leaving that city he went to Buenos Ayres, Argentine, and followed his trade until the fall of 1849, when he took passage on a ship bound via the Horn for San Francisco. The ship cast anchor May 4, 1850, and immediately he hastened to the Spanish Dry Diggings on the Middle Fork of the American river, from there going to Bear creek on a prospecting tour. After the second fire of 1851 he returned to San Francisco and readily secured employment as a carpenter at high wages. From taking jobs by the day he drifted into the taking of contracts, which work he continued with success until 1868. Meanwhile he superintended the erection of many large buildings. In 1852-53 he erected four brick houses on Washington street near Montgomery. In 1855 he put up a brick building on the southwest corner of California and Front streets, and among other buildings which he erected in an early day is the orthodox Jewish Synagogue on Mason street, between Post and Geary.

On coming to San Diego in 1868 Mr. Jorres bought property and the following year built a residence and established his family in this city. Immediately after locating here he formed a partnership with S. S. Culverwell and built a wharf at the foot of F street, which was the first wharf started in the town. However, it was not completed as soon as the Horton wharf, being twenty feet wider and therefore requiring more time to build. It was made wide enough for carriages to be driven out to meet passengers from the steamers who were landed at the wharf. The cost of the wharf was $28,700, and for the first year the owners operated it personally, but afterward leased it, and then Mr. Jorres turned his attention to contracting. In 1872 he bought his partner's interest in the wharf and engaged in ballasting vessels and in similar work. In 1890 he rebuilt the wharf, which is now one of the largest in this harbor. In 1873 he had the contract for the erection of the courthouse on D street, later erected the Commercial National Bank building on Fifth and G streets, also contracted for the Central market on Fifth between F and G streets, a structure 200x60 feet fitted up with stalls for a market. During 1877 he had the contract for building the First National Bank on Main street, Los Angeles, a task of great responsibility, as indeed were all of the contracts which he assumed.

From his new home in San Francisco in 1854 Mr. Jorres returned to Hanover to visit old friends, and there he married Miss Sophie Kliengibel. The wedding trip was a voyage across the Atlantic to Panama and up the Pacific to San Francisco, where they remained until 1869. At this writing they have their home on the corner of Union and B streets, San Diego, where in August, 1904, the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage was celebrated with the hearty congratulations of their large circle of friends, not only among the members of the Lutheran Church (to which they belong), but among people of all denominations and nationalities. Ever since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Jorres has voted the Democratic ticket, and his only son, Gustav W., is also a stanch believer in the principles of that party, his faithful services in its behalf winning for him the appointment as postmaster of San Diego for one term, and later he has filled the office of county assessor with credit to himself.

EDMUND L. BROWN. A man of strong and intelligent convictions, capable, energetic and progressive, Edmund L. Brown is a typical representative of the successful business men of San Fernando who, through their own strenuous efforts, have gained wealth and distinction. A son of Cyrus and Elizabeth E. (Barnes) Brown, he was born, May 29, 1867, in Whitefield, Marshall county, Ill.

Leaving Illinois, Cyrus Brown came with his family to California, locating at Downey, where he bought a fruit ranch, which he managed successfully until January, 1905. Disposing then of his estate, he purchased his present place of residence in Hollywood, intending to make it his permanent home. He is a man of great public spirit, and during the Civil war rendered faithful service to his country as a soldier in an Illinois regiment of volunteer infantry. He is a Republican in politics, and an active supporter of its principles.

Coming to Los Angeles in 1886, Edmund L. Brown completed his education at Woodbury's Business College, after which he was bookkeeper for Porter Bros. & Co. for a while; in 1887 he established himself in the mercantile business. He returned to Illinois in September of that year and was married there in October, coming back and locating at Downey on a ranch, but removing to San Fernando in December, 1888, there becoming junior member of the firm of Smith & Brown in August of 1889. Locating on the east side of the railroad this firm built up a good trade in hardware and groceries, of which they kept a good supply. Selling his interest to his partner in the fall of 1890, Mr. Brown was employed as a clerk in the general store of W. H. Obear until the following April, when for the sum of $3,500 he purchased the entire stock of Mr. Obear, and conducted the business alone for over a year, and later, forming a co-partnership with C. W. Judy in 1902, under the name of E. L. Brown & Co., he enlarged the stock, and for two years carried on a thriving trade. In 1903 Mr. Brown sold his interest in the grocery and hardware departments to his partner and a Mr. Jenifer, and for two years carried on the other departments himself successfully. In January, 1905, he disposed of his entire stock to the firm of Rose & Frankhouse, and started an entirely new line of business in Los Angeles, under the firm name of Fred L. Boneff Co., Inc., real estate and mines, which is proving a profitable venture.

In 1887 Mr. Brown married Jennie Carson, who was born in Illinois, and of their union two children have been born, namely: A child that died in infancy, in 1888; and Julia Grant Brown, September, 1904. While a resident of San Fernando, Mr. Brown was very active and influential in political affairs, and for twelve years served as president of the Republican club. In April, 1897, he was appointed, by President McKinley, postmaster at San Fernando, was re-appointed in 1901, and again, by President Roosevelt, in 1905, serving in that capacity until his removal to Los Angeles. In November, 1906, he was elected secretary of the Southern California Retail Hardware and Implement Dealers' Association. Fraternally Mr. Brown is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was formerly treasurer of his lodge, grand master four terms and delegate to the grand lodge four years. Both he and Mrs. Brown are valued members of the First Presbyterian Church of San Fernando.

FRANK EMERY KING. The agricultural interests of Los Angeles county are well represented by Frank E. King, one of the successful ranchers in the outskirts of Venice. A young man of considerable public spirit and energy, no movement calculated to advance the welfare of the community in which he lives is allowed to lag for want of support on his part. A native of Iowa, he was born in Clear Lake May 23, 1871, and is a son of A. N. King, whose sketch will be found on another page in this volume.

The common schools in the vicinity of the parental home in Iowa furnished all of the book learning which Mr. King received, and the fact that he is now a well-informed man is due to continued study and careful observation. As a preparation for the life which he is now following he assisted his father in carrying on the home ranch in Iowa, and after the family settled in California he was well prepared to assume the responsibilities of a ranch of his own. The colony with which the family came to California was in charge of the father and Jacob Brown, the newcomers making settlement in Los Angeles county, near the Palms.

Upon coming to the west Frank E. King lived on rented land in Los Angeles county until he had had an opportunity to look about and select a suitable location for a permanent residence. Before long he was enabled to secure his present valuable ranch of ten and one-half acres in close proximity to Venice, a choice of which he has every reason to feel proud, for although the ranch is small as compared with many others, it ranks in point of productiveness with many twice its size.

Mr. King's first marriage occurred in 1891 and united him with Laura Griffin, who was born and reared in California. At her death in 1897 she left four children, as follows: Pearl, Ramona, Leslie and Jack G. Six years later, in 1903, in Sawtelle, Cal., Mr. King was married to Miss Mamie Lundy, who was born in Missouri. One child, Harold, has been born of this marriage. In his political affiliations Mr. King is a strong ally of the Republican party.

ALBERT LEE KERNS, a resident farmer located in the vicinity of El Monte, is one of the prominent men of this section, having proven his right to success by his own efforts, which have brought him a competence. He is a native of Paris, Ky., born September 6, 1869; his father, Levi Kerns, was a native of Bourbon county, Ky., while the grandfather, also Levi, was born in Massachusetts, the descendant of an old New England family located in Plymouth by Scotch-Irish forefathers. Levi Kerns, Sr., settled in Kentucky at an early date in its history and there engaged as a farmer among the primitive conditions of the then "dark and bloody ground." Levi, Jr., became a miller in manhood and plied his trade uninterruptedly until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the Fourth Regiment Kentucky Infantry, known as the Orphaned Brigade, and served to the close of the struggle, receiving two wounds, while two of his brothers participating in the warfare were killed. His own death was caused by drowning in March, 1870, while attempting to cross a creek in a canoe. His wife was Amanda Wardsworth, who was born in North Carolina of English ancestry, and also died in Kentucky. They were the parents of four children, all of whom are now living.

The third child in his father's family and the only one in California, Albert Lee Kerns was reared on the paternal farm and educated in the public schools. He remained at home until he was nineteen years old, when, in 1889, he went to Texas and in Honey Grove followed farming for four years. Attracted to California he located in Sacramento in 1893 and entered the employ of dredgers working in the Sacramento valley, remaining in this occupation for eighteen months, when, in 1895, he came to Los Angeles county and located in Savannah. He worked on the ranch owned by L. J. Rose for four years, when, in 1899, he entered the employ of the Farmers & Merchants Bank that had taken over the property, and retained his position with them until 1902. In the last-named year, with his accumulated means, he purchased a fourteen-acre tract of land located on Baldwin avenue. This he improved with a residence, barn, etc., and began its cultivation, combining with his farming interests teaming in the hay business, and since that time he has made a success and accumulated considerable means.

In El Monte Mr. Kerns married Miss Clotildis Quinn, a native of this place and a daughter of Richard Quinn, a pioneer, and they are the parents of two children, Mildred Lee and Grace Zelma. Mr. Kerns is prominent in educational affairs, serving at the present time as clerk of the board of trustees of the Savannah school district. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias, while politically he is a Democrat on national issues, but locally reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified to discharge official duties.

LINCOLN A. LAUER, D. D. S. Prominent among the leading dentists of Los Angeles county is Lincoln A. Lauer, D. D. S., of Ocean Park, who is rapidly building up a fine practice. In the swift advance of science in this twentieth century no professional calling, mayhap, has made such rapid strides as that of dental surgery, intelligent study, patient investigation and careful experiment having done much towards ameliorating the inevitable sufferings of childhood, youth and old age, every member of the human family at some time demanding the services of a good dentist. Prominent among those well equipped for his profession is Dr. Lauer, who has had much experience in his work, and has met with excellent success. He was born in Burlington, Iowa, a son of Anton Lauer.

A native of Odessa, Russia, Anton Lauer was born in that city, in 1811, of German ancestry. Reared and educated in Odessa, he married a fair maiden of that place, and while yet young in years she died, leaving him with four children. Soon afterward, about 1840, he immigrated to the United States, locating in Burlington, Iowa, as a merchant. A few years later he sold his store and stock and invested his money in a farm, on which he resided until his death, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years. In Burlington, Iowa, he married his second wife, who bore him eight children, of whom Lincoln A., with whom this sketch is chiefly concerned, was the sixth child.

Brought up in Burlington, Lincoln A. Lauer received superior educational advantages, completing the full course of study established in the public schools of that city, and being graduated from a commercial college. Subsequently going to Chicago, he was for two years secretary to the superintendent of the Pullman Palace Car Company, at Pullman, Ill. Resigning his position, he entered the dental department of the Northwestern University, in Chicago, where he was graduated in 1888, with the degree of D. D. S. Locating in that city, at the corner of State and Randolph streets, he at once began the practice of his profession, and met with most satisfactory success during the many years that he remained there. August 27, 1904, he came to Ocean Park, Los Angeles county, and in the comparatively brief time that he has been here has won an extensive and lucrative practice, his acknowledged skill, close attention to his professional duties, and his unblemished personal character winning for him a large patronage among the best people of the community.

In Chicago, Ill., March 26, 1890, Dr. Lauer married Mary F. Lamb, a niece of Mrs. H. P. Schofield, of Ocean Park, and they are the parents of four children, namely: Edith, Harold, and Ruth and Russell, twins. Fraternally the doctor is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

HON. GEORGE FILLMORE KAPP. Leaving behind him an unusually fine record as a professional man and an efficient public official Hon. George Fillmore Kapp became a resident of Long Beach in February, 1904, for the benefit of his wife's health, and has within but little more than two years established himself in a successful real-estate business and gained the respect and esteem of all with whom he has come in contact. The Kapp family has been prominently identified with the history and development of this country for many years, the first members having settled in York county, Pa., where the grandfather and father were born. The father, Henry Kapp, was a farmer by occupation, and during the Civil war served in the One Hundred and Ninetieth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. He was a leading citizen of York county and at one time served as a member of the county board of directors for the poor. Religiously he was an adherent of the Lutheran Church, and his death in 1901 removed a man of sterling principles and strong character, who was universally mourned by all who knew him. His wife, in maidenhood Lucinda Urich, was a native also of York county and now resides near the old home.

A member of a family of six children, George Fillmore Kapp was born November 11, 1865, in York county, Pa., and spent his boyhood days on his father's farm. After receiving a preliminary education in the common schools he entered the first state normal school at Millersville, from which he graduated in 1884 with the degree of B. E. He then taught in York and Lancaster counties for some time, and about the year 1887 continued the occupation in Laporte county, Ind. Subsequently he entered the law department of the Northern Indiana State Normal, graduating therefrom in 1891, with the degree of LL. B. The following year he located in Butte, Neb., and began the practice of law, meeting with flattering success in the profession. In 1894 he was given the nomination as candidate for prosecuting attorney on the Democratic ticket and came within forty votes of being elected in a county strongly Republican. Two years later the Democrats nominated him on their ticket for member of the legislature, and receiving the indorsement of the Independent party, he was elected by a majority of six hundred and sixty-five votes. He served during the session of 1897, receiving the chairmanship of the committee on county organization and county seats, and was also made a member of several other committees. Becoming a resident of Exira, Iowa, in 1898, where he continued his legal practice, he served that city in the capacity of mayor for one term, refusing a re-nomination to the office. Upon his arrival in Long Beach in 1904 he formed a partnership with Fred Aufdenkamp and under the name of The Hub Realty Company has since been transacting a general real-estate business, the office being located at No. 200½ East First street.

Mr. Kapp's marriage occurred in Butte, Neb., uniting him with Mary E. Jonas, a native of Holt county, Neb., and the union has been blessed in the birth of two children, Harold and Marjorie. Mr. Kapp was made a Mason in Butte and still retains his membership in the lodge there, and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. He attends the Congregational Church and takes an active interest in bettering the social and civic conditions of the community in which he resides. As a man of liberal education, broad culture and extensive experience in business, professional and public life he is recognized as one of the valued citizens of Long Beach.

A. LEHMANN came to Lompoc in early boyhood twenty-two years ago and has grown up with the city which was then only a mere village and is now one of the leading towns in this section of the state. He has always been closely identified with those enterprises which were projected for the improvement of Lompoc and is today one of its most prominent and highly respected citizens, noted for his honesty and integrity and genial manner toward all with whom he comes in contact. He is now manager of Lompoc Produce & Real Estate Company, one of the largest and most influential firms of the kind in the city, besides being heavily interested in a number of important business enterprises, including the Lompoc Planing Mill Company, and the Bank of Lompoc, of which he is vice-president.

Mr. Lehmann was born May 11, 1867, in Alsace, Germany, which was also the native home of his father, Moise Lehmann, and his mother, Estella (Weill) Lehmann, both of whom were members of old and prominent families in that province. The father was a merchant and real-estate dealer in his native town until a short time before his death, which occurred in Germany, when he was seventy-six years old. There was a family of seven children, all of whom are now living at Oxnard with the exception of A. Lehmann and one sister, the latter residing in Los Angeles. The mother came to California in 1893, and makes her home with a son living at Oxnard. Mr. Lehmann received a fine education in the high schools of Germany before his immigration to this country and immediately upon his arrival in Lompoc, Santa Barbara county, which was his objective point upon reaching the United States, he engaged as clerk in a mercantile house, and continued at that work for seven years. He then established a business of his own on the same lines and conducted it for twelve years, after which he sold out and took active charge of the Lompoc Produce & Real Estate Company, performing the duties of manager since 1898, and giving his attention as well to the running of the lumber yard which the company conducts in connection with its other lines of business.

Mr. Lehmann is a stanch believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party and takes an active part in all matters of interest to the public civic life of the city. Fraternally he is identified with all of the important organizations in Lompoc, being a leading member of the Masonic lodge in this city and of which he is a past master; also is a member of the Lompoc Knights of Pythias Lodge and of the Lompoc Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Lehmann is a self made man and is justly entitled to all of the confidence, respect and honors which his friends and fellow-citizens are glad to give him.

MISS LOTTIE ISABELLE LEFFINGWELL. An accomplished and enterprising business woman of Venice, Miss L. I. Leffingwell is energetic, progressive and keen-sighted, and as an equal partner in the real-estate firm of A. F. Webster & Co. has been actively connected with some of the most important and extensive sales and transfers of realty in Los Angeles county. In her many transactions of this kind, she has clearly demonstrated woman's ability to compete with man in the world of finance, by her industry, thrift and superior management accumulating a fine property. She was born, reared and educated in Ravenna, Ohio, a daughter of James and Charlotte (Dewey) Leffingwell. On the paternal side she comes of thrifty Scotch stock, her Grandfather Leffingwell having been a native of Scotland, and on the maternal side is of substantial New England ancestry, her mother having been born and reared in Becket, Mass.

The youngest of a family of five children, Lottie I. Leffingwell was left fatherless at the age of ten years, and four years later she began earning her own living. She first worked as assistant in a dental office at Ravenna, during which time she completed the course at the high school, from which she was graduated. Subsequently she obtained a position in a jewelry store, where she became an expert as a repairer of jewelry, and afterwards was engaged in the millinery business, for twelve years having a store in Ravenna.

Her health failing, Miss Leffingwell was obliged to seek a change of climate in 1902, and came to California, a step that she has never regretted. Locating first in Los Angeles, she had charge of the millinery department of a store in that city for awhile, but preferring out-door occupation she embarked in the real-estate business, and from the very beginning met with most encouraging success. In April, 1903, she located in Ocean Park, and soon after became associated with her present partner under the firm name of A. F. Webster & Co. Beginning business with a limited capital, in a small office at Ocean Park, this firm has built up a good business, growing with great rapidity, and now maintains three offices, one at Ocean Park, one in Venice, and one in Los Angeles.

Miss Leffingwell has become owner of considerable real estate in this vicinity, and has acquired title to a large share of beach property. She is very public-spirited, being a promoter of every worthy cause which will aid in the upbuilding of Venice and Crescent Bay. She comes of Revolutionary stock, a fact of which she may well be proud, and is a member of the Ravenna Chapter, D. A. R.

HON. HENDRIK DIRK CANNE. Not many California residents can claim the birthplace of Erasmus the scholar and Van Tromp the naval hero as his own, but this honor and all the inherent qualities that distinguish their race belong to Mr. H. D. Canne, of Hollywood. By the royal right of birth, in the direct lineage of the distinguished Cannes family of Bristol, England, barons and baronets under James II, who emigrated to Holland during the Puritan wars, where the descendants have since resided, Hendrik Dirk Canne was born in Rotterdam, Holland, January 9, 1879, son of C. D. and Johanna Elizabeth Teengs Telting, both natives of Holland, the former a son of a college professor, and the latter a daughter of a prominent merchant in that country. After their marriage, which occurred in April, 1873, and the birth of their three children, Henriette Louise, J. C. D. and Hendrik D., the parents set out from Rotterdam, hoping to find a broader outlook for their children in America. The father relinquished an excellent government position with the Royal Postal Telegraph, and with a party of colonizers landed in New York City in the winter of 1889-90, having shipped from Rotterdam. It was the intention of the colonization party with which they came to locate as pioneers in the grape industry in Merced county, Cal., and after traveling across the country they finally reached their destination. The colonization scheme proved, however, a gigantic swindle, which resulted in large financial loss to Mr. Canne. Determined to make the best of the situation, he remained in Merced county for a few years, then located in Santa Clara county, where his attempts at prune-raising being unsuccessful, he later removed his family to Chino, where the sons became connected with a sugar factory, remaining there until his removal to Los Angeles to spend his declining years. J. C. D. Canne is still interested in the beet-sugar business, and is now chief chemist for the Spreckles Sugar Company.

After the location of the family in Los Angeles, Hendrik D. Canne became secretary to the German consulate here, a position which he filled with credit until the office was abandoned. Before coming to the United States he had received an excellent preliminary education in the schools of Holland, supplementing this by attendance of grammar schools in this state and taking a course in a private academy, and completing the whole by taking a course in a business college. Becoming interested in the buying and selling of real-estate, he carried on a flourishing business for a number of years. The country in and around Hollywood became of special interest to Mr. Canne, and during his last few years in Los Angeles he gave considerable attention to developing that section, with the result that he finally removed here, and he now makes his home here with his parents. In addition to carrying on his real-estate business while in Los Angeles, Mr. Canne took up the study of law in the University of Southern California, from which he graduated with the degree of LL.B. in June, 1905, and during the same year he was admitted to practice at the bar in the state and United States courts. He was made a citizen of the United States under Judge Allen.

Politically Mr. Cannes upholds the principles of the Republican party. He is a member of various improvement associations and civil and political leagues. Recently he has been nominated a justice of the section in which he resides, and he is one of the best known and most respected citizens in the valley. Popular among the young as well as the old, a good sportsman, a jolly companion well met, and a stanch friend, these are the qualities that have made him such a universal favorite.

JAMES LABORDE. One of the most successful and popular men in the San Jacinto valley is James Laborde, who was born in Basses-Pyrenees, France, July 10, 1854, the son of John and Jane Laborde, both natives of France, where their deaths occurred. The son, James, spent his boyhood days in his native country, receiving a good education in the public and private schools, and then engaged in sheep herding for a time before coming to the United States in 1874. Arriving at the port of San Francisco, he made his way almost immediately to Southern California, locating near Los Angeles, and for six years worked in a fruit orchard. During that period he had succeeded in saving enough to establish himself in an independent business and bought a herd of sheep and engaged in sheep raising for a similar length of time. He then sold the herd and came to the San Jacinto valley, where he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits from then until the present, renting the property from Joe Wolfskill. It is fitted with the necessary machinery for use in cultivating grains in the most up-to-date manner, the outfit including a thirty-two horse power combined harvester. The ranch comprises seven hundred acres, five hundred acres being devoted to grain raising and the remaining two hundred acres to pasture. He has about twelve head of horses and other farm stock. He owns real-estate in San Jacinto, where he resides with his family.

In 1883 Mr. Laborde was united in marriage to Rosa Necochea, a native of California, the ceremony being performed at San Jacinto, December 15 of that year. There were ten children born to this union, namely: Jennie, now the wife of John Rubidoux; Frances, who became the wife of John Rosa; Leonidas; Guadalupe; Peter; James; Mary, who died in infancy; Rosa; Anna; Elmer. Mr. Laborde is an earnest communicant of the Catholic Church, and takes an active interest in all enterprises which tend toward the upbuilding of the community in which he resides.

ZEPHANIAH JONES. To the residents of San Diego county familiar with that section of the county lying east of Escondido no name is more familiar than that of Zephaniah Jones, the present postmaster of the village of Vineyard and for years the efficient foreman of one of the largest ranches of the locality. Mr. Jones is of eastern birth and Welsh ancestry. His father, Henry P., was born in New York in 1812 and after arriving at man's estate engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native locality, but in 1871 removed to Iowa, purchased a tract of raw land and gave his attention to its development. Many years before leaving the east he married Elizabeth Jones, who was of Welsh descent and a native of New York, born in 1814. On the Iowa farm which he had improved and made valuable he died in 1875 at the age of sixty-three and his wife passed away three years later at the age of sixty-four years. While they were living in Oneida county, N. Y., their son, Zephaniah, was born on the home farm October 8, 1858, and his education was begun in the schools of that county, but later prosecuted in the public schools of Iowa and the state university at Iowa City. For some years after discontinuing his university studies he farmed in the summer months and taught school in the winter, but in 1883 he removed to Wisconsin and taught school at West Bend for two terms, then embarked in the bee business, building up an apiary of three hundred colonies. During 1885 he sold his bee business and returned to the old home place in Iowa, where he spent the following year.

Late in the year 1886 Mr. Jones arrived in California and made his home in San Diego county until 1906. For a short time he was employed in the city of San Diego, but soon he removed to the mountains fourteen miles east of Escondido and worked for Jacob Gruendike from July, 1887, until February of the following year. March 24, 1888, he was united in marriage with Miss Helen, daughter of Col. A. E. Maxcy one of the leading stockmen and distinguished pioneers of San Diego county. When mention is made of the development of the ranching industry in this county the name of Colonel Maxcy merits prominent consideration. A native of Massachusetts and the son of a farmer, he received every advantage within the financial ability of the family, and on completing his classical studies became engaged in the study of medicine. At the age of nineteen years he traveled through Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, introducing physiology into the public schools, and while in that portion of the country he heard of the discovery of gold in California, which immediately changed all of his plans for the future. Returning to his old home in Massachusetts, he quickly made preparations for a voyage to the Pacific coast, and soon afterward took passage on the ship Pharsalia, which sailed around the horn and then northward, arriving in the harbor of San Francisco in July, 1849, after a voyage of six months. For a year he worked in the mines, but luck did not favor his efforts and he decided to seek other avenues of employment.

In 1850 he became a pioneer of San Diego county, which at the time had few residents except those of Mexican lineage. For a time he engaged in business at Oldtown, which was then the business center of the county. In the spring of 1852 he moved to a ranch sixteen miles east of the present site of Escondido and here he began to raise cattle and horses. From the first he met with success. His herds increased until he had from forty thousand to fifty thousand head of cattle, and his brand was familiar through all this part of the country. When settlers began to come in and lands were taken up, disposing of all of his cattle but one thousand head, he bought a ranch of five thousand acres. In addition, in later years, he planted grapes and engaged in the manufacture of wine. At the organization of the Consolidated National Bank of San Diego he bought stock and the subsequent failure of the institution entailed upon him a heavy loss, but he still retained large landed holdings. After a long illness Mr. Maxcy died March 9, 1901, at the Southern California hospital in Los Angeles. For some years before his death his son-in-law, Mr. Jones, had acted as foreman of the ranch, and since then the latter and a son, Alonzo, has been in charge of the estate. Disposing of the ranch, April, 1906, in June, the same year, Mr. Jones removed to Hollywood, Cal., where he engaged in the real-estate business under the firm name of The California Developing Association, with office in the Bradbury Building, Los Angeles.

In fraternal relations Mr. Jones holds membership with Escondido Lodge No. 345, I. O. O. F., while politically he is a pronounced Republican and in recognition of party services in 1904 he received the appointment as postmaster of the village of Vineyard, which office he filled, in addition to superintending large ranch interests.

JOHN DAVIS CLARK. Practically the entire life of Mr. Clark has been passed within the limits of San Bernardino county, for he was only four years of age when the family left Utah and crossed the plains to the then unknown regions of Southern California. Hence his early recollections are associated with this vicinity, whose progress he has witnessed from the condition of primeval wildness to one of remarkable prosperity. In the bringing about of this satisfactory transformation he has been a factor, for his work as boy and man has tended toward the improvement of the land and the permanent development of its material resources. The farm which he now owns is situated near Highland and ranks among the finest in the locality. All of the improvements have been made under his personal supervision and prove him to be a man of thrift and energy.

A native of Springville City, Utah, born in September of 1854, Mr. Clark was the only child of Davis and Priscilla (Singleton) Clark, natives respectively of Connecticut and England. After coming to San Bernardino he attended the local schools and availed himself of such advantages as they offered for the acquiring of an education. From an early age he has been familiar with agriculture and horticulture, and during 1883 he also began to be interested in the raising, feeding and shipping of cattle, a branch of agriculture in which he met with gratifying success. However, eventually the rise in land valuations rendered large stock-raising enterprises unprofitable, and in 1900 he began to confine his attention to raising fruit and farm products.

The larger part of his present farm Mr. Clark acquired in July, 1889, when he purchased an unimproved tract of forty acres. Later he bought ten acres adjoining and also acquired an eight-acre tract, all of which property he yet owns and devotes to farming and fruit-raising. Five acres are in a bearing grove of navel oranges and five acres are planted to apricot trees. A substantial residence has been erected by the present owner and occupant and a barn also was built for the storage of grain and the shelter of stock. Formerly he used a wind pump, but on account of pumps having been placed on the creek below the water has been taken from the higher land.

The marriage of Mr. Clark took place January 11, 1880, and united him with Mary I. Haws, daughter of F. M. and Malettna Haws. Mrs. Clark was born at Provo City, Utah, July, 25, 1855, and died in San Bernardino county, August 13, 1905. Both of their children had preceded her in death, the son, Francis, having died in infancy, while the daughter, Eva, was taken from the home in 1891 at the age of sixteen years. These bereavements leave Mr. Clark alone in the world. His life is a very busy one, for the management of his land and the care of the fruit trees demand constant attention. Like all public-spirited citizens, he keeps posted concerning problems affecting local and national prosperity. In politics he gives his support to the Republican party, and on that ticket in 1900 he was elected a member of the board of supervisors of the county, a position that he filled with characteristic energy and faithfulness. In fraternal relations he holds membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Masons at San Bernardino.

JUAN ORTEGA. Throughout the length and breadth of this glorious state no more worthy people can be found than those born on California soil, of Spanish ancestors, men and women noted for their industry, geniality and warm-hearted hospitality. Their doors are ever open to the stranger, who is given a cordial welcome and freely invited to partake of the best afforded by the house. Prominent among this number is Juan Ortega, a prosperous rancher living near Vista, a typical representative of the true Spanish gentleman. A native of California, and the son of a native son, he was born June 24, 1844, in Santa Barbara county, being one of nine children born to his parents, Amidio and Concepcion (Dominguez) Ortega, the former of whom was born in Los Angeles county and the latter in Santa Barbara county. The father was a farmer, and for many years was engaged in ranching in Ventura county, where he died at the age of eighty-two years. The widowed mother is still living, and on December 8, 1906, celebrated the ninety-eighth anniversary of her birth.

Brought up on the home ranch, Juan Ortega received a practical education in the Spanish schools of his native county, and has since acquired an excellent knowledge of the English language. After the removal of the family to Ventura county he helped his father to clear and improve a ranch, remaining at home several years after attaining his majority. Taking up one hundred and sixty acres of government land in 1869 he improved a homestead on which he resided for twenty-two years. Selling that estate, he located on his present ranch, near Vista, and is extensively engaged in grain raising, renting about six hundred acres of land. Industrious and enterprising, he is meeting with satisfactory results in his undertakings, and as a man of unquestioned integrity is held in high esteem throughout the community.

On March 26, 1866, Mr. Ortega married Edubige Tico, a native of California, and they have become the parents of six children, namely: Charles; Otellia, the wife of Frank Carpenter; Mary, the wife of Philip Roedfor; Petra C. Carrillo; John B. and Frank. Politically Mr. Ortega is identified with the Democratic party and takes a genuine interest in public affairs, at the present time serving as school trustee. Religiously he is a member of the Catholic Church, belonging to the San Luis Rey Mission.

J. FRANK OVER. Numbered among the business men of San Diego, where he has made his home since 1891, is Mr. Over, an enterprising and practical contractor, and a progressive citizen. Attracted to California by reports concerning the opportunities offered by the coast regions, Mr. Over arrived in Pasadena in 1889, and in the spring of the following year he went to San Francisco, where he worked in the employ of the Pacific Paving Company. In their interests he came to San Diego to take charge of asphalt paving in this city, and for half a year he remained here as their foreman, since which time he has engaged in business for himself. Cement walks and foundations and, indeed, cement work of every kind and description, he has made his specialty, and by reliable workmanship and prompt filling of contracts he has proved that he made no mistake in the selection of an occupation. Nor has his work been limited to San Diego, for he has filled contracts in Escondido, Oceanside, Imperial and other towns of the county. In his factory, on the corner of Ninth and M streets, he manufactures hollow cement blocks, which of recent years have come into popular use and are proving especially practicable for certain kinds of work. From his office in the Chamber of Commerce he directs business affairs, fills contracts, and during the busy season oversees his corps of fifty to sixty workmen in such a manner as to secure the most prompt and satisfactory results.

Many years gone by the Over family lived in Pennsylvania, in the vicinity of Chambersburg, and from there John, with his family, including his son Henry, removed to Illinois, where the former died. The latter, after having engaged in the teaming business at Sterling for a lengthy period, eventually removed to San Diego, and here passed away at the age of seventy-one years. In early manhood he married Catherine Feighner, who was born in Pennsylvania, of German descent, and who now makes her home with her son, J. F., in San Diego. Of her four children this son was next to the youngest and is the only one residing on the Pacific coast. Born at Sterling, Ill., December 18, 1861, he received a common school education in his home town and at an early age began to work as a machine hand in the Northwestern barb wire factory at Sterling. During 1882 he removed to Omaha, and for a year worked in a barb wire factory in that city, after which he began to learn the cement manufacturing trade. In spite of various reverses, he has been prospered financially, and now owns his residence at No. 630 Fir street, as well as a grain and stock ranch five miles north of Escondido. The success which he has gained in the past is an indication of what the future years will bring him, for he is now in the prime of life, the master of a profitable trade, keen, capable and reliable; hence increasing prosperity may be predicted for his future efforts. Since coming to San Diego he has established domestic ties through his marriage to Miss Gertrude Ells, a native of Iowa, and by whom he has one son, Franklin Alfred. In national politics he votes with the Republican party, but locally he maintains an independence of thought and attitude, voting for those whom he considers best qualified to represent the people. In local commercial and fraternal affiliations he belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, the Improved Order of Red Men, the Woodmen of the World, the Foresters of America, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being past grand of Sunset Lodge No. 328, I. O. O. F., also a member of the Encampment, Canton and Rebekahs.

FRANK RENFREW FARQUHAR. In the vicinity of Highland, San Bernardino county, the passing traveler may take note of many thriving ranches, but among them all it would be hard to find one whose water facilities equal those enjoyed by Mr. Farquhar. He is bound to no rules and regulations of water companies, and is truly the monarch of all he surveys, for his water supply is furnished from a flowing artesian well which he himself bored at an expense of $1,800. It has a flow of about one hundred inches of water, which by a complete system of piping is made to enrich the most remote portions of the ranch. The system includes a windmill, which with the piping was erected at a cost of $800. From the foregoing it will be seen that Mr. Farquhar possesses the prime essential of a successful ranch, ample water facilities, and while at present his land is devoted entirely to the raising of alfalfa, it is his intention in the near future to plant a walnut orchard, for which his land is especially well adapted.

A son of William R. and Marian Elizabeth (Renfrew) Farquhar, Frank R. Farquhar is a native of Indiana, born in Sullivan county, March 11, 1861. When he was two years old the family removed to Ohio, and in the schools of Coshocton county he received his first knowledge of books. When not in school he assisted in performing his share of farm duties, and when the time came for him to select his calling in life he very naturally chose the one with which he was most familiar and for which he had inherited tastes also. Push and enterprise are distinguishing characteristics in his make-up, qualities which he early in life made use of, but perhaps with no more telling effect than in the fall of 1885, when as a young man of twenty-four years he came to the west, determined to carve out his fortune and grow up amid the opportunities of the Golden State. For eighteen months he was located in the vicinity of Riverside, from there going to Redlands, and finally, in February, 1905, locating two and one-half miles east of San Bernardino. His first purchase of land consisted of forty acres, to which he later added twenty acres of the Waterman tract, owning in all sixty acres of as fine land as the county boasts.

After locating in the west, Frank R. Farquhar formed domestic ties by his marriage with Cora Sylvia Merrill, their marriage occurring February 9, 1899. Mrs. Farquhar is a daughter of John H. and Mercy (Brewer) Merrill. She is the proud mother of two interesting children, Merrill Renfrew, born March 14, 1901, and Leland Brewer, born January 7, 1903. Mr. Farquhar is an excellent representative of the class who form the best of our western citizenship, the high quality of which has given California high rank in the galaxy of commonwealths.

CAPT. HENRY ALMON CROCKER. The fact that San Pedro is one of the most prosperous cities in California in proportion to its population cannot be attributed entirely to its favorable location, nor entirely to the fertility of the surrounding soil, although both of these circumstances have proved telling factors in the progress of the place; but a third factor must not be lost sight of, viz.; the progressive spirit of the men who have composed the citizenship and guided its affairs. Closely associated with the town's hitory is the name of Capt. H. A. Crocker, who located here before the organization of the town, the locality then being known as Fiall. To him is due the credit of erecting the first house in the town, which at that time had no special location, but when the town was laid out it was found to lie partly on Beacon street. By purchasing seventy-five feet on Beacon street near Sixth he was enabled to move his house there, and for many years made his home at that location. This structure was finally destroyed by fire and he replaced it by a two-story building, a part of which was used as a restaurant. In educational affairs Captain Crocker also took the initiative, and with the co-operation of Mr. Linskow built the first schoolhouse in the locality. For many years he was at the head of the school board, and during this time had the satisfaction of seeing the straggling efforts of early days superseded by methods of instruction which prevail in schools in the metropolis.

At the time of the Revolutionary war, his grandfather, then a young man, went from West Machias, Me., to Nova Scotia, where he was married. It was there that the father, James W. Crocker followed his life calling as a farmer for many years. His wife, formerly Jane Spinney, was a native of Nova Scotia, of Scotch ancestry. Both parents are now deceased. Of the five sons and three daughters born to them only four sons are living, and of these Henry A. is next to the youngest. He was born in Napolis Valley, Nova Scotia, August 13, 1845, and was reared on his father's farm there. By the time he had attained his seventeenth year he had received a good education in the common schools around his Canadian home, had gained considerable experience as a farmer, and had also started to learn the carpenter's trade. This latter accomplishment was interrupted by his response to the call for men in the United States navy during the Civil war. Going to Boston in 1862 he entered the service and for one year was on the Wabash, later serving on the Powhattan, and after his honorable discharge in 1863 he went to Washington. There he was employed in the service of the government until January, 1864, at which time he enlisted in Company B, Third United States Cavalry, under command of General Steele. Joining his regiment at St. Louis, he went to Little Rock, Ark., and while near Princeton was taken prisoner and sent to Camden, that state. It was while there that difficulties arose from the fact that he was a British subject and had never taken out naturalization papers. Through the instrumentality of the English counsel he was able to take out English papers and obtain a passport from General Magruder to General Kirby Smith, the latter giving him a passport via Mexico. He made the trip to Mexico entirely on foot, a distance of seventeen hundred miles, and after reaching Matamoras he began work at the carpenter's trade, which he had partially learned before entering the navy in 1862. He was in Matamoras at the time news was received of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. By way of Cuba he returned to New York City, from there drifting to New Haven, Conn., from which port he followed the sea for a number of years. Going to Lynn, Mass., in 1869 he followed the carpenter's trade there until 1875, since which time his life has been associated with California and with San Pedro in particular. His pioneer efforts have not been in vain, for the erection of his own dwelling gave encouragement to other settlers to locate permanently and in the passing of years the repetition of this example has resulted in the present thriving town of San Pedro. So enthusiastic was he about its future that in the early days he predicted there would be a population of forty thousand inhabitants in the town before long, and at its present rapid rate of growth his prediction will soon be a reality. As his means would allow he added to his first purchase of real estate until he owned ten buildings in all, but about 1896 five of them were destroyed by fire, and as there was little or no insurance carried on the property it was a complete loss. In later years he gave his attention to running a line of pleasure boats, at one time owning quite a number, but he has sold several and lost as many more, later having only the Pt. Fermin, a gasoline launch forty-two feet in length, which he ran himself. He has perpetuated his name in the history of the town by the erection of the Crocker building, which adjoins the San Pedro Bank of Sixth street, and which is occupied as stores, above which is the Waldo lodging house.

In 1869, while a resident of Lynn, Mass., Captain Crocker was married to Miss Ellen L. Davis, who was born on Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, and two children were born to them: William H., a musician of San Pedro, now county assessor, and Mercy J., the wife of Charles Powers, also of San Pedro. Mrs. Crocker died in 1903, and on December 31, 1905, Captain Crocker was united in marriage with Mrs. H. F. Hansen, of Los Angeles. In 1906 he returned to his old home in Nova Scotia on a visit. At one time Captain Crocker was identified with a number of fraternal orders, among them the Knights of Pythias, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Chosen Friends, but he is not now actively interested in any of them. In the church of the Seventh Day Adventists, of which he is a member, he takes an active part, serving as superintendent of the Sabbath-school. The erection of the church was due in a large measure to his personal efforts, for he gave not only of his time, but of his means as well to provide a suitable edifice for the home of worshippers of that denomination. In summing up the life of Captain Crocker who is still hale and hearty, it may be safely said that no one in this section is held in higher esteem than this enterprising citizen, nor has any been more thoroughly interested in or contributed in greater degree to its solid and reliable upbuilding.

ALEXANDER KEIR. In a substantial home at No. 744 Fifth street, San Bernardino, Alexander Keir is living retired from ranching, his varied and extensive property interests requiring as much of his time as he cares to give to business pursuits. Mr. Keir is a native of Scotland, a country noted for its sons of sturdy character and enterprising industry, having been born in Glasgow, August 30, 1844, the son of Alexander and Marion (King) Keir, both of whom were born in the same country. When their son was only four years of age Mr. Keir brought the family to the United States, landing at New Orleans, and from there making his way up the Mississippi and Ohio rivers to Pittsburg, Pa. He was a manufacturer of lumber in his native land, but in casting about for a business opening in this country he decided to establish himself in the cattle industry, and accordingly in 1849 went to St. Louis, Mo., and started in that business. In 1851 he removed to Salt Lake, and continued farming and cattle-raising until 1853, when he resolved to remove to California. Taking his family with him, he crossed the plains with ox teams and came to San Bernardino. This section was populated mostly with Mexicans and Indians at that time and was almost entirely unimproved so far as the land was concerned, and Mr. Keir remained only a short time. However, after making his home in Los Angeles for a year he returned to San Bernardino county, purchased real estate and followed his chosen occupation until 1882, in which year he removed to Santa Monica. His death occurred in San Bernardino in 1897. His widow survived him a number of years, passing away at the home of her son, Alexander, in 1904. The parental family originally comprised eight children, of whom three died in early childhood, and four daughters and one son now reside on the Pacific coast.

After completing his work in the public schools of San Bernardino, Alexander Keir assisted his father on the farm for a time and later accepted a clerkship with the firm of Wolff & Folks, holding the position four years, after which he embarked in business under the firm name of Wolff, Folks & Co. in Arizona, continuing business under this name for one year. In 1872 he retired from this connection and again helped his father in the cattle business, later establishing himself in an independent cattle-raising enterprise in the eastern part of what is now the city limits, and remaining there until 1902. He met with very great success in this business, and, although he still owns the one hundred acre ranch, it is now being operated by tenants.

In August, 1869, Mr. Keir was married to Maryette, daughter of Ezra and Susan Parrish, old and prominent residents of San Bernardino county, and of this union ten children were born, two of whom died in infancy. Those now living are: William E., of San Bernardino; Mary E., the wife of E. E. Clark, of Oceanside; Sherman, residing in San Francisco; John King, of San Bernardino; Frank, also a resident of this place; Robert Burns and James Watt, twins, the latter of whom is deceased; and Ida Gertrude. Fraternally Mr. Keir is a charter member of Valley Lodge No. 27, K. of P., and was formerly affiliated with the Masons and Odd Fellows, but is now demitted from both organizations. Politically, he is an advocate of Democratic principles. He is a man of great intelligence, keen observation and thoroughly alive to the trend of present day matters of social and civic interest, and as a progressive and public-spirited citizen is accorded the respect and esteem of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

JOHN R. HARGRAVE. Although Mr. Hargrave is, comparatively speaking, a recent addition to the citizenship of Sawtelle the interest which he has shown in the welfare of the town indicates that he is a man of such mettle as to make him a credit to any community, no matter where Fate might choose to place him. Of Scotch descent on the paternal side, John R. Hargrave was born in Illinois December 18, 1864, a son of Andrew Hargrave, who was born in Roxburghshire, Scotland, in 1809. Immigrating to America in 1818, he was a resident of Canada until 1855, when he came to the United States, locating with his family on a farm in Illinois. A later removal found the family in the adjoining state of Indiana, where they remained for twelve years, in 1882 crossing the plains to Oregon. The father lived to enjoy his new home in the west for about two years, his death occurring in Yamhill county, in March, 1884. His wife was before her marriage Miss Margaret McEwen, born in Canada in 1829, and of the eight children born of their marriage all reached maturity with one exception and all are still living.

At the time the family removed from Illinois into the Hoosier state John R. Hargrave was a lad of six years, and although too young to be of any assistance, he was old enough to enjoy the novelty and excitement of the journey. His entire school life was associated with the common schools of Indiana, and by the time the father took the family to Oregon in 1882 he had completed his education and was ready to start upon a business career. Although he had been of considerable assistance to his father in his grain and stock-raising enterprises, he did not feel himself sufficiently adapted for that life when the time came for him to make selection of a life calling. At this juncture he became acquainted with A. G. Churchly, of Portland, Ore., and under his instruction he learned the photographic trade. Seeing a good opening for branching out in Kelso, Wash., he located there in 1888, remaining there for sixteen years, during which time he became well known in the business and political circles of the town. In recognition of his fitness as a leader and as a man of superior judgment his Republican constituents nominated him as mayor of Kelso in 1900, his election duly following. During his term of two years the city was visited by a severe fire, in which he lost all of the property accumulated during his residence there. Since locating in Sawtelle he has been engaged in the photographic business.

Mr. and Mrs. Hargrave, the latter formerly Miss Berdan, have become the proud parents of two children, Andrew C., born in Kelso, Wash., September 17, 1898, and Frances R. born in the same place June 14, 1901. Fraternally Mr. Hargrave belongs to the Red Men, and while in Kelso served as sachem of Tuscarora Tribe No. 32. Mrs. Hargrave is a member of the Relief Corps, and is also a member of the Presbyterian Church of Kelso, Wash.

ALBERT E. HALL. When the third colony from England landed at Plymouth in 1630 among the passengers was Daniel Foote, concerning whose previous and subsequent history little is known except that he was a man of dauntless courage and pioneer spirit, since he braved the dangers of an unknown sea in order to establish a home in the wilds of a new world. When the Revolutionary war began members of the family were among the patriots who fought for independence with a valor that hunger and hardships could not quench. In the fifth generation from the founder of the race in the new world was Samuel Foote, a native of New England and an early settler of Chautauqua county, N. Y. Among the children in his family a daughter, Mary Dorothea, who was born in Massachusetts, became the wife of Elisha, son of William Hall, a Revolutionary soldier descended from English progenitors. Battleboro, Vt., was the native town of Elisha Hall, who early in life embarked in the manufacture of lumber and erected the first steam sawmill in Chautauqua county, N. Y., his operations in timber extending through western New York and into Pennsylvania. During the year 1840 he removed to St. Louis and engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber. The first cargo of lumber ever sold on the Mississippi river was purchased by him in 1843 and came from Marine Mills, Minn.; prior to that time lumber was freighted down the Ohio river exclusively and taken up the Mississippi by keel boats. Successful in business, Mr. Hall also wielded large influence as a citizen and gave stanch support to all movements for the advancement of his community. An experience as a teacher in young manhood gave him a broad outlook concerning educational work, and for some years prior to 1852 in St. Louis he served as a member of the board of education and board of teachers' examiners. His death occurred during a visit in Pennsylvania, and his wife passed away in 1861 at their St. Louis home.

Five children comprised the family of Elisha Hall, four of whom are living, Albert E. being the second in order of birth. Born at Jamestown, N. Y., June 8, 1833, he was seven years of age when the family settled in St. Louis and there he became a pupil in a private school. Early in life he acquired an excellent knowledge of the lumber business under his father's practical training. When the Civil war began he at once offered his services to the Union and enlisted for three months in a detached rifle company known as the Lyon Guards, in which he was commissioned first lieutenant. At the expiration of his time he enlisted for three years in the Tenth Missouri Cavalry and was commissioned by the president as quartermaster with the rank of first lieutenant. His service continued until the close of the war and was principally in Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi. After having been mustered out at Nashville in 1865 he remained in the south and became a cotton-grower near Huntsville, Ala., being the first grower in that state (and, as far as known, in the entire south) to employ the free labor system. The three years of his life as a planter in the south were filled with anxieties and even perils. The country was in a condition of unrest. The noted Klu Klux horrors were stirring up strife and sedition. However, he armed his four hundred colored employes and so escaped without trouble, besides which, after he had armed his men, the county of Limestone where he lived was at peace, being the only county in the state where a turbulent disposition was not shown.

On account of these troubles Mr. Hall gladly embraced an opportunity to sell his cotton lands. Returning to St. Louis, he engaged in the wholesale confectionery business for four years, after which he spent three years as a miner in Utah and then became a wheat-grower in the Red River valley near Glendon, Minn., where for ten years he cultivated over one thousand acres of wheat land. On selling out there he removed to Washington in 1888 and embarked in the manufacture of lumber at Tacoma, remaining there until three years later, when rheumatism affected him to such an extent as to render a change of climate necessary. Hoping to be benefited by life in a southern latitude he came to California and traveled by team through the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys, thence across to San Luis Obispo and on to Los Angeles. After brief sojourns in different parts of Southern California, June 20, 1898, he arrived in Long Beach, where he bought seven and one-half acres on the Anaheim road in the suburbs of the town. Later he platted the land and in 1904 sold it in town lots. In 1904 he bought the corner of Seventh and Pine street, which now is improved with a two-story building, and in addition he owns five cottages and other city property.

The marriage of Mr. Hall was solemnized at Terre Haute, Ind., and united him with Miss Ella W. Whiting, who was born in Connecticut, and is a descendant of the noted clockmaker of the same name. Two children were born of their union. The son, Albert E., Jr., died at the age of eight years. The daughter, Mrs. Mary E. Burr, resides in Long Beach. In national politics Mr. Hall gives his support to the Republican party; locally he favors the men whom he deems best qualified to protect the interests of the people, irrespective of political allegiance. Remembrance of the old war days is borne in mind through active participation in the work of Long Beach Post No. 181, G. A. R., with which he has been identified since coming to this city. Movements for the benefit of the city receive his co-operation and influence, and its rapid growth is a realization of his anticipations. From the time of his arrival he has been a believer in the city's future prosperity and present events are proving the wisdom of his judgment and the keenness of his foresight.

FRANK LIBBY. After fourteen years of identification with the grain and stock interests of California and after having established interests of large financial value, Frank Libby passed from earth's activities, followed to the place of interment in Santa Ana by tributes of the highest esteem from all of his former associates. Prior to his removal to the Pacific coast he had engaged in the development of an unimproved agricultural country in Nebraska, whither he had gone from the Mississippi valley. Mention of his ancestral history appears in the sketch of his brother, C. S. Libby, of the San Luis Rey valley. Suffice it here to say that he was a son of Jacob and Julia (Guphill) Libby, and that his maternal ancestors also belonged to the Libby family, his mother's mother having been a daughter of Daniel Libby, a soldier of the Revolutionary war. The lineage is traced back to John Libby, who came to America shortly after the Pilgrim Fathers had established their homes on the bleak shores of the Atlantic coast at Plymouth.

Born in Goodhue county, Minn., and educated in the public schools of Emerson, Mills county, Iowa, Frank Libby became a pioneer of Nebraska in his young manhood and on land in Madison county he turned the first furrows in the prairie sod. June 24, 1886, in Humphrey's township, Platte county, Neb., he married Miss Eunice M. Curtis, who was born at Metherill, Devonshire, England, being a daughter of Thomas and Mary T. (Salmon) Curtis, natives respectively of Devonshire and Cornwall, England. Both were descendants of very old families in their native shires. The maternal grandparents, William and Mary Ann Hicks (Thomas) Salmon, were born in Cornwall, the former a descendant of a family whose record in that shire is traced back to 1650 and the latter a daughter of Thomas Thomas, also of an ancient family of the same shire. Mrs. Mary T. Curtis is still living, as is also her husband, and both are earnest members of the Methodist Church. On coming to America in 1870 Thomas Curtis settled near Mineral Point, Wis., and later spent five years at Chebanse, Iroquois county, Ill., afterward made his home at Emerson, Iowa, for five years, but eventually moved to Nebraska, where he now lives at Omaha retired from business responsibilities. All of his four children are now living, and Mrs. Libby is the only one of the number in California. Among the four she was next to the oldest, and her education was received in the grammar schools of Illinois and the high school of Creston, Iowa. For a few years after her marriage she and her husband remained in Nebraska, but in May, 1890, they removed to California, settling on a farm near Carlsbad, where they remained for three years.

From Carlsbad the family removed to Santa Ana and devoted two and one-half years to horticultural pursuits in that vicinity, after which they purchased and removed to a farm in the San Luis Rey valley. On selling that place Mr. Libby devoted his attention to his farm of about five hundred acres situated two miles above the Mission, where he had one mile of valley land on the ditch and engaged in raising grain and full-blooded Hereford cattle. For some time he served as secretary of the San Luis Rey Irrigating Company and for nine years he officiated as clerk of the San Luis Rey school board. After a brief illness caused by pneumonia he passed away February 22, 1904, on the anniversary of his father's death. Through all of his life he had been stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party. In religion he maintained a deep interest in the work of the various denominations and was especially in sympathy with the Episcopal Church and its teachings.

In September following her husband's death Mrs. Libby left the farm and removed into Santa Ana, where she makes her home at No. 515 Cypress avenue. In 1905 she sold the farm, since which time she has made other investments. Only one child remains to her, a daughter, Reta G., the other daughter, Mary Louise having been taken by death June 19, 1905, when in the morning of life with all of its rich promises awaiting fulfillment. The mother and surviving daughter are communicants of the Episcopal Church and contributors to its societies and philanthropies. Socially Mrs. Libby is prominent and popular and occupies a leading position in Santa Ana, where she is a welcomed guest in the most select circles, an earnest church worker and an influential member of the Rebekahs and the Maccabees.

NELSON H. TWOGOOD. One of the most successful orange growers in Riverside county is Nelson H. Twogood, whose home is on a ranch of twenty-five acres, eighteen acres devoted to the growing of oranges and one acre is in grapes. About one acre of his orange grove is of the tangerine variety, the rest being navels, bloods, valencias and homosassas. He also owns two other ranches, one of four and one-half acres in oranges, and another comprising thirty acres located near Perris, which is given over to grain raising. Mr. Twogood was born September 25, 1851, in Winnebago county, Ill., and received his education in the Pecatonica high school. He was the son of James D. and Amanda M. (Cable) Twogood, the father a native of New York, and the mother of Ohio. They were early pioneers of Illinois and the homestead which Mr. Cable entered in 1837 is still in possession of the family, and is occupied by a sister of Mrs. Twogood. In 1886 the parents came with the family to Riverside county, Cal., where a ranch was purchased. Mr. Twogood was a stanch Republican and active in local politics during his life. Both father and mother were members of the Baptist Church in Riverside, and they lived to advanced ages, he being seventy-five years old at the time of his death, and she living to attain seventy-seven years. Of the ten children born to them, five are now living, all having homes in California except one daughter, who is a resident of Colorado.

After leaving high school Nelson H. Twogood became a school teacher and was for six years engaged in that profession in Winnebago and McLean counties, Ill. He subsequently conducted a farm in McLean county, and in 1883 removed to Dakota, where he took up government land, engaged in the grain and stock business and remained for eighteen years. Before selling out there he had acquired eight hundred acres of land, having met with very good success in all of his business undertakings. Coming to California Mr. Twogood bought the ranch upon which he now resides and has one of the most attractive homes in this part of the county. His marriage, which occurred in 1880, united him with Miss Mary H. Wight, a native of Ohio and a daughter of Benjamin Wight, born in the same state. The Wight ancestors were from the Isle of Wight and landed in Massachusetts soon after the original Plymouth colony came to America in 1620, and played important roles in the early history of the country. Mr. and Mrs. Twogood became the parents of five children: Blanche W., the wife of Elmer Haas, and who resides with her parents; Ernest N.; Ralph S.; Archie J.; and Ruth, who was killed in an accident when nine years of age. The parents are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Highgrove, and fraternally Mr. Twogood was made a member of the Fulton Lodge No. 123, I. O. O. F., in South Dakota, and also belongs to the Ancient Order of United Workmen of Fulton. He is Republican in politics and takes a special interest in educational matters, having served as school trustee both in South Dakota and in California. In the former state he also filled the offices of town clerk and justice of the peace, and in a business way assisted in the organization of a farmer's warehouse company, for three years having had charge of the warehouse which they owned. He is now one of the trustees of the East Riverside Water Company.

ANDREW J. LOCKWOOD. Upon coming to California in 1897 Mr. Lockwood settled in the vicinity of Chino, San Bernardino county, and so well pleased and satisfied has he been with the location that he has had no desire to change to any other part of the state. When he purchased his present ranch of twenty acres it bore no improvements whatever, but the raw, forbidding land is now transformed into one of the most prosperous ranches in the county, all of which Mr. Lockwood has accomplished alone. Conditions are here very favorable for the successful raising of alfalfa, and he has his entire acreage in this commodity, harvesting annually on an average of eight tons to the acre.

Mr. Lockwood is a native of Iowa, born in Wapello county, July 28, 1865, one of five children born to his parents, Jared and Ann (Davis) Lockwood, they being natives of Indiana. The parents removed from Indiana to southwestern Iowa, settling first in Mills and later in Fremont county, and there they are now both making their home, having reached the venerable age of eighty years. During his younger years Mr. Lockwood was very active in the public life of his community, and besides filling other public offices served as justice of the peace for some time. He still takes a keen interest in political events, and especially in issues concerning the Democratic party, for ever since his voting days began he has supported its candidates. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, and with his wife is a member of the Christian Church.

Andrew J. Lockwood was educated in the common schools in the vicinity of his home. No event of special importance occurred in his early life to distinguish his own from the majority of farm-reared lads, and after completing his common-school education he returned to the home farm, working side by side with his father, until in his twenty-third year. It was about this time, in 1887, that he established home ties of his own, and at the same time settled upon a farm in that vicinity. His marriage united him with Miss Fannie Stateler, who was born in Iowa, and of their marriage four children have been born, as follows: Lee, Jared, Horace and Mae. He lived on a farm which he cultivated for a number of years, or until coming to California in 1897. San Bernardino county was his destination, and here he has since remained. In 1899 he purchased the ranch on which he now resides and it has undergone such marvelous changes in the meantime as to be scarcely recognizable, for at the time it came into his possession not a furrow had been turned. In connection with his own ranch of twenty acres, which is devoted exclusively to raising alfalfa, he also rents land, this latter being given over entirely to grain. Altogether he has between two and three hundred acres under control and is demonstrating in a substantial way that he thoroughly understands the principles of agriculture, whether worked out in the Mississippi valley or on the irrigated lands of the west. During the thirty-two years of his residence in Iowa, Mr. Lockwood was an important factor in the public life of his community, and for some time served as supervisor of Scott township No. 2, Fremont county. In 1892 he was initiated into the Knights of Pythias, being made a member of the lodge at Bartlett, Iowa, and since coming to the west he has joined the Fraternal Aid and the Fraternal Brotherhood. Politically he is a Democrat, in this respect coinciding with the views held by his father. Mr. Lockwood is held in the highest esteem by his neighbors, who appreciate his advent among them, for he has set a high standard along agricultural lines that directly and otherwise has had its influence in improving general conditions in the community.

MYRON R. McKINNEY. Progressive and enterprising as a road superintendent, M. R. McKinney occupies a prominent place in the developing life of the community. He is a native of Plattsburg, N. Y., where he was born March 14, 1857, a son of John R. and Marietta (Martin) McKinney, natives respectively of Plattsburg, N. Y., and Vermont in the vicinity of Lake Champlain. The father followed farming in Minnesota and was also a contractor of excavations. They finally removed to California and settled in the vicinity of Norwalk, where the father died at the age of seventy-nine years and the mother at seventy-seven. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; in politics the father was a stanch Republican. They were the parents of six children, of whom but three are living; the eldest son, John, served in the Civil war from 1861 to 1864.

M. R. McKinney was the youngest child in the family of his parents. In infancy he was taken to the middle west, his home being for a time in Wisconsin and later in Minnesota. In the spring of 1869 the family located in Minneapolis and there Mr. McKinney received his education in the public schools; he also attended a commercial college and thoroughly fitted himself for a successful career in life. In that city he learned locomotive engineering and the trade of carpenter, following railroading and the latter occupation until 1889, as a carpenter working for one firm in Minneapolis for four years. Coming to California in 1889 he followed his trade in Los Angeles for a year and a half, when he came to Artesia and purchased a ranch of forty acres and established a dairy business. He continued this occupation for about fifteen years, and also raised stock, improving his property from wild, uncultivated land; four years ago he located on the place he now makes his home, and leases his ranch as he is now performing the duties of road overseer, to which position he was elected through the influence of the Republican party, of which he is a stanch supporter. He has built up a splendid reputation because of the manner in which he has performed his duties, has fine roads in his district, and is held in high esteem for the qualities of citizenship he has demonstrated during his long residence in this section. He has improved his property by the erection of a good residence, two barns, four artesian wells, and other necessary equipment.

In 1876 Mr. McKinney was united in marriage with Miss Emma Maltby, a native of New York, the two having been schoolmates in the Minnesota schools. They became the parents of the following children: Alfred E., who married Miss C. Freeman; Dora M., who married H. H. Hooper, a jeweler of Whittier, and has one child; Roy H., who married Blanche Freeman, and has one son; and Ellen M., a clerk in a large dry goods establishment of Los Angeles. Mr. McKinney is identified with the Masonic organization, being a member of Artesia Lodge No. 377, F. & A. M., and also belongs to the Fraternal Aid, having served as president of the Artesia Lodge for two terms, and is now holding a similar position in the Artesia Lodge No. 545. In Artesia he served for several years as school trustee. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which he liberally supports.

FRANCIS J. GANAHL is a native of Austria, where he was born in 1840, and a member of a family of seventeen children, in which he is the fifth son. His parents, John J. and Benedicta (Wuerbell) Ganahl, were both natives of the province of Tyrol and Vorarlberg, in Austria, and the father when a young man was a butcher, later engaging in the milling business and in farming. In 1868 he came on a visit to some of his children in America, and after a consideration of the advantages and attractions of many of our larger cities, he decided to locate in St. Louis, Mo., and returning to Austria, brought his family to that place and there resided until his death. Mrs. Ganahl also died in St. Louis.

Mr. Ganahl received his education in the common schools of his native country, and was eighteen years of age when he arrived with one of his sisters at St. Louis. He there engaged himself as an apprentice to a printer to learn that trade, and after his four years of apprenticeship at the wage of one, two, three, and the last year four dollars a week, he gave up the trade and started a grocery business. He continued that business for four years, and the balance of his twenty-nine years of residence in St. Louis carried on several different wholesale and retail businesses. Deciding to make a change of location, in 1887 Mr. Ganahl came to Los Angeles, and immediately upon his arrival engaged in the retail and wholesale lumber business. He conducted the business in partnership with his brother, C. Ganahl, for a number of years, and then commenced for himself under the firm name of F. J. Ganahl Lumber Company. In 1905, on account of sickness, F. J. Ganahl retired from the business, his brother having bought his interests. Since that time Mr. Ganahl has lived retired at his beautiful residence, No. 316 North Avenue 57, Highland Park, Los Angeles.

In other ways than business Mr. Ganahl has taken a great interest and prominent part in the upbuilding of the city of Los Angeles and vicinity, and is at present engaged in the real estate business, and is now erecting the largest and finest brick block in East Los Angeles. He was one of those who fought continuously for the five-cent fare on the Pasadena electric line from Avenue 57 to any part of the city of Los Angeles until the rate was conceded, and in the agitation for the extension of the Garavanza line to that point he campaigned the fight to a successful end. He was one of the principal workers who originated the proposition to build the Pasadena boulevard from North Pasadena through to Los Angeles, making it one hundred and fifty feet wide and nine miles long, and had the project been consummated it would have added millions of dollars' worth of value to the property in the vicinity.

Politically Mr. Ganahl affiliates with the Democratic party, in the principles of which he is a firm believer. His membership in fraternal orders embraces the Western Commercial Travelers' Association and the C. K. of A. He was married to Miss Louise Le Brun, a native of St. Louis, Mo., July 12, 1871, and they are the parents of eleven children, all living, the youngest being eleven years old. Mr. Ganahl is a man who has lived a well-rounded life and has met with unusual success in all of his undertakings. His influence has been very largely felt in this section of the state, and he holds the highest esteem and respect of the citizens of the community.

WALTER C. HARGRAVES. As an official in the beautiful city of Redlands Mr. Hargraves takes a keen interest in its development and upbuilding, and can always be counted upon to further any movement toward this end, his personal efforts for success lying parallel with those in the interest of the general community. He came to Redlands in 1889; his father, William C. Hargraves, now deceased was a native of Lancashire, England, and married Angeline S. Clough, a native of the Town of Bow, N. H., and a daughter of Enoch Clough. She died in California in which state are located her three children.

Born in Manchester, N. H., Walter C. Hargraves there spent the years of his youth, receiving such education as the schools of the city afforded. He held responsible positions with business houses in the eastern states until the spring of 1881, when he came west, locating for two years in Colorado, and later going to Vancouver, British Columbia. There he entered the contracting, building and real estate business. He was eminently successful in this line and was identified with the pioneer growth of Vancouver, where he is well known and favorably remembered. Coming to Redlands fourteen years ago and being at once impressed with the beauty of the situation and the possibilities for orange growing, Mr. Hargraves purchased twenty acres in the Lugonia side of the city, which he planted to oranges and where he lived until the recent sale of his orchard. He then moved into the city. He is the owner of considerable business and subdivision property, most of the latter being situated in the Lugonia district, and takes an active interest in the welfare of the community. He has been a director of the Board of Trade and enters heartily into movements tending toward the advancement of the prosperity of Redlands. On April 11, 1904, he was elected a member of the Board of Trustees for the term of two years and was re-elected in April, 1906. Fraternally he is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and Knights of Pythias and is also a member of the University Club. Enterprise and ability are the secret of the success achieved by Mr. Hargraves, and in this distinction he is measured among his fellow citizens.

FREDERICK ELISHA HOTCHKISS. No citizen has proven himself more useful or given more of his time and attention towards advancing Redlands and the interests of the orange growers of this section than Mr. Hotchkiss, whose efforts along this line have won for him a permanent place among the representative citizens of Southern California. He came of a New England family which was established on American soil many years prior to the Revolution, in which historic struggle the paternal great-great-grandfather, Caleb, participated until his death July 5, 1779, at New Haven, at the time of the British invasion. His father was also called Caleb, while his grandfather, John, was born in England, a son of Samuel, and became the colonial emigrant from whence the American branch of the family sprung. The great-grandfather of our subject, Jonah Hotchkiss by name, was a West Indian merchant, and reared his son, Ezra, to that occupation. The family were residents of Connecticut and there Leonard S. Hotchkiss was born, reared and educated, in manhood becoming cashier for the New Haven County Bank until his removal to Redlands, where his death eventually occurred.

He had made a trip to the state in 1849 via the Isthmus of Panama, spent eighteen months, and then returned home and followed the banking business until his retirement. His wife, formerly Julia Mix, was born in New Haven, a daughter of Eli Mix, a merchant of that city and also the descendant of an old New England family. She died in Redlands, also.

Frederick Elisha Hotchkiss was the only son, and was born in New Haven, Conn., November 26, 1843, and there reared to young manhood and educated in the public and high schools. He was but little more than seventeen years old when he answered the call of his country by enlisting July, 1861, in the First New York Lincoln Cavalry, which was supposed at that time to be the only cavalry regiment for the Civil war. The Secretary of War wrote the governors of the several states, that the government would furnish the arms but could not furnish the horses and equipments and asked the governors of the state to do this, and in another letter spoke of the war being but a ninety-day affair and that the one regiment of cavalry would probably be sufficient. It is interesting to note at this point that before the close of that mighty struggle there were three hundred cavalry regiments in service. He was mustered in as a private and June 25, 1865, was commissioned first lieutenant. He participated during his long service in many of the most important engagements, was through the Peninsular campaign in the Shenandoah valley for two years and was on staff duty under General Caphart and associated with General Custer and was at General Lee's surrender. After the close of the struggle he returned to New Haven and accepted a position as bookkeeper in the New Haven County Bank. He finally removed to Gloversville, N. Y., and there engaged in glove manufacture for the period of eight years, when he returned to his native city and became head accountant for the L. Candee Rubber Company. He occupied this position for ten years when he came to California as secretary of the Bear Valley & Allesandro Development Company, an enterprise formed by principals in the east for the purpose of taking up arid land in this section of Southern California, irrigate and dispose of it at a profit. He continued with this company after its consolidation with the Bear Valley Land & Water Company, the concern becoming known as the Bear Valley Irrigation Company. Later when this company passed into the hands of a receiver in 1893, Mr. Hotchkiss became private secretary of E. H. Spoor, the receiver in the interests of the Savings & Trust Company of Cleveland, and has occupied this position ever since. In 1903 he was active in the incorporation of the Bear Valley Mutual Water Company, whose stockholders were all consumers under the system and surrendered to the company their rights and claims on the water they had been using and holding stock in the new concern according to their usage of water, and in the management of this enterprise Mr. Hotchkiss is secretary and to him is largely due the credit for the manipulation of details which promises a successful consummation of the previous legal troubles at an early date.

In addition to his interests already mentioned Mr. Hotchkiss owns a ranch of one hundred and fifty acres at Loma Linda, of which forty acres are devoted to the cultivation of a fine orange grove, while his home is on Walnut avenue, in Redlands, where he is a member of the Board of Trade, an ardent Republican and a helpful and practical citizen. He was married in 1867 to Miss Heacock, a native of Gloversville, N. Y., and born of this union are two children, Leonard F., secretary of the C. W. Scranton Company, of New Haven, Conn.; and Minerva, wife of L. W. Hall, of New Haven, Conn. Mr. Hotchkiss was made a Mason in Gloversville Lodge No. 429, A. F. & A. M., and raised to the degree of Knight Templar in the Holy Cross commandery No. 51, K. T., of the same place. He is a charter member of the Bear Valley Post, of the Grand Army of the Republic in Redlands, and is a member of the California commandery of the Loyal Legion, and of the Southern California Association of Companions of the Loyal Legion. He supports the charities of the First Congregational Church, of which he is a member. He is justly named among the representative citizens of Southern California and held in highest esteem for his splendid qualities of character, his integrity and manhood.

WALLACE HUNGERFORD, one of the substantial and successful ranchers of Los Angeles county, is a native California, his birth having occurred in Sutter county September 19, 1870. His parents, M. C. and Mary E. (Ramey) Hungerford, were natives respectively of Scioto county, Ohio, and Shenandoah county, Va., and both were pioneers of California, their marriage taking place in Sutter county, Cal. They had both crossed the plains in 1854. They located in Los Angeles county in 1880 and purchased a ranch of forty acres, and there the mother is still living at the age of sixty-seven years, the father having died at the age of sixty-two years, five months and fourteen days. He was identified with the Masonic organization, being a member of Meridian Lodge, F. & A. M., of Sutter county. In politics he was a stanch Democrat and was often called upon by his party to serve in a public capacity, having acted as assessor of Sutter county for several terms. Mr. and Mrs. Hungerford became the parents of seven children, of whom five are living and all are located in California.

The first educational training of Wallace Hungerford was received in the common schools of Colusa county, Cal., the course being completed in the grammar schools of Norwalk. This training was supplemented by a course in the Whittier College and a private school, where he perfected himself in a general course of study. Returning to the ranch he remained with his parents until he was twenty-three years old, when he set out for himself, locating on the ranch where he has made his home for the period of fourteen years, engaging in general ranching and the dairy business, the latter being supplied by a herd of fifteen cows and the milk shipped to Los Angeles. All of the thirty-eight acres comprising the ranch are in excellent condition, well cultivated and he has added improvements which make of the property one of the valuable properties of this section. Mr. Hungerford is a Good Templar, is interested in the advancement of educational affairs (now serving as trustee of the Carmenita district), and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Politically he is an advocate of Democratic principles. He is one of the substantial citizens of this section, held in highest esteem for the splendid qualities of citizenship he has already displayed, for the business ability which is bringing him success, and the character of his manhood.

HENRY TELESPHARE GIROUX. In the pioneer days of the state H. T. Giroux, for many years a well-known merchant of Santa Monica, left Canada, his native land (having been born in the vincinity of Montreal, February 28, 1828) and sought to try his fortunes among the undeveloped conditions of the Pacific coast. His father, Pierre Giroux, was a farmer of Canada, where he was born, a son of Jean Giroux, an emigrant from France, his native country, and a blacksmith by occupation. H. T. Giroux learned the trade of blacksmith under the instruction of his older brother, Eucher Giroux, the head blacksmith of the Grand Trunk Railroad Company in Montreal. In 1852, fired by the glowing reports of the wealth of California, he left Canada, and from an eastern port took passage on a vessel for the Isthmus of Panama, which he crossed on foot; from there he went by boat to San Francisco, landing absolutely penniless, but fortunately not lacking in courage and energy. He immediately found work as a dish washer, perfectly willing to accept anything that afforded him an honest livelihood. After four weeks he journeyed to the mines in Eldorado county, where as a miner, grocer and liquor merchant he made a small fortune. Later he carried on mining almost exclusively, and like many others during those historic times made and lost several fortunes. He made two trips back to his home in Canada, the first time in 1865 and again in 1871, going and returning each time by way of the Isthmus of Panama. He became a well-known figure in Eldorado county, where he was identified for many years with mining interests.

In 1875 Mr. Giroux located permanently in Southern California, taking up his residence in Santa Monica, where he established the first store, selling groceries and liquors; with the growth of the town his interests increased, success accompanied his efforts, and he is today in possession of a comfortable competence. He still maintains his interest in the mercantile affairs of the place, still conducting his store, while he has also invested in property here, owning a business lot 50x150 feet, located on Second street. Mr. Giroux is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and in politics is a stanch Republican, having cast his first vote for Lincoln and ever since has maintained his loyalty for his party.

ASA HUNTER. Coming to Los Angeles more than half a century ago, Asa Hunter, living on a ranch located in the northern suburbs of the city, holds a leading position among the pioneer settlers of this section of Southern California. From his early manhood he has taken an intelligent interest in the welfare of his adopted city and county, materially aiding the progress and development which has been caried on so rapidly, and to such a remarkable degree. As a representative agriculturist, he has achieved success by unremitting toil, directed by sound business principles, and as an honorable and upright citizen he possesses the confidence and good will of the entire community, being respected and esteemed by the young and the old. A native of Kentucky, he was born in 1832, a son of the late Jesse D. Hunter, of whom a brief biographical sketch may be found elsewhere in this volume.

His parents moving to Illinois when he was a child, Mr. Hunter was brought up in Hancock county, living there until about fifteen years of age. In 1847 his father started with the Mormon battalion for the Pacific coast, leaving his wife and five of the children, of whom Asa was the oldest child, to follow at a later period. In 1848 therefore the family started across the plains with an ox-team train, going first to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where they spent the winter. The following spring they continued the journey, Asa driving the oxen, his team being the second one to drive into Salt Lake City. Continuing the journey westward, he piloted the family safely to Sacramento, arriving on July 4, 1849, after a trip full of hardship and anxiety for the brave youth on whom rested the entire responsibility of caring for his mother, brothers and sisters. His father and his brother William subsequently joined them in Sacramento, and after a brief stay in that place brought them to the southern part of the state. On locating in Los Angeles in 1851 Mr. Hunter became associated with his father, first as a manufacturer of brick, and afterward as a farmer, remaining with him until 1867. Going then to Antelope valley, Mr. Hunter purchased a ranch, and for seventeen years was there prosperously employed in stock raising and dealing. Returning then, at the urgent request of his father, to the old homestead, he tenderly cared for his parents as long as they lived, and has since resided here. By industry, good management and persistency of purpose, Mr. Hunter has accumulated a handsome competency, and is now living practically retired from active pursuits. He has recently been disposing of much of his landed holdings, at the present time owning eighty acres of city property, and but seventy-five acres of land outside of the city limits. For many years he raised small fruits and berries in large quantities, but at the present time leases a large share of his land. He is a most loyal and faithful citizen, and since coming to this part of California more than fifty years ago, has been outside of Los Angeles county but three times.

Mr. Hunter married Petro Hortese, who is of Spanish descent, and they are the parents of six children, namely: Emily, wife of Jacob Snyder, of Los Angeles; William, a dry goods merchant in Los Angeles, having a well-stocked store on Broadway, between Fifth and Sixth streets; Richard, living on a ranch adjoining his father's, married Mattie Polick and has two children, Asa and Harben; Aleck engaged in farming near the home ranch; Josie, living at home; and Keziah, wife of Daniel Gage, a guard in the state prison at San Quentin. Politically Mr. Hunter is a decided Republican, but he has never been an aspirant for official honors, his private business requiring his entire time and attention.

GUSTAV ADOLPH GEHRING. The ancestral home of the Gehring family is in Baden-Baden, Germany, where both the father and mother of Gustav Adolph were born. The elder Gehring was a baker by trade, and left Germany in 1848, coming on the ship Clipper around Cape Horn to San Francisco, where he arrived eight months later. As the gold excitement was then at its height, he went to Trinity county to work in the mines, and during the ten years he remained there met with very good success in his undertakings. By way of Panama and New York City he returned to his native land during the early '50s, and upon his return brought his wife. They came by way of the Isthmus and went direct to Trinity county. Subsequently he sold out the mines which he had there and went to San Francisco for a year, after which he settled at Santa Cruz, engaged in the bakery business for a time, then retired from active work and both he and his wife died at Soquel several years later.

The birth of Gustav Adolph Gehring occurred December 14, 1858, in Trinity county, Cal., he being next to the oldest child in a family of six children. He received his education first at a private school in Trinity county and then in the public schools of Santa Cruz county, and after his school work was completed learned successively the baker's trade, milling and stone dressing. Later he was employed in the Almaden mines for a year, and subsequently prospected and mined in Trinity and El Dorado counties. Following this he was foreman in a lumber camp in Mendocino county for a time, and in 1896 went to Yuma county, Ariz., where he was employed in the King of Arizona mine, operated by the Blaisdell Company. He then went to the desert country and engaged in sinking wells for H. W. Blaisdell, sinking a three-hundred-foot well, which he timbered, and also ran the pumping plant. Later he was employed at the Venus and Mars mine, also running the steam pumping plant there, and following this went to the Senolar and Fortuna mines.

In 1890 Mr. Gehring located in Temescal, Cal., on a bee ranch, remaining there until 1892, when he removed to Elsinore and has been conducting an apiary at this place ever since. His ranch comprises one hundred and twenty acres, which is improved for honey production, and he owns three hundred colonies of bees, placed in patented hives. He divides his time between raising comb honey for the market and his mining interests, among his holdings being an interest in the Gold Standard mine, which has a shaft two hundred and twenty-five feet deep.

Mr. Gehring was married at Santa Cruz to Miss Charlotte F. Jenkins, who was a native of that place, and she was residing there at the time of her death. She became the mother of three children: Gustav J., of Elsinore; Henry E., of Shasta county; and Irene, of Soquel. By his second marriage Mr. Gehring was united with Mrs. Carrie F. (Robinson) Laws, widow of Benjamin Laws, who died in Fullerton. She is the daughter of J. W. Robinson, a native of New York, a pioneer farmer of Ithaca, that state, and now residing at the head of Elsinore lake on a ranch. Her mother was Elizabeth, daughter of Crumlin LaDue, who was a pioneer settler in Cowlitz county, Wash., where Mrs. Gehring was born. She was a member of a family of six children, all of whom are now living. By her first marriage she became the mother of three children, Jesse, Benjamin S. and Charles C., all living at home. Mr. Gehring is a member of Elsinore Lodge, I. O. O. F., and politically affiliates with the Democratic party. Although his life is a busy one, largely taken up with business duties, yet he finds time and opportunity to aid in the upbuilding of his section of the country and occupies a prominent position among his fellow-citizens.

JESSE D. HUNTER. There was no more prominent figure among the pioneer settlers of Los Angeles than the late Jesse D. Hunter, whose name stands out in bold relief in its annals. He was a fine representative of the men whose shrewd foresight and determined energy opened the way for the settlement of this part of the state, and were ever active in developing its varied resources. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1847, it was his privilege and pleasure to watch its growth from the very beginning, and to play an important part in promoting its industrial prosperity. Moving from Kentucky with his family, he lived for a number of years in Hancock county, Ill., being there engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Enlisting as a private in the Mormon battalion, under command of Gen. Cook, in 1847, he was a member of the same company to which Mr. Charles E. Colton, now an honored resident of Burbank, belonged, and with his comrades came to California. While in the army he met with various thrilling experiences, passing through all the excitement, danger, sport, and occasional hardships incident to camp life, these being occasionally varied by a brief visit from the noble red man and his squaw. In 1849 Mr. Hunter went north to meet his family, as related in the sketch of his son Asa, on another page of this work, and after his return to this part of the state was for awhile employed by the Government as Indian Agent at Temecula. Going from there to San Bernardino, he was engaged in cattle raising for a few months, after which he located in Los Angeles. Establishing himself as the pioneer brick manufacturer of the place, Mr. Hunter burned the bricks for many of the prominent buildings of earlier days, including among others the brick jail which occupied the present site of the People's Store, on Spring street; a building at the corner of Main and Third streets; a house on the corner of Commercial and Los Angeles streets; several brick buildings near the race track; and a small building on the spot now occupied by the shop belonging to John Myers. As a manufacturer he was successfully assisted by his son Asa, and the two carried on a substantial business, brick being then worth $25.00 a thousand.

Retiring from manufacturing pursuits, Mr. Hunter bought about twenty-two hundred acres of land lying just north of the city, on the east side of the river, and subsequently purchased three hundred acres on the opposite side of the stream. Engaging in the care of his land, he improved a large and valuable ranch, on which he lived, honored and respected, until his death, at the advanced age of seventy-five years. He was a comparatively robust man until the last year of his life, when he met with a painful accident while driving, his horse and cart falling upon him, and breaking his hip. From 1849 until his death, Mr. Hunter was a continuous resident of this part of California, never going out of Los Angeles county excepting on the one or two occasions that he went to San Francisco to have his hip treated. He was widely and favorably known as a man of unblemished character, and his death was regretted as a loss to the community in which he had passed so many years. He belonged to the Masons when young, and for a number of years drew a pension from the government for services rendered to his country.

Mr. Hunter married Keziah Brown, who bore him ten children, two of whom died in Illinois, and one in Sacramento, while seven are living, namely: William, engaged in ranching near the parental homestead; Asa, of whom a brief sketch appears on another page of this work; Mary, wife of Joseph Burke, of Los Angeles county; Jesse, of this county; Samuel, residing on San Fernando road, north of the city; Martha, wife of Eli Taylor, of Los Angeles county; and Elizabeth D., wife of John Erick, living near the old race track. Mrs. Hunter survived her husband a number of years, passing away on the ranch where she had lived for so many years.

GEORGE A. GOODRICH. Arroyo Grande is fortunate to be able to count among its citizens George A. Goodrich, a fine old gentleman, well educated, fully posted on all matters of general interest and extensively traveled, and one who is scrupulously honest in every word and deed, all of these qualities having earned for him the high esteem of all members of the community. He is a member of the Masonic order, and politically a firm believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party. At various times he has served his country in official capacities, having been a postmaster during his residence in Illinois, and also in the same state he assisted in the census enumeration by the United States government in 1880. Religiously both he and his wife affiliate with the Baptist denomination and take an active interest in all matters pertaining to church work.

Mr. Goodrich is of good old New England parentage, both his parents, Lemuel M. and Fannie Hutchinson Goodrich, having been born in the state of Vermont, which is also the place of his own nativity. The parents died in Wisconsin at advanced ages, and of the family of four children, the two sons live in California, W. F. Goodrich making his home in Los Angeles. George A. Goodrich was born December 15, 1835, and received a part of his education in Vermont, and when he removed with the family to Wisconsin at the age of sixteen years entered the academy at Milton, Wis. He began his business career in Wisconsin, where he bought a ranch and continued to conduct it until 1869. In that year he went to New Hampshire and engaged in the wholesale corn and flour business at Lancaster, following this until he was burned out in 1875, when he sold the business and went to Fulton county, Ill., buying a farm there. Six years later he again removed to Wisconsin and farmed until 1893, when he came to Ventura county, Cal., and after a short time settled permanently in San Luis Obispo county on his present ranch, which consists of twenty acres, planted to vegetables, potatoes, strawberries, Logan berries and dew berries, the land being especially adapted to these crops.

In 1866 Mr. Goodrich was married to Miss Sarah Smith, a native of New Hampshire, and to them have been born four children: J. W., who is married, has three children and lives in Illinois; Belle, Mrs. Eastic, is the mother of three children; Ella, who is the wife of W. H. Bauman, of San Luis Obispo, has two children; Carrie, who married C. E. Congdon, also has two children, their home being in San Mateo.

EDMUND B. GREENE. The wharfinger at Serena, in the employ of Hayward & Hunt, has a variety of duties to perform, for there are fifteen acres of ground planted to many varieties of flowers and shrubbery, for which the place is noted. Edmund B. Greene, the present incumbent of the position, is making a record in the manner in which he performs his duties and meets the various visitors who delight to visit the grounds. In the care of the gardens he has efficient help in his estimable wife and both of these pleasant old people are highly respected by all with whom they come in contact. The father of Edmund Greene was born in Whitehall, N. Y., and the mother, Christina Ward, was a native of Vermont. Six children were born to them, Edmund being the only one living. Both parents died in Michigan, where they went five years after the birth of this son in New York, February 15, 1829. Edmund received his education in the state of Michigan, which was his home until the year 1870. At that time he removed to Kansas and worked at the painter's trade, which he had learned in the former place, there doing ornamental and landscape painting. In 1874 he came to Santa Barbara, Cal., and continued to work at his trade for a time. At one time he owned an apiary, from which he derived a good income, and he now owns two acres in his home place. His wife also has a seventy-nine acre ranch composed mostly of hay land. By his marriage, November, 1863, to Sarah Hutchins, a native of Michigan, one child was born, who died at the age of four years, and the mother died in 1874.

In 1900 Mr. Greene married Elizabeth Halliday, a daughter of John and Janet (Miller) Halliday, natives of Scotland. Both of her parents are deceased, the mother dying in Scotland and the father in Canada.

The war record of Mr. Greene is an interesting one, the first thirteen months of his enlistment having been served with Company E, Fifth Volunteer Cavalry of Kansas. After the expiration of this term he again enlisted, this time in 1863 in Company H of the Sixth Regiment of Michigan Heavy Artillery, in which he served until he was wounded in the battle at Blakely, Ala., when he was assigned to detail service and accomplished valuable work in drawing maps for the use of the First Division of Thirteenth Army Corps.

W. F. HALL. The founders of the Hall family in America became pioneers of New England, whence their descendants scattered throughout the entire country. From Connecticut, where he was born and reared, Nathan Hall migrated to New York and there married Miss Rachel Goodwin, a native of that state. From that time onward they continued to live in the Empire state and at advanced years passed away at their Havana homestead. During the existence of the Whig party Mr. Hall had been one of its supporters and subsequent to its disintegration he identified himself with the newly organized Republican party. Of his three children one son died while employed in the St. Louis internal revenue office, and the only daughter, Mrs. C. H. Reno, who had been making her home with the second son, W. F., in Los Angeles county, died October 19, 1906.

Seneca Falls, N. Y., is the native town of W. F. Hall, and November 13, 1836, the date of his birth. Upon completing the studies of the public schools he entered Wesleyan College at Lima, Livingston county, N. Y., from which he was graduated in 1859. Afterward he engaged in teaching school in Missouri and Michigan. At the opening of the Civil war his sympathies were such that he promptly offered his services to the Union, and August 16, 1861, was accepted as a member of Company F, First Colorado Cavalry. From Denver the First Colorado made a forced march to Fort Union, N. Mex., as General Sibley of the Confederate army was on the march from the plains of Valverde, where he had defeated his brother-in-law, General Canby. General Sibley was on his way to Santa Fe, where he raised the Confederate flag and declared New Mexico in the Confederacy. The First Colorado reached Fort Union and from there proceeded to Santa Fe, meeting General Sibley's advance guard in Apache Cañon, about twenty-five miles from Santa Fe. It was while with his command in Apache Cañon, in making a charge on a Texan battery, that Mr. Hall was wounded, March 26, 1862, and removed from the field to a hastily improvised hospital at a ranch house. The next day he was captured by Texans, but was released four days later, and afterward was unable to leave the hospital for about three months. On his recovery he rejoined his regiment and was with them in the sanguinary battle of Sand creek against the Indians. When peace was declared he was ordered back to Denver and there discharged, October 30, 1865, after a service of four years, three months and fifteen days. Prior to the war Generals Sibley and Canby were colonels in the regular army, their wives being sisters. During the war Mrs. Canby came through the lines and visited the sick and afflicted in the hospitals, giving them refreshing delicacies which were greatly appreciated, as for some time their fare had consisted almost solely of parched corn, owing to the destruction of a supply train. As a memento of his hospital experience Mr. Hall still cherishes a Bible which Mrs. Canby bestowed upon him at that time.

Returning to Michigan, Mr. Hall resumed the work of teaching school in St. Joseph, and during the summer vacations was employed on the lake as a shipping clerk. During 1868 he went again to Denver and secured the principalship of a school nine miles from the city. While acting in that capacity, in the fall of 1869, he married Rebecca A. Chapman, whose mother is still living in Downey. During 1870 he removed to Washington and for four years was in the employ of the government as teacher in the Quiniault Indian Reservation, one hundred and fifty miles from Olympia. In this work he had the capable assistance of his wife. At the end of this time, in 1874, he came to California and purchased his present ranch of forty-five acres near Downey. Since then he has made a specialty of stock-raising and now has sixteen head of cattle on his farm. Mr. and Mrs. Hall are the parents of three children, namely: Alice, who married William D. Mansfield; Catherine, wife of Edward Mather, who is a jeweler by occupation; and Edwin R., who is connected with a boat at San Pedro. In politics Mr. Hall has always been an ardent Republican. For ten years he has officiated as trustee and clerk of the schools, and besides he has filled the positions of deputy assessor and secretary of the water company. Fraternally he has been a member of the Independent Order of Foresters for a long period. The possessor of a tenor voice of rare strength and sustaining power, he has aided in the choir work of the Presbyterian Church and in concerts the value of his services as a singer has often been of especial importance in securing success for the venture.

CHARLES F. GREENMAN. Noteworthy among the active business men of Burbank is Charles F. Greenman, one of the leading real-estate dealers, and a citizen of influence and worth. A native of New York state, he was born, June 11, 1845, in Fulton county, where he lived until sixteen years old. Removing to Wisconsin in 1861, he was there engaged in agricultural pursuits for a number of seasons. In 1864, before attaining his majority, he enlisted in Company A, Twenty-third Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, as a private, and subsequently participated in several important engagements of the war, being with Grant at the siege of Vicksburg, taking part in the Red River and Mobile expeditions, and in other notable events of the conflict. August 18, 1865, he was honorably discharged from the service, after which he returned to his Wisconsin home. Going to Minnesota in 1867, he was there engaged in farming for five years, when, in 1872, he migrated to Iowa, where he resided for twenty-four years. A part of this time he there followed general farming, after which he worked at the carpenter's trade for fifteen years, and then ran a restaurant for eight years, being quite successful in all of his operations.

Coming to Southern California in 1895, Mr. Greenman purchased a vineyard in Antelope valley. Taking up a part of the vines, he set out small fruits, and was there engaged in horticultural pursuits for two years. Removing then to Burbank, he purchased an unimproved ranch lying three-fourths of a mile west of the village, and immediately began its cultivation, during the two years that he occupied it raising alfalfa.

Later purchasing a restaurant in Burbank, he operated it for three years, when he sold out at an advantage. He then bought his present commodious and attractive residence in Burbank, and has since devoted his entire time and attention to the buying and selling of real estate. A man of excellent business tact and judgment, he has acquired much valuable property in this vicinity, owning two ranches adjoining the village, and several desirable lots in both the business and residence parts of Burbank.

Mr. Greenman has been twice married, his first marriage occurring in Wisconsin and uniting him with Araminta Dolliver, by whom he had three children, all of whom reside in the east. His second marriage was with Susan Crowell, and they have one child, Fern Greenman. Politically Mr. Greenman is a Republican, and while a resident of Iowa belonged to the Grand Army of the Republic. He is identified with but one benevolent organization, that being the Burbank Lodge of the Fraternal Brotherhood.

SQUIRE ED HICKS. To possess the love and respect of fellow-citizens and neighbors bodes well to the recipient of whatever age he may be, but if he be a young man with life still before him the honor is all the greater. Probably no one in the San Jose valley is better known or stands higher in the esteem of his neighbors than Mr. Hicks, a progressive, up-to-date rancher in the vicinity of Spadra. On both sides of the family he comes of antecedents who were reared in the south for many generations, and he himself is of southern birth, having been born in Fulton county, Ky., July 1, 1861, a son of William and Mary J. (Irven) Hicks, they too being natives of that southern state. This was a momentous period in the history of our country and with thousands of other loyal citizens William Hicks offered his services in support of the Confederacy, having been born and reared in an atmosphere which fostered sentiments of secession. His zeal, however, was destined to cost him his life, for he was killed on the field of battle in 1864. In Kentucky Mrs. Hicks had formerly married Mr. McClannahan, by whom she became the mother of one child, Nancy, now the widow of F. M. Glidewell. The mother and daughter now make their home together in Oklahoma.

Bereft of a father's care and training when he was a child of three years, Ed Hicks received from his mother the love and guidance of both parents, and in return she has had the satisfaction of seeing him grow to a noble manhood and take his place on the battlefield of life. As he was little more than a babe when he left Kentucky his education was received entirely in Texas, where he made his home until grown to manhood. Then as now, cattle-raising was the chief industry in that state, and in starting out to find employment Mr. Hicks had no difficulty in securing work as a ranch hand, and for many years rounded cattle on the Texas plains. He also drove cattle from that state to the pasture lands of the neighboring states of New Mexico and Colorado. Subsequently he relinquished work along this line to some extent, following it only during the summer seasons, while during the winters he was employed by the street car company of Fort Worth, that state. He claims the honor of running the first car over the tracks of the Fort Worth electric car line, and he remained in the employ of the company as motorman for six years. It was about this time that he came to the west, with San Francisco as his destination. He did not remain long in the metropolis, however, coming soon afterward to Pomona, where he secured a position with J. E. Packard, and later entered the employ of A. T. Currier, with whom he remained about five years. Soon after his marriage, which occurred in 1892, he bought the ranch of thirty-seven and a half acres upon which he still resides, and which in the intervening years has been transformed into one of the most productive ranches in the county. The land is in two pieces, the one which is called the home ranch being embellished with a comfortable residence and all that goes to make a well-equipped ranch.

Mr. Hicks settled down to domestic life in 1892, at which time he married Miss Susie Arnett, who was born in Mendocino county, this state, and is a daughter of Robert S. Arnett, a descendant of southern ancestors. Henry county, Tenn., was his birthplace, and there also his parents, Samuel and Malinda E. (Norman) Hicks, were born. The grandfather was a veteran of the war of 1812, and served with bravery under the command of General Jackson. The early boyhood years of Robert S. Arnett were passed upon his father's farm in Tennessee, and as the educational advantages in the south at that time were poor at the best, his training along that line was sadly deficient. However, he was determined to secure an education and forged ahead with that object in mind. From Tennessee he went to Mississippi, there as in the former state working on farms and saving his earnings, in so doing adding to the fund which he was setting aside to pay his tuition through college. By private study in addition to his college training he fitted himself to teach, and thereafter followed farming and teaching as long as he remained in the south, or until 1853, when he crossed the plains with his family, making the trip behind the slow but sure oxen. From Colusa county, where he first located, and where he engaged in ranching for four years, he removed to Mendocino county, there as in his prior location taking a vital interest in all matters that affected the welfare of the community. While in Princeton, Colusa county, he was made postmaster of that town, filling the position efficiently in addition to managing his ranching interests. In Mendocino county he resumed agriculture, clearing and improving raw land, upon which he carried on stock-raising principally. He also added school teaching to his other duties, and was given charge of the first school held in Little Lake valley. After a residence of ten years in Mendocino county, in 1867 he disposed of his holdings there and came to the San Jose valley, locating on the Palomares tract in Los Angeles county, just north of what is now the city of Pomona. The Palomares homestead was one of the landmarks of the county, located on the San Bernardino road, and there for two years Mr. Arnett furnished substantial refreshment and lodging to travelers, his hostelry being regarded by wayfarers of that time as one of the bright spots on an otherwise long and tiresome journey between the scattering towns. It was in 1874 that he came to Spadra, and it was in this vicinity that he spent the remainder of his long and interesting life. For two years he lived on land which he rented from A. T. Currier, but later he purchased fifty acres in the vicinity and erected a very fine residence. He was one of the earliest pioneers of the San Jose valley, where his name was a household word, for he was loved and respected by old and young alike, and is still rememberd for his many kindly deeds. For many years prior to his death he was a deacon in the Baptist Church, and in his political belief he was a Democrat. During his later years Mr. Arnett made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Hicks, his wife having passed away in 1866. He survived her nearly forty years, his death occurring in August, 1905, when the community mourned the loss of one of its most substantial and best-beloved citizens. Mrs. Hicks was one of seven children born to her parents.

In his political sympathies Mr. Hicks is a Democrat, and takes a keen interest in party affairs, but is not interested in the sense of office-seeking, for he has no ambition in that direction. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge at Pomona.

JOHN S. HARBISON. The genealogical records of the Harbison family trace their lineage back to the year 1435 in Ireland. Early in the settlement of America three of the name immigrated to the new world, and years later John, a descendant of one of the immigrants, became a pioneer of Freeport, Pa., where he married Massy, daughter of Edward White, a soldier of the Revolutionary war. Himself a stanch patriot and brave soldier, John Harbison endured many perils in his service against the hostile Indians and fought under Wayne and St. Clair in various desperate engagements. On one occasion, when seriously wounded, a retreat was ordered, and with his wound hastily dressed he made his way to the spot occupied by the remnant of St. Clair's army, where he was assisted into the fort and cared for until his recovery. The opportune arrival of other soldiers saved them from the Indians. During his absence from his home the savages murdered two of his children, May 22, 1792, and took his wife and infant prisoners to a camp near the present site of Butler, Pa. At night she watched for and seized a chance to escape and stole away in the darkness, fleeing through the woods and over streams of water, and at one time was saved from capture by a new-fallen tree, under which she crawled with her babe until the Indians had passed out of sight. Traveling by night and hiding by day, she finally reached the Allegheny river near Pittsburgh in safety, after having endured hardships and exposure which would have killed a woman of less robust constitution. She lived to rear a large family, and died in 1846, at the age of seventy-six years.

Among the children of this brave pioneer couple was a son, William, who settled in Beaver county, Pa., and later moved to a farm near Newcastle, where he died. His wife, Margaret, who was born in Washington county, Pa., December 28, 1799, was of English descent, a daughter of William and Margaret (Gray) Curry. Under General Washington as chief armorer in the field, William Curry (or, as the government reports give his name, William Currie) participated in eight battles of the Revolutionary war, being present at the memorable crossing of the Delaware, and was also a "minute man." When Major Andre was captured, William Curry was one of the men in charge of the armory at Carlisle, Pa., which was used as a prison for the noted traitor and many other noted British prisoners.

In the family of William and Margaret Harbison there were three sons and one daughter, but John S. is the sole survivor. Born in Beaver county, Pa., near Freedom, September 29, 1826, he was reared on a farm five miles from Newcastle in what is now Lawrence county, Pa., and there received such advantages as the public schools afforded. While engaged with his brothers in the nursery business he gained a practical knowledge of the occupation that proved helpful to him in later years. In 1854 he took passage on the Northern Light to Greytown, thence crossed via the Nicaragua route and from there proceeded on the Sierra Nevada to San Francisco, where he landed on the 20th of November, 1854. For some weeks he prospected in Amador county, but he found that the life was one of great hardship and constant exposure, with little gold to be obtained by the inexperienced miner, so he went to Sacramento and investigated the possibilities of fruit culture, the result being that he wrote east for seeds and small trees. These arrived in February, 1855, and were immediately planted. In the fall of 1855 he imported a general assortment of deciduous trees, from which he sold nursery stock to all of the pioneer horticulturists in the Sacramento valley, and also sold some of the first fruit trees planted at Vacaville. It had been his original plan to build up a large nursery and then sell at a profit and return east, but during the years of 1855 and 1856 he studied the flora of the country and decided to engage in the bee business.

Returning east in the spring of 1857, Mr. Harbison made arrangements for the shipment of sixty-seven colonies of bees. November 5, 1857, he took passage on the Northern Light for Aspinwall, thence took the Golden Age, Capt. R. C. Whiting, for San Francisco, where he landed with sixty-two of the hives in excellent condition. The freight on the bees had cost him $1 per pound, but even at that high price the investment proved profitable. Establishing an apiary near Sacramento, he increased his original colonies during the same year to one hundred and seventy hives. Some time before nine hives of bees had been brought to California, but they were in inexperienced hands, so that it may be said that Mr. Harbison practically started the industry in the state. In the fall of 1858 he returned to the east and made another importation of over one hundred hives, and during these years he sold bees readily for $100 per hive and honey at $1.00 per pound. About the same year he established a large nursery for shade trees and introduced the yellow locust and Lombardy poplar, which, together with other ornamental trees, he sold in San Jose, Marysville, etc.

Through his representations of a favorable outlook for the industry Mr. Harbison induced R. G. Clark to come west and embark in the business. November 28, 1869, they brought to San Diego one hundred and ten hives and established an apiary near Lakeside. During the four years of their partnership they established four apiaries and when dividing their interests each retained two. In April, 1874, Mr. Harbison moved to San Diego county, and the following year he erected the residence which he still occupies. At different times he transferred many of his hives to this county, and at one time owned twelve apiaries with thirty-seven hundred and fifty hives of bees. Among his purchases of land was the tract of seven hundred and twenty-six acres known as the Sweetwater apiary, in the Dehesa district of San Diego county, which he has developed into one of the finest country places in Southern California. The idea of bee culture was ridiculed by many when he came here, but he proved the wisdom of his judgment by the financial success of his plans. In those days the country was dominated by the stockmen, whose policy it was to discourage people from settling up the ranges. However, as bees did not eat grass, they saw nothing to fear from apiarists, for it did not occur to them that a class of men would be brought in whose vote would overbalance their own. So it proved, and a new district attorney, judge and sheriff were finally elected, and a no-fence law was passed by the legislature. Thus the introduction of bees caused San Diego county to be settled up many years sooner than would otherwise have happened.

The first car of honey shipped by Mr. Harbison to the east was in 1869. Its successful passage caused him to repeat shipments to the Chicago and New York markets. In 1873 he shipped his first carload from San Diego county to Chicago, accompanying the shipment personally. Years afterward agencies were established in different cities and a systematic business was maintained. In one year he shipped twenty-three cars of comb-honey east, besides two cars to San Francisco and Sacramento, but this was not all of his own raising. At expositions he was a frequent exhibitor. In 1876 he was awarded a medal at the Philadelphia Centennial, and at New Orleans and St. Louis he also received the highest awards for the quality of honey exhibited. While he expended thousands of dollars in that way, he was personally benefited by the exhibitions and at the same time San Diego county was widely advertised. Through his energetic management of the business he became the largest apiarist in the world, and his name was well known to all interested in the industry. In 1861 he published the Beekeepers' Directory of the Theory and Practice of Bee Culture, of which he is the author. In 1857 he made an improvement to the hive and invented and patented the first section box for honey, which was first exhibited in 1878 at the California State Fair at Marysville.

In addition to his extensive bee interests Mr. Harbison set out large fruit orchards in Upper Mission valley and engaged in raising oranges and olives, but these lands he later sold. For many years he was a stockholder in the Harbison Wholesale Grocery Company, Incorporated, and in early days he officiated as a director in the Bank of Commerce, of which he is yet a stockholder. Strictly temperate in his habits, upright in all business transactions, energetic in dispositon and sincere in his friendships, he is a man who would be a valuable acquisition to the citizenship of any town. Since the organization of the party he has voted the Republican ticket, but he has never been a politician. Fraternally he is connected with the blue lodge, chapter, commandery and consistory of the Masonic order in San Diego, while in religious connections he is an attendant upon the services of the Presbyterian Church and a contributor to its maintenance. At Newcastle, Pa., June 15, 1865, he married Miss Mary J. White, who was born and reared there and was educated in the high school. Her paternal grandfather, Judge David White, was the son of an English lord, and her maternal grandfather, Robert Reynolds, was an early settler in Pennsylvania, whither he removed from Maryland. Her parents, Samuel H. and Mary (Reynolds) White, were born in Newcastle, where they lived after marriage. Three children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Harbison and two of these attained maturity, but Florence, after having graduated from the high school, died at twenty years, mourned by a large circle of friends. The only surviving child of the family is Edith, who married Edward Henkle and resides in San Diego.

GEORGE B. ROWELL, M. D. Not long after the Pilgrim Fathers had crossed the unknown ocean to the bleak shores of New England and had planted the ensign of freedom on the Atlantic coast, the Rowell family became identified with the little colony of self-sacrificing emigrants who endured the hardships of a dreary and stern environment. It was during the year 1632 that the first representatives of the name in the new world left their old home in England, where they long had been prominent in the city of Exeter, and established their race amid the rugged surroundings of Massachusetts. With the material development of the locality they were intimately associated, and many generations lived and labored in New England. In the family of Joshua and Sybil (Spaulding) Rowell, natives of New Hampshire, there was a son, Spaulding, born in that state in November, 1831, and reared in the locality familiar to his earliest recollections. While still quite young he gained a wide experience in the lumber industry, and in order to enlarge his interests in that business he removed to Canada, where he became the owner of a number of sawmills and engaged extensively in the manufacture of lumber. While still largely interested in business pursuits his death occurred in 1877, his wife having passed from earth two weeks prior to his death.

Among the children of Spaulding and Martha (Ball) Rowell there was a son, George B., who was born in the vicinity of Montreal, Canada, July 19, 1859, and received his early education in local schools. From an early age he determined to become a physician and his studies were directed with that ambition in view. On completing classical studies he took up the study of medicine, matriculating in McGill University, one of the leading medical schools in Canada, from which he was graduated in 1884. Immediately after graduating he crossed the ocean to England and engaged in post-graduate work in London for one year, meanwhile gaining much important practical knowledge of the science to which he had dedicated his life. The degree of Member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England was conferred upon him on the completion of his special studies.

Returning to Canada at the expiration of his European studies and travel, Dr. Rowell entered upon active professional practice, and soon afterward received an appointment as professor of anatomy in Bishop's Medical College, which position he filled for two years, or until his departure from Canada. In search of a climate less rigorous than that of his native land he came to California in December, 1887, and opened an office in San Bernardino, where he has since built up an important general practice and has gained a reputation for skill in diagnosis and in the treatment of difficult cases. The establishment and management of efficient institutions for the instruction of medical students have always been matters of interest to him, and he took an active part in the founding and incorporation of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Los Angeles, of which institution he has since been a member of the board of trustees and professor of the practice of medicine. The duties connected with his work as a member of the faculty oblige him to make frequent trips to Los Angeles and a goodly portion of his time is spent in that city, yet he still retains a large practice in San Bernardino, and in both cities has a circle of warm friends to whom he is known and by whom he is admired as a skilled physician and a polished gentleman.

ERNEST EASTWOOD. There are few citizens within the limits of Ventura county who have been more deeply interested in its agricultural development or more closely informed as to its material resources than is Ernest Eastwood, who, though not a native of the United States, is a loyal American citizen and has spent the greater part of his life in the state of California. His first experience with agriculture was not encouraging, for during his initial season (the year 1893, there occurred a drought) with devastating effects, but he did not allow himself to become discouraged by the losses resulting therefrom; instead, he put added determination into the work and had the gratification of winning success from his venture on a ranch. Now he ranks among the most prosperous farmers in his vicinity and owns and manages large tracts of valuable land.

The ancestry of the Eastwood family is traced back to a member of the famous West India Company. The third generation in descent from that illustrious ancestor was represented by George John Eastwood, a native of London, England, and a manufacturer in that city. There he married Felicita Whitling, who was born and reared in London. They became the parents of twelve children, of whom five sons came to the United States. Their third child, Ernest, was born in London, July 2, 1865, and was four years of age when the parents came to America, settling in Colorado. Coming to California in 1875, he and his wife now reside at Elrio, Ventura county.

While still a mere boy Ernest Eastwood began to aid his father in ranching pursuits and he also worked at the builder's trade. On leaving home he began to work at the carpenter's trade and continued at the occupation for several years, but in 1893 he abandoned the building business to enter upon agricultural pursuits. For a time he engaged in raising beans and barley on the Colonia. Later he bought a ranch of nearly nine hundred acres in the Conejo district, where he has since engaged in raising grain, cattle and hogs.

The marriage of Ernest Eastwood and Miss Mary McGlinchey was solemnized August 25, 1891. Mrs. Eastwood was born in county Donegal, Ireland, and in 1884 came to America with her parents. In religion both Mr. and Mrs. Eastwood are earnest members of the Santa Clara Catholic Church. Measures for the benefit of his neighborhood receive his stanch support and he has been especially interested in educational work, which he has promoted in his district by serving as school trustee. Throughout the entire community he is known and honored as an influential man, progressive citizen and a capable and energetic agriculturist.

J. HENRY MILLIGAN. As a self-made man who has achieved considerable prominence in San Bernardino county, J. H. Milligan, the general superintendent of the San Bernardino County Hospital, is recognized as one of the ablest citizens of this section of the state. His grandfather, James Milligan, was born in Ireland and immigrated to America with his father, they becoming pioneers respectively of Illinois and Des Moines, Iowa. Harvey Newton, the son of James and the father of J. H. Milligan, was said to be the first white male child born in the present limits of the city of Des Moines. Harvey Newton Milligan was in Texas when the Civil war broke out and was forced to join the Confederate army, but his health failing just before activities commenced in that section he was released and picked up as a straggler by an Iowa regiment stationed there at the time and returned to his native state. His brother, William Henry, belonged to the Seventh Regiment of Iowa Infantry and after the war the two brothers went to Memphis and established a newspaper. Removing from there to Nashville they engaged in a similar enterprise and after disposing of their interests at that point went to Jackson, Tenn., and engaged in the lumber business for a time.

While located here Mr. Milligan married Miss Addie C. Hutchinson, who was born in Jackson, her father being a large planter at that place. After his marriage Mr. Milligan traveled considerably, made trips to northern California and Montana, engaged in mining for a period, and then located in Dallas, Tex., where he conducted the largest job printing office in that city at the time. In 1890 he came to San Bernardino county, purchased a ranch of one hundred and five acres, improved it and engaged in horticultural pursuits for five years, then made his home in the city of San Bernardino for one year, after which he engaged in farming at Highland and remained there until his death in 1901. He was prominent in Masonic circles, having attained the Royal Arch degree. Mrs. Milligan is living and resides in San Bernardino.

The birth of J. H. Milligan occurred March 22, 1876, at Jackson, Tenn., he being the youngest of three children. His childhood was spent in different places until his fourteenth year, when he came with his parents to San Bernardino. While his father owned the printing office in Dallas, Tex., he worked there and learned typesetting, and after coming to San Bernardino assisted him to improve the ranch which was purchased. In 1897, knowing that he had his own way to make in the world, and recognizing the need of an education, he resolved to attend high school. At that time his parents resided at Highland and as there was no electric car connection with San Bernardino, he began casting about for a way to get back and forth from home. Accordingly he decided to purchase a bus and contracted to convey the high-school students from Highland to San Bernardino and attend school at the same time. In this way he made his way through, attaining great popularity among his classmates and achieving an enviable record in his studies. He displayed especial talent as a speaker and was called the boy orator of the school. He was selected as first president of his class and was active in all of the high school organizations. After three years of this work his health became impaired and he was obliged to give up further study.

Deciding to try a change of location Mr. Milligan went to San Francisco, secured passage on the steamer San Pedro for Nome, Alaska, and engaged in prospecting for a time, later being employed by the Nome Nugget Dredging Company. In the fall of 1900, his health having been fully restored, he returned to his home at Highland, and as the death of his father occurred shortly afterward he remained on the farm for a time to care for his mother. Later he went to Arizona and secured employment in the mines as hoisting engineer at the headquarters of the Rio Del Monte mine. May 28, 1903, he came to San Bernardino on a vacation and June 15, 1903, was appointed by the board of supervisors to the position of general superintendent of the County Hospital and Farm, which position he still occupies. The farm comprises twenty acres of ground located in the city limits and has been improved from its original condition as an area of sand dunes to a veritable garden with the help of the electric pumping plant which has been installed. The ground is devoted to the raising of hay for fifteen head of dairy stock, and vegetables and fruits. The place is improved with all necessary outbuildings and one large main building, which now has a capacity of over one hundred and fifty inmates, the usual number, however, ranging from seventy-five to one hundred and twenty.

The marriage of Mr. Milligan to Miss Mary E. Rennahan, who is a native of Las Vegas, N. Mex., occurred February 8, 1906. They own a residence in San Bernardino. Fraternally Mr. Milligan affiliates with several lodges, being a member of the Knights of Pythias; Court No. 447, I. O. F., and is past grand deputy of the High Chief Rangers of California; also a member of Knights and Ladies of Security. His influence is always exerted on the side of good government in public matters and at one time he was sent by the Highland district to represent them as an independent delegate to the county convention. The agitation in this convention resulted in the nomination of a group of independent candidates chosen from the different parties, who were eventually elected by the people, the politics of the county being changed and at the same time a revolution being accomplished whereby the liquor element was eliminated. Mr. Milligan's interests are in the upbuilding of the community in which he lives, he lends his influence toward the furthering of all elevating and progressive enterprises, and he is accounted one of the most valuable citizens of San Bernardino county.

STEPHEN A. MARLETTE. Long identification with the interests of a certain locality brings to a man a feeling of oneness with that section of country, and thus we find that Mr. Marlette, after a continuous residence of more than thirty years in San Diego county, feels himself to be intimately associated with his home district, which has been the scene of his activities during almost the entire period of his residence in California. Descended from eastern ancestry, he is a son of Joseph H. and Catherine (Brady) Marlette, natives respectively of New York and Vermont. His father engaged in railroading throughout much of his active life, and while filling the position of brakeman he ran on the first train over the newly-built road that forms a part of the present Rock Island system. On resigning as roadmaster in the east he came to California in 1875, and since then has made his home in San Diego county. Though quite advanced in years, he still retains his physical activity and is engaged in carrying the mails from all the trains running into the city of San Diego. His wife died in 1896, at the age of sixty-six years.

Among the six children comprising the family of Joseph H. Marlette was Stephen A., who was born in Peoria, Ill., November 9, 1860, and received his education in the schools of Laporte, Ind., the family having removed thither in his boyhood. After his arrival in California he for a time worked for wages on ranches, and meanwhile saved his earnings until finally he was in a position to buy property. At this writing he owns a ranch near Julian consisting of two hundred and fifty-five acres, on which he raises hay, corn and grain, also fruit of the principal varieties. In his work he has shown himself to be energetic, determined and industrious, and his standing among neighbors is excellent. By dint of wise management he has made substantial improvements on his land and has converted it into one of the valuable homesteads of the district.

The marriage of Mr. Marlette united him with Miss Nellie McKurnan, who was born in Rhode Island. Her parents for a time were neighbors of the Marlette family in Illinois, but they moved east to Rhode Island and the others to Indiana, so that they became separated for a time. Later the children became acquainted, and in 1883 Mr.

Marlette married the young lady, who like himself was reared in the Roman Catholic faith and always has been a sincere member of that church. Their children are named as follows: Patrick H., Rose, Robert, Leo, Mabel (who died in infancy), Nellie, Francis and Blanche. Fraternally Mr. Marlette holds membership with the Order of Foresters, while in politics he votes the Democratic ticket in national elections and locally supports the men he deems best fitted to represent the people, irrespective of their party platforms and personal opinions concerning the tariff and other national problems.

WILLIAM J. PHILLIPS. The records of the Phillips disclose the fact that they descend from English ancestry and have been represented in America ever since the year 1703, their original location being in New England, where successive generations held positions of honor and trust and wielded extensive influence among their fellowmen. From the Atlantic coast they drifted across the Hudson river into the then frontier of New York, and from there, Jo H., a native of the Empire state, removed to the wilderness of Michigan in 1836. Taking up a tract of land he devoted himself to transforming the raw prairie soil into fertile fields. Eventually he acquired two hundred acres comprising as fine a farm as could be found within the limits of Macomb county. The substantial residence and large farm buildings were erected under his supervision, and all of the other improvements represented his energy and laborious application. The farm was stocked with cattle and horses of the best breeds and stock-raising was one of his specialties. Besides being active in all questions pertaining to agriculture, he took a leading part in local politics, was stanchly devoted to the Republican party, and contributed not a little to its local success. For his integrity and sterling qualities he was esteemed by a large circle of acquaintances throughout his section of the state. His death in 1878 occurred twelve years after the demise of his wife, who was Clarinda Briggs, a native of New York and a descendant of an English family identified with the colonial history of our Atlantic coast country.

At the home place near Armada, Mich., William J. Phillips was born March 29, 1859, being a son of Jo H. and Clarinda Phillips. His early life differed little from the lives of other farmer boys of his day and locality. During winters he attended the district school and in the summer he tilled the soil of the home farm. After completing the studies of the country schools he was sent to Romeo Academy, where he took a thorough course of study. Upon leaving school he secured employment with an agricultural implement firm. As their special agent for threshing machines and traction engines he exhibited engines at county and state fairs in Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa and Missouri, continuing in this business for a period of twenty years. The year 1895 found him a resident of San Bernardino, where now he makes his home. Though not one of the early settlers of the county, he is well known throughout this section and has many warm friends among people of all classes. Soon after his arrival here he entered the Santa Fe railway shops, where he had charge of the tool department. During the seven years of his identification with that work he rendered efficient service and proved himself to be eminently trustworthy.

While not displaying any offensive partisanship in his preferences, Mr. Phillips has always been known as a decided Republican in his political opinions, and he has been active in local councils of the party. Though firm in his own convictions, he is nevertheless liberal and esteems men none the less though their ideas may be the opposite of his own. From his party in 1903 he received the nomination for city treasurer and later was duly elected to the office for a term of four years. At this writing he devotes his attention to the work of the office, in which he is making a record for efficiency and trustworthiness. His home at No. 969 Fifth street is presided over by his wife, who was Estella Day, of Oxford, Mich., daughter of R. A. Day, an honored citizen of that place. They are the parents of one child, Fileda May. In fraternal connections Mr. Phillips still retains membership with Anchor Lodge No. 278, I. O. O. F., at Oxford, Mich., and with Oxford Lodge No. 108, K. of P., also of that town.

WILLIAM KINKEAD. Occupying a firm position among the honored citizens and the substantial and well-to-do farmers of San Diego county is William Kinkead, of Moosa. Settling here nearly four decades ago, he has from the uncultivated soil built up a valuable homestead which will remain as a monument to his industry and enterprise for generations to come. He has been wise in his investments, making the best of his opportunities, and while laboring for his own welfare has in nowise been unmindful of the interests of his community. Coming here at an early period of the settlement of the place, he knows all about the hardships and privations of life in a new territory, his varied experiences forming a rich storehouse, wherein he has gathered much from his observations of human life and of the ways of the world. A son of David Kinkead, he was born, October 27, 1834, in Guernsey county, Ohio, where he was brought up and educated.

David Kinkead was a native of Ohio, and until 1855 he made that state his home. Textbooks and school training were practically unknown to him, for he attended school only two days in his whole life. During his boyhood he learned the shoemaker's trade, and at the same time studied law. At the age of twenty-one he formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Lydia Haines, of Hendrysburg, Ohio. Five miles east of Cambridge, on the Steubenville road, he bought land, and also laid out the town of Centerville, where he opened a hotel and a store. Besides managing these enterprises he continued his farming and stock-raising interests, and for a number of years practiced his profession and also served as justice of the peace. Leaving Ohio in 1855 he moved with his family to Knoxville, Marion county, Iowa, where he purchased a residence, one hundred and sixty acres in close proximity to that city, and also fourteen hundred acres in Galloway county. He was admitted to the bar of Iowa. He died in 1866, and according to the terms of his will his fourteen hundred acre farm was equally divided among his children. He was a man of marked ability, an active member of the Democratic party, and was quite prominent in Masonic circles. His wife survived him many years, passing away in Knoxville. The parental family comprised seven children, as follows: Eliza Jane, Calvin, Sarah Anne, Maria, William, Alexander and Lemuel.

Leaving home in 1854, William Kinkead came to California, and the following fourteen years was engaged in mining pursuits, locating first at Spanish bar, on the middle fork of the American river. Subsequently, in company with his brother, he located claims at Folsom, posting notices on the best lots in the place on Christmas day, 1856, and immediately afterwards erected the first dwelling in the town, a house which he had no difficulty in renting for $75 a month. In 1858 he went to the great Fraser river mines in British Columbia; not meeting with sufficient success in the mines of the north, in 1860 he went to Nevada and carried on mining at Virginia City and Gold Hill until 1863. He also participated in the Reese River excitement. Near Newpass, Nev., he located hay lands, having found water in the vicinity, and also established a station known as Gopher Hole. In May, 1865, he joined a party of thirty-two who went through the Death Valley country to Arizona. Returning to California in May of 1866 Mr. Kinkead stopped in San Bernardino until May of the following year, and in the same month of 1868 came to San Diego and took up government land a short distance from where he now resides. After making a few improvements he sold the land and homesteaded one hundred and sixty acres now included in the home ranch, taking it up from the government, besides which he bought one hundred and sixty acres of state land. Improving his property, Mr. Kinkead became extensively engaged in stock raising, for many years making this his principal business, but more recently he has devoted his time and energies to bee keeping, meeting with satisfactory results.

In 1882 Mr. Kinkead married Nancy Welty, who was born in Iowa, a daughter of Jonathan Welty, who came to California in 1851. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Kinkead six children have been born, namely: Alice, Katie, Myrtle, Ellen, Josie and Ruskin. In politics Mr. Kinkead has not been very active, but he is a firm believer in the principles of the Socialist party, which he uniformly supports by voice and vote.

PHILIP H. REED. One of the most thoroughly competent architects and mechanical engineers in this section of the state is Philip H. Reed, who has been located in Colton for the past five years. He received a comprehensive education in technical schools and has also educated himself by practical work in the different lines in which he is interested professionally. Besides architectural and mechanical drafting he carries on a planing mill and pattern works, and designs both interior and exterior house furnishings. He is a native Englishman and was born in London, June 13, 1864, the son of Henry S. and Eliza (Brown) Reed, who came to live in London, Canada, in 1869 and stayed there until they died, the father at the age of sixty-eight years, and the mother at fifty-four. By trade the father was a manufacturing confectioner, and fraternally he belonged to the I. W. O. F. of London, Canada. Both parents were members of the Baptist Church. There were eight children in their family, of whom one daughter and Philip H. live in California; Arthur is engaged in the leather business at Richmond Hill, N. Y.; Henry is a farmer in New York; and Fred is an official of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.

When brought by his parents to Canada Philip H. Reed was about five years old, and it was there that he spent his boyhood days and received his education. He attended the public and high schools, and the school of technology, in the latter taking a complete mechanical course. Going to Chicago he took up architectural studies at the Athenaeum and then returned to Canada and followed the trade at the bench in order to gain practical knowledge of the work. When twenty-four years of age he again went to Chicago, this time becoming superintendent of the Chicago Gas Stove Company, and during the three years thus occupied still continued his architectural studies. From there he went to Denver and engaged in architectural practice with offices in the McPhee Building, where he made plans and superintended buildings until 1894. He then turned his attention to the mechanical departments of work and began pattern making, continuing at this in Denver and Pueblo, Colo., until 1901. He then went to San Francisco and was employed in the Risdon Iron works as patternmaker for three months, after which he located in Colton, which has been his home ever since. He has been very successful in all of his work here and has had a hand in the planning, erection and furnishing of many of the business blocks, apartment houses and private residences in this city. He received and carried out the contract for the building of the Home Telephone building and the Gilbert flats, and has been engaged as architect by the Colton school board to draw plans for any buildings they may erect for educational purposes.

In 1887 occurred the marriage which united Mr. Reed to Miss Gertrude M. Mabie, who was born near Rockford, Ill., and this union has been blessed by the birth of three children, one daughter, Mabel, and two sons, Howard and Philip. The parents are active members of the Baptist Church and Mr. Reed is politically an adherent of the Republican party. As a leading citizen of Colton he takes a prominent part in the furthering of all plans for the upbuilding and development of his home town, and exerts an elevating influence upon the social life of the community.

OLIVER ATWELL ALLEN. The thriving blacksmith shop and carriage manufactory conducted by Mr. Allen in San Bernardino is without question the largest enterprise of the kind in Southern California outside of Los Angeles. It is plainly evident from this statement that Mr. Allen must be a thorough workman in all departments of the business in order to successfully manage so large an undertaking. This is true and justly so, for throughout his life he has been employed along this line, besides which he inherits a predilection for the business from his father, who followed the blacksmith's trade during his entire life. The structure occupied by Mr. Allen is one which he purchased some years ago and remodeled to suit his special business. The building is 44x80 feet, located on a lot which extends back three hundred feet, thus furnishing ample room for storage of material. In the blacksmith department three fires are necessary. In the woodworking department the material is prepared for manufacturing the fine line of carriages and wagons which bear the name of Allen & Son, for he has the assistance and co-operation of his eldest son, Byron W.

Oliver A. Allen is a native of Ohio, born in Geauga county October 5, 1850, the youngest but one in a family of ten children born to his parents. Six of the number were daughters, but only one of them is now living. Both parents, Ira and Rebecca (Calkins) Allen, were natives of Vermont, where their marriage occurred, and some time later they removed to Ohio. In 1851 Mr. Allen removed to Michigan with his family, settling in Homer, where as in Vermont and Ohio he continued to work at the blacksmith's trade. After his death his shop was continued by his elder sons, and it was under the training of his brothers that Oliver A. became proficient at his trade. He continued with them until securing a position in Albion with the Woolcott Windmill Company, remaining with them for three years, or until coming to San Bernardino in 1884. After working at his trade here for three years a desire to see the old home and his relatives induced him to return to Michigan, where he fully intended to remain, having in the meantime secured the position of foreman with his old employers, the Woolcott Windmill Company. Six months later, however, he was seized with an equally strong desire to return to the west a longing which he satisfied immediately by returning to San Bernardino. As he was a first-class workman he had no difficulty in securing employment, and for about four years was in the employ of C. E. Lehman, at the end of that time, in 1891, buying out his employer and continuing the business at that location until the growth of his trade made larger quarters a necessity. It was at this juncture that he bought and remodeled his present structure on Third street, where he has built up one of the largest enterprises of the kind in this part of the state outside of Los Angeles.

In Homer, Mich., Mr. Allen was first married to Miss Rose Knapp, who was born in New York state and died in San Bernardino, leaving two children, Byron W., who is his father's partner in business, and Edna, the wife of Sidney H. Rockwood and a resident of Fresno. Byron W. Allen is also married, his wife prior to her marriage having been Faith Garner, and they are the proud parents of one son, Jack. Some time after the death of his first wife Oliver A. Allen was married in Michigan to Miss Sarah Hiller, she also being a native of that state. The family occupy a pleasant residence at No. 538 Eighth street, besides which Mr. Allen owns other valuable property in San Bernardino. While residing in Homer, Mich., he was made a Mason in the local lodge, and since coming to California has joined San Bernardino Lodge No. 348, F. & A. M. Politically he is a Republican, and is a member of the Board of Trade of San Bernardino. Mrs. Allen is a member of the Presbyterian Church, toward the support of which Mr. Allen contributes, as he does to all measures which have for their object the uplifting of humanity.

At the time of the Rebellion Mr. Allen was a boy of about eleven years, and although he was too young to participate he well remembers the enlistment of his older brother, King P. Allen, in whose daring and bravery he took a commendable pride. He enlisted as a member of the Second Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and after serving the term of his enlistment was honorably discharged. He is now a resident of Pullman, Wash. The patriotic spirit of the Allen family became evident in the next generation when, at the age of sixteen, Byron W. Allen enlisted in the National Guard of California. The opening of the Spanish-American war gave him an opportunity for active service and he went to the front as corporal of Company K, Seventh California Regiment, later was promoted to sergeant, and as such was honorably discharged from the service. Thereafter he continued his membership in the National Guard for a number of years, or until the expiration of his term, when he was discharged with honors, in November, 1905, having served as first lieutenant of his company for four years prior to this date.

CHARLES B. ADAMS. The life which this narrative chronicles began in Burlington, Vt., December 29, 1830, and closed at Long Beach, Cal., March 8, 1899. The Adams family became established in America during a very early period of colonial settlement and one of its branches settled in Vermont, where succeeding generations lived and labored as tillers of the soil and pioneer business men. Among those who bore the family name was John Adams, who married Amanda Barbour, also a member of a colonial family of Vermont. Some years after their marriage they migrated to New York state and there labored for a long period, but eventually removed to Illinois, where at Aurora Mr. Adams died. Later the widow joined members of the family in Minnesota, and in that state in the city of Minneapolis she passed away. Among their children was a son, Charles B., who was a small child at the time of the removal to New York state and received his primary education in the country schools common to that day. Following the westward tide of emigration he became an early settler of Aurora, Ill., and from there removed to Newburg, Mitchell county, Iowa, later going to Minnesota and settling at Austin, where he became interested in business enterprises.

From the beginning of the Civil war Mr. Adams was stanch sympathizer with the cause of the Union, and in August of 1862 he offered his services as a volunteer in the army, his assignment being with Company C, Ninth Minnesota Infantry, with which he went to the front to aid in quelling the rebellion. During a very long march he received injuries which disabled him and made it necessary for him to remain in a hospital for a time. On his recovery he was honorably discharged in March of 1863, and at once returned to Austin, where he resumed his association with civic affairs. For many years he made his home in Minnesota, but finally desiring to settle in a more genial climate, he came to California in 1889. For eight years he lived on a ranch near Anaheim, and upon disposing of that property came to Long Beach, where he purchased and improved real estate.

The marriage of Mr. Adams was solemnized August 22, 1857, and united him with Miss Mary, daughter of Michael Shaney, a native of Lowell, Mass. When she was quite small she was orphaned by the death of her mother and afterward remained with her father until she became the wife of Mr. Adams. Born of their union were five children, namely: Hattie A.; Loraine, who married Edward Wolverton and resides in Kansas; Edna I., Mrs. William Cooper, of Long Beach; Sherman R., a resident of Long Beach; and Clarence C., whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. Mrs. Mary S. Adams died at Long Beach, November 11, 1906, and is buried beside her husband in Signal Hill Cemetery near Long Beach.

MARTIN STUCKER FREER. No name is better known or held in higher esteem than that of Freer, established in Los Angeles county by a pioneer whose name will ever be honored in the citizenship which has given to California her supremacy among sister states. Martin Stucker Freer is a native Californian, and was born in Berryessa, Santa Clara county, October 1, 1854, his father being William H. Freer, the pioneer, whose history is given at length elsewhere in this volume. Reared on the home farm for the first twenty-one years of his life, Martin S. was educated in the public schools of his native county. He came to El Monte, Los Angeles county, in October, 1875, driving stock to the farm which his father had bought in 1869 and left in charge of his brother Thomas till that time. He remained at home with his father until he was twenty-eight years old, when he became dependent upon his own resources, in partnership with a Mr. Dobbins renting a part of the Baldwin ranch for one year, then the Rowland ranch of Puente for three years, when Mr. Freer went to Tehachapi, Kern county. He engaged in the raising of grain, horses and mules on a ranch of four hundred and eighty acres of land which he purchased in Tehachapi, was very successful in his work, and added improvements which made it one of the fine and valuable ranches of this section. He finally purchased a ranch of three hundred and twenty acres fourteen miles from the home place which he rented, and continued these interests for six years, when he sold his farming implements, all machinery, stock, etc., and went to Oakland, Cal., and made that place his home for about eight years. At the expiration of that time he returned to his ranch and began raising alfalfa and hogs and continued thus occupied until 1905, when he rented his property (the following year selling the home place and continuing to rent the other for the raising of grain) and returning to Los Angeles county located on his farm of thirty-five acres a mile and a half from El Monte, where he is now installing a pumping plant and expects to set the entire ranch in walnuts.

In Oakland, December 19, 1892, Mr. Freer was united in marriage with Mrs. Elvira Louisa (Moody) Wilkinson, a native of Moore county, N. C., and a daughter of W. H. Moody. He was also a native of North Carolina and served in a regiment of that state in the Civil war as major. He removed to Tennessee and thence to Arkansas, and about 1869 brought his family overland to California. He settled at El Monte and engaged as a builder, finally removing to Anaheim and following the dairy business until his death at the age of forty-five years. He was a prominent Mason and a Democrat politically. His wife was formerly Mary Mills of New York City, who married there at the age of eighteen years. After the death of Mr. Moody she married Rev. John Freeman, a Baptist minister who resides at Norwalk. By her first marriage she became the mother of four children, namely: Lucy J., wife of John H. Freer, of Arcadia; Anderson H., of Redondo; and Elvira Louisa. Mrs. Freer had three children by her first marriage, Lester, Geneva and Lewis. In his political affiliations Mr. Freer is a stanch advocate of Democratic principles and seeks to advance these interests.

HENRY JACOB PRATT. The experiences of Henry Jacob Pratt throughout a varied career in the western states have served to make of him one of the most entertaining of companions, whose recollections take him back to the beginning of civilization on the Pacific coast. Descended from an old New England family, he was born in Taunton, Mass., July 23, 1847, next to the youngest in a family of eight children, of whom but three are now surviving. Two brothers, Charles Allen and Dean Jones, were killed in the battle of Pea Ridge in the Civil war, the former a member and corporal in the Third Regiment Illinois Cavalry, and the latter of the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment Illinois Infantry; two brothers survived the perils of warfare, William L., first of the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Infantry and later of the Third Cavalry, now a resident of Idaho, and Morton A., of the Third Regiment Illinois Cavalry, raised to the rank of captain and later brevet-major, a resident of Wichita, Kans. The last named is known as the "father of Populism" and was a popular candidate for the vice-presidency on the Populist ticket when Weaver ran for president in 1896. Their father, Capt. D. L. Pratt, was engaged in the merchant marine service for many years, after which he located in Livingston county, Ill., and was there employed as a farmer until his death. Their mother was Elizabeth Douglas in maidenhood, a native of Massachusetts; her death occurred in Livingston county, Ill.

Henry Jacob Pratt was reared in Illinois, where his father located in 1852, receiving a practical training on the paternal farm while he attended the public school in pursuit of an education, later completing the course in the Joliet high school. Upon attaining his majority he set out for the west, going first to the Black Hills by mule teams, and after one year spent in that location, continuing the journey to Virginia City, Nev. He was first employed on a ranch, where he remained for some time, in 1871 coming to Humboldt county, Cal., and with one hundred head of cattle engaging in stock-raising. At the same time he superintended a large ranch in the vicinity, known as the Clover Valley ranch, in which he later purchased an interest. They continued to add to the acreage of their ranch until they owned one of the large ranches of that section. In 1884 they sold out and Mr. Pratt organized a company known as the Jordan Valley Livestock & Land Association, of which he became secretary and manager, the company purchasing thirty thousand acres in Humboldt county on the Little Humboldt river, and there engaged in an extensive raising of stock, their brand being the bullshead. In 1898 Mr. Pratt sold out his interest in this association and made the trip to Alaska, making his way by boat to Skagway, over the White Pass, down the Yukon to Dawson City, where he engaged in mining and prospecting. He remained in that city for three years, engaging in mining and prospecting, and in a general merchandise business. In 1901 he went to Nome and mined for two years, and in 1903 he returned to Nevada, where he was one of the organizers of the Washo Power & Development Company, after which he engaged as superintendent in the construction of the electric power plant in Reno. He has continued his association with this company, although he came to Redlands in 1905, and here purchased the Frink ranch and organized the firm known as Cheney & Pratt, this property consisting of five hundred and twenty acres in the San Timoteo cañon, about eight miles from Redlands. In December of that year he located on the ranch and became the general manager of the concern, instituting a dairy of seventy cows, and operating a creamery, using a gasoline engine, patent churn and separator, and now supply the Star Grocery of Redlands, the products being considered the best the country affords. Mr. Pratt has been very successful in his work and is considered one of the most enterprising and progressive men of this section, esteemed both for his business ability and personal qualities of character.

In Sacramento, Cal., Mr. Pratt was united in marriage with Mrs. Minnie (Long) Jones, a native of Wisconsin, who crossed the plains by ox-teams in an early day. They are the parents of three children: Morton E., a miner in Mexico; Mabel A., wife of John Lindsay, of Tonopah; and Frank H., a miner of Goldfield, Nev. Mr. Pratt was made a Mason in Winnemucca, Nev., and now belongs to the lodge of Reno, Nev.; and was raised to the degree of Royal Arch in Winnemucca. Politically he is a Republican.

CHRISTIAN MICHELSEN, a prominent citizen of Hollywood, was born in Denmark, Mark 30, 1844, a sturdy Danish ancestry giving to him qualities of character which have formed the foundation for his success in mature years. His parents, John and Stine (Hjordrup) Michelsen, were both natives of the Jutland Peninsula, where the name has been prominent for generations in public affairs. Mr. Michelson received an excellent education in his native land, after which he learned the cabinet maker's trade and also took up the work of printer, engaging in this dual occupation until attaining the age of twenty-two years. Attracted by the multifold opportunities held out by the western world, he decided to emigrate, and accordingly in the year 1866 he came to America. His principal employment during the four years which he spent here was as a printer, his training on Danish papers having given him a valuable experience. Returning to Denmark at the close of the four years he was drafted into the Danish army and after serving six months was let out on parole. In the meantime he had written a book on "Life in Western America" and published it in Denmark, and this proved to be the initial step of many years of successful writing in both his own and the English language.

Again locating in America after an eighteen months' stay in his native land, Mr. Michelsen settled in the middle west, following his trade in Missouri and Nebraska for the period of five years and establishing a varied acquaintance with the conditions of the country in which he was making his home. He then returned to Denmark, and being on parole, served the full time of his required enlistment in the Danish army. Upon his honorable discharge from the service he returned to America, and in 1878 located in Fremont, Neb., and following this was engaged for many years in writing for various Danish newspapers throughout the United States. At the present time (1906) he has seven quarto volumes filled with clippings of his own writings and published in different papers throughout the country. Since 1886 he has given lectures throughout the country, having made his first tour of the United States in that year, and every two years since he has toured this country and the Orient. He is now contemplating a tour to Russia which is to occupy a period of ten months, taking in Holland, Belgium, France and Austria, thence to Denmark, where he intends to deliver a course of lectures on his observations in the latter countries. He has traveled on every continent, having made an extended tour of Egypt and the Holy Land, his strong powers of observation and assimilation enabling him to quickly become familiar with conditions, manners and customs of the different places he has visited, and giving him a fund of varied information, which makes of him an entertaining and instructive speaker.

Mr. Michelsen located in California in October, 1881, becoming a resident of the city of Los Angeles, where he followed his two avocations in conjunction with his writings. He purchased property in the beautiful little city of Hollywood, where in 1906 he erected a handsome home on Plummer street, which is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Eveline Rasmussen, whom he married before his first trip to America. They are the parents of the following children: Olga, who lives near San Francisco; Manu H., engaged as a blacksmith in Los Angeles; Thor, a musician and vaudeville star touring the United States at the present writing; Philaletha, who was born in Denmark and reared in California, receiving her education in the schools of Los Angeles, after which she entered the law department of the University of Southern California and was graduated June 16, 1905, and admitted to the bar July 15, 1906. Her federal examination was taken September 3, 1906, and in the near future she expects to locate in Los Angeles and engage in the practice of her profession;

Hamilton, foreman for the Lacy Manufacturing Company in the erection of oil tanks; Rufus, also a tank builder; Twain, at home; and Eveline, a student in the grammar schools of Hollywood.

The broad training which has been the largest educational feature in the life of Mr. Michelsen has given him a mental scope of unusual breadth and understanding. All of the issues of life—business, social, political or religious—are viewed by him in a broad-minded, liberal spirit, are weighed according to his wide, mental grasp made possibly by his ready assimilation and thorough understanding of human nature, and it is in this spirit that he brushes shoulder to shoulder with men and measures that make up the warp and woof of every-day living. Independent by nature and made more so by his training, Mr. Michelsen is eminently capable of deciding important questions under his own rigid questioning and never decides hastily or without due consideration. His judgment can be depended upon and his decision be regarded because of its fairness to all concerned. Mr. Michelsen is a Theosophist in his religious views and lives up to the principles of that doctrine in the thorough way in which he endorses all principles which are a part of his views. Thoroughly whole-souled and genuinely interested in the advancement of those about him, interesting and entertaining in his mental development, Mr. Michelsen has won a host of friends in his journeys about the world, being appreciated both for his moral and mental stature. He is a citizen of prominence and one upon whom public honor may safely rest.

ELIAS THOWSON. One of the leading citizens of Norwalk and noted for his zeal in any movement pertaining to the upbuilding and development of the place is Elias Thowson, who has conducted a meat market here for the past ten years. He is a native of Norway, his birth having occurred there February 27, 1868; his father, Thor, and mother, Elizabeth (Hansen) Thowson, were both natives of the same country, and emigrated to America in 1887 and in California established their home. They are now living near Anaheim, Orange county, where the father is engaged in the management of a ranch which he owns. They are the parents of nine children all of whom are now living in this state.

Elias Thowson was sixteen years old when he decided to come to the United States and try his fortunes among the broader opportunities of the western world. He located in Oregon first and there engaged in ranching for the period of a year, when he went to North Dakota and worked on a farm belonging to his uncle. Two years later, in the year 1887, he came to California, and from Los Angeles went to Anaheim, where he eventually purchased a ranch of forty acres and proceeded to its cultivation and improvement. He was located about four years in that section when he sold out and went to Washington and took up land, but not caring for the climatic condition or prospects there, he returned to California and in Buena Park followed ranching for two years. He then established a butcher business in that place and conducted it successfully for one year, when he came to Norwalk and became the proprietor of his present fine business. This he has built up from a small beginning, enlarging his capacity until he now runs two wagons through the country. He is a successful business man and has made a host of friends through his square and upright methods and manner of dealing with the public.

In 1889 Mr. Thowson was united in marriage with Miss Edith Mason, a native of Wisconsin, and they have one son, Irving. Fraternally he is identified with the Odd Fellows organization of Artesia, and is conductor of the lodge; the Independent Order of Foresters; Woodmen of the World; Modern Woodmen of America; and Daughters of Rebekah. In his political convictions Mr. Thowson reserves the right to cast his ballot for the candidate he considers best qualified to discharge official duty.

GEORGE S. PHILLIPS. As one of the rising young men of Pomona mention belongs to George S. Phillips, who aside from any reflected honor from his well-known father is respected for his own personal worth and ability. Since the death of Louis Phillips, which occurred in March, 1900, his son has been secretary of his estate, which has been incorporated and is known as the Louis Phillips Estate Company.

A native son of the state, George S. Phillips was born in Spadra, Los Angeles county, October 21, 1874, being the youngest child in the family of his parents. He received his education in the public schools. Since 1901 he has been a director in the First National Bank of Pomona and of the Mutual Building & Loan Association also of this place, and many other institutions in the town name him among their stockholders. The incorporation of his father's vast holdings made his services necessary in its management, and since then he has been secretary of the Louis Phillips Estate Company. Included among the holdings are a number of valuable business structures of Pomona, also similar property in Los Angeles, and among the latter may be mentioned the Hamburger and also the Newmark stores. For nine years Mr. Phillips was a member of Company D of the old Ninth National Guard, and later was second lieutenant of Company D of the Seventh Regiment, holding this office at the time of his resignation in 1898. Since locating in Pomona he has become a member of the Chapter and Commandery, and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles. He is also a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Politically he gives his support to the candidates of the Republican party.

In 1897 Mr. Phillips was married to Miss Irene Richmond Dudley, who is a native of Wisconsin, and was born in La Crosse. She came west during her girlhood years, and here received the greater part of her education, her school days closing with her graduation from the state normal school at Los Angeles. The home life of Mr. and Mrs. Phillips has been brightened by the birth of three interesting children, Adelaide Louise, Louis Dudley and George S., Jr. Mrs. Phillips shares in the esteem in which her husband is held, and in both religious and social life of Pomona she is an active worker. She holds membership in the Episcopal Church of this place, is a member of the Eastern Star, and also belongs to the Ebell and Shakespeare Clubs. The family home at No. 305 East Holt street is the center of hospitality, where their many friends delight to gather.

RICHARD WAINWRIGHT REEVES. The pioneer element was the strongest characteristic in the life of Richard Wainwright Reeves, one of the early settlers of Redlands and a citizen who gave no little toward the upbuilding and development of this section of Southern California. He was of southern lineage, his birth having occurred in North Carolina in February, 1810; his father, James Reeves was also born in that state, whence in 1812 he removed to Tennessee and in Rutherford engaged as a farmer for eighteen years. Locating in Pekin, Tazewell county, Ill., in 1830, he followed the life of a pioneer farmer until his death, which occurred when over ninety years old.

Richard W. Reeves learned the carpenter's trade in Springfield, Ill., and later engaged in raising thoroughbred horses, having a circuit throughout Illinois and Indiana for ten years. Removing to Missouri he located in Livingston county and there with his father-in-law, Mr. Ramsey, built the first house on the prairie, the wood brought direct from the Missouri forest and their own hands completing the work. He followed farming after his marriage about this time and also prosecuted his trade. In 1850 he followed the westward trend of civilization and crossed the plains to the gold fields of California, returning after two years to his wife, who had remained behind in Pekin, Ill. In the year of his return (1852), they located at Spring Hill, Mo., and made that place their home until 1864, when, with his wife and three children, Mr. Reeves outfitted with ox-teams and crossed the plains to Montana. They were four months en route, during which time they suffered much from the depredations of the Indians, but succeeded in arriving in safety in August. There Mr. Reeves took up a homestead ranch in Willow creek valley, their resources having been depleted by the inroads made upon them by the journey, etc., and they were thus compelled to begin at the bottom again. They built a little cabin and necessary outbuildings, and there Mr. Reeves sold hay at $60 per ton, and his wife butter at $1.50 per pound. They gradually brought their farm to a high state of cultivation and there remained for twelve years. Because of the health of Mrs. Reeves (who had been an invalid for eight years) they came to California in 1876, making the journey in wagons. The second day of the trip she began to improve and by the time they had reached Southern California she was in very much better health and gave promise of recovering her health entirely.

In San Bernardino county Mr. Reeves purchased twenty acres of land from J. B. Glover at $20 per acre, eight miles from the city of San Bernardino. Here they built a home and began farming; for many years it required their united efforts to again build up their fortunes, but perseverance and energy conquered, and in 1906 they sold a valuable twenty-acre grove of oranges which brought them large returns. Mr. Reeves helped get out the first ditches in the county and in many ways was a factor in the development of the section. His death occurred in 1882, at the age of seventy-two years. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as is his wife, both having united with it in 1841 and proved faithful to their vows in the long years that followed. Politically Mr. Reeves was a stanch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

Mrs. Reeves was in maidenhood Ruth Ann Ramsey, a native of Chautauqua county, N. Y., and a daughter of Samuel Ramsey, who was born in Ohio, where the paternal grandfather was a large farmer and orchardist in the vicinity of Columbus. Samuel Ramsey was married in Ohio to Mary Porter, a native of Pennsylvania, and they then located in New York, where the wife died in early life. He then married Rachel Porter and returning to Ohio located in Ashtabula county, and three years later to a new post of Ohio, where his daughter saw her first Indian. Locating in Fremont, Ill., three years later, they lived there for three years and then went to Livingston county, Mo., where he improved a farm. He eventually made a trip to Texas, but did not remain there, returning to Missouri and locating in Spring Hill, where he spent his last days. By his first marriage he had three children, Mrs. Reeves being the only one now surviving. She was born April 11, 1826, and up to the age of thirteen years attended the public schools in pursuit of an education. She was married October 5, 1840, and with her husband began the pioneer life which she has led all these years. After the death of her husband she sold the orange grove and located in Redlands, where she is now residing at No. 102 Washington street. She became the mother of eight children, of whom four are now living: Joseph J., the horticultural inspector of Redlands; William B., located in San Bernardino; J. Chapman, engaged in the hay and grain business in Redlands; and Edward, of Redlands.

JAMES B. MURPHY. The Murphy family is of Scotch-Irish descent, and was represented on the American continent long before the French and Indian war added another epoch of disquiet to the lives of the colonists. Through marriage a strain of French blood was added to the family in a remote generation. The great-grandfather Murphy participated in the French and Indian war. He was the son of Edwin and Jane (Tibbetts) Murphy and to them twin sons were born April 5, 1857, in Oskaloosa, Iowa. While they were still young the family removed to Fairfield, Jefferson county, that state, where the children were reared and trained, attending the public schools and Parsons College. When they were twenty years old the father died, and shortly afterward John B. Murphy, our subject's twin brother, was taken ill and removed to Colorado Springs for his health. In order to be near his brother and tend him in his illness James B. accompanied him in 1878 and from that time until 1884 was employed as a contractor in plaster and mason work. For the next six years he was engaged with Edwin Florence in the shoe business on Tejon street, Colorado Springs, their place of business being known as the City Boot and Shoe Store. In 1891 he removed to Los Angeles and started in the grocery business, in Pico Heights. In the meantime, in 1892, he was appointed postmaster at Pico Heights, serving under both Harrison and Cleveland. Subsequently he was appointed to fill the same office in Prospect Park under McKinley, but a number of years later he resigned on account of ill-health and at the same time sold his mercantile business in Prospect Park. Since regaining his health Mr. Murphy has resumed work at his old trade, contracting for cement, brick-work and plastering of all kinds in Prospect Park, Hollywood and Los Angeles.

While in Colorado Springs Mr. Murphy was united in marriage with Miss Alice Louise Parker, the ceremony being performed July 16, 1879. Mrs. Murphy was born in Saratoga county, N. Y., and is a daughter of George and Louise Malinda (Laughlin) Parker. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Murphy, of whom four are living, the eldest, Alice Marie, dying when three weeks old; Grace Jane is the wife of B. F. Sanford, and lives in Berkeley, Cal.; Florence Louise, the wife of Warren J. Lander, makes her home in Prospect Park; while the two youngest children, Ruth and Earl James, are still at home with the parents. The subject of education is one which has always been of keen interest to Mr. Murphy, and as a result he has been called upon to fill many positions in this line. Since 1898 he has been trustee of the Los Feliz school district and is also trustee of the Hollywood Union high school and is clerk of both boards.

In the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Mr. Murphy is a member, he has held the office of steward for a number of years, has been a teacher in its Sunday-school for twenty-five years, and for the past three years has been the instructor of the young ladies' normal class. He is identified with but one fraternal organization, the Knights of Honor.

LOUIS WILHELM. Many successive generations of the Wilhelm family were prominent in the business development of their native German village, Schleid. The history of the family shows that John Adam Wilhelm, who was born and reared in Sachse-Weimar, and served for several years as tax collector and treasurer of his district, owned a flour mill in town and a farm near by, the management of the two bringing to him an excellent degree of profit each year. At the outbreak of the Schleswig-Holstein war he went to the front and while in active service was wounded so seriously that eventually his death resulted therefrom. The estate then fell to his only child, Louis, who was born at Schleid, Sachse-Weimar, June 22, 1863, and was but two and one-half years of age at the time of his father's death. The money was utilized largely in the acquiring of a superior education in the best German institutions of learning. When six years of age he was sent to school, and until he was eighteen his studies were carried on without any interval except the regular vacation seasons. Before he was eighteen he received a teacher's certificate from a normal university. In November of 1881 he landed in New York City with several hundred dollars still left of the estate. For a time he worked at Pittsburg, Pa., at various occupations, his main object being the acquisition of a fair knowledge of the English language. Later for eighteen months he took a business course, and then studied music and ancient and modern languages at St. Vincent's College, Westmoreland county, Pa., where he proved to be an intelligent student of exceptional mental endowments.

The introduction of Mr. Wilhelm into American commercial methods took place at Little Rock, Ark., where for seven months he conducted a mercantile establishment. At the expiration of that time he formed a partnership with Rudolph Schwartz and built a flatboat, which he stocked with general merchandise and took down the Arkansas and Mississippi rivers to New Orleans. For four years he engaged in trading, meanwhile becoming the owner of nine different boats. On selling out at Vicksburg, Miss., in 1886 he came to California and settled at Los Angeles, where he bought a half interest in a grocery on the corner of Ninth and Main streets. After six months he purchased his partner's interest in the store, which he conducted for three and one-half years and then sold. The next enterprise in which he became interested was the purchase of a half interest in the I. X. L. livery at No. 824 South Main street, Los Angeles. Six months later he purchased the other half interest from his partner, Albert Cross, and for six years conducted a large business. During the second year he was given the contract to carry the Los Angeles mails from the depot to the postoffice, and this contract he filled for four years, during the administration of General Mathews as postmaster. In addition owned a blacksmith's shop and operated seven hundred and sixty acres of the Mesmer tract. Eventually he traded the livery business for three hundred and twenty acres in Kern county and $4,000 in cash, but six months later he bought back the livery, and conducted the same some time longer.

The property holdings in which Mr. Wilhelm has been interested represent a considerable value. One of his first purchases comprised one hundred and sixty acres at Hemet, ninety miles from Los Angeles. On coming to Inglewood, he rented the Mesmer tract of seven hundred and sixty acres, the Cook tract of three hundred and twenty acres, and the Freeman tract of four hundred and eighty acres, making more than fifteen hundred acres devoted to the raising of grain and the pasturage of stock. Another real-estate acquisition consists of one-fourth of a block between Fifteen and Sixteenth and Main and Los Angeles streets, with a residence that he rents to tenants, and about the same time he bought a tract of twelve acres at Hyde Park, where he now resides, the same forming a valuable and well-improved ranch. On the northeast corner of Figueroa street and Vernon avenue he bought for $4,500 three lots 151x150 feet in dimensions, and recently he purchased an improved ranch of six hundred and thirty-eight acres four miles west of Hemet, which is valued at $30,000. Twenty miles east of Palm Springs, Riverside county, he owns an eighty-acre tract where the thousand palms grow. In all, he owns over 1,000 acres of farming land. He is a stockholder of the Lomita Land & Water Company. Also a stockholder and vice-president of the Hyde Park Water Company. All of his holdings represent a value of $100,000 and represent his wise investments since coming to the coast country. In additon to these holdings he loans money on ranch mortgages and makes investments as time and opportunity afford.

The marriage of Mr. Wilhelm occurred May 10, 1892, and united him with Miss Katie M. Maxey, a native of Denver, Colo., and daughter of John J. Maxey, one of the prosperous business men of Los Angeles and Denver, Colo. Their family comprises the following-named children; Theresa, Louis L., Anna Laura, Karl Joseph, Angelina M., Leo F., Alma K., Walter J., Gladys M. and Grace R. The children have been reared in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church, of which the parents are earnest supporters. Since coming to America Mr. Wilhelm has been stanch and active in his allegiance to the Republican party, but he has held no offices except such as were of an educational nature, included in the latter being the positions of president of the Inglewood Union high school board and clerk of the Hyde Park school board.

PIRL T. WARD. The trade of carpenter and ranching pursuits have occupied the attention of P. T. Ward since his location in California about twenty years ago. He is now located in the vicinity of Artesia and engaged in the management of a thirty-acre ranch, given over to grain, table-grapes, potatoes and general products, and in the conduct of his work has proven his ability, his perseverance and energy. Mr. Ward is a native of Madison county, Ohio, where he was born November 6, 1854, a son of John E. and Eleanor (Harris) Ward, natives respectively of Maryland and Ohio. The family eventually located in Colorado Springs, Colo., where the father passed away at the age of eighty years, his wife having died in Kansas when about fifty. They became the parents of eight children, of whom but three are now living. A daughter, Mrs. Mathews, lives in the vicinity of her brother. P. T.; John, the eldest son, served valiantly in the Civil war. Up to the age of seventeen years P. T. Ward was reared in Ohio and received his education through the medium of the public schools. At that time the family located in Kansas, where he engaged in farming and learned the trade of carpenter in Peabody, Marion county, that state, being located in Peabody from 1871 till 1887, where he carried on his trade. In the mean time he bought one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land and devoted this farm to the raising of grain and stock. In 1887 he came to California and in Los Angeles found employment at his trade, remaining in that city until 1903, when he purchased his present property, the cultivation of which is turned over to his sons while he continues to ply his trade in the city of Los Angeles. He was married in 1876 to Miss Emma L. Thomas, a native of Wisconsin, who with her parents, William H. and Sarah Thomas, came to Kansas in 1875. Mr. and Mrs. Ward became the parents of the following children: P. A., who married Lilian Williams of Winslow, Ariz.; John E., assistant clerk of the Phoenix (Ariz.) legislature; S. G.; Paul R.; L. S.; and Edith. Mr. Ward is a stanch advocate of Republican principles and while in Kansas served for some years as constable.

HON. CHARLES J. WALKER. The position accorded the Hon. Charles J. Walker in the municipal, financial and social life of Long Beach, Cal., is one to which he is justly entitled, the success of his career since locating in this city being the result of applied ability and an unswerving integrity of citizenship. Born, reared and educated in New York state, he profited both by inheritance from early ancestors who settled on the Atlantic coast and also by the habits of perseverance and energy which were inculcated by constant training, and to eastern conservatism he has added western progress and brought about a personal success, financially and socially, while at the same time he has proven himself an important factor in the development of his adopted city.

Mr. Walker, born in Allegany county, N. Y., November 8, 1869, is the youngest in a family of five children, of whom three are living. His father, William D. Walker, was also a native of New York state, where he engaged in the manufacture of furniture until 1879. In that year he came to California and located in Tulare county, shortly after which his death occurred, his wife, a Miss Esterbrook, having died in New York state, the place of her birth, a number of years previous. Charles J. Walker remained in the state of his birth until 1889, attending the public schools in pursuit of a primary education, and later becoming a student in Alfred University, and finally completing a commercial course in the Almond high school. Upon his location in Tulare county, Cal., he accepted a position with a large real estate firm, and was later employed in the abstract office and as deputy auditor under Mr. Jeffords. Foreseeing the possibilities of Southern California, he resigned from his position in Tulare county and came to the coast, in 1895 locating in Long Beach. Here he engaged independently in the real-estate business, buying and selling lots, building residences and disposing of them profitably as the town grew from a population of twelve hundred people to its present number. In all its progress Mr. Walker has kept thoroughly abreast, actively participating in all movements calculated to advance the general welfare, and at the same time constantly adding to his own prosperity. With his real-estate business he has combined that of insurance, representing several of the leading companies throughout the country, and besides maintains with credit responsibilities in many of the most substantial enterprises of the city. He is president of the People's Bank of Long Beach; a director in the First National and Citizens' Savings Banks, of Long Beach; a director in the company now making preparation to erect the new hotel; and president of the Mercantile Company (of which he was one of the organizers.) He is also identified as secretary with the Land & Navigation Company, being associated with Stephen Townsend in its organization, this company turning over eight hundred acres to the Los Angeles Dock & Terminal Company, one of the largest real-estate deals in the vicinity of Long Beach.

Besides his multifold duties and responsibilities in the business activity of Long Beach, Mr. Walker has taken a strong interest in municipal life, giving his best efforts in the promotion of proper government. As a Republican he has sought to advance the principles he endorses, and through the influence of this party was sent as an elector in 1904 to the national convention from the ninth district of Southern California. In April of 1900 he was elected to the city board of trustees for four years, and upon the organization of the citizens' ticket was made president of the board and served as mayor until 1903, when on account of ill health he resigned.

He was elected chairman of the board as a no-license man and following his election was largely instrumental in putting out the saloons and cleaning up the city. In all things he has proven himself a man of public spirit and a citizen upon whom the honor of the city and community may safely rest.

In Long Beach, in 1895, Mr. Walker was united in marriage with Miss Carrie D. Ziegler, a native of Kansas and of German parentage. They are the parents of four children, all born in Long Beach: Alice, Charles, Gussie and Marion. Fraternally Mr. Walker is associated with the Knights of Pythias and Knights of the Maccabees, and in his religious views adheres to the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he officiates as chairman of the board of trustees.

HENRY HOWARD WILSHIRE. Representing one of the old and prominent families of Southern California, Henry Howard Wilshire spent the days of his young manhood and maturer years as a resident of San Bernardino county, where he assisted in its development as a progressive and enterprising agriculturist. He was born in Utah November 10, 1856, a son of George T. Wilshire, an honored pioneer of California and one whose personal biography will be found in the sketch of another son, Joseph E., which appears elsewhere in this volume. Henry H. Wilshire came to California with his parents and in San Bernardino was reared on the home farm and educated in the public schools of the county. Upon becoming dependent upon his own resources he located on a government claim in Oak Glenn, clearing a farm from brush and undergrowth and beginning the raising of stock, in which he was engaged for many years following. He set out an apple orchard and took out ditches for irrigation from the Little San Gorgonia, and also gave considerable time and attention to the raising of potatoes, which is a profitable product of this section. At his death, which occurred August 18, 1895, he owned one hundred and sixty acres located sixteen miles from Redlands, twenty-five acres being in apple orchard and the remainder devoted to grain and hay. He was a Democrat in his political affiliations and one of the upbuilders of the section.

He was married in Colton January 1, 1880, to Miss Harriet Ann Vaughan, a native of San Bernardino, and a daughter of James Henry Vaughan. Her father was a native of Wales, and being left an orphan by the death of his father he came to the United States with his mother and in Utah located at Salt Lake City. He teamed in the mountains until 1858 when he came to San Bernardino and engaged in farming, finally locating in Colton, where he followed general farming pursuits. He is now living on his ranch at the age of seventy-three years. His wife formerly Harriet Sauze, was a native of England; she came to Utah across the plains and was one of the early settlers of Salt Lake City. She is also living, being seventy-one years old. They were the parents of eleven children, all of whom are living, Mrs. Wilshire being the fourth in order of birth. Since her husband's death Mrs. Wilshire has continued to reside on the home farm. She is a woman of rare worth of character and held in the highest appreciation by all who have ever known her. In religion she is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; politically she leans toward the principles of the Democratic party, and believing in her right and duty to exercise the powers of citizenship has served for about five years as a member of the board of trustees of the Yucaipe district. She is the mother of five children, namely: William Henry, of Los Angeles; Elmer Clarence, in charge of the home farm; Bert Loarn; George Frederick; and Henrietta Elsie.

CLARENCE A. WATSON. Although Mr. Watson has been a resident of Redlands but a brief time, he has still firmly established his position among the enterprising and helpful citizens of the place, and is intent on the upbuilding and development of its resources. He has recently built a magnificent home in Redlands on the heights overlooking the San Bernardino valley, the grounds being superbly laid out and terraced, and complete with every beauty possible to the sunny clime of Southern California. Mr. Watson was born in Newark, N. J., in 1866, the elder of two children born to his parents, George and Sarah F. (Kilpatrick) Watson, natives respectively of Auburn, N. Y., and New Jersey, and both representatives of old and honored families. The paternal grandfather, Thomas, was born in England and came to America and in New York established his home, where George Watson attained manhood. He then came to New Jersey and in Newark began a business career as a manufacturer of clothing, establishing in 1850 the George Watson Company and managing its interests up to the time of his death, which occurred in 1898. His wife is still surviving and makes her home in New York City, where their son, George Jr., resides.

Clarence A. Watson was reared in his native city and educated in its public and private schools, graduating from the Newark Academy in 1844. He then entered his father's manufactory, beginning at the first rung of the ladder, learning the details of the enterprise in the humblest capacity and thoroughly mastering the management, so that he was able upon the death of his father to assume entire charge of the concern. Not only was he able to carry on his father's methods, but with an originality and daring business sagacity enlarged the enterprise and added to its possibilities, in time building the magnificent brick block in Newark at the corner of Broad and Market streets, where they occupy four immense stores in the conduct of the business. He remained a resident of Newark until 1901, when, having made several trips to Southern California, he concluded to locate permanently in Redlands, and accordingly began work on the magnificent home which is now a pride of the city. He is interested in horticulture and looks after an orange grove which he owns. In New York City Mr. Watson was united in marriage with Miss M. J. Hill, of New York, and they have two children, George and Harold. Fraternally Mr. Watson was made a Mason in East Orange, in Hope Lodge, F. & A. M., where he still holds membership. Personally Mr. Watson is a man of pleasing characteristics, affable, genial and liberal with his means in the advancement of public interests. In his residence in Redlands he has won a wide circle of friends who appreciate him for his fine qualities of character and manhood.

HENRY BROWN WILSON. The official life of San Bernardino county has in Mr. Wilson, its present county assessor, an able and efficient representative whose duties have been faithfully discharged since taking up this work. He came to Southern California in 1887. He was born in Gardner, Me., June 15, 1856, a son of John S. Wilson, whose personal history is given at length in the biography of John W. Wilson which appears on another page of this volume. The family came to California in 1870 but returned to Maine and located in Portland, where Mr. Wilson completed his preparatory work in the Portland high school and then entered Bowdoin College, graduating therefrom in 1880, with the degree of A. B., and three years later was honored with the degree of A. M., by his alma mater. In 1881 he came to Denver, Colo., and remained there for eight months in the employ of a business firm as bookkeeper. He then returned to Portland and accepted the position of head accountant for the firm of C. M. Rice & Co., a wholesale paper concern of that city, and remained in this connection for the period of four years. He then went to Boston and was in business for a year.

Coming to Southern California in 1887 he located in Redlands and became receiver for the mill and lumber firm of Pratt & North, and after completing their affairs in good shape he went to Puget Sound in January, 1889, and engaged with Pope & Talbot of the Puget Mill Company as cashier for the period of three years, and then returning to Redlands he soon entered the First National Bank as bookkeeper, working up to the position of teller and assistant cashier. This position he resigned in May, 1906, to accept the position of manager for the Home Gas & Electric Company, which had just been organized, he assuming charge of the time of the business, construction of the plant, the laying of pipes, installation of the plant, which has a capacity of two thousand horse power. This business he ably conducted until the fall of 1906, when, having come prominently before the public in various official capacities, he was nominated on the Republican ticket for the office of county assessor. His election followed November 6, with a majority of thirteen hundred votes, and on January 7, 1907, he took the oath of office and entered upon his duties for a term of four years. He has proven his ability in official position, having held the position of city treasurer for a year, preceded by several years' experience as deputy in that office.

In Los Angeles Mr. Wilson was united in marriage with Miss Mary K. Kenney, a native of Pennsylvania, and they have one son, Kenneth Field. Mr. Wilson is prominent in fraternal circles, being identified with Redlands Lodge No. 186, K. of P., of which he is past chancellor commander, and also belongs to the Uniformed Rank of the K. of P.; is a member of Redlands Lodge No. 583, B. P. O. E., of which he is past exalted ruler; Woodmen of the World; and the Royal Court, of which he is past chancellor and present grand auditor. He supports the Catholic Church, of which his wife is a member. For many years he has served as a member of the Republican county central committee as a member of its executive committee, and in the advancement of the city's interests is a member of the Board of Trade. December 24, 1902, he received the appointment from Governor Gage to membership on the Board of Managers of the Southern California state hospital at Patton, and was re-appointed January 7, 1907, by Governor Pardee to the same position. In every way he has proven himself a capable and public spirited citizen and has given his best efforts toward the material upbuilding of his adopted city.

ERASTUS C. WHITE. A well known and esteemed citizen of Los Angeles county is Erastus C. White, who is engaged in the management of a ranch in the vicinity of Norwalk, where he has been a resident since 1898. He was born in Mercer county, Pa., February 4, 1847, a son of William and Rachel (Temple) White, both natives of the same state. He received a common school education in his native county and after completing the course he learned the trade of wagon maker. He then enlisted for service in the Civil war, becoming a soldier in Company E, Seventh United States Infantry at Erie, Pa., and being ordered to the front saw service in many of the important engagements of the struggle. He was at City Point in Virginia, at Grant's headquarters, also served along the Weldon railroad, was then stationed at Fort Schuyler, and was next sent to Florida, where he remained for about a year and a half. He received his honorable discharge in Tampa, Fla., in March, 1867, having re-enlisted February 29, 1864.

Returning to Pennsylvania he remained a few years and then went to Iowa and bought a farm of eighty acres and there carried on general ranching for three years, from there going to Rice county, Kans., he took up a government claim of one hundred and sixty acres. His home remained in that section for the period of ten years, when he removed to Kansas City and there worked for the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Memphis Railroad in the car department. He was thus employed for ten years when he located in Salt Lake City and entered the car department of the Rio Grande & Western Railroad at Salt Lake, spending about a half of his time in Provo, Utah. Resigning from this work in 1890 he came to Southern California and in Los Angeles engaged in the car department of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, remaining with them for eight years. In 1898 he came to his present location and purchased thirty acres, ten acres of which are devoted to the raising of wine grapes, and the balance to grain and pasture land. He is also engaged in the raising of poultry, having several hundred pure bred Leghorns.

In 1874 Mr. White was united in marriage with Miss Hattie Shaw, who died in 1904, leaving two daughters, Lucy, wife of H. E. Memory, of Los Angeles; and Minnie, at home with her father. Fraternally Mr. White is a member of the Odd Fellows organization in the east, and politically he is a stanch Republican. In memory of his days of soldiering he belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic.

CHARLES YOUNG. For nearly thirty years Charles Young has been a resident of this community and has taken his place as one of the substantial, reliable citizens of the section. Inheriting the sturdy traits characteristic of his forefathers, he was born in Sweden August 15, 1849, a son of Peter and Anna M. (Anderson) Young, both natives of that country, the father engaging as a captain in the Swedish navy and losing his life at sea. The mother passed away in her native country, leaving a family of five children, of whom all but Charles Young are still residents of Sweden.

A good high school education was received by Charles Young in his native country, and after completing the course he went to sea and followed this life for the period of six years. Deciding to locate in the United States as the land of opportunities of which he had heard so much during his work as steward on a Swedish merchant vessel, he came to the United States and in Chicago engaged in the house moving business for the period of two years. Coming to California in 1872 he located in San Francisco and engaged in the conduct of a restaurant and after two and a half years went to the mines in Nevada where he spent some time. He was quite successful in his efforts and saved money with which to invest in real estate, which he did immediately after coming to Los Angeles county, purchasing twenty acres of land and erecting a fine home and commodious outbuildings for the necessary equipment of the ranch. He has added to his acreage until he now owns sixty-five acres of valuable land. He has sixteen acres devoted to wine grapes and is a director in the Artesia Wine Association. The balance of the property is given over to barley and alfalfa. The ranch shows the care and attention which Mr. Young has given it, everything being in excellent repair and the land brought to a high state of cultivation.

In 1876 Mr. Young was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Finley, Nevada City, Cal., a daughter of John Finley, a pioneer of California, and they have two children, Mamie and Gertrude. Fraternally Mr. Young is associated with the Knights of Pythias lodge here and the Independent Order of Foresters, and politically he is a stanch Republican. He supports the Catholic Church, of which his wife is a member. For a time after coming to this section Mr. Young followed the butcher business, and in this enterprise was very successful.

JOHN W. WILSON, the national bank examiner, is a man of wide experience in this line and is well known throughout Southern California where he has made his home for over twenty years. He is a native of Maine, his birth having occurred in Gardner August 25, 1858. His father, John S. Wilson, was born in Richmond, Me., of Scotch ancestry, and in young manhood engaged as a merchant in Gardner; in 1870 he came to Alameda, Cal., thence two years later went back to Portland, Me. In 1886 he came to California and retired from the active cares of life, making his home in Redlands until his death, which occurred in 1904 at the age of seventy-seven years. He had made a trip via the Isthmus of Panama to California in 1850 and with his brother William, engaged as a merchant in San Francisco. He returned to Maine three years later, his brother continuing the mercantile enterprise in San Francisco for many years. He married Anna Field, a native of Gardner, Me., and she is still surviving and making her home in Redlands. They were the parents of nine children, of whom five are surviving and making their homes in Redlands, a son, H. B., being county assessor.

The third in order of birth, John W. Wilson was reared in his native city and educated in its public schools, accompanying his parents to Alameda, Cal., and two years later returning to Portland, Me., where he graduated from the high school in 1877. He then entered Bowdoin College and graduated therefrom four years later with the degree of A. B. He then engaged in business in Portland in a wholesale hardware enterprise under the firm name of N. M. Perkins & Co. In 1886 he disposed of these interests and coming to Southern California located in Redlands, here with his father purchasing ten acres on West Cypress avenue, which they immediately set out in oranges, and at the same time began improving a fifteen-acre tract on San Bernardino avenue. In 1887 when the Bank of East San Bernardino Valley was opened he became its cashier. This bank later became the First National Bank of Redlands and he remained its cashier until July, 1900, when he resigned to accept the position of national bank examiner for California and Nevada, which office he has since filled with entire credit to himself and satisfaction to all concerned. Previous to this he was instrumental in the organization of the Savings Bank of Redlands. In March, 1907, he resigned as national bank examiner, having been elected vice-president of the American National Bank, of San Francisco.

In 1904 Mr. Wilson erected a fine residence on West Palm avenue, which is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Jennie C. Haskell, a native of Topsham, Me., where their marriage occurred in 1886. They have one daughter, Marguerite, and a son, Sanford. Mr. Wilson is associated fraternally with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and politically is a true blue Republican. He is a member of the Redlands Board of Trade and active in all measures tending toward the advancement of the city's welfare.

ROBERT H. MARTIN. In 1884 when the Carter excursion from Los Angeles and surrounding country was given, Mr. Martin was one of the men hired to drive the prospective buyers from Watson Junction, using ordinary farm wagons for the purpose, hence the latter may claim with justice to have witnessed the growth of Long Beach from a very early date. Indeed, before it was supposed that a town would be located on this site, he often cut grain in the fields here and engaged in general farm work on land where beautiful homes now stand. After some years of successful work as a rancher and fruit-grower, in January of 1905 he sold his country property and moved into Long Beach, where he erected his first residence on the lot on the corner of Fourth and Daisy streets; in addition to this property he owns business property on Pine street also occasional dealing in real estate. In 1906 he erected a modern residence at No. 1021 Locust avenue, where he is now living.

The Martin family is of English extraction. William and Mary (Harper) Martin were natives of England, but emigrated from there to Canada in youth and met and married in a Canadian community. From there they removed to the States and settled in Indianapolis, Ind., where their son, Robert H., was born November 3, 1860, and where the wife and mother died in young womanhood. From Indiana the family went to Iowa and remained in Marshalltown for eight years. Early in the year 1875 the father with two sons, Robert H. and Walter H., and a daughter, Laura (who is now the wife of Alfred Owens) left Iowa for the far west, making the journey overland. For four months they stopped in Round valley, Utah, and celebrated the 4th of July with appropriate ceremonies in Salt Lake City. Eventually, in March of 1876, they landed at Los Angeles, where the father, who was a carpenter, found ready employment at his trade. After a year he settled upon a ranch and for some time devoted his attention principally to the duties incident to agricultural and horticultural pursuits. On retiring from active cares he came to Long Beach, where at the age of over eighty years he still maintains a deep interest in the well-being of the community and retains his physical and mental activity to a large degree.

When less than fifteen years of age Robert H. Martin started on the long journey across the plains and mountains, in company with other members of the family. Previous to this he had attended the common schools of Marshalltown and later he studied in the Los Angeles county schools at Alhambra for a short time, but at the age of seventeen years he left school and became self-supporting. For some time he worked as a farm hand at Alhambra. On attaining his majority he bought ten acres at the Willows, two miles north of Long Beach, and afterward bought adjoining property, so that he cultivated, of his own and rented land, a considerable acreage, the larger part of which was in fruit. As previously stated, he disposed of the ranch at the beginning of the year 1905 and came to Long Beach, where already he had a large circle of friends and acquaintances. While living at the Willows, in 1893, he was united in marriage with Olive, daughter of Russell Kingcade, a well-known citizen who is represented elsewhere in this volume. Two children blessed their union, namely: Violet Velma, who died in infancy; and George K., who was born in March, 1900. Mrs. Martin is a member of the Eastern Star Chapter and the Ebell Club of Long Beach. Though not active in politics and never caring for the excitement of official life, Mr. Martin yet has stanch convictions upon national issues and loyally advocates Republican principles.

ALONZO W. LEE. Besides looking after the interests of the government as postmaster at Lemon, Los Angeles county, for eight years, Mr. Lee is the owner of a fine ranch of thirty-five acres in this vicinity, which he purchased upon coming to the state in 1887. At that time he set out seven acres to valencia oranges and the remainder of the land to walnuts, and now has one of the finest bearing orchards in the county. The residence and other buildings upon the ranch are in keeping, and all in all he has one of the valuable estates for which this part of the state is noted.

Alonzo W. Lee is a native of Indiana and was born in Washington county October 31, 1857, one of the seven children born to his parents, William and Elizabeth (Thomas) Lee, born in Kentucky and Indiana respectively. After their marriage, which occurred in Indiana, they settled down in Washington county, where the father followed his trade of blacksmith through the remainder of his active years. The call to arms in defense of his country's honor came to him while on his farm there, and he left all behind him to enlist in an Indiana regiment. Upon the expiration of his first term of enlistment he again entered the ranks, serving in all three years, after which he returned to the home farm, and from then until his death, at the age of fifty-eight, continued blacksmithing in connection with his farm management. Politically he was a Republican, and was a member of the Grand Army. The mother died at the comparatively early age of forty-two years, having become the mother of seven children, of whom Alonzo W. is the only one in California, the others still residents of Indiana.

The common schools of Washington county, Ind., furnished all of the educational training which was to come into the life of Alonzo W. Lee, and until reaching his majority he remained with his parents on the home farm in that county. The western fever, however, had in the mean time fastened itself upon him, and in 1878, when he reached his twenty-first year, he left home with Nebraska as his destination. As he had had no experience aside from his training on the home farm it was natural that he should take up farming wherever he located, and he was thus occupied in Nebraska for two years, after which he went to southwestern Missouri and made a specialty of grain-raising for four years. Thence he went to the neighboring state of Kansas and carried on general farming for about three years, at the end of this time, in 1887, completing his western journey by coming to California. He came direct to the San José valley, and was so well pleased with his choice of location in the vicinity of what is now Lemon that he has had no desire to remove elsewhere. The fine ranch of thirty-five acres which he purchased at that time he set out to oranges and walnuts, erected a residence for his family and suitable outbuildings necessary for the proper care and handling of his products, and it is a very conservative statement to say that without exception he has one of the finest ranches in Southern California. He is also interested in a pumping plant in the vicinity of his ranch, which furnishes him with all water necessary for irrigation.

In 1885 Mr. Lee was married in Neosho Falls, Kans., to Miss Eva Engle, a native of Illinois, but as her parents removed to Missouri when she was a child of two years the greater part of her early life was passed in the latter state. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lee, as follows: Dewitt, Edna, Maud, Ernest, Kathleen, Arthur and Florence. Politically Mr. Lee is a Republican, and it was the influence of Republican friends that led to his appointment as postmaster of Lemon in 1898, a position which he filled with entire satisfaction for eight years. He is also a member of the county central committee of his party. The only fraternal association which he finds time for is the Modern Woodmen of America, holding membership in the camp at Lemon. He is a member of the Southern California Fruit Exchange and is vice-president of Walnut Fruit Growers' Association at Walnut.

BENJAMIN F. LIBBY. Even under the most favored circumstances the life of a pioneer is fraught with hardship, toil and discouragement, and only a brave spirit and a happy optimism can surmount the manifold obstacles. To the pioneers of the San Luis Rey valley in San Diego county there came troubles more than ordinarily discouraging, arising from the conflicts between the stockmen and the settlers; and, although these trials are now long since past and harmony came to the two warring factions, yet at the time the troubles were none the less real and vexatious. As one who endured these hardships the name of Benjamin F. Libby is well known not only to the pioneer element of the county, but to the younger generation as well. In recompense for the hardships of early days, he now enjoys every comfort and is financially well-to-do, with dairy, stock and alfalfa ranch of three hundred acres lying in the sunny valley of San Luis Rey.

The Libby family comes from New England. William E. and Catherine (Higgins) Libby were natives of Maine, whence they removed to Wisconsin and from there to Iowa. Eventually they came to California and entered land in San Diego county, where the mother died in 1878, at the age of sixty-seven years, and the father in 1880, at seventy years of age. Four children comprised their family, of whom two sons and one daughter still survive, one of the sons being Benjamin F., who was born near Bangor, in Penobscot county, Me., April 7, 1846. At the age of twelve years he accompanied his parents to Wisconsin and settled at Madison, where, on the completion of his grammar-school studies, he enjoyed the superior advantages offered by the State University. After leaving the university he aided his father in the hotel business. In 1865 he accompanied the family to Iowa City, Iowa, where he assisted his father in the management of an agricultural implement establishment. From there he came via the Isthmus to California in 1867, and after a short business experience in San Francisco he proceeded to San Luis Rey, San Diego county, where ever since he has made his home. In those days settlers were few and were kept together mainly through the arduous efforts of Major Utt, whose encouragement often took the form of financial assistance at a time most needed. For several years Mr. Libby acted as deputy assessor and for seven years he engaged in teaching school, after which he gave his attention wholly to the management of his ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Libby took place in 1874 and united him with Margaret, daughter of Charles Stone and a native of Texas, the family having traveled via the southern route to California in an early day and settling in this valley. Mrs. Libby is a woman of gentle and amiable disposition, a devoted Episcopalian, and loyal to every duty as wife and mother and friend. Five daughters were born of their union. Grace, who resides in Oceanside, is the widow of Charles J. Porteous and has one son now attending college. Emma, Mrs. A. E. Stokes, has three sons and lives at Santa Maria, Cal. Catherine is the wife of R. L. Johnson and lives at Corona, this state. Anne married Henry Mills and lives at Barbourtown, South Africa, where Mr. Mills fills the office of inspector of schools for the English government. The youngest daughter, Cora, is teaching school at Newport, this state.

Reared in the faith of the Republican party, Mr. Libby has been stanch to its principles all through his life and has given his ballot to its candidates at local and national elections. The high esteem in which he is held comes not alone from his position as one of the oldest surviving settlers of the valley; over and above that, he is respected for his honorable life, for his manly deeds, for his generosity to those in need, for his kindly spirit of friendship toward all, and for those qualities which bind man to man and which weave hearts together in the closest bonds of friendship.

JOHN WALDO LINCOLN. Prominent among the most valued and highly esteemed residents of Ocean Park is John Waldo Lincoln, a well-known real-estate dealer and a successful business man. The descendant of a prominent New England family, he was born, October 30, 1852, in Worcester, Mass., a son of the late Edward Winslow Lincoln. In his veins flows some of the best blood of the old Bay state, he being a descendant in the eighth generation, according to a work published a number of years ago in Massachusetts, of Samuel Lincoln, who emigrated from England in 1637, and settled in Hingham, Mass., his lineage being thus traced: Samuel (1), Samuel (2), Jedediah (3), Enoch (4), Levi (5), Levi (6), Edward Winslow (7), and John Waldo (8).

Levi Lincoln (5), who was graduated from Harvard College in 1772, was attorney-general in President Jefferson's cabinet, later serving as lieutenant governor, and afterwards as acting governor of Massachusetts. His son, Levi Lincoln (6), was graduated from Harvard in 1802; was subsequently speaker of the house of representatives, lieutenant governor, and a judge of the supreme court. From 1825 until 1834 he was governor of the state, and in 1848 was made first mayor of the city of Worcester. He married Penelope Winslow Sever, who was descended from two of the Mayflower passengers, Edward Winslow and Richard Warren. One of his sons, D. Waldo Lincoln, was for many years president of the Boston & Albany Railroad, while his son George was killed in the Mexican war.

Edward Winslow Lincoln (7) was born in Worcester, Mass., December 2, 1820, and died in that city December 15, 1896. After his graduation from Harvard College, in 1839, he went to Alton, Ill., where he studied law, and being admitted to the bar engaged in the practice of his profession, having among his legal associates

Stephen A. Douglas and Abraham Lincoln. Returning from there to Worcester, he resided there, honored and respected for his sterling integrity and worth, until his death. He married Sarah Rhodes Arnold, who was born in Rhode Island, and died in Massachusetts in early womanhood, her death occurring July 1, 1856. She came of distinguished ancestry, being connected with the families of both Governor Rhodes and Governor Padelford. Of the four children born of their union, John Waldo, the subject of this sketch, is the only one living.

Educated in Worcester, Mass., John Waldo Lincoln was a member of the first class that was graduated from the Polytechnic Institute of that city. After receiving his diploma he worked as a civil engineer until his health failed, following his profession in the east, in Kansas, Oregon and California. For a number of years he was paymaster on the Northern Pacific Railroad, on its western division, and also had charge of the construction, for the contractors, of the Siskiyou tunnel, on the Oregon & Transcontinental Railroad, and superintended the construction of the Croton aqueduct in 1885 for contractors Brown, Howard & Co. Coming to Southern California in 1894, Mr. Lincoln located in San Diego county, and for a number of years thereafter was president of the Fruit Exchange at Escondido, and was also employed in orange growing to some extent. Coming from there to Los Angeles county, he was engaged in the oil business at Los Angeles for awhile. Since 1901 he has been a resident of Ocean Park, and has carried on a good business in real estate, dealing principally in hill property, although he owns valuable land on the beach.

In San Francisco, Cal., Mr. Lincoln married Sarah Eberline, who was educated in the west. Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln are prominent in social circles, and are devout members of the Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Lincoln is a stanch Democrat.

FRANK HOANSLER. The founder of the Hoansler family in America bore the name of John and was a native of Holland, whence he crossed the ocean to the United States and settled on a farm in Pennsylvania. There he and his wife, Catherine, remained until death, rearing meanwhile a family of five children, the second of whom, Frank, was born near Harrisburg, Pa., on Christmas day of 1832. As a boy he attended school held in a log cabin containing furnishings of the most primitive order and offering educational facilities far inferior to those of the present day. At the age of sixteen he left school and started out to earn his own livelihood, entering the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company as water boy. In due course of time he was promoted through various positions until he became section foreman.

The discovery of gold in California caused Mr. Hoansler to resign his position and in 1849 he and a friend, Mathew Diederer, came west by way of Panama. Misfortune followed him from the first. His comrade was killed in the mines shortly after their arrival and he was taken sick so that he could not work; after a year he returned east via Panama and secured employment as section boss at Crestline, Ohio. After perhaps five years in that capacity he resigned and went to St. Louis, where he became section foreman on the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad. As an employe of that road he worked back as far as Cincinnati, then west again to St. Louis, and from there to Jasper county, Mo., where for four years he worked in the lead mines. During the Civil war he was employed in Indiana as section foreman on the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad. Later he was section foreman at Carmi, White county, Ill., with the road now popularly known as the "Big Four."

When Mr. Hoansler came to California in May, 1891, he found conditions far different from those that prevailed during the memorable year of 1849, and he was so gratified with prospects that he decided to become a permanent resident. After one year in Los Angeles he became a farmer on the Bolsa ranch at Santa Ana and from there in 1894 came to Redondo, where for three years he raised grain and stock on the Weston ranch. Since then he has operated almost six hundred acres of grain land and also has one hundred and forty acres in beans, renting his ranch land from the Redondo Beach Company, and raising beans, barley and corn. A small ranch which he owns at Gardena is rented to other parties, and besides that place he owns a residence and several lots in Redondo. While living in the east he married Miss Mary Everett, who was born in Illinois and died in Indiana. Nine children were born of that union, but only one survives, Mrs. Mollie Brooks, of Gallatin county, Ill. The second marriage of Mr. Hoansler was solemnized at Carmi, Ill., in 1874, and united him with Miss Mary Pryor, a native of that city, and a daughter of Philip and Agnes (Boulder) Pryor. Her paternal grandfather, William Pryor, was born in Michigan and at an early age removed to Illinois, settling on a farm near Carmi, where he remained until death. When sixty-five years of age his devotion to the Union cause led him to enlist in the army for service in putting down the rebellion. Philip Pryor was born at Carmi and died on a farm there when his daughter, Mary, was only two years of age. There were two other children in the family and all are still living. Their mother was born in Pennsylvania and now, at seventy-six years of age, still owns and occupies the old homestead comprising three hundred and sixty acres. Her father, John Boulder, was born in Ireland and came to the United States at eighteen years of age, settling at Pittsburg, Pa., and later removing to Carmi, Ill., where he bought government land at $12.50 an acre, a portion of the original tract being now owned by his daughter.

The family of Mr. and Mrs. Hoansler consists of five children, namely: Mrs. Maggie Klump, of Toluca, Los Angeles county, Cal.; Lafayette, who is engaged in the tobacco business at Redondo; Lawrence F., who died in 1900, at eighteen years of age; Cleveland, who is engaged in the real-estate business at Redondo; and Marietta, who married Frank Nichelson, a farmer near Redondo. In religion Mrs. Hoansler is of the Congregational faith, while Mr. Hoansler is a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

JAMES CLARENCE ALCORN. Fully alive to San Pedro's superior advantages of climate, soil, improvements and citizenship, James Clarence Alcorn has unlimited faith in its future, and ably champions its claims for recognition as one of the most beautiful, home-like, health-giving and desirable residence cities of Southern California. The subdivision of the large tracts of land in this vicinity into small ranches or city lots makes it possible for the agriculturist, horticulturist or other business man to here find a favorable location, and in the many transfers of real estate Mr. Alcorn is especially interested, and as a dealer in realty is carrying on an extensive and lucrative business. A son of James Alcorn, Jr., he was born November 2, 1854, in Venango county, Pa. On the paternal side he comes of Irish ancestry, his grandfather, James Alcorn, Sr., having, with two of his brothers, emigrated from the north of Ireland to the United States, settling as a farmer in Venango county, Pa. He was a man of strong character, and an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Born in Pennsylvania in 1818, James Alcorn, Jr., succeeded to the occupation in which he was reared, and for a number of years carried on general farming in his native state. He was very active and influential in public affairs, for twenty years serving as tax collector and sheriff of Venango county. He was a cool, clear-headed man, brave in the performance of his duty, on one occasion arresting in their cabin two Molly Maguires, who had their six-shooters drawn, and handcuffing both of them himself. He was a Republican from the organization of that party, and one of its most loyal supporters in both peace and war. In 1866 he purchased a farm in Indiana, near Elkhart, and there resided until his death, in 1896. He married Mehitable Jones, who was born in Venango county, Pa., a daughter of Isaac Jones, who emigrated from Wales to Pennsylvania, settling on an island in the Allegheny river, buying it from the government, and it is still known as Jones Island. She died in Indiana, on the home farm. Of the thirteen children, six sons and seven daughters, born of their union, three sons and six daughters survive. One son, George W., served in a Pennsylvania regiment during the Civil war, was captured in battle, and died in Libby prison.

The seventh child in order of birth of the parental household, James C. Alcorn completed his early education in the public schools of Indiana, and at the age of sixteen years began work for the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad Company, being located at Elkhart. Subsequently, with headquarters at Garrett, Ind., he was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, first as fireman and later as engineer. Going to Colorado in 1885, he traveled extensively in that state, and in 1889 went to Boise City, Idaho, becoming interested in mining in the Deadwood country. In 1900 he established himself as a real estate agent in Salt Lake City, and soon became identified with the best interests of that locality. When the establishment of a road between that city and San Pedro was conceded he was made one of the engineering corps and assisted in the location of the entire highway. Being greatly impressed with the wonderful scenery and climate of Southern California, and more especially with the many advantages of San Pedro, he resolved to locate here. Returning to Salt Lake City he disposed of his properties in that section, including his mining interests, and in the summer of 1905 came here to live. Buying his present residence, at No. 437 Fifth street, he has greatly improved the property, and since that time has established himself as one of the leading real estate dealers of the city.

In Carson City, Nev., Mr. Alcorn married Anna D. Nash, who was born in Lynn, Mass., and was educated in Boston and in Michigan. She is an accomplished, cultured woman, and prior to her marriage was a noted school teacher, beginning her professional career in the east, and subsequently teaching for nine years at Salt Lake City. Mr. Alcorn is a man of literary ability, his History of the Spanish War, which he illustrated in eleven different colors, being an interesting volume, and a valued acquisition to the historical works of our country. Mr. Alcorn, having been healed by a Christian Scientist, has since made a thorough investigation of the subject, and is now one of its stanchest supporters and a leading spirit in establishing a Christian Science Church in this locality. Politically he is a strong Republican, having ever been true to the principles in which he was reared.

MISS C. ROGERS. The last quarter of a century has furnished the industrial, professional, financial and social world with not a few women of brilliant attainments who have entered upon an active career and have thoroughly vindicated the right of each individual to do or be that for which he or she is best fitted by nature. Prominent among this number is Miss C. Rogers, who has established herself as a real estate dealer, with offices in San Pedro and Los Angeles, and is carrying on an extensive and remunerative business in her line, handling San Pedro and Harbor properties only. Of honored ancestry, she was born in Cork, Ireland, a daughter of Reuben C. Rogers, who is actively identified with the commercial interests of that city, being one of the best informed railway and shipping men of Cork, Ireland.

Miss Rogers, on the paternal side, is a descendant of John Rogers, the martyr, who, during the reign of Queen Mary, was burned at the stake, in Smithfield, in 1554. Subsequently, James I gave a grant of land in the southern part of Ireland to one of John Rogers's descendants, and it was occupied by some branch of the family until sold under the Confiscated Estate Act. The family afterwards became scattered through different parts of the world, one of the immediate ancestors of Miss Rogers settling in the West Indies. Her great-grandfather Rogers lived there many years, but died on the return voyage, leaving a wife and son, who afterwards settled in Cork, Ireland. The grandfather remained there permanently, and there both Miss Rogers and her father were born. Her mother, whose maiden name was Lizzie Martin, was born in Kinsale, Ireland, a descendant of the Daunt family, and died at the family residence in Cork.

Having laid a substantial foundation for her future education in private schools, Miss Rogers was graduated from Trinity College, Dublin, after which she continued her studies in France and Germany. She subsequently traveled extensively on the continent, and in April, 1898, crossed the Atlantic, and for a while resided in Canada. Wishing to become acquainted with the United States, she visited various points of interest, and in 1902 arrived in San Francisco. It was her intention to return east to New York City, going by way of Los Angeles, where she had planned to stay twenty-four hours in order to call upon some friends of her uncle, Sir James Clifton Robinson, of London, who rebuilt the Los Angeles street railways, changing them from horse power to cable system. This relative was associated with the late Charles T. Yerkes in the building of the Underground railway in London. These friends of Sir James said to Miss Rogers, "You must see Pasadena and the coast towns, and meet some people whom you used to know in your native land."

Concluding, therefore, to remain for a while, Miss Rogers subsequently accepted a position as stenographer with George H. Peck, of San Pedro, and while thus employed became interested in real estate dealings. Resigning her position at the end of a few months, she returned to Los Angeles, rented desk room in an office in the Copp building, and in her undertakings was so successful that she afterwards opened an office in San Pedro also. She deals exclusively in San Pedro and Harbor realty, in her transactions bringing buyer and seller together prior to making a sale, and in carrying out this plan is building up a very prosperous business. She makes a specialty of water front property, of the value of which she has an accurate knowledge, and is very enthusiastic over the future possibilities of San Pedro as a residence and business city. Miss Rogers is well known and highly esteemed in social circles, and is a member of Esperanza Chapter No. 167, O. E. S., of Los Angeles.

W. P. LOGAN. The family represented by this well-known oil-driller came to California during the early period of American occupancy. About the year 1852 A. S. Logan removed from Missouri across the plains to the far west, settling in San Jose and taking up agricultural pursuits near that town. Removing to the vicinity of Lexington in 1856 he took up a quarter-section of government land near the Santa Cruz mountains and afterward gave his attention to the improvement of the land and the building up of a finely developed ranch. On that place his death occurred in 1898, when he was eighty-two years of age. His wife, Sarah, died in 1887, at the age of seventy-two years. Among their children was W. P., born in Lafayette county, Mo., November 9, 1850, and an infant at the time of the removal to the Pacific coast, so that his earliest recollections cluster around the Santa Clara valley. As a boy he attended the common schools of San Jose, and after leaving school he engaged in driving a stage for six years. Since then he has been interested in the oil business, 1879 being the year of his first association with that industry.

In the pursuit of his calling of oil-driller and contractor Mr. Logan has traveled over much of the west and has gained a thorough knowledge of localities where oil has been found. Upon first associating himself with the industry he was employed by the Pacific Coast Oil Company in Santa Clara county. Later he was identified with the Hardison & Stewart Company in Ventura and Los Angeles counties, and for six years worked with the Union Oil Company. May 6, 1900, he arrived at San Luis Obispo and here he worked for four years in the capacity of oil superintendent. North of Santa Barbara he drilled the first well for the Western Union Oil Company. After a brief period with the Los Alamos Developing Company he took an active part in the starting of the Logan Oil Company, a stock corporation, organized in September of 1905, and with this he has since been associated.

The marriage of W. P. Logan took place in 1893 and united him with Miss A. E. Waring, who was born and educated in this state, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Of this union there is a daughter, Edith. In fraternal relations Mr. Logan belongs to the Santa Maria Lodge of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias at Santa Maria, Hesperian Lodge, F. & A. M., at Santa Maria, and the Order of Foresters in Los Angeles. In national politics he votes with the Democratic party.

J. S. LOGAN. Throughout all of his life a resident of California and loyally devoted to his native commonwealth, J. S. Logan is a member of a pioneer family of the west and is a brother of W. P. Logan, with whom he has been engaged extensively in the drilling of oil wells as a member of the Logan Oil Company. During the residence of his parents in San Jose he was born in that city June 6, 1856, and as a boy he attended the public schools there, later having the advantage of a course of study in the Methodist College at Gilroy. On leaving college he took up the oil business and since has acquired a thorough knowledge of the industry, in which he and his brother have reputations second to none in the same line. By traveling throughout the entire state they have become thoroughly acquainted with the oil wells and prospects, and their judgment is depended upon in many instances where the advice of oil experts is sought. The Logan Oil Company has the confidence of the people and has established a reputation that is not limited to Santa Maria or to Santa Barbara county, the Company's headquarters.

During April of 1904 J. S. Logan was united in marriage with Miss Leona C. Holt, who was born and reared in Santa Maria and has spent her life thus far in Santa Barbara county. One child, Virgo Helen, blesses their union. Politically Mr. Logan votes with the Democratic party, while in fraternal relations he is connected with Hesperian Lodge of Masons at Santa Maria and Garden City Lodge No. 142, I. O. O. F., at San Jose, this state.

CAPT. EDWARD EVERETT YOUNG. Noteworthy among the well known and highly esteemed residents of San Pedro is Capt. Edward Everett Young, who is prominent in social and fraternal circles, and as master of a vessel is actively identified with the shipping interests of Southern California. A son of the late James W. Young, he was born January 30, 1874, in Kansas City, Mo., coming from excellent Irish-English stock.

A native of Owen county, Ind., James W. Young grew to manhood in that state, and during the Civil war served his country, enlisting in an Indiana regiment. Subsequently removing to Missouri, he settled as a merchant at Kansas City, where for a number of years he carried on a prosperous business. Coming to California in 1881, he became one of the leading grocers of Los Angeles, being thus employed the greater part of the time until his death, which occurred in Los Angeles county. His wife, whose maiden name was Lydia Hollingsworth, was born in Page county, Iowa, a daughter of Noah Hollingsworth, and a granddaughter of Joel Hollingsworth, an English Quaker, who settled in Indiana in pioneer times. Noah Hollingsworth was born near Terre Haute, Ind., and was there reared to agricultural pursuits. He afterwards learned the trade of carpenter, which he followed for a number of years in Muscatine, Iowa. In 1855 he settled in Page county, Iowa, and at the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Eighth Iowa Cavalry, in which he served until his death. He married Elizabeth Byrum, who was born in Ohio eighty years ago, and is now residing in Kansas. Of the seven children born of their union, six survive, Lydia, widow of James W. Young, being the fifth child in order of birth.

Coming with his parents to California when but seven years old, E. E. Young received a common school education here, and at the age of eighteen years embarked in seafaring pursuits. Locating in San Pedro in 1894, he secured a position with the California Fish Company, and in June, 1901, entered the employ of the Pacific Packing and Navigation Company as master of a vessel, for three years engaging in transporting merchandise between Puget Sound ports and the Alaskan ports of the Behring Sea. In 1904 he returned to San Pedro and has since had command of the Alpha, owned by the California Fish Company.

On January 6, 1906, Mr. Young was united in marriage with Nellie Hollingsworth, a native of Iowa, and they reside at No. 218 Thirteenth street, San Pedro. In fraternal organizations the captain is very active and influential. He was made a Mason in Wilmington, and is one of the charter members of San Pedro Lodge No. 332, F. & A. M., of which he was the first senior warden, and the second to serve as master; he is also a charter member of San Pedro Chapter, O. E. S., and its first worthy patron; he is a Scottish Rite, 32-degree Mason of Los Angeles Consistory No. 3, and belongs to Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He likewise belongs to Embarcadero Lodge No. 348, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand; and to the Rebekahs, of which he is a prominent member. He is a member also of the American Association of Masters and Pilots of California Harbor No. 15, of San Francisco. In national politics he is a stanch Republican, but in local affairs votes for the best men and measures, independent of party prejudices.

M. M. FLORY. The Flory family dates its ancestry back to the early settlement of Virginia, the great-grandfather of M. M. Flory having been the first member of the family to make Rockingham county in that state his home, coming from Pennsylvania. The early progenitors were of German origin and brought up in that stern German Baptist religious faith which allowed no swerving from duty, however disagreeable it might be, and the later members of the family have retained the sturdy principles of their fathers and are men of strong character and scrupulous honesty. The grandfather, John Flory, was a farmer in Rockingham county and lived to be eighty years of age, his death occurring in 1844. His son, Abraham, born also in Rockingham county, was a manufacturer of shoes and later a farmer near Staunton for many years. It was in 1849 that he came to California via Panama, and after working in the mines for a season, returned to his home. Later he made a second trip to the coast and mined again in northern California, and on his way to Iowa in 1855 followed that pursuit in Idaho and Montana for short periods. His death occurred in Keokuk county, Iowa. His wife was Susanna Stoner, a daughter of a Virginia farmer, and she died in the state of Washington.

There were six children in the family of which M. M. Flory was a member, five of them still surviving at this time. Mr. Flory was next to the oldest, his birth having occurred April 9, 1834, in Rockingham county, Va., in which state he lived until seventeen years of age. His education was received in a pay school in that state and after his school days were over he learned the carpenter's trade in Shenandoah valley. In 1855 he went to Keokuk, Iowa, and worked at his trade until the Civil war broke out, when he volunteered for military service and was mustered in as a member of Company F, Fifth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry. With his regiment he took part in the battles of Iuka and Corinth, and near the latter place he was taken sick and removed to the general hospital at Holly Springs. In the raid at that place he was taken captive and sent to Lagrange and from there to Memphis. At the latter place the Confederates were forced to abandon their prisoners on account of the proximity of the Union army, and he was accordingly left in Memphis, and having contracted rheumatism was assigned to duty as chief clerk of the general hospitals there, where he remained until May, 1864, when, his rheumatism having become acute, he was sent to Iowa and mustered out at the end of his term of enlistment.

After the close of the war Mr. Flory was occupied as a contractor and builder in Washington, Ia., and Kansas City and Independence, Mo., until 1875, when, having had a hard attack of pneumonia, from which he did not readily recover, he resolved to try California's climate. After one year in Southern California he went to the desert regions, during which time his health was restored, and he decided to locate permanently in San Bernardino. This place was then a small town and many of the cities which are now places of importance in the county were not even laid out. Mr. Flory continued his business as a contractor, upon his arrival taking contracts at Oceanside, Ontario, Colton, Highland, and Redlands, in which latter place he erected the first house after the platting of the city. He conducted business in a comparatively successful manner until April, 1906, when a stroke of paralysis forced him to give up active work and he is now living a retired life in San Bernardino.

The marriage of Mr. Flory occurred in Independence, Mo., and united him with Mrs. Mary (Armstrong) Whitney, who was born in Wooster, Wayne county, Ohio. To Mr. and Mrs. Flory have been born five children, namely: Frank, a carpenter and sawyer at San Bernardino; Maud, now the wife of Clayton Muscott, of Lopez, Wash.; Guy, a contractor in San Bernardino; Edgar, with the Riverside Trust Company, residing in San Bernardino; and Kate, at home. Mr. Flory was made a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in Independence, Mo., and is now connected with Token Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F., of which he is a charter member and past grand, and has been a representative to the Grand Lodge three different times; he is also a member of the Encampment, in which he was at one time chief patriarch, and belongs to the Canton. His Civil war service entitles him to membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, and he belongs to the William H. Cornman Post at San Bernardino. Politically his affiliations are with the Republican party. His influence has always been a beneficial one to the community in which he makes his home and Mr. Flory is one of the most highly respected citizens of San Bernardino.

TYLER PRATT TOWNE. With the death of Tyler Pratt Towne of Pomona in 1891 was broken a link in the ancestral chain which binds the past with the present. The lineage of the family can be traced back to one William Towne, who left England in the seventeenth century and founded the family in Massachusetts, his descendants flourishing in that commonwealth for many generations. Among these descendants was Isaac Towne, born in Millbury, Mass., who in young manhood settled in Bethel, Me., where at the age of twenty-one years he taught the first school ever held in that town. Later he settled down as an agriculturist in that locality and throughout the remainder of his long life followed this peaceful pursuit. As a man of ability and clear understanding he was recognized as a leader among the citizens of that town and for many years served his constituents as selectman.

It was in the little town of Bethel, Me., that Tyler Pratt Towne was born August 1, 1810, the son of Isaac and Dolly (Gould) Towne. He was educated in the common school of his state, learned the cabinet-maker's trade, but after his marriage took up farming in Bethel and continued that pursuit until he came to California. With about eight decades of honored life in the east he came to this state to spend his declining years in a climate less rigorous than prevails on the Atlantic coast, and thus it was that he located in the sheltered Pomona valley in 1888. During the same year he settled in a home at the corner of Caswell street and San Francisco avenue, the only improvement which it boasted being ten orange trees. Besides setting out additional trees on this tract he also purchased one and one-half acres at the head of Caswell street, and still later purchased seven acres of the Kingsley tract, on the corner of San Bernardino and Washington streets, which has since been transformed into a fine orange grove. Mr. Towne was a man who was not afraid to venture upon large undertakings, and although he lived only three years after settling in Pomona he had accomplished largely and left a valuable estate to his heirs. During his young manhood, in Bethel, Me., he had married Miss Miranda Hanscom Watson, who was born in Norway, Me., the daughter of Daniel Watson, a farmer in that vicinity. The married life of Mr. and Mrs. Towne had been a long and unusually happy one and the death of Mr. Towne in 1891 was a sad blow to his family. As they had been closely united in all their hopes and aims in life, they were not long separated in death, and in June of the following year, at at the age of eighty-three years, Mrs. Towne passed to the Great Beyond. Throughout her life she had been a devout member of the Congregational Church. Politically Mr. Towne was a Democrat and an Abolitionist.

Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Towne, the eldest of whom, Sarah M., resides upon the old homestead in Pomona; Emma is the widow of Livingston Gain Robinson, who was born in Maine and for many years was a merchant in Waterford; he died in Bethel, Me., in 1873; the next child in the parental family, Ellen, passed away in Bethel, as did also the only son, Daniel Webster, who died in 1888. He was well educated in Bethel Academy, and after his school days were over he settled down to farm pursuits in his home town. His marriage united him with Mary A. Kelley, of North Yarmouth, Me., and of the three children born to them only one is now living, Allan Webster, who is engaged in orange growing on San Bernadino avenue, Pomona. He also owns and has developed an eighty-acre tract near Claremont, all in oranges.

OLIVER S. HOWARD. When the domain of civilization began to be extended beyond the narrow confines of the east and the fertile soil of the Mississippi valley began to attract pioneer farmers, S. B. Howard, a native of New York, became a frontiersman in the then wilds of Wisconsin, passing through Milwaukee in 1844, when a few log cabins marked the site of the future metropolis of that state. While he learned the carpenter's trade and followed the occupation more or less through all of his active years, yet he had the desire for land that characterized every pioneer, and one of his first steps toward independence was to secure from the government a claim to a quarter-section in Winnebago county, Wis. Later he removed to Jackson county, that state, but eventually returned to Winnebago county and resumed farming in that locality. During 1862 he offered his services to the Union and was accepted as a private in the ranks of a regiment of Wisconsin Infantry, where he remained until the close of the war and the honorable discharge of the army. His last days were passed in Winnebago county, where he died in the fall of 1880, at the age of seventy-three years. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Salome Skinner, was born in Vermont and died in Wisconsin at the age of fifty-seven years.

Four sons were born of the marriage of S. B. and Salome Howard, namely: Oliver S. and Henry L., both born in Jackson county, Wis., August 24, 1859, and August 11, 1862, respectively; and Ira A. and Grant, who were born in Winnebago county, that state, November 14, 1866, and August 24, 1869, in the order named. Henry L. died May 26, 1880; Ira A. makes his home at Wausau, Wis.; and Grant is a resident of Temecula, Cal. Oliver S. Howard obtained a fair education in the public schools of his native state, and at the age of seventeen secured employment with a lumber company, going into the logging camp of the pineries of Wisconsin. He followed this for three successive winters, remaining at home during the summers.

March 23, 1886, Mr. Howard was united in marriage with Miss Ecie Cook, a daughter of Edward and Adalaide Cook, who were then residents of Winnebago county, Wis. The spring following their marriage Mr. Howard and his wife removed to South Dakota, debarking from the train at Desmet, Kingsbury county, whence they made their way overland to Hamlin county. There Mr. Howard succeeded in buying relinquishments to three hundred and twenty acres of choice land, a homestead and a tree claim. Amid these pioneer conditions they battled with storms and privations and in spite of discouragements soon built up a home that was a credit to that section. Two years after locating there the Milwaukee Railroad Company ran a spur line across the state and located the new town of Bryant in Garfield township. With fifty-nine other citizens Mr. Howard formed the Bryant Elevator Company and also a creamery plant, co-operative concerns established in the interests of the farmers of that region. In addition to his other interests Mr. Howard loaned money on real estate and chattels. For six years he served in the capacity of justice of the peace, as well as township clerk and township treasurer, and also belonged to Company M of the state militia.

Although Mr. Howard's enterprises in South Dakota were thoroughly successful, the dread of the long and tedious winters in that part of the country induced him to seek a milder climate and it was with this idea in mind that he came to California in 1898 upon a tour of inspection. The result of his investigations was so satisfactory that he returned to South Dakota, disposed of his interests there and in the fall of 1899 came to California as a permanent settler, buying one hundred and sixty acres in Riverside county and embarking in the bee business. After two years he sold the place and removed to San Diego county, where he bought two hundred and forty acres, forming his present homestead in Gopher cañon. At this writing his landed possessions aggregate seventeen hundred acres, on which his herds of stock range. The crops are utilized mostly for feed, instead of being sold in the markets. Of recent years he has made a specialty of Durham cattle and on his ranch may be seen some choice and fancy specimens of that breed. A neat house adds to the attractions of the ranch and there are also substantial buildings for the shelter of stock and storage of grain. The owner's attention is given to his ranch and stock with such earnestness that he has no leisure nor desire to participate in public affairs and takes no part in politics aside from voting a straight Republican ticket at all elections.

Upon their removal to California in 1899 Mr. and Mrs. Howard were accompanied by Mrs. Howard's father, Edward Cook. He died at his home in Twin Oaks June 23, 1905, at the age of eighty-seven years, and is survived by his wife, Mrs. Howard and one son, George.

HARRY MELANCTON LANDIS. During an early period in the colonization of Pennsylvania the Landis family came from Germany and identified themselves with the pioneer development of the Keystone state. Peter Landis, a native of Lancaster county and for some time a member of its county board of supervisors, platted the town of Landisville, which was named in his honor. Though a farmer by occupation, for some years he devoted his attention to business pursuits and manufactured the Landis plow first at Landisville and later in the Lebanon valley near Harrisburg. Eventually he purchased a large tract of land in Snyder county, Pa., devoted his attention to raising grain and stock, and remained on the farm until his death. Meanwhile he had disposed of a portion of the property, all of which was underlaid with coal mines. Back to the time of the Reformation his ancestors had been followers of Martin Luther and he himself was stanch in his devotion to Lutheran doctrines. In politics he voted with the Republican party.

In the family of Peter Landis was a son, Samuel S., who was born at Landisville, Pa., and became a dairyman on a farm now adjacent to the city limits of Harrisburg. At the opening of the Civil war he enlisted in the Union army as a member of a Pennsylvania regiment and for four years he remained at the front.

meanwhile being twice wounded in battle. At the expiration of the war he was honorably discharged from the service and returned to his farm. Later he became active in the local work of the Grand Army of the Republic. Like his father, he was a devoted believer in the Lutheran faith and contributed regularly to the work of that denomination. Fraternally he was a Mason and also connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Susan St. Clair, was born in Liverpool, England, and crossed the ocean at an early age, settling with two sisters in Lancaster county, Pa., and dying in 1860 in Pennsylvania. There were only three children in the family and two are now living.

The youngest of the children was Harry M., born near Harrisburg Pa., September 4, 1856, and reared on the home farm until fifteen years of age, meanwhile attending public school during three winter months each year. Hearing much concerning the west and ambitious to see something of this part of the world, in 1872 he came to San Francisco and from there worked his passage to San Diego on the steamer William Tabor. When he landed here he found a town radically different from the present city. Instead of comfortable homes and substantial business blocks, little except sage brush was to be seen. The few business houses were straggling structures of primitive construction, and the residences were little more than shanties. Yet about all was the subtle charm of climate. There was much to interest the close observer, and he had no desire to seek a larger field of activity. With a willing disposition and capable hands he undertook such work as he could find to do. At the age of seventeen years he became an apprentice to the carpenter's trade under H. A. Perry, with whom he remained for three years. Later he worked as a journeyman for two years. Since 1880 he has engaged in contracting and, in point of years of business activity, ranks as the oldest contractor in San Diego. During his long career he has built many residences and business houses, has drawn the plans for his buildings when desired, and at one time went to Salinas under a contract for some brick business blocks.

The residence which Mr. Landis erected at No. 841 Ninth street forms a pleasant home for his family. In San Diego, February 11, 1894, he married Miss Peru A. Perkins, who was born at Ukiah, Cal., graduated from the San Francisco Business College in 1889, and later taught stenography and typewriting in the San Diego Business College. Her father, A. T., and grandfather, Jesse Perkins, were natives of Virginia, and the latter died upon a plantation in that state. The former in 1850 crossed the plains with oxen and engaged in mining in the mountains. After a brief sojourn at Marysville he became one of the earliest settlers of Ukiah, Mendocino county, where he established the Ukiah News, the first paper published in the town. In addition he was interested in a mercantile store, a lumber business and in stock-raising, and various of these interests he was still holding in 1879, the year of his death. His wife, who was Elizabeth Harper, was born, reared and married in Georgia, and died in Ukiah. They were the parents of seven children. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Landis there are a daughter, C. Floyd, and a son, Harold P.

Prominent in the local activities of the Republican party, Mr. Landis at one time was a member of the county convention. From 1895 to 1897 he was a member of the board of delegates, serving one year as president. In 1897 he became a member of the board of aldermen, representing the second precinct of the second ward, and by re-election every other year he served until the spring of 1905, when he retired with an excellent record for faithful service to the city. As chairman of the water committee, the building committee, and the electric light and telephone committee, he rendered service that was especially valuable and of permanent assistance to the well-being of the city and the taxpayers. In addition he aided measures for the instituting of improvements which have transformed San Diego from an old-fashioned town to a modern city of the twentieth century type. On the organization of the Union League Club he became one of its charter members. When the Master Builders' Association was organized he became active in the new society and was honored with the office of president, besides officiating as a member of the board of directors. In 1894 he was made a Mason in San Diego Lodge No. 35, F. & A. M., later took the Royal Arch degree and became connected with San Diego Commandery No. 25, K. T., with all of which he yet affiliates. During 1878 he was initiated into San Diego Lodge No. 153, I. O. O. F., in which he is past noble grand. Among the other bodies with which he has affiliated may be mentioned the Woodmen of the World, the Foresters of America and the Order of the Eastern Star, with which last-named organization his wife also has been associated.

J. LEE CATHCART. As vice-president and general manager of the San Bernardino and Riverside Laundry Companies J. Lee Cathcart has proven his title as one of the most successful and enterprising business men of this section. The Cathcart family has been identified with the development of California since 1852, when the grandfather of J. Lee, Capt. John Cathcart, who had been a steamboat owner and captain on the Mississippi river between New Orleans and St. Louis, came here with his family and located at Santa Cruz, where he became a large land owner and lived the remainder of his life. His son Robert was a small boy when brought to the state and spent his youthful days at Santa Cruz. As a young man he engaged in mining operations for a time, later became a merchant at Santa Cruz, and in 1876 located at Pomona and engaged in horticultural pursuits, setting out one of the first orange groves in that section, his one hundred acre tract being devoted almost exclusively to that fruit. There were but four American families in that neighborhood when he first went there and the well-settled garden spot that now is Pomona was bare and waste land. The death of the elder Cathcart occurred in Pomona in 1904. His wife was Augusta Durr, a native of Ohio, whose grandfather came from Germany to Ohio, and in 1854 to California via the Panama route, settling with his family in Monterey, and there died. Mrs. Cathcart is now residing on the home ranch at Pomona, and three of the four children in the family are yet living.

Next to the oldest in the family, J. Lee Cathcart was born June 17, 1871, at Santa Cruz, Cal., and when five years of age was taken by his parents to Pomona, where he was educated in the public schools, and after the completion of his studies worked with his father until he had reached the age of his majority. He then began to master the laundry business, starting in the workroom and gradually rising until he has reached his present position. He was first employed in the Lorbeer Brothers' Pomona laundry, and when he resigned his position with them in 1901 he had attained the foremanship of that establishment. Leaving Pomona he came to San Bernardino and purchased, with others, the San Bernardino Steam Laundry, of which he became the manager. This laundry had been established in 1891 and was incorporated as the San Bernardino Steam Laundry Company, which rented quarters at Fourth and D streets, this building continuing as its home until 1903, when a new site was purchased at Nos. 559-561 Court street and a building 80x127 feet was erected. The plant has been given the most thoroughly modern equipment, which includes two forty-horsepower boilers and one thirty-five-horsepower engine, a pumping plant, and artesian well and machinery for generating their own electricity to be used in heating the irons and running the machinery. The laundry is pronounced the largest and best equipped in Southern California outside of Los Angeles, and their business extends from Riverside through California and into Nevada. In 1905 Mr. Cathcart and his brother purchased a controlling interest in the Riverside Laundry Company, of which J. Lee is president, and they have remodeled and improved the plant, installing pumping and electricity-generating machinery, the steadily increasing business at that point making it necessary to enlarge the building also. Mr. Cathcart is a member of the Southern California Laundrymen's Association, and in December, 1906, was elected first vice-president. He is assistant chief of the San Bernadino fire department, belongs to the San Bernardino Board of Trade, and fraternally affiliates with the Woodmen of the World lodge.

In 1892 Mr. Cathcart was married in Berkeley to Miss Amy Green, a native of Michigan, and this union has been blessed in the birth of two children, Howard and Kate.

SAMUEL M. BISE. Prominent among the leading business men of Compton, Los Angeles county is Samuel M. Bise, the well-known furnishing undertaker, funeral director and liveryman. Possessing a thorough knowledge of the duties of an undertaker, his services are sought throughout the community in which he resides. He is enterprising and public spirited, taking an intelligent interest in local affairs, ever ready to lend a helping hand towards promoting the best interests of town and county. A son of John Bise, he was born June 26, 1846, in Sullivan county, Tennessee.

A native of Germany, John Bise was but a child when his parents emigrated to this country, settling as farmers in North Carolina. Brought up in that state, he was engaged in agricultural pursuits during his entire life, first in Virginia, then in Tennessee, and subsequently in Missouri, where he spent the closing years of his life, dying there in 1866. He married Mathilda, daughter of John Bohman, of Tennessee, and they became the parents of eleven children, namely: William, John, Lucinda, George, Thomas, Lewis, Catherine, Sarah, Mary, Robert and Samuel M. The family were patriotic, five of the sons serving as soldiers in the Civil war, four of them belonging to Company C, Second Missouri Volunteer Infantry. The parents were both members of the Baptist Church.

The youngest child of the parental household, Samuel M. Bise received a good education in the common schools, and at an early age began to be self-supporting. During the Civil war, following the example of his four brave brothers, he enlisted for three years in Company C, Third Iowa Cavalry, and at the expiration of his term of enlistment re-enlisted, becoming a member of Company H, Thirty-ninth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, in which he served ten months, at the close of the war being mustered out of service. He participated in numerous engagements, and being seriously wounded at the battle in Centralia, Mo., was in the hospital for three months. Coming to California in 1866, he located first in Woodland, Yolo county, as a rancher, going from there to Salinas, Monterey county, where he was similarly employed a number of seasons. In 1874 he came to Compton, and with the exception of nine years when he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in San Luis Obispo county, he has since been a resident of this place. He is now carrying on a substantial livery business, and as an undertaker and funeral director is painstaking, efficient and popular.

In Compton, October 21, 1874, Mr. Bise was united in marriage with Sarah A. Rogers, born in California, a daughter of Sylvester Rogers, who was born in Ohio, while his wife was a native of Missouri. Mr. Rogers came to Compton with the colony in the year 1867. Five children have been born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bise, namely: Ida, Mattie, Marion, Adenie and Sylvester. They have also an adopted son, Frank, whose father was killed in the battle of Manila. Politically Mr. Bise is active in Republican ranks, and for eight years served as deputy constable. He belongs to Shiloh Post No. 60, G. A. R., of Compton; to the Fraternal Brotherhood, and to the Fraternal Aid, of which Mrs. Bise is also a member. Both he and Mrs. Bise are valued members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and are everywhere respected and esteemed.

JACOB FRANK LOBINGIER. As a horticulturist and manufacturer Jacob F. Lobingier holds a high place among the representative citizens of Los Angeles county, where he has been located since 1888 and engaged since that time in the upbuilding of his personal fortune, while at the same time he has given his best efforts towards the material upbuilding and development of the section. The family of which he is the California representative is of French Huguenot and Swiss origin, although the name was established in America by his great-great-grandfather, Christopher Lobingier, who settled in Dauphin county, Pa., and served his adopted country in the Revolutionary war. The son of his ancestor, John, a scholarly gentleman who became a county judge and otherwise participated in the public affairs of his community, established the Lobingier Mills on Jacob's creek, on a turnpike road between Pittsburg and Baltimore. The interest in the mills passed from father to son, each combining farming with their milling operations. The father of our subject, also named Jacob, was a member of the first class in Bethany College and later became a farmer and merchant tanner at his birthplace in Westmoreland county, Pa. He took a prominent part in public affairs and served as justice of the peace, and as postmaster for many years in the town of Laurelville. His death occurred in June, 1887, removing from the community a citizen of worth and works and one whose place could never be filled. He was an educated and scholarly gentleman, had taken a strong interest on all educational topics, and numbered among his friends many of the most notable men of his commonwealth. He left a wife, a daughter, and three sons, his wife's maiden name being Lillias Stewart. She was a native of Somerset county, Pa., and a daughter of Andrew Stewart, of Scotch descent, who became a resident of Somerset, where he served for many years as justice of the peace. Mr. and Mrs. Lobingier had six children, of whom three are now living, one son, Henry Schell, who graduated from Bethany College in 1873, became a clergyman of distinction in the Christian Church. His death occurred in 1887 at Pomona. The oldest son, Quincy A., lives at San Gabriel, the subject of this sketch at Pomona, and Dr. Andrew Stewart is a practicing surgeon of Los Angeles.

Jacob Frank Lobingier was born in Westmoreland county, Pa., July 13, 1859, and reared in the town of his birthplace, Laurelville, and educated in its schools. He assisted his father when old enough in the tannery and mill, learning the trade of the former. After the death of his father he was appointed administrator and after settling up the estate he sold out and with his mother and sister and two brothers came to California. They located in Pomona, where Mr. Lobingier engaged in horticulture, locating on a twenty-acre ranch near Claremont, which he improved and cultivated to oranges and lemons. He continued in that location for sixteen years. In 1903 he disposed of these interests and is now engaged in the canning business at Ontario with the Golden State Fruit Company of which he is president. The cannery at Ontario has been gradually enlarged and increased in capacity. In 1906 they put up nearly two million cans, consuming four hundred tons of peaches. One hundred and ten cars of the season's output were shipped east. The favorite brands are the Regal, Euclid, Ruby Fiesta, Ontario and Riverside.

Mr. Lobingier is one of the prominent citizens of Pomona, taking an active and helpful interest in all public affairs. He is a director of the American National Bank, a member of the board of Library Trustees, a director in the Board of Trade and director in the Pomona Valley Hospital Association. He is a Republican in his political convictions and is a member of the Christian Church, in which he officiates as deacon. From 1904 to 1906 he served as a city trustee. He is a progressive and fair-minded citizen, and no man is more counted upon to uphold public enterprises.

NILS MALMBERG. Although apprenticed in youth to the machinist's trade, a preference for the occupation of painter led Mr. Malmberg to transfer his energies to the work more congenial to his tastes, and he has since proved to be an efficient and successful workman in the line of his chosen pursuit. While he devotes himself assiduously to the filling of contracts for painting, yet he finds leisure for other lines of activity. In his home are to be seen tables, clock, stands, etc., which are his handiwork and prove him to be a natural mechanic.

In the southern part of Sweden, across the sound from Denmark, lies the city of Helsingborg, one of the oldest in Sweden, where Nils Malmberg was born August 14, 1868. His father, Johnnes, a native of the same locality, is a machinist by trade, and still carries on a shop in that city. The mother, who bore the maiden name of Maria Pearson and who was born at Helsingborg, is now deceased. The family are of the Lutheran faith, as were their ancestors almost back to the time of the Reformation. Four daughters and one son comprised the original family, and all are now living except one daughter, but Nils, next to the oldest of the number, is the only one in America. Such advantages as common schools afforded were given him, but he has acquired his education by self-culture rather than by school training.

When sixteen years of age Mr. Malmberg began to learn the trade of machinist, but after a year he took up painting as an apprentice and thoroughly learned the trade in all of its branches. Coming to the United States in 1889, he made a sojourn of several months at Marcus, Cherokee county, Iowa, and in December of the same year arrived at San Diego, where without delay he was successful in securing employment as a painter. In 1894 he began to take contracts for painting and has continued in the same line to the present time, meanwhile having charge of such work as the Sefton block, Isis theatre, Futton and Humphrey block, the Marston, and Dr. Burnham's, Major Moylan's, Sehon's and Mrs. Garrettson's residences, and since 1900 has had under his supervision all of the painting for the Theosophists at Point Loma Homestead. During the busy season he furnishes employment to from eight to twelve men, with whose aid he promptly and efficiently fills all of the contracts undertaken by him.

The Malmberg residence at No. 3435 C street, San Diego, is presided over by Mrs. Malmberg, formerly Miss Edith Holmquist, who was born in Salina, Kans., came to San Diego, in girlhood, was here married, and now has one son, John Waldo. Ever since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Malmberg has voted the Republican ticket, but at no time has he sought official honors or public emoluments, preferring to devote himself to his business affairs. Identified with the Master Painters' Association and the San Diego Builders' Exchange, he holds a position as trustee in the former. In fraternal relations he is a Mason (as was his father before him), an Odd Fellow and a member of the Rebekahs, belonging to Silver Gate Lodge No. 296, F. & A. M., in which he was made a Mason, and also holding membership with San Diego Lodge No. 153, I. O. O. F., in the work of which he has been an interested participant.

FREDERICK W. OTTE. Not far from the village of Oxnard, Ventura county, is located the ranch of F. W. Otte, a steady, enterprising farmer, and one who in many ways has added to the agricultural prestige of the community. He is a native of Germany, born June 17, 1869, the son of a farmer, the father following an agricultural life in the Fatherland until transferring his residence to the United States in 1886. Father and son were very closely associated in their interests, for as soon as the latter had completed his common school studies he entered vigorously into the duties connected with the management of the homestead, an interest which has never lessened in connection with the homestead established in the New World. For nine years they were associated in maintaining the ranch which the father purchased in Ventura county, but in 1895 the son began farming independently, in 1905 purchasing a tract of one hundred and sixty acres six miles from Oxnard, upon which he has since resided. At the time he purchased it there were few of the improvements seen on the place today. Beets and barley are made a specialty, although he also carries on general farming to some extent. Since leaving home he rented land for ten years in the county until he bought his present ranch.

While still working on the home farm with his father Mr. Otte formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Gusta Volkert, the ceremony being performed in 1892, and for three years the young people made their home near the father's ranch. Mrs. Otte was born in Ohio and is a daughter of Charles and Louisa Volkert. One son, Henry, has been born into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Otte.

In his native land Mr. Otte was trained in the faith of the Lutheran Church, and he still adheres to its teachings, as does also his wife, and they hold membership in the church of that denomination at Oxnard. Mr. Otte has not allied himself with either of the great political parties, but this does not indicate that he is not interested in the welfare of his adopted country; on the other hand he is keenly alive to its best interests, and after careful investigation as to the candidate's qualifications votes for the man best fitted for the position in question. He belongs to but one fraternal order, holding membership in the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

JOHN HANSEN. The Skyland summer resort is located high up in the San Bernardino range, on the Arrowhead road, where a delightful view is afforded the guest at all times, which in itself is refreshing were no other advantages to be gained from the high altitude and unpolluted air. Besides the hotel, there are ten cottages scattered about the grounds for the accommodation of guests who prefer to take their outing in this way, and for those who wish the less conventional camp life, tents and all the accompanying necessities can readily be supplied. The Skyland resort is under the capable management of Mr. Hansen, who is proving himself to be the right man in the right place.

A son of Johannas Christian and Hannah Magdalena (Skroder) Hansen, John Hansen was born in Hadersleben, a seaport town of Prussia, September 11, 1863. In the public and high schools of his native town he received a good education, graduating in 1879. Following the German custom of learning a trade, he was apprenticed to a machinist for four years, at the end of the appointed time coming forth a full-fledged machinist. During his school years he had exhibited a fondness for mechanics and had given the subject considerable thought and study, so that the years of his apprenticeship were spent in an agreeable pursuit. After following his trade for about a year failing eyesight made a change in his plans and finally resulted in his immigration to America. Landing in New York City September 7, 1880, he went to Phoenixville, Chester county, Pa., where for about nine months he was employed at his trade. Going to Cleveland, Ohio, at the end of this time he worked as a machinist there for about fifteen months, when he went still further west and in Cedar Falls, Iowa, became interested in farming. Besides carrying on agricultural pursuits there for four years he also did teaming. Leaving the middle west in the latter part of 1887, he arrived in San Bernardino December 17, and for one year was employed in the material yards of the Santa Fe Railroad. From there he went north to Sauvie Island, Multnomah county, Ore., where for eleven months he was employed in lumbering. Returning to San Bernardino at the end of this time he again entered the employ of the Santa Fe, acting as foreman of the yard until September 27, 1901, when he severed his connection with the company and accepted the position of gate keeper and road superintendent of a power company. Four years later, in May, 1905, he accepted a position with the county as road superintendent, giving this up, however, five months later to take charge of the Skyland resort, having been in charge here since October 15, 1905.

The marriage of John Hansen occurred October 30, 1890, and united him with Charlotte Christine Rasmussen, the daughter of Nels Severin and Charlotte C. (Vanding) Rasmussen. Mrs. Hansen was born in Kolding, Denmark, October 26, 1863, and in 1890 came to the United States, locating in San Bernardino, Cal., where her marriage occurred soon afterward. Three children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hansen, the eldest of whom, Johannas Christian, died at the age of three years and ten months; Eda Frederica was born February 15, 1892; and the youngest child, Olga Helen, was born May 29, 1900. Politically Mr. Hansen is a believer in Democratic principles, although he is not what is termed a politician, and has never aspired to public office holding. Fraternally he belongs to Arrowhead Tent No. 12, K. O. T. M., in which he has held a number of offices.

WILLIAM LAMONT OLMSTEAD. Identified with the manufacturing interests of Redlands, William Lamont Olmstead is now acting as secretary and manager for the San Bernardino Lumber & Box Company, with his business office located in San Bernardino and his home in this city, at the corner of Clark and Alvarado streets. Mr. Olmstead came to California in 1889. He is a native of Pennsylvania, where his birth occurred in Wyoming county, near Tunkhannock, November 10, 1858. His father, Edward, was a teacher in the public schools and later in life a manufacturer, his death being caused from injuries received while in this work. His mother was Martha Lockwood, in maidenhood, a native of Connecticut and a daughter of William Lockwood, the latter a farmer in what is now Scranton, Pa. Mrs. Olmstead was also a teacher in her young womanhood; she became the mother of two children and died when this son was but five years old. He was brought up on a farm in Wyoming county and attended the district schools in pursuit of an education, which course was supplemented by a few months spent at the Keystone Academy. At the age of eighteen years he began teaching in his native county, and in that location remained so occupied for about thirteen years. During this time he studied pharmacy. In 1889 he came to the Pacific coast and located in Uniontown, Eastern Washington, and engaged in the drug business in that town for about three years, when he sold out and purchasing a drug establishment in Farmington, same state, he conducted the same for the period of six months. He then moved his interests to Northport, Wash., and after one year moved it again to Ritzville, same state, and shortly afterward became interested in the banking business there, disposing of his drug store to assume the position of discount clerk in the First National Bank of Ritzville, in which he was a director. He held this position two years, when in 1902 he resigned, and having previously, in 1901, made a trip to California and purchased an orange grove at Redlands, he came south and became permanently located here. He now owns seventeen acres on Redlands street and Fifth avenue, all devoted to navel oranges. In the meantime he has become variously interested in commercial affairs in this section, at present serving as president of the Security Investment Company, of Redlands, which owns the Commercial Company; is a member of East Redlands Water Company, and is a director and the vice-president of same; was one of the organizers of the Redlands Golden Orange Association and a director from its inception; and in the reorganization of the San Bernardino Lumber & Box Company he was a potent factor. This latter business now occupies a large part of his time and attention. This enterprise is located in San Bernardino, where they have a planing mill and box factory, with a capacity of fifty thousand feet per day. They have mills in the mountains near Skyland, where they manufacture lumber for their own use. Since January 1, 1907, Mr. Olmstead has assumed active management in this work, and is now serving as its manager and secretary, and is destined to bring the enterprise to rank with the foremost of its character in Southern California.

In Wyoming county, Pa., Mr. Olmstead was united in marriage with Miss Alice M. Hodgson, a native of Daleville, Pa., and a graduate of the Indiana State Normal at Valparaiso. They have four children, namely: Edward L., engaged in the real estate business in Anaheim; Nellie I.. Edith M. and Paul H., at home. Fraternally Mr. Olmstead was made a Mason in Ritzville Lodge No. 101, F. & A. M., and an Odd Fellow in Pennsylvania, joining the lodge of the latter organization in Ritzville, of which he is past grand, and now belongs to Redlands Lodge No. 341, I. O. O. F. He is a member of the First Congregational Church, of Redlands, and politically is a Republican.

FRANK WALTER JOHNSON. There is no enterprise of its kind better known throughout the Pomona valley than the Pomona Valley Ice Company, of which Mr. Johnson is the able manager. His identification with the ice business dates from the year 1902, when he became an employe of the Pasadena Ice Company and as their representative established a branch office in Pomona. The following year he was transferred to Los Angeles and placed in charge as manager of that branch, a position which he filled with credit to himself and with the greatest satisfaction to his superiors until February, 1906. It was on the latter date that his identification with the Pomona Valley Ice Company began, he being a stockholder in the concern. In the fall of 1905 the company erected its present modern ice plant at the corner of East Second and Reservoir streets, which has a capacity for turning out thirty-five tons of ice per day. In close proximity to the manufacturing building proper is a large brick storage warehouse, 60x120x30 feet high, with a capacity for storing three thousand tons of ice. To such an extent has the business increased in scope that more storage space has become a necessity, and it is the intention of the stockholders to erect a suitable building for this purpose in the spring of 1907.

The Johnson family was one of the oldest in Virginia, and during the Revolutionary war some of its members were represented among the defenders of the colonists' cause. From such information as can be gathered from the records of the grandfather, Martin Johnson, was the first to remove from the Old Dominion and establish the family in Indiana, where he taught school. The next in line of descent was W. A., who was born in Madison county, Ind., and during his earlier years he followed farming in that county. The call to arms in 1861 found him among the number who laid aside their farm implements to shoulder the musket in defense of their country's honor, and after his term of service had expired he once more took up his farming duties in Indiana. About 1880 he removed to Kansas City, Mo., and engaged in the real-estate business, following this for about four years, when, in 1884, he came to California, and since that time has followed the same business in Los Angeles, his office being at No. 109 South Broadway. His service in the Union army entitles him to membership in the Grand Army of the Republic. His wife, formerly Sarah Cook, was also born in Indiana, and is now living in Los Angeles. All of the six children born to these worthy parents are still living, and of the number Frank W. is next to the oldest.

At Huntsville, Madison county, Ind., not far from Anderson, Frank W. Johnson was born March 12, 1870, and the first ten years of his life were associated with that locality. The removal of the family at that time to Kansas City brought a complete change into his life, for though he was little more than a child in years he began to prepare himself for future business, and from then until fourteen years of age was an apprentice to the upholsterer's trade with the Abernethy Furniture Company. Coming to California in 1884, he worked as upholsterer in the employ of John Bloser of Los Angeles for two years, and for the same length of time worked in the same capacity for the Los Angeles Furniture Company. With an ambition which has ever been one of his marked characteristics he set about to improve his neglected education (his only training of this character being received prior to his tenth year) and during the four years of his residence in Los Angeles he attended night school and commercial college. Going to Bonner Springs, Kans., in 1888, he was associated with his father in the butcher business for two years, and thereafter returned to Los Angeles, where for several years he worked as a butcher in the employ of Charles Kesner. From Los Angeles he went to San Bernardino county, where for a time he was in the employ of the Bear Valley Irrigation Company, still later going to Chino and engaging in beet-raising. From Chino he came to Pomona in 1894, becoming interested in the butcher business once more as an employe in the market of Richard Gird. Some years later he became proprietor of an establishment of his own, purchasing the trade of C. W. Fosdick, and continuing the business at the corner of Second and Main streets for four years. Prior to this, however, he had worked at the upholsterer's trade for three years with Wright Brothers and Rice. Upon disposing of his meat market in 1902 he entered the employ of the Pasadena Ice Company in May of that year, and his rise from that position to the present managership of the Pomona Valley Ice Company has already been enlarged upon. Besides being a stockholder in the latter company he also holds stock in the Pasadena Ice Company.

In Pomona Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Miss Emma Nora Mosher, who was born in Hartford, Kans., and two children have been born to them, Frank Kenneth and Lois Merle. The family have a pleasant home in Pomona, besides which Mr. Johnson owns a residence in Los Angeles. Mr. Johnson and his wife are members of the Christian Church and are in deep sympathy with the Prohibition movement, Mr. Johnson voting for the candidates of that party whenever the opportunity is offered. His membership in the Board of Trade is indicative of his interest in the welfare of his home city, where he is known as an enterprising and capable business man. Fraternally he belongs to several organizations, having been made a Mason in Pomona Lodge No. 246, and his name is also on the membership roll of the Fraternal Aid, Fraternal Brotherhood and the Knights of the Maccabees.

BEARRY ROBERTS. One of the finest ranches in Southern California is owned by Bearry Roberts, who is among the oldest settlers in the state, having arrived here in 1852. He was born September 18, 1836, in Conway county, Ark., the son of Jesse and Mary (Applin) Roberts. The father was a farmer in Arkansas and died in that state when Bearry, who was the youngest son, was a mere baby. The mother, who was a native of Tennessee, brought the family to California in 1852, but later returned to Texas, where her death occurred. Of the six children in the family Bearry Roberts is the only one now living. He lived on the farm in Arkansas until fifteen years old, when he crossed the plains, driving a team of four yoke oxen, guiding the animals from the back of the wheel ox. The party started April 10 and after a comparatively uneventful trip arrived in Mariposa on the first day of October. Mr. Roberts worked at mining for five years, then removed to San Bernardino county, and in December, 1857, located on a ranch and began stock raising. He has been living in his present home for thirty years, the ranch being situated in San Timoteo cañon, Riverside county, and comprising two hundred acres of highly improved land, the greater part of which is under irrigation, the water being secured from San Timoteo creek. He owns some of the finest cattle in the county of the Shorthorn and Durham breeds and has twenty-five dairy cows of high grade. He also possesses some blooded horses, among them being one, Clyde, a large bay English shire horse bred from an imported sire, which is acknowledged to be one of the best breeding horses in the valley. The crop to which the largest acreage is devoted is alfalfa, six cuttings of hay being secured in one year. The ranch is located six miles from Redlands and is one of the most valuable properties in that section.

In Mariposa county Mr. Roberts was married to Miss Frances Thomas, a native of Missouri, her death occurring on the ranch many years ago. They became the parents of twelve children, nine of whom are living: William, a ranchman of Mill Creek cañon, San Bernardino county; Ozrow, a farmer of San Timoteo cañon; Edward, a farmer at Crafton; Lee, residing in San Bernardino; Early, at home; Archie, of San Bernardino; Emma, the wife of Alfred Beach, living in Mexico; Nettie and Ida, both of whom are married and live in Oregon. Mr. Robert's second marriage was to Miss Maggie Leonard of North Carolina, and her death took place some years ago. Fraternally he holds membership in Token Lodge No. 290, I. O. O. F. at San Bernardino, of which he is past noble grand, and also belongs to the Encampment. He is also a member of the San Bernardino Pioneers society. He has always taken an active interest in educational matters, and was one of the organizers of the El Casco school district and for seven years served as a director.

JAMES B. RAYNER. As an upbuilder of Redlands Mr. Rayner has been an interested witness and participant in the development of its resources and has assisted materially in enhancing its commercial importance. He came to California in 1886 and a month later located in Redlands, where he has ever since resided. He was born in Piqua, Ohio, December 5, 1846, a son of William, who was a native of Sheffield, England, a son of John, a builder by occupation, who emigrated to America and settled in Piqua, Ohio. William Rayner engaged as a carpenter and builder, and also in farming near Piqua, where his death eventually occurred. His wife, formerly Rachel Valentine, was born in Piqua, a daughter of William Valentine, of English descent, her death also occurring in Ohio. Of their two children James B. is the only one living.

Reared in Piqua, James B. Rayner received his education in the public schools, and after graduating from the high school of his native town he went to Lebanon and became a student in the Normal School there. Upon returning home he entered a drug store and remained so occupied for the period of three years, when he returned to his early training and became a farmer. In October, 1871, he came west and in Colorado Springs followed carpentering and building, removing in 1874 to South Park, on the South Platte river, where he purchased and improved a cattle ranch, his brand being a double circle. He remained in this business for about twelve years. January 1, 1886, he came to Southern California, remained for about a month in Los Angeles and then came to Redlands, where he purchased a tract of two and a half acres on the corner of Center and Clifton and three and a half acres on the corner of Center and Walnut, set them to oranges and improved with a residence and necessary barns and outbuildings. In time he sold them both. He was one of the organizers of the Domestic Water Company and served as its secretary for one year during the time the system was constructed. Later he disposed of his interest in this concern, and gave his attention to other pursuits. He was variously interested in upbuilding enterprises of Redlands. He assisted in organizing the Union Bank of Redlands and acted as director for five years; also was interested in the Windsor hotel company, and with others, was instrumental in bringing the Southern Pacific Railroad to the town; in building the first horse-car line here, and in the erection of the Young Men's Christian Association. He is also interested in property in Huntington Beach. Because of impaired health he retired from active business cares and is now residing at No. 152 Fourth street, Redlands.

In Colorado Springs, May 10, 1877, Mr. Rayner was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Shideler, a native of Hampton, Iowa, and a daughter of Thomas Shideler, who was born in Ohio and married in Indiana Anna Fullhart, a native of Ohio, and together they located in Iowa and established their home. He followed the trade of blacksmith and later was a merchant in Hampton. He next located in Michigan, and thence in 1869 came to Colorado Springs, Colo., where he now resides, his wife having passed away in June, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Rayner had one child, Laura Myrtle, who died in 1887, at the age of nine years. Both himself and wife are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of Redlands. When they first came to this city there was no church of this denomination, so they attended the Congregational Church until 1887, when sixteen Methodists organized a congregation and in 1890 built the first church, Mr. Rayner officiating as treasurer on the building committee. He is a Republican and a practical and public-spirited citizen, eager to assist in every movement which has for its end the general welfare of the community and the public.

WILLIAM H. SINGLETON, manager of the W. S. dairy and the Singleton ranch, in the San Timoteo cañon, is an up-to-date and progressive rancher, has proven an upbuilder in various lines in Southern California, and has achieved a success which places him among the representative citizens of this section. A native Californian, William Henry Singleton was born in San Bernardino, July 11, 1861, a son of Ann (Singleton) Wilshire and Henry Wilshire, a pioneer of this section, who was accidentally killed. His widow married Hiram Haskell, also an early settler of California, and who died in this valley. She had a son and daughter by her first marriage, William H., previously mentioned, and Martha, who became the wife of E. M. Van Deventer, who died at her home in 1906; by her second marriage she had three children: James, assisting in the management of the W. S. dairy; Robert, who died at the age of thirty years; and Ella, who became Mrs. Steedman, and died in Berkeley at the age of twenty-five years. Mrs. Haskell still survives and lives in the old home. The children by her first marriage were both adopted by their maternal grandmother, Mrs. Ann Singleton, who was born in Lancashire, England, as was her husband, James Singleton, their marriage taking place in the Mother country, after which in 1853 they came to America and located in Utah. Four years later they came to Southern California and in San Bernardino established their home for a time, in 1868 locating on the Rubideaux grant of forty-four hundred and forty acres, where the death of James Singleton occurred in 1881. His wife died in 1894. They had two children, William, who resides on this ranch and is represented elsewhere in this volume; and Ann, previously mentioned.

Reared on the old Singleton place William Henry Singleton received his education in the public school, his attendance, however, being limited, the fund of information and knowledge possessed in his manhood being the result of observation and personal research rather than scholastic training. From boyhood he learned the stock business and general farming, and upon the death of his grandfather he assumed charge of the ranch, being then twenty years old. He has continued the work since, enlarging the enterprise until he is now cultivating fifteen hundred acres more than the original farm, which was about four thousand acres, of which twenty-five hundred acres are tillable. He has one hundred acres given over to alfalfa and irrigated by natural springs. He has established a magnificient dairy known as the W. S. Dairy, supplied by one hundred and twenty-five cows of Holstein and Durham stock, and he also has installed a creamery, operated by a gasoline engine, a modern churn and separator of large capacity, and every possible equipment both for dispatch and excellence. He gives some time to the breeding of draft horses, having about sixty head at the present writing.

Mr. Singleton is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of Token Lodge No. 146, I. O. O. F., of San Bernardino; the Elks of Redlands, and Redlands Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West. Politically he is a stanch Democrat, and has been a member of the Riverside county central committee for the past eight years. He takes a strong interest in educational affairs, and for several years served as school trustee and clerk of the board in the El Casco district.

THOMAS H. BUNFORD. Prominent among the men of our times who have accumulated wealth through their own unaided efforts, and are well worthy of the honored title of self-made men, is Thomas H. Bunford, of Long Beach, Los Angeles county. Inheriting in no small measure habits of thrift and industry, he was also endowed with that peculiar vein of grit and determination that is essentially American, and by means of these he has steadily pursued the even tenor of his way, steadily mounting the ladder of financial success, and is now living retired from the activities of life. A son of the late Richard Bunford, he was born, January 24, 1842, in Pittsburg, Pa.

A native of Pennsylvania, Richard Bunford spent his early life in that state following the trade of a shoemaker. In 1842 he removed with his family to Ohio, becoming a pioneer settler. Taking up land, he improved a good farm from the wild tract, and was subsequently engaged in general farming until his death, in 1900, at the venerable age of eighty-seven years. He married Caroline Herbert, who died on the Ohio homestead in 1845.

Being taken by his parents to Ohio when an infant, Thomas H. Bunford received his early knowledge of books in the typical log schoolhouse, a rude structure, with a puncheon floor and slab seats. Leaving home when seventeen years old, he learned the blacksmith's trade, at which he worked about four years. In the spring of 1863 he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Forty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served for a year and a half, the larger part of the time being connected with the Heavy Artillery. Losing his health, he was honorably discharged at Camp Chase, Ohio, in the fall of 1864. Returning home, he worked at his trade two years or more, and in 1867 went to Glenrock, Neb., where he bought land, and was employed in farming and blacksmithing for a quarter of a century, meeting with excellent success in his operations. Coming to California in 1892, he located first in Pomona, Los Angeles county, where he purchased ten acres of land, and for nine years was prosperously engaged in general ranching. He made many improvements on the property, among others building a pumping plant, with a well four hundred feet in depth. Selling his ranch in March, 1902, he came to Long Beach, and having bought a building lot erected a modern five-room cottage, in which he has since resided, enjoying in a quiet manner the fruits of his previous years of toil.

In Nebraska, November 26, 1879, Mr. Bunford married Mary V. Jones, a daughter of John M. Jones, who was born in Wales, and died in Ohio. Politically Mr. Bunford has always been a stanch adherent of the Republican party, and socially he belongs to Vicksburg Post No. 61, G. A. R., of Pomona.

MRS. HELEN C. CARPENTER. Though not one of the pioneers of Long Beach, where she now resides, Mrs. Carpenter has made her home in California for more than a quarter of a century and has witnessed its material development during the most important era of its history. The family of which she is an honored member became established in America during the eighteenth century, when her paternal grandfather crossed the ocean from Germany and settled in the commonwealth of Maryland. Her father, Daniel Hauptman, was born in Maryland and while still quite young enlisted for service in the war of 1812, where he participated in the battle of Bladensburg and other engagements of that historic struggle. The war ended, he was honorably discharged from his country's service and returned home to resume the pursuits of civic life. While the city of Washington was still in its infancy he became one of its pioneers and established a small tin shop which grew with the development of the city, until eventually he controlled a business as extensive as it was important. Among the business men of the city he was honored for his strict integrity, high principles of honor and accommodating disposition. For more than fifty years he was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Washington, whose early growth he fostered and whose doctrines he made it his aim to exemplify in all business transactions and social intercourse. As soldier, business man and Christian, he lived a life above reproach, and in his family relations he was especially thoughtful and affectionate. The memory of his sterling manhood and affectionate care will always linger in the heart of his daughter, the only survivor of his eleven children. March 27, 1817, he married Margaret Michael, a native of Germany, and their union was one of mutual helpfulness until death came to separate them. The wife was the first to pass away, her death occurring April 2, 1865, and he departed this life October 9, 1873, at the advanced age of eighty-two years.

In the city of Washington, where she was born and reared, Miss Hauptman received the advantages of fair educational facilities, and there she was united in marriage, November 12, 1868, with George W. Carpenter, a native of New York, born in 1840, but from early life a resident of Washington. For a considerable period Mr. Carpenter engaged in the grocery business in his home city, but about 1872 he and his wife removed to Kansas and became property-owners in that then new and undeveloped region. Ill health led them to dispose of their interests in Kansas in 1879 and thereupon they sought the genial climate of the Pacific coast, where, after a brief sojourn in Los Angeles, they settled at Artesia. For twelve years Mr. Carpenter engaged in the meat business in that town and there he died in 1893, leaving his wife with a daughter, Maude, and a son, Morris H., the latter now a resident of Los Angeles. During the year 1900 Mrs. Carpenter and her daughter made a tour of the east and spent some time at her old home in the capital city. While there Miss Maude was taken ill and passed away on the 21st of November. Just at the threshold of young womanhood, twenty-one years of age, and of gentle and companionable disposition, her death was a heavy blow to her mother and shock to her circle of friends in California, where the remains were brought for burial. The year after this bereavement Mrs.

Carpenter removed to Long Beach and here for a time she owned considerable real estate, but this she has sold with the exception of a house on Pine avenue and her beautiful residence at No. 407 East Seventh street, where she is passing the afternoon of her life in quiet contentment. From early childhood she has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a contributor to its benevolences. One of her most treasured possessions is the old family Bible, a book of extraordinary size, bearing the year 1816 as the date of publication.

JOSHUA ANDREWS. One and one-half miles north of Long Beach, at the postoffice of Burnett, lies the valuable country homestead of Mr. Andrews, who purchased the property about 1890 and has since resided at this place. At the time of coming here, Long Beach was an insignificant hamlet, whose future popularity only the most sanguine predicted. The ten acres which he then purchased are now valued at more than $1,000 per acre, the increase in value being largely due to the rapid growth of the town. The residence which he erected is of brick and stands on the corner of Hill street and California avenue; in location it offers many advantages to its occupants, to whom it gives the charm of country life with the facilities connected with close proximity to a growing city.

Of Canadian birth, Mr. Andrews was born in Toronto August 29, 1838, being a son of Robert and Susan (Long) Andrews, natives of England. After coming to Canada the father followed the occupation of a farmer until his death, which occurred about 1843; for many years he was survived by his wife, who attained an advanced age and died in 1890. Their son, Joshua, received rather meagre advantages as a boy, for the early death of his father forced him to earn his own livelihood from an early age. When he was fifteen years old he became an apprentice to the trade of blacksmith and carriage-maker, and upon attaining his majority he started in business for himself, opening a shop at Toronto which he carried on for five years. Afterward he was employed in a large machine shop and later engaged in business for himself, operating a shop until he sold out in order to remove to the Pacific coast.

At the close of a voyage made via Panama, Mr. Andrews landed in California May 1, 1878, and for a time he worked at his trade in Oakland and San Francisco, but eventually moved to Southern California, arriving in Los Angeles county July 1, 1884. For a time he engaged in business at Downey and later made his home at Norwalk, but on selling out there he removed to the place where he still resides, retired from the active cares of life and looking after the subdividing of his property in town lots. On establishing domestic ties in Canada, he was married December 1, 1861, to Miss Dinah E. Moat, a native of England. Four children came to bless their union, but one of these died in infancy. Those now living are as follows: Robert J., who makes his home at Santa Ana; Amelia Mary; Elizabeth, wife of George H. Bixby, who is represented elsewhere in this volume; and Richard Long, who is engaged in farming and the dairy business at East Clearwater, Los Angeles county. During his residence in Canada Mr. Andrews formed social affiliations with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, but when he came to Southern California, he found no organizations of either order in the towns where he settled, so he allowed his membership to lapse. Since taking upon himself the pledge of citizenship to our government he has affiliated with the Democratic party, but in local elections he considers the candidate's opinions upon the tariff question of less importance than his character as a man and his intelligence as a citizen.

SAMUEL L. LENT. Although he has been a resident of Long Beach but a few years, Samuel L. Lent has in that time thoroughly demonstrated his ability as a business man and worth as a public-spirited citizen and official, being now a member of the board of trustees of the city. The family is of Dutch extraction, seven brothers having come from Holland in an early day and settled in New York state. The grandfather of Samuel L. Lent, Abram, was one of the early pioneers of Ohio. The father, Lewis Lent, was born in Ohio, September 16, 1836, and at the breaking out of the Civil war enlisted in the Twenty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, from which he was honorably discharged eighteen months later on account of physical disability. In 1867 he removed to Erie county, Pa., engaged in agricultural pursuits and still resides there. His wife was before her marriage Mary Murry, a native of Dublin, Ireland, who with her parents came to Buffalo, N. Y., about 1842. Her father, James Murry, subsequently removed with his family to Ohio; he died while serving in the Mexican war. The death of Mrs. Lent occurred in Pennsylvania in 1869.

The birth of Samuel L. Lent occurred January 21, 1861, on a farm near Coshocton, Ohio, and when six years of age was taken by his parents to Erie county, Pa., where his boyhood days were spent on his father's farm.

He received a preliminary education in the public schools, then attended the state Normal school at Edinboro, and later was a student in Hillsdale College at Hillsdale, Mich., for one year. In 1883 he removed to St. Paul, Minn., and was occupied as an accountant in a mercantile establishment until 1887.

In 1885, while living in St. Paul, he was united in marriage with Fannie E. Armstrong, a native of Utica, Licking county, Ohio, who was educated in a private school in Pana, Ill., and later in St. Paul, Minn. She is the daughter of John H. Armstrong, who was born in Pennsylvania and settled in Ohio when it was still out on the frontier. Mr. Armstrong served for three years in McKinley's regiment, the Twenty-third Ohio, and after the war engaged in contracting and building in St. Paul, in 1896 coming to Long Beach, where he is now engaged in the same business. He is a member of the grand Army of the Republic and fraternally affiliates with the Masonic lodge. His wife, who is still living, was before her marriage Mary M. Selby, a native of Ohio and daughter of Rev. Enoch George Selby, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. His father, Caleb Selby, of Baltimore, married Nancy Longworth. The family on the maternal side is traced to the Conard family of Quaker stock. Nathan Conrad was one of the first Ohio settlers, coming from Virginia in 1805, and later laid out the city of Utica, Ohio. The family were members of the Friends Society.

In 1887 Mr. Lent went to Rat Portage, Lake of the Woods, Canada, and the succeeding three years was engaged in the lumber business there. He then came to the coast, and settling in Victoria, British Columbia, was occupied with construction contracting on the Northern Pacific Railroad. In 1893 he came to California and engaged in construction work for the Southern Pacific between Santa Margarita and Santa Barbara, doing some of the heaviest work there for eighteen months, after which he went to San Francisco and took contracts for street construction in that city. Later he became a gold miner in Siskiyou county at the mouth of the Salmon river, employing the hydraulic method. Returning to San Francisco in 1902 he remained there until 1904, when he came to Long Beach and engaged in the real-estate business.

In the spring of 1906 Mr. Lent was nominated on the Independent ticket as a candidate for city councilman and was subsequently elected. He has proven himself an earnest and efficient official, is chairman of the public works committee and member of other important committees. In national politics he is an advocate of Republican principles. Fraternally he holds membership in the Masonic bodies and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He was made a Mason in Keewatin, Ontario, and is still a member of Keewatin Lodge No. 417, A. F. & F. M.; belongs to California Chapter No. 5, R. A. M., in San Francisco; to Golden Gate Commandery No. 16, K. T., in San Francisco; and is a Thirty-second Degree Scottish Rite Mason, holding membership in San Francisco Consistory No. 1, and is a member of Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., in San Francisco. He was secretary of the Twenty-ninth Triennial Conclave of the Grand Encampment, Knights Templar, which held its session in the city of San Francisco in September, 1904. Socially he is a member of the Cosmopolitan Club, and also is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce of Long Beach. His membership in the First Congregational Church signifies an interest in religious matters. As an all-around well developed citizen, who lets no part of the life of the community go without his studious attention, he is universally recognized as a man of unusually broad intelligence and good judgment and is justly entitled to the high respect and esteem he is accorded by the community in which he resides.

DANIEL W. ANDERSON. In the rapid advancement and growth of Long Beach, Daniel W. Anderson has proved himself a prominent factor. As a real-estate dealer and speculator he has made many important deals, and while building up a lucrative business for himself has also been an encourager and promoter of all proposed beneficial projects. A native of Kentucky, he was born in Clark county, in February, 1847. His parents, Preston and Eliza Anderson, moved from Virginia, their native state, to Kentucky as pioneers, and were engaged in farming throughout their lives, both dying young.

Left an orphan when six years old, D. W. Anderson had but limited educational advantages, attending for a few terms, only, a subscription school. In 1865 he went to Monroe county, Iowa, where he worked by the month for two years. On attaining his majority he leased land and for two years managed it successfully. Purchasing then one hundred and twenty acres in Monroe county he operated it for two years, and then sold out, and the following four years farmed on rented land. Buying then a ranch of two hundred and forty acres, in the same county, he improved it, and carried on general farming for seven years. Disposing of that property, he subsequently purchased one hundred and sixty acres in the southern part of Monroe county, and eighty acres of adjoining land in Appanoose county. The first-named tract he afterwards sold, but the other eighty acres he still owns. After farming there for ten years he came to Los Angeles county, locating at Long Beach in 1900, and has since acquired title to much valuable city property. He first bought five acres on Junipero street, between Fourth and Seventh streets; his next purchase was five acres south of this, on Seventh street; then, south of the home lot, he bought two and one-half acres; subsequently he became owner of three acres at the corner of Fourth and Junipero streets, and of two acres across from this. On the home lot where he resided for five years, he added many improvements. At the corner of Second and Bonito streets he owns a lot 100x150 feet, on which is a building which has been remodeled for apartments. He has sold all of his acre property, having held it for a time for the purpose of making improvements.

March 4, 1869, in Iowa, Mr. Anderson married Harriet Phinney, who was born in that state. Of the eleven children that have been born to them, two died in infancy, and nine survive, namely: Charles, of Duarte; Dora, wife of Dr. Albert Winn, of San Pedro; Melvin, of Pasadena; Esley, of Los Angeles; William, of Compton; Elmer, of Sonora, Mexico; Arthur, an engineer on the Santa Fe Railway, residing at The Needles; Vern, at home, and Bertha, attending the Long Beach high school. Politically Mr. Anderson is identified with the Democratic party, and fraternally he has been a Mason since 1876, being a member of the lodge at Unionville, Iowa. Mrs. Anderson is a most estimable woman, and a valued member of the Christian Church.

OZROW ROBERTS. One of the oldest settlers of San Timoteo cañon is Ozrow Roberts who has been located here since his first independent venture in young manhood, for he boasts a nativity of the state in which he is now making his home. He is a son of Bearry Roberts, an honored pioneer of this section whose biography is given at length on another page of this volume. Ozrow Roberts was born in San Bernardino county, January 19, 1860, and here reared to young manhood, receiving his education in the public schools. He remained at home helping his father until he was twenty-seven years old, when he decided to become dependent upon his own resources, and accordingly leased land and engaged in farming for the period of one year, when he located on a small farm given him by his father, and with this rents three hundred and sixty acres adjoining, all devoted to grain and pasture land, while he also raises cattle. In Redlands, May 12, 1887, he married Miss Julia Bowles, who was born in Montgomery county, Mo., and born of this union are five children, namely: Ruby, a student of the Redlands high school in the class of 1908; Hazel, a student of the Redlands high school in the class of 1909; Arthur, Jane and Margaret. Mrs. Roberts is a daughter of James Anderson Bowles, the descendant of Gideon Bowles, who came to Virginia from Ireland in 1620, and was one of the first citizens of Jamestown. Her grandfather, David Bowles, was born in Georgeland county, Va., December 31, 1804, and was brought to St. Louis county, Mo., in 1811, where he grew to manhood and married Julia Mackay, who was descended from James Mackay, who was born in Scotland in 1762 and came to America in 1782, and engaged as a civil engineer until his death, which occurred in 1822. In 1836 congress conferred to the Mackay heirs one hundred thousand acres of land in Lincoln, St. Charles, Boone, Franklin, Washington, Iron and St. Louis counties in Missouri. James Anderson Bowles, father of Mrs. Roberts, was born in St. Louis county, Mo., March 28, 1826, and there engaged as a farmer, serving in a Missouri regiment in the Confederate army during the Civil war, in which two of his brothers were killed. In 1886 he located in Redlands, Cal., and engaged in horticulture, setting out an orange grove on West Cypress avenue, where he made his home until his death, which occurred in 1904. His wife was formerly Elizabeth Williams, a native of White county, Mo., a daughter of Elijah Williams, a native of Virginia, from which state he removed to Missouri and engaged as an extensive farmer. Mrs. Bowles died in Redlands in 1896, at the age of sixty-two years. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom seven are no wliving. Mrs. Roberts being the sixth in order of birth.

Mr. Roberts is now engaged in the development of the Bryn Mawr Water Company, of Redlands Junction, and also on his own ranch, having had seven wells drilled in the past eight years. He has worked for the county in superintending the installation of a pumping plant, and has developed a fifty inch flow. For the past eight years he has served as road overseer of his district, being elected to the office by the Democratic party, of whose principles he is a stanch adherent. He has served as a member of the Democratic County Central Committee, and is now serving as a member of the school board of the El Casco district and officiates as clerk of the board. The family support the charities of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which Mrs. Roberts is a devoted member.

HENRY H. RANDALL. Born in Newbury, Vt., April 1, 1870, Henry H. Randall passed his boyhood with his parents on the farm near Jeffersonville, in that state, and in California, where his father brought him when about five years of age. He was educated in the public schools of his native town and later in the Peachem Academy, completing his education at the Newbury Seminary. After leaving school Mr. Randall took a position as bookkeeper with A. M. McAllister in his meat market at Wells River, Vt.

In December, 1890, he made his second trip to California, arriving in Los Angeles, where he remained several months. In 1891 he went to Folsom, Sacramento county, to visit an uncle, whose death occurred during his stay of one year. Returning east to South Ryegate, Vt., he married Agnes G. Hotchkiss on her birthday, August 17, 1892, and after a wedding trip to Boston, Mr. Randall accompanied by his wife returned to Los Angeles. After a brief stay in that city he then proceeded to Folsom to look after valuable property interests there, consisting of five hundred and twenty acres of land under cultivation and the extensive irrigation ditch known as the John Hancock Irrigating & Mining Ditch. He did not remain in California at that time, but made several removals to the old home in the Green Mountain state and back again, until in 1899, when he sold out his interests there and removed to Sherman, Cal., to become a permanent resident. After coming to the little town in the beautiful Cahuenga valley, Mr. Randall built a comfortable home and prospered as a dealer in hay and grain until his death, which occurred June 12, 1903.

George N. Randall, father of Henry, was also a native of Vermont, a substantial farmer of South Ryegate, where he died January 1, 1903, aged sixty-eight years. The mother of Mr. Randall was Martha W. Hancock, born in the old Hancock house, Woodsville, N. H. She was the mother of three children, Mary, Henry H. and Lizzie. Martha Hancock Randall died at Jeffersonville, Vt., February 26, 1887, aged forty-nine years and six months.

Mrs. Randall's father, Henry Ira Hotchkiss, born in Stratford, N. H., in 1847, was a soldier in the Civil war. At the age of sixteen years he enlisted in the Thirtieth Maine Infantry, but toward the close of the war, his health failing, he was sent to a hospital, and the war ending before he was able to return to duty in his regiment, he was given an honorable discharge and pensioned by the government in 1869. Mr. Hotchkiss was possessed of considerable inventive genius and sold a number of patents; two of the best and most profitable were an automatic cradle and a mop wringer. He was also engaged in the grocery and hotel business during his life. His death occurred December 5, 1890, at South Ryegate, Vt. The mother, Martha Buchanan Hotchkiss, was a native of South Ryegate, born in March, 1847. She was the mother of two children, namely, Mrs. Randall, and a son, William E. Hotchkiss, who is a sheet metal worker and plumber by trade living in Hollywood. In politics Mr. Hotchkiss was a Republican and both himself and wife were members of the Congregational Church.

Mrs. Agnes Georgiana (Hotchkiss) Randall was born in Berlin Falls, N. H., August 17, 1870. Mr. and Mrs. Randall were the parents of three children: John Hancock, born in Bradford, Vt., December 2, 1893; Reginald H., born in Monroe, N. H., October 6, 1898; Aretha, born in Sherman, Cal., January 7, 1902. In politics Mr. Randall was a Republican.

CLARK DURANT HUBBARD. A horticulturist of broad experience, with a natural taste for his chosen occupation, Clark Durant Hubbard, of San Fernando, has done much to promote and advance the interests of the fruit growers of this section of Los Angeles county, and is accredited with the ownership of one of its best and most productive lemon groves in the state. A native of Iowa, he was born July 10, 1871, in Ottumwa, Wapello county, where he lived until nine years of age.

Coming with an uncle to Los Angeles, Cal., in 1880, Clark D. Hubbard received his early education in the public schools of that city. He subsequently clerked for a time in a hardware store, and then studied for a year at the Occidental College, in Los Angeles. Turning his attention then to horticulture, in which he had always been especially interested, he located in San Fernando, where he has since been successfully engaged in the growing of fruit of all kinds, including oranges, lemons, olives, apricots, etc. As superintendent and manager for other people, he has had full control of more than one hundred and fifty acres of citrus fruit trees, in the cultivation and care of which he has met with very satisfactory results. He also owns twenty acres of land, which he has highly improved, setting out four acres of oranges and sixteen acres of lemons, his grove being one of the best in the neighborhood, if not in the state, and a credit to his industry, enterprise and intelligence. The products of his grove are well known in the leading markets of the United States, all of his fruit being packed on his ranch and each box being plainly stamped "San Fernando Oranges and Lemons grown and packed by C. D. Hubbard, San Fernando, Cal., Los Angeles county."

On May 12, 1898, in San Fernando, Mr. Hubbard married Felicie Sylvie Carton de Grignart, who was born February 9, 1877, in Quesnoy, Canton du Quesnoy, Arrondissement d' Avesnes, Department du Nord France, came with her parents to the United States in 1880, and has been a resident of California since 1894. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard have one child, Lester Francois Hubbard. In May, 1904, Mrs. Hubbard purchased the ranch on which the family now reside. It contains ten acres of rich land, one half of which is set out to fruit trees, principally oranges while the remainder is used for a poultry farm. Mrs. Hubbard has made a study of poultry raising, and is considered an authority on all questions connected with the subject. She makes a specialty of fancy poultry, being one of the largest breeders and raisers of thoroughbreds in the state of California, and her farm, known as the Mission View Poultry Ranch, is justly famed for its productions in that line. She gives her personal attention to the management of her ranch, and is meeting with unquestioned success.

The Mission View Poultry Ranch is so named on account of the excellent view of the buildings of the Old Mission, lying about a half mile toward the east. All of the buildings on the ranch are of adobe, even the mammoth incubator, which is made in the Egyptian style, being the only one so constructed in this country, a part of the bricks used having been taken from the old residence of Governor Pico. The incubator is a double building, the inner one being circular, eleven feet in diameter and six feet high, the outer building being square, allowing from one to two feet dead air space between the two walls and six inches between the two roofs; both walls are twelve inches in thickness; over the rafters is one-inch rough lumber and four inches of adobe covered with tarred roofing paper, insuring an even temperature in all kinds of weather. This incubator is heated with hot air and its capacity is three thousand eggs; the eggs are hatched on a shelf which is covered with a layer of adobe one inch in thickness and the same thickness of bran; under this shelf are two shelves for nurseries.

The hot and cold brooders are one continuous building of three hundred and sixty feet in length, built of adobe, with the floors throughout cemented; there are twenty-eight sections in the hot brooder and forty in the cold brooder, and two feed and store rooms, the boiler and furnace being in the hot brooder, feed and store room; the yards for the hot brooder are 3x20 feet long and the cold brooder yard are 6x81 feet long.

There are forty-two breeding yards, one yard of Cockerels, all of which are White Wyandottes; besides the yards of all the following different breeds: Golden Laced Wyandottes, Buff Cochin Bantams, Lakenvelders and English Salmon Faverolles (the two later breeds which Mrs. Hubbard introduced into her ranch about two years ago were the first brought into this state), One-fourth Wild Mammoth Bronze Turkey and Ring Neck China Pheasants.

In the selling of eggs Mrs. Hubbard has built up a remunerative business, all the eggs produced on her ranch being stamped with the name in full of the ranch, and a neat little cut of the San Fernando Mission. In 1905 Mrs. Hubbard made her first exhibit of poultry at the Los Angeles Poultry Show and won premiums on each of her exhibits. In 1906 she won thirty-two prizes on her birds, including the National White Wyandotte Club Silver Cup and three ribbons out of four given by the same club; also four first out of five given by the show, she having the largest exhibit of any one exhibitor.

Mrs. Hubbard is prominent in business circles, and is a member of the Poultry Breeders' Society of Southern California, and of the National White Wyandotte Club. Mr. Hubbard is a member of the Semi-Tropic Fruit Exchange, and fraternally belongs to the San Fernando Lodge, I. O. O. F. Politically he is a Socialist.

ELMER ELLSWORTH ELLIOTT. Of the highest importance in the permanent progress of a community is the organization and sagacious management of financial institutions established upon a sound basis and conducted upon conservative lines. Such an institution is the First National Bank of Compton, which since opened for business July 15, 1903, as the Bank of Compton, has gained a liberal patronage from the business men of the city and has established a reputation for a keen discriminating policy of management. At the time of the organization Mr. Elliott became a stockholder in the new concern and since has officiated in the office of sbier, also as a member of the board of directors. Under his careful supervision, acting in unison with the president, J. J. Harshman, and the vice-president, J. M. Shepard, and allied with the various capable citizens forming the directorate, the bank has built up a patronage representing over $125,000 in deposits, which with the capital stock of $25,000 has been invested with painstaking discretion in real estate, bonds and loans. Since 1906 a savings department has been maintained.

Like many of the men who are contributing to the development of the California of the twentieth century, Mr. Elliott is a native of Illinois. Warren county was the place of his birth, and September 13, 1871, the date, his parents being John J. and Jennie (Findley) Elliott, natives respectively of Ohio and Illinois, and now residents of Lenox, Iowa. As a boy Elmer E. Elliott lived upon an Iowa farm and attended a country school until he had acquired a fair education. After starting out to earn his own livelihood he secured work as a clerk in a general store at Corning, Iowa, but the inducements offered by California soon brought him to the Pacific coast, where for two years he was employed as a clerk in a general store at Hueneme. Later he became a student in the University of Southern California, from which he was graduated in 1897 at the completion of the regular classical course.

Immediately after leaving the university Mr. Elliott came to Compton and secured a clerkship in the store of Ambrose Shepard & Co., with whom he remained until forming his connection with the bank, and in whose business he now owns an interest. In addition to managing the affairs of the bank he acts as secretary and treasurer of the Compton Water and Lighting Company and has contributed in other ways to the growth of the town along material and financial lines of activity. His pleasant home is presided over by Mrs. Elliott, formerly Margaret Cook, whom he married in Los Angeles May 18, 1898, and who is a daughter of H. C. Cook, of that city. They are the parents of two sons, Elmer Ellsworth, Jr., and Kenneth. Not possessing the tastes that incline him toward public life or political affairs, Mr. Elliott has not taken any part in the same aside from voting the Republican ticket, yet he has proved himself to be public-spirited to an unusual extent, and no movement for the permanent welfare of Compton fails to secure his allegiance and cooperation. With his wife he holds membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church of Compton, to whose charities he is a generous contributor, as he also is to progressive and philanthropic enterprises of an undenominational character. In fraternal relations he has allied himself with Masonry, being active in the work of Anchor Lodge No. 273, F. & A. M., also a member of Long Beach Chapter No. 83, R. A. M., Los Angeles Council No. 11, S. M., and the Scottish Rite, Lodge of Perfection, of Los Angeles.

BYRON J. LYSTER. On coming to his present location at the station of Burnett Mr. Lyster purchased an unimproved tract of twenty acres, for which he paid $30 per acre, and since that year (1884) he has resided on the same homestead, the value of which has increased to $1500 per acre or more. The first house which he erected on the property was the third to be built in the locality and of recent years has been replaced by an elegant structure of thirteen rooms, with bath, gas and other modern improvements. The town of Long Beach had not been founded when he came to this neighborhood and for a time he operated twelve hundred acres, a portion of which is covered by the present site of the city. Spaniards formed the bulk of the population in those days. Having to transact business with them constantly he learned to speak, read and write the Spanish language and gained a fluency in its use as valuable as it was uncommon.

Both through his paternal and maternal ancestors Mr. Lyster is of genuine pioneer stock. His father, Henry Lyster, was born in Shelby county, Ky., March 21, 1806, and remained south of the Ohio river until in the prime of manhood. Meanwhile he had devoted himself to the building of flatboats and loading the same with supplies, then he would ship down the river and sell both the supplies and the boat in one of the larger cities, after which he would walk the entire distance back to his home. On leaving Kentucky he settled in Indiana, but as early as 1847 became a pioneer of Iowa, where he built the second linseed oil mill in the state and also erected a sawmill. During the Civil war he served as a member of the Iowa Home Guard. Coming to California in 1869, he sojourned first in Sonoma county, then in Santa Cruz, later in San Francisco, and during 1873 settled in Los Angeles county, where January 30, 1889, his useful life came to an end.

The marriage of Mr. Lyster was solemnized at Oskaloosa, Iowa, and united him with Mrs. Vianna M. (Cameron) Prosise, who was born December 30, 1815, and in girlhood became the wife of William Prosise. At the death of Mr. Prosise she was left with six children, two of whom are still living, namely: John and Mrs. Sarah J. Mundell. Two sons of her second marriage, William and Byron J., are also living. She lived to be over ninety years of age, passing away April 1, 1906. She retained her physical and mental faculties to an unusual degree and displayed a deep interest in present-day affairs. Her father, Rev. John M. Cameron, who was a devout, sincere and courageous minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, was born in Kentucky in 1791, descended from colonial ancestry, and himself the possessor of the fine physique of the typical frontiersman. With his wife, who bore the maiden name of Mary Orendorff and who was born in 1793, he removed to Illinois as early as 1815, prior to the admission of the territory into the Union. For a considerable period he made his home in Sangamon county, where in 1818 he and his wife took up their abode in a log cabin standing on a hill that overlooked the Sangamon river. With James Rutledge he founded the town of New Salem, and tradition has it that in 1835 he officiated at the funeral services of Ann Rutledge. It is a fact fully authenticated that for six years Abraham Lincoln dwelt beneath the humble roof of this earnest preacher.

Early in the '30s the Cameron family removed to Fulton county, Ill., and in 1841 settled in Iowa. However, the pioneer instinct impelled them to move still farther westward, and when news came of the discovery of gold in California they started across the plains in the spring of 1849 and made the perilous journey with ox-teams and wagons. With the early history of the Pacific coast they were afterward associated, and their influence was felt in the upbuilding of religion and education. Kindly and affectionate in life, they were not long divided by death, and both passed away in the fullness of years, his death occurring in 1875, at eighty-three years, and her demise occurring in 1878, at eighty-seven years. They were the parents of twelve children, eleven of whom were daughters, and of these five are now living. In 1886 there were living nine children, seventy-five grandchildren and about two hundred great-grandchildren.

During the residence of the family in Mahaska county, Iowa, Byron J. Lyster was born September 27, 1852. When the war broke out he was too young for service, but at ten years of age was accepted as a drummer boy and so saw something of the horrors of a national strife. Three of his brothers were also at the front, while his father, as previously stated, served in the Home Guard. After three years as a drummer, during the most of which time he was along the Mississippi river, he was honorably discharged at the expiration of the war, and thereupon returned to his school work in Iowa. In 1868 he came to California and settled in Sonoma county, but two years later went to Watsonville, Santa Cruz county, where he conducted a meat market. After a year in San Francisco, in December of 1873, he removed to Los Angeles county and settled on a farm near San Fernando. During the four years he lived there he served as justice of the peace and deputy sheriff. In those days the country was unsettled and unimproved, and the rough element predominating, his work as an officer proved laborious and even perilous. On leaving that locality he moved south of Los Angeles and after eight years there, in 1884 he came to his present homestead. He has an only son, Henry B., who is a young man of twenty-four years (1905). In his beautiful home his aged mother passed her last days, surrounded by every comfort which he and other members of the family could bestow. In religion he is of the Methodist Episcopal faith, in politics affiliates with the Republican party, and fraternally is connected as a charter member with Long Beach Lodge No. 35, I. O. F. Of a genial, hospitable and companionable disposition, generous to those in need, progressive in spirit and public spirited in act, he is of the type of citizen so necessary to the permanent progress of any community.

FRANK G. BUTLER. While the charm of the climate has been the principal inducement leading to the rapid growth of Long Beach, observation and experience show that other inducements might be offered of no less importance than the one mentioned. To the man whose active temperament forbids leisure and protracted periods of recreation there are occupations offering an interesting field for his talents, and among these the manufacturing business, though the least utilized, is not the least attractive. In the list of manufacturing enterprises of Southern California one of the most recent and one of the most flourishing is the F. G. Butler Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of the Symonds Perfection Automatic Carbide Feeder Acetylene Generator, and owners of eight patents covering the machine. The original owner of the business, H. Symonds, is still associated with its management, but since the organization of the new company in 1905 the stock has been held principally by Mr. Butler and the headquarters are in his building at No. 109 Ocean avenue. When affairs have been adjusted so that the plant is running at its full capacity four or five machines can be turned out each day, and these will be shipped to any portion of this country or abroad. According to size the machines range in price from $65 to $400 for suburban residences, and from $1,500 to $10,000 for lighting a town or city.

The manager of the company is a pioneer of Long Beach and assisted in surveying the town site, as well as almost the entire acreage of the American Colony's tract. A native of Ohio, he was born at Doylestown, March 19, 1854, and is a son of Almond and Elizabeth (Frank) Butler, natives respectively of Burlington, Vt., and Pennsylvania, but after 1843 residents of Ohio. After having followed the mercantile business for many years the father died in Ohio in 1861 and the mother passed away in that state in 1878. After having completed the studies of the common schools of his native town, Frank G. Butler went to Easton, Ohio, and engaged in the mercantile business for seven years, also serving as postmaster during his stay there, after which he disposed of his interests in the east. For a short time he then conducted a store in Charleston, Ariz., and from there came to California in December, 1881, at once buying forty acres in the American Colony tract. Since then he has bought and sold various tracts and now owns fifteen acres on Willow street, all the improvements on the land having been made under his personal supervision. For fifteen years after his location in California he conducted the Signal Hill nursery, but eventually sold out in order to engage in other enterprises. In 1886 he bought real estate on Ocean avenue and erected a three-story building known as the Butler block, to which recently he made an addition comprising a four-story brick structure with modern conveniences. The block is leased to business and professional men and in the rear he has established his manufacturing plant.

Always interested in educational affairs, Mr. Butler accepted the position of school trustee in the early days of the history of Long Beach. While acting in that capacity he was one of the three who voted $8,000 school bonds and erected the Pine avenue school (recently moved from its original site). More than one citizen predicted that bonding would prove the financial ruin of the district, but instead it gave an impetus to educational work and was instrumental in securing for the town one of the best schools in the southern part of the state, outside of Los Angeles. During his residence in Ohio Mr. Butler married Miss Rosa J., daughter of David McClure, of Ohio.

The Symonds generator applies well-known scientific principles in the securing of an illuminant at once brilliant and inexpensive. When burned at the rate of five cubic feet per hour acetylene produces light equal to two hundred and fifty candles. One thousand cubic feet of acetylene gas will give the equivalent in lighting power of twelve thousand five hundred cubic feet of city gas. As is well known, acetylene can be utilized in business houses, churches, hotels, factories and residences, without any increase in the insurance rates. At one time the erroneous impression prevailed that acetylene was explosive, but the experience of years has disproved that idea, and exhaustive examinations on the part of skilled chemists show that the gas is not only economical, simple and convenient, but also unsurpassed for safety. In the construction of the Symonds generator safety has been the first consideration, quality the second and cost the third. The principle is that of feeding the carbide automatically into the water as fast as the gas is consumed. There is no overproduction, consequently no surplus gas to be stored. The operation is simple, consisting of the drawing off of the residue, refilling the water tank with water, and filling the carbide holder with carbide through the funnel furnished with the apparatus. The apparatus has been perfected and every generator is tested before shipment, so that satisfactory results can be guaranteed. Those using the machine are unanimous in testifying as to its safety and economy as well as the strength and durability of its parts.

MICHAEL CLARENBOLD WHITE. The life of Michael Clarenbold White was an interesting and adventurous one from the time he ran away from his home in England at the age of fourteen with a companion by the name of Stephens, both of whom went to sea. After two years in cruising, the vessel in which the boys were sailing headed for California, and his companion having been killed by falling from the masthead two days before reaching port, Mr. White resolved to remain in this state. He was the second white man to come to this state, the first having been an English gentleman named Richardson, who married a sister of Mr. White's wife, and after her death suddenly disappeared and was never heard from again. The first three years after coming to the Pacific coast Mr. White spent in coasting for the Mexican governor, the state then being under Spanish rule. He then settled in San Pedro and was engaged for a time in the construction of a schooner for the mission of San Gabriel, but the craft broke from its moorings in a storm before even a trial trip had been made in it.

The next move of Mr. White was to northern California and there he entered into a contract with the governor to carry mail into the interior for a year, in payment for which services he was to receive a land site where the city of San Francisco is now built. After eleven months of service he became party to a quarrel with an official and resigned the contract, thereby failing to receive the promised land. Removing to lower California he took up stock raising, and after acquiring a herd of three hundred head of cattle was unfortunate enough to lose the whole number through theft by the Indians. The following two years he conducted a store in New Mexico in partnership with Mr. Workman, which business interest he disposed of to come to San Gabriel, where his wife had bought one hundred acres of land a short distance from the Mission. Here they established a home, but on account of the Indian raids it was a discouraging effort at the be-beginning, but finally succeeded. A few years later Mr. White established a camp in San Bernardino county at the mouth of Lytle creek and again started in the cattle business. Here he was joined by two other white men, who after agreeing to a plan to take up all of the valley land deserted him before the consummation of the scheme. The Indians learning that he was alone decided that it would be a good time to make a raid and drive away the herds, and under the leadership of Chief Coyote, who was one of the craftiest and most vicious in that section, they accomplished their purpose. The next morning in company with an Indian boy of seventeen years, who was friendly to him, Mr. White started out to find the stock and overtook the thieves at the head of Cajon Pass. Here the Indians had camped and killed a horse, upon which they were feasting when Mr. White discovered them. Cleverly circling the camp he managed to get ahead of them and was endeavoring to stampede the stock when Chief Coyote saw him and started toward him. Waiting until the Indian was within forty or fifty yards of him Mr. White took steady aim and shot him dead, the report of the gun stampeding the cattle. They returned home, Mr. White and the Indian boy following and reaching the valley in safety after having killed a number of other redskins. The boy had been of great assistance to him by loading his extra gun.

When the governor heard of this affair he sent for Mr. White and ascertaining that he had no land but desired to receive a grant, application was made and surveys taken, and in a few years he received papers conveying to him thirty-two thousand acres of land. When the war between the United States and Mexico was declared he in company with about a hundred trappers banded themselves together under the leadership of Capt. B. D. Wilson against the Spaniards, and that company was the first to be attacked before the troops arrived. Mr. White was wounded and finally the company was forced to surrender, but the Spanish officer, J. M. Silvas, being a relative of his wife their lives were spared. She was the first woman in California to lend assistance to the American soldiers. Years later when the United States government officials came to look up the validity of the grants Mr. White went before them personally with his papers and hired Attorneys Crittenden and Granger to look after his interests. In payment for their services he deeded one-half of the grant to Mrs. Granger, but Mrs. White's signature being lacking this did not prove to be a legal transfer. Later the U. S. government sent Mr. Hancock to survey the land, but Hancock before making the survey closed a deal to purchase the holding for one thousand dollars, a proper deed to be given as soon as the money was paid. Only eight hundred feet of lumber was ever paid in the transaction, however, and after surveying thirty-two thousand acres in the valley from Arrowhead south, he left and afterwards appeared with a forged deed to half of the grant. After the death of Mr. White in 1885 his son, James B., brought suit to recover but was defeated and the whole property was lost to the family. The marriage of Mr. White united him with Marie del Rosario Guyllen, and they became the parents of the following named children: Jennie, now Mrs. Andrew J. Courtney; Michael; Sarah, now Mrs. Ygnacio Alvarado; Frances, now Mrs. Joseph Heslop, of Pasadena; Alvira, now Mrs. Louis Marshall; Jane, now Mrs. Luis Capdevielle; Esther, now Mrs. Castillon; and James B. Mrs. White died in 1892.

On June 24, 1855, James B. White was born at San Gabriel Mission and has always lived in Southern California. His marriage which occurred June 27, 1882, united him with Dolores Zasueta, a daughter of Francisco and Gregoria (Romero), and four children have been born to them: Michael Louis; Rosa; Esther; and Olympia.

EDWARD J. HATCH. Classed among the most enterprising, progressive and wide-awake business men of Escondido is Judge Ed J. Hatch, who is widely and favorably known as the local agent of the Wells-Fargo Express Company, manager of the Sunset Telephone and Telegraph Company, and as justice of the peace. Public-spirited and liberal, he takes pride in advancing the welfare of his adopted town and county, and is ever ready to assist any movement which tends to promote the interests of the community in which he resides, and by his fellow-citizens is held in high respect and esteem. Coming from a long line of substantial ancestry on both sides of the house, he was born, October 6, 1851, in Dixon, Ill., a son of James Hatch.

The descendant of a colonial family of New England, James Hatch was born and reared in Nashua, N. H., on the farm of his father, James Hatch, Sr., a life-long resident of the Granite state. When a young man he removed to Dixon, Ill., where he followed his trade of baker for a number of years, being a pioneer in the business in that locality. Giving that up after a few years, he was subsequently employed as a real-estate dealer and insurance agent in Dixon until his death. His wife, whose maiden name was Maria Louisa Jackson, was born near Boston, Mass., a daughter of William Jackson, who settled as a pioneer in Ogle county, Ill., near the town of Oregon. She died in Illinois in 1853.

The youngest of a family of ten children by his father's first marriage, three of whom are living, Ed J. Hatch is the only one of the family residing on the Pacific coast. After graduating from the Dixon high school he served an apprenticeship at the painter's trade, and going to Chicago, for two years worked in the shops of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company. Going then to Rock Falls, Ill., he was a contracting painter for two years, being subsequently similarly employed in Chicago for seven years. From that city he went to Pennsylvania, where he worked at his trade for some time, first in Pittsburg and then in Westmoreland county. Again changing his place of residence he went to Manson, Iowa, where he was engaged in painting for four years. Subsequently, with headquarters at Sioux City, he was in the employ of the Illinois Central and Sioux City & Pacific Railroad Companies for awhile.

Coming to California in February, 1887, Mr. Hatch purchased property in Escondido, after which he returned to Sioux City to settle up his affairs, and in September, 1887, he brought his family to this place and resumed his business as a painter, filling heavy contracts in Escondido and throughout the northern part of San Diego county, being very successful in that industry. For two years he served as collector for the Escondido Irrigating Ditch Company, and for the same length of time was collector and assessor for the same company. In 1898 he was elected justice of the peace for Escondido township, and served with ability and fidelity in this position for eight years. In 1900 he was made agent of the Wells-Fargo Express Company at this place, and also assumed his present responsible position as manager of the Sunset Telephone and Telegraph Company, his office being located in the First National Bank building. By the exercise of good business tact and judgment he has accumulated a fair share of this world's goods. He owns a valuable ranch of fifteen and one-half acres, lying one and three-fourths miles from the city, on which he has erected a fine residence and a substantial set of farm buildings. This ranch he devotes to the raising of oranges and lemons, in which he is quite successful. He is also a stockholder in the Escondido Rochdale Company.

December 25, 1877, in Westmoreland county, Pa., the native place of the bride, Judge Hatch married Matilda Null, a sister of the wife of Dr. David Crise, of Escondido, and of the children born of their union six are living: Elfreda N., a graduate of the State Normal School at San Diego and a teacher for some years, is the wife of F. A. Brown of Highland, San Bernardino county; J. Paul, of Escondido, is a graduate of the Los Angeles Bible Institute and engaged in Spanish mission work in Los Angeles; he married Gladys McClintock, a native of Kansas, and has two daughters; the other children, Flora Faith, Neal, Vivian and Dorothy, are at home. Fraternally the Judge was made a Mason at Sioux City, Iowa, and was a charter member of Consuelo Lodge No. 325, F. & A. M., of Escondido, of which he was at one time master, and from which he has since taken a demit; in Pennsylvania he joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. Politically he votes with the courage of his convictions, regardless of party restrictions. He belongs to the Escondido Chamber of Commerce, and for many years has been an active and faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was a trustee, and formerly superintendent of the Sunday-school.

THOMAS BECK. Occupying a good position among the esteemed and respected citizens of Long Beach is Thomas Beck, a man of upright character and sterling worth, now living retired from active labor, enjoying a well-earned leisure. A native of Ireland, he was born, in 1851, in County Antrim, where his parents, Henderson and Jane (McClelland) Beck, spent their entire lives, both dying in 1853.

Left an orphan when about three years of age, Thomas Beck was brought up by relatives, and was educated in the public schools. When twelve years old he began working for his uncle in a bakery, and three years later entered upon an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, which he subsequently followed successfully for a number of years, being located in Belfast, Ireland. Immigrating to the United States in 1874, he was engaged in carpentering at Paterson, N. J., for a year, and was subsequently similarly employed in Philadelphia for five years. A superior workman, skilled in the use of tools, he made money while following his chosen occupation, and in 1880 returned to the old country. He worked at his trade in Ireland for one year, assisting in the erection of many fine residences and public buildings, and then went to Glasgow, Scotland, where he spent two years as a ship joiner. Coming back to this country, he located in Hancock, Iowa, where he worked at his trade two years, then located in Box Butte county, Neb., and took up a claim, but shortly afterward went to Alliance, that county, where he engaged in the hardware business for several years, having an extensive and lucrative trade, and being numbered among the leading merchants of the place. In 1900 he and his wife took an extended trip through Great Britain and attended also the Paris Exposition, being absent from home about six months. Selling out his stock in 1902, Mr. Beck came to Los Angeles county, locating at Long Beach, where he purchased the estate which he now owns. This included a vacant lot, on which he erected a fine, modern cottage, in which he is living retired from active pursuits, having by well-directed toil and exceedingly good management acquired competency.

In Alliance, Neb., in 1897, Mr. Beck married Mrs. Elsie P. (Mead) Darling, a native of Indiana. Politically Mr. Beck is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of Alliance Lodge No. 183, A. F. & A. M., of Alliance, Neb., and with Mrs. Beck is a member of Long Beach Chapter, O. E. S. Religiously he belongs to the Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Beck attends the Episcopal Church.

HERBERT CROUCH. Many generations of the Crouch family lived and labored as husbandmen in England, but the family has become extinct in the country where once they flourished, and in America the sole representatives are Herbert Crouch and his son and two daughters. Joseph and Jane (Lloyd) Crouch, natives of England, passed their entire active lives upon a farm in Berkshire and were useful citizens and devoted Episcopalians. Their family consisted of three children, but Herbert, the youngest of the three, is the sole survivor, and the others left no descendants, so that he and his children alone remain to perpetuate the name. He was born in Berkshire January 15, 1840, and received a common-school education in his native shire. Upon setting out to make his own way in the world he sailed on the Black Wall from London to Melbourne, Australia, where the ship cast anchor after an uneventful voyage of one hundred and twelve days. Mining engaged his attention and he met with fair success. In 1862 he returned to England on the Orwell, which cast anchor after a voyage of one hundred and twelve days. A year later he returned to Australia on the Star of England, which landed at Brisbane after a voyage of one hundred and twelve days. In addition to the coincidence in the length of the three voyages he also felt interested in the fact that each time he sailed on Monday and landed on Monday.

The next voyage which Mr. Crouch entered upon brought him to San Francisco, March 24, 1868, on the barque Camden, after sixty-nine days on the ocean. For about one year he remained on a ranch near Stockton. February 25, 1869, he arrived at San Diego, and on the 25th of March he came to San Luis Rey, San Diego county, where now, with the exception of B. F. Libby, he is the oldest surviving settler of an age permitting the entering of land at that time. With a partner he embarked in the sheep business and herded his flocks upon the ranges in this part of the county. In 1873 he entered and proved up on one hundred and sixty acres on the San Luis Rey river, where, in additon to enduring all the hardships of frontier existence, he had the further trouble of a contest in the courts covering a period of more than four years, in which the settlers were involved with the claimants of the Peoiche grant of twenty-six leagues. The settlers eventually won and he was then free to take up the work of improvement. In 1874 he removed from the river to his present location three miles from Oceanside in the San Luis Rey valley, where at one time he had fifteen thousand head of sheep, divided into different flocks. To improve the quality of his stock he imported a number of bucks and bred to secure the highest type of Merinos. Not only were he and his partner the largest sheepmen of their day, but also, when they sold out in 1887, their flock was said to embrace the finest Merinos in the whole country. After discontinuing the raising of sheep he began to raise grain and at one time had charge of more than eighteen hundred acres, of which fourteen hundred and eighty acres were in the home place, extending to the corporate limits of Oceanside. At one time he owned river land and devoted it to the raising of alfalfa, but this he sold, and also in 1905 he sold seven hundred and sixty acres of his ranch, so that now he has five hundred and ten acres in his homestead. In additon he owns two ranches at Julian, a ranch of four hundred acres at Ballona and still another ranch, comprising one thousand acres, in the Lagona mountains. The homestead is well improved with neat buildings and modern conveniences, and there is a fine orchard of citrus and deciduous fruits, with olive trees more than twenty-five years old and the largest in the entire county.

The marriage of Mr. Crouch took place at San Diego in 1876 and united him with Miss Martha Avenell, who was born in Wiltshire, England, and by whom he has three children, Lucy Jane, Emily Elizabeth and Joseph Lloyd. Reared in the Episcopalian faith, he and his wife have always adhered to that religion and have trained their children in its doctrines. Since becoming a citizen of the United States he has been a pronounced believer in Republican principles and always gives his ballot to the party and its candidates, but for himself steadfastly has refused to become a candidate for official honors. There are few men now living in San Diego county whose arrival antedated his own. The majority of those now influential in horticultural, agricultural and commercial affairs have been drawn hither by the development made by the earlier settlers, of whom he was among the most prominent. Comparatively few now living have had a personal experience of the hardships of life in the early days of San Diego's American occupancy and comparatively few were called upon to fight for their rights in the courts for a protracted period; but notwithstanding all the hardships he has endured and the obstacles he has been obliged to overcome, he is loyal to his county, for it is here that he has reaped his greatest success and here that he has risen to a position as a large land-owner and prosperous orchardist. Through his successful work in fruit-raising he has stimulated others to enter this occupation and thereby has been helpful to others. Gone are the days when large flocks could roam over the broad ranges and gone the days when the sheep-industry was perhaps the most profitable occupation open to San Diego county settlers; but in the place of those balmy years there has come an era of smaller farms with better improvements and more diversified methods of farming. In this transformation he has been a prominent factor, and his efforts have been rewarded with success under the new system as under the former régime.

FATHER ANTONY LeBELLEJAY. As pastor of the Mission Church at San Fernando, Father Antony LeBellejay leads a busy and useful life, conscientiously and faithfully performing whatever duties may fall upon him. A native of France, he was born, in October, 1855, in the province of Burgundy, or Bourgogne, where he was reared and educated, being graduated from the public schools and from the Bourgogne College.

Studying for the priesthood when young, Father LeBellejay emigrated to this country, and for a number of years prior to this was engaged in religious work in the Dominican congregation in France. Coming to California in 1901, he spent six months in San Francisco, and then came to San Fernando to assume his present position as pastor of the Mission Church, which is composed of about twenty-three families, mostly Mexicans, his charge covering a large territory. Father LeBellejay is a man of upright principles, entirely devoted to the interests of his people, and has a large circle of friends outside of his parishioners, his sterling integrity and nobility of character being recognized throughout the community.

FERNANDO CORTEZ HERBERT. A successful horticulturist is named in the person of Fernando Cortez Herbert, who owns a ranch of fifty-two acres in the vicinity of El Monte, where he located in 1890. Mr. Herbert is a native of Hempstead county, Ark., born October 9, 1862. His father, Fernando Cortez Herbert, Sr., was born in Hardin county, Tenn., where he married Annie Deavenport, also a native of that state, and in 1861 they removed to Arkansas, where Mr. Herbert carried on farming until his death in 1869. His wife survived him and in 1872 removed with her family to Texas, locating in Denton county, where she passed away two years later.

Of the seven children born to his parents Fernando C. Herbert was the fifth in order of birth. Because of the father's early death each was thrown upon his own resources and compelled to begin the battle of life at a tender age. This son passed his youth with an uncle, who was a miller in Denton county, and during this time he attended the public schools. Three years were passed thus when, in the fall of 1877, he returned to Hempstead county, Ark., and there with his older brother, Thomas, engaged in farming for nine years. In November, 1886, he sold out his interests and came to California. In Monrovia he followed the carpenter's trade and later worked with a surveying corps and helped to survey Glendora and the trail to the top of the mountain as far as Whitcomb. For a short time he was located in Redondo, where he teamed for the Redondo Company. In 1890 he purchased eleven and a half acres of land in the Mountain View district, which had just been set to walnuts, and from that time to the present writing he has given his time and attention to horticultural interests. He has improved his property by the erection of a comfortable residence and outbuildings, and in 1901 added to his interests by the purchase of forty acres of walnuts near his first property. He has been very successful in his work and holds a place of importance among the horticulturists of this section, being a charter member of the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association and a promoter of the best interests of the community.

Mr. Herbert has been twice married, his first wife being Miss Mabel Pullee, who was born in Orange county, a daughter of a pioneer family of Southern California. She was married in Mountain View and died here. In San Bernardino he married Miss Fannie Blanche Ludwig, a native of Pennsylvania, and born of this union are two sons, Ross Deavenport and John Edgar. Mr. Herbert is a Democrat politically and a stanch upholder of the interests of his party. Fraternally he is identified with the Odd Fellows and Independent Order of Foresters (having been a member of the latter organization for the past fourteen years), and is now affiliated with Monrovia lodges.

JAMES WILEY VEACH. Among the upbuilders of the interests of Redlands prominent mention belongs to James Wiley Veach, a resident of the city since 1900. He was born in Illinois, near Charlestown, Coles county, October 21, 1850; his father, James, was also a native of that state. The family trace their ancestry back to three brothers of Wales, who emigrated to America in an early period of its history and located the name in the southern states, whence later members settled in Kentucky. There the paternal grandfather of Mr. Veach was reared and from that section he came to Illinois and located in Coles county and later in Adams county, where his death eventually occurred. James Veach engaged as a farmer in Adams county, where his death occurred in July, 1851. His wife, formerly Jellico Mayes, was born in Wayne county, Ill., a daughter of Thomas Mayes, a native of the Carolinas, when he came to Illinois and engaged as a farmer until his death. He served in the Black Hawk war, as did two of his sons, James and Andrew. In the Civil war James Mayes and five of his sons participated. Their patriotic spirit was inherited from their great-grandfather, who served in the Revolutionary war. Mr. and Mrs. Veach were the parents of the following children: John, a sergeant in the Twenty-eighth Regiment Illinois Infantry in the Civil war, in which he served four years and eight months and died in Illinois in 1906; Andrew, a corporal in the same regiment, died from the effects of wounds received at Shiloh; Mary, Mrs. Dell of Kansas; Ellen, Mrs. Stevens, who died in Nebraska; and James Wiley, of this review.

Reared in Adams county and educated in the district schools James Wiley Veach was early trained in the home duties of a farmer's son. When fifteen years old he became dependent upon his own resources, his first venture being the establishment in 1870 of a small store four miles from the town of Kingston. He succeeded in building up a business and continued profitably in that location for eight years. In 1878 he sold out and located in Pike county, in Fishhook, building a store and warehouse and carrying on a general merchandise business, and at the same time conducting an extensive farm, where he raised cattle. He rented over four hundred acres of land for this latter enterprise; his store being burned out in 1896 he withdrew from mercantile enterprises and gave his entire time and attention to farming. In 1900 he located in California, in March of that year purchasing the Redlands Steam Laundry, which he immediately rebuilt and equipped with all modern methods for carrying on the business. With his son Andrew he carried on the enterprise until 1902, when he sold out his interest. Later he purchased another laundry, the White Star, in partnership with a Mr. Herdman, and this was afterward consolidated with the first purchase in this line. This was increased to a large capacity and proved a profitable investment. Finally disposing of this business Mr. Veach purchased an orange grove and since that time has given considerable time to horticulture. He buys and sells property throughout this section, and is now a half owner in the Bill and Veach block and Hamilton block of Redlands. With his son he is engaged in the grocery business in Corona, the firm name being J. W. Veach & Son.

Mr. Veach built a residence at No. 14 Eureka street, which is now presided over by his wife, whom he married in Adams county, Ill. She was formerly Miss Julia A. Bimson, a native of Quincy, Ill., and a daughter of William and Caroline (Clark) Bimson, natives of England and early settlers of that section of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Veach have two children, Nina M., of Redlands, and Andrew, of Corona. Mr. Veach gives his support to the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a member. Mr. Veach was nominated in the spring of 1906 on the good government ticket to the office of city trustee and was elected for a two-year term. He is now a member of the committees on sewer and water, the fire department, and ordinance and judiciary, officiating as chairman of the last named. He is a member of the Board of Trade and active in his efforts to advance the business interests of Redlands. Politically he is a Republican.

FRED HASKELL CLOCK. The eldest son of his father, Charles L. Clock, represented at length elsewhere in this volume, Fred Haskell Clock was born in Franklin county, Iowa, October 16, 1867, and reared in Hampton, in the same state. He received a preliminary education in the public and high schools of that place, after which he entered Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., and continued at his studies for the period of two years. He then returned to Iowa and with his father engaged in a general merchandise business under the firm name of Clock & Clock in Latimer, success accompanying their efforts and bringing them large returns for their efforts. In May, 1895, father and son disposed of their mercantile interests in Iowa and came to California, having become interested in the possibilities of the western state, and in Redlands purchased orange groves and began horticultural pursuits. They improved their properties from the raw land, Fred H. Clock now owning fifteen acres on Colton avenue, where he has improved and built up the ranch, bringing the water for irrigation in cement flumes, he being interested in the Bear Valley Company. In addition to this ranch he also owns ten acres on Church and Lugonia avenues, all in navel and valencia oranges, and in the management of his interests has already demonstrated ability which promises well for the future efforts along this line. He is a director in the Redlands Golden Orange Growers' Association and takes a keen interest in the advancement of this work.

In Wichita, Kans., Mr. Clock married Miss Jessie Satchell, a native of Montezuma, Poweshiek county, Iowa, and a daughter of Joseph Satchell, who served in the Thirty-second Regiment Iowa Infantry, and is now residing with his daughter. Mr. and Mrs. Clock have four children, who are named in order of birth as follows: Fred L., Dorothy H., Charles J. and Ruth I. Mr. Clock was made a Mason in Redlands Lodge No. 300, F. & A. M. He is a devoted member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church here, in which he officiates as trustee, and politically is a stanch advocate of Republican principles. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Board of Trade, and is now serving as chairman of the Committee on Manufacturing. Like his father he is liberal and enterprising and sees no avenue by which the city's interests can be advanced that he does not assist materially in entering.

MARIUS BIANE. As vice-president and director of the E. Vaché Company, of Redlands, Marius Biane is in charge of the manufacturing department and has already insured his success in the business affairs with which he is engaged. He is a native of France, born near Toulouse in department Gers, November 5, 1876, the elder of two children born to his parents and the only one in California. His father, Pierre Biane, was also born in that part of France and there engaged as a stone mason and builder. In 1888 he came to California and in Redlands engaged at his trade for eight years, when he returned to France and is now making that country his home. His wife, formerly Rosalie Cazabant, was born in France, a daughter of Jean Baptist Cazabant, a contractor and builder; she also died in her native country. Marius Biane was reared in France and educated in its public schools, after which in August, 1892, he came to America and joined his father in Redlands, where he attended the public schools for the ensuing year. He then entered the employ of E. Vaché, of the Brookside Winery, engaging as a ranch hand for three years, when he entered the winery and learned the manufacture of wine and the process of distilling. Upon the incorporation of the concern in 1902 he was one of the original stockholders and became its vice-president, since which time he has had charge of the manufacturing department and has made it a financial success. The capacity of the Brookside Winery, which is located two and a half miles from the heart of Redlands, is large, each year fifteen hundred tons of grapes being converted into wine, besides which they manufacture brandy.

Mr. Biane was married in Brookside to Miss Marcelina Vaché, a niece of Emile Vaché, the president of this company, and a daughter of Adolphe Vaché, of Santa Monica. She was born in San Bernardino and educated in Santa Monica. They have two children, Francis and Eleanore. In his political affiliations Mr. Biane is a Republican.

MULOCK BROTHERS. Will C. and Daniel C. Mulock have won a wide reputation for their business qualities, the sagacious judgment exercised in the buying and selling of products, and the unerring decision which has resulted in their personal competence. They are located in San Gabriel and engaged in the cultivation of an orange orchard, which, by reason of its fine fruit holds rank among the most valuable in this section. Messrs. Mulock are native Californians, Will C. having been born in Los Angeles and Dan C. Mulock's birth having occurred on the property where he now makes his home, June 27, 1869, in the then pioneer days of Southern California. His father, William Mulock, was born in Ireland and emigrated to Canada while very young; he came to California in an early day, and upon his arrival, after looking about for a congenial occupation, engaged in the raising of sheep and cattle. This was a successful occupation until the terrible years of drought, when he lost so heavily that he decided to seek other avenues of earning a livelihood. He then became identified with the culture of oranges and grapes in San Gabriel, where his death occurred in 1878. In Los Angeles he had married Eliza (Connelly) McDonald; she was born in Ireland and in childhood went to Australia, thence coming to California. She survives her husband and makes her home in a neat little adobe house built over a half century ago on the old place, hale and hearty and in possession of all her faculties at the age of seventy-four years. She is a member of the Catholic Church. A daughter, Mary E. Mulock, is a sister of the Holy Name Convent, in Oakland.

The Mulock brothers received a preliminary education in the common schools of Los Angeles county, completing in the high school of Los Angeles. Their school days over, they returned to the home place and received a beneficial training in the culture of oranges, and as soon as possible began the industry for themselves. They leased land throughout this section, sublet it and made considerable profit in their management of this enterprise. They became the owners of sixty acres, a part of their father's and mother's property, which are devoted to oranges, and have improved the place by the erection of comfortable residences. They are stockholders in the First National Bank of Los Angeles and take an active interest in all upbuilding movements of the section. They are Republicans in politics, and although never desirous of official recognition, still interest themselves in the advancement of the principles they endorse. Will C. was married September 3, 1885, to Miss Mary Agnes Stone and has two children, Kate and Fred. Fraternally Dan C. is a member of Alhambra Lodge No. 322, F. & A. M., and has filled some offices in the organization. His wife, whom he married in June, 1902, was formerly Anna G. Stuart, a native of Indiana, and is a member of the Episcopal Church. They have one son, Robert S.

DANIEL A. FINNEY. The citizenship of Daniel A. Finney has been of such character as to add materially to the elevating influence of whatever community he has made his home, his splendid record as a soldier of his country in its time of need placing him apart among his fellow citizens who appreciate his worth. He was born on Oil creek, near Titusville, Crawford county, Pa., November 30, 1834. His father, James, was born in the same place, where the paternal grandfather, also James, of Scotch descent, settled upon his emigration from the North of Ireland, there owning and operating a farm, where his death occurred. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and participated in its first serious engagement—the battle of Bunker Hill. James Finney, Jr., sold the farm left him by his father (it not being known or supposed to be of commercial value), and located in Strasburg, Tuscarawas county, Ohio, and there improved a farm, and later located at Shanesville, same county, where his death eventually occurred. He served in the war of 1812 and was a prominent citizen in the upbuilding of the general welfare. His wife, formerly Mary Myers, was born in Crawford county, Pa., and died in Ohio. They were the parents of six sons and four daughters, of whom three sons and one daughter are now living. Besides Daniel A., of this review, three sons participated in the Civil war: Isaiah, served as sergeant in the One Hundredth Regiment Indiana Infantry and died soon after the close of the strife; Alexander served in an Indiana regiment, survived its perils and died in Indiana in 1906; and James served in a New York regiment and was wounded, surviving, however, and locating later in Nebraska, where his death occurred in 1906.

Daniel A. Finney was reared in Ohio on the paternal farm and educated in the common schools, remaining at home until attaining his majority when he went to South Bend, Ind., and there found employment in clearing timber lands. Later he purchased a farm near La Grange, Ind., and cleared and improved it. August 22, 1862, he volunteered in Company C, One Hundredth Regiment Indiana Infantry, was mustered in at Indianapolis, and immediately marched to the front. In January, 1864, he was honorably discharged because of physical disability. In the mean time he had participated in many of the most important battles of the army of the Cumberland, among them the Tallahoochie, Grenada, Vicksburg, Jackson, Black River Bridge, after which they marched to the relief of Chattanooga, and after the battle of Tunnel Hill marched to Knoxville to relieve Burnside, where Mr. Finney's comrade, H. J. Hearne, carried the despatch from Sherman to Burnside which read "Hold the fort for I am coming." The lad was dressed in Confederate uniform and actually rode with the Confederate soldiers until in sight of the fort when he waved the white handkerchief and rushed to its protection, followed by the bullets of his former companions. He received $600 for his courage and success. They arrived in Knoxville in time to save Burnside, the Rebels having retreated. Mr. Finney was taken sick about this time and was in the hospital from June, 1863, to January, 1864, when he was mustered out because of physical disability.

For four years after his return to civic life Mr. Finney was an invalid but gradually recovered his health. He continued on his farm until 1883, when he removed to McLeansboro, Hamilton county, Ill., and there purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres and began its improvement. He was interested in the raising of grain and stock. In 1895 he came to Southern California and in Redlands, under Terracina bluff, bought a tract of ten acres and set it out in Muir, Susquehanna and Crawford peaches, and apricots, receiving his irrigation from the Bear Valley Company, while he is also interested in the Lower Yucaipe Ditch Company. He has all necessary equipment for the drying of the fruit and has from eight to ten tons per year of this product for the market.

In Bryan, Ind., Mr. Finney married Eliza Jane Griffith by whom he had seven children, two sons and one daughter deceased, and three sons, Daniel E., Harlow H., Eli W., and one daughter, Mary Arvilla, living. His wife died and in 1873, in New Carlisle, Mr. Finney was united in marriage with Miss Clarissa Froatte, who was born in Ohio and died October 31, 1902; they had one son, George Bertice, of Redlands. Mr. Finney was made a Mason in New Carlisle, Ind.; in religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he officiated as trustee, steward, class leader and Sunday-school superintendent. Politically he is a Democrat; in memory of his "days and nights on the battlefield" he is a member of the Bear Valley Post, of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Redlands, and active in the work.

W. E. KELLEY. A man of excellent ability, tact and judgment, W. E. Kelley is widely and favorably known in Ventura county as the leading liveryman and horse dentist of Oxnard, being proprietor of the I X L stables. He is active and enterprising, and by his upright and honorable transactions, courteous and agreeable manners, and a ready willingness to oblige all patrons, has built up an extensive and profitable business in this locality, his many customers placing implicit confidence in his word and his judgment. A son of Michael Kelley, he was born, August 31, 1861, at Seneca Falls, N. Y., of thrifty Irish ancestry.

A native of Ireland, Michael married in County Galway, Ireland, Catherine Gilmore, and very soon after that important event immigrated with his bride to the United States. A stone and brick mason, and also a carpenter and contractor, he looked about for a favorable location in which to follow his trades, selecting Seneca Falls, N. Y. He had no trouble in securing work, and in the ensuing years was identified with some of the most important building achievements of western New York. Among other things he helped to build the piers for the old Suspension Bridge across Niagara Falls; the dam at Little Falls; the famous locks at Lockport; the foundations for the Catholic Cathedral at Rochester; and many of the large public buildings at Seneca Falls and vicinity. He afterwards moved to Burlington, Iowa, where he continued as a mason, contractor and builder for many years, residing in that city until his death, at the venerable age of eighty-five years. His wife also died there at the age of sixty-nine years. One of his sons, Patrick Kelley, is a prominent resident of Galena, Ill., where he is lockmaster on the Fevre river, and also operates a woolen mill, a picket factory, and a tannery. He is much interested in the history of Galena and surrounding towns, and has in his possession the old bench used by General Grant in his factory. He is very influential in civic affairs, having served as alderman in the city council, and having filled the mayor's chair for one or more terms.

Attending first the common schools of Seneca Falls, W. E. Kelley completed his education in the evening schools of Burlington, Iowa. At the age of fourteen years he began life for himself, as a boy feeding a press for the Burlington Hawkeye, of which Robert Burdette, of world-wide fame, was then the editor. Subsequently entering the employ of the American Express Company, he was driver of a team in Burlington for four years. Continuing with the company, he was stationed at Minneapolis, Minn., for five years, and at Sioux City, Iowa, for one year. Going then to Nebraska, he was for some time engaged in agricultural pursuits at Watkins Island, and while there was very active in public affairs, serving as deputy sheriff of Dakota county for two years, and as sheriff for four years. Removing to Sioux, Dakota county, he opened a livery stable, which he managed with success for a number of seasons. Coming to Oxnard in January, 1901, he practiced horse dentistry successfully for a year and a half, and then opened his present feed and livery stable, known as the I X L stable, which is well patronized, his business having grown with rapidity. April 9, 1906, he was elected city marshal of Oxnard, a position which he is filling with excellent ability.

October 1, 1894, Mr. Kelley married Josephine Reynolds, who was born in Ventura county, Cal., a daughter of Andrew Reynolds. Mr. Reynolds was born in Tennessee, and died, October 16, 1894, in Ventura county. His wife, whose maiden name was Josephine Taliaferro, was born in California, where her mother, Mrs. Wilkes, settled in 1852, coming to this state from Missouri, crossing the plains with an ox-team train. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley are the parents of four children, namely; William F.,

Josephine Marie, Leo Patrick and Andrew Raymond. Fraternally Mr. Kelley is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Religiously he has never swerved from the faith in which he was reared, and, with his wife, is a member of the Catholic Church.

CHARLES LIVINGSTON CLOCK. The upbuilding enterprises of Redlands have had in Charles Livingston Clock one of its most earnest and devoted advocates, his energy and ability being given freely and liberally toward the development of resources and the advancement of the general welfare. Considerably less than a score of years has he spent in Southern California, but nevertheless he has acquired a position of prominence, has taken an active part of public affairs —political, social and religious—and has established himself as a representative citizen. The family is of Holland-Dutch descent but was established in America prior to the war of 1812, in which Mr. Clock's grandfather, Oakley, who was born on Long Island, valiantly participated. His father, Ebenezer Clock, was also born on Long Island, in Islip, May 9, 1806, and in young manhood become a sailor on Long Island sound. With his family he eventually removed to Painesville, Lake county, Ohio, where his death occurred August 22, 1847. He was survived until February 1, 1870, by his wife, formerly Lucinda Jarvis, who was born on Long Island July 28, 1806. From Ohio she removed with her family to Warren, Ill., where she died in later years. She became the mother of nine children, of whom the following attained maturity: Alonzo, of Warren, Ill.; Edward, a stockman, of Geneva, Iowa; Jarvis, who died in Geneva, Iowa; H. C., a captain in the Sixth Regiment Iowa Infantry in the Civil war; and now a merchant in Geneva, Iowa; Charles Livingston, of this review; and Henry A., who served in the Civil war as corporal in Company H, Thirty-second Regiment Iowa Infantry, and is now a merchant in Hampton, Iowa.

Charles Livingston Clock was born in Painesville, Lake county, Ohio, May 10, 1841, and at the age of ten years accompanied his mother and older brothers to Warren, Ill., where he grew to young manhood. His education was received through the medium of the public school, whose sessions were held in the primitive log cabins of the day, which course was completed by one term in the Warren Seminary. He learned the mason's trade, but had not had time to put it to use when the Civil war broke out. In May, 1861, he answered the first call, but the quota being secured for the three months' service he enlisted for three years in Company E, Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and was made a corporal. He was mustered out in June, 1865, and during this time participated in many of the most important engagements of the war, among them Fort Donelson, Shiloh (after which he was honorably discharged because of physical disability, but remained in the service as forage master in the Fourth Division of the Sixteenth Army Corps, and was later under General Blair in the Seventeenth Army Corps), Holly Springs, the Siege of Vicksburg, then from Jackson, Miss., marched to Meridian, then to the relief of Chattanooga. In 1864 he was stationed in Louisville, then at Macon City, Mo., in the forage department, where he remained until the close of the war.

After the close of his service he located in Geneva, Franklin county, Iowa, and there improved a farm on the prairie lands. He located in the town of Geneva in 1872, and engaged in the handling of grain and a general merchandise enterprise in partnership with his brother, H. C. Clock. His personal interest in the advancement of the general welfare of the community won him the election in 1877 to the office of auditor of Franklin county, and his faithful discharge of duty his re-election two years later. He was then elected county treasurer in 1881, and served one term of two years. Because of ill health from the close confinement he refused to become a candidate for any other position, and after the close of his term as treasurer in 1883, he removed with his sons and brother, H. A., to Latimer, same county, and there followed a general merchandise business, and the handling of grain, coal and lumber, and was also postmaster during this time. He invested largely in land in that location and still owns some. In 1887 his brother withdrew from the firm, which was afterward made up of Mr. Clock and his sons, the firm name being Clock & Clock. He served for three years as county commissioner during his residence there.

In 1895 Mr. Clock came to California and in Redlands purchased a twenty-five acre ranch on East Palm avenue, built a new residence, and became interested in the pursuit of horticulture. In the meantime he purchased other orchards and now owns thirty acres which he set out in navels and valencias on Colton avenue near Judson in addition to the property already mentioned. He organized the Redlands Golden Orange Association, served as its first president and is still a director in the concern, and as a member of the Redlands Board of Trade and a former director takes a keen interest in the advancement of the city's affairs. For several years he served as a director in the Young Men's Christian Association. In religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, having united with that denomination in 1868 and at once became active in the advancement of the work. He assisted materially in the building of the church in Hampton, Iowa, also in Latimer, same state. Since locating in Redlands he has taken a very prominent part in the affairs of his church and in the building of the new church which was dedicated in 1903 was a potent factor, serving on the building committee, of which he was chairman, and is now officiating as president of the Board of Trustees. To no one member is greater credit due for the advancement and upbuilding of this work, and the high position he holds in the citizenship of Redlands and the surrounding country is due entirely to his personal characteristics which have won him a wide circle of friends.

In Nora, Ill., December 31, 1866, Mr. Clock was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Haskell, who was born April 12, 1850, in that place, and was educated at Mount Carroll Seminary, in Illinois. They have three children, Fred H., Harry L. and Charles H., who are all engaged in horticulture in Redlands. Mr. Clock was made a Mason in Warren, Ill., transferred to Kedron Lodge of Maysville, now Geneva, Ia., and served as master for seven years, was made a Royal Arch Mason in Hampton, where he served as high priest two terms, and is now a member of Redlands Lodge No. 300, F. & A. M., and Redlands Chapter, R. A. M. Both himself and wife are members of the Order of Eastern Star. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows and served as noble grand in Geneva, and is a member of Bear Valley Post, G. A. R., of Redlands, in memory of "his days and nights on the battlefield." Politically he is a stanch advocate of Republican principles.

JEROME CARSON DE ARMOND. When Jerome Carson DeArmond located in San Bernardino four years ago he commenced at the bottom in his business, having small quarters and a limited stock, and it speaks well for his ability to be able to say that today he has one of the largest stocks of furniture in the city and is conducting an extensive trade in that line. His birth occurred June 11, 1858, in Tingley, Ringgold county, Iowa, the DeArmond family being of French Huguenot extraction. His great-grandfather was born in Ireland and came to America in Revolutionary days in time to take an active part in the war, and both the grandfather, John, and the father, William DeArmond, were natives of Pennsylvania, the latter becoming a pioneer of Ringgold county, Iowa, when a young man. During the gold excitement in California he spent three years in this state, arriving in 1849, then returned to Iowa for a period, in 1867 locating in Missouri. In 1890 he again came to the western coast, this time settling in Sultan, Wash., where he is still residing. His wife, who was before her marriage Adeline Carson, was born in Sangamon county, Ill., her father, William Carson, having been an early settler in Illinois, his death finally occurring in Nebraska, while on a visit to his son. Mrs. DeArmond died in Washington. Of their eleven children nine grew to maturity and eight are now living.

The fourth child and second son of the family, Jerome Carson DeArmond lived until nine years old in Ringgold county, Iowa, then removed with his parents to Atchison county, Mo., locating on a farm. He received his education in the district schools and when eighteen years old joined a party intending to take a drove of cattle to the Black Hills. An Indian scare early decided them not to continue the journey and accordingly young DeArmond pluckily determined to finish the trip alone, and on foot, carrying a supply of food and a blanket in which to wrap himself when he slept. On the way he was captured by the Sioux Indians, who kept him in camp over one night, then released him and allowed him to pursue his way. Arriving in the Black Hills he engaged in mining for a time, then went to Nebraska and farmed until 1879. In that year he located in Leadville, Colo., and again took up mining for a couple of years, after which he journeyed to New Mexico and there joined an engineering corps occupied in surveying for the Rio Grande & Southern, or Santa Fe Railway. Two years were employed in this manner, the following twelve months were spent in Missouri, another year in the mines of Gunnison county, Colo., when, in 1884, he entered the San Luis valley in the same state, and the following year he filed on government land and established himself in a farming and stock business. It was while here that Mr. DeArmond was married to Miss Luthera Starbuck, a native of Schuyler county, Mo., and they continued to make their home on the ranch for a number of years. In 1889 he engaged in merchandising in Coryell, Colo., and when the railroad was built to Mosca, that state, he went there to engage in mercantile pursuits, and also filled the position of postmaster, having the office in his store. He was at the same time interested to some extent in mining operations.

In 1895 Mr. DeArmond removed with his family to western Texas, there sold his teams and outfit and pushed on to New Orleans and Mobile, Ala., and the following spring returned to Gunnison, Colo., and resumed his occupation as merchant and mining man. Two years later he went to Washington and in 1898 became a founder of the Burley Colony of Co-operative Brotherhood. Securing three hundred acres of land, he laid out the town of Burley, started numerous industrial mills and factories, and saw the enterprise grow into a success. After four years he went to Tacoma, where for a few months he was again interested in mercantile business, and then, in 1902, came to San Bernardino and began his business career here by opening a furniture repairing and tool-sharpening shop. Two months later the growth of the business induced him to lease the building on Third street, now the site of the natatorium. He met with such good success in the enterprise that in 1904 he was able to buy out Shafer Brothers furniture establishment and has since continued the business, now having three stores with a ground space 75x150 feet, which is necessary to accommodate his large stock of new and second hand goods. His location is at Nos. 339-341-343 Third street.

Mr. DeArmond owns considerable property, and besides his interests here owns his old home in Mosca, Colo. His four children are all at home, Madge and Gordon S. assisting him in the store, while Clare and Wayland are still in school. Mr. DeArmond has led an interesting life, has seen much of the world and is well versed on all matters of general interest. Politically his ideas are pronounced and advanced, he being a member of the Socialist party. Although his residence in San Bernardino has not been of long standing he holds the highest respect of the community in which he lives and is looked upon as one of the most public-spirited and substantial of its citizens.

SAMUEL LEFLER, a successful contractor and builder of San Bernardino, is the representative of an old family long established on American soil, the emigrating ancestor, a Huguenot, leaving Alsace-Lorraine in 1761 because of religious persecution. The name flourished for several generations in New Jersey, in which state was born Jacob Lefler; the uneventful years of his boyhood and young manhood were passed in that location, after which he became a pioneer of Ohio and engaged as a farmer throughout the remainder of his life. In his family was a son, John C., who was born in New Jersey and reared in Ohio, in which latter state he learned the shoemaker's trade. This occupation he followed in young manhood in Lebanon, Ohio, when, in 1852, he removed to Fulton county, Ill., and in the vicinity of Farmington followed agricultural pursuits for a time. Later, in the town of Farmington, he engaged in the prosecution of his trade, also being thus occupied in Lexington, Ill., eventually removing to Pontiac, same state, where he passed his declining years in peace and quietude, retired from the active cares of life. He attained the venerable age of eighty-four years, his death occurring in Pontiac in 1902. His wife, formerly Margaret Murdey, born in Canada of English parentage, also passed away in Illinois. Their family of five children attained maturity, four surviving at the present writing, a son, George, who served in the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry during the Civil war, residing in Pontiac.

The second child in order of birth, Samuel Lefler, was born at Foster Crossing, Warren county, O., April 26, 1847; before his school days began he was taken by his parents to Illinois and in Farmington received his education. A mere youth in years at the time of the Civil war, he attempted twice to enlist for service, the second time, in 1864, being accepted in Company B, Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, joining his regiment in Memphis and participating in affairs in Arkansas and Mississippi. In the summer of 1865 he served at Grenada, Miss., on provost duty, being mustered out in October of the same year, after which he returned to his home in Illinois. During the following winter he attended school in Farmington, where he subsequently learned the trade of carpenter. In 1869 he was located in Pontiac as foreman in his work and was also so occupied in Lexington. It was in 1886 that he first came to California and located in the city of San Bernardino and for five or six years was foreman for builders here, thereafter engaging in the building business independently. He has met with success and in the passing years has enlarged his business very materially, in the busiest season employing twenty men. Among his most important contracts were the erection of the car-barns, rebuilding of the postoffice building, the Andreson and Cartwright buildings, the original Sun office, while many of the finest residences of this city and county are of his construction.

The home of Mr. Lefler, located at Urbita, adjoining San Bernardino, is presided over by his wife, formerly Miss Emma Capps, a native of Farmington, Ill., and a daughter of Dempsey Capps, a miller of that place. They have a family of four sons and one daughter, namely: John D., an apiarist of San Bernardino county; Frank W., a carpenter engaged with his father; Charles H., who served in the Spanish-American war in Company K, Seventh Regiment California Infantry, and is also a carpenter engaged with his father; Mabel, the wife of Alexander Dobbs, of San Bernardino; and Harrison, at home. Mr. Lefler has manifested his faith in the permanency of the splendid conditions of Southern California by investing in real estate, owning at the present writing a fruit ranch near Bloomington, this county, in addition to his home property. He has taken an active interest in all public matters since locating in the state, being a member of the San Bernardino board of trade and a principal in the promotion of all movements calculated to advance the general welfare. During the erection of the county jail he served as inspector for the county, and has also done considerable building in the line of public utilities, such as bridges, county hospital building, etc. The family are identified with the religious and social life of the city, Mrs. Lefler being a member of the Baptist Church, which they liberally support. Mr. Lefler is associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and is past post commander of Cornman Post No. 57, G. A. R. Although on national issues a stanch Republican he holds locally to the principle of supporting the candidate whom he considers best qualified for the discharge of official duties.

CYRENE KILBOURNE MATTESON. In spite of severe disablements received while fighting for the freedom of the slaves during the Civil war Cyrene Kilbourne Matteson has improved forty acres of raw land in San Bernardino county and is now conducting successful ranching operations in Highland. He was born November 30, 1837, in Erie, N. Y., his boyhood days being spent upon a farm. He was educated in the public schools and had begun to read medicine when the Civil war broke out. Offering his services to his country, his enlistment for three months dated from April 19, 1861, he being a member of the First Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and five months later he returned home with an honorable discharge. He then re-enlisted in the same company and regiment for three years or during the war, his third enlistment being in the Second Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and his final discharge received at Vicksburg, June 26, 1865. His first assignment was in the Fifteenth Army Corps of the Army of Tennessee, and the second in the Sixteenth Army Corps. While in the service he was shot four times, one time by a rebel woman, of whom he asked to purchase something to eat. It was also his misfortune to contract small-pox while in the army, and he was confined to the pest house in Vicksburg for five months, his regiment being obliged to leave ahead of him at the time of their mustering out. A part of the time he acted as assistant to one of the medical staff, and wherever duty placed him he amply proved his patriotism, bravery and soldierly qualities.

After the close of the war Mr. Matteson entered the Eclectic Medical College of Cincinnati, O., from which he graduated in 1868 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Going at once to Fond du Lac, Wis., he practiced his profession there for one year, in 1869 removing to Iowa and continuing his practice there until 1874. The latter year witnessed his removal to Tennessee, where for ten years he followed his profession, and at the end of this time, in 1884, he came to California and purchased his present ranch. The land was then unimproved and he built the barns and house and in 1894 set out two thousand peach trees, a part of which subsequently died because of lack of water. He now has a good well and ample irrigating facilities, however, and the orchard is in a thriving condition.

By his first marriage, which occurred in Wisconsin, Mr. Matteson was united with Carrie A., daughter of Hiram and Lucy (Reeves) Robinson, and she became the mother of one child, Hiram C., who is now living in San Bernardino. Mrs. Carrie A. Matteson died March 16, 1869, and on August 3, 1876, Flora Beatrice Spencer became the wife of Mr. Matteson. She was born March 19, 1854, in Warren, Pa., the daughter of Abner and Sarah B. (Oliver) Spencer. Of this union six children were born: Bertha Estella, now Mrs. Arthur Fogler, resides in Santa Monica; May Elsie, who became the wife of Albert Dickens, lives in Ocean Park; Clara Rose, the wife of Marven Fleek, lives in Highland; Lena Edna, now Mrs. Henry Lindeman, resides in Santa Monica; Viola Mary is training to become a nurse in the San Bernardino Hospital; and Benjamin Harrison resides under the parental roof. Mr. Matteson is a member of Cornman Post No. 57, G. A. R., in San Bernardino, and was once a Good Templar and later a Patron of Husbandry. He is a man of enterprising and progressive ideas and high principles and by his upright living has won the entire respect of the community in which he resides.

EDWARD I. STILES. In everything but birth Mr. Stiles may with truth be called a thorough Californian, for he has known no other home than San Bernardino county, whither his parents removed from Utah when he was a child seven months old. The parents Amos and Rebecca Wood (O'Brien) Stiles, were both born in New Brunswick, and some time after their marriage came west and settled in Utah. It was in the latter state (then a territory) that their four eldest children were born, and of these Edward I. is the only one living, the first two having died in infancy, and Rebecca, the third child, January 1, 1892, when thirty-six years of age. The following children were added to the parental family after the removal to California: William Elmer, who lives on the family homestead, which he has managed since the death of the mother; and Rozetta, now Mrs. Eli Sparks, who is a resident of Anaheim, Orange county, Cal. From the time Amos Stiles came to California in 1858 until his death in 1896, at the age of seventy-two years, he carried on ranching, first on property which he purchased and now included in the city limits, and later on thirty-six acres on base line, this latter ranch now being the home of his son, William Elmer. Politically Mr. Stiles was a Republican, and in his religious connections was a member of the Mormon Church. This latter fact was the means of bringing discord into the home, and finally, after the birth of all of their children, a separation followed. Mr. Stiles was subsequently married to Mrs. Noma Holmes, a widow, who is still living, making her home on East Ninth street, San Bernardino. Mrs. Rebecca Stiles passed away January 11, 1904, at the age of sixty-nine years, having lived to see four of her children attain maturity and fill honorable places in the world.

Edward I. Stiles was born in Spanish Fork, Utah, April 2, 1858. Coming to San Bernardino at the age of seven months, he was placed in school as soon as his age would permit, and considering the meager facilities of that day he is a well-informed man. From the fact that his father was a tiller of the soil it was natural that his first work should be along this line, as he had been familiar with it from his earliest years. Subsequently he drifted into teaming and later added mining, in both of which occupations he was fairly successful, following the latter both in California and Nevada. It was in 1881 that he decided to resume the occupation of former years and for the purpose purchased the forty-acre ranch in the outskirts of San Bernardino upon which he now resides. To one untrained the work which lay before him in this wild tract would have seemed insurmountable, but it was here that his former experience and training proved a valuable asset. His first step was the erection of a suitable residence for his family, after which he built a barn and made such other improvements as were necessary to a well-conducted ranch. The place is well stocked with fruit trees of various kinds, all of which he himself set out, and in addition to raising fruit he carries on general farming.

A marriage ceremony celebrated January 1, 1891, united the lives of Edward I. Stiles and Anna Pasmore, the latter born in San Bernardino June 16, 1872, the daughter of Elisha H. and Elisabeth (Byrd) Pasmore. Mr. and Mrs. Stiles have one child, who bears her mother's name, and was born October 26, 1891. In Mr. Stiles the Independent Order of Foresters have an active and interested member; twice he has passed all the chairs in his lodge, and four times has been its representative in the Grand Lodge, first at Pomona, second at Stockton, the third time at San Diego, and the last time at Santa Barbara.

REUBEN JAMES ANDERSON is the owner of eighteen acres located a half mile from San Bernardino, on the base line, and devotes the same to general farming. He contracted for this property in 1870, then rough, swampy land, and through successive changes and efforts has brought it to a high state of cultivation. He fenced the property and erected a residence, barns and outbuildings, and upon the destruction of his home by fire in 1895 he put up his present residence, a neat, convenient cottage of five rooms, pantry and bath. At the present writing he is putting in a pumping plant with his son, C. J., having a good well on the property for irrigation purposes.

A native of the Mohawk valley, New York, Mr. Anderson was born March 29, 1831, a son of William and Lavina (Simmons) Anderson, the former also a native of that state, while the latter was born in Rhode Island. The paternal grandfather, who died when his son was but eleven years old, served in the Revolutionary war. Reuben J. Anderson was reared to the life of a farmer and has devoted the greater part of his mature years to that occupation. The discovery of gold brought him to the Pacific coast, and following his arrival in San Francisco, May 5, 1853, he came at once to San Bernardino county, and although he has traveled all over the western states this locality has remained his home. For the period of fifteen years he did teaming to and from the mines, and also did some prospecting, in all of which he met with success. For about twelve years he served as school trustee and has always taken a lively interest in the furtherance of movements for the mental or moral betterment of the community. When he first located here the medium of exchange was pumpkins, potatoes, slabs, or anything of marketable value, and innumerable other primitive schemes were employed in the interchange of business.

Mr. Anderson has been thrice married, the first ceremony being performed in 1861, and uniting him with Louise Button, who became the mother of two children, Maryette, Mrs. Survis, of San Bernardino; and Lavina Jane, who died at the age of ten months. The mother of these children died August 10, 1867. In San Bernardino county Mr. Anderson married Elizabeth Mathis, whose death occurred shortly after their marriage. On the 2nd of May, 1871, he married Elmira Mathis, daughter of John and Sarah (Dowdle) Mathis, and a native of Utah, who came to California with her parents January 4, 1868. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson became the parents of the following children: Francis Marion; Anna L., who became the wife of Harry C. Heath and died October 26, 1893, at the age of nineteen years; William W., of Los Angeles county, who married Maude Jones and has one child, Louis Dale; Clarence James, of San Bernardino, who married Maggie Henderson; Ernest Ingersoll, who married Myrtle Sinclair and had one child, Ernest McClellan; and Elizabeth Belle, wife of Frank Bragumier, of Los Angeles.

JAMES HENRY WALKER. An active, industrious and energetic business man, James Henry Walker, of San Diego, is widely known in building circles, his work as a contracting plasterer being found in by far the larger number of the more important public buildings and the more modern business blocks and private residences. Skilful in the use of tools, and keeping abreast of the times in his methods, he has gained an enviable reputation throughout this section of the county for the durability and artistic beauty of his work, and as junior member of the firm of Brelin & Walker is kept busily employed. A son of Joseph Green Walker, he was born, November 2, 1865, in Hutchinson, McLeod county, Minn., where the days of his boyhood and youth were spent.

Born in Virginia, Joseph G. Walker was brought up and educated in Kentucky. A true patriot in every sense implied by the term, he was loyal to the Union in the time that tried men's souls, and during the Civil war served in the Federal army. Being sent across the lines of the enemy as a spy, he was captured and confined in a rebel prison. Making his escape, he went to Minnesota in the spring of 1864, locating in Hutchinson, where he was for a number of years engaged in agricultural pursuits. Going to Arkansas in 1883, he resided first in Eureka, and then in Rogers, from there removing to Blackburn, Okla., where he is now living retired, having as a merchant accumulated a competency. He married America Sowards, who was born in old Virginia, and they have two daughters and four sons now living. She comes of English ancestry, being a daughter of Louis Sowards, who was born, reared and married in Virginia, but subsequently settled in Kentucky, where he operated a mill, and also ran boats on the Ohio river. Her five brothers served in the Civil war, two being captains of their respective companies, and two lieutenants.

The second child of the parental household, James Henry Walker, obtained his early knowledge of books in the public schools of Minnesota, residing there until 1883, when he went with the family to Arkansas. Having previously commenced learning the plasterer's trade, he continued it there for two years, and then, in 1885, went to Kingman, Kans., where he completed it. His health failing, he was forced to seek a milder and more equable climate, and for that reason, in 1887, located in San Diego. Although his physical strength was weak, his courage was strong, and he immediately began working at his trade, taking small jobs and contracts, which he executed himself. Gradually he grew stronger and more rugged, and at the end of five or six years he was entirely restored to his former vigor, being well and hearty. As a contracting plasterer, he met with good success, and in 1893 entered into partnership with Mr. Brelin, and under the firm name of Brelin & Walker has since carried on an extensive and lucrative business. This enterprising firm, whose work is first class in every respect, has the reputation of doing nine-tenths of the best plastering done in the city and its suburbs, every builder of importance seeking their contracts. Mr. Walker has accumulated considerable wealth, owning valuable residence property in addition to that which he occupies, at No. 142 Twentieth street.

In 1888, at Kingman, Kans., Mr. Walker married Sarah J. Troutwine, who was born in Ohio, and they have one child, Clyde. For seven successive years Mr. Walker was connected with the state militia. In 1888 he enlisted as a private in Company A, Ninth Regiment, National Guard, was made sergeant, and at the end of four years, in 1892, was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant, and served as such until the regiment was mustered out. He then enlisted in Company B, Seventh Regiment, and as a private served until he had completed seven years in the militia. Mr. Walker is a member of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, and belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood.

JOHN H. HATHERLEY. An extensive and successful ranchman of San Bernardino county is John H. Hatherley, a pioneer of this county, who is highly spoken of by all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. He is the owner of three valuable ranches, the home place comprising sixty acres devoted to the raising of grain, alfalfa and potatoes; a sixty-seven acre piece given over entirely to hay raising; and a forty-five acre tract of pasture land. Mr. Hatherley was born February 20, 1847, in England, the son of Thomas H. and Mary A. (Pattey) Hatherley, both natives of the British Isles. He was one of a family of seven children and received his education in an English private school. It was the intention of his parents that he enter the navy, but he left school before the completion of his preparatory studies and when a little over eleven years of age left home and went to sea, following the life of a sailor for nine years, one of his trips taking him to the Arctic Ocean, where he spent some time among the Esquimaux.

In 1867 he landed in San Francisco and took up life as a landsman. He began his career in the west as a ranchman, but gave this up soon afterward to engage in the saw mill business in San Mateo county. Subsequently he came to Santa Barbara county as foreman of a large stock ranch, a position which he held for eight years. Later he spent two years in Goleta, and in 1879 came to his present location, purchasing the ranch upon which he now lives, and putting all of the improvements thereon, besides sinking a well nine hundred feet deep, giving him enough water to irrigate sixty acres. His marriage to Miss Kate M. Fellen, a native of Ireland, occurred October 14, 1873. At her death, February 18, 1887, she left three children: John H., now of Arizona; Alfred and Berkley H. By his second marriage, in July, 1887, Mr. Hatherley was united with Sophia Olver, born in England, and she became the mother of three children: Elizabeth J., William L. and Joseph T. Mrs. Hatherley is an active member of the Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Hatherley is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party. He is a member of the Fraternal Union Lodge of America and in all matters of social and civic import takes an active interest.

ROBERT ADDISON. The name of Robert Addison is well known in mechanical circles throughout Southern California, whither he came in 1885 and settled in Pasadena. From a town of less than three hundred population he has seen the city grow to its present place among the cities of commercial importance of the Pacific coast, and he himself has shared in the commercial and financial activity which has revolutionized the west in the last two decades. Although he still retains his residence in Pasadena, the Addison Pump Company, of which he is the vice-president has been located in Pomona since 1901, and two years later was incorporated under the laws of the state. The plant is located at the corner of First and Cypress streets, and includes a foundry, blacksmith shop, and a pattern department, all covering a ground space 72x125 feet. The various commodities manufactured by the company are well known throughout the west, and include among others a double-acting surface pump, double-acting deep well pump (of which Mr. Addison is the sole inventor) and the single-acting deep well pump, besides centrifugal pumps and other mechanical devices.

Mr. Addison is of English descent, although American born, his birth having occurred in Cortland Center, Kent county, Mich., January 7, 1845. From North Duffield, Yorkshire, England, where he was born, Thomas Addison, his father, set out for America, settling in Utica, N. Y., and there he established domestic ties by his marriage to Emeline Johnson, a native of that city, of Scotch ancestry. After their marriage the parents removed to the frontier of Michigan, and there amid the wilds of Kent county the father cleared a farm and reared his family. Indians were their nearest neighbors and wolves were so frequently seen as to cause no alarm or comment. Thomas Addison became a well known figure in his community, and as supervisor and justice of the peace took an active part in its civic life. Fraternally he was a Mason. Seven children, four sons and three daughters, were born to this worthy couple. George is a resident of Los Angeles; Thomas is general manager for the General Electric Company for the state of California; and Albert has had charge of the homestead in Michigan since the death of his parents.

In order of birth Robert Addison was the fifth child, and he was reared and educated in Kent county, Mich. Of a mechanical turn of mind naturally, when the time came for him to choose a calling he naturally leaned towards a line that would permit him to give vent to his genius and for a time followed the building business. From this he later branched out into a manufacturing line, purchasing a sash, door and general planing mill in Rockford, Mich., which he ran successfully for eleven or twelve years. After disposing of his mill he spent one season in Dakota, going from there to St. Louis, and six months later returned to Michigan. As has been previously stated, he first set foot on California soil in the fall of 1885, a move which has proven advantageous to himself as well as to the locality in which he settled. He identified himself with the little town of Pasadena in that year and established a planing mill which he continued to operate until the boom was over. Thereafter he was variously interested for a time, going first to Puget Sound, later to San Francisco, where he had charge of building work, and from there to Napa City, where he was in the employ of the electric lighting company. A short experience as a rancher in Eagle Rock valley proved to him that his forte did not lie in that direction and upon disposing of his ranch in 1890 he went to Los Angeles and entered the employ of Mr. Luitweller, as gas engine and pump expert. This move proved a wise one, and in the work which his position demanded dormant talents were brought into play which have been the direct means of his success today. After eight months as a manufacturer on his own account in Los Angeles he removed to Pomona and established his present factory, which under the name of the Addison Pump Company has been enlarged to meet the demands of the business, and is classed among the thriving industries of the Pomona valley. In the interests of the business Mr. Addison is on the road a large part of the time, and besides visiting patrons throughout his own state, canvasses the neighboring states of Arizona, Utah and Nevada.

In Michigan Mr. Addison was married to Miss Ella Quigley, who was born in Kent county, that state, and their only child, Ivan, was born in Rockford, Mich. As he was only a child when the removal of the family to California occurred he was reared and educated principally in Pasadena. For five years he was in the employ of the Edison Electric Light Company of Pasadena, and subsequently was interested in business with his father. He was married in Los Angeles to Leone Lindley, who was born in Indiana, and he now makes his home in Pomona, and is employed as draughtsman with the Addison Pump Company. He is classed among the town's rising young business men and is a valued member of the Board of Trade. Robert Addison is a Democrat in his political beliefs, and fraternally he is a Mason of the Royal Arch degree.

HAZEN H. KELLY. A young man who has made a pronounced success in his ranching operations is Hazen H. Kelly of Redlands. He is a native of San Bernardino county, and has spent his entire life within its boundaries. His father, Joseph H. Kelly, was born in Illinois in 1842; he later settled in Utah and in 1861 came to San Bernardino county, Cal., where he now resides. In 1866 the father was married to Miss Sarah Keller, a native of California, who became the mother of five children and died in San Bernardino in 1876. Mr. Kelly is a well-known ranchman, who is especially interested in the raising of fine horses.

Born January 13, 1874, Hazen H. Kelly received a common school education in San Bernardino county and after school days were over he engaged in ranching with his father on the home ranch for a number of years, and at the age of twenty-four married and commenced ranching independently. For the past four years he has owned and operated the ranch upon which he now resides, and which comprises fifty-four acres of land. Thirty-five acres are planted in oranges, twelve acres having been set out in 1906, and fifteen acres are in alfalfa.

Mr. Kelly is a man of energy and enterprise and has been very successful in his undertakings. His marriage in 1898 united him with Miss Laura Adkinson, a native of Orange county, whose father, J. A. Adkinson, is living there at the present time. Two children have been born of this union, Joseph and Percy. Mr. Kelly is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Democratic party and takes an active interest in all matters pertaining to the public welfare.

CHARLES W. BAILEY. One of the oldest settlers and most successful ranchmen and fruit growers in the Spencer valley, San Diego county, is Charles W. Bailey, who has been living on the ranch which he now occupies since 1883. He was born August 9, 1842, in Kentucky, the son of L. M. and Nancy (Richardson) Bailey, both natives of the same state. The parents were both active members of the Baptist Church and the father was a firm believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party. The mother died at the age of fifty-three years, while the father was seventy-two at the time of his demise. They were the parents of eleven children, four of whom are living in California at the present time: H. C. in Long Beach; T. O. on Smith Mountain; L. N. at Banner; and Charles W. at Wynola. One son, J. M., died in Colusa county in 1853.

The early education of C. W. Bailey was received in the common schools of Illinois, his parents having removed to Macoupin county, that state, from Kentucky when he was but six years of age, and he finished his school work at Blackburn University, in Carlinville, before enlisting for service in the Civil war. As a member of Company G, One Hundred and Thirty-third Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, he was stationed for five months at Rock Island, then returned to his home county and engaged in farming until 1878. In that year he removed to Kansas, locating near Arkansas City, where he purchased an eighty-acre farm, which he held for two years. He then sold out and in 1883 came to California, buying the four hundred and forty acre ranch on which he now makes his home and has since devoted himself to grain and stock-raising and fruit growing.

Mr. Bailey's marriage to Miss Jennie R. Hamilton, a native of Virginia, occurred in California, and they are the parents of four children: Oscar, Virginia, Newton L. and Mary. Mrs. Bailey is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Bailey affiliates fraternally with the Masonic lodge of Escondido, having been made a Mason in Illinois in 1863. Politically he advocates the principles of the Republican party and is actively interested in all matters of public import.

FRANCIS MARION LEE. A young man of recognized ability, integrity and worth, Francis Marion Lee is contributing largely towards the advancement of the agricultural and mercantile interests of Compton, being prosperously engaged in general ranching, and likewise having a finely established jewelry business in the village. A son of Benjamin D. Lee, he was born, November 6, 1871, in Poweshiek county, Iowa, the descendant of a Pennsylvania family of prominence. His grandfather, the late William C. Lee, was born in Pennsville, Pa., in 1811, married Sarah Dennis in 1837, and died at his home in Pasadena, Cal., in 1905, at the venerable age of ninety-four years. His wife preceded him to the life beyond, passing away in 1903. They reared a large family of children, six of whom survive, namely: Benjamin D., Mrs. J. E. Quinby, C. F., Mrs. L. A. Shirks, Mrs. M. L. McIntosh and A. C. Lee.

Born in Pennsylvania, Benjamin D. Lee spent several years of his early manhood in Iowa, from there removing to Illinois, and being a resident of Princeton for some time. He subsequently carried on general farming in Allen county, Kans., living there until the spring of 1893, when he came to California, settling in Los Angeles county, where he is now retired from active pursuits, his home being in Pasadena. He married Tirza Ann Keller, a native of Ohio, and they became the parents of two children, Walter Varian, of Pasadena, and Francis Marion.

Being but three years old when his parents removed from Iowa to Princeton, Ill., Francis Marion Lee there acquired the rudiments of his education, completing his school life in Allen county, Kans. Leaving home when twenty-two years old, he was engaged in agricultural work for a year, after which he ran the grain elevator in Moran, Kans., for a while. Then establishing himself as a jeweler in Farlington, Kans., he remained there a year. In 1896 he came to California, locating three miles northeast of Compton, where he was prosperously employed in farming for four years. Removing then to his father's ranch, lying one mile northwest of Compton, he has since had the supervision of its twenty-five acres of land, and in its management has met with noteworthy success. In addition to ranching he has also been profitably engaged in the jewelry business in Compton since December, 1901, having built up a thriving trade in this line, and won an assured position among the leading business men of this community.

October 8, 1890, in Moran, Kans., Mr. Lee married May Coffman, who was born in Indiana, but was brought up and educated in Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Lee are the parents of six children, namely: Eva R. Haydn Coffman, Agnes Tirza, Francis C., Olive May and Jessie. Politically Mr. Lee is a steadfast Republican, and is a member of two beneficial organizations, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Amsterdam Casualty Company. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lee are members of the Christian Church, but there being no organization of that denomination in Compton they attend the Congregational Church, and for two and one-half years Mr. Lee has been superintendent of its Sunday-school.

J. H. JENSEN. Agriculture, as conducted under the favorable conditions found in San Luis Obispo county, has a wise and sagacious follower in J. H. Jensen, a prominent Danish-American, and the owner of his present ranch of five hundred acres near Nipomo since 1902. Mr. Jensen was born on a farm in the principality of Sleswick-Holstein, August 8, 1872, and is a son of J. H. and Annie (White) Jensen, natives of the same part of Germany. The elder Jensen was a baker by trade, but owned his own tract of land and derived his chief sustenance from the pursuit of agriculture. In 1890 he immigrated to California, where live the five survivors of his family of seven children, and here his death occurred in Watsonville at the age of seventy-two. His wife, who is sixty-eight years old, makes her home in Nipomo.

The education of Mr. Jensen has been self acquired, and is the accomplishment of his mature rather than youthful days. Early confronted with the wage-earning problem, he came to America at the age of fourteen, and from New York sailed to the Isthmus of Panama, and thence to San Francisco. In San Luis Obispo county he found employment on several ranches, and after a number of unsuccessful attempts at independent ranching, invested in a tract of land in Merced county in 1896. This farm proved disappointing from the standpoint of productiveness, and in 1902 he purchased his present valuable and well-equipped ranch. He is engaged principally in grain and bean culture, and averages about five sacks per acre. He has fine buildings and much valuable farm machinery, and is constantly on the lookout for better ways of conducting his affairs.

The marriage of Mr. Jensen and Mrs. Paulson occurred in 1902, Mrs. Jensen being a native of Germany, and by her first marriage the mother of eight children. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Jensen, Frances and Ernest. Mr. Jensen is liberal in politics, but casts his vote preferably for a Democratic candidate. He is social in his tendencies, and a member of the Nipomo Lodge No. 164, K. of P., and the Danish Lodge No. 16. He is a man of pleasing address, well balanced mind, and the thrift and far-sightedness characteristic of his countrymen.

HENRY O. MORRIS For generations the Morris family have been pioneers in the settlement of the United States, pushing out as time passed to the edges of civilization, hewing their way further into the wilderness and making easier the path of those that followed later. Three generations back Henry Morris settled in Ohio in a very early day, when that country was infested by Indians, and he fought his way through troubles with them. Lorenzo D. and Rachael (Dresbach) Morris, the parents of the present Henry O., were both natives of Ohio, and in his turn the father pushed out into the frontier, locating in Edgar county, Ill., in 1852, and engaging in agricultural pursuits remained there the rest of his lifetime. His wife, who was born in 1815, died in 1896, and he passed away at the age of eighty-eight years, having been born in 1813.

Born September 19, 1841, in Pickaway county, Ohio, Henry O. Morris was taken by his parents to Illinois, where he was educated in the old subscription and public schools of that state, and from the time that he had attained his majority until 1887 he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Edgar county. In the meantime, during the summer of 1882, he had been in the San Jacinto valley, California, at which time there were not more than three or four white families there. Hither he came as a settler in 1887 and a year later he bought the place upon which he now resides, built a house and other necessary buildings, planted trees and now has a highly improved ranch of fifteen acres, devoted principally to oranges, olives, alfalfa and a few peaches. In 1871 he was married in Illinois to Miss Mary Webster, a daughter of William Webster, who came to California in 1875. Mr. and Mrs. Morris are the parents of two children, Bruce, who lives in Riverside, and Fred, a mining engineer now located in Alaska. Politically Mr. Morris is a Democrat, and during his residence in Illinois served on the school board for several years.

ALBERT G. HULL. A man who owns considerable property and is making a success of his ranching operations is Albert G. Hull, of Winchester, who stands high as a citizen of the community in which he resides. He was born December 16, 1858, in Dunn county, Wis., the son of Marvin and Julia (Stowe) Hull, both natives of New York, who in 1857 became pioneers of Wisconsin. There the father was occupied as a farmer and stockman, and at one time engaged in the milling business. In 1871 he went still further west and settled in Big Bend, Minn., where he was occupied as a farmer until 1878, when he removed to Benson, built a store building, which he rented, and lived retired from business activities until 1887. In that year he came to California and purchased a ten-acre ranch near Winchester, making this place his home until 1902. From here he removed to Olympia, Wash., where he now lives and is engaged in gardening. He is now eighty-four years old, his wife being one year younger.

The preliminary education of Albert G. Hull was received in the public schools of Wisconsin, and later he attended the high school at Benson, Minn. His father having sold the farm, when the son was ready to begin his business career he worked as a machinist for three years, then went to Montevideo, Minn., and clerked in a hotel five years. Afterwards he located in South Dakota and engaged in the insurance business there for a couple of years, later for three years having charge of a hotel in Webster, that state. In 1887 he came to California and located near Winchester, where he now resides upon a ten-acre ranch. He also owns four hundred and forty acres in the same location, which is improved with a house and other buildings, and on this latter place he has one hundred and twenty head of cattle and twenty-eight horses and mules. He is especially interested in the breeding of English Shire horses and owns a full-blood Shire stallion named Wonder, which is considered one of the most valuable horses in this section of the state. A large number of horses are required for his farm work, as he has three hundred and fifty acres of land planted to grain and hay.

In 1892 Mr. Hull was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary (Daurty) Hull, who was born in Wisconsin and is the mother of two children by her former marriage, Arthur J. and Chester. Fraternally he is a member of Winchester Lodge No. 3623, I. O. F., and politically is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. He has always taken an active interest in public matters and officially has been a member of the board of school trustees, a constable here for ten years, and is now deputy sheriff, an office he has held for the past eight years.

ROBERT B. HARPER. Among the agriculturists of Los Angeles county who have attained success from a financial point of view is Robert B. Harper, who is one of the most progressive and energetic farmers and stock-raisers of Downey, and a complete master of the vocation which he is so earnestly following. He is a native of the state, his birth having occurred September 8, 1879, on the ranch where he now lives, a son of William Harper. His grandparents, John and Betsey (Lake) Harper, were born and brought up in New York state. After their marriage they settled in Ohio, becoming pioneers of Ashtabula county, where he, in addition to farming, was engaged for many years in boating on the lakes, carrying wood and stone used in building piers. Both spent their last years in Kane county, Ill.

William Harper was born, March 17, 1834, in Ashtabula county, Ohio. Completing his early education in the district schools of Kane county, Ill., he remained at home until 1852, when he came across the plains, with horse-teams, to California, arriving at Hangtown on July 28. The following three years he was engaged in mining, first in Hangtown, then at Scotts bar, in Siskiyou county. The next year he lived in the Sacramento valley, and in 1858 came down to the Nietos valley, locating near Downey, and for nine years worked for General Banning. In 1867 he started in business on his own account, becoming the pioneer truckman of Los Angeles. In 1868, purchasing land about three miles west of Downey, he embarked in agricultural pursuits, placing his eighty-four acres of land in a tillable condition. Prosperous in his undertakings, he carried on an excellent business as a general farmer and stockman for many years, by industry and good management accumulating a competency. He bought five house lots at Long Beach, and in 1903, leaving his son Robert on the home ranch, removed to his present residence, at No. 517 West Second street. May 8, 1876, he married Alpha J. Lower, a native of California, and they have three children, namely: Clara, wife of Norman Fay, of Downey; Robert B., the special subject of this brief sketch; and William, of Portersville, Cal.

Brought up on the home farm, Robert B. Harper attended the public schools of his district while young, subsequently pursuing his studies for six months at Woodberry College. Completing his early education, he began working for himself on the home ranch, which now contains eighty-nine acres of valuable land. He devotes his attention to the raising of alfalfa and stock, and is also profitably engaged in dairying, keeping twenty-five cows. A thorough-going farmer, practical and enterprising, he is meeting with unquestioned success in his agricultural operations, and holds an honored position among the most hightly respected and public-spirited citizens of the community.

In 1902 Mr. Harper married Amy Musselman, who was born in Kansas, a daughter of Hiram Musselman. Politically Mr. Harper is a firm supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and is now serving as road overseer. Fraternally he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, and of the Knights of the Maccabees, while both he and his wife belong to the Order of the Eastern Star.

LEWIS LEWISON. The young men of to-day who are inclined to underestimate the chances for success in the country might derive encouragement and a change of opinion from the career of Lewis Lewison, one of the self-made men of Los Angeles county, who in addition to cultivating his own ranch of four acres on Kingsley and Washington streets, Pomona, superintends the management of forty acres adjoining his own, all of which is set out to oranges of a good quality. Ever since locating in Pomona in 1891 he has given his undivided attention to the study of horticulture, and for a number of years prior to establishing himself in the business on his own account he had charge of the large ranch owned by Fred J. Smith, of Pomona.

Mr. Lewison is a native of Denmark, born near Wiborg, Jutland, September 9, 1863, being next to the oldest in a family of six children born to his parents, Peter and Maren (Anderson) Lewison. A blacksmith by trade, the father gave up work in that line during the progress of the Sleswick-Holstein war in 1864, serving with valor during the struggle. The parents never left their native land for a home in the new world, and the mother is still living in the land which is dear through the associations of a lifetime. The father passed away in 1877. Three of their six children are now residents of California.

The public schools in the neighborhood of his Danish home furnished the only school training which Mr. Lewison received, and while he was still a young boy he had become thoroughly familiar with the blacksmith's trade, and indeed, from the age of sixteen until twenty, he worked at his trade for wages. In compliance with a rigid custom in his native land he entered the service of his country, becoming a member of the Sixth Regiment, Fourth Company, and after a six-months service he was honorably discharged. In 1887 he came to the United States and located on a farm near Dannebrog, Howard county, Neb. Two years later he moved still further west, going to Wyoming, here for two years he had charge of a cattle ranch. Disposing of his interests there at the end of that time he completed the journey to the Pacific coast and in the spring of 1891 located in Pomona. Although his previous training had not been along the line of horticulture his knowledge of agriculture was invaluable to him and he easily secured positions with orchardists. He remained with one employer, Fred J. Smith, for nearly nine years, and for three years had entire charge of the ranch, which contained one hundred and ten acres. A desire to once more become a land owner led to the purchase of a small ranch in 1897, but after two years he disposed of it and purchased his present four-acre ranch at the corner of Kingsley and Washington streets. At the time he took possession of the ranch only one acre was in oranges, but he now has three acres in splendid bearing condition.

In Pomona Mr. Lewison was married to Miss Christine Jorgensen, who was born on the Island of Laaland, Denmark. Two sons, Alfred and Julius, have been born of this marriage. The family attend the Christian Church, of which both Mr. and Mrs. Lewison are members. Mr. Lewison is a member of the Fruit Growers' Exchange, and is a director of the Kingsley Tract Water Company. Politically he is a Republican in national affairs, though in local elections he gives his vote for the best man for the position in question, irrespective of party name. Fraternally an Odd Fellow, he was initiated into the order in Pomona Lodge No. 246, and with his wife is a member of the Fraternal Aid.

PHILEMON R. LACY. The growing of carnations has become one of the industries of Redondo, and to no one is the development of the industry more indebted than to Mr. Lacy, who for many years has made of it a specialty and has studied every branch of the work until he now is regarded as an authority on the subject. When he first entered the employ of the Redondo Floral Company he knew little of floriculture, but by careful observation and constant study he acquired a thorough knowledge of the occupation and eventually was made manager of the largest carnation garden in the entire world. The company owns eighteen acres in carnations and ships to the wholesale markets as far east as Chicago, making a specialty of new varieties, including the Governor Roosevelt, Norway, Enchantress, Queen Louise, H. Manley and Madame Lawson. Their original greenhouse, 20x300 feet in dimensions, was the first building of the kind erected in Southern California. In time it proved inadequate to the growing needs of the business and was supplemented by a greenhouse 208x56 feet. Besides the sale of carnations, a large trade is carried on in nursery stock, ornamental shrubs and potted plants.

The father of Mr. Lacy was David A., born in Carter county, Tenn., at the foothills of the Great Smoky mountains, and reared in the midst of a frontier environment. Early in life he went to Texas and took part in the revolution for Texan independence. When the now flourishing city of Dallas had only two houses and they were cabins built of logs, he landed in that place, where one of his first transactions was to trade a pair of boots for a section of land six miles from town. The bargain proved an excellent one for him, as the ranch, which he still owns, is now among the most valuable stock farms in that locality. In religion he is identified with the Christian Church. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Paulina Cockrell, was born in Kentucky and died in Texas in 1883. Nine children, five sons and four daughters, were born of their union, and all are still living, P. R. being fifth in order of birth. He was born at Dallas, Tex., June 7, 1866, and at a very early age became interested in working with fruits and flowers. Soon he was given charge of his father's nursery and orchard, and under his supervision the trees produced abundant crops of fine quality. In 1887 he came to California and for a year worked as a horticulturist, after which he came to Redondo and embarked in the livery business with George Cate, the two erecting the first barn in Redondo and conducting the first business of its kind. In two years he sold out and became an employe of the Redondo Floral Company, with which he has continued to the present. Since coming to Redondo he has established a home of his own, being united in marriage with Miss Grace Hamer, who was born in Illinois, and reared at Compton, Cal. Two children, Reta Paulina and Carl Raymond, comprise their family. In religious connections Mrs. Lacy is identified with the Baptist Church and Mr. Lacy contributes to the same, also to other movements for the public good. Along the line of his chosen work he finds pleasure in his association with the Los Angeles Horticultural Society, while fraternally he holds membership with the Independent Order of Foresters and has served the local lodge as chief ranger.

Since writing the above Mr. Lacy has removed to a ranch near Gardena, which is now his postoffice.

THOMAS H. LAMBERT. Numbered among the progressive citizens of El Monte is Thomas H. Lambert, who as a farmer and horticulturist holds place among the successful men of this section. He is a native of Franklin county, Ark., born April 27, 1869, in the vicinity of Fort Smith; his father, Frank, was born in Alabama, as was also his grandfather, Morgan, who immigated to Arkansas and became a farmer in that section. Frank Lambert engaged as a farmer until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he left his farm, shouldered a musket and fought gallantly for the land of his birth. He returned to civic pursuits after the close of the struggle and followed farming until his death in 1873. His wife, formerly Rebecca Jones, died in 1876, leaving five children, of whom three now survive.

The youngest of his father's family, Thomas H. Lambert was orphaned at the age of seven years, when he went to live with an uncle, George Lambert. After two years he made his home with his married sister, Mrs. Bradley, and while with her received what education it was possible for him to obtain with the limited advantages of the country of Arkansas. Thrown upon his own resources at the age of fourteen years he secured employment on neighboring farms until he was eighteen, when with his accumulated savings he went into the general merchandise business with an uncle, Joseph Lambert, being located at National Springs, Ark., until 1889. In this year he sold out and came to California. After remaining two months in Los Angeles, he was in Pasadena for the ensuing three months, and from there came to El Monte, entering the employ of J. S. Killian, a horticulturist of this section. In 1891 he returned to Arkansas and the following year married Miss Fannie Bryant, a native of that state, where her father was a farmer. In 1894 they located in Briartown, I. T., and farmed for two years, when Mr. Lambert once more turned his face to the Pacific coast. In El Monte he engaged as foreman for Mr. Killian until 1898, when he decided to enter the work for himself. He began by raising potatoes in different places in this district, but not until 1906 did he purchase property, in that year buying thirty acres in the El Monte school district three-quarters of a mile north of the town. Here he began raising walnuts and alfalfa, and has since added many improvements, among them a pumping plant with a forty-horse power engine, a No. 7 Byron Jackson vertical pump, with a capacity of one hundred and fifty inches. At the same time he operates the Proctor farm of seventy acres, raising walnuts and alfalfa, the land being irrigrated by a pump with a capacity of one hundred and twenty-five inches, and farms sixty-five acres of potatoes in the Bassett district.

Mr. and Mrs. Lambert have two children, Stella and Ottie. Fraternally Mr. Lambert belongs to California Lodge No. 330, I. O. O. F., of Monrovia. His wife is a member of the Baptist Church, to which he gives a liberal support. He belongs to the Mountain View Walnut Growers' Association and does all in his power to promote the best interests of the country at large. Especially is he interested in the educational affairs of the community, having served as a member of the board of trustees of the El Monte district for three years, and is now acting as clerk of the board to the entire satisfaction of all concerned.

HENRY CLAY LEWIS. A man of exceptional business ability and judgment, far-sighted and enterprising, Henry Clay Lewis, a resident of Long Beach, has been actively connected with many of the important transfers of realty in Los Angeles county within the past fifteen or twenty years, and as one of the leading dealers in real estate has carried on an extensive and remunerative business. A son of Thomas Lewis, he was born at Buckrun, Adams county, Ohio, April 12, 1830, of substantial colonial stock.

Born and reared in South Carolina, Thomas Lewis became a farmer from choice, and while yet a young man became one of the earlier settlers of Ohio. In 1832 he followed the march of civilization westward, going with his family to Warren county, Ind., where he took up land, cleared a farm from the wilderness, and carried on general ranching for thirteen years. Going to Vermilion county, Ill., in 1845, he remained there until his death, at the age of fifty-three years. He married Ann Gage, a native of Kentucky, and after his death she removed to Polk county, Iowa, where she spent her remaining years, dying at an advanced age.

Completing his early education in the high school at Bloomingdale, Ind., Henry Clay Lewis worked for awhile with his brother on a stock farm. Subsequently going into business for himself, he located in Annapolis, Ind., as a stock raiser and dealer, remaining there several years, when, in 1861, he removed to Polk county, Iowa. However, as his brothers enlisted for service in the Civil war, he returned to Vermilion county, Ill., to live with his mother, but later took her to his house in Polk county, Iowa, where he was engaged in farming and stock-raising. His brother Charles was taken prisoner at the battle of Chattanooga, and died in Andersonville prison. His brother Levi served through the entire war, at its close receiving his honorable discharge. In 1883, Mr. Lewis removed to Glenelder, Kans., and then came to Los Angeles county, Cal., arriving in Pasadena on December 22, 1884. At once engaging in the real-estate business he made money in his transactions. Keen-sighted and sagacious, with a wise premonition of the future upbuilding of the city, he invested a part of his capital in a fruit ranch, which, as a sub-division, he laid out in town lots, and sold at an advantageous price, the lots bordering on Euclid street. He became a large property owner in Pasadena, at one time having title to eighty acres of land. Locating at Long Beach in 1889, he owned and operated a stock ranch about four miles north of the city for six years, after which he resided for awhile within the city limits. He subsequently spent five years on a ranch near Santa Ana, but in 1900 returned to Long Beach, where he has since lived, honored and respected by all.

Mr. Lewis has been three times married. In Bloomingdale, Ind., in 1854, he married Jane Hill, a native of that state. She died in Wabash, Ind., leaving three children, namely: Almyra A., widow of the late Robert Huston, of Wyoming; Thomas S., for twelve years a conductor on the Southern Pacific Railroad, and now living in Los Angeles, where he is interested in mining as manager of the Cieneguita Copper Company; and William Edwin, of Denver, in the railway service. In 1875, in Iowa, Mr. Lewis married Anna Thornton, who was born in Illinois, and of this marriage four children were born, namely: Alwilda May, wife of Roland J. Newsom, a gardener in Pasadena; Frank N., of Long Beach; Harry, living near Huntington Beach; and Carl, of Long Beach. Mrs. Lewis died February 22, 1900, near Santa Ana. September 15, 1903, Mr. Lewis married Elizabeth Burger, who was born in Cook county, Ill. Her father, born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1806, married Mary Zenly in Detroit, Mich.; she was a native of Alsace-Lorraine, her birth occurring in 1811. Upon his immigration to the United States, Mr. Burger located first in Detroit, Mich., later in Cook county, Ill., afterwards residing in Naperville, Ill. In 1865 he moved with his family to Dwight, Ill., and there both he and his wife spent their remaining years, his death occurring in April, 1893, and hers one month later, in May, 1893. Mrs. Lewis has demonstrated her abilities as a good business woman, and for a number of years conducted a millinery store in Dwight, Ill. Since locating in this state and since her marriage she has ably assisted her husband in various business ventures. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lewis enjoy the confidence and esteem of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

JACOB RHEINGANS. Throughout Southern California are many well-to-do agriculturists, who through their own strenuous efforts have obtained a competency and are now living retired from active labor, enjoying a well-earned leisure. Prominent among these prosperous farmers is Jacob Rheingans, whose highly improved and well-kept ranch is advantageously located near the city of Los Angeles. A son of the late William Rheingans, he was born December 20, 1843, in Germany, and from his honored ancestors he inherited in a large measure those habits of industry, thrift and economy that invariably command success in the business world.

A native of Germany, William Rheingans lived in the Fatherland for a number of years after his marriage, being employed as a tiller of the soil. Immigrating with his family to the United States in 1848, he proceeded directly to Wisconsin, where he purchased five hundred acres of land, from which he improved a valuable homestead. Active and industrious, he carried on general farming in that state until his death, in 1896. He married Margaret Know, who bore him twelve children, three of whom were born in Germany, and the others in Wisconsin. Eight of the children survive, namely: Jacob, the subject of this sketch; Henry; Peter; William; Charles; Eve; Mary; and Katie. The mother was a member of the Lutheran Church, which the family also attend.

During the Civil war Jacob Rheingans enlisted as a private in a Wisconsin regiment, and served under Colonel Soloman until the expiration of his term of enlistment. Becoming a farmer from choice, he began tilling the soil when about twenty-two years old, and was thus successfully employed in Wisconsin for about twenty years. In 1886 he came to California in search of a favorable opportunity for investing his money. Locating near the city of Los Angeles, he purchased his present ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, and in its improvement was very successful, it being now one of the most attractive and productive estates in the neighborhood, Having labored with well-directed toil for many years, he is now taking life easy, having relegated the care of his ranch to his son William. Politically Mr. Rheingans is an ardent supporter of Republican principles.

Mr. Rheingans married Katherine Hetsel, a native of Germany, and of the twelve children that have blessed their union ten are living, namely: Lizzie, Louise, Katie, Bertha, Maggie, Sarah, Huldah, Ida, Robert and William. Mr. and Mrs. Rheingans are true to the religious faith in which they were reared, and are loyal members of the Lutheran Church.

MRS. NARCISSA DUNCAN. In speaking of the pioneers of a country the average person calls to mind members of the sterner sex who have braved the dangers of settling a new country, unconsciously ignoring the thousands of noble women who have shared the same dangers and vicissitudes and are no less worthy to be called upbuilders of commonwealths. Among the latter perhaps no worthier example could be mentioned than Mrs. Narcissa Duncan, who upon the death of her husband pre-empted the quarter section which he had previously entered in Green Meadow district, two and one-half miles south of the city limits of Los Angeles. Adhering tenaciously to the policy of improvement and cultivation which her husband had inaugurated, it is her pride and satisfaction to own one of the most valuable ranches in the county, the land ranging in value from $1,500 to $5,000 per acre.

Mrs. Duncan's ability to cope with pioneer conditions is in a measure an inherited tendency, for it is known that her paternal grandfather was one of the first settlers in Livingston county, Mo. There her father, William Parker, was born, reared and established a home of his own. When his daughter Narcissa was a child of two years (her birth occurring in Livingston county December 8, 1842), Mr. Parker took his wife and nine children to Texas, the entire journey being made by wagon. Two years after their location in the latter state the family were bereaved by the death of the wife and mother. After following farming and stock-raising there for about five years Mr. Parker left his family on the ranch and began teaming for the government. Returning to Texas about 1854 he made preparations for the removal of his family to California, making the journey overland the same year by mule team. In the vicinity of San Diego the father engaged in farming and stock raising for four years, thereafter carrying on the same business near Del Monte until 1871. During the latter year, on account of advancing age, he gave up active business life altogether and thereafter made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Duncan, until his death, which occurred when he had attained the ripe age of eighty-two years. Throughout life he had been a stanch supporter of Democratic principles. His wife, who in maidenhood was Elizabeth Hicks, was also a native of Missouri, and died while the family were living in Texas.

As will be seen from the foregoing Mrs. Duncan was little more than a child in arms when the family removed from Missouri, and was a girl of twelve when her father located in California. In 1855 she was united in marriage with William S. Duncan, who although born in Tennessee was reared in Texas, whither his mother had removed while he was still a youth. At the time the Parker family removed to this state he also came hither as a member of the same train, and the following year occurred the marriage of the young people. From 1857 until 1859 Mr. Duncan was interested in the White River mines in Kern county, and subsequently located in Los Angeles county, in 1868 purchasing a squatter's claim to the land which his widow now owns and occupies. As a means of livelihood he carried on teaming to the mines (having eight horses to each wagon), following this up to the time of his death, January 11, 1871. Eight children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Duncan, all of whom reached maturity except the youngest, who died in infancy. Frances became the wife of M. L. Bennett, a rancher in Green Meadow district; she died in young womanhood, when only twenty-seven years of age. Robert is the second child in order of birth. Cora is the wife of Charles McClain, and the family reside in Los Angeles. John Smith is a rancher and has charge of the homestead. Henry resides in Los Angeles, where he carries on a truck business. Mahala is the wife of Louis Fogle, who in addition to conducting a ranch in Green Meadow district, also carries on teaming. The youngest child living is Maude Myrtle, the wife of Hugh C. Laughlin, and she still makes her home with her mother on the old homestead, which now contains only sixty-two acres, the remainder of the quarter section having been deeded to the other children. All of the sons are Democrats in their political affiliations.

ERNEST M. FREEMAN, M. D. Since inaugurating his professional practice in Long Beach in 1903 Dr. E. M. Freeman has become substantially identified with the advance in medical and surgical science in Los Angeles county, his wide experience and appreciation of the highest tenets of his calling making him an acquisition whose influence and opinion must needs carry great weight. Upon locating here in June, 1903, he opened a private hospital, which with the aid of his wife, who is a trained nurse, he carried on for one year, giving it up at the end of that time to devote himself to his private practice.

The birth of Dr. Freeman occurred December 13, 1864, in Nova Scotia, in which northern country his boyhood and young manhood were passed. Endowed by nature with a taste for knowledge and being surrounded by superior advantages for gratifying this taste, it is a matter of no surprise that he made rapid strides in his studies. His public school training was followed by a course in Acadia College, at Wolfville, Nova Scotia, an institution conducted under the auspices of the Baptist denomination, and from this seat of learning he graduated with the degree of B. A. About this time he had become very enthusiastic over the possibilities offered to energetic young men in California, and wisely determined to see for himself concerning the truth of them. Coming to the state in 1887, we went directly to Santa Barbara county, where he taught school until matriculating in the medical department of the University of California, from which he graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1893. His first work as a practitioner was in Riverside county, building up an extensive practice in both Hemet and San Jacinto, in both of which places he established offices. Going to Santa Ana in 1901, he engaged in the practice of his profession there until removing to Long Beach, as previously stated.

In Santa Ana, Cal., Dr. Freeman married Mrs. Jessie Zavitz, who was born in England, but was reared in Canada. Being gifted by nature with the qualities so essential in caring for the sick and afflicted, she determined to prepare herself for scientific nursing, and with this end in view entered St. Catharine (Ontario) Marine Hospital, graduating as a trained nurse. In the line of his profession Dr. Freeman is a member of the county and state medical societies, and at one time was one of the examining surgeons of the bureau of pensions of the United States. While a resident of Santa Ana he served as health officer. Although his professional duties leave little time for outside matters, he attends with considerable regularity the several fraternal orders of which he is a member, among them being the Independent Order of Foresters, Fraternal Aid Association, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which latter order he is medical examiner. His political preferences are listed on the side of the Republican party, of which he is a stanch adherent. A man of deep religious convictions, he is a member of the Baptist Church, to whose various avenues of benevolence he contributes generously. Throughout his entire life Dr. Freeman has been governed by high principles of action, thus drawing to himself many friends and associates, who have the utmost confidence in him.

H. M. E. SCHROETER. Travels extended into almost every portion of the civilized world and extensive commercial enterprises conducted in a number of the largest cities of the globe have given to Mr. Schroeter a cosmopolitan knowledge that gives him a distinctive position among the most cultured citizens of Long Beach. Born and reared in Germany, he had all the advantages afforded by the gymnasiums of his native city of Hamburg, and in early manhood carried on extensive mercantile interests in his home town. The success which rewarded his judicious application led him to establish a commercial emporium in the city of London and later he owned a prosperous mercantile establishment in the city of Paris, France. Meanwhile, in the course of his travels, he found an excellent opening in India for the establishment of a mercantile store, and in 1889 he opened a large and important place of business in Singapore. Still later he became one of the leading merchants of Shanghai, China.

In the midst of the engrossing demands of vast business interests, Mr. Schroeter found leisure to gratify his love of travel, and it was while making a tour of the world in 1902 that he first saw Long Beach. The location of the town appealed to him at once. He saw its possibilities and the advantages to be derived from its beach, which he still considers to be unsurpassed by any beach in the whole world. Foreseeing the future growth of the town, he decided to establish his home at this attractive spot, and was thus led to become a citizen of Long Beach, whose development he has promoted by the lavish use of capital and by wise investments On Ocean Park avenue he has a residence said to be one of the most beautiful in all Southern California, and on the same street he erected the Cynthia apartment house, to which he later built an annex. This is one of the most modern and substantial buildings of its kind on the beach and from the first has proved a financial success, as well as an architectural honor to the city. Other business enterprises which claim his attention are the First National Bank of Long Beach and the Beach hotel, incorporated with a capital of $500,000; of both of these he acts as a director. While a lad in Germany he became an adherent of the Lutheran Church and has since given that denomination his support, contributing with characteristic generosity to its maintenance, as well as to charities of a general nature. Since studying the political situation in the United States he has given his support to the Republican party, but has not maintained a deep interest in politics, his temperament leading him rather to the promotion of movements for the permanent benefit of the people of Long Beach. Ever since coming to this city its welfare has been a matter of interest to him and its many opportunities have elicited his warmest praise.

MATHEW ATMORE, a veteran of the Civil war and an early settler in Ventura county, came to this country with his parents from England when but nine years of age. His father, Mathew Atmore, Sr., was born in England, as was also his mother, who was Susan Pond before her marriage. The family immigrated to America in 1848 and settled in Michigan. Both parents lived to a hale old age, the father being seventy-eight and the mother seventy-two years of age at the time of their demise in Michigan. The father was a minister of the Gospel, filling many pulpits in Michigan, while he served as chaplain of a colored regiment during the Civil war. There were eleven children in the family, eight of whom are still living and of these two make their homes in California.

Mathew Atmore was born in England, October 18, 1838, and was educated in the common schools of Calhoun county, Mich., where his father first settled with his family, buying a farm there. When seventeen years of age he came to California, arriving in Sacramento, and from there went to Eldorado county to work in the mines, the venture proving profitable. Subsequently, until 1861, he freighted to Virginia City. He then enlisted in Company K, Second Regiment California Volunteer Cavalry, and served three years. After the close of his war service he returned to Michigan, following farming there for twelve years. After spending one year in Nebraska, in 1876 he came to Santa Paula, Cal., and engaged in ranching. He now owns sixty acres of the best farming land in the valley, which is planted to beans and walnut trees.

In 1866 Mr. Atmore was married to Mary Gorham, a native of England, and they have three children. Mr. Atmore is a member of the Ventura Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, and politically he is a Republican.

H. A. UNRUH has entire charge of the vast interests of the Baldwin estate in Los Angeles county, in the management of which he has displayed business ability and executive skill of a high order. Mr. Unruh was born in Valparaiso, Ind., November 9, 1845, his parents, Joseph and Abigail (Bowman) Unruh, locating there upon their removal from Germantown, Pa., their birthplace. The father engaged in a mercantile enterprise throughout his entire active life, dying in Texas at the age of sixty-eight, while his wife died at the age of forty-five. They had five children, one son residing in Texas, two daughters in California, and one in Kentucky, and H. A., the subject of this review.

May 15, 1861, H. A. Unruh enlisted in Company C, Twentieth Indiana Infantry; near Roanoke, N. C., he was taken prisoner and was sent to Libby Prison. After nine months he was liberated on parole, and in July, 1862, was mustered out of service. He immediately re-enlisted in Company K, First Marine Artillery, and after serving for eighteen months, was again mustered out.

After being mustered out of service the second time Mr. Unruh returned to his home in Indiana, but soon afterward removed to Illinois. In Plano he filled a position as telegraph operator until 1866, when he came to San Francisco, Cal. It was his intention to join the Russian-American telegraph expedition, but he changed his plans, going instead to Nicolaus, Sutter county, Cal., installing telegraph lines and offices, after which he engaged with the Western Union and was sent to establish lines in the Pajaro valley, and also to act as relief agent for the Wells-Fargo & Co. Entering the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad in 1867 as agent at Roseville Junction, he rebuilt the telegraph lines for a distance, and also built and operated the first telegraph line for the Southern Pacific Company over the Sierra Nevada mountains. He acted as agent in Pino, Auburn, Colfax, Goldrun and Truckee in turn until these offices were well established and in perfect working order. In Reno, Nev., he opened a station, located Wadsworth station and built the first house in that town. In 1869 he became assistant freight agent of the Central Pacific at San Francisco, where he opened the first overland business, his equipment consisting of but one clerk, while in 1874, when he left the company, eighty-four clerks were required to conduct the business. Resigning his position in 1874, for two years he was cashier and bookkeeper for a tobacco house in San Francisco, and thereafter spent nearly two years in Lake county. In 1877 he located in Eureka as agent for the Eureka & Palisades Railroad Company, and while there gave test of the long distance lines which were just then being built, the greatest distance at which a voice could be heard and understood then being twenty-eight miles. It was in 1879 that Mr. Unruh came to Southern California and here became identified with the interests of the vast Baldwin property, soon receiving the appointment of special agent for the entire estate. In the beginning he had charge of the fruiting and planting, and during this time set out many miles of beautiful shade trees.

In 1868 Mr. Unruh was married to Miss Jennie A. Dunn, a native of Herkimer county, N. Y.; they have two sons, Joseph A., born in 1869, in Wadsworth, Nev., and David S., born in 1871, in San Francisco. For many years Mr. Unruh has been identified with the Masonic organization, and is prominent in the order. Politically he is a stanch adherent of Republican principles and in religion is a member of the Episcopal Church.

CLAUDE MORTON ALLEN. Mr. Allen's Oak Grove ranch, in Garapatos canon, Los Angeles county, is located high up in the mountains and is an ideal spot in which to spend a vacation, with plenty of opportunity for hunting and fishing, and when the exertions of the day are over, refreshment of the more substantial kind may be partaken of, the table being supplied from the ranch and dairy which are carried on in connection with the health resort.

The Allen family is of English ancestry, and the earliest representative in this country of whom we have any definite knowledge is the great-grandfather, who was a participant in the Revolutionary war and reared his family in Kentucky, and it was in that state that his son William was born, and there in turn also reared his family. During his later years he removed to Missouri, his death occurring there some years later. At the time the grandfather removed to Missouri his son Earl Virgil was a young man, his birth having occurred in Louisville, Ky., and where he received his high school and academic training; upon removing to Missouri he entered a medical college. Graduating from the medical college in St. Louis, the breaking out of the Civil war about this time furnished an opportunity for immediate practice, and none of those who volunteered their services were more forgetful of self in caring for the sick and wounded than Dr. Allen. Irrespective of the color of uniform, he treated all sufferers with the same conscientious care that he would have wished for his own kinsmen under like conditions, his record throughout the entire war showing him to be a true lover of humanity and of his profession. It was while treating smallpox patients that he contracted a cold which ultimately resulted in his death. In the hope of recovering his former vigor he came to California in the spring of 1876, locating first in Norwalk, but a year later going to Del Monte, where his death occurred May 6, 1879. Politically he was a Democrat, but the duties of his profession left him little time for active participation in its affairs. His wife was formerly Miss Sarah Eliza Rosebell, and was an ideal helpmate, who being his equal educationally could and did render him invaluable assistance. A native of Richmond, Va., Mrs. Allen was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. (Sutherland) Rosebell, the father also a native of Virginia, and of Scotch extraction. When she was a girl of twelve years her parents removed to Maine, but from the year 1876 until her death, September 6, 1895, she was a resident of the Golden state. Both herself and husband were devoted members of the Christian Church, toward the support of which they contributed generously.

The eldest child of the parental family is Eugenia Estella, who makes her home with her brother Claude M. on his ranch near Santa Monica. The second child, Earl Montrose, lives in Downey, this state. Born at Highpoint, Moniteau county, Mo., May 6, 1869, Claude M. Allen was a small child of seven years when his parents removed to California on account of his father's health. From the time of the latter's death until he reached his majority he continued at home with his mother, in 1893 purchasing the nucleus of his present ranch, twelve miles northwest of Santa Monica. Five years later he filed a homestead claim of one hundred and sixty acres adjoining, thirty acres of which he now has under cultivation, while the remainder is in pasture. In addition to the land which he owns he also rents two hundred acres to enable the carrying out of the extensive stock-raising project which he has undertaken. While the latter industry probably represents the largest investment which he has made on the ranch it does not by any means indicate that he has no other interests, for he is equally successful in the raising of turkeys and chickens, besides which he carries on a small dairy. While in national affairs he is firm in his allegiance to the Democratic party, in local elections he supports the candidate best fitted for the office, without reference to party name. The genial proprietor of Oak Grove ranch has many friends among those who visit him year after year, his tact and good judgment and his innate desire to please endow his establishment with a popularity which is complimentary in the extreme.

JOHN S. BELL. One of the largest ranch owners and best known men in this section of the state is John S. Bell of Santa Barbara county, who has lived on his ten thousand acre ranch for more than thirty-five years and has improved it until it has become one of the best developed properties in the state. His residence is a beautiful one surrounded by a spacious and well kept lawn and in the flower gardens attached to the place are over three hundred varieties of roses. These gardens are acknowledged to be among the finest in the state. The greater part of the four thousand acres devoted to grain raising is farmed by renters; six thousand acres is given over to pasturing purposes and Mr. Bell raises cattle and well bred horses, the latter being principally road stock.

The birthplace of Mr. Bell was Tahiti, one of the South Sea islands, where his parents, Charles Z. and Caroline (Berry) Bell, owned a sugar plantation. The father was a native of Dundee, Scotland, and the mother of Irish birth. In 1848 they left Tahiti and removed to San Francisco at the time of the excitement over the discovery of gold at Sutter's mill. The mother's death occurred while on a sea voyage, and the father later emigrated to Australia, where he was killed. There were two children in the family, the sister of Mr. Bell is now living in Australia. The son, who was born June 27, 1842, received his early education in California, and in 1860 went to England to take a general course at Walton college located near Liverpool, attending the school for three years. He remained seven years following the time spent in study and then returned to California coming directly to Los Alamos and purchasing the ranch which he now owns. It has been no small task to accomplish the conversion of ten thousand acres of raw land running to wild mustard and other noxious crops, into the highly productive and well improved present day ranch, and it may well be a matter of pride to Mr. Bell that he has succeeded so completely. He was married to Catherine Den, a daughter of Nicholo A. Den, who came to California in 1824. They have a family of five children, three of whom are married. They are Catherine, married to J. L. Cheney and lives in Connecticut; Charles, married to Miss Kelley of St. Paul, Minn., lives at Alma, Mich., where he is superintendent of a sugar factory; Carrie; Rosa; Mary, married to Charles Cheney, and lives in Connecticut. Mrs. Bell is a finely educated woman and well informed on the subject of history, especially the history of California and England. Religiously Mr. Bell is a communicant of the Roman Catholic Church; politically he is a Republican; and fraternally belongs to the Knights of Pythias lodge at Los Alamos, where he has served the lodge as chancellor commander. A man of fine education and unusually well traveled, and possessed of a high order of business sagacity he has not devoted himself entirely to private interests but has bent the weight of his activities and influence to the furthering of public enterprises tending to the improvement and unbuilding of his section of the state, where he is highly esteemed as one of the leading men.

ALBERT AYLMORE. Albert Aylmore, one of the progressive and successful ranchers of small fruit in Los Angeles county, although a newcomer in this section, holds a high place among the representative farmers. He is a native of England, having been born in Sussex, January 21, 1844. His parents were also natives of England, his mother dying when he was only a small child. Albert Aylmore enlisted in the English navy, being thrown upon his own resources at an early age. His education was received in a private and common school up to the time of his enlistment. He served in the navy for six and one-half years, proving an able seaman and being in line of promotion when he resigned from the service. At that time he came to the United States and in the territory of Washington engaged in farming for the period of three years, when he moved to Oregon and followed ranching and dairying. He became the owner of a fine ranch in Oregon and also several lots in Astoria, and was interested in salmon fishing on the Columbia river. Deciding to take up his residence in California, Mr. Aylmore disposed of his ranch property in Oregon and came south and in Workman leased a farm of two hundred acres. He carried on general farming, stock-raising and a dairy business for about four years. He then came to Los Angeles county and purchased a ranch of seven acres putting on all improvements, a fine residence, substantial and commodious barns and outbuildings and has put his place under berries, logan, black, dew and raspberry. His fine irrigation system gives him sufficient water for the raising of his crops.

Mr. Aylmore married Annie Heckard, a native of Ohio, and they became the parents of four children, namely: Charles; George, who died at the age of nineteen years; Daisy, who married A. C. Turon, and has one child; and Mark. Mrs. Aylmore died in Oregon, and in 1887 Mr. Aylmore married Mrs. Caroline Paulson, widow of Olaf Paulson, a native of Sweden. By her first marriage she had three children: Elizabeth S., William, and Olaf. They make their home with Mr. and Mrs. Aylmore. Mr. and Mrs. Aylmore have three children: Annie, Pearl and Albert. Mr. Aylmore is a stanch Democrat in his political affiliations and has always taken an active interest in the advancement of the principles he endorses. During his residence in Oregon he served as school trustee for many years. He is well informed on topics of the day, is liberal and enterprising, and a worthy addition to the citizens of Los Angeles county.

NATHAN L. BRECKENRIDGE. The family represented by this enterprising rancher of Compton originated in Kentucky and counted among other notable members John Cabell Breckenridge, vice-president of the United States under James Buchanan, this ancestor being a second cousin of Merrill Breckenridge, the latter the father of our subject. A native of the state which had been the home of so many of his ancestors, Merrill Breckenridge, when a young single man set out for the frontier, as Illinois was then considered, and in that state took up raw land from the government. About this time, too, the Townsend family settled there from Ohio, and as a result of the friendship that sprang up between the two families was the marriage of Merrill Breckenridge and Priscilla Townsend. On Rooks creek, in Livingston county, the young people established their home on the farm which Mr. Breckenridge had in the meantime improved to a fine state of cultivation and there they reared their seven children. Of these five are now in California. In addition to being a farmer of considerable ability Merrill Breckenridge was known throughout Illinois in the early days as a man of large legal attainments, and to him belongs the distinction of being the first judge of Livingston county, an office which he held for many years. For two terms also he was sheriff and county assessor of the same county, positions which came to him through Democratic influence, for he was a strong party man and well liked among his constituents. In the community where he had spent the greater part of his life he ceased from his labors at the age of seventy-six years, and his wife also, died in the same state at the age of fifty-six years, they being members of the Baptist and Methodist Episcopal Churches, respectively.

Nathan L. Breckenridge was born on the Livingston county homestead August 19, 1867, and was educated in the common schools of that locality. Early in life he was obliged to face the stern realities which must come to all sooner or later, the death of his parents when he was sixteen, making it necessary to provide for his own support. Prior to this, however, he had worked on the home farm and become proficient in general farm duties, so that he had a foundation upon which to build when starting out for himself. Until twenty years old, or until 1887, he worked for neighboring farmers in Illinois and then turned his face westward, coming to Los Angeles county. His knowledge of agriculture made the securing of employment an easy matter, and for a time he was employed on the Walton ranch near Compton. He gave up this position to go into partnership with his brother, W. J., the two being associated in a ranching enterprise for about four years. Upon the dissolution of the partnership Nathan L. went to Riverside county and carried on a ranch for about two years, and the following three years were spent in Ventura county, two years on a stock ranch and one year on a bean ranch. Coming once more to Los Angeles county he secured a position on the Canfield ranch and was finally made foreman of the property, a position which he held for seven years, during which time he planted a large portion of the land to alfalfa. So great was his success in the raising of this commodity that he determined to establish a ranch of his own, a determination which he carried out in 1902 by the purchase of the Sexton ranch, a tract of sixty-three acres which is so located that irrigation is unnecessary. The land is exceptionally well adapted to the raising of alfalfa.

A marriage ceremony performed in 1892 united the destinies of Nathan L. Breckenridge and Sadie Brinkerhoff, the latter a daughter of Peter S. Brinkerhoff, who is known to be one of the earliest pioneers in the state of California. Two children were born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Breckenridge, Opal B. and Lloyd, but the latter died at the age of two years. Of the same political belief as his father, Mr. Breckenridge is a stanch Democrat, and fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodman Lodge at Compton.

MISS FRANCES E. CALLISTER AND MRS. LILLIAN D. SMITH. The enterprising firm of Callister & Smith, composed of two bright and capable business women, Miss Frances E. Callister and Mrs. Lillian D. Smith, is widely known throughout a large part of Los Angeles county, and is carrying on a notable business in Venice as dealers in real estate. Miss Callister and Mrs. Smith have been close friends and business associates for many years. Living in the same eastern city, Rochester, N. Y., for a long time, both were ambitious to enter upon a business career, and chose that of a florist. Beginning on a small scale, they were successful from the start, building up a substantial business, which necessitated the erection of two large greenhouses. They made a specialty of raising carnations, developing a great variety of very large ones, almost rivalling some of Burbank's recent productions. They raised plants and flowers of all kinds for sale, and, although they had nearly an acre of land under glass near Seneca Park, they were oftentimes unable to supply the demand for cut flowers. They became numbered among the leading florists of western New York, and were justly proud of the financial and social standing they acquired in Rochester.

A native of Rochester, N. Y., Frances E. Callister came of honored ancestry, her forefathers being among the pioneers of that city. Her father, John Callister, who married Elizabeth Gawne, was for many years a prominent business man of Rochester, active in manufacturing and financial circles.

After leaving the public schools of Rochester, Miss Callister attended the Rochester Female Academy. Desirous of becoming a physician, she then entered the St. Louis Homeopathic Medical College, where she remained two years. Going then to the Carl Dunham Homeopathic College, she pursued her studies there for a year, but on account of ill health was forced to abandon her studies. Returning to Rochester, she turned her attention to music, studying and teaching it for five years, at the same time being director of the choir of the St. James Episcopal Church. In her musical profession, Miss Callister was very successful, many of her pupils becoming prominent in musical circles and on the stage. Also in business for some time with her friend, Mrs. Smith, she became widely known as a florist, and remained in the city of her birth until her health again failed.

Coming to California on account of an acute throat trouble, Miss Callister located in San Francisco, intending to resume her studies in the medical college while there, but the climate proving too harsh for her, she came to Southern California, for a time residing in Pasadena. Subsequently, in company with Mrs. Smith, she engaged in the real estate business at Venice, and from the very beginning has met with decided success. The firm of which she is the head is now connected with Whitcomb, Gibson & Co., of Los Angeles, and is most pleasantly located on Ocean Front, Venice.

A native of Pennsylvania, Lillian D. Smith, nee Draper, was born in Franklin county, a daughter of Simeon and Emma (Castleman) Draper. The family moved when she was young to Rochester, N. Y., where Mr. Draper was successfully employed as a leather dealer until his death. He was influential in business, and quite prominent as an Odd Fellow. Completing her education at Professor Taylor's boarding school, in Syracuse, N. Y., which she attended four years, Miss Draper then went to Minneapolis, Minn., where she resided with a married sister for five years. She was afterwards in Detroit, Mich., with her parents until her marriage with the late John S. Smith. A native of Lexington, Ky., Mr. Smith was educated for a physician in Philadelphia, Pa., and after his marriage was engaged in business in Lexington, Ky., as a registered pharmacist and druggist, carrying on a thriving business until his death. Returning to New York after the death of her husband, Mrs. Smith took up her residence once more in Rochester, and subsequently, in company with Miss Callister, was there employed successfully as a florist, as previously mentioned, for four years. In September, 1904, she came with her friend to Los Angeles county, and as junior member of the firm of Callister & Smith is prominently engaged in the sale and transfer of real estate.

OTTO TRAUZETTEL is a striking example of what a young man can accomplish with perseverance and energy, by improving and developing the rich lands of California. He is a "hustler" and far-seeing and has already laid the foundations for a fortune, owning a ranch of twenty-three hundred acres, of which all of the tillable land is under cultivation and highly improved. Otto Trauzettel was born in Leipsic, Germany, October 10, 1871, his father, Wilhelm, being a carpenter and builder of that location, where he now resides at the age of ninety years. The mother, Wilhelmina (Meach) Trauzettel, was born in Germany and died there at the age of sixty-four years. Of their seven children all are living. Otto Trauzettel was reared in Germany and educated in the common schools, remaining at his studies until his was seventeen years old, when he left home and coming to America made the trip to California via New York City, New Orleans, and El Paso, to Riverside county.

In 1896 he began farming for himself in Moreno valley. Four years later he found himself $900 in debt because of three dry years. Undaunted by this misfortune he went to work for Mr. Kerr as his foreman, continuing with him until the spring of 1903 when he purchased the nucleus of his present ranch, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres. He built his home on the knoll where he landed April 24, 1888, and began farming, raising grain and selling wood. He continued to purchase land until he owned twenty-three hundren acres in one body.

In Riverside Mr. Trauzettel was married to Miss Georgia Woolfolk, a native of Texas, and a daughter of James and Florence (Parmenter) Woolfolk, and they have two children, namely: Lornie and Elspeth. Fraternally Mr. Trauzettel is identified with Redlands Lodge No. 341, I. O. O. F., and the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; politically he is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party.

WILLIAM J. GRAY. A son of John J. Gray, who served in the Civil war as a brave soldier, William J. Gray was born, June 17, 1877, in Carrolton, Mo., his mother, whose maiden name was Mary Dozier, being a native of Kentucky, and a resident of Los Angeles, Cal., at the present writing. She has two children living, William J., the subject of this sketch, being the oldest child.

Brought up in Buenavista, Colorado, William J. Gray received a practical education in the public schools of that town. Going from there to Kansas City, he was employed for some time at mechanical and electrical work, acquiring valuable knowledge and experience. Returning to Buenavista, Colo., he took a contract for building twenty-eight miles of telephone lines for an independent company. Completing his work, Mr. Gray went to Denver, Colo., and became associated with the Colorado Telephone Company, working in various departments until 1902, when he resigned his position and came to Los Angeles, Cal., where he was employed in the city's electrical department for about six months. Then, when the Home Telephone Company was established at San Pedro, Mr. Gray was appointed local manager, and as such superintended the building of the line and the plant. He has accepted the position of city electrician, and in this capacity is serving with great satisfaction to all concerned.

In Buenavista, Colo., Mr. Gray married Frances Nichols, who was born in Wales, and they have one child, Herbert. Fraternally Mr. Gray belongs to the Order of Elks.

SEYMOUR LOCKE WATTS, a native son of California, was born in Pasadena, November 4, 1873, a son of C. H. Watts, the latter a native of Ohio who came to California in 1868 and settled at San Pasqual, where he engaged in farming on the present site of Pasadena. In 1884 he purchased the California Stables located on North Main street opposite the Baker block and there conducted a business for several years. He finally moved to Compton twelve miles south of Los Angeles where he owned a ranch of two hundred and twenty acres devoted to the raising of alfalfa and stock. His death occurred in 1902 at the age of sixty years. His wife, formerly Mittie Locke, was born in Indiana, a daughter of Erie Locke, who brought his family to California in 1868 and engaged as a farmer until his death in Pasadena. Mrs. Watts still survives and lives on the old homestead. She was the mother of four children, namely: H. D. and Seymour L., partners in business; Daniel P., of Los Angeles; and Carl, at home.

The first eleven years of Seymour L. Watts were passed in the paternal home in Pasadena, when he removed to Los Angeles and passed two years, thence going in 1886 to the farm in the vicinity of Compton. He attended the public schools in the different places in pursuit of an education and at the same time was trained to the practical duties of a farmer's son. At the age of twenty years he engaged in independent efforts, going to Eastern Washington, where in the Palouse valley he engaged in farming for the period of two years. Returning to Southern California he became interested in the oil proposition and was employed for about eight years in various fields, among them the Fullerton, Santa Barbara, Summerland, and Santa Monica, being engaged in drilling wells for the Union Oil Company, Victor Hall, and Fullerton Oil Company. In 1903 he quit the oil business, and with his brother, H. D., engaged in farming the home place, of which one hundred and seventy-nine acres were in alfalfa. He installed a pumping plant with a sixteen horsepower, with a capacity sufficient to irrigate one hundred and thirty acres. In 1906 he purchased his present property, consisting of fifty-two acres, all in walnuts, and has since given his entire time and attention to its management.

In Compton Mr. Watts married Miss Edith Wilber, a native of Northern California, and born of this union is one daughter, Mittie L. Mr. Watts was made a Mason in Anchor Lodge No. 273, F. & A. M., of Compton. In politics he retains the right to cast his vote for the candidate whom he considers best qualified for public office.

E. A. FARRINGTON. California is justly proud of her educational advantages and facilities, which compare favorably with those of any other state of the Union, boys and girls alike receiving excellent opportunities for advancing their knowledge. Prominent among the well-known instructors and educators of Los Angeles county is Prof. E. A. Farrington, now serving as principal of the Downey High School, a position for which his talents and scholarly attainments eminently qualify him. A son of Christopher C. Farrington, he was born, January 5, 1860, at Franklinville, N. Y.

Born and bred in New York state, Christopher C. Farrington has there spent his entire life. He is a farmer by occupation, and is now a resident of Chautauqua. He married Susanna Schutz, a native of Germany, and into their household five children have been born, E. A. being the special subject of this sketch. Politically he is a sound Democrat; fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and religiously both he and his wife belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Receiving the rudiments of his education in the common schools of Franklinville, E. A. Farrington continued his studies in the Ellington Academy, completing his education at Oberlin College, in Oberlin, Ohio. After leaving the academy, he taught school for a while, and while in college taught several terms, helping to defray his expenses while in that institution. After his graduation, Mr. Farrington continued his professional career, teaching one year in the Normal College, at Hopedale, Ohio, then going to Fort Scott, Kans., where he taught two years. The following year he was superintendent of schools in Burlington, Kans., and for ten years thereafter occupied a similar position at Paola, Kans. From there Mr. Farrington went to Salt Lake City, where for two years he was an instructor in Salt Lake College. Coming to California in 1902, he has since followed his profession at Downey, being principal of the high school, which has just been organized. This school is in a most flourishing condition, having sixty-three pupils enrolled, with three teachers besides Prof. Farrington. A new building for the school is in process of construction, for the erection of which the city is bonded for $20,000, the contract price being $16,150. The building contains four recitation rooms, an assembly room, two laboratories, a science lecture room, an art room, and commercial rooms. This building is one of the finest and best equipped school buildings in the county, and was erected mainly through the efforts of Prof. Harrington, who has labored hard in the interests of the school, which he hopes ere long will be placed on the accredited list.

In 1888, Prof. Farrington married Jennie L. Pond, who was born in Missouri, but was reared and educated in Kansas, where her parents now reside, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Mabel and E. Dwight. Politically the Professor votes independent of party restrictions; fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church.

J. B. BERRY is truly counted one of the leading citizens of Nordhoff, where he is an extensive property holder, and is as well known all over the state, having resided in various localities and always followed pursuits which brought him more or less in contact with the public. Besides owning a block in the town of Nordhoff, he is proprietor of the Nordhoff City Water Company, and of the hotel known as Berry Villa which is located among the beautiful live oaks which make Nordhoff famous. He comes from good old New England stock his father, Daniel H. Berry, and his mother, Sarah Partington before her marriage, being natives of Maine. The father was a locomotive engineer and was killed in an accident, while his mother still lives at her home in Santa Paula. Of the three children in the family but one, J. B., is now living.

Mr. Perry was born in Path, Me., August 19, 1857, and received his education in Brunswick and in Thompson, Va., where he attended the Franklin Home School. He first chose seafaring as an employment, as so many of Maine's sons have done, but four years at this work decided him that he would try something else, and hearing of the great advantages to be found in California he started on an overland trip and arrived in San Francisco September 10, 1876. He crossed the bay to Oakland and there engaged in the dairy business for one year, then, not quite satisfied with this venture, he decided to go to Mono county where he worked in the mines for a time, then secured a position as driver of a six-horse stage, and for three years gave to his passengers as safe and comfortable—if somewhat thrilling—a trip as was possible over the mountainous roads. His next move took him to Ventura county near Santa Paula, where he engaged in ranching and other occupations.

In 1882 he was married to Miss Inez Blumburg of Boone county, Iowa. He is a Republican in politics, and an interested participant in all subjects of civic, social and religious interest in his home community. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and contributes generously to its various benevolences and charitable interests. Altogether he is a valuable citizen and deserving of the respect and esteem which he is universally accorded.

JOHN MATHEWS is a native of Russia, born, April 25, 1867, in Aaronsburg, which was also the birthplace of his parents, John and Catherine Mathews. His father, a pilot by occupation, was accidentally drowned while in the performance of his duty, but his mother is still living at the old home in Russia.

The only son of the parental family of two children, John Mathews changed his name from "Mathias" to its present form when he took out citizenship papers. Brought up in his native town, he attended the common schools until fifteen years of age, when he shipped before the mast on a coasting vessel, which was engaged in trade along the Gulf of Riga. He subsequently visited different European ports, sailing from England, and in 1885 boarded the sailing vessel "Lady Lawrence" at Newcastle, Australia, and came with a cargo of coal to San Pedro, Cal. Deciding to stay in this country, Mr. Mathews went to San Francisco, where he followed the painter's trade for four years. He returned to San Pedro in 1889. Mr. Mathews has acquired considerable wealth, holding title to city property, and he also owns a gasoline launch, "Ruth," which has a capacity of ten tons.

In San Pedro, Mr. Mathews married Dolores Machado, who was born in Wilmington, Los Angeles county, of pioneer ancestry. Her father, the late Manuel Machado, came from Portugal to this country, and died in San Pedro. He married Theresa Morales, who was born in San Pedro, and is now a resident of Pomona. Mr. and Mrs. Mathews have three children, namely: Fritz, Catherine, and Charles. Politically Mr. Mathews is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Eagles.

WILLIAM H. H. DINWIDDIE. Prominent among the pioneer settlers of San Diego county is William H. H. Dinwiddie, whose large and well appointed ranch is advantageously located near Escondido. An able and skilful agriculturist, he has won success in his chosen occupation, by his industry, judicious management and wise investments, becoming one of the largest landholders in this section of the county. A son of the late John Dinwiddie, he was born, November 8, 1840, in Washington county, Mo., one of a family consisting of six sons and two daughters.

Born and reared in Kentucky, John Dinwiddie followed the march of civilization westward, and as a young man settled in Missouri, where he was a tiller of the soil for a number of years. In 1850 he came overland to California, having a perilous trip across the plains, having occasional encounters with the Indians, who stole most of the stock which was being driven loose. Settling in the Sacramento valley, he entered land, and having cleared and improved a ranch, resided there until his death, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. His wife was born in Tennessee, and died at the remarkable age of ninety-seven years, in California. She was a most estimable woman, and a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church, with which she united when young. Two of her six sons are dead; one lives in Sonoma county; one in the Sacramento valley; and one, William H. H., in San Diego county. In his earlier life the father was a Whig in politics, but in his later years was a strong supporter of the principles of the Democratic party.

Coming to California in the tenth year of his age, William H. H. Dinwiddie here completed his early education. Living at home until ready to establish himself as a householder, he assisted his father on the farm until 1866. Then, after ranching in Yolo county for two years, Mr. Dinwiddie located on his present ranch in San Diego county, taking up a large tract of government land, and at once beginning its improvement. Laboring industriously and wisely, he has been very fortunate in all of his ventures, and now has a clear title to three thousand, three hundred acres of land, about six hundred acres of which is in Valley Center. In the care and management of this vast tract, Mr. Dinwiddie has the assistance of his sons, who are interested with him in the property, and is carrying on an immense business as dairyman and general farmer.

In 1866 Mr. Dinwiddie married Harriet Breedlovem who was born in Missouri in 1850, and was brought by her parents to California in 1851. Six children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Dinwiddie. Politically Mr. Dinwiddie is a Republican, and for many years rendered excellent service as justice of the peace.

B. W. FINCH. A skilful and practical farmer, B. W. Finch, living near Compton, Los Angeles county, has been actively interested in agricultural pursuits all of his life, and by long years of experience has acquired a thorough knowledge of its various branches. In the management of his ranch, lying in the newly platted town of Hugo, he has shown excellent judgment, and has met with undisputed success, it being one of the best appointed and most attractive of any in the immediate neighborhood. A native of Montgomery county, Va., he was born, November 20, 1851, on the home farm, about sixteen miles east of Christianburg, a son of John William Finch. His grandparents were lifelong residents of old Virginia, and were born in Lynchburg.

A Virginian by birth and breeding, John William Finch was brought up on a plantation, and during his life was employed in tilling the soil, serving prior to the war as an overseer. During the Civil war he served as a soldier under Gen. Johnston, belonging to the Fifty-fourth Virginia Regiment, for three years being in active service, and one year being forced to remain out of the field on account of illness. After the close of the conflict he resumed his former occupation, and was engaged in farming until his death, in 1880. He married America Bradford, who was born in Botetourt, Va., seventy-nine years ago, and is now a resident of California, making her home with her children. Of their union eleven children were born, namely: B. W., Thomas E., George E., Joseph E., Harry D., Mark L., Robert L., Mary E., Martha C., Lucy J., and Jennie. The mother is a member of the Dunkard Church, to which her husband also belonged.

Beginning life as a farmer, B. W. Finch has continued in his independent occupation ever since, for six years of the time working for wages. Leaving home when about twenty-five years old, he farmed on his own account for awhile in his native state, but without the most satisfactory results. Deciding upon a complete change, he crossed the continent in 1882, coming to the fertile fields of the San Joaquin valley, and settling in the little town of Ripon, where he lived and labored for six years. Removing with his family to Los Angeles county in 1888, Mr. Finch rented four hundred acres of land in Puente, and with but $375.00 at his command started in business for himself, and continued there for eleven years, succeeding so well in his undertakings that he enlarged his operations, before he left having seventeen hundred acres under his supervision. Coming to Compton in 1899, he bought his present ranch of fifty-five acres, and has since devoted himself to general farming and fruit raising. The first year that he settled here he had bad luck, losing his entire crop, but since then he has met with very encouraging success, raising alfalfa as his principal crop, but paying some attention to the culture of apples, pears, peaches and other fruits common to this region.

In 1876, prior to coming to California, Mr. Finch married Dorthula Pittilo, who was born in Tennessee, on the French Broad river, and they are the parents of two children, namely: Mamie D., wife of E. E. Eaton, of Los Angeles, has one daughter; and William W., who married Grace Adams. Politically Mr. Finch is a straightforward Democrat, and religiously he is a member, with his wife, of the South Methodist Episcopal Church.

H. FOUSSAT. Born and reared in a foreign land, H. Foussat came to California when a young man, and as a pioneer settler of San Diego county has contributed largely towards its development and progress. As an agriculturist he is meeting with marked success, having a finely improved and productive homestead, on which he is enjoying all the comforts of life, and as a loyal and faithful citizen of his adopted country is esteemed and respected by all. A son of Romone Foussat, he was born, February 11, 1845, in France, where he was bred and educated.

Born in France, Romone Foussat was there employed as a tiller of the soil during his entire life, he and his wife, Revera Francisco Foussat, spending their days in their native country. They were honest, God-fearing people, and faithful members of the Catholic Church. Of the three sons born of their union, two have passed to the life beyond, one of them dying in France, and one in California.

H. Foussat left home and country when about twenty-three years old, emigrating to the United States, the reputed land of peace and plenty. He came by way of Cape Horn to California, arriving in San Francisco, after a voyage of two months and two days, on April 4, 1868. For three years he remained in that vicinity, working on a ranch for a year, and in a laundry two years. Locating in San Diego county in 1871, Mr. Foussat was employed as a sheep herder for five years for one man, and was subsequently engaged in sheep raising on his own account for ten years, pasturing his sheep wherever he found good grazing. Desirous then of locating permanently, he took up a government tract of land consisting of one hundred and sixty acres, near San Luis Rey. Working energetically, he developed the land from its primitive condition, and having by means of thrift and economy accumulated a little capital invested it wisely, and is now the owner of a well improved grain ranch of seven hundred and eighty acres. In addition to general farming, Mr. Foussat is engaged in dairying to some extent, keeping about twenty cows, from his dairy deriving a good annual income.

In 1887, Mr. Foussat married Dolores O. Compo, a native of Michigan, and into their houshold three children have been born, namely: Frank, is at school; Fostenia, and Romone. Politically Mr. Foussat is an adherent of the Democratic party, and religiously both he and his estimable wife are members of the Catholic Church at the Mission.

W. M. GRAY. In the suburbs of the pleasant village of Gardena, ten miles southwest of Los Angeles, lies the ten-acre tract owned by W. M. Gray, and devoted to the raising of alfalfa, vegetables, strawberries and dewberries. While successful to an encouraging degree in all of his enterprises, he is best known for the high quality of the dewberries shipped from his ranch. This berry, which is known as the Gardena, excels in productiveness and ripens early, resists frost better than the blackberry, and produces a sure crop of large jet black fruit. In the season of 1902-03 the crop produced on one-half acre of this ranch aggregated five hundred and seventeen crates of thirty boxes each, and the average price per crate was $1.55, making a total of $801.35. This remarkable result is due not only to the superior quality of the berry, but also to the great care taken by the owner in the handling of the plants. Experience has taught him just when to plant and when to irrigate, how far apart to have the rows and the kind of soil best adapted to the plant. The success of his venture has attracted attention, and he has received many orders for plants, filling orders for the Gardena dewberry, also for the logan berry, the Cuthburt raspberry, and several varieties of strawberries that have proved to be suited to California soil.

In Randolph county, Ind., W. M. Gray was born June 14, 1852, being a son of George and Lydia J. (Macy) Gray, natives respectively of Ohio and Indiana, the latter a daughter of a pioneer physician of the Hoosier state. Some years after his marriage George Gray took his family to Illinois, thence went to Iowa and settled on a farm, where he died about 1885; his widow still makes her home in the same locality. In religion she is a sincere member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which he also belonged. Among their four children who attained mature years was the son, W. M., who accompanied his parents from Indiana to Illinois and thence to Iowa. At the time of settling in Illinois he was thirteen years of age and during the next twelve years he remained in that state, working as a farm hand.

After going to Iowa Mr. Gray purchased a tract of forty-five acres near Adel, Dallas county, and there farmed on a small scale until his increased capital justified a larger outlay. Nine uneventful but busy years were passed in Iowa, from which state he came to California, arriving at Elsinore, Riverside county, February 5, 1887, and since then he has remained loyal to the interests of this part of the state, an enthusiastic believer in its future development and prosperity, and a stanch defender of its interests. Since about 1893 he has been a property owner and now has the ranch of ten acres previously mentioned, as well as town property in Gardena. In addition to raising various products on his land, he devotes considerable time to the business of a real estate agent, and acts as agent for the newly subdivided Home tracts near Gardena.

Before leaving Illinois Mr. Gray was united in marriage on March 8, 1876, with Miss F.

E. Evans, a native of that state. Mrs. Gray is a member of a pioneer family of Illinois, whither her father, John Evans, removed from his native Pennsylvania, settling on a tract of raw land and developing a valuable farm. Both Mr. and Mrs. Evans are still living in Illinois, where they have important property interests. Four children were born to the union of Mr. and Mrs. Gray, namely: B. W., who married Nettie F. Smith, and resides on a ranch near Gardena; Eva M., who died at eighteen years of age; Irma G., Mrs. K. T. Hubbell, who lives in San Francisco; and Ernest J., who is with his parents on the Gardena ranch. The family are broad in religious views, with an especial sympathy for the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Gray supports Republican principles and maintains a warm interest in local affairs. Fraternal movements also receive a share of his time and thought, his interest centering in the Masonic Order and the Fraternal Brotherhood, in both of which he has held responsible offices, serving as secretary of the former, and as president of the latter lodge.

T. J. BROOKSHIRE. Among the prominent agriculturists and pioneer citizens of Santa Maria, who have so materially assisted in developing the resources of this section of Santa Barbara county, is T. J. Brookshire, a man of energy, enterprise and ability. A son of Jesse Brookshire, he was born, July 27, 1842, in Putnam county, Ind., but was brought up and educated in Ottumwa, Iowa.

A native of North Carolina, Jesse Brookshire was reared to agricultural pursuits, and when a young man settled as a farmer in Indiana. In 1844 he removed with his family to Iowa, and after living in that state a few years went to Missouri. Not content there, he moved to Texas, where he became a citizen of influence, at the time of the breaking out of the Civil war being treasurer of the county in which he resided. Returning then to Missouri, he served as a soldier in a Missouri regiment, and after the war was engaged in general farming in that state until his death, at the age of sixty-four years. He married, in Indiana, Susan Havrow, who was born in Kentucky, and they became the parents of seven children. The mother died in early womanhood, her death occurring when she was but thirty-eight years old.

But two years of age when his parents removed to Iowa, T. J. Brookshire was educated in the common schools of Ottumwa. While yet in his "teens," he went to Pike's Peak in search of fortune, but like many other enthusiasts was doomed to disappointment. In 1859 he came to California, and after spending a while in Sacramento located in Sonoma county, where he had a good position as foreman on a large grain ranch for a period of ten years. In 1869 Mr. Brookshire made his first appearance in Santa Maria, and soon after laid claim to one hundred and sixty acres of government land, and having proved up obtained a legal title to it, and subsequently transformed it into a well cultivated and valuable ranch. He not only carried on farming with good results, but was engaged to some extent in the grocery business, and for three years was one of the leading merchants of Guadaloupe. Returning then to the ranch which he had improved, Mr. Brookshire was there engaged in agricultural pursuits for twenty-three years, and as a raiser of grain, stock, fruit and vegetables was quite successful. In the meantime he located another claim, taking up forty acres of government land, which has proved rich in oil, and which the Brookshire Oil Company, in which he is a director, is fast developing, and will ere long be on a paying basis, giving large dividends to its stockholders. In 1903 Mr. Brookshire moved from his ranch to Santa Maria, where he now resides, an esteemed and respected citizen.

In 1865 Mr. Brookshire married Margaret Harris, a native of Pennsylvania, and they have six children. Politically Mr. Brookshire is a Democrat, and religiously Mrs. Brookshire is a member of the Christian Church.

GEORGE HEDDEN, of Valley Center, has lived in California for almost half a century, the larger part of the time being a resident of this valley, and thoroughly represents the pioneer element, as he has aided its development and contributed toward the advancement of its prosperity. A son of J. Hedden, he was born, October 21, 1835, in Madison county, Ill., near the city of Alton.

J. Hedden was born on Kentucky soil, but when a small child was taken by his parents to Illinois, where he was reared and educated. On reaching man's estate he adopted the occupation of a farmer, and for many years was employed as a tiller of the soil in Illinois. In 1859 he decided that he could carry on farming better in a more congenial climate, and with his family started overland for California. He was taken ill while journeying across the plains, and died on the top of the Sierra Mountains. His wife, whose maiden name was Nancy Moore, was born in Illinois, and died, in 1897, in San Diego county, at the home of her son George, of whom we write. She was held in high respect by all who knew her, and was a faithful member of the Advent Church. She bore her husband four children.

Brought up and educated in Madison county, Ill., George Hedden lived there, a member of the parental household, until 1859, when he came to California. Resuming the occupation to which he was trained, he followed ranching in the Sacramento valley for ten years, and then came to San Diego to locate permanently, settling at Valley Center. Taking up a Government claim of one hundred and sixty acres near the lower end of the valley, he improved a good ranch, on which he resided until 1902, when he sold out to Mr. W. H. H. Dinwiddie. Purchasing then his present home estate, Mr. Hedden is now proprietor of two hundred acres of good land, which he devotes to the raising of grain and stock. Although he does but little of the manual labor required on a farm, he personally supervises its management, attending to all of the details connected with ranching, and as an agriculturist is meeting with excellent pecuniary results. Politically Mr. Hedden is a Democrat.

THOMAS J. GRIDER, Jr. The family represented by this progressive nurseryman of Los Angeles county is of southern extraction and has been identified with that part of the country for many years. Thomas J. Grider, Sr., who was born in Tennessee, June 20, 1839, had no educational advantages as a boy and earned his own livelihood at a time when to most children life is but play and study. At the age of twelve years he crossed the plains to California with a party who made the long journey overland and with the majority of the members of the expedition he tried his luck at mining, but with little success. In 1853 he was employed in Sacramento and remained in the northern part of the state until about 1864, when he came to Los Angeles county, and took up general ranch pursuits with fair success. February 4, 1874, he was united in marriage with Miss Lizzie Hutchison, who was born in Texas February 29, 1856, and who, by reason of the peculiar date of her birth, was obliged to limit the celebration of her birthday anniversaries to once in four years. Two sons were born of their union who are now living, both of them engaged in ranch pursuits in the southern part of the state. The parents are identified with the Christian Church and enjoy the esteem of the many acquaintances they have formed in this vicinity. After having lived near Downey for a long period they erected a residence near Hollywood and removed there to spend their remaining years in quiet retirement amid attractive surroundings.

In the town of Downey, where he was born March 23, 1878, Thomas J. Grider, Jr., received a public school education. On the completion of his studies he became interested in ranching, also conducted a real estate business for three years. About 1900 he embarked in the nursery business at Downey, making a specialty of deciduous fruit trees, orders for which he received from other localities than his own, as well as filling many orders in the home neighborhood. After five years he purchased twenty-five acres near Hollywood, and in the near future will remove to his new place, where he plans to continue the deciduous fruit nursery business and in addition expects to raise berries and conduct a small dairy.

The marriage of Mr. Grider in 1902 united him with Mary, daughter of J. W. Venable, who was born in Kentucky and in an early day came to California, where she was born, reared and educated. Her father still makes his home at Downey, where he has held a number of local offices and has been a stanch supporter of the Democratic party. Mr. Grider is also Democratic in his political faith and gives his support to the party at all elections. Though not identified with any denomination he inclines toward the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church and contributes to religious movements, being in thorough sympathy with the same. Fraternally he hold membership with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

EDMUND J. VALENTINE, a son of Edmund Valentine, was born August 5, 1841, in Warren county, Pa., and died at his home, Burbank, Cal., May 23, 1903, his death being a cause of general regret. When a boy of fourteen years he moved with the family to Geneseo, Ill., where he grew to manhood. In 1863 he went to Polk county, Iowa, locating in Mitchellville. Establishing himself as a merchant, he remained there for almost twenty years, building up a large and renumerative trade. Removing to Mitchell county, Kans., in 1882, he invested his money in a large ranch, and engaged in the stock business on an extensive scale. He was quite successful in his operations, and was fortunate enough to sell out land and cattle just before the hard times swept across the country, nearly ruining the stock industry. Coming to California in 1886, he settled first in Los Angeles, where he bought considerable land, which he afterwards exchanged for other property. Finally locating in North Glendale, he bought real estate, and in 1902 erected the beautiful home in which his widow and children now live. In the home ranch there are twenty acres of valuable land, and near by is a well improved tract of ten acres.

Mr. Valentine married Mary DeLong, a daughter of the late William DeLong, a man of prominence, who spent his early life in Pennsylvania, but subsequently removed to Iowa, where he died, May 26, 1905, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Valentine five children were born, namely: William, of Corona, Cal.; Minnie, wife of Prof. E. T. Merrill; Edmund, deceased; John Sherwood, of Ravena, Cal.; and Edna, attending the Glendale high school. Politically Mr. Valentine was always identified with the Republican party. Fraternally he was a Master Mason, and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Religiously he and his family united with the Episcopal Church.

GEORGE A. MOHRENSTECHER. An enthusiastic promoter and active in the development of this section of Southern California, George A. Mohrenstecher is one of the best known citizens of Long Beach and his position as secretary and director of the Bixby Land Company and also of the Los Ceretos Improvement Company (two of the largest and most prominent real estate companies of that city), gives him a leading place in the ranks of the business men of this community. He was born April 3, 1859, in Boonville, Mo. His father, for whom he was named, was a native of Prussia and when he first came to America settled in Mississippi, then removed to St. Louis, Mo., and at the breaking out of the Civil war became captain of a company in the Thirty-third Missouri Volunteer Infantry. He saw much active service and was once wounded in battle during the conflict. When the war was over he settled in Nebraska City, Neb., and engaged in the general merchandise business until his retirement from active work several years before his death, which occurred in 1891. Fraternally he was a Master Mason, and was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while politically he was a stanch advocate of Republican principles. His wife, who was Mary Shutte in maidenhood, was born in Brunswick, Germany, the daughter of Zachariah Shutte, a man prominent in the Revolution of 1848 and who for political reasons was obliged to come to this country. From New York he went to Missouri and later to Osawatomie, Kans., living across the road from John Brown of anti-slavery fame. Mr. Shutte was also opposed to slave holding. He afterwards located in Kansas City, Mo., became a merchant and large land owner and lived there the remainder of his life. Mrs. Mohrenstecher is now living at the old home in Nebraska City. Of her three children, George A. is the oldest; Otto A. is a wholesale and retail dry goods merchant in Quincy, Cal.; and Mrs. Lederman resides in Grand Island, Neb.

Reared in Lincoln, Neb., Mr. Mohrenstecher received his education in the public and high schools there and after the completion of his studies, at the age of seventeen, he secured a position in the Merchants' Bank in Lincoln, remaining with that institution for one year. He then secured the appointment of assistant postmaster under Gen. Otto Funke and creditably filled that position for six years. Later he went to Grand Island and entered the State Central Bank as assistant cashier, remaining there until 1892, when he came to California and spent the first two and one-half years traveling over the state; thus becoming thoroughly familiar with its resources and possibilities. In 1895 he located in Los Alamitos and became secretary of the Bixby Land Company and has occupied that position ever since, being also at the present time a director in the company. Removing to Long Beach in 1904 he has since made this city his home, having a residence in Alamitos Park. His marriage in Grand Island, Neb., united him with Miss Hattie L. Van Keuren, who was born in Pennsylvania, and they have become the parents of two children, Corrine and George A., Jr. Fraternally Mr. Mohrenstecher is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and in national politics advocates the principles of the Republican party. In 1906 he was elected to the city council of Long Beach from the first precinct and in this capacity has opportunity to look after the best interests and assist in the furthering of the good government of the city whose welfare he has so much at heart.

J. A. FIREBAUGH, of Lompoc, is very energetic and an active participant in every enterprise that stands for the upbuilding of his home town. The firm of J. A. Firebaugh & Co. does a general livery business and engages in teaming of all kinds, and besides this enterprise Mr. Firebaugh also owns a livery barn in Orcutt and is interested in the oil business. He is of Virginia birth and parentage, his father, David Firebaugh, and mother Eliza (McCown) Firebaugh, both having been born in that state. The father still lives there, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years; the mother died when sixty-one years of age. There were eight children, three of whom are now residents of California.

J. A. Firebaugh was born June 2, 1865, in Virginia and was there educated in the common schools. He engaged in farming there until twenty-three years of age, and in the fall of 1888 came to Santa Paula, Ventura county, working first at the oil business and then conducted a livery and transfer business until 1903, when he came to Lompoc and bought out a livery which he has operated since. He was married to Miss Anna Totty, a native of Kern county, Cal. Two daughters have been born to them, Mildred and Kathleen. Mrs. Firebaugh is a member of the Universalist Church in Santa Paula, while Mr. Firebaugh is identified with the Presbyterian denomination. Politically he is a Republican and fraternally he belongs to the Odd Fellows lodge at Ventura and the Woodmen of the World at Lompoc.

ISAAC N. LARGE. Preceded by many years as a coal and lumber merchant in the east, Mr. Large came to the west during middle age and has since followed mining, first in Colorado and later in California, having claims in various parts of the state. A native of Pennsylvania, he was born in Allegheny county in 1837, and is a son of Samuel Large. The primary schools of Allegheny county furnished him his first knowledge of books, and later he attended the academy at Turtle Creek and Jefferson College. The plans for his business life seem to have been well laid, for as soon as his college days were over he entered into a business which he followed consecutively for twenty-four years. Going to Elizabeth, Pa., which lies on the east bank of the Monongahela river, and is a coal mining center, he there engaged in the coal and lumber business, an enterprise which netted him a good income for nearly a quarter of a century. Disposing of his business in the east at the end of this time, in 1884 he came as far west as Denver, Colo., where for about twelve years he engaged in silver mining. Selling out the greater part of his mining claims in 1892 he came to California the following year, going first to Fresno county, later to San Diego county, and finally coming to Los Angeles. In this state as in Colorado his mining ventures have been successful.

While in Elizabeth, Pa., I. N. Large was united in marriage with Mary V. McDonough, who is a daughter of John R. and Julia B. McDonough, and was born at Peters Creek, Allegheny county, Pa. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Large, and all are living. Julia is now the wife of R. C. Casad and with her husband makes her home in Gardena; Mary and N. S., the youngest child and only son, is a miner in this state. The family home has been in Hollywood since 1899, in which year Mr. Large purchased his present residence at No. 14 Large avenue, facing Prospect avenue, one of the finest locations in the residence portion of Hollywood. During his early years Mr. Large was trained in the faith of the United Presbyterian, but since coming to Hollywood he has attended the Presbyterian Church.

CALVIN BAKER, one of the best known mining men of Southern California by reason of his invention for extracting gold from the baser metals, was born in Rensselaer county, N. Y., May 28, 1852, a son of Jonas and grandson of Lucas Baker, both natives of Massachusetts, where the name was located prior to the Revolution. Both became residents of New York, where they engaged in the manufacture of lumber, the father being later located in Saratoga county, where his death eventually occurred. He is survived by his wife, formerly Lucy Dodge, a native of Rensselaer county, N. Y., and now a resident of Saratoga county. She is the mother of three living children, one having died in childhood.

The eldest in the family of his parents, Calvin Baker was one year old when taken to Albany county, N. Y., thence to Saratoga county, where he grew to years of manhood, receiving his education in the common schools. He learned the lumber business with his father and worked as a sawyer in his father's mill, and also engaged as a millwright and machinist, his ability in the latter line being inherited. He remained with his father until attaining his majority, when he became dependent upon his own resources, building a sawmill near Grooms Corners, where he manufactured lumber by water power. Later he built three different portable steam sawmills and continued the manufacture of lumber. He made many important improvements in the method of conducting his mills, but never patented any device, which failure to do so gave his inventions to others without the cost of exclusive thought.

In 1895 Mr. Baker moved his machinery to California, having previously made several trips here. He brought two carloads of machinery and immediately built a steam sawmill in the San Bernardino range and engaged in the manufacture of lumber, and later enlarged the capacity of the mill to thirty-five thousand feet per day. For the past eight years he has been interested in mining on the desert, and in 1902 he sold his mill in order to give all of his time and attention to this occupation. He engaged in placer mining twenty miles north of Barstow and it was there that he first saw the need for improved machinery for conducting placer mining. The result of his efforts was his latest invention, known as the Baker dry mill and concentrator, for the purpose of separating the gold from the ore; in a test with another machine for a similar purpose which had obtained from nine to fifteen cents a ton, Mr. Baker's machine took out on an average from the tailings $1.09 per ton out of sixty tons. This machine is built for a capacity of from twenty-five to four hundred tons per day; the dirt is scooped on the deck with teams and then taken by elevators and screened, after which it is run through pulverizers, then again screened, after which it is put through the concentrator by means of air pressure induced by a gasoline engine from five to thirty-five horse power, when the gold and the black sand remain as concentrates. A separator is provided for obtaining the gold from the concentrates. In 1906 Mr. Baker sold his two hundred acres of placer claims to give his time and attention to the manufacture of his machine, which is protected by a patent, and which will undoubtedly bring him a fortune.

In Saratoga, N. Y., Mr. Baker was married to Miss Hattie A. Link, a native of New York, and born of this union were four children, of whom three are living: Angie, wife of R. T. Gurnsey, of San Bernardino; Cora, wife of G. M. Taylor, of Los Angeles; and Harold. Mr. Baker gives his support to the Baptist Church, of which his wife is a member. He is a strong temperance advocate and is liberal in his efforts to suppress the evils of liquor traffic. He is in all things a progressive citizen and wherever known is held in high esteem for his qualities of mind and heart.

DAVID ROSE GLASS. As proprietor of the San Bernardino Business College David R. Glass is one of the most prominent factors in the educational upbuilding of this section of Southern California, and is held in high appreciation for the splendid qualities of character as displayed throughout his connection with this enterprise. He is a native of Hillsboro, Tex., his birth having occurred in that location February 18, 1880. His father, James, was a native of Springfield, Ill., while his grandfather, John, was also a native of that place and a farmer there until his removal to Texas, where he followed a similar occupation until his death. The family was originally English, the great-grandfather, James, having emigrated from England and settled in Sangamon county, Ill. A farming life was that to which James Glass was reared in Texas and in young manhood he began that occupation and later removed to Tyler, same state, and was similarly occupied until his retirement from the active cares of life. He married Miss Katie V. Winter, a native of Texas, and a daughter of William Winter, who was born in Mississippi and became a farmer in the Lone Star state, and during the Civil war served as lieutenant in the Confederate army. Mr. and Mrs. Glass became the parents of seven children, of whom four are now living, David R. being the third in order of birth and the only one in California.

Reared in Hillsboro, Tex., and educated primarily in the public schools, David R. Glass later became a student in the Polytechnic College at Fort Worth, where he was graduated in 1899 with the degree of A. B. Having run out of funds he worked his own way during the last year and demonstrated the pluck and perseverance which are so large a part of his nature. He began teaching immediately after leaving the college halls, having charge of the Hunt school, in Hill county, Tex.; after one year he entered the Tyler Commercial College and graduated therefrom in 1901, having attended the institution but four and a half months when he was given the degrees of master of accounts and stenography. He was immediately called to a professorship in the Bowie Commercial College of Bowie, Tex., retaining the position for six months, when he became the head master in the Tyler Commercial College. He retained this position until March, 1906, and during this time engaged in real estate operations in addition to his scholastic work.

Resigning in 1906 Professor Glass came to Southern California and in San Bernardino, in conjunction with a Mr. Adair, purchased the San Bernardino Business College, and at once began its upbuilding and development, and although but a brief time has elapsed since his assumption of affairs, yet there has been a marked change and advancement which bid fair to place this institution in the front rank of those of similar character in Southern California. While in the Tyler Commercial College Professor Glass prepared what he has since called the Lightning Legible Shorthand, copyrighting the same in August, 1906; he has successfully introduced it in the San Bernardino Business College. It is learned in one-half the time required for the other systems, every possible means being taken to make it easily written and, better still, easily read. He is also the originator of the Glass touch typewriting system, which is making of his pupils the most accurate of those who are filling commercial positions in this section, and he has also originated the Glass system of bookkeeping. Professor Glass is highly esteemed and appreciated for the thorough and conscientious manner in which he performs his various duties, no pupil ever losing in any way under his instruction, business methods, thought and habit being strongly impressed upon the youth seeking a foundation for a foothold in the world's marts.

In Tyler, Tex., Professor Glass was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary Barnette, a native of Mississippi, and a highly cultured woman. In his fraternal relations the professor is identified with the Woodmen of the World; in religion he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and is a teacher in the Sunday-school. Politically he casts his ballot in the interests of the Democratic party.

WILLIAM A. SACKETT was born in Sherman county, Tex., November 22, 1854, a son of Thompson D. Sackett, the latter a native of Illinois. In Arkansas he met and married Rebecca M. Evans, a native of Alabama, and after a few years they removed to Texas. Four years later they came to California, spent two years in San Bernardino, then moved to Visalia, Tulare county, where they farmed for a time. Locating in San Luis Obispo county the father engaged in ranching for some time, and finally came to Los Angeles county, where his death occurred in 1892.

William A. Sackett was but three years old when his parents brought him to California, two years being spent in San Bernardino. His education was principally received in the common schools of San Luis Obispo county, the course being completed in Los Angeles. He worked with his parents until after his marriage, when he began farming for himself. He purchased his present property in the vicinity of Artesia, where he has fifty-one acres of land, a part of which is in grain and corn, while much of his attention is given to the management of a dairy. He has lived in this immediate vicinity since 1868, and on this property since 1881.

The marriage of Mr. Sackett occurred in 1877, uniting him with Miss M. M. Petty, who was born in Texas, a daughter of William J. Petty, and born of this union are the following children: Marinda, wife of J. T. Orr; William A.; Joseph D.; Ervin M., who died at the age of fourteen years; R. J.; Lucy P.; Jeannette M.; Rebecca J.; and Thompson D. Mr. Sackett is associated fraternally with the Masonic lodge at Artesia, the Order of Eastern Star at Norwalk, the Odd Fellows and Rebekahs of Artesia, the Independent Order of Foresters of Norwalk, and the Knights of the Maccabees of Artesia. Politically he is a stanch advocate of Democratic principles.

JOSEPH WEBSTER. The work of Joseph Webster has been accomplished in the upbuilding of a personal fortune and the establishment in life of his children, whom he has had educated and settled comfortably in life, to make of themselves such citizens as he has set them the example. He is an old settler of this section of Southern California and during many years of residence has won a high position among his fellow men, appreciated alike for his business ability and the personal qualities of character which distinguish him. He is an Englishman by birth, born in St. Helen's April 24, 1842; his father, Henry, a native of the same place, brought his family to America in 1849, locating on the then frontier (Pottawattamie county, Iowa), where he engaged in farming until his death, which occurred two years later. His wife, formerly Ann Rigby, was of English birth, and died in San Bernardino county in 1879. She was the mother of fifteen children, of whom twelve attained maturity and six are now living.

Joseph Webster was a lad of seven years when he was brought across the water to the western world, the first three years of his life being spent in Iowa. In 1852 the family removed to Salt Lake, crossing the plains with ox-teams, and in that place he received a limited education in the common schools. He was early employed on farms and also assisted his mother in the management of the home farm. In 1859 he came to San Bernardino county by mule-teams, and here went to work by the month, and when financially able rented land and began farming on his own resources. Two years later he was able to purchase property, consisting of a farm now on Third street in the town of San Bernardino, and here he conducted general farming operations and a dairy business. In 1862 he began freighting and the following year with his brothers he drove a band of wild horses from California to Salt Lake and sold them. He continued freighting from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City and into Arizona until 1864, when he began freighting to Montana. Returning to San Bernardino he engaged in teaming, hauling lumber from the San Bernardino mountains. In 1868 he purchased a band of cattle and began stock-raising in the Yucaipe valley, locating a ranch the same year. He purchased his present property from a Mr. Tripp, of San Jacinto, and has here engaged in farming and stock-raising ever since. He owns one-hundred and sixty acres in Yucaipe devoted to grain and stock, having previously disposed of lands which he owned in Bear valley and San Jacinto.

Mr. Webster was married in San Bernardino to Miss Mary M. Rabel, a native of Wyoming, and a daughter of Henry Rabel, who was born in Germany, emigrated to Fort Larimie, Wyo., and thence came to California and engaged in farming and stock-raising. Mr. and Mrs. Webster became the parents of the following children: Rosalie I., Mrs. Wilshire, who is now deceased; Elizabeth E., a graduate of Berkeley and a teacher in Pomona; Henry E., a farmer in the Yucaipe valley; Reese, a farmer in Santa Ana; Calvin, a carpenter in San Bernardino; Albert, teaming in Los Angeles county; Raymond, a farmer in Yucaipe valley; Clayton, a farmer on the Base Line in San Bernardino county; Lillian, a teacher in San Bernardino; Grache, Mrs. Brooks, of San Bernardino; and Mabel, attending a business college of San Bernardino. Fraternally Mr. Webster is a member of the Odd Fellows organization, being active from 1872 to 1905, when he was demitted. He was also a member of the encampment and Rebekahs from which he is now demitted. He takes a deep interest on all educational questions, having served for several terms as school trustee in both the Yucaipe district and the San Bernardino. He has been a Democrat politically since the days of Douglas, but under the administration of McKinley he endorsed the principles of Republicanism, of which he is now a stanch advocate.

FREDERICK A. POOLE, located in Covina, Los Angeles county, was born in San Bernardino county, near Colton, October 11, 1868; his father, Edward Poole, came to America from England in young manhood, and in Missouri married Susan Ann Wilshire, also a native of England. He still survives and makes his home near Colton, at the advanced age of eighty years. His wife died in September, 1906, when seventy-seven years old. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom seven still survive and make their home in California.

Frederick A. Poole spent his boyhood days in his native county and received his education in the public schools, after which he engaged with his father in ranching until he was twenty years old. In 1888 he moved to Orange county, and four years later purchased a ranch of eighty acres near Capistrano. In 1903 he gave up ranching pursuits and engaged in the feed and fuel business in San Bernardino for one year, then returned to Capistrano and purchased two hundred and fifty acres, given over entirely to the cultivation of grain. Later disposing of his Orange county property he came to the vicinity of Covina and bought the forty acres which form his present ranch.

In June, 1892, Mr. Poole was married to Miss Ada Hayden, a native of Missouri, and the daughter of William Hayden, and who came to California with her parents when a small child. They are now located in San Diego. Mr. and Mrs. Poole have one son, Fred L.

JOSEPH SILVA, of Oxnard, is engaged in ranching on the Chiappa Pietra ranch. A native of Portugal, he was born December 25, 1862, on Fayal Island, one of the Azores, and until after his marriage resided in the country of his birth. His father, Joseph Silva, Sr., a farmer, is now living in Portugal at an advanced age. His mother, also a life-long resident of Portugal, died at the age of seventy-five years. Two of their sons besides Joseph R. are living in Ventura county, and a grandson makes his home with Mr. Silva, he having come here from Portugal in 1904.

In 1883 Mr. Silva immigrated to the United States, coming to Alameda county, Cal., where he was employed as a ranchman for three years. Coming from there to Ventura county, he purchased nine acres of land in Saticoy, and since that time has been employed in tilling the soil on his own account. His present ranch comprises fifty acres, upon which he has made many improvements, placing the land in a fine state of culture, and erecting a conveniently arranged residence, substantial farm buildings, and furnishing these with all the modern comforts and conveniences. On the home ranch he raises beans, and in addition he carries on two hundred acres devoted to the growing of barley. He has title to three hundred and twenty acres of farming land in Los Posas, and at Saticoy, in addition to his nine-acre ranch, he owns two house lots, and has four valuable lots at Long Beach, his real estate holdings being very valuable.

In Portugal, before coming to the United States, Mr. Silva married Alexandrina Da Gloria, who immigrated to California in 1887, joining her husband in Ventura county. Mr. and Mrs. Silva have six children: Mary, Joseph, Phoebe, Annie, Louise and Maggie. Mary, the oldest child, was born in Portugal, but the others are natives of Ventura county. Politically Mr. Silva is a Republican.

MORTON HAIG, a native of Scotland, was born in Edinburgh September 27, 1848, his parents being Robert and Catherine (Shields) Haig, both natives of that place. The father was a man of influence and prominent as a lawyer. Morton Haig received his early education in Edinburgh, and further pursued his course in Germany, France and Italy. His maternal grandfather having located in America and engaged as a successful rice planter in South Carolina, he was induced to emigrate to this country. He decided, however, to locate on the Pacific coast and accordingly came to California, where he associated himself with two brothers, James and Edmund Parkers, his personal friends, in the purchase of three hundred acres of land. They are now subdividing this property into small ranches, as Mr. Haig considers this an ideal location to establish and maintain homes with but moderate means. They have previously devoted the land to the cultivation of various fruits and grains, and at one time had a magnificent dairy of full blooded Jersey cattle.

In England Mr. Haig was united in marriage with Miss Bertha Brown, a daughter of Hugh Stowell Brown, a noted Baptist divine of England of more than ordinary renown, whose death recently occurred in his native country. Mr. and Mrs. Haig are the parents of five children, namely: Alice, Cecil, Winnifred, Bertha and John.

CHARLES GREVE, of Palms, was born in Germany in 1840, a son of Henry and Mary (Knopp) Greve, both of whom were also natives of the Fatherland, where the father still resides. During his active life he was a farmer, but of late years he has been living retired, deprived of the companionship of his wife, who died some years ago. Eight children were born to these parents. Charles Greve was trained to agricultural pursuits on the home farm. In 1862 he came to the United States, landing at Castle Garden, New York City, and for several months he worked there as a common laborer to provide the means to pay his passage across the continent. His journey's end brought him to San Francisco, but he soon left there for the Owen's valley. Coming to the southern part of the state for the first time in 1875, he was variously employed in Los Angeles for about one year, when he purchased the ranch of one hundred and fifty acres on which he now makes his home. Of late the active management of the ranch has fallen upon younger shoulders, his sons relieving him of the duties borne in years past.

Mr. Greve and his wife have four children, Rudolph, George, Frank and Louise, all still at home, and by their self-sacrificing devotion to their faithful parents are lightening the burdens of their later years. The family attend the German Lutheran Church, and the father and sons uphold Republican principles.

GOTTFRIED ALEXANDER. Prominent among the residents of San Pedro that have met with success is Gottfried Alexander, a well-known and prosperous brick manufacturer, who has built up a large and lucrative business in this vicinity. A native of Germany, he was born, December 23, 1859, in Sandau. His father, John Alexander, a brick manufacturer, spent his entire life of four score years in the Fatherland. He married Louise Harra, who died in Germany. She bore her husband fourteen children, nine of whom survive.

Brought up in Sandau, Gottfried Alexander left school when ten years old, and then began to learn the brickmaker's trade, which he followed in his native country until becoming of age. Emigrating to America in 1881, he located in San Antonio, Tex., where for eighteen months he was employed on the Southern Pacific Railroad. Locating in Los Angeles, Cal., in 1883, he worked in a brick-yard and became foreman for the firm of Simmons & Hubbard, brick manufacturers. Going to Klondike in 1897, Mr. Alexander crossed the Chilkoot Pass at the time of the great slide, and stopped there to help extricate the people. Continuing then his journey to Dawson, he remained there a year and a half, when he was ready to return to civilization. Coming back to his old home, he engaged with the Los Angeles Brick Company. Starting then in business on his own account, Mr. Alexander located in San Pedro in 1900, establishing a brick yard on Barton Hill, where he has a well-equipped plant, and is carrying on a substantial business as a manufacturer, keeping busily employed in filling his contracts. By industry, perseverance and wise judgment, he has accumulated a fair share of this world's goods, and owns property of value, having recently erected an apartment house, and having a fine residence at No. 1306 Arnold street.

In Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Alexander married Martha Burner, a native of Germany, and they have two children living, namely: Ella and Walter. Politically Mr. Alexander is a stanch Republican, and religiously he is a member of the Lutheran Church.

CAPT. WILLIAM H. ELLSWORTH was born in Sheldon, Vt., February 12, 1844, the eldest in a family of four children, of whom three are now surviving. His parents, Edgar and Catherine (Primmerman) Ellsworth, were natives respectively of Bristol, N. Y., and Pennsylvania, the maternal grandfather, Peter, being a native of Amsterdam, Holland, an early settler of Pennsylvania, and later of New York, and a patriot in the war of 1812. The father was a mason and builder by trade, and from Bristol he located in Sheldon, Vt., and later removed to New Hampshire and in West Lebanon passed his last days, and there his wife also died at an advanced age. A son, James, served in the First New Hampshire Regiment Cavalry in the Civil war and was wounded at Gettysburg, but survived the perils of warfare and made his home in Worcester, Mass., until his death, which occurred in 1906.

William Henry Ellsworth was reared in New Hampshire, where his parents removed, and he was there educated in the public schools of West Lebanon. In 1862 he volunteered in Company B, First Regiment New Hampshire Cavalry, and following participated in many of the most important engagements of the Civil war—the battle of Gettysburg, passed with Sheridan up and down the Shenandoah valley, fighting in Custer's brigade; at Cedar Creek three horses were shot from under him, each time his horse fell grasping the rein of some riderless horse and leaping to his back and again charging at the enemy. At Fisher's Hill he was wounded in the thigh. He was transferred to Sherman's army and joined him at Atlanta and in Kilpatrick's division of cavaltry participated in the battles of Jonesboro, Lovejoy station and Atlanta; thence marched with Sherman to the sea, in the capture of Savannah, then north through the Carolinas, engaging in the battle of Goldsboro, and other minor engagements and on to the surrender of General Lee. He started into the struggle as sergeant, was promoted to office of second lieutenant after the battle of Gettysburg because of services on the field and after Fisher's Hill was promoted to first lieutenant, and after the battle of Winchester became captain of Company B. He was mustered out of service at Fortress Monroe in August, 1865, and then returned to New Hampshire, and in 1866 enlisted as a private in the regular army, serving five years in Company B, Eighth United States Cavalry, for the greater part of the time being located in New Mexico and Arizona and engaged in fighting the Apache Indians. His headquarters for this time were in Camp Grant, Arizona, and forts Stanton and Union in New Mexico.

Honorably discharged in 1871, Captain Ellsworth returned to New Hampshire and learned the trade of machinist in Claremont, and worked at his trade until an accident, which broke two ribs, laid him up six months; then was attacked with a severe case of pneumonia and for two years was incapacitated. Ordered to California by his physician, he came to this state and purchased a small ranch at San Dimas, Los Angeles county, and lived there until 1890, when he sold out and coming to Redlands bought five acres on Park avenue near Colton avenue, and set an orange grove of navels. He has been twice married, first united with Miss Susan Holbrook, a native of Cornish, New Hampshire; she died in California, leaving four children. Captain Ellsworth was united in marriage in Redlands with Miss Ida Stowell, a native of Claremont, N. H., and they have one son, Leslie. Fraternally Captain Ellsworth is identified with the Independent Order of Foresters, of which he is past officer, and is a member of Major Jarvis Post, No. 12, Grand Army of the Republic, of Claremont, N. H. Politically he is a Republican, and in religion is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM WHITMAN BEACH. A man of unlimited enterprise and energy, able and progressive, William Whitman Beach, of Terminal, is widely known as the promoter and manager of one of the important industries of Southern California. In the putting up of clams he carries on a good business, and by a special process of his own invention he has succeeded in so canning abalones and the Pacific coast lobsters that they will keep for an indefinite time, and may be transported safely to all markets of the Union, if not of the world. Of New England stock, he was born, February 28, 1856, in Hartford, Conn., which was likewise the birthplace of his father, the late Capt. Walter P. Beach. He comes of truly patriotic ancestry, his great grandfather on the paternal side having been a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and his Grandfather Beach, who organized the old Phoenix Bank of Hartford, Conn., and served as its president until his death, was a soldier in the war of 1812.

Following the sea during the earlier years of his life, Capt. Walter P. Beach was engaged largely in whaling, serving as master of a vessel. On retiring from seafaring pursuits, he located in Michigan, at first being engaged in the insurance business at Detroit. Subsequently removing to Lapeer county, he established an extensive business as a lumber manufacturer, and took a prominent part in the management of public affairs, serving as sheriff of the county for several terms. During the Civil war, he organized a company consisting of men from his own lumber camps. This company, which formed a part of the Tenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, he was made captain of, and at the Battle of Pittsburg Landing he was seriously wounded. Capt. Beach was an old line Democrat, a faithful member of the Episcopal Church, and one of the leading Masons of his time, belonging to lodge, council and chapter, and being one of the charter members of the Detroit Commandery, K. T. He lived to the ripe old age of seventy-five years, passing away at his home in Ypsilanti, Mich. He married Martha A. Spencer, who was born in Boston, Mass., and died in Ypsilanti, Mich. Of the nine children born of their union, three sons and four daughters are living, William W., the subject of this sketch, being the second son in order of birth.

After his graduation from the State Normal School in Ypsilanti, Mich., William Whitman Beach, in 1872, entered the employ of W. H. Shaw & Co., wholesale notion dealers at Detroit, and as commercial salesman traveled for three years through Michigan and Ohio. The following three years he was engaged with his father in the insurance business, and for six years thereafter was steward on steamers running from Ogdensburg to Duluth and to Chicago. Subsequently Mr. Beach was for seven years in the lumber regions of Michigan, getting out timber for his father the first three years, and afterwards for other lumber manufacturers. Locating then in Wisconsin, he was employed in the hotel business for awhile, first at Waukesha, then at Kenosha and other summer resorts. Coming to California in 1888, Mr. Beach continued in the same business for awhile, running Hotel Metropole, at Catalina, for Mr. Shatto for two years; for two years managing a hotel at Arrowhead, Hot Springs, San Bernardino county; and having charge of a hotel at Kern City, Kern county, for a year. Changing his occupation, Mr. Beach built a factory at Longbeach, Los Angeles county, and for four years was there engaged in canning clams and lobsters. In 1902 he opened a lobster cannery in San Pedro, and the following year he incorporated the San Pedro Canning Company, of which he has since been vice-president and manager. In 1902 he removed the business to Terminal, and has here built a new factory, which is large and well equipped with the most modern machinery, and with every appliance for successfully carrying on his work. Under his new process, Mr. Beach cans clams, lobsters and abalones in a most satisfactory manner, and is now managing a very extensive and lucrative business shipping the products of his canning factory to all parts of the United States and to the more important markets of foreign countries. In the prosecution of its business, this company leases San Nicholas Island, seventy miles from the coast, and in its fishing, and its lobster trapping, employs eleven crews of men, in addition keeping diving crews busy in gathering clams and abalones. The company has much money invested in its outfit, owning all of its vessels, as well as its large plant.

In Ishpeming, Mich, in 1876, Mr. Beach married Christina Skoog, who was born in Sweden. She is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically Mr. Beach is identified with the Democratic party.

JOHN S. BAKER is a native Californian, his birth having occurred in Riverside county, December 3, 1855; his father, S. G. Baker, was born in Birmingham, England, and his mother, Elizabeth (Ward) Baker, in Worcestershire, same country; they emigrated to America and now live in Los Angeles.

When quite young John S. Baker was brought to Los Angeles by his parents and here he received his education in the public schools. After completing his studies he took a trip through Arizona, Utah and other western states, but finally returned to Los Angeles county and began farming for himself. He purchased a ranch of forty acres near Norwalk and set out twenty acres to grapes, making this place his home for about six years, when he disposed of these interests and immediately purchased a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres. This was wild and barren land and he at once began its improvement, making it one of the fine ranches of this section and there establishing his permanent home. He added to his original purchase and to-day owns one hundred and seventy acres in the home ranch while he also owns one hundred and ten acres a few miles distant. He early started in the manufacture of wines, beginning on a small scale, and has steadily increased the business until to-day he owns one of the best private wineries in the state. The winery proper consists of a large brick building which was built in 1886, with all necessary outbuildings and engine rooms, with a storage capacity of about one hundred and twenty thousand gallons. He manufactures about forty-five thousand gallons of wine per year, buying many tons of grapes and offering the very highest market price which has encouraged this industry throughout the country. He manufactures both sweet and sour wines and also a superior grade of brandies. He employs a large force of men in both this business, for which he has an expert wine maker, as well as the general farming enterprise and stock business, this latter having occupied a considerable amount of his attention, especially the raising of cattle and hogs, having fattened as many as seven hundred head of the latter at a time.

Mr. Baker was married in 1892 to Miss Julia Mekeel, a native of Iowa, and born of this union are the following children: Hazel, Everett, Leona and Gertrude. Fraternally Mr. Baker is a member of Norwalk Lodge No. 315, F. & A. M., and Nietos Lodge No. 197, I. O. O. F., of Downey, and the Fraternal Brotherhood of Norwalk. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party.

R. B. COOK. The family represented by the above named gentleman came originally of English stock although the name was established on American soil prior to the Revolution. Pennsylvania was the home of succeeding generations and from that state Noah Cook eventually removed to Ohio in its pioneer days and there passed his remaining years. His son, Jacob, born in Pennsylvania, became a pioneer settler of Richland county, Ohio, where he hewed a farm out of the wilderness lands and made his home until his death at the age of sixty-five years. His wife was formerly Mary Lee, who was born near Richmond, Va., daughter of Solomon Lee, representative of the famous southern family. Mr. Lee was likewise an early settler of Richland county, Ohio, where he made his home for many years, passing away at the advanced age of eighty-two years. Jacob Cook reared a family of children, among whom was a son, J. R., who was born in Richland county, Ohio, November 12, 1829, and there on the paternal farm he was reared to young manhood, receiving a beneficial training in his home while he was educated in the public school in the vicinity, and also attended and graduated from the high school at Lexington. He was but seventeen years old when he became dependent upon his own resources, engaging in teaching for three terms, and finally locating on a farm near Shelby, Ohio. In 1852 he became a pioneer of Indiana, making the trip from his home in Ohio to Whitley county, Ind., by ox-teams, where like his ancestors before him he proceeded to hew out a farm from the wilderness lands about him. Still following the westward trend of civilization, in 1857 he made the journey to Brown county, Kans., there establishing his home near Padonia, and five miles from Hiawatha. Three years later found him en route with mule teams to Pike's Peak, and thence to Fairplay, in which locality he engaged in mining for a time. He then returned to Kansas via the Santa Fe Route and established a trading post at what is now Fort Leonard, then Pawnee Rock, and here encountered the various interesting phases of pioneer life, at the same time working up a big business in general merchandise and general trading. Upon locating in Eastern Kansas he farmed for some time, but eventually removed to Nebraska, where in Grand Island he improved a farm and established a postoffice at White Cloud, where he served for some time as postmaster. He started the first school district of the place.

Again desiring to become a pioneer of the more remote west, in 1867 he outfitted with ox-teams and necessary equipment, and set out across the plains with his wife and worldly possessions, bound for California—then the picturesque destination of the greater part of the pioneers who set out in search of a home on the Pacific coast. Three months later they arrived in Santa Cruz, Cal., where Mr. Cook at once became interested in farming, teaming, and freighting. After one year he located in Montery county and engaged on a farm near Salinas and also acted as foreman for a large warehouse. In 1878 he came to Southern California, and in the vicinity of Capistrano, Orange county, farmed for about three years. He came to Long Beach in 1882 and here he has remained since, building up his own personal fortunes and at the same time giving his best support to the advancement of the city in every possible avenue. It was the fortune of the pioneer that he paid $50 for a lot which he afterward sold for $20,000. His land purchased at first for farming purposes steadily increased in value and gave him promise of large future returns. His first employment in this city was as a teamster in hauling lumber for the greater part of the early dwellings of the place, which he brought from Wilmington and San Pedro. He also engaged in farming and horticulture, having set out a part of his ranch in orchard immediately after his arrival here, and had also later purchased a walnut grove near San Juan, which he still owns. He also owns considerable property in Long Beach which he has held for many years, his faith steadfast and strong in the future of the city, a greater future than the greatness which has come to Long Beach in the past ten years. Mr. Cook's home is presided over by his wife, formerly Harriett A. Kinney, a native of Cayuga county, N. Y., and a descendant of Revolutionary ancestry. Her father, George Rix Kinney, was born in Bennington, Vt., and settled in Cayuga county, N. Y., and later in Lexington county, Ohio, and finally to Huron county, same state, where his death eventually occurred. His wife was Sylvia Graves, also a native of Vermont and granddaughter of Rev. Increase Graves, a minister of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Cook became the parents of the following children: James Adelbert, a builder located in Clearwater, Cal.; R. B., of this review; Amy Jane, whose marriage to Joseph Rowse, of Capistrano, occurred February 12, 1884, being the first wedding that occurred in Long Beach (then known as Willmore City;) Elmer Ellsworth, a horticulturist of Tustin; Ozias B., a horticulturist of Capistrano; and Frank Emerson, who represents the Shepherd Fruit Company, of Los Angeles. Mr. Cook is a Republican in his political affiliations, whose principles he supports. He is a stanch advocate of prohibition and has given every effort to bring about a consummation of such management in Long Beach, and has as well contributed materially in other ways to the upbuilding and development of the city.

March 19, 1854, in the vicinity of Cleveland, Ohio, occurred the birth of R. B. Cook, the second oldest in his father's family. He was reared on the frontier, from Indiana to Kansas, and thence overland to California, his education having been received in the public schools throughout the country. He was but thirteen years old when he came to California, his home being in Santa Cruz for eleven years, when he accompanied his father to Southern California, his father-in-law, J. R. Congdon, also locating here and establishing the first walnut grove in what is now Orange county. In 1886 Mr. Cook set out a walnut grove in San Juan Capistrano, consisting of twenty acres, while he devoted the remaining sixteen acres of his place to general farming. He still owns this place although in 1904 he came to the vicinity of El Monte and here purchased thirty acres, which he has since improved to walnuts and alfalfa, building a handsome residence, substantial barns, and outbuildings adequate for the protection of stock and implements. He was married in San Juan Capistrano to Miss Harriet L. Congdon, who was born on Lytle creek, San Bernardino county, Cal., a daughter of J. R. Congdon, and born of this union are two sons, Leroy R. and Russell. Mr. Cook has taken an active interest in all matters of public import, having served as school trustee at San Juan for some years. He is now a member of the Republican County Central Committee, with whose interests he has been identified for many years. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, of Santa Ana; the Woodmen of the World, of San Juan, of which he is past consul commander; and the Fraternal Aid. Mr. Cook is a man and citizen held in highest esteem wherever known, successful in business, enterprising in all public affairs, and a friend and citizen well worthy the name.

WILLIAM ROBERTS FARQUHAR is a native of Ohio and was born in East Union, Coshocton county, September 6, 1828; his father, Caleb, was born in Maryland on Pipe creek, and his grandfather, Samuel, of Scotch origin, came from the north of Ireland and became a farmer in Maryland, where several of his sons enlisted for service in the war of 1812. Later he removed to Beechwood, Pa., then to Coshocton county, Ohio, where his death occurred when nearly ninety years old. He was a member of the Society of Friends and was a worthy and helpful citizen. In Coshocton county, Ohio, Caleb Farquhar engaged as a farmer and was still occupied thus at the time of his death at the age of eighty-four years. He was also a member of the Society of Friends. His wife, formerly Catherine Trimble, was a native of Ireland, and when five years old she came to the United States, her father, John Trimble, locating the family in Coshocton county, Ohio, where he engaged as a blacksmith and later as a farmer. He was a devoted member of the Episcopal Church and built the church of this denomination on his farm. His death occurred at the age of ninety-six years. Mrs. Farquhar died in Ohio, leaving a family of four children, of whom three are now living.

The second in the family of his parents, William Roberts Farquhar was reared on the paternal farm in Ohio and educated in the common schools. He followed farming in his young manhood, making a trip to Iowa in 1855 in search of a better location, but soon returning to his preferred state. While in Iowa, in July, 1856, he was married to Miss Marian Renfrew, a native of Coshocton county, Ohio. Mr. Farquhar located in Indiana in 1857 and improved a farm near Sullivan, and made that place his home until the breaking out of the Civil war, when he sold out and returned to Ohio because of the strong secession feeling in that neighborhood. He engaged in general farming and stock-raising in Coshocton county. In 1887 he made his first trip to California and while in Riverside purchased his present ranch in Redlands, consisting then of sage brush land and with no prospect of its future luxuriance. He returned east in 1888 and left his son instructions to set out his ten acres in oranges, which he did, and continued to tend until his father's return in 1896. The family together have fifty-six acres of full bearing oranges. The death of his wife occurred May 5, 1904. They were the parents of five children, namely: Ellen Catherine, of Redlands; Franklin, a horticulturist; Ida Maria, of Redlands; Richard J. and William C., also horticulturists of this community. Mr. Farquhar is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, of Redlands, and politically is a Republican.

EDMUND FICKEWIRTH, of Puente, came to California in 1872, two years previous having located in America from his birthplace, Nordhausen, Germany, where he was born April 16, 1840. His father, Traugott, was a tanner by trade. Edmund Fickewirth received his education in the common school and gymnasium, which he attended until he was sixteen years old, when he learned the trade of tanner as an apprentice. Later he engaged as a journeyman and spent three years in France as such. When twenty-one years old he enlisted in the Seventy-first Regiment German Infantry, in Company I, and served three years, during which he participated in the Sleswick-Holstein war of 1864 and two years later in the Prussian-Austrian war. Returning to civic duties he again engaged at his trade, traveling throughout Switzerland, Italy and Denmark until 1870, when he decided to emigrate to the western world. After landing in New York City, went to Detroit, Mich., where with a brother he engaged in the conduct of a wood and coal yard. Two years later he came to California and in Los Angeles was employed in a furniture factory for a time; then going to the country he worked on a farm until able to purchase land, when near Compton, Los Angeles county, he bought eighty acres. Later he disposed of forty acres, still retaining forty acres, which he owns at the present writing. In 1897, Mr. Fickewirth purchased his present large ranch, which is located one mile from Puente, and three years later erected his handsome home, put down three wells, installed a thirty-five horse power engine with a large capacity; set out small fruits; twenty acres of vineyard; forty acres in walnuts. In addition to this ranch he also owns twenty acres of apples and walnuts in the Mountain View district.

In Detroit, Mich., Mr. Fickewirth was united in marriage with Miss Caroline Koch, a native of that city, and they are now the parents of twelve children, two of whom are in Michigan and the others in California. Mr. Fickewirth is a stanch Republican.

AUGUST H. GRAND. One of the successful sheep ranchers in this section of the country is August H. Grand, who owns about six hundred acres of land in the Warm Springs valley, which he farms to grain and hay and devotes to the raising of cattle and a herd of five hundred sheep. Mr. Grand came to California in 1872 from France, where he was born November 26, 1855, at Dauphine, the son of Jean Pierre and Josephine Grand, the mother still residing at the old home. The elder Grand was a farmer in France and there the son, August H., lived until he was sixteen years of age, when he came to America and joined his two brothers, Fred and Emil, who were then located in Los Angeles. They are now engaged in the stock business at Julian in San Diego county. Mr. Grand had thirteen brothers and sisters, six of whom are now living.

Upon his arrival in this country he first secured employment on a ranch for Mr. Burnett, later went to Riverside, and from there to Ventura, where for a time he engaged in gardening. Later he returned to San Pedro, from there going to San Juan Capistrano and entering the employ of his brothers, who afterwards took him with them to San Felipe. In 1877 he went to San Juan and was engaged in sheep herding there for the next two years, when he removed to the San Seville ranch near San Julian, bought a flock of sheep and conducted an independent sheep business until 1880. The following ten years he spent in the same occupation on a four hundred acre ranch in the San Luis Rey valley, and in 1890 went to Fallbrook and raised cattle and sheep until 1900. Since that time he has been located on the ranch which is now his home. His marriage to Miss Bernardina Osyone occurred at San Pasqual, where she was born. They are the parents of ten children. The family are adherents of the Catholic religion. Mr. Grand is well posted in his business and an honest and industrious citizen who is highly esteemed by all who know him.

HENRY CLAY GUITEAU. Since 1891 Henry Clay Guiteau, superintendent of Urbita Springs, San Bernardino, has been a resident of Southern California. He was born February 14, 1843, in Murfreesboro, Tenn., of French Huguenot descent on both sides of the house. After the revocation of the edict of Nantes the Guiteau family came to America and settled in Vermont in which state Calvin Guiteau, the father of Henry Clay, was born. He became a jeweler in Tennessee, in the cities of Memphis and Nashville, later removing to Watertown, N. Y., where his death occurred in 1846. The mother, whose maiden name was Amelia Romaine, was born in New York and died in Tennessee.

There were five children in the family of which Mr. Guiteau was a member, but two of whom are now living. He was the youngest and but three years of age when his father died, the family having some time before that removed to Watertown, N. Y. In this city the son was reared and received his education through the medium of the public schools. In 1864 he went to Tennessee and accepted a position as conductor on the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis, remaining with that company until 1870, when he went to St. Louis and secured a similar position on the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern, being given a passenger run. After twelve years, in 1882, he resigned this work and connected himself with the Louisville & Nashville railroad, working as freight and passenger conductor between St. Louis and Nashville, and also took the pay car all over the system until 1886. Following this he changed to the Alabama & Great Southern, running between Chattanooga and New Orleans, he having had charge of the first train ever run over Lake Pontchartrain. His next position was that of train master on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas, running between Greenville and Dallas. Kenney and Jefferson in Texas. Upon his arrival in California in 1891 he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific as brakeman. In 1893 he assumed the superintendency of the old San Bernardino Motor railroad between San Bernardino and Riverside, holding the position under I. H. Pope, receiver, until the road went back to the control of the Southern Pacific. Mr. Guiteau at this time retired from railroad work, for a time turning his attention to the oil business, becoming a director in the oil exchange and sinking and operating wells in the Los Angeles field. He continued at this occupation until 1897, in which year he spent eight months' time on a trip to Dawson, Alaska. Returning to Los Angeles he followed various lines of work for a season before becoming traffic manager of the Vallejo, Benicia & Napa Valley railroad, filling the position from its inception until July, 1906, when he resigned to become superintendent of Urbita Springs and take charge of the park.

The marriage of Mr. Guiteau in St. Louis united him with Miss Sarah C. Mabee, a native of Alton, Ill., and they became the parents of one daughter, Minnie B., now the wife of B. F. Johnson of Los Angeles. Fraternally Mr. Guiteau affiliates with the Masonic lodge, in which he has attained the degree of Royal Arch Mason. Politically he is a Republican. He and his wife are attendants of the Presbyterian Church.

VINCENTI MORICICH. The birth of Vincenti Moricich occurred in 1854 in Lasian, Austria, the son of Lucas and Maria Moricich, both members of old and prominent families in that country, where they lived their entire lives. As a young boy he learned fishing with his father, a part of his early days having been spent in Venice, Italy, and a part in the land of his birth. At the age of thirteen he began his career as a sailor, sailing under many different flags on various ships, his cruises taking him into the waters of the Mediterranean, Black, Red and Baltic seas, to the East and West Indies, through all of the oceans, twice each around Capes Horn and Good Hope, and into innumerable ports.

Arriving in San Francisco in 1872 he stayed at that place but a short time, then came to San Pedro, where he engaged in fishing, subsequently going to the Columbia river salmon beds and fishing as far north as Victoria. In 1890 he located in Avalon and has since made this place his home. He has three launches, the Mascot, Wavepress and Sea Bass, and a number of small boats and does the largest fishing business of anyone on the island. His marriage in Wilmington united him with Josephine Gimelier, a native of Santa Barbara, and a daughter of Fortunato Gimelier, who came from Marseilles, France, to Santa Barbara, then removed to Wilmington, where the daughter was reared. Mr. and Mrs. Moricich became the parents of the following children: Lucy, wife of John Roberts, of Avalon; Vincenti, who was drowned in Avalon bay at the age of nineteen years; Tony and Lucas, who assist their father in business; Alice; Ruth;

Magdalene; Irene; Estella; Violet; and Mary, who died in July, 1906. Mr. Moricich is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party and has for the past twelve years discharged his duties as an official, being constable of Catalina township.

GEORGE H. NICHOLSON was born, September 17, 1877, in San Jose, Cal., coming from English ancestry on the paternal side.

Although born in New York state, Frank H. Nicholson was reared and educated in Joliet, Ill. When a young man, as early as 1848, he crossed the plains with ox-teams, and for a number of years was engaged in mining, first in the vicinity of Nevada City, and then at the New Almaden mines. For a few years after his marriage, he carried on a substantial business as a wholesale and retail grocer in San Jose. He subsequently removed to Madera, where, as representative of the Madera Flume and Trading Company, he had his headquarters. There he also improved a good farm, on which he resided until his death, in 1884. He married Elizabeth Charles, who was born near Killrock, Ireland, where her father was proprietor of a line of jaunting cars. She came to New York City when a girl of fourteen years, from there coming by way of the Isthmus to California, locating in Santa Clara county, where she was married. She is now a resident of San Jose. She bore her husband eight children, namely: Angie M., a graduate of the San Jose State Normal School, and Leland Stanford, Jr., University, and now a teacher in the San Jose Normal School; Frances R., living in Goldfield, Nev.; Charles H., of Watsonville, Cal.; Louis F., of San Jose; E. A., of Los Angeles, manager of the Western Sash and Door Company; Joseph W., having charge of the San Pedro Lumber Company's yards at Compton and Gardena; George H., the special subject of this sketch; and Genevieve, a graduate of the State Normal School at San Jose, and a teacher in San Francisco.

Leaving San Jose, where he received his preliminary education, when the family removed to Madera, George H. Nicholson continued his studies in the public schools of that place, and as a member of the first class that was graduated from the Madera High School received his diploma in 1897. He subsequently taught school for three years in Fresno county, after which he was in the employ of the Sanger Lumber Company, at Sanger, for a few months. Coming to San Pedro in 1901, Mr. Nicholson became a clerk in the office of the San Pedro Lumber Company, and in the discharge of the duties devolving upon him in that capacity proved himself so capable and faithful that he was promoted from time to time until attaining his present responsible position as manager of the office. He is a man of great enterprise and financial ability, and, with his brothers, E. A. Nicholson and J. W. Nicholson, incorporated the Western Sash and Door Company, of Los Angeles, of which he is a director. He is also a member of the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce.

In 1904, in San Pedro, Mr. Nicholson married Clara Savage, a graduate of the Long Beach high school, and a daughter of Hon. William H. Savage. Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson have one child, a daughter named Mary Elizabeth. Politically Mr. Nicholson supports the principles of the Democratic party, and fraternally he belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and to the Knights of Columbus.

HENRY W. NEWTON. A representative citizen of San Pedro is found in Henry W. Newton, accountant for the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California, and while he has been a resident of this city a comparatively short time he has won the highest esteem of the community by his upright business methods and general integrity of character. He was born July 31, 1862, in Williamsburg, Ind., the son of Rev. George and Laura (Smith) Newton, both natives of New York. The father was born in Syracuse and educated for the ministry and settled in Indiana, where he became pastor of churches of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. In 1869 he came to California, locating in Sacramento, later removed to San Francisco and Oakland, and then took up evangelistic work. He is now retired from active service and with Mrs. Newton resides in Alameda. There were two children in their family, Henry G. being the only son.

From the age of seven years Mr. Newton was reared in California, receiving his education first in the public schools, later at the high school in Alameda, and finally entered the University of the Pacific, from which institution he graduated in 1881, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Science. After the completion of his studies he immediately entered commercial life, beginning at the bottom of the ladder and rapidly working his way up. His first position was in Mendocino county and from there he went to San Francisco, where he became foreman and superintendent. In 1894 he accepted a position with the Lumber Surveyor's Association as accountant, retaining it until 1903, when he came to San Pedro and instituted his present office, and taking charge of the accounts of the Lumber Surveyors' Association of Southern California. His marriage in Mendocino county united him with Miss Emily Lyman, born in Washington and reared in San Francisco, and this union has been blessed by the birth of two children, namely, Arthur H. and Merle. Fraternally Mr. Newton is a member of the Hoo Hoo lodge and the Woodmen of the World, while politically his beliefs are centered in Republican principles when applied to national affairs, maintaining considerable independence in the casting of his ballot on local issues. In addition to his other property interests Mr. Newton owns a nice residence in Alameda.

WILLIAM M. ROBERTS. A native Californian, born in San Bernardino April 25, 1858, a son of one of the most prominent pioneers of this section, Bearry Roberts, whose biography is given at length elsewhere in this volume. He was reared on Mill creek and educated in the San Timoteo canon district school, after which, at the age of eighteen years, he became dependent upon his own resources. He entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as trackwalker at Beaumont, and after two years became connected with Brown & Judson in the construction of the first ditch for Redlands, now known as the Redlands Water Ditch, and also superintended the construction of the reservoir at the mouth of the Yucaipe. Having made $1,200 he purchased an outfit consisting of an eight horse team and two wagons, and began freighting on the desert and continued this work for the period of two years, when he built the old rock ditch from Crafton reservoir through M. H. Craft's ranch. In 1885 he homesteaded a ranch of one hundred and sixty acres at the mouth of Mill creek, and at once began its improvement. When he sold the property in 1907 he had thirty-five acres in orchard, the balance being devoted to alfalfa and general ranching pursuits. He owns business and residence property in Redlands, where he expects to make his home in future.

At the age of eighteen years Mr. Roberts married Miss Kate F. Hamner, who was born in Mexico in 1876, and her death occurred in Redlands. He later married Mrs. Pearl Agnes (Davis) Davidson, a native of Howell, Mich., and a daughter of Albert Davis, a blacksmith who located in Michigan from Ontario, his birthplace. Her mother was in maidenhood Jennie Bailey, who died in Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts have one daughter, Agnes. Mr. Roberts has served as trustee of the Greenleaf school district for many years, officiating as clerk for a large part of the time, he himself having been one of the organizers of this district. Politically he reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man he considers best qualified for official position.

CHARLES G. SUNDERMANN. Throughout the period of his residence in California, covering many years of activity and enterprise, Mr. Sundermann has engaged in the building business, with which he became familiar during his boyhood days at the old Indiana homestead and in which he had the advantage of careful training under the supervision of his father, himself a practical builder. The family is of German ancestry. The American founder, Benjamin Sundermann, was a native of Hanover, received a fair education in German schools, and afterward learned the trade of a cabinet maker under an apprenticeship in his native land. On coming to the United States he settled in Indiana and engaged at his trade, from which he gradually drifted into taking contracts for the erection of houses and public buildings. During the Civil war he enlisted in an Indiana regiment, with which he marched to the front, participated in various engagements of an important nature, and served until the close of the war, being then honorably discharged. On his return to pursuits of peace he engaged at building, but later removed to a farm near Lynnville, Warrick county, Ind., where he still makes his home.

The marriage of Benjamin Sundermann united him with Miss Mary Weideman, who was born in Baden, Germany, and who also still survives. They were the parents of eight children, all but two of whom are now living, Charles G. being next to the oldest and the only one in California. Born at Evansville, Ind., on the 22d of February, 1859, he attended district and private schools, and secured an excellent education, which has been supplemented by subsequent reading and habits of close observation. While at home he gained a practical knowledge of farming and the carpenter's trade, and when in 1883 he came to Southern California he decided to engage in carpentering at Santa Ana. For some years he remained in that town and meanwhile was busily employed at his trade by the day. During the year 1889 he removed to Wilmington and began to take contracts for the erection of buildings, having previously shown his skill and ability as a carpenter and his reliability as a business man.

The year 1900 found Mr. Sundermann a resident of Oxnard, where he has since established a reputation for workmanship along the line of his specialty. Since coming to Oxnard he has erected five houses for himself in different parts of the town, and has proved himself solicitous to promote the material development of the place by the erection of neat cottages and attractive residences. In fraternal relations he is identified with the Oxnard Lodge of Odd Fellows, Olive Camp at Ventura, Modern Woodmen of America, and Hermann Sons, in which last-named order he has officiated as vice-president.

FREDERICK JEPSON, of Santa Monica, was born in Hoyer, Germany, where he received a practical common school education. Going then to Hamburg, he was for ten years an employe of the wholesale firm of Emil Scholtz, serving first as a clerk and then as bookkeeper.

Immigrating to the United States in 1881, Mr. Jepson remained in New York City for about six months, afterward going to Chicago, Ill., where he established himself as a grocer, remaining there two years. Returning to New York, he continued in mercantile pursuits for a few months, and then, in 1886, located at Yonkers, N. Y., where he achieved marked success as a dealer in real estate. He acquired much property of value in that place, and at the corner of Park Hill avenue and Linden street built a handsome row of buildings. The climate being too severe for him in that latitude he sold all of his holdings in that vicinity in January, 1903, and came to the Pacific coast in search of a more healthful place of residence. In March, 1903, he located in Santa Monica, and invested largely in real estate, much of which he has since sold at an advantageous price. He has also dealt in realty in other places in this county, meeting with success almost invariably in his transactions. In New York City, in 1882, Mr. Jepson married Eliza Hanson. Politically he is a steadfast Republican.

A. A. STEWART. A man of enterprise, industry and ability, persevering and progressive, A. A. Stewart has paddled his own canoe since a lad in his teens, and in his active career has met with well-deserved success, as an accurate and able tallyman being prominently connected with the lumber industry of San Pedro. A. A. Stewart, a native of San Bernardino county, Cal., he was born November 23, 1864, being the tenth child in a family of eleven children born to A. J. and Mary (Judd) Stewart. His father is deceased, but his mother is living in San Pedro.

Brought up in Orange county, A. A. Stewart was educated in the public schools of Anaheim. At the age of thirteen years he began to be self-supporting; he was subsequently graduated from the Brigham Young Academy, in Provo, Utah. Having previously learned telegraphy with his brother, B. F. Stewart, of San Luis Obispo, Mr. Stewart obtained a position with the Santa Fe Railroad Company in 1878, and was afterwards station agent at different places along the line between San Diego and Barstow. Retiring from that occupation, he was for awhile engaged in celery growing at Santa Ana, subsequently becoming tallyman for the Newport Lumber Company of that city. Since taking up his residence in San Pedro, in 1900, Mr. Stewart has carried on an excellent business as tallyman, and has been an active member of the Lumber Surveyor's Association of Southern California.

Politically Mr. Stewart is a Socialist, and fraternally he is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men, and of the Eagles.

W. A. HUGHES. One of the old-time ranchers now living in the vicinity of Camarillo, Ventura county, is W. A. Hughes, whose well-cultivated ranch of one hundred and seventy-one acres is one of the land-marks of the locality, born in Washington county, Pa., October 1, 1837, his parents being George and Nancy (McCullough) Hughes, both also natives of Pennsylvania. About 1846 they settled with their family on a farm in Adams county, Ill., but a later removal took them to Hancock county, in the same state, and it was on their farm in the latter county that the parents both died, the father in 1855, when fifty-six years old, and the mother eight years later, when in her sixty-sixth year.

As he was only nine years of age at the time the family settled in Illinois W. A. Hughes was educated principally in the common schools of Adams and Hancock counties, that state. Not altogether satisfied with his prospects for rapid advancement in the middle west, however, after careful consideration he decided to sell his farm in Illinois and locate in the far west. Suiting the action to the word, in 1864 we find him a member of a party crossing the plains by teams, the journey consuming seven months. The lady who later became the wife of Mr. Hughes was also a member of the same party. Their marriage occurred in 1865 in Sutter county, where Mr. Hughes first located after coming to the west. He later went to Marysville, Yuba county, still later to Red Bluff, Tehama county, but when he had been in the state about a year he selected Ventura county as his future place of residence, and the choice of location which he then made he has had no cause to regret judging from the thrifty appearance of his property and also from the fact that since his first purchase he has added adjoining land. Taking up one hundred and twenty-one acres from the government in 1868 he at once set about its cultivation. The raising of beans seems to be especially adapted to the soil and climate of this locality, and to such an extent was Mr. Hughes prospered in his efforts that he purchased fifty acres adjoining his first purchase and planted the entire acreage to the latter commodity. His harvests are very satisfactory, averaging fifteen sacks to the acre.

Mr. Hughes was married in 1865, to Mary B. Barnett, a native of Illinois. Mrs. Hughes is a daughter of Adrian Barnett, who was born in Kentucky and came to California in 1873, dying here in 1881, when sixty-two years of age. Four of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Barnett are living in California, the death of the mother occurring in 1854, when Mrs. Hughes was a child of six years. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hughes. Mrs. Hughes is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Politically Mr. Hughes is a Democrat.

ROBERT NEWTON JEFFERY, of Ocean Park, was born, August 7, 1846, in Lisbon, Wis., a son of William Jeffery. The latter, a native of England, remained in his native land until after his marriage with Mary Wimset. Emigrating to the United States with his family, he took up land in Wisconsin, becoming a pioneer settler of Waukesha county. He carried on farming there until his death, at the advanced age of eighty-five years. He was a man of deep religious convictions, being a devoted Wesleyan Methodist. His wife preceded him to the better world, passing away at the age of seventy-six years. Of their large family of seventeen children, eleven grew to years of maturity, Robert Newton being the youngest child.

Acquiring a practical common school education in his native town, Robert N. Jeffery remained at home assisting his father in the care of the farm until twenty years old. Locating then at Menomonee Falls, Waukesha county, Wis., he was there engaged in business as a merchant for about ten years, and in addition taught music and worked as an evangelist. Going then to Onaga, Pottawatomie county, Kans., he was there engaged in the hardware business with a brother-in-law for four years, at the same time continuing as a music teacher. Coming to California in 1884, Mr. Jeffery located in San Diego and during the memorable boom that followed made a fortune, which he lost in the subsequent collapse. He remained there, however, for ten years, being employed the greater part of the time as a real estate agent. Locating in Los Angeles in 1893, he did noted work in that city as a singer and evangelist, during the winter of 1905 assisting Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, of New York, the celebrated revivalist, and afterwards, under Mr. Chapman's supervision, going to Oregon as an evangelist. Returning the ensuing summer to Los Angeles, Mr. Jeffery came from there to Ocean Park in August, 1905, and has since been actively engaged in the real estate business with Mr. Buley, having an office at No. 103 Ocean Front.

In Wisconsin Mr. Jeffery married Sarah M. Thomas, and of the four children born of their union but one is living, Elmore R. Jeffery, an architect of Los Angeles. Mr. Jeffery is a member of the Presbyterian Church, is a stanch Prohibitionist, and fraternally is a member of the Masonic order.

JERRY T. LEFTWICH. Very early in the colonial history of our country the Leftwich family became established in the south, having crossed the ocean from Germany. Breckinridge county, Ky., became the home of one branch of the family, and there Camillus Leftwich was born in 1820. At the age of seventeen proceeded to the then frontier regions of Iowa, securing employment as a farm laborer in Lee county. In 1845 he went to the present site of the city of Des Moines and three miles away, at Rising Sun, secured a tract of government land which he entered and settled. Stock-raising was his specialty and of it he made a success. He was an honored pioneer. Interested in politics, he was elected to various local offices on the Republican ticket and maintained an active part in affairs for the upbuilding of his community. From early life he was identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church and in that faith died in 1897, at seventy-eight years of age.

The marriage of Camillus Leftwich united him with Elizabeth Ogelvie, who was born in Indiana, but from childhood made her home in Lee county, Iowa. Like her husband, she was a sincere member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. At the age of sixty-five years she passed away October 23, 1891. Among her seven children there was a son, Jerry T., born near Des Moines, Iowa, April 29, 1866, and reared on the home farm. He completed the studies of the public schools and took a course of study in the Iowa Business College at Des Moines. At twenty years of age he came to California and settled in Pasadena, where he carried on a real estate business for one year. During March of 1888 he came to Inglewood, where his son was the first child born in the town and where now he is the oldest surviving settler, excepting two others. For two years he carried on a meat market and for five years engaged in ranching two miles from town; later selling his farm he returned to the town. Included in his property holdings are three acres in Inglewood, with a very attractive residence, and also another house and lot and a number of vacant lots, besides a lot in Pasadena.

After settling in Inglewood Mr. Leftwich returned to Iowa and at Altoona, October 5, 1888, was united in marriage with Miss Mary S. West, who was born there October 12, 1869, and graduated at Drake University at Des Moines. Three children were born of their union, Harry W., Anita L. and Lola K. The wife and mother died May 11, 1904. In fraternal relations Mr. Leftwich holds membership with the blue lodge of Masonry at Redondo, the Order of the Eastern Star, Royal Arcanum and Independent Order of Foresters. Stanch in his allegiance to the Republican party, he has been a leading local worker in its ranks and since 1893 a delegate to all county conventions of the party. For five years he served as deputy assessor of a district eighteen miles square comprising eleven school districts, and since 1901 he has held office as road commissioner of a district about eight miles square, a position of manifold responsibilities.

ANTON LUTHERER was born in Germany, June 8, 1864, and is a son of natives of the Fatherland. He attended the school and gymnasium, and at the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to learn a trade, thus complying with the requirements of the law which makes it obligatory upon all boys of that age to prepare themselves for a life occupation. Not wishing to go into military service, he came to America, landing in February, 1884.

Mr. Lutherer came to the United States with plans well laid as to the location in which he wished to settle, and without loss of any time in the east he made his way across the country to the extreme west, locating in San Francisco. Being unfamiliar with the language and customs, he found himself in a city vastly different from his home town; but he was young and hopeful, and no matter how depressing the situation in which he found himself, he still saw the bright side of it and made the most of his opportunities. His first employment was driving a delivery wagon, following this occupation until removing to San Diego. From the latter city he came to Los Angeles county in 1898, and the same year purchased the ranch which he now owns and occupies, sixteen miles northwest of Santa Monica. Besides the three hundred and twenty acres comprising his ranch he rents one hundred and sixty acres adjoining, and also cultivates a ranch of the same size situated in the mountains and one mile from the home ranch, the latter being the property of his wife. As much of the land is on the mountain sides, it is not as well adapted to the raising of general farm produce as it is to dairy purposes, and it is the latter industry combined with the raising of bees, that forms Mr. Lutherer's chief source of income. His marriage united him with Mrs. Rosie Harding. In his political belief Mr. Lutherer is free from party ties and invariably casts his ballot for the candidate he believes best qualified for the office in question, regardless of party ties.

PROF. WILLIAM MALCOLM, of Tropico, holds a noteworthy position among the leading educators of this section of Los Angeles county. He was born May 5, 1858, in Chicago, Ill., where he lived until about four years of age. Coming with his parents to California in 1862, he received his rudimentary education in San Jose, and after his graduation from the high school entered Florence College, now called the Sacred Heart College, in Hollister, where he received the degree of B. S. He subsequently remained in Hollister for a few years, keeping books for his father, who was there engaged in business as a general merchant. Beginning his professional career in 1880, he taught school for a year in Bear Valley, the ensuing three years teaching in Fresno county, in Lake district, the largest outlying district in the county. Returning then to Hollister, he remained there as a teacher for two years, the following year having charge of the Kingsburg school, near Fresno. Accepting then a position in Los Angeles county, he served as principal of the school in Compton for three years, giving good satisfaction, and in Clearwater for two years, where he was equally successful. Going then to Monterey county, he was principal of the public school at Pajaro for four years, after which he had charge for a time of the Watsonville grammar school, with seventeen teachers under him.

Giving up teaching then, he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, W. B. Cooper, and for eight years was associated with him in the stationery business. At the end of two years, however, leaving the management of the business to his partner, Professor Malcolm accepted the principalship of the Soledad school, and was elected a member of the local board of education. At the end of four years, on account of the ill health of his daughter, he was compelled to seek a warmer climate, and came to Los Angeles county, locating here in 1901. Being offered the principalship of the Tropico school, he accepted it, and served with such ability and satisfaction that at the close of the year he was made supervising principal. In this capacity he superintended the construction and equipment of the new school building, erected in 1905.

In Watsonville, Professor Malcolm married Florence Cooper, daughter of Mrs. Eliza Cooper, formerly a well-known resident of that city, and they are the parents of two children, Madeline and William Fahrion. Professor and Mrs. Malcolm are active and valued members of the Presbyterian Church, and politically he is a Republican. He is a member and secretary of Unity Lodge, F. & A. M., of Glendale; past grand of Apollo Lodge No. 90, I. O. O. F., of Watsonville; past chief of Watsonville Encampment, I. O. O. F.; and is a member and past council commander of Camp No. 82, W. O. W.

MRS. ALICE MAYS. Prominent among those identified with the progress and development of Southern California is Mrs. Alice Mays, who, since February, 1900, has been a resident of Los Angeles county, and for over three years has been actively identified with real estate operations in Ocean Park, where she has met with unusual success in the management of her business and acquired a place of importance in public affairs.

Mrs. Mays is a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, her father being John Nugent, a prosperous merchant of that city, where she received a preliminary education, which was completed in the Sacred Heart Convent, in St. Louis, Mo. In young womanhood she met and married A. C. Mays, of Ironton, Ohio, who had located in Portsmouth, same state, and was there engaged as an attorney-at-law; they continued to make that city their home until the death of Mr. Mays, which occurred in 1876 at the early age of twenty-four years. He was a man of brilliant promise and unusual ability in his chosen profession, with a winning personality and forceful and upright manhood. His untimely death was the cause of regret. Mr. and Mrs. Mays were the parents of one son, James W., who graduated from the Ohio State University in the class of 1897, and immediately entered upon the practice of law, which he had chosen for his lifework. He married Miss Bessie Ball, daughter of Dr. Ball, of Ironton, and the representative of a prominent Ohio family, and with his wife and mother came to Los Angeles in 1900, where he is now engaged in the practice of his profession with offices in the H. W. Hellman building.

In December, 1903, Mrs. Mays became identified with real estate operations in Ocean Park. She opened an office at No. 49 Ocean Front, later removing to No. 83 Ocean Front, and finally locating at No. 91½ Ocean Front, where she is at present carrying on an extensive business in a quiet, conservative way; investing but little for speculation, either for herself or friends, believing rather in the more stable manner of advancing the country's interests. Mrs. Mays enjoys a widespread respect among business men for her thorough knowledge of business affairs, her clean, concise methods as a dealer, her straightforward honor and integrity. Socially she holds a place among the best people of Ocean Park and its vicinity.

C. B. MESKIMONS. Closely associated with many of the leading interests of this section of San Diego county is C. B. Meskimons, a well-educated, talented and progressive young man, whose influence for good is felt in the upbuilding and advancement of Rainbow and vicinity. A son of James M. Meskimons, he was born, March 15, 1880, in Lyon county, Kans., very near the city of Emporia.

Born, reared and educated in Ohio, James M. Meskimons migrated to Iowa when young, and on the breaking out of the Civil war enlisted in defense of his country's honor in Company I, Fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, in which he served for three years and three months, taking part in the Battle of Lookout Mountain and the Siege of Vicksburg, and being wounded in the Battle of Iuka. Subsequently settling in Kansas, he resided in Lyon county until 1890, when he came with his family to California, where he has since resided the greater part of the time, his home now being in Fallbrook. He is a man of prominence in social circles, belonging to Fallbrook Post, G. A. R.; to the Free and Accepted Order of Masons; and to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Religiously he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Sarah Blue, who was born in Indiana, and they are the parents of five children.

Coming with his parents to Southern California when a lad, C. B. Meskimons received his elementary education in the Redlands schools, after which he was graduated from the high school in Phoenix, Ariz. Since reaching manhood, he has been actively engaged in general ranching, devoting his one hundred and seventy acres of land, located near Rainbow, to the raising of fruit, grain, alfalfa and live stock in his operations meeting with a fair share of success. For the past two years Mr. Meskimons has been studying the science of dentistry.

In 1901 Mr. Meskimons married a Miss Martin, a native of Kansas, and into their home two children have been born. In his political affiliations Mr. Meskimons is a Republican, and is now a member of the Fallbrook High School Board. Religiously he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

REMI NADEAU of Los Angeles county was born in Grove Lake, Minn., May 3, 1867, a son of Joseph F. and Mary A. (Williams) Nadeau, the father a native of Canada and the mother of Wisconsin. Joseph A. Nadeau located in Minnesota in young manhood, and during the Civil war participated in the cause of the Union in a regiment of that state. He married in Minnesota and in 1867 brought his family to California, locating in Los Angeles. Later they went to Washington and Oregon for a period of five years, after which they came back to Los Angeles and in the vicinity of Florence, Los Angeles county, Mr. Nadeau engaged extensively in ranching. He raised large crops of grain which he harvested and threshed himself, being interested in a threshing machine which was one of the first to be operated in the county. He also carried on at one time a large vineyard with gratifying success. Desiring to spend some time in various parts of the state he lived in San Diego, later in Seattle, Wash., for about six years, and also made two trips to Alaska on a prospecting tour. He finally returned to Los Angeles county and located permanently in Long Beach, where he is now residing and although he has attained an age that entitles him to relaxation from business cares he is actively interested in real estate operations in that city and equally successful as he has been in all business affairs. His wife died at Florence at the age of thirty-seven years.

Remi Nadeau, the second son in the family of his parents, received his education through the medium of the public schools, principally of Florence, supplementing this foundation and his excellent home-training along business lines by a thorough commercial course in the Los Angeles Business College. After his school-days were over he established himself in ranching pursuits, remaining so occupied for a short time, when he came to Los Angeles and engaged in a mercantile career. He opened a retail furniture store at No. 310 South Main street and successfully conducted the enterprise for five years, when he sold out and followed contracting and building for a lengthy period, putting up a large number of store buildings, rooming houses and private dwellings. He also engaged in the building business for himself, purchasing lots in various parts of the city and erecting fine houses, which he sold later. Characteristic of the ability of this family, he accumulated the means to launch him independently in any business venture and although his time is now given to other matters he still retains an interest in building operations in Florence. He is now engaged in real estate operations, having recently sub-divided a tract of fifteen acres known as the Remi Nadeau tract, and in which enterprise he was unusually successful. He is now the owner of a tract of twelve and a half acres which is being subdivided and known as the Walter A. Nadeau tract. On both tracts it is the plan of the owner to erect homes to suit purchasers of lots, which plan is working well in the development of the property.

HUGH M. NICHOLS. In the development of the extensive lumber trade of Southern California, Hugh M. Nichols, associated with the Consolidated Lumber Company of Ocean Park, has taken an active and prominent part. A native of Osage county, Iowa, he was born June 9, 1876, a son of Dr. Elmer Nichols. His grandfather, John Nichols, a life-long resident of New Hampshire, was of substantial New England descent, tracing his ancestry in a direct line back to the time of the Pilgrim fathers, when three brothers named Nichols emigrated from Wales to America, one settling in Rhode Island, one in Massachusetts, and one, the founder of his branch of the family, locating in the Green Mountain state.

Elmer Nichols was born and reared in New Hampshire. Studying medicine when a young man, he subsequently located in Osage, Iowa, where he was engaged as a physician until his death, while yet in manhood's prime. He married Nannie Camelia Wright, who was born in Kentucky, coming from distinguished Southern stock. She survived him, and subsequently married his brother, Dr. Horace Nichols, also a physician of prominence in Iowa. Both

Dr. Elmer Nichols and Dr. Horace Nichols were men of influence and public spirit, inheriting many of the patriotic virtues of their paternal grandfather, who served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war.

Educated in his native town, Hugh M. Nichols was graduated from the Osage high school, and from the commercial department of the Osage Academy, receiving his diploma from the latter institution in 1897. Continuing his residence in Osage for a few years, he was first in the employ of the United States postal service, and afterwards was with James A. Smith, a dealer in lumber and coal. Coming to California in July, 1901, he was associated with the Southern California Lumber Company for a few weeks, when, on September 2, 1901, he began working for Nofziger Brothers Lumber Company, continuing with that firm as manager of the Glendora Lumber Company until October, 1904. Going then to Long Beach, Mr. Nichols was there manager of the yards of the Southern California Lumber Company until June 1, 1905, when he became traveling auditor and superintendent of the yards of the Consolidated Lumber Company. October 1, 1905, this company purchased the D. I. Nofziger Lumber yards at Ocean Park, where Mr. Nichols has since been located.

In Iowa Mr. Nichols married Daisy Tupper, a daughter of A. C. Tupper, a prominent citizen of Osage, Iowa, and a leading politician, and they have one child, Richard Tupper Nichols. Politically Mr. Nichols is a steadfast Republican, and fraternally he is a member of Pomona Lodge, B. P. O. E.

JULES SAULQUE, a successful farmer, is actively identified with the advancement of the agricultural prosperity of Los Angeles county, his ranch, located in Hyde Park, being highly improved, and with its appointments and equipments giving visible evidence of his energy, enterprise and good business management. He is a man of strict integrity, high moral character, and is highly respected throughout the community. A son of Joseph Saulque, he was born in France in 1850, and there reared and educated.

A life-long resident of France, Joseph Saulque was prominent and influential, for twenty years serving as mayor of his home town, holding the office from the time of his first election until his death, in 1876. His wife, whose maiden name was Julia Barnard, died in 1866, a comparatively young woman. Of their family of nine children, five boys and four girls, eight are living and all of the sons came to America, but three returned to France, Jules, the subject of this sketch, and his brother, August, are the only ones now in America.

After becoming of age, Jules Saulque emigrated to the United States in 1872, coming directly to California. Staying a few days in San Francisco, he went to Los Angeles, but finding no congenial employment in that city removed to Bakersfield, where with his brother August, he took up sheep raising. Returning to Los Angeles in 1875, Mr. Saulque was employed in the livery business for a year. In 1876, he again embarked in sheep raising, and for eight years carried on a good business. Mr. Saulque owns a ranch, in Hyde Park, and has since carried on general farming most successfully. Having passed the prime of life, he feels that he is entitled to some years of leisure, and has recently given up the care of his estate to his son Edmond, who is managing it successfully, being well versed in the art and science of agriculture.

In Los Angeles, in 1882, Mr. Saulque married Honoria Hobert, a native of France, and they have the following children: Edmond, Rosa, Lucien, Helen, Theresa, and May. Politically Mr. Saulque is a stanch Republican, and religiously he belongs to the Congregational Church.

J. M. HUGHES. The younger generation of the Santa Maria valley have an excellent representative in J. M. Hughes, who in addition to cultivating two hundred acres of land, does a thriving business with his threshing outfit, which is in great demand throughout the valley. Mr. Hughes is the owner of forty acres; he also rents a quarter section of adjoining land, and thus has two hundred acres under his control. He pays some attention to the raising of fruit, having about twenty-five acres in apricots alone, and averages about six tons of dried fruit each season. The remainder of the land is given over entirely to the raising of beans, this crop averaging about nine sacks to the acre.

A native of Kansas, J. M. Hughes was born in Pottawatomie county May 16, 1876, one of eight children born to his parents, George and Rachael (Guthrie) Hughes, born in North Carolina and Missouri respectively. Their marriage occurred in Missouri, where the father carried on farming for some years prior to his removal to Kansas. Each removal brought him a step nearer the Pacific coast, and the year 1896 witnessed his arrival in California. The fact that he has remained in his first location is the best possible evidence of his satisfaction with the Santa Maria valley as a place of residence. Of their eight children three are deceased, and all of the five living are sons. A Republican in his political opinions, Mr. Hughes is identified with the Foresters and Modern Woodmen of America, affiliating with the lodges in his home city, Santa Maria.

Until twenty years of age J. M. Hughes made his home with his parents on the Pottawatomie county homestead, and in 1896 accompanied the family to the Pacific coast. Remaining with his parents for three years on the home place in Santa Barbara county, he then, in 1899, formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Althea A. McHenry, like himself a native of Kansas, and a daughter of Daniel McHenry. Two children have been born of this marriage, Gladys and Inez. Following closely in his father's inclinations both in political and fraternal matters, Mr. Hughes is a Republican and belongs to the Foresters and Modern Woodmen of America. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon Mr. Hughes for the progress which he has made in his chosen work, the fact that he is in constant demand demonstrating better than can mere words his thoroughgoing and dependable nature. Throughout the county he bears a commendable reputation for probity and honesty, and all speak of him in the highest terms.

L. E. HOFFMAN, a well-known business man of Oceanpark, is intimately associated with its real estate interests, as a member of the Crescent Bay Realty Company being actively engaged in the sale and transfer of city and town property. A son of Fred Hoffman, he was born at Macomb, Ill., and was there reared and educated.

Being distinguished as the longest-established saddler and harness maker in Illinois, Fred Hoffman is still carrying on the business which he started at Macomb so many years ago, and in which he has been successfully employed for nearly half a century. His wife, whose maiden name was Malvina Cannon, was the first white child born at Macomb. She is still living, and of the ten children that she bore her husband nine survive, L. E. being the subject of this sketch. Her oldest son, Henry Hoffman, a resident of St. Louis, Mo., has the distinction of being the only man in the United States who received the nomination for the presidency on the Henry George ticket.

Under the instruction of his father, L. E. Hoffman learned the trade of a harness maker, as did seven of his eight brothers, but as a young man did not follow it very long. Going then to Quincy, Ill., a prominent shipping point, he entered the wholesale house of J. B. Schott, with whom he served as clerk for a time. Afterwards, as commercial salesman for George Blackman & Co., of St. Louis, Mo., he traveled extensively for three years through the states of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, and Iowa, meeting with good success. Subsequently he visited New Mexico and the west, finally settling at Flagstaff, Ariz., where he embarked in business as a harness maker and saddler, taking up the trade which he had learned as a youth in his father's shop.

Coming to California in the fall of 1893, on account of his wife's health, Mr. Hoffman began life as a ranchman among the mountain springs of Kern county. During the mining excitement that followed he went into the deserts at Randsburg, and for a time carried on an exceedingly prosperous business as a harness maker, a dealer in real estate, and as district recorder. When the boom broke, however, he was poorer by $6,000, and with but $6.75 in his pockets went to Ventura county, where, in Oxnard, he again started in business as a manufacturer of leather goods. From there, in January, 1905, he came to Ocean Park, and in company with Jesse B. Green began operating in realty in this section of the county. Succeeding well in his financial transactions, a third partner was added to the firm, C. W. Averill, and these gentlemen, under the name of the Cresent Bay Realty Company, are carrying on a substantial real estate business, with offices at No. 159 Pier avenue.

In 1889, at Flagstaff, Ariz., Mr. Hoffman married Ida Fay, and four years later, on account of the ill health of his wife, came with her to the milder and more invigorating climate of Southern California. Politically Mr. Hoffman is a Socialist, and fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and of the Fraternal Aid.

EDWARD NATHAN HARRISON, of Fallbrook, is a representative of the successful agriculturists. Since coming to Southern California, he has witnessed many important changes throughout this locality, and has contributed his full share toward advancing its growth and prosperity. A son of Nathan Harrison, he was born, July 12, 1856, in Iroquois county, Ill., and there was brought up and educated.

Born in England, Nathan Harrison came with his parents to America when nine years of age, settling in Canada, where he grew to man's estate. Removing to Illinois when a young man, he bought land in Iroquois county, and was there actively employed in farming and business pursuits until his death, at the age of fifty-six years. He married Ellen Burt, who was born in Ohio, and died, at the age of four score and four years. She was a consistent christian, and a valued member of the Baptist Church. She bore her husband six children, five of whom are living.

In 1874, before reaching his majority, Edward N. Harrison came to California, seeking in this sunny climate a favorable location. Establishing a bee ranch in San Diego county, he lived there about a year, and then transferred his residence and his occupation to Bear Valley, where he was employed in bee raising and general farming for about six years. In 1883 Mr. Harrison bought a claim to one hundred and sixty acres of Government land, and with the exception of two years that he spent in Los Angeles as proprietor of a lodging house, he has since resided here. In his agricultural labors he has met with genuine success, and is now the owner of a finely cultivated ranch of three hundred and twenty acres, on which he has made substantial and valuable improvements.

In 1888 Mr. Harrison married Elizabeth Vincent, who was born in Nantucket, Mass., coming from thrifty colonial ancestry, and into their home three children have been born, namely: Blanche, Howard, and Ruth. Politically Mr. Harrison is an independent voter in local affairs, but in national movements supports the principles endorsed by the Republican party. Socially he is a member of Los Angeles Lodge, No. 9, Fraternal Brotherhood. He is a member of the Christian Church, and Mrs. Harrison belongs to the Unitarian Church.

J. W. HANSARD. The exact duration of the sojourn of the Hansard family in America is not known, but the records show that they were residents of the south at an early period of our national existence. Among their number was a farmer, C. B. Hansard, who was born and reared in Tennessee and there married Hannah Ailor, also a native of that state. Both were sincere members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and reared their children in that faith. In politics he was a stanch Democrat and received from his party the office of sheriff of his home county in Tennessee. During early life he followed teaching and for seven years had charge of the same school. Accompanied by his family he removed to Missouri, where he lost his wife by death. Eventually he came to the coast and died in California. Of his nine children there now survive J. W., of Long Beach, Cal., a daughter in Northern California and another in Tennessee.

During the residence of the family in East Tennessee J. W. Hansard was born November 14, 1840, and from there he removed to Missouri at fourteen years of age. Deprived of educational advantages, he was obliged to support himself from an early age and became a laborer on farms. By frugal saving of his wages he was eventually able to purchase a farm of one hundred and sixty acres, but four years after settling on that place he sold out and in 1865 came to California, where he has been variously occupied in different localities. For three years he conducted a livery, sales and feed stable at Grass Valley, Nevada county. In 1868 he became interested in ranching near Marysville, Yuba county, and from there in 1874 removed to Downey and for six years operated a rented ranch. For twelve years he made his home in Orange county and during that period rendered efficient service for a long period as a member of the board of trustees. For a year he carried on a hotel in Downey and for four years operated a ranch which he had purchased in the suburbs of the same town. In 1903 he opened the Downey livery and feed stable. Among his recollections of earlier years is that of assisting in the capture of the noted Vasquez and his gang, whose depredations had terrorized certain sections of the state. Always interested in questions affecting the national prosperity, he is well posted concerning party issues and gives his support to the Democratic party. In 1874 he married Miss Hester Taylor, who was born in Missouri, and at the age of two years was brought to California by her father, James Taylor, a native of Tennessee and a descendant of old southern ancestry. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Hansard is a son, William, who married Gertrude Davis and has two children.

WILLIAM SHUTT. A native of Indiana, William Shutt was born March 16, 1849, in Huntington county, a son of Henry and Sophia (Geething) Shutt. His parents were both born in Maryland, of German stock, and settled in Huntington county, Ind., in 1848, as tillers of the soil.

Educated in the common schools of his native county, William Shutt subsequently chose the independent occupation to which he was reared, and during his early manhood was considered one of the model farmers of his vicinity. Going westward in 1876, he lived in Kansas for ten years, following farming first in Allen county, and then in Neosha county. Through drought and other causes he lost much of the money that he invested, and in 1886, when the rush of tourists and prospectors was at its height, he came to the Pacific coast in search of a favorable location. Applying for a position at the University of California, at Berkeley, he became identified with the Southern California Experimental Station at Pomona, where he remained as an employe for eight years. Becoming an expert horticulturist while there, he then assumed the position of foreman at the Rustic, or Santa Monica, Experimental Station, of which he had sole charge five years. He became widely known for his work. When Abbot Kinney was in search of a capable man to take charge of the planting of trees, flowers and shrubs in famous Venice, he selected Mr. Shutt as the most competent person known, and under his supervision the artistic work has been most successfully and satisfactorily planned and executed, having been accomplished in the summer of 1905. Mr. Shutt is a real estate owner, having in San Diego county a valuable ranch of one hundred and thirty-six acres, on which he has fine improvements, including an excellent system of irrigation.

In Huntington county, Ind., Mr. Shutt married Lucinda B. Shanks, and they are the parents of five children, namely: Jennie M.; Ida, wife of William Hamlin, of British Columbia; Lorne P., an employe of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; Nathan E., attending the Leland Stanford University, being a member of the class of 1906; and Vincent, attending the high school. Fraternally Mr. Shutt is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

JAMES STEWART. A man who is well posted on the care and culture of oranges and is one of the most progressive growers of that fruit in Southern California is James Stewart who owns a ten acre ranch and also has under his charge one hundred and forty acres of oranges which are divided into ten-acre tracts. He was born June 30, 1866, in Canada, the son of Alexander Stewart who was born in Scotland, lived for a time in California during the later years of his life, but returned to Canada, where his death finally occurred. His mother is still living in Canada at the advanced age of seventy years. There were five children in the family of which James Stewart was a member, and two of his brothers are now residing in Riverside county.

His education was received in the common schools of Canada and after the completion of his school work he engaged in farming for a short time in that country. In his twenty-second year he came to the United States, lived in the northern part of the state of California for two years, and in 1887 came to San Bernardino county and located on his present place near Highgrove, and has lived here ever since. When he bought the ranch the orange trees were seven years old, so the trees are now in full bearing and yield him a very fine income. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters, and politically affiliates with the Socialist party, having advanced views on all social and civic subjects. He is an energetic and enterprising young man and has gained many friends in this section during his residence here.

SCHOLLE BROTHERS. Not far from the village of El Rio, Ventura county, lies the extensive ranch owned and managed by the Scholle brothers, thrifty German citizens, whose participation in agricultural affairs has been beneficial to the country in general by way of proving the possibilities of both soil and climate, but more particularly to the country round about El Rio, where their success has stimulated others to undertake similar efforts, and the raising of beans is now one of the most dependable sources of income in this part of the county.

Anton and Frances (Borchard) Scholle, both of whom were born in Germany, came to the United States in 1884, some time after the birth of their four children, and located on a small ranch in Ventura county, Cal. Here they rounded out their lives, the father passing away at the age of fifty-five, and the mother surviving until sixty years of age, both dying in the faith of the Roman Catholic Church.

The eldest of the brothers, John Scholle, was born in Germany September 23, 1860, and by the time he had reached his fifteenth year his school days were over and he had begun to learn a trade, in accordance with the laws of his native country. He became proficient as a brick mason, but did not reap much practical benefit from his years of training, for at the age of twenty-two years he came to the United States, where his efforts have always been along agricultural lines. Coming direct to Ventura county, he rented land for two years, but finally was enabled to become a land owner, purchasing two hundred and four acres of the land which he now owns in partnership with his brother.

Ignatz Scholle is also a native of the Fatherland, and was born September 30, 1869. When fourteen years of age, instead of remaining in his native land and learning a trade, he came to the United States and in Ventura county engaged in ranching, finally purchasing one hundred and two acres not far from the tract which his brother John had purchased a short time before. Later he purchased a tract of eighty-four acres. All of the land owned by the brothers, comprising about four hundred and fifty acres in the aggregate, is cultivated in partnership, and is devoted to the raising of beans exclusively, their crops averaging twenty sacks to the acre.

In 1898 Ignatz Scholle was united in marriage with Theresa Leidle, who was also a native of Germany, but has been a resident of California since a child of two years. Her father, Michael Leidle, is still living and makes his home on his ranch in Los Angeles county.

C. E. SMITH. In tracing the geneology of this retired business man of Downey it is learned that the branch of the family which he represents early settled in the south and for several generations remained along the Atlantic coast below Mason's and Dixon's line. Some time during early life his father, John W., left his native North Carolina and crossed the state line into Virginia, where he married Miss S. E. Leftwich, a native of the Old Dominion and a woman of mild and gentle character. Five sons and five daughters were born of their union, one of these being C. E., whose birth occurred in Bedford county, Va., November 20, 1836. When he was a child of seven years the father died, leaving the large family dependent upon the mother's efforts. About 1847 they loaded their effects in a wagon and traveled across the country to Missouri, where they took up land in Pettis county. The mother continued to reside in that state during the balance of her life and died in Boonville, where her body was laid to rest. In religion she was a sincere member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and reared her children in that faith. One of her sons came to California as early as 1850 and seven of the family are still living.

The children being orphaned at an early age, they were forced to earn their own livelihood and were deprived of the advantages they desired. From his earliest recollections the life of C. E. Smith was one of sturdy toil. Assuming responsibilities at an early age, he developed traits of self-reliance helpful to him in later days. The first work in which he engaged was that of freighting across the plains, which occupation was then of importance owing to the great flow of emigration westward. During 1857 he freighted to Salt Lake and from that time until 1860 he served as wagonmaster for a government train across the plains. At the opening of the Civil war he gave his sympathy and help toward the people among whom his life had been passed and enlisted in Company I, Wood's Battalion, Shelby's Brigade, Price's Division, C. S. A., with which he participated in the first battle at Wilson creek south of Springfield, Mo., and in the three days' siege at Lexington, Mo.

The war having ended, Mr. Smith took up farming pursuits in Missouri and continued in that state until 1875, when he disposed of his possessions there and removed to California. For the first four years he carried on a sheep business at Anaheim, but at the expiration of that time he sold his sheep and came to Downey, where for two years he engaged in general farming, buying his present property of seven acres and establishing his family thereon. For two years he carried on a livery business at Ontario, but then returned to Downey, where he conducted a mercantile store until his retirement from business in 1903. Though not prominent in politics nor solicitous of official positions, he has firm convictions upon political questions and supports Democratic principles. Fraternally he is connected with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, while in religious views he and his family for years have given their support to the Christian Church. While still living in Missouri he was united in marriage with Miss Bettie De Laney, a native of Ohio, and a daughter of Samuel De Laney, who came to California in 1850 and remained for a few years. After a long and happy married life Mr. Smith was bereaved by the death of his wife, who passed away in 1894 and was buried in the Downey cemetery. Four children survive her, namely: Carrie, who married Henry A. Scott, of Downey; Elma, who is a teacher of physical culture and elocution in Los Angeles; Leslie L. C., assistant secretary of state in Ohio; and Bettie E., wife of J. B. Cushon, a jeweler engaged in business in Martin, Tenn., Mr. and Mrs. Cushon being the parents of one child.

HON. EUGENE S. TOMBLIN. A man of untiring energy and great business ability, Hon. Eugene S. Tomblin is numbered among the citizens of prominence and influence in Ocean Park, which has been developed in a large measure through his forethought and sagacity. He is an extensive landholder in this section of Los Angeles county, and as head of the firm of Tomblin & Robinson, real estate dealers, is carrying on a substantial business. A son of Ira Tomblin, he was born in Albion, N. Y., of honored New England stock, Grandfather Tomblin having been born and reared in Vermont.

Having completed his studies in the public schools of Albion, Eugene S. Tomblin entered the classical department of the State Normal School at Brockport, N. Y., where he was graduated with the class of 1863. He was subsequently engaged in farming in his home town for about ten years, when, in 1873, he removed to Emerson, Mills county, Iowa, where he was successfully employed as a druggist for fourteen years. Selling out his property there early in 1887, he came to California, locating in March, of that year, in Tustin, Orange county, where he embarked in business as a fruit grower, having an orange grove of seventeen acres. Disposing of that ranch in 1890, he settled in Siskiyou county, where he assisted in organizing the Shasta County Mineral Spring Company, of which he was a director, and the manager for eight years. Under his able supervision, about $200,000 was wisely spent in building trails, cottages and hotels, and an enormous trade throughout Northern California was established.

Resigning his position as manager of the company, Mr. Tomblin established a branch office in Los Angeles in November, 1898, and in this part of the state developed a good business, which he sold out in 1903, at the same time disposing of his stock in the Shasta Mineral Springs Company. For the past four years he has been a resident of Ocean Park, and since March, 1903, has been actively identified with its real estate interests. He was instrumental in forming the East Ocean Park Land Company, of which he is now president, and which developed one hundred and thirty-six acres of land adjoining the city. In 1904 he formed a partnership with Mr. Robinson under the firm name of Tomblin & Robinson, having a real estate and rental office at No. 133 Pier avenue, and is carrying on an extensive and lucrative business. He has acquired large property interests in Ocean Park and vicinity, and also owns city property in Los Angeles, and farm lands in Tulare county.

In Chicago, Ill., Mr. Tomblin married Anna L. Shipman, who was born in Pennsylvania, the descendant of an old and honored family, and they are the parents of two children, Allan E. and Hazel A. Politically Mr. Tomblin is a Republican, and while a resident of Siskiyou county represented his district in the legislature. Fraternally he is a Mason and an Elk.

O. S. WALTER. From the time of his arrival in California in 1896 until his death in 1905, Mr. Walter was identified with the ranching interests of the vicinity of Ventura. He was born in Hastings, Oswego county, N. Y., November 24, 1843, his parents being Silas and Lucy (Laine) Walter, they, too, being natives of the Empire state.

After completing his studies in the common schools of Oswego county Mr. Walter became interested in agricultural affairs, first working on his father's farm, but later assuming the ownership and management of a farm of his own. For a time this satisfied his ambition, but like many others he fell a victim to the western fever, relief for which could not be found short of Wisconsin. From there he soon afterward removed to Minnesota, where he found opportunity of employment in several lines. Work at the cooper's trade gave him employment while he was in search of a suitable location to purchase a farm. This he found in Cass county, and in connection with it he ran a general merchandise store in Green Valley, in the same county. Coming to California in 1896 he came direct to Ventura county, his first work here being as a farm hand on the Sexton ranch. He subsequently purchased the ranch of sixteen and one-half acres not far from Ventura on which the remainder of his life was spent. This he planted to beans exclusively, though his acreage was not large its careful cultivation brought its yield to a point that would admit of its comparison with many ranches of twice the size.

During his young manhood Mr. Walter entered the service of his country, witnessing and participating in many of the hard-fought battles of the war, among them the first battle of Bull Run. He went to the front as a member of Company E, One Hundred and Tenth New York Volunteer Infantry, and received his honorable discharge after three years of faithful service. About this time, in 1865, he was united in marriage with Miss Mary F. Benton, born in New York, the daughter of Rev. R. Benton, a minister in the Methodist Episcopal denomination. Mrs. Walter's father and mother lived to reach the ages of seventy and seventy-two years, respectively, and of their ten children she is the only one now living. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Walter. During young manhood Mr. Walter joined the Odd Fellows, and during his residence in Minnesota was affiliated with the lodge of that order in Marshall. In memory of the days spent in his country's service he joined the Grand Army post in Ventura, around whose campfires he enjoyed meeting with comrades of long ago. He answered his last earthly roll-call November 22, 1905, leaving to mourn his death a devoted wife and five children, besides numerous friends, who had learned to love him for his kindly spirit and many charitable deeds. Mrs. Walter is a woman of many excellent qualities and shares the esteem in which her husband's memory is held. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

FREDERICK FLEISHMAN. Prominent among the early settlers of Valley Center was the late Frederick Fleishman, who was distinguished as a man of thrift and enterprise, and as an industrious and skilful agriculturist. Coming to this section of the county when it was in its infancy, he was an interested witness of the changes that took place in the subsequent quarter of a century, during which time he contributed his full share towards the upbuilding and growth of the community in which he lived. He was born in a foreign country, his birth having occurred, February 11, 1829, in Germany.

Emigrating with his parents to the United States when eleven years of age, Frederick Fleishman completed his early education in the common schools of Pennsylvania, where he lived four years. In 1843 he moved with the family to Burlington, Iowa. In 1854, joining a party about to start across the plains with ox-teams, he started westward, but after traveling with the little band for a few weeks left the majority of his companions, and, with blankets on his back, walked to Colfax, Placer county. He subsequently farmed for a short time in the Sacramento valley, after which he turned his attention to mining, first locating on the Feather river, and then in Trinity county, where he became owner of several mining claims. In November, 1875, desirous of settling permanently, Mr. Fleishman took up a government claim in San Diego county, began its improvement, and in 1876 was here joined by his wife and children. On April 6, 1892, he purchased the ranch now owned and occupied by his widow, and having added valuable improvements to its two hundred and forty acres of land was here profitably employed in general farming until his death. Inheriting to a marked degree those traits of economy, frugality and thrift characteristic of his ancestors, Mr. Fleishman achieved success in his independent calling, and as a man of unimpeachable honesty and integrity won the esteem and respect of the community, and held high rank among its representative German citizens.

In 1850 Mr. Fleishman married Rebecca Helmrick, who was born, November 15, 1835, in Ohio. She came to California by way of the Isthmus in 1860, joining her husband in Trinity county, where she resided for fifteen years. Of their union seven children were born, namely: John, born in Iowa, is married, and still lives in his native state; Joseph, also born in Iowa, now engaged in farming, married Maggie Tweed, by whom he has seven children; Minnie, wife of E. F. Brady, of Escondido, has four children; Frederick, an electrician in Los Angeles, married Josie Breedlove; William married Martha Watkins, and they have two children; Dora, died at the age of seventeen years; and Edna, residing at Glenellen, Sonoma county. Mrs. Fleishman still occupies the home ranch, and is living, surrounded by all the comforts of life, and blessed by the esteem and regard of her large circle of friends and acquaintances.

JAMES H. WHITWORTH, of Sherman, is a son of the late James Whitworth, and was born, September 16, 1856, in Nephi, Utah, of English ancestry.

A native of England, James Whitworth was there brought up, educated and married. Learning the baker's trade, he remained in his native country until 1853, when he came with his wife and three children to the United States, in company with a band of Mormons, with which he had previously united. Joining another band of Mormons in Iowa, the train proceeded to Utah, locating in Nephi, where he lived for a year or two. With eleven other families he left there three weeks after the Mountain Meadow massacre, coming with ox-teams to San Bernardino, Cal., and arriving in 1857. Purchasing a small tract of land, about three and one-half miles from San Bernardino, he carried on farming and stock-raising until drowned out by the heavy floods of 1862, losing everything. Coming then to Los Angeles county, he purchased one hundred and thirty acres of land near Sherman, and by persevering industry cleared a good farm. He subsequently purchased adjoining land, becoming owner of two hundred and sixty acres, which he managed ably until 1880, when he retired from active business, having accumulated considerable property. He subsequently lived in Los Angeles or Santa Monica, enjoying the fruits of his many years of toil. He was a bright, intelligent man, active until his last illness, and died, at the age of seventy-five years, May 19, 1876. He married, in England, Mary Ann Hilton, who died in Los Angeles, at the age of fifty years, leaving four children, namely: Joseph H.; Elizabeth, wife of P. McKernan, of Los Angeles; James H., of this sketch; and Harriet E., wife of M. Q. Reed, of Los Angeles.

An infant when he came with his parents to California, James H. Whitworth was reared and educated in Los Angeles county. Receiving with his brother Joseph an interest in the parental homestead when seventeen years old, he and his father and brother carried on the home ranch together for a number of years, meeting with good success in their agricultural operations. He now owns one hundred and twenty acres of the old homestead, which is now a valuable estate, being well cultivated and highly improved. In November, 1890, Mr. Whitworth married Kate A. Lynch, a native of Canada. In politics Mr. Whitworth is independent, his father, however, was a stanch Democrat, active in party ranks, for two terms serving as justice of the peace.

ROBERT S. KELLY of San Diego county is a native-born resident, his birth having occurred on the ranch where he now resides, February 20, 1880. His father, Mathew E. Kelly, was also born in California, the son of one of Placer county's pioneers, Mathew Kelly.

Born on the Isle of Man in 1822, Mathew Kelly emigrated to the United States in 1844, locating first in Illinois, where he lived until after his marriage. Enthused by the discovery of gold in California, he came here in 1852, and for about sixteen years was employed in mining and prospecting in Placer county. Coming then to San Diego county, he bought four hundred and eighty acres of land near Oceanside, and having improved the ranch now owned and occupied by his son Mathew E. Kelly, he was here a resident until his death, April 14, 1885. He married Emily Porter, who was born in Worcestershire, England, emigrated with her parents to the United States, settling first in Wisconsin. She joined her husband in Placer county in 1858, and is now living in San Diego county, a bright and active woman of seventy-five years. She is a member of the Christian Church, to which her husband also belonged. He was a Republican in politics, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Eleven children were born of their union, two of whom died in infancy, and nine are living.

A native of Placer county, Cal., Mathew E. Kelly was born in 1856, and until twelve years of age resided there. Coming then to San Diego county, he completed his early education in the common schools, after which he turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, in which he has been successfully employed, being one of the foremost farmers of his community. Living near Oceanside, he has acquired title to fifteen hundred acres of land, and as a raiser of grain and stock is carrying on a thriving business. He is a man of influence, an active member of the Republican party, and for a number of years has held the office of school trustee. He married Louise Ortega, who was born and brought up in the San Luis Rey valley, and they became the parents of seven children, namely: Edward, who married Nettie G. Donola; Robert, the special subject of this brief biography; Ellen, wife of J. D. Hall, of San Marcos; James; Lillie; Alice; and Lizzie.

Reared upon the home ranch, Robert S. Kelly acquired a practical common school education in his native district, and while yet a young man became acquainted with the various branches included in agriculture. Since attaining his majority, he has continued an inmate of the parental household, and is assisting in the management of the home place. He is a Republican in politics, one of the trustees of his school district, and is a member of Golden State Camp, M. W. A., No. 7130, of Los Angeles.

PARLEY WHITTAKER HEAP, Jr. The business interests of San Bernardino county have in Mr. Heap a man of enterprise and ability, whose personal affairs have not so entirely engrossed his attention that he has not had time to concern himself with the public affairs of the community in which he has made his home. He is a native of San Bernardino, where his birth occurred November 28, 1865; his father, Parley Whittaker Heap, Sr., was a native of Sheffield, England, whence the paternal grandfather, William, brought his family to America and became a pioneer of Moberly, Mo., then a frontier state. Later both father and grandfather crossed the continent and after a brief sojourn in Salt Lake City came to San Bernardino, locating here in 1851, the elder man engaging as a farmer until his death. General farming, teaming and freighting occupied the attention of the father for some years, but he has since become interested in well-boring which is now his principal employment. He resides in San Bernardino, and is an interested and intelligent citizen of the community in which he makes his home. His wife, formerly Miss Eliza Bottoms, a native of Cleveland, Ohio, died in this city in 1885. She was a daughter of John Bottoms, a native of England, who emigrated to Ohio in young manhood, later to Utah, and in 1851 came to San Bernardino, where he engaged as a farmer until his death.

The eldest in a family of eight children, of whom seven are now living, Parley Whittaker Heap, Jr., was reared from boyhood on the paternal farm, receiving his educational training in the public schools of San Bernardino.

In young manhood he followed the work to which he had early been trained, engaging in teaming and freighting to the desert and mining camps, managing two outfits profitably. He also devoted some time to the raising of hay, at the present writing renting a considerable amount of land for this purpose. About 1898 he began the raising of hogs on his farm two miles north of San Bernardino, and this branch of stock-raising induced him, in 1905, to open a meat market on D street, which has grown into an extensive and profitable enterprise. He conducts his business affairs in a businesslike manner, adhering strictly to principles of integrity and honor, and has come to be regarded as a citizen in whom implicit confidence may be placed.

Mr. Heap established home ties through his marriage April 30, 1888, with Miss Mary Dempsey, also a native of California, and born of this union are three children, Elmer, Leslie and Arthur. He has built a comfortable residence on A street and has surrounded his family with all possible comforts. Politically he is independent.

J. B. NORTON. The ranch upon which J. B. Norton is now located was owned until 1903 by his father, John F. Norton, one of the early pioneers of the state, who is now retired from active duties and makes his home at No. 2501 Belleview avenue, Los Angeles. He is a native of Maine, where he was born sixty-seven years ago, there marrying Eliza Smith, an English woman. She also survives, being now sixty years old. J. B. Norton represents the third generation in California, his grandparents having crossed the continent and located in Stockton, San Joaquin county, where he was born, June 11, 1870. He received a preliminary education in the common schools of the city, after which he attended the University of Southern California for four years and graduated therefrom. He began ranching upon the property he now owns, being associated with his father for some years. In 1890 he engaged independently in the work and in 1903 purchased his father's property, where he has since resided. In 1892 he married Elizabeth Jones, a native of Indiana, and a daughter of Alexander Jones, also of that state. In his fraternal relations Mr. Norton is a member of the Masonic organization, belonging to Compton Lodge No. 273, F. & A. M., and the Fraternal Aid. He is a Republican in his political convictions but reserves the right to cast his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for public office. He supports the Methodist Episcopal Church. His ranch of seventy acres is given over to the cultivation of alfalfa, garden vegetables and melons, of the last named producing one hundred crates of cantaloupes to the acre, each crate weighing two hundred to two hundred and twenty pounds, and containing from four to seven dozen melons. A few years ago Mr. Norton made a trip to Alaska, traveling by sled and dog team to the head waters of the Yukon river. He endured many hardships and privations—sleeping out of doors with the thermometer at fifty-four degrees below zero—and experiencing such weather as sixty-five degrees below zero—but met with success in his venture and counts the experiences well worth the trip.

AUGUST J. LEMBKE. The earliest recollections of Mr. Lembke are associated with Southern California, where now he is a rising young agriculturist, interested in the development and cultivation of lands near Redondo. His father, J. J., a prominent agriculturist of this vicinity, was born in Germany December 21, 1849, and received an excellent education in German schools. At the age of nineteen years he crossed the ocean to the United States and later attended school for a year in order to increase his knowledge of the English language. A few years after coming to this country he married Christina Turow, a native of Germany. For a time they resided in Iowa, but in 1881 settled in California, where for thirteen years they made their home on one ranch of twenty-one hundred acres. In 1901 they purchased their present homestead near Redondo, which is devoted to the raising of wheat, corn and beans. Of their children all but one remain in California. The eldest, Dorothea, Mrs. F. A. Schulte, is a resident of the state of Washington. Henry married Elsie Hodge and lives at Wilmington. William married Blanche Stockwell and makes his home at Moneta. August, the fourth in order of birth, is associated with his father in ranching affairs. Esther, Mary and Benjamin yet remain with their parents. In religious views the family are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church, while in political opinions they favor Republican principles.

While the family were living in Clayton county, Iowa, August J. Lempke was born February 25, 1880, and in his infancy he was brought to California, where his education was begun in Redondo public schools and completed in the Woodbury Business College at Los Angeles. With the exception of six months as an employe in the Holt combined harvester factory at Stockton, Cal., he has been a continuous resident of Los Angeles county and has engaged in the ranching business with his father, whom he has relieved of many responsibilities by his energy and capability. In addition to aiding in the care of his father's ranch of three hundred and eighty acres he helps in the management of the large tract of rented land, and is proving himself a resourceful and progressive rancher.

The marriage of August J. Lembke was solemnized February 18, 1905, and united him with Lorinda, daughter of Joseph Lucas, now living at Gardena. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lembke are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church and are interested in its philanthropies and missionary enterprises. In social circles they enjoy the respect of acquaintances and are welcome guests in the homes of their neighborhood.

NATHAN L. SLOSSON. Ranching operations are carried on on an extensive scale by Nathan L. Slosson of the Menifee valley, who has seven hundred acres in grain crops and one hundred acres devoted to the raising of alfalfa and to pasturage purposes, for he is also engaged in the raising of horses and cattle. He was born August 17, 1877, in Eaton county, Mich., the son of Cyrus and Lydia (Darling) Slosson, the former a native of New York. The father was an early settler in Michigan and is still living on the farm for which he received the original patent from the government sixty years ago. The death of the mother occurred there in 1905. Mr. Slosson received his education through the medium of the public schools of Michigan and in 1892 at the age of fifteen years came to Chino, Cal., where he secured employment in the sugar factory. He afterwards farmed there for a year, then continued in agricultural pursuits on the peat lands of Orange county until 1896. The following four years were spent in farming in Elsinore. In 1900 he removed to a location east of Los Angeles city, occupying a farm until 1903, when he located in the Menifee valley on the ranch which is now his home.

His marriage in Elsinore in 1898 united him with Miss Mamie E. Robinson daughter of John Robinson of Elsinore, and their union has been blessed in the birth of four children: Ethel, Cyrus, Clara and Bessie. Fraternally Mr. Slosson is a member of Elsinore Lodge No. 336, I. O. O. F. He is especially interested in educational matters and was at one time a member of the board of school trustees, of Menifee district. As a business man he is energetic and successful and as a citizen interests himself in all matters of an upbuilding nature.

ELLA J. SLAUSON. A talented, accomplished woman, possessing rare business ability and judgment, Miss Ella J. Slauson is actively identified with the material growth and prosperity of Venice as one of its most energetic and enterprising dealers in realty. While promoting her own interests, financially, she has been an important factor in the upbuilding of this section of Los Angeles county, and in the advancement of its welfare, winning for herself a position of prominence in business circles. A daughter of Joseph Slauson, she was born in New York state, but when a small child was taken by her parents to Carthage, Mo., where her father was for many years in business.

Having completed the prescribed course in the public schools of Carthage, Ella J. Slauson returned to New York state to complete her education. In June, 1898, she came to California, and for two years resided in Los Angeles. Active and energetic, she was anxious to have some permanent occupation, and in May, 1900, she became interested in the building business. Locating in Ocean Park, she began her career with a limited capital, at first erecting a few cottages for rent on the water front. Succeeding in this venture, Miss Slauson gradually enlarged her operations and to-day is recognized as one of the leading real estate dealers of the place, having obtained an enviable reputation and position among her professional contemporaries. She has the distinction of being the pioneer woman real estate agent of this locality, and for the financial success that she has achieved is deserving of great credit. She has acquired considerable property through her own exertions, owning valuable real estate in and about both Ocean Park and Venice.

After the death of her father, her mother married again, being now Mrs. Sarah A. Thomas. Miss Slauson's mother and her sister, Mrs. George Nettleton, are also residents of Southern California.

ERNEST W. SLYGH. As a large and successful ranchman Ernest W. Slygh has achieved prominence in Riverside county, where he has six hundred acres of land devoted principally to the raising of barley hay. The ranch is equipped with hay presses and all necessary farm machinery to facilitate the planting, cultivation and harvesting of his crops. Mr. Slygh was born January 1, 1867, in Peoria county, Ill., being the son of G. D. and Mary (Wycoff) Slygh, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Illinois. Their present home is on a farm at Toulon, Stark county, Ill.

The early education of Mr. Slygh was received in the public schools of Illinois and when as a young man he started out on an independent business career he chose farming as the profession he would follow. He engaged in this work in his native state until 1888 when upon his return from a visit to California he decided that life would be easier and more enjoyable, and opportunities for financial success more favorable in that state, and the following year he came to Riverside county to remain. He first found employment on a fruit ranch for a short time and at the same time cast about for a favorable opportunity to buy a place of his own. He soon decided upon a small tract where he lived for a time and then moved to his present home, which was one vast wheat field when he purchased it. Mr. Slygh set to work to improve it, determined to make his ranch one of the finest in the valley and he has succeeded. There are plenty of fine shade trees, and both apricot and olive orchards, all of which he planted himself. He has made a scientific study of the subject of horticulture and is at present occupying the position of county horticultural inspector. He is also a member of the school board of his district and taken an active interest in all enterprises tending toward the advancement and upbuilding of the community in which he resides. In 1898 he was married to Rose E. Lamb, who was born in Utah, and they have one child, a daughter, Dorothy.

JOHN SCHLEGEL. In every era of the world's history and in every land where civilization reigns, pedagogy has attracted men of keen intellect and high ideals. Perhaps no nation ever has entertained higher aspirations for educational advancement than our own land can boast, and it is an accepted fact that our institutions of learning compare most favorably with those established for centuries in older countries. Here it is that the public school system attains its greatest degree of perfection and here the brightest minds are engaged in training the young for the duties of citizenship. It is said that, with the exception of the schools of Los Angeles, no institutions in the entire country surpass those of Long Beach, and in the latter district creditable mention belongs to the Alamitos school, which is under the supervision of John Schlegel as principal, aided by seven instructors of exceptional attainments.

Though of American birth, Professor Schlegel descends from Swiss forefathers, his parents, Leonard and Anna (Tischhauser) Schlegel, having been born in the old-world republic of ancient families of that land. The father came to the United States in 1851 and took up a government claim in Wisconsin, where he labored assiduously in bringing the raw land into cultivation. After some years he went to Iowa and settled upon a farm, but eventually he removed to Kansas and became proprietor of a flour mill at Abilene, Dickinson county. During the residence of the family there the son, John, who was next to the youngest among nine children, was born June 26, 1880, and of the family all but one are still living.

Upon the removal of the family to California in 1885 Leonard Schlegel purchased land near University, Los Angeles county, and engaged in ranching, but after some years he subdivided a portion of the property and sold at fair profit. The balance of the estate is now rented, and water is supplied to the tenants from a pumping plant which he owns and operates. He is now a widower, his wife having passed from earth on Christmas day of 1897 at the age of fifty-eight years. When the family came to the Pacific coast John Schlegel was only five years of age. His education therefore has been secured wholly in the west, being primarily obtained in public schools, after which he had excellent advantages in the California State University at Berkeley. In June of 1902 he was graduated from the university and in the autumn of the same year he secured a position as principal of the Inglewood schools, where he rendered efficient service for two years, and then resigned to accept his present position in Long Beach.

The marriage of Professor Schlegel was solemnized at Fairview, Orange county, this state, June 26, 1905, and united him with Miss Ethel, daughter of P. M. and Matilda Freeman, natives respectively of Minnesota and Indiana, but since 1885 residents of Orange county. Interested in various fraternities, Professor Schlegel holds membership with Inglewood Camp No. 229, Woodmen of the World, also the Independent Order of Foresters at Inglewood, and the blue lodge at Redondo, F. & A. M., in which he was made a Master Mason. With his wife he is an attendant at the services of the Methodist Episcopal Church and a prominent figure in the social and educational activities of his home city.

THOMAS TURBETT. It is not strange that Thomas Turbett gives an unswerving loyalty and support to California and more especially to that section in which his home is located, as he is a native son of the state and throughout his entire life a resident of Ventura county. He is a young man of energy and ambition, inheriting from pioneer parents those qualities of courage and industry which bespeak the best in the citizenship of a new statehood, and in the comparatively brief time in which he has been dependent upon his own resources he has ably manifested such characteristics as to win financial returns in large measure as well as a place of importance in the citizenship of Ventura county.

Born on the 19th of December, 1878, in the vicinity of Oxnard, the boyhood years of Mr. Turbett were spent in his present location, his father, William Turbett (whose biography appears on another page of this work), having settled here in an early day. He received his education principally through the medium of the public schools, which he attended, alternating his studies with duties on the paternal farm. In 1899 upon attaining his majority, he felt impelled to seek a means of independent livelihood, and in December of the same year he established home ties through his marriage with Miss Mabel Harris, a native also of Ventura county. The few intervening years to the present date have witnessed his efforts along agricultural lines and also the success which has followed well-directed thought. He is now farming two hundred and eighty-five acres, sixty-five acres of which is devoted to the cultivation of beets, while the balance is given over to the raising of barley. He gives time and thought to the cultivation of his property and brings to bear in his work an intelligent appreciation of the requirements which have enabled him to reap large financial returns. Of good principles and unquestioned integrity, he has won the esteem of all who have had business dealings with him and numbers his friends liberally throughout the county.

Mr. and Mrs. Turbett are the parents of two children, Hazel and Alfred.

WILLIAM WILSON was born August 25, 1872, in Lambertville, N. J., a son of John M. and E. (Lawshe) Wilson, both of whom were born in New Jersey and are still living in that state, where the father is engaged in agricultural pursuits. The son, William, was educated in the New Jersey public schools and at the age of nineteen years came to Riverside, Cal., where he resided for two years, in 1894 removing to the San Jacinto valley. He later purchased ten acres of land, upon which his present home is located, and improved it by the erection of necessary buildings, beginning at once to set out his nursery. He met with good success as the years passed and gradually added to his acreage until now there are forty acres in the ranch, all of it being devoted to the culture of general nursery stock, including peaches, pears, apricots, oranges, apples and plums among the fruits, and a line of shade and ornamental trees. Mr. Wilson was one of the pioneers in this business in the San Jacinto valley, and the wisdom of his choice of occupation has been amply proven.

His marriage occurred in 1897 in Solebury, Pa., uniting him with Miss Emma Worstall, and three children have been born of this union: Lawshe, Lloyd and Meryn. Mr. Wilson is a member of the Masonic blue lodge at San Jacinto and also of the Commandery at the same place. He is actively interested in the development of Riverside county and is at all times willing to lend a hand in the furthering of enterprises which tend toward the upbuilding of that section of the state.

GEORGE W. YOUNG. The rapid growth and material development characteristic of the recent history of Long Beach have attracted to the city a large number of contractors who are unusually skilled in their special lines of labor, and among these mention may be made of George W. Young, a contracting plasterer. Although comparatively a newcomer to the city, he has already established a reputation for reliable work in his specialty and has been awarded contracts for much of the plastering work in the large structures of recent construction. Careful and methodical in workmanship, honorable in business transactions, energetic and prompt in the filling of contracts undertaken, he deserves to the fullest measure whatever of prosperity awaits the progressive industrial laborer.

Now in the prime of life, Mr. Young was born February 22, 1874, in the city of Atchison, Kans., where his parents, Frank P. and Margaret Young, conducted a hotel for a number of years. Both were natives of Germany and immigrated to the United States about 1855, settling in Philadelphia, Pa., where they were united in marriage. After a brief sojourn in that city they moved west as far as Illinois and settled in Peoria. From there they went to Kansas three years later and settled in Atchison, in which city they engaged in the hotel business with fair success. The year 1887 found them in California, where they remained in Los Angeles for a short time and then established a home in Santa Ana. During 1903 they came to Long Beach and have since lived in retirement in this city.

Primarily educated in the public schools of Atchison, Kans., after coming to the Pacific coast George W. Young had the advantages offered by the Los Angeles schools. At the age of sixteen years he began to learn the plasterer's trade and continued in that occupation at day wages for a period of ten years, at the expiration of which he began to take contracts. During his residence in Santa Ana he was associated with W. L. Harding and it was due to their indefatigable efforts that the Alpine plaster, now so popular, first attracted general attention. On coming to Long Beach in 1903 he became interested in a furniture business with Mr. Callahan, but in a short time disposed of his interest in the store and turned again to contract plastering, which still remains his specialty. While making his home in Santa Ana, May 28, 1902, he married Miss Bertha Waite, who was born in California, and by whom he has two children. Mrs. Young is a daughter of the late Alonzo Waite, a pioneer of the Pacific coast and during the Civil war the publisher of a newspaper in Los Angeles. Since the death of Mr. Waite, which occurred about 1891, his widow has continued to reside in Santa Ana. Mrs. Young adheres to the faith of the Roman Catholic Church. Politically Mr. Young votes with the Republican party and in matters of fraternal interest he holds association with Santa Ana Lodge No. 236, I. O. O. F., and the Modern Brotherhood of America in Los Angeles.

CHARLES E. MURRAY. Personal knowledge of many parts of the United States, gained by widely extended travels, has convinced Mr. Murray that his present location at Gardena offers distinct advantages both in climate and in opportunities to earn a livelihood amid attractive surroundings. Descended from an old eastern family, he was born in New York state April 15, 1861, and at the age of two years was taken to Iowa by his parents, Warren and Electa (Fellows) Murray, natives respectively of New York state and Erie county, Pa. After the death of the father, which occurred in 1863, the widowed mother conducted a restaurant at Boone, Iowa, and meanwhile sent her son to the public schools of that town. Upon the completion of the studies of the high school, he entered the Marshall Agricultural College at Marshalltown and continued there for a brief period, later spending a year in a law office in Iowa.

The west at that time was less known than now, but its opportunities were already beginning to attract permanent settlers, and among these were Mr. Murray and his mother, who came from Iowa to Ogden, Utah, and thence to San Francisco. For three years he took a course in pharmacy and medicine in San Francisco, remaining there until his graduation. Afterward he was engaged in similar work at San Francisco, Sacramento and Lower Lake, and met with encouraging success, but was forced to seek another occupation by reason of trouble with his eyes. By accident rather than choice he drifted into railroading and was employed in Arizona, his mother going with him to Fort Whipple, where he made his headquarters for a considerable period. On establishing domestic ties he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Basse, who was born in New York state, and was a young lady of refinement and cultured manner. The heaviest bereavement of his life was the death of his wife and their child in a runaway accident.

On coming to Gardena Mr. Murray purchased a tract of fourteen acres and here is engaged in raising alfalfa, also makes a specialty of the poultry business. On his place one of the most conspicuous improvements is a flowing artesian well, from which the land is irrigated by means of a large pumping plant. In addition to his home place he owns, in partnership with his mother, one hundred and sixty acres near Douglass City, Trinity county, for which $20,000 has been offered, and in addition he also owns a quarter section of land situated in Santa Cruz county. Interested in political affairs and a stanch supporter of the Republican party, he has always been a leader in local activities of the party in the various places of his residence, and has officiated as justice of the peace and a member of the board of school trustees. In fraternal relations he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. Though not one of the pioneers of Gardena, no citizen is more interested in its development than he, and no one champions its welfare with greater enthusiasm or more consistent fidelity.

CHARLES R. ARNOLD. Classed among the more enterprising and skilful farmers of Ventura county is Charles R. Arnold, whose well-tilled ranch lies near Oxnard. The son of one of the early pioneers of California, he was born, April 13, 1867, in Lassen county, where his father, Henry Arnold, lived for a number of years. His grandfather, Cutler Arnold, was one of the forty-niners, coming across the plains in that year, and settling first in Marysville, where he kept a general store, and was also engaged in mining. He remained in that locality until 1872, when he removed to Ventura county, and here spent his remaining days.

A native of New York, Henry Arnold came by way of the Isthmus to California in 1852, landing in San Francisco, and was subsequently a scout for General Cook, and a member of the state troops. He afterwards located near Susanville, Lassen county, remaining there until 1874. Coming then to this locality, he lived for seven years near Ventura, and in 1881 bought the land now owned and occupied by his son, Charles R. Arnold. In 1892 he moved to Hueneme, where he served as postmaster until his death, at the age of sixty-five years, in January, 1902. He married Pamelia Ellen Robertson, who is still a resident of Hueneme.

Having obtained a good common school education in the public schools of Ventura county, Charles R. Arnold assisted his father in farming until 1889, when he began life for himself, engaging in agricultural pursuits on the old home ranch. He now owns eighty acres of land in his home ranch, and also leases land on which he raises beets and beans, having two hundred acres of the former vegetables and fifty acres of the latter.

On April 5, 1889, in Oxnard, Mr. Arnold married Helen Hodge, who was born in Marysville, but was brought up and educated in Santa Cruz, being a daughter of L. C. Hodge, who came across the plains to California with the pioneer emigrants of 1849. Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold, namely: Hazel, Alta, Charles and Nellie. Politically Mr. Arnold is a strong Republican, quite influential in public affairs, has served as school trustee, and in 1902 was appointed postmaster of Hueneme, serving in that capacity until sending in his resignation in the fall of 1905. Fraternally he is a member of Hueneme Lodge, A. O. U. W., and of Oxnard Lodge, A. F. & A. M. Religiously he belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

OLIVER OAKS. Travelers passing through the valley of San Bernardo, in San Diego county, are enthusiastic in their descriptions of the large estate and well-kept ranch occupied by Oliver Oaks. The substantial house is surrounded by orange trees and shaded drives, giving an air of comfort and beauty to the entire estate, and bearing mute testimony to the refinement of the family. The vast estate comprises twenty-five hundred acres and two thousand acres are available for cultivation, grain and hay being the principal products. The improvements that make the ranch one of the finest places in the valley were made by Omer Oaks, father of Oliver, and one of the honored pioneers of the locality.

When the discovery of gold attracted thousands to the gold fields of the far west, Omer Oaks was among the number who left the comforts of the east for the vicissitudes of life on the Pacific coast. By birth a New Yorker, he descended from an old eastern family and received his education in eastern schools. The journey was made via the isthmus and during 1850 he landed in San Francisco, from which point he proceeded to the mines. As early as 1855 he became a pioneer of the Santa Clara valley and there undertook the task of transforming a raw tract into a fertile farm. Meanwhile he had married Mary Threadgold, a native of England, and a lady of estimable character, whose death in 1888 was a bereavement to family and friends. On account of ill health in 1868 he came to San Diego county, where he purchased and settled upon the ranch now occupied by his son. A man of great energy and progressive spirit, he made many improvements in the ranch and converted it into a valuable property. Of recent years he has resided in the Santa Clara valley, where he is widely known and universally honored.

During the residence of the family in the Santa Clara valley Oliver Oaks was born December 26, 1880, and from that valley he accompanied his parents to San Diego county, where he received a high-school education in Escondido. Later he returned to the Santa Clara valley and attended a business college in San Jose. On starting out to make his own way in the world he took up ranching pursuits and settled on the farm owned by his father in San Bernardo valley, where he has since engaged in raising farm products. As yet he has not made a specialty of the stock business, but keeps only a limited number of head. Scarcely yet in the prime of life, he already has a fair start in the agricultural world and ranks among the prosperous men of the valley. While he has not identified himself actively with local politics, he is known as a stanch Republican and a firm supporter of party measures. The neat and comfortable house on the ranch is presided over by the lady whom he married August 10, 1905, and who was Miss Alice E. Doty, a native of Pennsylvania, but from early life a resident of Escondido. Among the people of the valley the young couple number many warm friends and hold a position of assured social standing by reason of their genial manner, tact, courtesy to all, and the energy with which they are devoting themselves to their chosen work.

A. E. ROBINSON. When the Scotch family of Robinsons became transplanted from their native land to America during the colonial period they settled in Virginia and afterward gave of their offspring to defend their adopted country in its struggle for independence. An honored representative of the race was Rev. James W. Robinson, a native of Virginia, and a man of broad education and sincere character. The opening up of the regions further west took him away from his native commonwealth to aid in the religious upbuilding of newer sections and he acquired prominence in ministerial circles of Michigan. While the family were residents of Grand Rapids, that state, A. E., son of the minister, was born and in the city of his birth he received his primary education, later graduating from the high school of Niles, Mich., with the class of 1877, and afterward taking a course of study in Albion College.

It happened that his father had become interested in a printing plant and newspaper at Niles and Mr. Robinson in that way became interested in learning the printer's trade, which he acquired in its smallest details.

Entering the employ of the Widdicomb Furniture Company of Lansing, Mich., Mr. Robinson acted as salesman and buyer and finally purchased stock in the company, of which he served as assistant secretary and auditor. After a connection of nineteen years with the company he disposed of his stock and removed to California. The year 1900 found him a resident of Ocean Park and two years later he formed a partnership with another prominent citizen in the real-estate business, which he now conducts. During the period of his residence here he has seen property on Pier avenue increase in value from $60 to $400 per front foot. Upon the incorporation of the place he was chosen one of the first members of the board of trustees and still fills that office, besides being associated with other organizations for the city's benefit. One of the well-known local improvements, the Ocean Park Bathhouse, numbers him among its board of directors. In social circles he is known and honored and has membership with the Country Club, besides other organizations somewhat similar in nature. While still living in Michigan he married Miss Pauline Werner, a native of Grand Rapids, and a lady of excellent education and culture. During the period of his residence in Michigan he was very active in Masonry, affiliating with the blue lodge, chapter, Knights Templar and Mystic Shrine, besides holding membership with other fraternal organizations.

A. PEROZZI is a representative and highly respected dairyman of the Lompoc valley who originally emigrated to this country from Switzerland where his father, Peter A. Perozzi, and his mother, Mary Genarni before her marriage, were born and lived during their entire lifetime. They became the parents of three children, two sons and one daughter, the former both now living in California, and the latter never having left the land of her birth. A. Perozzi was born in Switzerland, November 7, 1862, and was educated in that country through the medium of the common schools before coming to America, where he arrived when seventeen years of age. He made California his first objective point in this country, going directly to Marine, where he engaged himself to a dairyman for two years. From there he went to assume a similar position at San Luis Obispo for a year, before finally settling at Lompoc in November, 1883. The first few years of his residence in that valley were spent in working for other men and in 1887 he had by industry and frugality succeeded in saving enough to set up in business for himself near Sutton station. The ranch which he now owns comprises three hundred and thirty-three acres, which he devotes entirely to the raising of feed for his herd of forty milch cows, the cream which they produce for market furnishing their owner a handsome income.

In 1892 Mr. Perozzi was united in marriage to Miss Caroline Morisoli, a native of Switzerland, and to these parents have been born six children: Amelia, Brono, Adeline, Lily, George and Peter. Mr. Perozzi holds membership in two of the large fraternal organizations, the Foresters of America and the Woodmen of the World. He is a Republican in politics, believing heartily in the principles which that party advocates, and religiously belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, which he supports liberally.

LEONARD B. SLOSSON. A man of fine mental attainments and wide information, Leonard B. Slosson is well versed in legal lore, and although a comparatively newcomer in Los Angeles county has already acquired a noteworthy reputation as an able and skillful lawyer. A son of Willis M. Slosson, he was born, in April, 1875, in Sabetha, Nemaha county, Kans., a descendant of one of the early families of Connecticut, and comes of distinguished stock, members of the family from which he is sprung having fought in the Revolutionary war. His paternal grandfather, Ozias Slosson, was a life-long farmer in New York state.

A native of New York state, Willis M. Slosson there followed the trade of a miller when young. Subsequently removing to Nemaha county, Kans., he was successfully employed in mercantile pursuits at Sabetha for a few years, and while there was very influential in political circles. Having possession of considerable land in Osceola county, Mich., he subsequently moved there with his family, and for twenty years was employed in looking after his landed interests in that vicinity. In 1899 he came to California, locating in Ventura county, where he is well known as a forester, having won distinction in connection with the forest fires of Montecito. He is now living in Santa Barbara, having been made supervisor of the Santa Barbara Forest Reserves, a position of importance which he is ably and satisfactorily filling.

But four years of age when his parents removed to Michigan, Leonard B. Slosson received his elementary education in the public schools of Osceola county, and was subsequently graduated from the Michigan Military Academy. He was afterwards employed at the State Capital, in Lansing, for a time, and then served as librarian for the Library of the Supreme Court of Michigan for three years. Having in the meantime studied law, Mr. Slosson was admitted to the Michigan bar in 1899, and the following July came to California to reside. Being admitted to the bar of this state, he practiced law for a while in Ventura county, being in partnership with Senator Orestes Orr. He served as deputy county clerk of Ventura county until March, 1904, when he located in Los Angeles. In December, 1904, Mr. Slosson formed a copartnership with Benjamin S. Hunter, and has since been actively engaged in the practice of his chosen profession, having offices in Los Angeles and Santa Monica. Politically Mr. Slosson is a stanch Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of the Woodmen of America.

GEORGE M. SPICER. Since May, 1904, George M. Spicer has been a resident of Long Beach, Los Angeles county, where he has already succeeded in building up for himself a lucrative clientele. A native of Utah, Mr. Spicer was born in Manti, September 16, 1879, and was still young when his parents located in Salt Lake City. There he attended the public schools and later became a student in the University of Utah, from which institution he was graduated in 1899. Following his graduation he took up the study of law in the office of Joseph L. Rawlins, with whom he remained until the following year, when he was admitted to the practice of his profession. He established a practice in Salt Lake and in Manti, where he remained until 1904, in which year he came to California and on account of the multifold business opportunities held out by growing Long Beach he located in this city. He opened an office, although he is independent in his operations, having built up a constantly increasing general practice. He has also invested his means in property in this city and Wilmington, believing firmly in the future prosperity and growth of this section. Mr. Spicer is identified fraternally with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to the lodge in Manti, Utah, and the Eagles, of Long Beach. In politics he is a stanch Republican, and although never desirous of personal recognition along these lines has been active in his efforts to advance the principles he endorses.

JOHN F. PETIT. Among the industrious and thriving young farmers of the Santa Clara valley, the name of John F. Petit is pre-eminent. Though a native of Pennsylvania, he has spent the greater portion of his life in California, having come to this state with his parents in 1884, and since that time has resided continuously near Oxford, Ventura county. Born in Custer, Pa., September 8, 1873, Mr. Petit is the son of Frank and Caroline (Dougherty) Petit, whose biographical sketch will be found elsewhere in this work. Receiving his education in the common schools of his native state and of the Santa Clara valley, Cal., he divided his time during his boyhood days between his school work and the duties which fall to the average farmer's boy until reaching manhood's estate. In 1898 he left the paternal roof and engaged in agricultural pursuits for himself on land near Oxnard, which he still owns. Success following his persevering efforts in that line, he has brought his farm of one hundred and sixty acres up to a high state of cultivation, his principal crops being sugar beets and barley hay, the ranch giving ample evidence of the thrift and good management of its proprietor.

November 4, 1896, Mr. Petit formed domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Mary Adela Coultas, who is a native of Illinois. Having lost her father by death, she came with her mother to Southern California and her mother now resides in Los Angeles. Two children, Nellie and Vida, have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Petit. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church of Oxnard, of which they are consistent members. Mr. Petit is independent in his political beliefs, voting for the candidate whom he considers the best man for the office. Fraternally he is a member of Colonia Lodge No. 89, I. O. O. F., of Oxnard. He is popular among his acquaintances and stands high in the community as a man of true worth and integrity.

AUGUST SAULQUE. Through the long period of his residence in Southern California Mr. Saulque has seen the gradual growth of this section of country from a bare, unimproved stretch of land to a region of rare scenic beauty, with fine homes, valuable farms and profitable fruit orchards. The climate he has found somewhat similar to that of his own sunny France, but the opportunities he believes to be greater here than there, while a greater variety of products may be raised under the fine system of irrigation now prevailing on the Pacific coast. Born October 1, 1852, he passed the years of youth upon a farm in France, where little occurred to break the monotony of daily toil. As he grew toward manhood he heard much concerning the new world and his aspirations turned to its possibilities.

Mr. Saulque landed at San Pedro, Los Angeles county, two weeks after he had arrived in San Francisco from his native land. The date of his arrival, February 27, 1871, is associated in his mind with the beginning of his success, yet at first he held but a humble position as a sheepherder. Meanwhile he studied the sheep industry and at the expiration of three years he resigned his position in order to embark in business for himself. With his brother Jules as a partner he bought about one thousand head of sheep at Bakersfield and for eleven years engaged in the breeding, buying and selling of sheep. At one time his flock aggregated eight thousand head, and he sold seven thousand in one bunch for $25,000. On disposing of his sheep in 1885 he came to Los Angeles, but three years later he again became interested in the raising of sheep and had charge of a band of sheep in Ventura and Santa Barbara counties for six years, continuing, however, to make Los Angeles his home and headquarters. During 1884 he purchased twenty-five acres at Hyde Park and this he rented until 1903, when he established his headquarters on the ranch. For some years after coming to California he remained without domestic ties, but in 1886 he established a home of his own, marrying a native of Los Angeles and a lifelong resident of this city. The three children of their union are Leo P., Anna and Harriet. Since becoming a citizen of the United States Mr. Saulque has voted the Republican ticket and has given his support at all times to the principles for which that party stands.

H. B. AINSWORTH. The present manager of the H. E. Huntington business interests at Redondo, H. B. Ainsworth is one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of this section of the state. He is the son of Capt. J. C. Ainsworth, whose name has been inseparably connected with the history of the development of the western coast states, arrived in San Francisco in 1850. Captain Ainsworth was born June 6, 1822, in Warren county, Iowa, and took his first lessons in steamboating on the Mississippi river, while yet a young man becoming master of a passenger steamer plying between St. Louis and points north of that city. He remained in California but a short time, however, and after clerking a few weeks in a store at Sacramento he removed to Oregon City, Ore. At Oregon City he engaged in steamboating and while there built the boat which became the nucleus of the Oregon Steamship & Navigation Company which he later organized, becoming president of the company, which later was merged into the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, of which Captain Ainsworth continued to be president until its sale in 1879 to the Villard syndicate for $5,000,000. He built the Missouri Pacific railroad from California to Puget Sound and was also largely interested in the construction of the Northern Pacific railroad between the Columbia river and Puget Sound.

After his retirement from the navigation companies he removed to Oakland, Cal., and identified himself with various financial enterprises, among them being the founding of the Central Bank of Oakland, retaining the office of president of that institution until his death. In Portland he organized the Ainsworth National Bank which in 1903 was consolidated with the United States National Bank and subsequently did business under that name, in 1905 absorbing the Wells Fargo National Bank. The son, J. C., Jr., is now president of that institution which is considered one of the most solid on the Pacific Coast. In 1887 Captain Ainsworth in company with R. R. Thompson began the exploitation of the Redondo beach and spent three million dollars in transforming it into one of the finest seaside resorts on the coast. In 1890 the Redondo Railroad company was organized and eighteen miles of track was laid connecting Redondo with Los Angeles; this company afterwards became the Los Angeles & Redondo Railway company which now owns the three wharves there. In the same year Mr. Ainsworth organized the Redondo Hotel company which built what was then the largest hotel in Southern California and surrounded it with fine and imposing grounds. As the head of the Redondo Improvement company, which was afterwards absorbed by the Redondo Beach company he built the Chautauqua auditorium which was constructed of concrete and has a floor space of ten thousand square feet. He was for many years a prominent Mason, having attained the thirty-third degree and was first Grand Master of Oregon. His death in December, 1893, at his home in Oakland, removed one of the most important characters in the development of the whole northwest. His wife who was Fannie Bobbitt, a daughter of Gen. Edwin Burr Bobbitt, a graduate of West Point and chief of the Quartermaster Department of the United States Army, became the mother of six children, five of whom are now living. Her death occurred in Portland, July, 1905.

The third oldest child in the family was H. B. Ainsworth who was born in Portland, May 23, 1871, and received his education in a private school in Oakland, in 1891 graduating from the University of California with the degree of C. E. He began his business career by entering his father's bank in Oakland and afterward in Portland attended to affairs connected with the estate. In 1895 he came to Redondo as manager of the different companies and business enterprises owned by the estate and has ever since remained in this city. In June, 1905, all of his businesses which his father had founded were disposed of to H. E. Huntington, who retains Mr. Ainsworth as manager of the interests which he had been so successfully conducting in years past. His influence in financial circles is a strong one and in every matter of public import he takes a prominent interest. He is a director in the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Redondo, and is now serving his second term as a member of the city board of trustees. The Republican party has always received his active support. He was married in Los Angeles to Miss Anna Mullins, a native of New York state, and they are the parents of one child, a daughter, Anna.

TOLBERT B. MOORHEAD, D. D. S. In the valuable improvements and discoveries made during recent years in the scientific world, no profession, perhaps, has reaped more benefit than that of dentistry, which has been elevated to the dignity of a distinct and separate science, the understanding of which requires much study and close application. Prominent among the younger dentists of Los Angeles county who have acquired proficiency in this line of study is Tolbert B. Moorhead, D. D. S., of Whittier, a dentist of acknowledged skill and ability. He is an energetic young man, upright and of good principles, and is fast making for himself an enviable reputation in professional and social circles. The doctor was born, January 10, 1876, in McDonald, Pa., where his father, the late William B. Moorhead, spent his entire life. His mother, whose maiden name was Margaret Johnson, survived her husband, and still lives in Pennsylvania, her native state.

After completing the course of study in the public schools, Tolbert B. Moorhead entered the University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, and was graduated from the Dental Department in the class of 1898. Opening an office immediately in McDonald, Pa., Dr. Moorhead remained there two years, being busily employed, his success as a dentist becoming known and acknowledged in the community. Coming to California in 1900, the Doctor located in Whittier, where he has built up an extensive and remunerative practice, his skill and wisdom winning for him a fine patronage.

In Whittier, Cal., Dr. Moorhead married Pearl Wilson, who was born in Iowa, a daughter of James K. Wilson, now a resident of Whittier. Politically the Doctor is identified with the Republican party. Fraternally he is prominent in Masonic circles, belonging to the lodge and chapter; is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and is a Knight of Pythias, and past chancellor of the lodge to which he belongs.

H. A. FRIEDRICKS. The management of the Rosecrans' ranch at Gardena is under the capable supervision of H. A. Friedricks, who since 1901 has occupied the position he still fills with efficiency and energy. For the work he now controls he was admirably qualified through a considerable previous experience on the same ranch; it was about 1893 when he became an employe of the estate and here he has since continued, his original service as a farm hand having been of a practical nature calculated to adapt him for the more responsible position he now occupies. The tract comprises about seven hundred acres and is devoted to the raising of grain and pasturage of cattle, also the growing of vegetables for the city markets. A specialty is likewise made of the dairy business, thirty-five cows being milked and the milk sold in the city. One of the manager's favorite theories is concerning the value of cut feed for his stock, this work being done with the aid of a steam plant which also operates the pump and irrigates the land.

Born in Milwaukee, Wis., April 9, 1878, Mr. Friedricks is of German ancestry, and is a son of H. G. Friedricks, a native of the Fatherland. While he was still quite small he was orphaned by the death of his mother, leaving him the eldest of the five sons, of whom the others are Arthur, Oscar, Julius and Sigmund. His father is still living and makes his home in Santa Barbara, this state. When H. A. was a boy nine years of age he accompanied other members of the family to California and settled in Los Angeles, where he attended the grammar and high schools, and later, while working during the day, attended a business school evenings, thus acquiring a fair education. Practically all of his business life has been spent on the Rosecrans' ranch, where he now makes his home, devoting himself with energy and faithfulness to the duties of his position. As yet he has not established domestic ties, nor has he taken a prominent part in local politics, his only connection with the same being in the casting of a straight Republican ticket at all elections. Fraternally he is associated with the Knights of Pythias and the Fraternal Brotherhood.

H. C. MAYER. Conspicuous among the wide-awake and progressive business men who are so actively promoting the foremost interests of Venice and the surrounding country is H. C. Mayer, secretary of the Hardware Association of Southern California. Far-sighted, brainy and quick of perception, he has been exceedingly prosperous in his career, and since coming to Los Angeles county has won a place of influence, establishing himself firmly in the confidence and esteem of the community in which he resides. A son of Jacob F. Mayer, he was born in Henderson, Ky., of pioneer ancestry. His grandfather, George A. Mayer, settled in Kentucky in 1831, and there followed the trade of a locksmith and gun maker, which he learned from his father, who manufactured guns for use in the Revolutionary war.

A native of Kentucky, Jacob F. Mayer spent his life of sixty years in his native state, during his active career being successfully employed as a farmer. He married Lucy Bond, who came of excellent Revolutionary stock, her paternal ancestors having been associated with the family of George Washington. She died in Kentucky, at the early age of forty years. She bore her husband thirteen children, of whom but four survive.

Receiving his early education in private schools, H. C. Mayer was afterwards graduated from the Henderson high school, subsequently taking a special course of study at the University of Chicago. Entering then the employ of the well-known hardware firm of Hibbard, Spencer & Co., he worked in all departments, finally becoming commercial salesman, and one of the firm's most valued assistants, for three years traveling extensively in Oregon and Washington. Resigning his position, Mr. Mayer came to California, locating in Los Angeles, where he carried on a substantial hardware business for some time, his store being at No. 537 Broadway. Disposing of his interests in that city in February, 1905, Mr. Mayer lived for a short time at Ocean Park, after which, in August, 1905, he took up his residence in Venice, and has since been identified with its prosperity, whether of an industrial, financial or social nature, and has become owner of valuable real estate in this locality.

In Henderson, Ky., Mr. Mayer married Sarah Bradshaw, the representative of an old and well-known Kentucky family, and they have one child, a daughter named Sarah Louise.

JASON CHARLES TICKNOR. An enterprising native son of California who has spent the greater part of his life in Riverside county, the mountains in that section of the state being as an open book to him for he has traveled over every trail worn upon their sides and through the canyons between them, is Mr. Jason Charles Ticknor. He was born in 1869, in San Francisco, the son of J. C. and N. J. (Clark) Ticknor, the former a native of Buffalo, N. Y., and the latter of Greenville, Pa. The elder Ticknor came to California in 1849 by the Panama route, and was for a time after his arrival engaged as a miner, later becoming a merchant of San Francisco. In 1875 he removed to Southern California and conducted a merchandising business in what is now Riverside county. Both parents are now deceased.

Of the two children in the family Jason Charles Ticknor was the oldest and from his sixth year was brought up in the mountain regions of Riverside county. His education was received in the public schools, and from early boyhood he found his greatest pleasure in the saddle where he was usually found when not in school. His first business ventures were in stock raising and he continued to follow that occupation for about twenty years, his ranch being located in the Cahuilla country. In 1902 Mr. Ticknor sold his ranch and stock business and located in San Jacinto where he built a billiard hall and conducted it until January of 1905 when he went to Hemet and established a similar business which he now manages in connection with a cigar store. Among other property interests he owns a residence in San Jacinto. His marriage to Miss Rose Creider, a native of West Virginia, occurred in San Jacinto. Politically Mr. Ticknor is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and fraternally affiliates with San Jacinto Lodge No. 338, F. & A. M.; San Jacinto Chapter, R. A. M.; and is also associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of Riverside, and Knights of the Maccabees at Hemet. Although his business takes the greater part of his time he yet finds opportunity to aid in the upbuilding of his section of the country and is actively interested in all matters of social and civic import.

P. J. BENDASHER. Switzerland is noted for its fine dairy farms and its expert dairymen, and when it is said that P. J. Bendasher is a native of that picturesque country it is almost needless to remark that on his fine ranch in the Lompoc valley he conducts one of the best dairies in the country. He also does general ranching and has met with unusual success in the raising of a variety of crops. Both his father, Domingo Bendasher, and mother, Lucy Bendasher, were born in Switzerland, where the father died at the age of fifty-five years, and there the mother still lives, and is almost a centenarian, being now ninety-seven years old. Three of the family of eight children live in California and the remainder are in their native country.

P. J. Bendasher was born in Switzerland, June 7, 1854, and came to the United States at the early age of twelve years, arriving at San Francisco, from there going to Petaluma, where he worked in a dairy. He remained there about two years, and then engaged in the diary business for a year at Santa Cruz, and from that point moved to San Luis Obispo, continuing in the same business there for fourteen years, having purchased a dairy of his own at that place. In the fall of 1883 he removed to Lompoc and bought a dairy and stock ranch, which he held for some years, and after selling that came into possession of the home place of 156 acres which he now occupies. In 1884 he married Mary Carroll, a woman of Irish parentage, and to them have been born eight children: Lucy, Katie, Carl, Virginia, Cecil, Irene, Alvota and Walter. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bendasher are members of the Catholic Church and are training their children in that faith. Politically he believes in the principles advocated by the Republican party and takes a hearty interest in all matters of public interest, and has served as trustee on the school board of his district for some time. The fine home which the family occupies was built by himself since purchasing the ranch.

JOSE P. CALAC. In the class of progressive, enterprising representatives of the early inhabitants of the new world mention belongs to Jose P. Calac, who with his brother, Jose D., and a partner, J. J. Paubal, carries on farm pursuits in San Diego county and has the reputation of being one of the most sagacious and perservering farmers in the San Luis Rey valley.

The early home of Jose P. Calac was at the foot of Smith mountain, where he was born and where the earliest recollections of his life cluster around the picturesque and romantic environment. During boyhood it was his privilege to attend public school at Perris, Riverside county, and he availed himself of every advantage to such an extent that in the common-school branches he surpasses many of the American farmers of the state. Since 1900 he has been interested with his brother and another partner in the management of a farm near Bonsall, having one of the largest grain farms in the entire valley and using thirty head of horses, as well as a large equipment of modern machinery suited to their needs. From the crop of 1905 they sold four thousand sacks (eight thousand bushels) of grain. The brothers are honest, industrious farmers, and sincere members of the Roman Catholic Church, belonging to the congregation at San Luis Rey. Jose P. is unmarried, but Jose D. has a wife and one son. Since coming to their present location they have gained the good-will of acquaintances and have established a reputation for uprightness and honesty, so that when crops failed they had no difficulty in securing the necessary credit to carry them through to a more prosperous season. Their obligations have been met when due and they are justly proud of the reputation they have established in this respect.

ANGELO CANTARINI. One of the most extensive ranchers in Perris valley is Angelo Cantarini, who is farming sixteen hundred acres to hay and grain in this location and has seven hundred acres in Temecula. He owns his own thirty-two horsepower combined harvester and it requires about fifty head of horses to operate the ranch. His birth occurred in Switzerland, September 16, 1855, he being the son of E. and Lucia Cantarini, both natives of Switzerland, the death of the father occurring there in 1882 at the age of eighty-six years, and that of the mother in 1904, she having attained eighty-seven years. The education of the son, Angelo, was received in the common schools of his native land, where he worked as a young man at the butcher trade for six years. In 1874 he emigrated to the United States, landing in San Francisco, where he remained a short time before coming to the southern part of the state. Arriving here, he took up one hundred and sixty acres of government land near Temecula, improved the property, and has made his home in this vicinity ever since. For fifteen years he was engaged in the sheep business, meeting with good success.

In 1886 Mr. Cantarini was in California united in marriage with Rosario Barrdogo, a native of this state, and the birth of eight children has blessed the union: Charles, Maggie, Mary, Peter, John, Rosa, Madeline and Lulsilia. He is an active member of the Catholic Church, and politically is a believer in the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party. He is popularly regarded as an excellent business man, a wide-awake and progressive citizen, and his worth to the community in which he lives has been ably demonstrated.

DANIEL CAMPBELL. Conspicuous among the energetic, brainy men of this age, who have acquired wealth through their own efforts, and now occupy an assured position among the leading men of the community in which they reside, is Daniel Campbell, a well-known resident of Burbank. A native of Ireland, he was born in County Antrim, December 3, 1872, and was there brought up and educated, attending the national schools during the days of his boyhood and youth.

Emigrating to America when nineteen years of age, Daniel Campbell came directly to the Pacific coast, and worked at railroading for a time in Washington, afterwards being engaged in mining in Placer county. Meeting with fair success in his occupation, he was encouraged to try his luck in the gold fields of the far North, and on March 15, 1895, found himself in Alaska. Working as a miner for himself, he met with good success, locating many claims, and finally striking the "Thirty-six above Discovery on Bonanza creek." Mr. Campbell immediately began developing the mines, employing forty men at $1.50 an hour in placer mining, there being twelve feet of dirt above the gravel. For five years he continued as a miner, in the meantime spending one winter in the States and in his old home in Ireland. He subsequently sold the mines at an advantageous price to the Northwest Transportation and Trading Company, which represented Armour & Co., who worked the claim out.

After disposing of his Alaskan interests, Mr. Campbell came to Southern California in quest of a desirable place in which to make his future home, visiting here in February, 1899, and in February, 1900, having traveled extensively in this part of the state, selected Burbank as the place in which he wished to live. He first engaged in general storage business, having a large warehouse, but soon sold out, and bought his present ranch of twenty-five acres. Mr. Campbell is much interested in fruit culture, having now thirteen acres of Valencia oranges, seven acres of the Thompson Improved Navels, while the other five acres is devoted to the raising of winter tomatoes. The improvements on his ranch are of a high order, and invariably elicit the attention and admiration of the passer-by. The house, which he employed an architect to build, is in the Mission style, with all the living rooms facing the south. It stands on an elevation one thousand feet in height, and from its broad and airy porch there is a most charming view, nowhere excelled in the valley. In the care of his ranch, Mr. Campbell takes genuine pride and pleasure, working more for occupation and recreation than for pecuniary reward. He is identified with other enterprises, also, being a stockholder in several capitalized organizations.

In Ireland, in 1900, Mr. Campbell married Margaret McPeak, a native of the Emerald Isle, and they have two children, Daniel P. and Arthur Milford.

L. H. CASE, M. D. A rising young physician and surgeon of Santa Monica, L. H. Case, M. D., is devoting his energy to making a success of his profession, and has already built up an extensive and lucrative practice. He is the descendant of an old and honored New York family and was born in that state, a son of Samuel Case, who now resides in Santa Monica.

Coming with his parents to California when ten years of age, L. H. Case completed his early education in the schools of Los Angeles county. Deciding to enter upon a medical career, he studied with the late Dr. J. J. Place, who settled in Santa Monica in 1890, remaining here until his death, in 1900. On leaving Dr. Place's office, Mr. Case entered the Hahnemann Pacific Medical College, in San Francisco, where he was graduated with the degree of M. D. in 1900. Returning to Santa Monica, Dr. Case began the practice of his profession in this place, and has since continued here as a general practitioner. Politically the doctor is an independent Republican, voting with the courage of his convictions for the best men and measures. Fraternally he belongs to Santa Monica Lodge, F. & A. FRANK P. DAVIDSON, A. B., A. M. The superintendent of the city schools of San Diego is a descendant of Scotch-Irish ancestry on the paternal side; on the maternal side his ancestors were identified with the reformation inaugurated by Martin Luther. He was born near Blairsville, Indiana county, Pa., March 2, 1853; completed studies of the common schools and attended the academy at Elders Ridge, Indiana county, that state, and in 1870 matriculated in Wittenberg College at Springfield, Clark county, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1875 with the degree of A. B., and three years later received the degree of A. M.

Professor Davidson was principal of a ward school in Springfield, Ohio, from 1875 until 1883, and then acted as assistant instructor of mathematics and history in the preparatory school of Wittenberg College; next he was engaged as an educator in Dixon county, Neb., and during the two years of his residence there, also for one more year, he carried on graduate work in Wittenberg College, making a specialty of chemistry, botany and mineralogy. For an instructor he was fortunate in securing Edgar F. Smith, Ph. D., LL. D., now officially connected with the University of Pennsylvania, and then (1885-88) instructor of natural sciences in the high school of Springfield, Ohio. On coming to California in 1888 Professor Davidson was associated with others in an effort to establish a preparatory school at Pacific Beach. The institution was founded under the name of San Diego College, but was abandoned two years later, owing to the depression of land values (the college depending for its existence and expenses upon the sale of lands).

The identification of Professor Davidson with the public-school system of San Diego dates from 1890, when he was appointed principal of the high school. Under his capable management the institution became fully accredited as a high school and grew in size from five to fourteen teachers. In 1897 he received the appointment as superintendent of the San Diego city schools, which under his oversight are in every respect modern and second to none in the state. While his work in his present office has been intelligent, progressive and in every respect resourceful, and while it has been highly gratifying to the major portion of the population, there have nevertheless been some discouraging features, prominent among these being the attitude taken in 1904 by eighteen members of the board of education, who decided to make a change in the superintendent's office during the middle of the term. When the reasons for this procedure were demanded, they were given, but proved insufficient to the general public, so that at the next election the people retired the members who had opposed him, electing member favorable to his retention in office. In the meantime the case was taken to the superior court, and afterward to the appellate court, under the title of Davidson versus Baldwin. Both courts decided in his favor, and thus established a precedent in California that a superintendent of schools cannot be dismissed during his term without just cause.

While making his home in Springfield, Ohio, Professor Davidson in 1878 married Miss Eleanor Sprecher, who was born in that city and is a graduate of the Springfield Female Seminary under Rev. Dr. Rogers. Her father, Samuel Sprecher, D. D., LL. D., one of the most gifted theologians of his day as well as one of the most prominent educators in the Lutheran denomination, was born in Washington county, Md., graduated from Gettysburg College and Seminary and was ordained to the Lutheran ministry. After having filled successful pastorates at Harrisburg and Chambersburg, Pa., in 1850 he was selected president of Wittenberg College. The institution at that time was very small and its future uncertain, but under the strong hand and splendid mental endowment of the president it became the leading college and seminary of the General Synod of the United States. When he resigned as president, after a successful service of one-quarter of a century, it was realized that his talents should be retained in the service of the college he had helped to build up, hence he was prevailed upon to become dean of the theological seminary, and in that position he remained for ten years. When finally in 1885 he resigned from active educational work, it was with the honorary title of professor emeritus. When a very aged man he came to San Diego to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Davidson, and there passed away January 10, 1906, at the age of ninety-six years. In his marriage he became allied with a prominent German Lutheran family, his wife, Catherine, being a daughter of Rev. John George Smucher, of York, Pa., and a sister of Rev. Samuel Smucher, D. D., of Gettysburg College, who for years was one of the leading members of the Lutheran denomination in the United States and the most prominent upbuilder of the institution with whose faculty he long was inseparably identified. In the family of Professor and Mrs. Davidson there are two children. The son, Charles Sprecher Davidson, B. S., a graduate of the University of California, now holds a position as manager of the land department of the California Gas and Electric Power Company of San Francisco. The daughter, Evelyn Gertrude, graduated from the University of California with the degree of A. B., and is now secretary of the Young Women's Christian Association connected with the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

On the organization of the First English Lutheran Church of San Diego Professor Davidson was chosen an elder of the congregation, which position he still fills, and in addition he has been superintendent of the Sunday-school since its organization. For years he has been a member of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce. Politically he gives his support to the Republican party. While living in Ohio he was made a Mason in Clark Lodge at Springfield, and now affiliates with San Diego Lodge No. 35, F. & A. M. The Phi Kappa Psi has his name enrolled on its membership list. Along the line of his chosen profession he holds membership in the California State Teachers' Association, is identified with the Southern California School Masters' Club, for years has been connected with the National Educational Association, and at one time held office as vice-president of the Southern California Teachers' Association, in addition to which he has been warmly interested in local teachers' institutes and in all movements for the development of educational work, not only locally, but also throughout the entire country.

ALBERT CHAMBERLAIN is actively identified with the industrial interests of Los Angeles county as superintendent of the Independent Brick Company of Inglewood. An Englishman by birth, he was born, January 26, 1863, in Cheshire, England, a son of John Chamberlain, a native of Liverpool, England, and who died in Los Angeles, Cal., in 1896. He was a man of strict integrity, and a consistent member of the Episcopal Church. He married Elizabeth Clark, who was born in Liverpool, England, and died, in 1898, in Los Angeles. Of the twelve children born of their union five sons and two daughters survive, the names of the sons being as follows: Thomas, residing in England; William C., of Winnipeg; Albert, the subject of this sketch; and Alfred and John, brick manufacturers at Los Angeles.

Coming with the family from England to Iowa in 1880, Albert Chamberlain assisted his father in clearing and improving land, remaining at home until after attaining his majority. Starting then in business for himself, he was employed in general farming and stock raising for several years, as an agriculturist meeting with satisfactory results. In 1896 he came to California, locating in Los Angeles, where for three years he was in the employ of Edward Simons, brick manufacturer. He subsequently became identified with the Los Angeles Brick Company, with which he was associated for nearly six years, the greater part of the time being general foreman of their Chovez Ravine yards, which are the largest in Southern California. In July, 1905, Mr. Chamberlain accepted his present responsible position as superintendent of the Independent Brick Company of Inglewood. This company carries on an extensive business in manufacturing building brick, their two yards having a capacity of one hundred thousand bricks.

While residing in Iowa, Mr. Chamberlain married Lillian Miller, who was born in Des Moines county, Iowa, a daughter of Hezekiah Miller. Her Grandfather Miller, a pioneer settler of Des Moines, Iowa, served in the Black Hawk Indian war. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain has been blessed by the birth of four children, namely: Elizabeth Elzora, John H., Albert W. and Samuel P. Fraternally Mr. Chamberlain is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

AGUSTIN COTA. Among the prosperous agriculturists of Los Angeles county who have inherited their estates and their occupations from their Spanish ancestors is Agustin Cota, who is actively engaged in tilling the soil on his valuable ranch, which is advantageously located two and one-half miles north of Santa Monica, and within a short distance of Ocean Park. The descendant of one of the early Spanish settlers of Southern California; he was born in Los Angeles, February 28, 1858, a son of Francesco Cota. His grandfather, Guillermo Cota, the emigrant ancestor, was born and brought up in Spain, and when a young man came to California in search of wealth.

A native of Los Angeles county, Francesco Cota has spent the larger part of his life in this vicinity, but now, an aged man of eighty-five years, is spending the closing days of his long life in Santa Ana, with a daughter. He married Martina Machado, a daughter of Augustine Machado, who, with his brother, purchased from the Spanish Government a large grant, "La Ballona," containing fifteen thousand acres of land. Further parental history may be found on another page of this work, in connection with the sketch of her brother, Jose Antonio Machado. She died when about forty-two years old. She inherited one hundred and seventy-five acres of the La Ballona ranch, a part of which was sold several years ago.

When a boy of thirteen years, Agustin Cota began earning his own living, working on ranches until he acquired a good knowledge of the various branches of agriculture, when he began farming on rented land. On becoming of age, he inherited from his mother's estate his present home ranch, consisting of seven and three-fourths acres of land, which he is carrying on successfully.

On August 6, 1888, Mr. Cota married Ynes Figurea, who was born in this county, a daughter of Ramon Figurea, who migrated from Mexico to California. Mr. and Mrs. Cota are the parents of three children, namely: Vivan, Martina and Augustine. In his political affiliations Mr. Cota is an earnest adherent of the Democratic party.

JOHN DIEDRICH. Holding a noteworthy position among the enterprising and progressive farmers of the Santa Clara valley is John Diedrich, who is prosperously engaged in his free and independent vocation on one of the most valuable and highly improved ranches in the vicinity of Oxnard. A resident of Ventura county for a quarter of a century, he has ever been a useful man in the community, taking a prominent place in the enterprises tending toward the enlightment of the people, being the friend of education, and active in all good works. He has been a tiller of the soil the greater part of his life, and still finds therein his greatest pleasure. He is a German by birth and breeding, his birth having occurred, February 27, 1852, in Hanover, where he grew to man's estate. His parents, Ludwig and Margaret (Boheme) Diedrich, were lifelong residents of the Fatherland, and were numbered among its most loyal and faithful citizens.

Completing his early education in a private school, John Diedrich subsequently served three years in the German Army, after which he was for several years employed in agricultural pursuits. In 1882, resolving to try life in a newer country, Mr. Diedrich sailed for New York, and from that city came by rail to California. Locating in the Santa Clara valley, he bought a tract of land, and having placed it in a good state of cultivation has now a well improved and valuable ranch of two hundred and forty acres, on which he is successfully carrying on his chosen work. Of recent years, Mr. Diedrich has paid much attention to the raising of beets and lima beans, at the present time having twenty-five acres of the former, while the remainder of his land is devoted to the culture of beans. The improvements upon his place are excellent and noteworthy, the barns and outbuildings being substantial and convenient, while the large, twelve-room house which he has recently erected, with its modern furnishing and equipments, is one of the finest and most attractive in this part of the county.

In 1882, Mr. Diedrich married Matilda Aschoff, who was born in Germany, a daughter of Charles and Sophia (Richer) Aschoff, who spent their entire lives in their native land, Mrs. Aschoff dying when her daughter Matilda was about a year old, and Mr. Aschoff in 1895, at the venerable age of eighty-three years. Into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Diedrich four children have been born, namely: Louis, born in July, 1883; John, born in September, 1884; William, born June 12, 1887; and Joseph, born July 13, 1889. BRUCE W. S. DYE. The Dye family is one of the best known and most highly respected in San Diego county where Bruce W. S. Dye was born. He is the son of J. S. and Mary (Warnock) Dye, the father being a native of Warren county, Ky., and the mother of Pennsylvania. Both parents are now living in Ballena, San Diego county, where they own a ranch of four hundred acres. The father is an adherent of the Democratic party and takes a prominent interest in affairs tending toward the development of his section of the state. Mrs. Dye is an active member of the Catholic Church. Her parents, William and Ellen (Derrig) Warnock, were born in Ireland and came to California in 1857, locating in San Diego county, which was then an unsettled wilderness and clearing and improving a ranch on which Mr. Warnock established himself in the dairy business and built up a most profitable trade. He was a man of much prominence locally, his death occurring in 1898 at the age of seventy-two years; his wife died a year previous, she being sixty-seven years old. They were the parents of eight children, six of whom are yet living.

Bruce W. S. Dye was one of a family of thirteen children, nine of whom lived to maturity and have homes in San Diego county. Mr. Dye's preliminary education was received in the common schools of his home district, supplemented by a course in the commercial department of the Russ high school of San Diego. After his graduation he worked for his father on the home ranch at Ballena for a short time, but his ambition being to establish himself independently he soon found opportunity to engage in ranching on a tract comprising fourteen hundred acres of land. He owned one hundred and sixty acres near Ballena, which he subsequently sold and in 1905 came to Ramona and bought the ranch of seventy acres which he now occupies, devoting himself to the occupations of dairying and fruit raising. His marriage to Lucy Frederick, a native of Iowa, occurred in 1901 and they have become the parents of one daughter, Dorothy. Mrs. Dye is a member of the Congregational Church. Mr. Dye belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows lodge, and politically affiliates with the Democratic party. He is greatly interested in all social and civic matters and is held in the highest esteem by all members of the community in which he lives.

THOMAS C. DYE. Among the many prosperous and successful farmers of San Diego county none has proved more wise and fortunate in his operations than the native-born sons. Prominent among this special number is Thomas C. Dye, of Ramona, whose remarkable success as a general farmer and dairyman has been brought about by persistent energy, well directed toil, and exceptional business ability on his part; and he is well deserving of the respect and confidence in which he is everywhere held. He was born May 30, 1875, in San Diego county, being one of a family of thirteen children, nine of whom are living. His father, J. S. Dye, of this county, was born in Kentucky, and during the Civil war served in the Southern army. His wife, whose maiden name was Mary Warnock, was born and bred in Pennsylvania.

After leaving the district school, Thomas C. Dye entered the Russ Commercial department of the San Diego High School, where he completed the course of study. Becoming familiar with the science of agriculture when young, he chose the free and independent occupation to which he was bred, beginning his career as a ranchman near his present home farm. He was subsequently employed in dairying near the coast. Returning to Ramona, Mr. Dye, in 1903, located on his present ranch of twelve hundred acres, and in its management has met with encouraging results. He is an extensive raiser of grain and cattle, and is one of the largest dairymen of this vicinity, milking about sixty-five cows daily. Practical and painstaking, he has his land under a good state of cultivation, and well furnished with substantial improvements, his ranch being one of the most attractive and valuable in the neighborhood, bearing evidence of his industry and wise management.

On October 4, 1905, Mr. Dye married Benita Frederick, a daughter of the late Benjamin Todd Frederick. Mr. Frederick was born, in 1834, in Ohio, but was brought up and educated in Pennsylvania. He settled in Iowa when a young man, and for several years owned and operated a foundry in Marshalltown, becoming one of the leading men of that city. He was a stanch Democrat in politics and active in party ranks. In 1887 he came with his family to San Diego, Cal., where for six years he was Internal Revenue collector. He died November 3, 1903, at his home in San Diego. In Iowa, in 1860, Mr. Frederick married Weltha Putnam, who was born in Ohio, in 1836, spent her early life in Michigan, and is now living, with her daughter Margaret, in San Diego. Politically Mr. Dye is a stanch Republican, uniformly casting his vote in favor of that party, and religiously he was reared in the Catholic faith. Mrs. Dye is a Congregationalist in religion.

LOUIS GAMASH. Noteworthy among the active and prosperous business men of Rodondo is Louis Gamash, well known as a contracting plumber and steam fitter. Skillful and painstaking in his work, and a thorough master of his trade, he has built up an extensive and lucrative patronage in this section of the county, having had charge of the plumbing in the larger and more important buildings here erected in the last decade. He is highly respected as a citizen, and his influence as a man of honor and integrity is felt throughout the community. A son of the late Anthony Gamash, he was born, March 26, 1869, at Waukegan, Ill.

A native of Canada, Anthony Gamash removed to Illinois when young, settling as a fisherman in Waukegan. After residing there a number of years, he removed to New Buffalo, Mich., where he continued in his favorite pursuit until his death. Subsequently going to Aurora, Ill., he was connected with the Acorn Stove Works for a year, after which he was associated with the American Well Works, in the same city, for awhile. Coming to Los Angeles county in 1897, Mr. Gamash was for two years in the employ of a Lumber Company of Redondo. In 1899 he began learning the plumber's trade with Eli Davies, of Redondo, by whom he was employed for two years. Obtaining a good knowledge of his trade, Mr. Gamash then started in business on his own account, opening his present establishment, and has since built up a large business as a contracting plumber and steam fitter. He has filled many contracts of importance, including among others the plumbing in the Chrisman House, the Buckley House, the Redondo School building, the Masonic Hall, and many others of note.

In Geneva, Ill., Mr. Gamash married Ida Page, who was born and bred in Waukegan, Ill. He began an apprenticeship to learn canning, working through the three departments, after which he was employed in Boone, and Muscatine for a time. Finally returning to Indianola he remained in that city until he was twenty-six years old, when he secured employment as brakesman on the Rock Island system. Later he secured the position of conductor and held the same for five years. In 1894 he embarked in the mercantile business and also engaged in lumber and real estate, and after his location in Long Beach, where he settled on account of impaired health, he opened a real estate office with William Verney as partner. This is now the oldest real estate firm of the place, and in the passing years they have made progress in business standing won by a financial success in handling city and county real estate. Mr. Eno has also been successful in accumulating property independent of his business connections with Mr. Verney.

His marriage to Miss May Johnson, a native daughter of Santa Ana, occurred in Santa Barbara, and they have become the parents of two children, Gladys and Mildred. Mrs. Hoffman is a member of and active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Hoffman is a Master Mason of the Oxnard lodge, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is past grand master in the Oxnard lodge, and is secretary of the district department encampment; also belongs to the Oxnard Lodge M. W. A., of which he is clerk. Politically he advocates the principles of the Republican party and takes an active interest in all matters of civic and social interest in the community of which he is a leading citizen.

F. J. HUMPHREY was one in a family of three children born to DeWitt C. and Flore (La Salle) Humphrey, both natives of New York. The parents moved successively from New York state to Iowa, Kansas, Texas, Nebraska, and lastly to California, where they are still living, their home being in Santa Barbara county on a fine ranch, and where they carry on a ranching and stock-raising business. Mr. Humphrey joined the Masonic Lodge in the East. Mrs. Humphrey is interested in church work of various kinds and belongs to the Presbyterian denomination. In politics both father and son are Republican. The subject of this biography was born near Des Moines, Iowa, May 26, 1876, and was but twelve years of age when his parents brought him to Santa Barbara county. Here he received his education in high school, and when school days were over began his business career as a dairyman near Santa Barbara, but nine years ago removed to the Carpenteria valley, and for two years past has been on the splendid ranch which is now his home, all of the 160 acres being planted to beans.

In 1902 Mr. Humphrey was married to Miss Bessie Lewis, a native daughter of California and a daughter of the late Mr. Lewis, whose Lewis Lima beans are noted as a superior seed bean, and in the culture of which Mr. Humphrey is now giving his careful attention. There is one child, a daughter, Lucile, in the family. Young and successful, Mr. Humphrey is admired for his fine personal qualities and affable manners as well as for his keen business ability, and is highly esteemed by every member of the community in which he lives.

JOHN PRATHER HAYS. Long identified with the south, the Hays family became established in Kentucky during the pioneer days of the settlement of that state. Charles Hays and his wife, Catherine Prather, were both natives of the Blue Grass state, and he followed the trade of a tanner in addition to farming pursuits. During the period of their residence in Pulaski county their son, John Prather, was born January 26, 1833. One year later the young wife passed away. In 1839 the family removed to Missouri and settled upon a tract of land in Saline county, where in 1849 the father died at the age of forty-five years. The year after his death John P., his son, who meanwhile had received his education in the high school at Sweetsprings, Saline county, started across the plains with a mule team on a tour of inspection through the west. Returning via Panama in 1851, he gave favorable reports of the coast regions, and his arguments were so persuasive that others were induced to take the trip across the plains. In 1852 a very large train traveled westward with ox-teams and wagons, and he was one of the emigrants. For a time he remained at Milwaukee, Clackamas county, Ore., and worked at the lumber business.

Removing to the Puget Sound region in 1854, Mr. Hays took up a claim and improved the same. Eventually he disposed of that property and bought land three miles from Olympia, where he not only improved a farm, but also devoted considerable attention to the timber industry. Finally, desiring to retire from active cares, he traded his land for property at Long Beach and June 15, 1896, arrived in the city which is now his home. During the period of his residence in the Puget Sound region he married, March 1, 1855, Miss Caroline Scott, who was born in Tennessee, crossed the plains in 1852 as a member of the expedition to which Mr. Hays belonged, and died at Long Beach, October 20, 1904, at the age of seventy-five years. Six children were born of their union, two of whom died at an early age. Four are now living, as follows: Charles P., of Long Beach; William T., who is a member of the firm of Cobb & Hays at No. 115 West Ocean avenue, Long Beach; Nellie, wife of Frank Folsom, a lumberman living at Seattle, Wash.; and Sadie, who married Ira Kneelan, of Tacoma, Wash. In politics Mr. Hays affiliates with the Republican party, and fraternally in former years he was an active worker in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Until his retirement he was always more or less interested in the handling of property and bought and sold large tracts. In addition he owned mining properties, and still retains large interests in mines in San Bernardino county.

JOHN B. JUSTICE. An enterprising young business man of Los Angeles, John B. Justice, can also claim the distinction of being a native son of California. He was born in Downey, Los Angeles county, July 17, 1870, the son of William Justice, for many years supervisor of the fourth district, San Diego county. His boyhood was passed in his native town, in Texas, Artesia, Cal., and Richland, San Diego county, places where his parents lived at intervals. His education was obtained in the public schools of the several towns and at the old college of Escondido.

After leaving school he began farming, and after some years built a blacksmith shop on his own ranch and did his own work and that of the neighbors. This led him to accept employment in the blacksmithing establishment of Alexander Stewart in Escondido, and later to the management of a shop at Valley Center, for his employer.

In 1898 Mr. Justice went to San Diego to become chief engineer of the court house, which position he resigned in 1901 to locate in Los Angeles and start in business for himself. Mr. Justice is now proprietor of an extensive carriage and wagon manufacturing and automobile repairing shop, the Exchange Carriage Works, 208 East Seventh street. He is the sole agent in Los Angeles for the Baxter Radial Brake attachment for vehicles, a device of its kind unequalled in the market.

While in San Diego Mr. Justice married Miss Ethel V. Holloway, a native of Illinois. Of this union there are three children, Ross, Gertrude and Justine. Fraternally Mr. Justice is a member of the order, Woodmen of the World.

GEORGE WASHINGTON HURTT. Descended from an old eastern family, George Washington Hurtt was born at Washington Court-House, Ohio, March 15, 1854, being a son of George and Maria (Kern) Hurtt. In boyhood he was a pupil in the schools of Connecticut and Michigan, and after leaving school on the completion of the study of the common branches he took up the trade of a shoemaker. On completing his apprenticeship he took up work as a journeyman and continued at the occupation for a number of years. Later, however, he took up photography, which he combined with view work, and followed the same for eleven years.

On his arrival in California, during the month of July, 1887, Mr. Hurtt settled in San Bernardino, where for several years he worked as a clerk for the Santa Fe Railroad Company. Meanwhile, during the fall of 1890, he had purchased ten acres of land near town. The land being in its wild state, required great care and constant labor, and when he resigned from the employ of the railroad he began to give his entire time to developing the land. A suitable system of irrigation was installed; a neat country house was built, a barn was erected, and fruit and shade trees were planted. During 1898 he embarked in the business of florist, his first step being the erection of a number of greenhouses with a few hundred feet of glass. In these buildings he made a specialty of raising early vegetables for the city markets as well as flowers and plants for private sale. Since the inauguration of the business it has been necessary to enlarge the plant and he now has about sixteen thousand feet of glass in use. During 1904 he gave up the vegetable business, since which time he has concentrated his attention upon flowers and plants of all varieties.

To facilitate the sale of the flowers and accommodate the large number of patrons of the business, he has established a store in San Bernardino, adjoining the Southern Pacific depot, where he conducts a large trade not only with people of the city and surrounding country, but also with visitors from other sections and tourists from the east. The large business which he has established furnishes a speaking evidence of his ability and keen judgment, and it is generally recognized that he not only possesses artistic skill of a high order, but also the financial acumen necessary to satisfactory results in any business.

In his work he has had the co-operation of his wife and their only child, Helen A., both of whom possess a love for the beautiful and artistic. Mrs. Hurtt, prior to her marriage in August, 1882, bore the name of Anna B. Lane, her parents being William and Maria Lane.

ANDREW JOHNSON. Since 1901 Andrew Johnson, assistant foreman of the repair track at the Santa Fe shops, has been holding that position in San Bernardino, proving himself a fine mechanic, a valued employe and an enterprising citizen. He is a native of Norway, having been born January 3, 1868, near Christiansand, in that country, the son of Jens and Maria (Gootormson) Johnson, both of whom were born and died in Norway. The son, Andrew, is the only member of the family now living in the United States.

The youngest of four children, he was reared on his father's farm and attended the common schools until fifteen years of age, when he became apprenticed as a carpenter and builder and followed that occupation until 1887. Desiring to come to America, and settle in the country that had furnished so many of his countrymen with enlarged opportunities for business success, Mr. Johnson left his native land and arrived in Chicago in 1887, where he secured employment in the Chicago & Northwestern railway shops as a car repairer. He remained there until 1896, then came to the western coast and located in San Bernardino and became connected with the Santa Fe company, being occupied with the same class of work that he had done in Chicago. He was finally made assistant foreman of the repair track and is now occupying that position. He resides with his family in a home which he owns, located at 1165 Fifth street. By his marriage in 1893 he was united with Miss Olivia Salversen, a native of Norway, and of this union four children have been born, namely, Edna, Norman, Mildred and Otto. Fraternally Mr. Johnson is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters, and religiously belongs to the Lutheran Church. He is an advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, takes an active interest in all matters of social and civic interest and is held in high esteem by his fellow citizens.

JAMES D. KNEEN. Among the active and enterprising citizens of Los Angeles county, conspicuous for their ability and worth, is James D. Kneen, who is an important factor in promoting the industrial interests of Venice, Los Angeles, and the surrounding towns and cities. In partnership with Mr. F. Neuman, he is carrying on a large and substantial business as a contractor for cement construction, employing a large force of men, many of whom are skilled mechanics. A Manxman by birth, he was born on the Isle of Man, where his father, James Kneen, spent his entire life, engaged in tilling the soil, the occupation in which his ancestors had for many generations been employed.

The oldest child of the parental household, James D. Kneen began life for himself when about twenty years of age, having previously learned the business of a telegraph operator. Ambitious to see the world, he crossed the Atlantic ocean, landing in New York City. Proceeding directly to Chicago, he secured a position with the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railway. He then came to the Pacific coast, settling first in San Francisco, and gradually working his way down the coast to Los Angeles county. For eight years after coming to this locality, Mr. Kneen was in the employ of Mr. F. Neuman, being superintendent for him until he was admitted to an equal partnership in the business. This firm is well known all along the coast as the leading contractors in cement construction, and are kept busily employed in filling their immense contracts, Mr. Neuman having his headquarters in Los Angeles, and Mr. Kneen in Venice. This firm employs about a hundred men. Politically Mr. Kneen is a Republican, and fraternally he is a Mason and an Elk.

GUY HIBBITS. Guy Hibbits, a well known and highly respected successful ranchman of the Lompoc valley, who stands high in the esteem of his fellow men, is the son of one of the early pioneers of the Lompoc section of the state, John B. Hibbits, who was born in Logan county, Ohio, August 21, 1845, and in which state he received his education. The elder Hibbits was married to Caroline Rehm, also a native Ohio woman, and to them were born two children, the son who is the subject of this sketch, and a daughter, Grace, who married John Arkley, lives in Santa Barbara, and has two children. The mother died in 1905 at the age of fifty-three years and the father now lives with his son. He was a worker at the carpenter trade in his younger years, and when the war between the North and South broke out he enlisted in Company A, Eighty-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteers and served therein four years. He took part in the battles of Bull Run, Gettysburg and Chancellorsville and was also at Atlanta with Sherman. After the close of the war he again took up his work at carpentering in Ohio, and in 1871 went to Nebraska, where he filed on a piece of government land. Spending a period of nine years in that state, he then decided to come to California, and bought a small piece of land at Lompoc. He also took up a piece of government land here, but sold this latter piece. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. lodge at Lompoc and is an ardent Republican in politics, while religiously his belief is in the articles of the Presbyterian faith.

Fillmore county, Neb., was the place of the birth of Guy Hibbits, and the date August 18, 1874, he being but six years of age when he removed with his parents to Lompoc, where he received his education in the common schools. When his school days were over he first did general farming on his father's ranch and also worked for others at times. As soon as he had reached the age of his majority he started out for himself, renting the ranch of eighty acres upon which he now lives and which is now his own property. He also possesses the title to sixty acres of pasture land in the valley. On the home ranch twenty acres are devoted to an apple orchard of the winter varieties of the fruit, and the remainder is bean, alfalfa and hay land. In 1904 he was married to Miss Jennie Silsby, a native of the state of Maine, and to them one child has been born, Forest Hibbits. Mr. Hibbits fraternates with the I. O. O. F. Lodge at Lompoc, in which he has taken all of the degrees; in politics he gives his support to the Republican party, and belongs to the Presbyterian denomination of churches.

J. D. MACNEIL. Actively identified with the industrial prosperity of Compton, Los Angeles county, is J. D. MacNeil, who is carrying on a thriving business as a blacksmith. Of sturdy Scotch ancestry, he inherited in a large measure those habits of application, thrift and true economy that formed the foundation for his successful career, and won for him the honored title of a self-made man. A son of the late Donald MacNeil, he was born, August 15, 1860, in Nova Scotia, and was there bred and educated.

Born in Scotland, Donald MacNeil remained in his native land until after his marriage, when with his wife he emigrated to America, settling in Nova Scotia. Purchasing land, he was there employed in agricultural pursuits the remainder of his life, both he and his good wife dying on the farm which they improved from its primitive wildness. They were people of influence in the community in which they dwelt, and were faithful members of the Catholic Church. Of the eight children born of their union, six survive, two of the boys being residents of California.

Brought up on the home farm, J. D. MacNeil received a limited education in the common schools of Nova Scotia, and at the age of seventeen years began learning the blacksmith's trade, serving an apprenticeship of four years. Emigrating to the United States in 1885, he remained in Boston for a little more than two years, working at his trade as a journeyman. Coming then to California, Mr. MacNeil was employed in Los Angeles for a time, after which, in February, 1888, he located in Compton, where for one season he worked in the harvest fields. The following year, with a partner, he operated a blacksmith's shop in this place. Going to Washington in 1890, he spent a short time in Tacoma, afterwards being located for awhile on the east side of the Cascades. Returning to Compton, Mr. MacNeil opened his present shop, and has since carried on an extensive and lucrative business as a blacksmith and general repairer of machinery of all kinds, his mechanical skill and ingenuity being unquestioned, and his patronage being large.

In June, 1896, Mr. MacNeil married Margaret McDonald, who was born in Nova Scotia, which was also the birthplace of her father, Donald McDonald. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. MacNeil six children have been born, namely: Donald E. S., born April 15, 1897; Mary F., born September 28, 1898; Catherine F., born December 27, 1899; Edward N., born February 7, 1901; Margaret J., born January, 1903; and Annie E., born July 31, 1904. Politically Mr. MacNeil is Independent, voting with the courage of his convictions for the best men and measures. Fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks; of the Maccabees of the World; and of the Fraternal Aid. True to the religious faith of his ancestors, he is a member of the Catholic Church.

JEREMIAH McELVAIN. Born in Kalamazoo, Mich., November 21, 1829, Jeremiah McElvain is a son of Jeremiah, Sr., who was born in Pennsylvania, but removed to Ohio at an early age, and there married Sarah Bell. Shortly after his marriage he removed to the wilderness of Michigan, where he took up a tract of one hundred and sixty acres as a pre-emption claim and began the arduous task of transforming the raw land into a productive farm. While he was still a young man death terminated his labors in 1840. His wife survived him for a great many years, living to the advanced age of ninety-four.

When only eleven years of age Jeremiah McElvain was orphaned by the death of his father, It immediately became necessary for him to earn his own livelihood, and for a long period he worked on farms in the home neighborhood, meanwhile attending school on such few occasions as the work made possible. When twenty years of age, in the spring of 1850, he joined a company of one hundred and fifty emigrants bound for California. The journey was made with oxen and wagons as far as Salt Lake, where winter quarters were established. In the spring of 1851 the remainder of the journey was made to Sacramento, where the large expedition arrived in safety. For a time Mr. McElvain was employed on a cattle ranch in that locality. Next he came to San Bernardino county and engaged in ranching. On leaving this locality he went to Stockton, from which point he engaged in freighting for four years. Later, while still freighting, he made his headquarters at Sonora and Mariposa. Eventually he sold his teams and returned to San Bernardino county, where in 1859 he married Minerva Morse, a native of Illinois and a daughter of Moses Morse, a pioneer of 1853 in San Bernardino county.

After his marriage Mr. McElvain established his home in San Bernardino, from which point he engaged in freighting to Salt Lake and Montana. With a six-mule team he engaged in hauling provisions and merchandise to remote points.

It was not until 1891 that he sold his equipment and retired from freighting, since which time he has lived quietly in San Bernardino, superintending his interests in this city, where he has built and still owns several houses, including his attractive residence at No. 709 D street. Genial and affable, bluff and hearty, vigorous in spite of advanced years and a strenuous existence, he impresses a stranger as one who has seen all sides of life and has gathered a vast fund of information beneath a modest and unobtrusive manner. In his habits he is temperate, in character upright, in citizenship progressive, yet averse to office-holding, in politics stanchly Republican, and in friendship warm and helpful. In his family there were eight children, seven of whom attained maturity, namely: William H., who is superintendent of the streets of San Bernardino; Jefferson C., assessor of San Bernardino county; Frank B., who is engaged in teaming; George, deceased; John C., a locomotive engineer; Charles, who is engaged in mining; and Jane, who married C. R. Knapp and resides in San Bernardino.

COLONEL HARRY S. JOHNSTONE, one of the most prominent citizens of San Diego, has been a resident of Southern California since 1887. He was born in Chicago, Ill., April 3, 1872, the oldest of three children, and received his preliminary education in the public schools of his native state. The family removed to Southern California in 1887 and located in San Diego, where the father, James S., engaged in business for many years. Harry S. Johnstone completed his education in the public schools of this city and also attended the college at Pacific Beach. In young manhood he learned the plumber's trade under the instruction of his father, and became a member of the firm of J. S. Johnstone & Co. In October, 1904, he became manager of the San Diego Plumbing Co., and in April of the following year purchased the business.

In San Diego Colonel Johnstone married Miss Agnes Fritz, who was born in Oshkosh, Wis. He is prominent in fraternal circles, having been a member of Sunset Lodge No. 328, I. O. O. F., some years ago, and is now chief patriarch of the encampment and past captain of the canton, and is also associated with the Daughters of Rebekahs. He is also a member of the Woodmen of the World, Foresters of America, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and the Masons. He was initiated in Silver Gate Lodge No. 296 and has since been raised to the degrees of Royal Arch, Knight Templar and Mystic Shrine, being a member of Al Malaikah Temple, and also belongs to the Order of Eastern Star. Politically he is a Republican, and in the line of his business he belongs to the Master Plumbers' Association.

In 1890 Mr. Johnstone enlisted in Company B, Ninth Regiment of California Infantry, and upon its reorganization was placed in the Seventh Regiment. He served as sergeant for some time. May 5, 1898, he volunteered for service in the Spanish-American war and served as sergeant in Company B, Seventh Regiment California Infantry until mustered out of service December 2, 1898. The colonel acquired his title through his association with the Third Regiment of California militia, having served from 1903 to 1905 as major, and in January of the last named year was elected to the position of colonel.

ROBERT CATHCART. In reading over the events and happenings associated with the life of Mr. Cathcart one immediately recognizes the attributes that individualized his character, namely faithfulness to every duty and his purpose of will. It was in 1853, when a youth of seventeen years, that he accompanied his parents to California, and from the year 1876 until his death, November 17, 1904, he was a continuous resident of the Pomona valley. As a pioneer of this community he took a prominent part in measures of an upbuilding and progressive nature, in fact no one labored more zealously to bring this section of Los Angeles county into public notice than did Mr. Cathcart. His efforts along this line were of a practical nature, and a prospective settler in viewing his thrifty ranch was almost invariably counted as a newcomer. As a result of his untiring efforts an interest in horticulture was established which transformed the barren valley into a garden spot, and during his more active years his ranch and nursery were counted among the show places in this part of the county.

A native of Missouri, Robert Cathcart was born in St. Louis June 3, 1837, a son of Robert and Hannah (Lee) Cathcart, both of whom were natives of Scotland. Coming to the United States during his youth, the father located in St. Louis, Mo., where as an engineer his services were in great demand. To him was given the credit of building the first steam flouring mill ever erected in that now flourishing city, and in other enterprises he was identified in a substantial way with its early upbuilding efforts. He keenly appreciated the city's advantageous position on the river, and was largely interested in steamboating between St. Louis and New Orleans, owning the packet line which he ran between these two points.

Until he was about seventeen years of age Robert Cathcart remained in his native city, and in the mean time received an excellent education in the schools of St. Louis. Upon the removal of the family to California in 1853 he also came and settled with them on the ranch which the father purchased in Santa Cruz county. Eight years later he opened a general merchandise establishment in Santa Cruz, which he conducted two years, and then, from 1863 to 1866, was proprietor of a livery stable in that town. Thereafter he again associated himself with mercantile interests, and for ten years, or until 1876, conducted a general store. Selling out his stock and good-will that year he came to Los Angeles county and settled in the San Jose valley about two miles north of Pomona. From A. R. Meserve he purchased a hundred acre tract of land which was about as uninviting and unpromising as it is possible to imagine, but with a purpose he set to work to make it habitable and productive, and that his energy was well expended all will concede who have followed his career. During his later years he disposed of a large part of his ranch, and at the time of his death owned only thirty acres of the original tract, and of this twenty-seven acres were in oranges and the remainder in walnuts. He was very successful in the sinking of artesian wells, and at one time had ten wells on his property. In 1889 he with others was instrumental in securing a contract for piping water into Pomona, an innovation which was a distinct advantage to the citizens.

In 1867, in Santa Cruz, Mr. Cathcart was married to Miss Augusta Durr, who was born in Ohio July 13, 1844, one of six children born to her parents, and besides herself only two of the number are now living, a brother and sister, the latter a resident of San Francisco. When a child of eleven years Mrs. Cathcart accompanied her parents, John and Margaret Durr, to California, coming by way of the isthmus and thence by boat to Monterey county. The mother did not long survive the tedious journey to the west, but the father, who was a native of Germany, lived until 1871. Four children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cathcart, all of whom are living with one exception and in homes of their own. Mrs. Frank Baynham lives in Los Angeles and is the mother of one child; John Lee married Miss Amy Green, and with his wife and two children lives in San Bernardino; Charles H. is deceased; Robert married Miss Bessie Loebier and is also a resident of San Bernardino. Politically Mr. Cathcart was a stanch supporter of Democratic principles. Throughout Los Angeles county Mr. Cathcart was well known for his whole-souled generosity and kindly disposition, ever in touch with the needs of his friends and associates, and he enjoyed the confidence of a large circle of business and social associates.

PORTER BROTHERS. Conspicuous among the more active and able agriculturists of Ventura county are the Porter Brothers, of Oxnard, A. T., Charles W. and A. A. Porter. Brought up on a farm, these brothers were trained in the various branches of agriculture from their boyhood days, and since assuming possession of their present ranch in the Santa Clara valley have carried on general farming in a systematic and thorough manner, placing the land under a state of most excellent culture, and from it reaping large and profitable harvests. They rank among the public-spirited and liberal men of the township, and are never backward in supporting enterprises which will prove of benefit to the community. Sons of Henry Starr Porter, they were all born on Catawba Island, Ottawa county, Ohio, coming from honored New England ancestry.

A native of Connecticut, Henry Starr Porter was born February 16, 1839, and when but an infant was taken to Ohio by his parents, who, settling in a wild, uncultivated country, courageously endured all the trials and privations of pioneer life. Educated in the pioneer schools of Ohio, he began life as a farmer and trapper, being thus engaged until after the breaking out of the Civil war. Enlisting in 1862 in Company E, Eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, he took an active part in many of the most severe engagements of the conflict, including the battles of Fredericksburg, Fairfax Court House, the Wilderness and Gettysburg. Severely wounded at the latter battle, he was for six months confined in the hospital at Newark, N. J. Being then left with but little use of his right arm, he was honorably discharged from the army, and returned to his Ohio home. A short time later he removed with his family to Sedgwick county, Kans., where for fourteen years he and his sons were successfully employed in farming and cattle dealing. Since coming to California, in 1891, he has lived with his sons, and, although practically retired from active pursuits, assists in the management of the ranch, he and his good wife both performing their full share of labor. He is a stanch Republican in politics, and while in Kansas took a prominent part in local affairs, serving as school trustee and road superintendent, and filling offices of minor importance. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Henry S. Porter married Eliza Dove, who was born in England, March 16, 1841, and of their union seven children were born, namely: Caroline A., who died in infancy; A. T., born May 24, 1861; Lydia A., who died in 1896; Charles W., born January 7, 1869; A. A., born August 11, 1870, and Effie and Alice, twins, born April 24, 1875. Mrs. Porter is a woman of great personal worth, a helpmate in every sense implied by the term, and is a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Spending the larger part of their earlier lives in Sedgwick county, Kans., A. T., C. W. and A. A. Porter there gained their early education, attending the district schools. As soon as old enough they began assisting their father in his care of the farm, and on attaining their majority the older boys were engaged with him in cattle raising and dealing. In 1891 the parents sold the two ranches which they there owned and came to Ventura county, settling with their children. Very soon afterward the sons bought their present ranch of thirty acres, which is one of the most attractive and desirable in the Santa Clara valley, and at once began its improvement. Recently they have installed an irrigating plant, which has proved of inestimable value to them in the raising of beans, which they make a specialty, as during 1905 their average, under irrigation, was raised from twenty-six sacks, of eighty-four pounds each, to forty sacks per acre, a noteworthy increase. Inheriting to an eminent degree the industry, thrift and energetic ability of their New England ancestors, they are meeting with well deserved success in their operations, and are valued members of the community. Like their honored father, they are stanch supporters of the principles of the Republican party.

S. A. REED, of Escondido, is cashier of the First National Bank of Escondido, has for the past twelve years been city treasurer, and holds the office of secretary in the Chamber of Commerce, of which he was one of the original organizers. He was born May 18, 1868, in Kendall county, Ill., the son of Ansel and Eliza M. (Wright) Reed, both natives of New York state. Mrs. Reed was a daughter of S. Wright, a pioneer farmer of Illinois, who served in the Civil war, and she now resides with her son in Escondido, at the age of seventy-nine years old. Reuben Reed, the grandfather of S. A., was born in New York, and removed with his family to Illinois, locating on the site of the present city of Chicago when there were but two houses there, and his son, Levi, now a resident of Portland, Ore., was the first white child born in the city. After the death of the grandparents the children were left without a home and were bound out, as was the custom in those days, and Ansel Reed was taken by a family at Big Grove, when about eight years old. While there the Black Hawk war broke out and he with other settlers were saved by the Indian chief, Shobbana, and they escaped to the fort at Ottawa. After the war the family returned to the farm and he remained there until he had attained his majority. His first position paid him $8 a month, and with the money which he saved he was enabled to buy a piece of government land at $1.25 an acre. He broke the fields and planted crops, and was obliged to haul the wheat which he harvested forty-six miles to the market in Chicago, using ox-teams and being obliged to ford streams, the trip requiring a week's time. At the time of his death, when sixty-eight years old, he owned several hundred acres of land. Politically he was a Republican, and belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The family of which S. A. Reed was a member consisted of five sons, and of his four brothers, Frank A. is engaged in mining in San Bernardino; Emory D. is a contractor in Los Angeles; Charles E. is in the livery business in San Diego; and Orville E. lives on the home farm in Illinois. Reared on the farm near Plattville, Ill., where he was born, Mr. Reed first attended the public schools, then the Morris Normal and Scientific School, and later graduated from the Northern Indiana State Normal School in Valparaiso. A year later, in 1888, he came to California, locating in Escondido, and was first employed as clerk and bookkeeper for Graham & Steiner, afterwards Steiner & Co., and soon rose to the position of bookkeeper and cashier. In 1905 he resigned to become cashier of the First National Bank, he having been one of the organizers of the institution. The banking company was incorporated in May, 1905, with a capital stock of $25,000, and opened for business November 4 of the same year. A general banking business is transacted and the institution is considered one of the most stable in Southern California.

The marriage of Mr. Reed occurred in Escondido, uniting him with Miss Sarah E. Sherwin, a native of Lincoln, Neb., and they have two children, Harold B. and Edwin L. Mrs. Reed is an active member of the Christian Church in Los Angeles. Fraternally Mr. Reed is an Odd Fellow and belongs to Themis Lodge No. 146, K. of P., of which he is past chancellor. Politically he is a Republican.

PHILIP A. BETTENS, of Escondido, is one of the most highly esteemed residents of the community in which he lives. A native of Indiana, he was born July 31, 1837, in Vevay, being the third in line of direct descent to bear the name. His paternal grandfather, Philip A. Bettens, first, was born, reared and married in Switzerland, being descended from an old French family of prominence. With his wife, whose maiden name was Rose Massard, he immigrated to the United States, and with sixteen other families settled in Indiana, becoming an original householder of the town which they named Vevay, in remembrance of the Swiss town from which this little band of colonists emigrated. There he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives, both attaining the ripe old age of four score years.

Born in Vevay, Ind., Philip A. Bettens, second, grew to manhood on the farm which his father cleared from the forest. He followed farming until his death, when he was but thirty-four years old. He married Charlotte Secretan, a native of Switzerland; she survived her husband, passing away at the age of seventy years. Of the two sons and one daughter born of this marriage, two children are living, Charles, of Vevay, Ind.; and Philip A.

Brought up on the ancestral homestead which his grandfather cleared from the wilderness, Philip A. Bettens, third, began life for himself as a boy of thirteen years. In 1850 he began running on flat boats on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, subsequently making two trips to New Orleans as cook. He became an expert boatman, and for two years was employed as skiff man, going ashore to take the line, and check the boat. He was afterwards engaged as second pilot until 1858, when he settled in New Orleans for the winter, remaining there until June, 1859. Returning then to Indiana, Mr. Bettens married and settled as a farmer in Florence, where he took a leading part in local affairs, serving two terms as justice of the peace and being county commissioner for some time.

Coming to California in 1887, Mr. Bettens was employed for a few months in the laying out of the Coronado gardens at San Diego. Going thence to San Pasqual, he was there employed in general ranching from June 1887, until August, 1888. He then located in Escondido and purchased his present ranch, in the improvement of which he has spared neither time nor expense. He has set out three acres of deciduous fruits and grapes, and three acres of oranges and lemons, in the cultivation of which he is very successful. Besides this he owns two valuable farms in this vicinity, both well improved. For two years after coming here, Mr. Bettens was agent for the Sweetwater nursery, and was subsequently successfully engaged in the nursery business on his own account for five years.

In Indiana, in 1859, Mr. Bettens married Clara A. Dufour, who was born in Vevay, a daughter of Vincent Dufour, a native of Vevay, Switzerland, and a farmer by occupation. He married Ann Brisbee, a native of Kentucky, and they had seven children. Mrs. Bettens died on the home farm in Florence, Ind., November 10, 1880, leaving six children, Philip A., Jr., who was graduated from West Point with the class of 1885, was made second lieutenant of the Ninth Cavalry at Fort Robinson, Neb.; he was wounded in the knee at the Indian fight at the Roseburg agency, contracted la grippe while lying without shelter with the mercury at thirty below zero, which left him with a cough, from which he never recovered, his death occurring at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., in 1892, at the age of thirty-one years and five months; Bertha is the wife of E. DeBell, of Hollywood; Aimie died June 11, 1896, aged thirty years and eleven months; Estella became the wife of Frank Storm, of Escondido; Albert is manager of the California hotel, San Francisco; and Rodolph is manager of St. James hotel, at San Jose.

GUISEPPE MUSCIO. The dairy industry in which Mr. Muscio is engaged has grown from insignificant proportions to important dimensions and occupies his entire time and close attention. Since about 1901 he has made his home on a ranch in Santa Barbara county, near Los Alamos, where he leases five thousand acres of land. He owns a tract of ten hundred and eighty acres near Garey available for cultivation, and he carries in his pasture about one thousand head of stock. In his home place, known as the Tinequac ranch, which contains twenty-four hundred acres, he farms about two hundred acres and makes a specialty of cheese-making. The two dairies contain three hundred milch cows and the output of cheese and cream is of the richest quality and also most abundant in quantity. Of his three brothers now in California two are successfully engaged in the dairy business. His father, Theodore Muscio, who is now eighty-two years of age, has never left his native land, and now makes his home in Somao, Switzerland. The mother bore the maiden name of Eugenia Reghetti and lived to be seventy. One of nine children comprising the parental family, Guisseppe Muscio was born in Switzerland March 10, 1847.

Coming to America at the age of seventeen years, in 1864, Mr. Muscio proceeded at once, via the Isthmus, to California, and settled in Petaluma, Cal., near which town he secured work on a dairy farm. From the first he was frugal, industrious and persevering, and in 1868 he made a start for himself. For a time he remained in Marin county, but in 1872 he went to San Luis Obispo county and worked at the dairy business until 1884, the year of his arrival in Santa Barbara county. For a time he superintended large landed holdings in company with two partners, who bought eight thousand acres, and as the years passed he gained a wide reputation for the growing importance of his dairy interests.

Politically Mr. Muscio is a Republican, and for six years he filled the office of justice of the peace at Sisquoc. Since identifying himself with the Masons in 1883 he has been warmly interested in the order, belonging to Santa Maria lodge and the chapter, of which latter he is a charter member, and was formerly a member of the chapter at San Luis Obispo. He also belongs to the Knights Templar Commandery at the last-mentioned place. In his religious belief he was reared in the Catholic faith, and has always remained true to its teachings. His marriage in 1875 united him with Miss Adeline Stone, a native of California, and to them were born the following children: Lillian, George Milton (deceased), Delmo, Joseph and Edward.

ARCHIE J. ATWATER. One of the most successful business men of Los Angeles county is Archie J. Atwater, senior member of the firm of Atwater & Carl, known in Long Beach and Alamitos Beach as purveyors of staple and fancy groceries. By birth Mr. Atwater is a native of Illinois, born in Moline July 5, 1864, a son of Samuel and Mary Jane Atwater. Samuel Atwater was a man of considerable mechanical ability, which he exercised with telling effect during the twelve years in which he was foreman of the Moline Plow Company in Moline, Ill. After the death of his wife, which occurred in Joplin, Mo., he came to California, and passed his remaining days, his life coming to a close in Pomona. The early boyhood days of Archie J. Atwater are associated with the manufacturing town of Moline, where, after his school days were over, he began work in the plow works of which his father was foreman. As master of the molder's trade, which he learned while associated with his father, he had no fear of lacking for employment, and followed this trade throughout the remainder of his residence in Illinois. From the latter state he went to Independence, Kans. While in Independence he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Swearingen, but as the climate in Kansas did not agree with his wife's health he removed to California soon afterward. The Atwater home comprises three children, Edna, Dwight and Marian.

Mr. Atwater's first location in this state was at Escondido, San Diego county, where he followed the blacksmith's trade until his removal to Pomona, Los Angeles county. In the latter place he worked at his trade for about a year and a half, and about the same length of time had charge of a department in the Pomona Manufacturing Company, a co-operative enterprise, of which he was one of the organizers and a stockholder. After a residence of about three years in Pomona he came to Long Beach and purchased the grocery business then owned by Carl & Wilson. After carrying on the business single-handed for nine months Mr. Atwater sold a half-interest to the senior member of the old firm, since which time business has been carried on under the name of Atwater & Carl. To such an extent were they prospered in their affairs in Long Beach that they decided to open a similar store in Alamitos Beach, a decision which they put into effect in May, 1905, at which time they located in the new building at the corner of Fourth and Almond streets, which they had erected for the purpose. The store in the latter place is under the management of Mr. Atwater, while the business in Long Beach is in charge of Mr. Carl.

Politically Mr. Atwater is a Democrat, but is in no sense of the word a partisan, supporting the candidates of his chosen party in national elections, and in local matters giving his vote and influence to the man best fitted for the office in question, irrespective of party name. Fraternally he is associated with the Modern Woodmen of America, belonging to the camp at Long Beach, and in religion is identified with the Christian Church.

SETH GLIDDEN. It is as the owner of Glidden flats that Seth Glidden is best known in Avalon, where he has resided for several years and identified himself with the upbuilding of that place. On his father's side he is of English extraction, his great-grandfather having emigrated from that country to Maine in an early day. The succeeding members of the family in direct line have been natives of Maine, the father, Enoch, being engaged in agricultural pursuits and lumbering operations during his lifetime, his death occurring when the son Seth was but fourteen years of age. The mother, of Scotch antecedents, was before her marriage Olive Clark. She became the mother of nine children, five of whom are living, and her death occurred in Massachusetts.

The only member of the family living in California, Seth Glidden was born January 22, 1841, in Lincoln county, Me., and was reared on a New England farm near Olney, where he attended the public schools until eighteen years of age. Then going to Lowell, Mass., he learned the carpenter's trade and engaged in contracting and building, steadily increasing his business until he employed as high as forty men at one time. In 1885 he came to Pasadena, which at that time did not boast a brick building: Here he took building contracts and engaged in real estate transactions, platting and putting on the market one addition, from the sale of which he realized handsome returns. In 1897 Mr. Glidden became interested in Catalina Island and two years later purchased the site upon which he erected the flats. He also built a storehouse on Maiden Lane which extends through to Olive street, and is engaged in contracting for the erection of residences at Avalon. He still owns his residence in Pasadena.

The marriage of Mr. Glidden, which occurred in Lowell, Mass., united him with Martha E. Groves, who was born in Salisbury, Addison county, Vt., and reared in Lowell, Mass., where her father, S. H. Groves, was engaged in merchandising, having formerly been a farmer in Vermont. Mrs. Glidden's mother was Harriet Andrews, a member of an old Vermont family; her father, James Andrews, was also born in that state and was a graduate of Middleburg College. Mr. and Mrs. Groves are both deceased, his death having occurred in Pasadena, his wife's in Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Glidden are the parents of four children, Ada, the wife of Dr. Paul Bresee of Los Angeles; Adelbert, a contractor and builder in Pasadena; Edward A. and Ralph, both at home. The family is connected with the Congregational Church of Avalon, Mr. Glidden being a member of the board of trustees. Politically he is a Republican.

STEPHEN BROWN. Few of the millions of emigrants from the old world who have sought homes in the western hemisphere have drifted to the rugged and storm-swept shores of Prince Edward Island, but when James Brown left his native Scotland he found employment at his trade of shipbuilding on that remote island and there he remained until death. His son John, who was born and reared there, took up farm pursuits, and from the stern and unfriendly soil he wrested a livelihood for his family. Early in manhood he married Lydia, daughter of Richard Ackland, the former a native of the island, and the latter an emigrant from England. Three children comprised the family of John and Lydia Brown, but only two are now living, namely: Stephen and Neil E., both residents of San Diego. The mother is living in this city also and makes her home with the first-named son.

On the home farm, nine miles west of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Stephen Brown was born September 24, 1871, and there he passed the uneventful years of youth, receiving such advantages as the neighborhood offered for the acquisition of an education. When he arrived in San Diego in November, 1890, he was energetic, willing and ambitious, but was unfamiliar with any trade and anxious therefore to accept the first means of earning a livelihood that was offered. In this way he took up teaming as an employe of a gentleman established in business. For three years he was with the same employer, and then for a year teamed for another man, after which he began to take contracts to do teaming, and has since increased his outfit from one to eight teams. In addition he has taken contracts for cement foundations, walls, walks, etc., using in his work gravel obtained from his own pit, located between B street, City Park and Nineteenth street, while his sand he obtains from his own pit.

After coming to San Diego Mr. Brown here married Miss Elizabeth McKinley, a native of Prince Edward Island. Two children were born of that union, but Russell is the only one now living. The second marriage of Mr. Brown was solemnized in Los Angeles and united him with Miss Anna Lynn, a native of Missouri. The only fraternal organization with which Mr. Brown has identified himself is the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he has ranked among the most prominent of its local workers. Initiated into the order in Sunset Lodge No. 328, I. O. O. F., he is now past grand of that lodge. The encampment and canton also number him among their members and he has officiated as past chief patriarch of Centennial Encampment No. 58, besides, with his wife, being actively associated with the Order of Rebekahs. On the occasion of the grand encampment at San Diego in 1905 he was chosen a member of the executive committee, having in charge the plans and preparation for the event, and the remarkable success of the gathering may be attributed in large degree to the tactful, efficient and sagacious labors of that committee.

GOTTFRED ANDERSON. Separted from the mainland of Sweden by Kalmar sound and extending out into the Baltic sea lies the narrow island known as Oeland, where the ancestors of

Mr. Anderson for many generations cultivated the rugged soil. There were born and reared his parents, Andres P. and Lena (Erickson) Larson, and there they still remain on the old home place, respected by acquaintances and faithful in their devotion to the Lutheran Church. Of their seven children six attained mature years, namely: Emil, who remains on the island homestead; Mrs. Josephine Anderson, now living at Portland, Ore.; Mrs. Amy Niblin, who died at Portland; Gottfred and Julius, who are owners of the San Diego steam laundry and conduct business under the title of Anderson Brothers; and Albert (twin of Julius), who is engaged in business in San Diego.

The island home of the family was the birthplace of Gottfred Anderson and April 1, 1863, the date of his birth. From early childhood he was trained to habits of usefulness and self-reliance, and soon became a capable assistant on the farm, where he worked during his school vacations. At the age of fourteen years he left school. While he is now a well-informed man, his knowledge has been gained by observation and travel rather than from text-books. In 1878 he came to San Francisco, where for some time he was employed in a restaurant, and later became proprietor of the San Rafael coffee house on East street. On coming to San Diego in 1887 he became proprietor of the St. Elmo hotel and for a few years acted as its landlord. During 1891 he entered upon the active management of his present business.

The San Diego steam laundry, which Mr. Anderson purchased from Daniel Olson in 1891, now ranks among the substantial business industries of the city. When fire destroyed the laundry in 1899, Mr. Anderson erected a two-story modern structure, 100x100 feet in dimensions, on the corner of B street at No. 1170 State street. The equipment of the plant includes a thirty-five horse power engine and a fifty-horse boiler, as well as facilities for the manufacture of all the soap used in the laundry. Employment is furnished to forty hands or more, each of whom is trained to be a skilled worker in his or her department. After having conducted the laundry alone for a considerable period in 1900 Mr. Anderson admitted his brother Julius into partnership, and the two are now joint owners of the plant and business, as well as property on the corner of Second and H streets.

The home of Mr. Anderson is a neat residence on the corner of State and B streets, where himself and wife, with their three children, Hazel, Myrtle and Pearl, have all the comforts of a well-appointed dwelling. Mrs. Anderson, a native of Sweden, was formerly Annie Petersen, and came to the United States at an early age, settling in Chicago. From that city she removed to California and settled in San Diego, where she was married. The family are prominent among the Scandinavian residents of San Diego and Mr. Anderson is a charter member and a trustee of the Scandinavian Society. Fraternally he is identified with the Foresters, the Maccabees, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was made a Mason in Silver Gate Lodge, F. & A. M., to which he has since given his support.

JOHN E. BORDEN, an honored veteran of the Civil war, is now living retired at Long Beach, where he has a comfortable home at No. 1117 American avenue. Though impeded by injuries received in the war, he withal accumulated a competency through energy, intelligence and persistent effort, which he is now enjoying in the genial climate of the Pacific coast. He was born in New York, September 1, 1828, in the city of Pulteney, Steuben county, where his parents, Horace and Minerva (Chaffee) Borden, made their home for many years. In 1846 the family moved to Pennsylvania, where the father followed the cooper's trade until his death in November, 1864; the mother also passed away in the same locality, at about the same time. John E. Borden studied the three R's in a primitive log schoolhouse. Leaving school he secured employment in a sawmill, and after five years learned the trade of carpenter and joiner. In the fall of 1856 he removed to Wisconsin, where he became a pioneer of Plainfield, there following the carpenter's trade. January 4, 1864 he enlisted in Company I, Seventh Wisconsin Infantry, under Division Commander Wordsworth. Going with his regiment to the front, Mr. Borden had a brief and unfortunate experience as a soldier. In his first battle, that of the Wilderness, May 5, the first day of the seven days' struggle, he was struck by a minie ball when within four rods of the enemy's lines, the ball penetrating the right arm and inflicting a wound so serious that on the afternoon of the same day his arm was amputated. On the second day he was among a large number of wounded soldiers who were taken to the general hospital at Fredericksburg. After two days' and two nights' travel to Fredericksburg, for three weeks he had no place to sleep. In recalling those days he is wont to say that he had the soft side of a board for a mattress and a brick as his only pillow. Going from there to the Lincoln hospital at Washington, D. C., and later to Park hospital, Baltimore, he returned to his home in Wisconsin subsequent to his discharge, December 24, 1864.

Unable to resume work at the carpenter's trade, Mr. Borden secured a small tract of land and took up farm pursuits. After seven years as an agriculturist, he removed to Colby, Wis., and engaged in the general mercantile business for fourteen years. He was chosen the first town treasurer of Colby and officiated in that capacity for four years, and he also acted as district clerk and district treasurer during his residence in that town. Retiring to private life after fourteen years as a merchant, in search of a milder climate he went to DeFuniak, Fla., for eight years spending nine months of each year there, returning to Wisconsin for the summer months only. In December, 1901, he removed to California and bought the first lot sold in the block where he now lives; on this lot he built an attractive home early in 1903, and has since lived retired at this place. After coming to Long Beach he was married, May 19, 1901, to Margaret M. Gilbert, a native of Michigan, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Long Beach. After coming to the west Mr. Borden affiliated himself with Long Beach Camp No. 181, G. A. R., Department of California and Nevada, and here, as during his residence in the east, he maintains a warm interest in all the activities of the old soldiers.

ROBERT H. BROWN was born in Alameda county, December 23, 1867, a resident of the Santa Maria valley since his sixth year, and for the past twelve years the manager of the Brown homestead in the vicinity of Santa Maria.

Thomas S. Brown, father of Robert H., was born near Belfast, north Ireland, November 12, 1823, and was reared on a small tenant farm offering little scope to a strong, ambitious boy. Arriving in the United States during the summer of 1845, he spent about five years in the neighborhood of Boston, Mass., and in 1851 came to California. Journeying west by way of Panama and San Francisco, he settled in Alameda county as a rancher. In 1864 he established a home of his own in Alameda county, marrying Rachel Brown, a fellow countrywoman, and native of the north of Ireland. In 1874 the couple brought their children to a farm near Guadaloupe, Santa Barbara county, where Mr. Brown accumulated an estate of four hundred acres, and sometimes farmed as many as a thousand acres. He was a man of ability and resource, with a predilection for public affairs. Mr. Brown moved to the latter place about twelve years ago, and here, surrounded by the comforts and refinements made possible by his years of well directed labor, his life closed April 30, 1905, at the age of seventy-nine years. He was a stanch Republican, and a regular attendant at the Presbyterian Church.

R. H. Brown was educated in the grammar school at Guadaloupe, completing his training at the Pacific Business College in San Francisco. Returning to his father's farm, he assisted with its management, and accompanied his parents to the present homestead about twelve years ago. He is unmarried and lives with his mother, who, in spite of her sixty-three years, retains her health, faculties and sympathies. Mr. Brown devotes the ranch to grain, beans and potatoes, also stock and general produce. He is prominent socially, and identified with the Santa Maria Lodge, K. of P., also the Uniform Rank.

ELI BUNT. Nestled in a sheltered nook at the base of the San Gabriel range and at the mouth of Lytle creek, in San Bernardino county, lies the ranch owned and occupied by Mr. Bunt. While it includes only eleven acres, its admirable location makes it especially desirable and its equal in point of productiveness would be hard to find. Upon purchasing the property in 1890 he made the necessary improvements, erecting a suitable house and barn, and also built a house for the shelter of bees, the raising of which he at once entered into upon a large scale. From a small beginning he has steadily increased the business until he now has fifty colonies. In his orchard may be found almost all of the fruits grown in the state, including peaches and apricots, three persimmon trees, three grape-fruit trees, one lemon tree, and oranges of seventeen varieties, besides a number of berry bushes. While the orchard is not large, it supplies the home needs with an abundance and a variety not often combined.

Mr. Bunt is a native of the Empire state, born in Broome county, November 16, 1839. It was not until he was approaching middle life that he severed his connection with the east and took up life on the Pacific coast, coming to California in 1884, and locating at once in San Bernardino. Accepting the first employment which he was able to secure, he engaged in cutting stone for a time, later trained horses, and finally became interested in the raising of bees, and so well did he succeed in the latter that he determined to concentrate his efforts along that line exclusively. Putting this determination into execution, he began to seek a desirable location, with the result that in 1890 he purchased the ranch he now occupies. During young manhood Mr. Bunt gave his services to the cause of his country by enlisting in Company H, Ninth Iowa Infantry, his muster-in being dated September 5, 1861. With the rest of his regiment he was assigned to service in the western Mississippi army, in which he gave faithful service until disabled at the battle of Pea Ridge, March 7, 1862, being shot in the calf of the left leg, besides receiving injuries in the right leg.

In Preston, Minn., in 1866, Mr. Bunt was united in marriage with Mary E. Shear, the daughter of Rowland and Mary (Hull) Shear. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bunt, all of whom with one exception are married and in homes of their own. The second child, Florence, died when two years old. The eldest child, Dora, is now the wife of David Coleman and lives in San Bernardino; Anna is the wife of Thomas Reece; Edith, Mrs. John Quinn, lives in Palo Alto, Cal.; and Jennie, Mrs. Kellogg, makes her home in Berkeley, this state.

DWIGHT E. CLOUGH. California has proven the realization of the ambitious efforts of many men, among whom Dwight E. Clough, of Long Beach, Los Angeles county, is no exception, and to this state he gives a happy allegiance. He is city electrician of Long Beach, where he has made his home since 1900. Mr. Clough is the descendant of an old eastern family whose settlement in America is of colonial origin, the name being prominent in Massachusetts, where his father, Samuel C. Clough, was located until his removal to Los Angeles, where he now resides. Since 1890 the elder man invested money in property in Southern California principally in the vicinity of Los Angeles, and finally located there permanently, although he still retains his old home in the Bay state. He was the pioneer engineer on the New York Central Railroad and while a resident in the east served as a soldier in the Civil war. He married Janet Thompson, and she still survives. Dwight E. Clough was born in Springfield, Mass., May 16, 1870, and in the public schools of the state received his primary education. Later he entered Amherst College, from which institution he was graduated in 1888, after which he took up the study of electricity in Schenectady, N. Y., where he continued for eleven years. For several years he had charge of work in the Niagara Falls and Lockport districts, after which he was sent to San Francisco, and thence to Southern California, in both places installing electric light and power plants, and also working for the Pacific Electric Company and Los Angeles Pacific. After coming to the southern part of the state he became interested in the prospects held out to the ambitious man in Long Beach, and accordingly he left the electric company and came to this city, where he has since remained. Although it had but eighteen hundred people when he first located here he began investing his means in property, giving much of his time to real estate. His home is located at No. 803 Cedar street, and is presided over by his wife, formerly Dora M. Welch, a native of New York, and a granddaughter of ex-Senator Arnold, of that state. In politics Mr. Clough is a stanch Republican and is holding his present office through the influence of this party, he being the first incumbent under the new charter. He has charge of all city lighting and is supervisor of all electric wiring, having wired the new convention hall. He has been a frequent contributor to electrical journals on high potential work and long distance transmission, as well as street railway work, and is an honored member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. Fraternally Mr. Clough is a Mason, belonging to Genesee Commandery, K. T., of Lockport, N. Y.; and Ismalia Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Buffalo, N. Y. He is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Lockport, N. Y.

HOWARD M. CHERRY. The family represented by the supervisor of the first district of San Diego county descends from Scotch progenitors and long has been identified with American history. At one time the greater part of the original site of Altoona, Pa., was owned by Anthony Cherry, who carried on farm pursuits in that then sparsely settled region and remained on the same homestead until death. Among the children of this pioneer farmer was a son, A. D., who was born and reared at Altoona and for a time during early life held a position as paymaster with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, but later assisted in the organization of the Keystone Bridge Company of Pittsburg and for about twenty-five years held the office of secretary in that important corporation. Since his retirement from business activities he has continued to make his home in Pittsburg, where he holds an honored position as a citizen and Master Mason and also as a Republican takes a warm interest in political movements. In his native county of Blair he met and married Miss Lucinda P. Boyles, daughter of a pioneer of that locality and herself a native of Blair county, but deceased in Pittsburg.

There were nine children in the family of A. D. and Lucinda Cherry, and of these Howard M. was next to the youngest and the only one to settle on the Pacific coast. At the family homestead in Altoona, Pa., he was born June 6, 1859, but from the age of eight years he lived in Pittsburg, where he attended the grammar and high schools. After having completed his education in Shortridge Academy, Philadelphia, he returned to Pittsburg, and began his business career as a member of the civil engineering corps of the Keystone Bridge Company, but later he turned his attention to taking contracts for the building of street railways. With J. T. Gordon as a partner he bought a controlling interest in what is now the Pittsburg Traction Company, of which he acted as superintendent for five years, holding the position for almost a year after he had sold out his interest in the corporation.

Upon resigning his position as superintendent Mr. Cherry came to San Diego county in February, 1887, and became interested in the nursery business, growing citrus stock that was shipped from Florida. After five years as secretary and manager of the Sweetwater Nursery Company he sold out and turned his attention to the insurance and real-estate business, in which he still continues to be actively engaged. During practically the entire period of his residence in San Diego he has been an active worker in the Republican party, a prominent member of the Union League Club and a believer in the progressive policies adopted by the Chamber of Commerce, to which also he belongs. His first election as supervisor occurred in 1896, when he was chosen to represent the first district upon the county board. At the expiration of the term in 1900 he was re-elected and four years later he was again victorious as the Republican nominee, the present year of 1906 being his ten consecutive years in the office of supervisor, and during one term he was honored with the chairmanship of the board.

While making his home in Pittsburg Mr. Cherry there married Miss Josephine C. Gordon, who was born in that city, being a daughter of J. T. Gordon. During his latter days Mr. Gordon was a resident of San Diego and here his death occurred. In the family of Mr. and Mrs. Cherry there are four daughters, Alma, Edna, Leila and Roma. Fraternally Mr. Cherry is identified with the Woodmen of the World, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and the Masonic Order. During the period of his residence in Pennsylvania he was made a Mason in the Davidge lodge at Allegheny, also took the Royal Arch degree in Allegheny Chapter, became a Knight Templar in Tancred Commandery at Pittsburg, and after coming to the Pacific coast became affiliated with the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine in Al Malaikah Temple at Los Angeles.

WILLIAM STRONG CALEY. The total area of forest reservations in the United States includes nearly fifty million acres, and from year to year the government is adding still more to this vast tract. The average person may not know or appreciate what this forethought on the part of the government in the matter of preserving the forests means to us as individuals and as a nation. Not only do the forests furnish our timber and fuel supply, but their influence on the climate and the waterflow of the country is of inestimable value, nowhere perhaps more keenly appreciated than in our western states.

Among the vast number of men required to patrol and guard the forests thus set aside mention belongs to William S. Caley, who as forest ranger in the San Bernardino reserve has given the government faithful and conscientious service for over five years, and a native son of the state.

Throughout his entire life Mr. Caley has made his home in the vicinity of his birthplace, and attended the schools of San Bernardino during boyhood. After leaving school he worked at any honorable employment that could be found, including farming and teaming. It was while engaged in the latter pursuits that he was offered the position of forest ranger and August 6, 1900, he entered upon his new duties. He makes his home in Cajon Pass, about eighteen miles from San Bernardino, on Waterman avenue, occupying one of the rangers' cabins. As may be inferred Mr. Caley is unmarried. Being of a quiet disposition he is reserved in his manner and has never taken any active part in politics.

BENNETT J. CARL. As an example of one whose interest has been concentrated in mercantile enterprises for a number of years mention is due Bennett J. Carl, who as a member of the firm of Atwater & Carl is interested in a thriving grocery at the corner of Third and Locust streets, Long Beach, and also one at Alamitos Beach, at the corner of Fourth and Almond streets. Business was inaugurated in Long Beach January 15, 1903, under the firm name of Wilson & Carl, and continued under this title for nine months, when Mr. Carl disposed of his interest to Mr. Atwater, his present partner. It was not long before Mr. Carl was again interested in the firm, at which time it took the name of Atwater & Carl, its present title. Small quarters sufficed for their modest beginnings, but were soon outgrown by the steady increase of business until they were compelled to locate in their present commodious buildings. They carry a complete line of groceries and provisions, nothing which the market affords being omitted from their stock.

On both sides of the family Mr. Carl is descended from progenitors noted for longevity, this characteristic being especially noticeable on the maternal side, the grandparents living to the advanced age of one hundred and three years. Mr. Carl's mother was of English descent and before her marriage was known as Sarah Wingett. She too lived to a good old age, dying in 1901, when in her eightieth year. James Carl, the father, came of Irish antecedents. As a life calling he carried on farming and also owned and managed a grocery in Sylvania, Ohio. He too lived to a ripe old age, at the time of his death in 1897 having reached his eighty-second year. While the family was living in Fulton county, Ohio, Bennett J. Carl was born in Chesterfield township July 24, 1862. As he was a lad of only five years when his parents removed to Lucas county his earliest recollections are associated with that locality. At the time he had reached his twentieth year he had graduated from the Sylvania high school, had a good knowledge of farming and was so thoroughly versed in the grocery business that he felt competent to start in it independently, having received his training in this line in his father's store in Sylvania. Leaving home when he was nineteen years old he first went to Omaha, Neb., but believing that he saw better prospects for advancement in Washington, established himself in the grocery business in Tekoa. Some time later, however, in Lawrence, Kans., he opened a similar business, in addition to this dealing in wholesale produce. Five years of hard work in that locality had resulted in a thriving business, but he gave it up in 1902 to take up life in California, whither he was drawn on account of the evenness of the climate.

While a resident of Kansas Mr. Carl was married to Sadie Eskridge, a native of that state. While in that state he also joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is still a member of the lodge at Lawrence, besides holding membership in the camp of the Modern Woodmen of America at Long Beach. Politically he adheres to the principles of the Republican party and appropriates every opportunity to advance its cause. While a resident of Washington he was a member and clerk of the school board of Tekoa for seven years.

JOHN CAMPBELL. Among the finest specimens of the hardy people who have emigrated from Scotland to America and are faithfully meeting all of the requirements demanded of a faithful and loyal citizen of our Republic, is John Campbell, of San Diego, who is a son of John Campbell, and was born August 5, 1857, in Markinch, Fifeshire, Scotland, the descendant of a family of prominence. The branch of the Glencoe clan to which his ancestors belonged originated in the highlands of Scotland, which they left at the time of the Reformation, going to the lowlands to escape from the religious persecution of the Catholics. David Campbell, Mr. Campbell's grandfather, a farmer by occupation, became a member of the Presbyterian, or Free Church of Scotland. He was a man of great mental and physical vigor, and attained the age of ninety-six years.

Born in Markinch, county Fife, John Campbell, Sr., spent his entire life in his native town, being engaged in general farming and stock raising. He was a man of strong personality, much respected by his fellow-men, and was an active member of the Presbyterian Church. He died while yet in manhood's prime, at the age of forty-seven years, his death being caused by blood poisoning. He married Elizabeth Boggie, who spent her brief life of thirty-five years in Fifeshire. She belonged to one of the old families of that county, being the daughter of David Boggie, a prominent farmer and miller. She bore her husband three children, two sons and one daughter, and of these John, the subject of this sketch, is the only survivor.

Brought up in Fifeshire, John Campbell attended the common schools until twelve years old, and then entered Saint Andrew's Academy, where he completed the course of study. After his graduation he was apprenticed to a pattern-maker and millwright in Markinch, and served for three years, from the age of nineteen until twenty-two. The following eighteen months he worked as a journeyman in Falkirk, and then returned to his native town. The following eighteen months he was foreman of a gang of men in Edinburgh, Scotland. Going from there to England, to Newcastle-on-Tyne, he remained there for awhile, and as foreman assisted in the erection of the Liberal Club Building, and was afterwards a resident of Manchester, Eng., for six years. Emigrating to America in 1881, Mr. Campbell located in San Antonio, Tex., as a contractor and builder, from there going to Gainesville, Tex., where he remained four years, being successfully employed as a contractor and as the operator of a planing mill.

Coming to San Diego in 1886, Mr. Campbell worked at his trade, first as foreman and subsequently as contractor. Turning his attention then to agriculture, he located on a ranch, purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of land, and began the culture of fruit, setting out vines and figs. At the expiration of five years he rented his ranch and moved back to San Diego, where, even while farming, he had continued to some extent his work as a contractor. He subsequently spent a year as a contractor in Los Angeles, but since that time has been a resident of San Diego, his home being at No. 389 Front street. In addition to owning his home estate he has title to other residential property of value, and still owns his ranch, from its rental deriving a good annual income. During his residence here Mr. Campbell has built many of the handsome residences of the city, and some of its largest and most prominent buildings, including among others the American National Bank, the Pickwick Theatre, the Shaw Building, the Arnold Block, the Kneale Flats.

Mr. Campbell married, in Scotland, Elizabeth

Chalmers, the daughter of David Chalmers, the representative of an old and honored family. Her mother, whose maiden name was Jessie Robinson, was born in Perthshire, Scotland, the daughter of William Robinson, who was descended from Cowper Angus. Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell six children have been born, namely: John C., a contractor; Jessie, Mrs. Reed, of San Diego; David, foreman for the Los Angeles Automobile Company; George, a bookkeeper; Roy; and Elizabeth. Mr. Campbell belongs to the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, and to the Master Carpenters' Association. Politically he is identified with the Republican party. He has served for three years as school trustee, is now a member of the San Diego Board of Education, and in both capacities is chairman of the building committee. One term he was a member of the Board of Delegates. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Gainesville, Tex., and is now a member of Silver Gate Lodge No. 296, F. & A. M., and is also identified with the Foresters of America, of which he is past chief ranger and past deputy chief.

THEOPHILE CORBEIL. The enterprising characteristics of the French people usually bring them a fair degree of success in whatever locality their efforts centralize. Especially is this the case when they settle in a climate where Nature proves a kindly friend. Given the opportunities afforded by California and the energy and enterprise of the French race, and a prosperous community is always established. In the list of French residents of Los Angeles county Mr. Corbeil ranks among those who have met with commendable success as a horticulturist, and although his ranch lies five miles from Pomona, he has always made his home in town, owning a fine residence at No. 140 Newman street.

In the department of France known as Hautes-Alpes Theophile Corbeil was born May 10, 1859, the son of Jacques and Delphina (Albert) Corbeil, they, too, being natives of France. All of the four children born to the parents are still living, Ferdinand and Honine, both in France, although the former was at one time a stock man in Nevada, where Jacques, the youngest son, is following the same business. The eldest of the family, Theophile, was brought up on the homestead farm in France, thus receiving a practical training in agriculture, which in the main he has followed throughout the greater part of his life. At the age of twenty-one years a respite from farm duties for service in the army of his country brought a complete change of thought and scene into his life. As a member of the Thirtieth Regiment, Fourth Company, Fourth Battalion, he served for four years and one month, and after his discharge from the service he returned to the old homestead and resumed his former life on the farm. After continuing this for about three years he became imbued with a desire to come to the new world, and in 1887 he carried out his plans. Coming direct to Pomona, Cal., he at once found a position with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, with whom he remained for over eight years, when a desire to become a land owner and share in the agricultural prosperity everywhere about him led to the purchase of a ranch near Chino, San Bernardino county. This he set out to a deciduous orchard and vineyard, and also purchased and improved a ten-acre ranch five miles from Pomona, and during the entire twenty years of his residence in California he has made his home in town, having a fine residence on Newman street, which he erected to conform with his own ideas of convenience and comfort.

Mr. Corbeil's marriage, December 3, 1885, united him with Miss Rosalie Sarrgen, she, too, being a native of Hautes-Alpes, and the daughter of August and Marie (Echain) Sarrgen, also natives of France. Eight of the nine children born to Mr. and Mrs. Sarrgen are still living. Four children have been born into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Corbeil, Dennie, Sylvan, Theophile and Fred, all of whom are at home. The family are communicants of St. Joseph's Catholic Church of Pomona, and both Mr. and Mrs. Corbeil are well thought of in the community where they have resided for the past two decades.

HARRY M. A. ELMS. Since his ninth year Harry M. A. Elms has lived in Southern California, and for more than twenty years has been interested in the development of Catalina, where he has permanently resided since 1887, and was the first postmaster at Avalon. He now has large possessions in the mines at Goldfield, Nev. The birth of Mr. Elms occurred in 1866, in the city of London, England, the son of Henry and Jane (Minto) Elms. The father was born in Devonshire and followed merchandising in London until 1875, when he emigrated, with his wife and three children, to California, and engaged in horticulture and farming on the Los Angeles river in the city, where he still lives retired from active business life. The mother was a native of London and her death occurred in Los Angeles. Two of their children are still living, James being a resident of Los Angeles, and Harry M. A., the oldest of the family, of Avalon.

As a boy Mr. Elms attended the public schools in Los Angeles, and when he became of an age to start on an independent business career he went to Pasadena and learned the carpenter trade and plied it until 1884, when he began to spend his summers at Avalon. In 1887 he located at that place permanently, built a store and established a merchandising business, and having been appointed as the first postmaster of the place, he fitted a part of the store as a postoffice and attended to his duties in connection with his business. He continued thus for four years, then disposed of the store and resigned the postmastership to engage in boating. He built the gasoline launch Mildred, and operated it until 1904, still retaining the ownership of the craft, however. In 1904 he went to Goldfield and engaged in mine prospecting, locating claims and selling them and acquiring interests in many of the large properties there, among his holdings being stock in the Dromedary Hump at Fairview, the Great Bend and Great Bend Extension at Goldfield, the Manhattan Consolidated Extension of Manhattan, and the Bullfrog Annex at Bullfrog. Mr. Elms now divides his time between Avalon and Goldfield, spending his summers at the former place and the winters at the latter. He holds membership in the Goldfield Mining Stock Exchange and is recognized as a man well posted on mines and their values. By his marriage in Pasadena he was united with Miss Annie M. Gifford, a native of New York state, and they are the parents of one child, Shirley. Fraternally Mr. Elms is a member of the Royal Arcanum.

ABRAHAM FLORES, who was born in Santa Barbara county, March 16, 1860, has for the past nine years been the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of land near Santa Maria. He was reared among humble surroundings, and is one of a family of thirteen children, five of whom are living. His father, Juan Flores, was born in Chili, South America, and when quite young skirted the western coast in a sailing vessel up to California, where he engaged in business in Los Alamos, Santa Barbara county, for many years. He attained to sixty-one years of age, while his wife, formerly Dora Valenzuela, a native of California, died at the age of fifty-two.

It became the imperative duty of Abraham Flores to assist with the family maintenance at a very early age, and his youth was crowded with hardship and responsibility, while the other boys of his neighborhood were attending school and enjoying the diversions of the community. In time he sought a livelihood with other ranchers of the county, and for fifteen years remained a plodding and altogether dependable employe. His reward was the ranch which he now occupies, where he is engaged in the raising of stock, grain and beans.

Before her marriage in 1884, Mrs. Flores was Susan Sturgeon, who was born in Santa Barbara county, July 26, 1863, and educated in the grammar school of Santa Barbara. Mr. and Mrs. Flores are the parents of five children: Annie, wife of Chester Calvert; Rosa; Ernest; Orestus; and Clorinea. Mr. Flores is a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

JOSEPH FOSTER. Not only in the vicinity of Foster, which forms the present terminus of the Cuyamaca Railroad and which received its name from him, but also in his home city of San Diego and throughout all that portion of San Diego county where are centered his stage-line and ranching interests, Mr. Foster occupies a leading position as a capable agriculturist, progressive business man and trustworthy citizen. A native of the state which has been his lifelong home, he was born in Sacramento, August 15, 1856, and came to San Diego November 24, 1868, since which time he has been identified with the development of this region. The first step which he took toward independence was in the purchase of a tract of ranch land in 1880, and afterward he gave close attention to the improving of the property, which he still owns. The land lies near the station of Foster and offers excellent advantages for the raising of stock, in which industry he has as a partner Hon. Frank P. Frary, former mayor of San Diego. In 1888 the two became associated in the establishing of a stage line from San Diego to Julian and from El Cajon to Stonewall; in the operation of the line they continued together for ten years, and then Mr. Foster purchased his partner's interest, afterward conducting the business alone. At this writing he runs a stage, daily except Sunday, from Foster to Julian and Banner, using a four-horse team and taking twenty horses for the entire trip.

Upon the resignation of James A. Jasper as supervisor of the third district Governor Pardee appointed Mr. Foster to the position February 5, 1906, and he has since served in that capacity with characteristic fidelity and intelligence. While in politics he favors Republican principles, in local matters he sinks partisanship beneath citizenship, and strives to promote only such measures as will benefit permanently the county to whose welfare he is so deeply devoted. By membership in the Chamber of Commerce he also has been influential in promoting local business prosperity. By his marriage he became allied with an old and honored family of his county, his father-in-law, Joseph Swycaffer, having been one of the oldest citizens and most interesting personalities of the county. In Bellona, San Diego county, Mr. Foster was united in marriage with Miss Martha Swycaffer, a native of old San Diego. Two children bless their union. The son, Arthur M., superintends the ranch at Foster, and the daughter, Mrs. Lula McKenzie, resides at La Jolla.

Ever since his initiation into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows in 1883 Mr. Foster has been a leading worker in that organization, in lodge, encampment and canton. Besides being past grand of San Diego Lodge No. 153, and a past officer of Centennial Encampment No. 58, he served in 1900 as grand patriarch of the Grand Encampment of California and in 1901 and 1902 was chosen representative to the Sovereign Grand Lodge at Indianapolis and Des Moines respectively.

GEORGE HANNA. It is doubtful if any resident of Hollywood is identified with more business interests than Mr. Hanna, his capacity and versatility well fitting him to be a leader in large undertakings. As early as 1895 he with others organized the West Los Angeles Water Company. One of the most wide-reaching developments undertaken by this company was the securing of water in the Fernando valley, not only furnishing Hollywood with a free supply, but also securing water for all parts of the valley. During the latter part of 1895 it was reorganized as a private company, of which Mr. Hanna was a stockholder and the manager up to August 1, 1905, when he sold his stock and interest in the company. This has since been reorganized and is now known as the Union Hollywood Water Company. Another interest which has profited by Mr. Hanna's superior knowledge and experience is the Security Land and Loan Company of the San Joaquin Valley. The company own about three thousand acres in the valley which has been subdivided and sold to settlers for farming purposes. The company is capitalized at $1,250,000. A number of towns have sprung into being throughout the tract, the largest and most important of which is Corcoran, in Kings county.

George Hanna is a native of the east and can trace his ancestry back many generations; he was born in Salem, Washington county, N. Y., and is a son of Robert and Mary Ann (Rea) Hanna, the date of his birth being December 18, 1845. When he was a lad of about nine years his parents migrated to the Mississippi valley, settling in Aurora, Ill., where he attended the public schools. Upon reaching mature years he became associated in business with his brother, the two carrying on a general store under the name of Hanna Brothers for a number of years, and after the partnership was dissolved George Hanna carried it on alone for five years. The termination of this enterprise was followed by his removal to the west, where he has found a rich field for the exercise of his many capabilities. It was in September of 1887 that he first viewed Los Angeles, seeing at a glance its future possibilities and at the same time deciding to remain and benefit by its prosperity. His first undertaking was the purchase of twenty acres in the vicinity of Vernon and South Park avenues, five acres being set out to oranges, five to peaches and the remaining ten acres in walnuts. After holding this tract for five years he sold ten acres to the owners of the Ashton avenue home tract, and disposed of the remaining ten acres to the Huntington Land Company. The same insight into values and possibilities which prompted and carried to a successful completion his first undertaking proved an index to his later efforts, for whatever he attempts he brings to a successful issue.

While still a resident of Illinois Mr. Hanna was united in marriage with Miss Julia Mandigo, the ceremony being performed at the home of the bride on Christmas day of 1872. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hanna, the eldest, Rea, being vice-consul to Amoy, China, while the daughter, Pauline, is still at home with her parents, whose residence on Prospect avenue is one of the most handsome structures in Hollywood. Mr. Hanna purchased it before it was completed and finished it according to his own tastes and ideas. The family attend the Congregational Church of Hollywood, and fraternally Mr. Hanna belongs to Hollywood Lodge No. 355, F. & A. M.

As yet no mention has been made of Mr. Hanna's mining interests, which though not as varied and numerous as his other interests are still important. The Bull Frog Mining and Milling Company, in which he is a stockholder, is capitalized at $2,000,000. The company are the owners of the Bonnie Clare mine, an excellent producer, but as yet the railroad facilities are deficient. Mr. Hanna also owns mining interests in other parts of the country, and in fact his name is associated with almost every enterprise which has been promulgated in this section of the state for the past decade.

JOSEPH DAVID GILBERT. Yet another of the pioneer settlers who came to San Bernardino in the days of its infancy and shared its vicissitudes for over half a century was the late Joseph D. Gilbert. His death, which occurred August 19, 1905, was counted a public loss, for in the fifty-one years that he lived in this city he had formed many deep and lasting friendships. His widow still makes her home on the property which he bought upon coming to the state, which has since been platted and is now known as Gilbert street, so named in honor of this pioneer settler.

A native of the east, Mr. Gilbert was born in Cayuga county, N. Y., May 20, 1828. Until he was twelve years of age he was a student in the common schools of his native town, after which he became an apprentice under his father, who was a shoemaker by trade. The newly acquired business was not altogether to his liking, however, but nevertheless he continued to follow it until he became of age, at that time taking up farming as a business more to his taste. It was about this time also that the family removed to the Mississippi valley, settling in Iowa, but a few years later, in 1852, they removed still further west, going to Salt Lake City. Upon coming to San Bernardino two years later Joseph D. Gilbert bought one hundred and forty-nine acres of wild land, little thinking that the town would grow up about him. After building a comfortable residence for his family he added a barn and other buildings and otherwise improved the property until it ranked with the best in the vicinity. From time to time he sold off portions of it until of late years he had only twelve and a half acres. Here the widow lives alone, for all of her children are married and in homes of their own.

While a resident of Utah, January 8, 1854, Mr. Gilbert was united in marriage with Margaret M. Barney, who was born in Logan county, Ill., and is a daughter of Charles and Deborah (Ripple) Barney. From the age of ten years her life was associated with Council Bluffs, Iowa, her parents making their home there from 1844 until 1852, during the latter year settling in Utah. Five children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert, all of whom are married and residents of the state. Joseph D., Jr., is a gardener and nurseryman in Los Angeles; Ellen is the wife of Frank Mecham, a well-driller and farmer, and they make their home in San Bernardino just east of the Gilbert homestead; Emeline, Mrs. Oscar Weist, lives in San Bernardino, on C street; Anna, who is the wife of Edwin Pine, lives in Rincon, Riverside county; and Hattie, Mrs. L. E. Veroney, resides in Los Angeles.

DANIEL S. HAYWARD. Glen Doon orange grove, situated twelve miles southeast of Riverside, bears a reputation as one of the finest groves of its kind in the entire state of California. It is said that oranges grown in this locality are preferred to those grown on lower levels, and the owner of the grove, Daniel S. Hayward, is firm in the belief that no finer oranges are shipped from any point in the United States than those which go from his packing house to the eastern markets. On the land he has three thousand three hundred and fifty-three trees of the Washington navel variety. Irrigation for the grove is secured by means of water pumped into a tank of five thousand gallons capacity, from which it is turned between the trees as needed.

Mr. Hayward spends his summers in Minnesota, where he is owner and proprietor of the Grand Central hotel at St. Cloud. He is a native of Maine and was born at Bangor April 28, 1854, being a son of Josiah E. and Mary (Gray) Hayward, natives respectively of Nova Scotia and Maine. During the year 1857 the family removed to Minnesota, where the father followed farm pursuits and engaged in the lumber industry. Eventually he turned his attention in 1863 to the hotel business, buying a hotel property at St. Cloud, Minn., and for years sustaining a reputation for successful work in the occupation. He died at St. Cloud March 13, 1895, aged sixty-nine years. His widow survives and makes her home at the Minnesota residence of her son, Daniel S.

Daniel S. Hayward was educated in the public schools and in the State University of Minnesota. At the age of twenty-six years he turned his attention to the logging industry; a year later embarking in the wheat business. In 1892 he took charge of his father's hotel, the Grand Central at St. Cloud, which he still superintends, giving it personal attention during the summer months. In Minnesota he established domestic ties through his marriage, October 15, 1889, to Martha Patock, a native of Illinois. Their four children are, Josiah E., Laura Ellen, Daniel, Jr., and Martha Mary. In fraternal relations Mr. Hayward holds membership with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks at St. Cloud, No. 516, also with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Hiawatha Tribe of Red Men in the same city.

ISAAC L. HALL made his first trip overland to California in 1852. Spending nearly two years in the mines in the northern part of the state, he then returned to the east by water route. Landing in New York, he immediately went to Illinois, where he married. In 1857, one year after the birth of their first child, with his family he again crossed the plains with ox team. Mr. Hall was born January 31, 1831, in Fulton county, N. Y., the son of Ira B. and Elsie (Shepard) Hall, who removed with their family to Illinois in 1844, and in the public schools of this state the son received his education. The father engaged in farming in Illinois for several years, then settled in Iowa, where the death of both parents occurred.

Upon his arrival in California the second time Mr. Hall located in Plumas county and engaged in farming. He secured his first land from the government and gradually added to his holdings by purchase until he had in all six hundred and forty acres. He improved the land in every way, building houses and barns, engaging in the raising of grain, hay and cattle. Oroville, ninety miles distant, was in those early days the nearest trading town, the supplies being carried to and from the ranch by mule train. The first wheat brought into Plumas county was delivered there by Mr. Hall, who raised it in the Sacramento valley. After residing on this ranch in Plumas county for thirty-nine years he removed to Avon, Wash., where he engaged in a general merchandising business until 1899. Next he resolved to make Southern California his home, and coming to the Perris valley purchased the ten-acre ranch upon which he now resides, securing his principal income therefrom by raising Leghorn chickens.

His marriage in 1855 united him with Cordelia, daughter of Edwin and Sarah (Hill) Lee, of Canada. During the Patriot war her father enlisted on the Canadian side, his death occurring some time later at Chatham Barracks. He was a brother of General Robert E. Lee. After his death Mrs. Lee and family removed to Buffalo, N. Y., thence to Illinois. There were in their family seven children: Howard lives with his parents; Elsie died at the age of eight years; Amelia became the wife of Mr. Martin and now resides on a ranch joining that of her father; John is a merchant in Avon, Wash.; Warren, of Perris valley, Joseph is a farmer in Washington; Mary died in Washington when twenty-four years old. Mrs. Hall's death occurred in Perris November, 1903, she having attained the age of sixty years.

Mr. Hall may be pardoned for taking considerable pride in his family. Politically he is a stanch advocate of the principles embraced in the platform of the Republican party, and he has always taken an active interest in all matters concerning the public welfare. While residing in Plumas county he served as a member of the board of school trustees and was also at one time road overseer. As a man who has lived a long life with honor and success he is but receiving his just dues when he is accorded the highest esteem and respect of his fellow citizens.

JACOB HANNA. The original inception of the Rivera Land and Water Company was due principally to the efforts of Mr. Hanna, who became one of the leading spirits in securing its incorporation and since has acted in the capacities of manager and secretary of the growing enterprise. Although not a native Californian (his birthplace having been in Warren county, in the state of Illinois), he has been a resident of the west since childhood and by his progressiveness become a typical representative of the forces contributing to the remarkable development of the country. After having remained for a considerable period in the Santa Clara valley, he was led to identify himself with the increasing opportunities of Los Angeles county and for more than ten years he has made Rivera his home, meanwhile conducting the only lumber yard in the town, also carrying on a hardware business and officiating as manager of the company previously mentioned.

The establishment of the Hanna family in California dates back to the early period of the settlement of this state, when Hon. William Hanna came to the west by way of the Isthmus of Panama. A native of Indiana and descended from an old eastern family, he had spent his life in the Mississippi valley and had engaged in various commercial activities. After settling in Santa Clara county he became extensively interested in the lumber business at Gilroy and aided materially in the development of that town. Public-spirited to an unusual degree, he rendered efficient service as mayor of Gilroy and as a member of the California state legislature, to which he was elected on the Democratic ticket. After a busy existence covering more than four score years he passed away at his Santa Clara home. Early in his manhood he had married Rebecca Creswell, who was born in Ohio and died in California in 1872, leaving a family of six children, who attained mature years.

During the spring of 1863 Jacob Hanna accompanied his parents from Santa Clara county to Los Angeles, where during the following summer he attended a public school held in a small brick building on the corner of Spring and Second streets, where the Bryson block now stands. In the midst of surroundings bearing little promise of present prosperity, he conned the lessons taught in the text-books of that day. Mainly, however, his education was obtained in the Gilroy schools, supplemented by a course in a commercial college in San Francisco. After leaving school he became an assistant to his father in the lumber business at Gilroy. Not wholly satisfied with conditions in that part of the state, he decided to avail himself of the opportunities offered by Southern California, and therefore during 1894 came to Whittier. For eighteen months he was employed by the San Pedro Lumber Company, after which he came to Rivera as manager of the lumber business still under his supervision. While still making his home in Santa Clara county he was united in marriage, in 1879, with Miss Clara Ray, daughter of Hon. Thomas Ray, of Gilroy. The three sons born of their union, Thomas R., Walter J., and Samuel C., have received exceptional advantages, including attendance at the California State University. Thomas R. Hanna is now employed by the United States government as a construction engineer in the geodetic survey, and Walter J. Hanna makes his headquarters at Toledo, Ohio, where he is connected with a railroad company.

ALONZO E. HORTON. No man in San Diego occupies a more prominent place than Alonzo E. Horton, who is often spoken of as the father of the city where he has lived from the pioneer days of primitive surroundings to the present, replete with every development that a progressive civilization affords and a commonwealth as great as California can boast. Mr. Horton is a native of Connecticut, where he was born October 24, 1813, a son of Erastus and Tryphena (Burleigh) Horton; both were natives of Connecticut, the father of English and the mother of Scotch ancestry and both died in San Diego, the former at the age of eighty-seven years and the latter at eighty-five. The Horton family came originally from Leicestershire, England, Barnabas, son of Joseph, emigrating to Hampton, Mass., in 1635, thence going in 1640 to New Haven and in October of the same year to Southold, Long Island.

When two years of age Alonzo E. Horton was taken by his parents to the state of New York, locating in Stockbridge, Madison county, and thence four years later removing to New Haven, Oswego county, same state. His first teacher was Miss Patty Woodward, who taught in the public school of that place. At the age of eleven years the family removed to the shore of Lake Ontario, and it was there that his father had an illness which left him blind. Thenceforward he assisted in the support of the family and after returning from school, which was two miles distant, he worked at basket making. He was next occupied in the lumber camps of that vicinity, chopping timber for the demands of Oswego. At the age of twenty years he began to clerk in a store, later was a lake sailor and afterward captain of the Wild Goose, between Oswego and Canada. During the winter of 1834-1835 he learned the cooper's trade, his specialty being flour barrels. He had early assumed a place in the municipal life of Oswego and about this time he was elected constable by the largest majority ever given any candidate on the Whig ticket. Upon the advice of a physician, who, however, thought him incurably ill with consumption, he came west, and in 1836 landed in Milwaukee, where for a time he was busily engaged in making investments, all of which showed his keen judgment and business ability. He finally returned east and remained until 1840, when he again returned to the middle west and in Oakland, Wis., purchased a home, to which town his parents removed a little later. Through investments in cattle in Illinois which he sold in Wisconsin, in one year he increased his capital from $150 to $4,000, which he invested in land warrants in St. Louis to the extent of fifteen hundred acres, where was afterward located the village of Hortonville, Wis. His first town was buried in the woods, and with eight men he cut a four-mile road to his proposed mill site. By the time he had lots to sell he was sawing lumber with which to improve them, and no proprietor was ever more liberal than Mr. Horton, who cared first that homes should be built regardless of what his remuneration was to be. In a year from the completion of the mill there were one hundred and fifty people living in Hortonville and at the end of two years he sold the remaining property there at a profit of $7,188.

The first trip made by Mr. Horton to California was in 1851. Unlike his experiences in other lines of activity he was not successful in mining, so he opened a store at Pilot Hill and constructed a ditch six and one-half miles in length to supply the miners with water. After a year he sold his waterworks and other interests for $6,500 and was next employed with the Adams Express Company in trading in gold dust, often realizing as much as $30 a day in commissions. Later he managed this business for himself and continued successful, and during this time also was engaged in putting up ice twenty-five miles above Georgetown, this venture netting him for three hundred and twelve tons $8,000. In March, 1856, he took passage on the steamship Cortez, bound for New York via Panama. After the arrival of the steamer in Panama the memorable uprising of the natives occurred, and had it not been for his promptness the mob would have carried out their plan. Nearly two hundred persons from the steamer were dining at the hotel when the attack took place, but only three had firearms. The announcement that the rioters were coming caused a stampede from the table to the upper rooms. On bursting into the house the ruffians were halted at the stairway by Mr. Horton and his aides, and a few effective shots drove the assailants into the streets. Immediately a reign of terror began, and there were many who owed their lives to Mr. Horton's steady aim in shooting down their assailants. His coolness and bold action succeeded in bringing the passengers together in safety to the ship. He had lost $10,000 but had the gratification of having saved many lives. On their arrival in New York the passengers chose Mr. Horton to proceed to Washington and make a statement of the occurrences at Panama in response to a demand from the authorities to that effect. Accepting the appointment he gave his time to a settlement of the claims. A demand for reparation was made by the United States. However, his own claim for $10,000 was strenuously opposed by the government of New Granada, who knew the part he had taken in resisting the attack and who wished vengeance for the lives lost among his countrymen. As a compromise Mr. Horton gave up his claim in order that the others might be paid the amount of their losses.

Starting again to the west after the Civil war, Mr. Horton included a trip to British Columbia and engaged in mining in the Caribou district, but not meeting with success gave it up and went on to San Francisco and there tried various ways of retrieving his fortunes. One evening at a private gathering the topic for discussion was San Diego, the value of its harbor and climate, and Mr. Horton at once became interested and after studying over the matter for a brief time he decided to locate here. Within three days his store was closed and the stock sold, and with the proceeds, less than $500, he set out for the south, arriving in San Diego April 6, 1867, and pleased beyond his expectations at once decided to invest and cast in his lot permanently with those who were seeking the advancement of this section.

The history of Mr. Horton's early experiences in San Diego reads like a romance rather than as a chapter from real life. His own enthusiasm created that quality in others. When he landed in San Diego bay on the steamer Pacific, which had six passengers and twenty-six tons of freight, he came ashore in a yawl boat. While waiting for a conveyance to old San Diego he walked to the place where the courthouse now stands and at once remarked that the site would be unsurpassed for a city. Going to the old town he found that the six hundred or more acres of level land could be bought by having the land put up and sold to the highest bidder. To do this it was necessary to elect a board of trustees for old San Diego and this Mr. Horton accomplished after considerable trouble in convincing the people that regular elections were necessary to the growth and stability of the city. This board was empowered to sell city lands and accordingly the property was legally advertised and sold. A deed to seven hundred and fifty acres was made at twenty-six cents an acre, and the only bidder was Mr. Horton, this being after he had secured a few hundred acres at rather large bids. He then had possession of about one thousand acres of land, and the work of advertising the new city was begun. There were many who predicted failure for him because they did not understand the spirit which animated his work—the untiring energy, pluck and perseverance, the executive ability and management which characterized his every effort, and through these he won for San Diego what it would have been many years in securing without him. His labors were untiring from the time he measured off lots and blocks with a tape line and laid out the streets for his workmen to clear from cactus and sage brush until the winter of 1869-1870, when his sales averaged $15,000 a month. From $3,000 in 1867 his receipts increased to nearly $85,000 in 1869. He offered every inducement to prospective home builders, giving a lot to any man who would erect a building 12x16 feet in dimensions, himself investing all the money he received in improvements to the town, it being safe to say that more than a quarter of a million dollars of his own means went into the making of San Diego. He built the Horton House (which was completed nine months after beginning the work at a cost of $150,000) and also Horton's Bank Building, he becoming president of the first bank established in the town. Indeed, there was no matter too great or too small for him to aid by co-operation, a postoffice being established through his influence, a telegraph line after his promise to back it financially, and a competing steamship line to reduce the price of passenger and freight traffic, and which meant no little toward bringing settlers to the new city. In securing a railroad for San Diego Mr. Horton was active, going to Washington, D. C., when he wished to secure the passage of a railroad bill in Congress for the Texas Pacific, and there interviewed Sunset Cox, member of Congress from Ohio, who had been a stanch opponent to the bill. Mr. Cox had been attorney for the Panama men who had sustained a loss during the riot, and Mr. Horton had been the main witness in securing damages for these men, costing the Granada government over $2,000,000, and for this reason he felt very friendly to Mr. Horton and was ready to listen to his arguments. Finally he withdrew his opposition to the bill, which was passed with the amendment that fifty miles a year were to be built east from San Diego and west from Fort Yuma.

Mr. Horton had married in Wisconsin Miss Sally Millington Wright, who was born in New York and died in Jefferson county, Wis. His second marriage united him with Miss Sarah Wilson Babe, who died while on a visit to the east. His present wife was Lydia M. Knapp, a native of Massachusetts, and together they are rounding out the years of a well-spent life amid the accomplished efforts of one of California's most honored pioneers.

EMMONS E. MARSHALL. At the time Mr. Marshall located in California in 1873 the most interesting epoch in his life was brought to a close, for all who have followed the sea for any length of time will admit that the constant shifting of scenery and varied experiences of sea life have a fascination which the landsman can never know. With an experience of several years of seafaring to his credit he came to Southern California nearly thirty-five years ago, and in the mean time has experienced the vicissitudes of pioneer life, intermingled with hair-breadth escapes from the wily Indian's tomahawk, which at the time were exciting in the extreme and have since formed the basis for many an evening's story.

The Marshall family was one of the oldest to settle on New England soil, for it is known that the immigrating ancestor established the family in Dracut, Mass., in 1635, and succeeding generations have continued to add luster to a name already well known in the Mother country. When the war between England and the colonies disturbed the peace of both countries members of the Marshall family took sides with the colonists and assisted in winning their independence. It was from such sturdy stock that Horatio N. Marshall was descended, his birth occurring in Newburyport, Mass., where throughout his life he followed his trades of mason and builder. Of his marriage with Mary Varnham a number of children were born, but only three grew to maturity and only two are now living.

Emmons E. Marshall was also born in the locality which has been the home of his ancestors for so many generations, his birth occurring in Lowell, Mass., December 28, 1850, and he was educated in the public and high schools of Newburyport. When he was a lad of fifteen years old he had made up his mind to become self-supporting, his first step in this direction being as clerk in a provision store in Newburyport. From there he went to Boston, where he was employed in a wholesale and retail produce house. It was while in the employ of the latter company that he was enabled from time to time to take sea voyages to the various ports where the company's ships sailed for goods to supply their trade. On one of these expeditions the vessel entered port at St. Johns, Newfoundland, and from there went to Liverpool, after which the plan was to go to East Indies. To the great disappointment of the young sailor however the route was changed, and instead they recrossed the Atlantic and went to New Orleans. It was in 1873 that he came to California by way of Panama, the boat on which he sailed casting anchor in the harbor of San Francisco. As he wished to come to the southern part of the state he boarded another boat for Santa Barbara, and from there came by stage to Los Angeles. The attraction in coming hither was the fact that he had two old friends in Lordsburg. Buying out an apiary which had been established by a settler he engaged in bee culture in Live Oak cañon for a number of years, an enterprise which was broken into in 1878, in which year he returned to his home in Massachusetts for a visit The following year he resumed the work which had been temporarily discontinued and until 1880 was interested in bee culture. In that year he went to Benson, Ariz., carrying on a meat market there for one year. From Arizona he went to the San Samon valley, where until the breaking up of camp he carried on a freighting business between Galeyville and the Cherokow mountain mine. Subsequently he was similarly engaged, freighting supplies to Clifton, Morenci and Globe, all in Arizona, and it was while on one of his expeditions to Morenci that five men who were hauling quartz ore for the same company were killed by the Indians.

It was in 1883 that Mr. Marshall returned to California and in Los Angeles county purchased forty acres of land near what is now Claremont. The land bore little or no improvement, but he cultivated it and made it his home for many years, finally selling it in 1903 as an addition to the town of Claremont. In the meantime, in 1886, he entered the employ of Richard Gird, having charge of one of his meat markets in Pomona until the time of the boom, when, as did many others, he went into the real-estate business. The close of the boom again found him in Mr. Gird's employ, and in 1892 he purchased one of his employer's shops and has since retained the business, his present location being at No. 176 West Second street. The growth of the business has made the assistance of a partner necessary, and under the firm name of Marshall & Beeks a flourishing business is conducted. His investments in real estate have been widely made, and included among other properties are his own residence and the post-office building.

In Pomona Mr. Marshall was married to Miss Eva Borden, a native of Minnesota, and three children have brightened their home life, Edith, Horatio, and Jane. Mrs. Marshall is a devoted member of the Congregational Church. Politically Mr. Marshall is a Republican.

J. J. LASWELL. As an industrious, enterprising and progressive man, J. J. Laswell has for a number of years been actively identified with the leading interests of San Luis Rey, and is a worthy representative of its skilful and prosperous agriculturists. A son of the late Uriah Laswell, he was born, June 25, 1862, in Rockcastle county, Ky., where he was reared and educated.

A native of Kentucky, Uriah Laswell was born March 24, 1833. A farmer from choice, he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in his native state for many years, accumulating some money. Migrating then to Missouri, he purchased two hundred and twenty acres of land on the Platte river, and by means of energetic toil and wise management improved a valuable ranch, on which he resided until his death, in 1900. A man of strong personality, he obtained a position of influence in his Missouri home, becoming one of the leading Democrats of the place, and serving for some time as county clerk. Fraternally he was a Mason and both he and his wife were members of the Baptist Church, with which they united when young. His wife, whose maiden name was Caroline French, spent her entire life in Kentucky, dying at a comparatively early age. Of the eight children born of their union, seven are living, one son, besides J. J., being a resident of California.

Having completed his early education in the common schools of Kentucky, J. J. Laswell assisted his father in the care of the home ranch, obtaining a practical knowledge of general farming and horse breeding and raising. Leaving the parental roof when twenty years of age, he came to California in search of riches, and for about eight years worked in the silver mines of San Bernardino county. Locating in the San Luis Rey valley about 1890, he first purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land at Vista, and having improved it subsequently disposed of it at an advantage. Purchasing then a ranch at San Luis Rey, he devoted his time and energies to its improvement, and in course of time had a large part of its one hundred and twenty-eight acres in a tillable condition, and in addition to raising corn and alfalfa became one of the leading dairymen of this section of the valley, keeping about thirty cows. In 1906 Mr. Laswell sold this property, and moved to Chino, San Bernardino county, where he purchased an alfalfa ranch.

October 13, 1888, Mr. Laswell married Catherine Hughes, who was born in Wales, and came to California with her parents in 1887. Her father, Dana Hughes, died in California, but her mother is still living. Of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Laswell six children were born. Politically Mr. Laswell is an adherent of the Democratic party, and fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Religiously both Mr. and Mrs. Laswell are consistent and valued members of the Baptist Church.

HENRY HERBERT MAREAN. It is not the good fortune of everyone who enters a new and untried field of endeavor to meet with the success which has followed the efforts of Mr. Marean since he came to the west in 1897. Preceded by years devoted exclusively to mercantile life in the middle west he came to California in the year just mentioned with the determination to make the most of the chances which were here offered, in spite of the handicap of having had no experience whatever in the line of his new undertaking. Through an investment company with headquarters in Kansas City, Mo., he had previously purchased twenty acres of land near Highland, San Bernardino county, on rural route No. 2, and hither he came to take possession of the property in 1897. The ranch is devoted entirely to the cultivation of oranges, being divided about equally as to sweets and navels. Mr. Marean has greatly enhanced the value and appearance of his property by the erection of a fine residence and suitable barns, and with the aid of horses and the requisite implements he has been able to accomplish results far beyond what he had dared to hope for when he undertook the work less than a decade ago.

Henry H. Marean is a native of Missouri, born in Sedalia. The years of his boyhood and young manhood were passed within the confines of his native city, where for thirty years he had devoted himself assiduously to the dry goods business. The confinement and routine which it demanded made a change desirable, and through the agency of the investment company aforementioned he was enabled to secure not only a desirable piece of property from a financial standpoint, but a delightful home place, surrounded by all material things that make for happiness. In addition to superintending his ranch Mr. Marean is interested in the California Gem Mining Company, owners of a quarry of ornamental stone located near Hinkley, San Bernardino county. Mr. and Mrs. Marean have one son.

GEORGE H. MILLER. As showing what may be accomplished by a normal, healthy and ambitious mind which marks out a career for itself and resolutely goes to work to accomplish results, the case of George H. Miller, of Pomona, affords a lesson strong in interest and vital in its ring of encouragement. The machine shop and garage on Garey near Second street of which Mr. Miller is the proprietor, is the principal establishment of the kind in Pomona, and in order to accommodate his large and increasing trade it is his intention in the near future to open one of the largest and most up-to-date garages in this part of the country. Since the growth of the popularity in automobiles Mr. Miller has added the handling of various makes to his other business, and in his warerooms may be seen the Tourist, Pope, Waverly and other electric machines equally well known. While this latter business is remunerative and represents a large investment of capital, it forms but one line of interest, for Mr. Miller is perhaps even better known as an expert in the installation of pumping plants, a business in which he has been engaged since 1898. As representative for the Fairbanks-Morse Company he began selling their goods in that year, later adding the installation of pumping plants, and in the interim has built up a large business, which extends throughout Los Angeles, San Bernardino and Riverside counties.

Of Danish descent, George H. Miller was born in Chicago, Ill., May 16, 1870, the son of John and Anna (Larsen) Miller, both born in Denmark. Although in his younger years John Miller was reared as a farmer his love for the sea led to an entire change in the plans as originally marked out for him, and thus it was that the greater part of his active life was spent upon the sea, sailing into almost all of the navigable waters on the globe. He finally drifted to Chicago, Ill., and carrying out a plan to give up the sea and begin life anew as a landsman, he followed the trade of painter in that city until removing to Oshkosh, Wis., there working as a fisherman. This, however, proved but a temporary location, for in 1884 he came to California and with his family located in Pomona.

George H. Miller was a child of only four years when his parent removed from Illinois to Wisconsin, and he was reared and educated in the common schools in Oshkosh. After removing to Pomona in 1884 he attended the high school here for a number of years, graduating in 1889, he spent a short time in Pomona College. With the idea of preparing himself more readily for business life, however, he gave up the latter to take a course in Woodbury's Business College, graduating therefrom in 1891. It was not long afterward before he was enabled to put his knowledge to good account, having obtained a position with the Pomona Steam Laundry Company, with whom he remained four years, and for a part of that time was manager of the plant. Subsequently he secured the position of bookkeeper with Fairbanks-Morse Company of Los Angeles, and later became salesman for the same company. As he was always of a mechanical turn of mind the work was congenial and he remained with the company until starting in business on his own account in 1898. Coming back to Pomona that year he opened his present machine shop on Garey street, having a floor space 50x105, where may be found everything in the line of pumping supplies. He also owns a ranch of fifteen acres on Cucomongo avenue, five acres of which are in oranges, besides a ranch near Claremont.

In Pomona Mr. Miller was married to Mary B. Green, who was born in Minnesota, and they and their two children, Ray and Grace, form a happy home circle, the family residence being located at No. 907 Gibbs street. Both Mr. Miller and his wife are members of the Christian Church and he is a member of the Board of Trade of Pomona. Fraternally he is identified with the Woodmen of the World.

JOEL DAVID MARTIN. An expert mechanic, a business man of ability, and a licensed sailing master and pilot, Joel David Martin is a well known citizen of Avalon, and at present fills the position of superintendent of the Meteor Boat Company of that city. He has contributed largely to the success of the big glass bottomed boats and assisted in the building of many of the larger craft used in the waters at that point. Mr. Martin is a native of Indiana, his birth having occurred October 2, 1865, in Crawfordsville. His father, William Martin, was born in Beardstown, Ill., and was by occupation a farmer. He was in the Mexican war under General Scott, serving in an Indiana regiment, and later became a pioneer in Minnesota, locating in Lake City, where he improved a farm and still lives at the advanced age of eighty-four years. The mother, who was before her marriage Lucinda Pryor, belonged to an old eastern family, her birth occurring in Indiana and her death in Minnesota, in 1877.

There were fourteen children in the family of which Mr. Martin was a member, he being the second youngest. In 1866 he was taken by his parents to Minnesota, and was reared on a farm near Lake City, receiving his education in the public schools there. At the age of seventeen he went to Minneapolis and learned and followed the carpenter trade for a number of years. As an employe of Sackett & Wiggins he assisted in building the Hennepin theatre in that city, then was employed by Litt as assistant to the master mechanic for two years. When Litt built the Grand Opera House in St. Paul Mr. Martin fitted up the stage; then was engaged as master mechanic and was on the road for nine years following, during that time making one trip east. In February, 1900, he came to the coast with James Neil, later spending a year in Honolulu with him, building all of the scenery necessary to the needs of the company. Returning to Los Angeles in 1901 he became master mechanic for Morosco, filling the position for four years. Having become interested in Avalon with Mr. Hubbard, in 1901, he bought the Meteor, then assisted in the organization and incorporation of the Meteor Boat Company, built the Cleopatra, became connected with the Avalon Glass Bottom Boat Company, then bought the Monami and consolidated the two companies. The Monami is now dismantled and lying on the beach. The Empress, which Mr. Martin now runs, was also built by him and is the only boat with two rows of glass boxes having sixteen glasses, one and one-sixteenth inches thick, twenty-four and one-half inches wide and sixty inches long. The equipment on this craft is the finest and best of any at Avalon and includes one seventy-two horse power, three cylinder engine, and another eight horse power two cylinders.

The marriage of Mr. Martin occurred in St. Paul, uniting him with Miss Loretta Hanley, a native of Faribault, Minn., and they are the parents of one son, William. The family residence is located on Eleventh street and Maple avenue in Los Angeles.

FRANK MILLER. An experience of considerable duration as a soldier in the volunteer service during the Civil war, followed by the occupation of a sailor upon the high seas and a miner in the mountainous regions of the west, gave to Mr. Miller a broad knowledge of different parts of the United States, the customs of different localities, the opportunities afforded by diverse pursuits and the habits of people in various regions. In this way he has acquired a broad knowledge of men and localities and is the possessor of a self-acquired education that gives him prestige in his community and prominence among acquaintances. The details connected with mining and milling are thoroughly understood by him, so that his services are of great practical value in the development of the plant with which he is connected and in which he owns an interest.

Illinois is the native commonwealth of Mr. Miller, who was born in Coles county, March 29, 1840, and is a son of Elisha and Harriet (Cushman) Miller. During boyhood he received such educational advantages as were offered by the city school of Charleston, the county seat of Coles county. As he grew toward manhood he saw the shadow of war hover over the country and envelop the people in its dark mantle of sorrow. His northern education and lineage naturally gave him a strong faith in the Union, and at the outbreak of the Rebellion he gave his enthusiastic support to the Federal cause. Like thousands of the sturdy young men of the north, he hastened to offer his services to the Union, enlisting with patriotic ardor and loyal devotion to country. At Ottawa he was accepted as a private in Company B, Fifty-third Illinois Infantry, and shortly afterward was assigned to the army of the Tennessee, in which he served for three years and eight months. Among the most historic struggles in which he bore a part were the battle of Shiloh and the siege of Vicksburg, and later he marched with General Sherman to the sea, participating in the memorable engagements of that campaign. At the close of the war he took part in the grand review at Washington and received an honorable discharge from the army.

Travels through the southland, the experiences of camp life and the roving nature of a soldier's career, left Mr. Miller discontented with the uneventful monotony of village work, and shortly after he had left the army he became a sailor, following the sea for two or more years. At the expiration of that time he entered into an occupation radically different from any he had previously attempted, and as a miner he soon acquired a wide knowledge of the regions of the west. In the interest of his work he visited the Rocky mountain regions, spending some time in the mines of Utah, Nevada and Idaho. For about five years he made his headquarters in Oregon and engaged in mining extensively in that state. After having made various trips to California in the interests of his business affairs, in 1897 he became a permanent resident of the state, and now is one of the managing partners in a mining enterprise which owns and operates a valuable property in the Holcomb valley in San Bernardino county, near the village of Doble. Here Mr. Miller makes his home and occupies a leading position among the progressive citizens. While living in Illinois he met Miss Emma Elsie Cushman, daughter of John and Addie (Wilder) Cushman, and they were united in marriage in 1870. The only child of their union was a son, Frank, who died at the age of nine months.

ROBERT CLELAND HARBISON, editor of the San Bernardino Sun, is of Scotch-Irish descent and dates his ancestry in this country back to the Revolutionary period, his two great-great-grandfathers, Harbison and Chestnut, having served in the Revolutionary war and died in military prison during that conflict. His great-grandfather was Mathew Harbison of South Carolina, and his grandfather, Robert Harbison, was born in that state and in the early forties of the nineteenth century became a pioneer farmer of Bloomington, Ind., and in 1857 removed to Indianola, Iowa, where he improved a farm and lived the remainder of his life. His father, William Porter, was born in Bloomington, Ind., in 1841, and when a boy was taken by his father to Indianola, where Robert Cleland Harbison was born September 10, 1866. The father was engaged in farming for a time and later became a dry goods merchant at Indianola, conducting that business for many years, but now living a retired life in that city. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, having served in the Thirty-fourth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, from which he received an honorable discharge before the war was ended on account of physical disability. As an active member and elder of the Presbyterian Church, he is a liberal supporter of its charities and benevolences, and is one of the most highly respected citizens of his home city. His wife was in maidenhood Amanda Cleland, a native of Beaver county, Pa., who came to Iowa with her parents in 1856, and died at Indianola in 1903. The son, Robert Cleland, is the only child living.

He attended the public schools of Indianola, graduating from the high school in 1881, and later entered Simpson College from which institution he graduated in 1888 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and having won every prize offered in the college course. His early liking for the newspaper work was evidenced by the attention which he gave to local and college papers during his course. In 1891 Mr. Harbison was granted the degree of Master of Arts by his alma mater. After his graduation from college he began teaching school and continued in that profession until 1890 when he went to Ogden, Utah, and engaged in business life for a short time, later taking up the newspaper work. In 1892 he secured a position as reporter on a San Francisco paper, and in 1894 came to San Bernardino, where in company with W. A. Selkirk and N. J. Levinson, he started the San Bernardino Sun, having taken over the Courier of that city which was in a very badly run down condition at that time. In 1905 The Sun Company of San Bernardino was incorporated with Mr. Harbison as president. The company conducts a general publishing business, and the Sun, which has been a daily ever since the commencement of its publication has grown from a four-page, six-column paper to eight, ten and twelve pages of seven columns each. The plant is thoroughly modern and one of the most perfectly equipped in this part of the state, having linotype machines, a perfecting press, and an electric power plant. The Sun building was erected in 1901, but the proportions were soon found to be inadequate, and in 1904 it was enlarged to dimensions 50x90 feet and is located on Court street. The publication is conducted on Republican lines politically, and Mr. Harbison is an influential councillor among party leaders. He is an ex-member of the Republican county central committee, and now serves as chairman of the Republican committee for the eighth Congressional district, in which he resides.

The marriage of Mr. Harbison occurred in San Francisco when Miss Nina Lezotte, a native of Mitchell county, Ia., and a talented musician, became his wife. They are the parents of one child, a daughter Rose. Fraternally he is a member of San Bernardino Lodge No. 346, F. & A. M., Keystone Chapter No. 57, R. A. M., and St. Bernard Commandery No. 23, K. T.

BURT BEVERLY. Prominent among the leading real estate dealers of Los Angeles county is Burt Beverly, who with his partners, M. E. and S. L. Stroud, is doing much to advance the realty interests of Southern California. A son of Pardon Mawney and Catherine Jane (Booker) Beverly, he was born and brought up in Logan county, Ill. He comes from distinguished ancestry, his great-grandfather, Pardon Mawney Whipple, served in the war of 1812, being an officer on board "Old Ironsides," the popular name of the frigate Constitution, which has been preserved to this day, while an uncle of his Grandmother Beverly was a soldier in the Revolution. His father, a native of Providence, R. I., migrated to Arkansas when a young man, and after his marriage went north, he and his bride traveling in a wagon to Illinois, passing through Chicago when it was but a frontier post. Locating in Logan county, he became owner of four hundred acres of rich land, and for many years was one of the foremost farmers of the community.

Laying a substantial foundation for his future education in the district schools of Logan county, Ill., Burt Beverly was subsequently graduated from the Atlanta high school, and from the Gem City Business College in Quincy, Ill. Going south for a year, he had charge of the books of the Bluff City Lumber Company at Pine Bluff, Ark. The climate proving unsuitable, he went from there to Chicago, where he remained a number of years, working for some of the largest firms of that metropolis, including those of Swift & Co., and of Reid, Murdoch & Co., which he served as bookkeeper, subsequently working for three years in the wholesale house of Marshall Field & Co. Then on leaving Chicago July 8, 1901, he and his wife traveled extensively, finally visiting Mrs. Beverly's uncle, Flint M. Whitmore, a wealthy lumberman of Northern California, who located in Amador county in 1849. Five months later, in Sacramento, Mr. Beverly formed the acquaintance of M. E. Stroud, with whom he went to Seattle, Tacoma, Everett and other places of interest, returning from Puget Sound to San Francisco by steamer. Coming to Los Angeles county in March, 1902, Mr. Beverly resided for a year in Pasadena, and then came to Ocean Park, accepting the position of bookkeeper with the Ocean Park Improvement Company. Subsequently, in partnership with M. E. and S. L. Stroud, he embarked in the real-estate business, opening an office at No. 162 Pier avenue. Succeeding well in their operations, these enterprising gentlemen removed to Venice December 15, 1905, opening their present office, No. 38 Windway avenue. This firm has acquired considerable property of value in this locality, owning and controlling five lots on Ocean Front, and also having title to other property near here, and in Huntington, on the beach.

In Chicago, Ill., Mr. Beverly married Mabel Estelle Whitmore, a daughter of Orange Scott Whitmore, now residing at Pasadena, and they have three children, Marion, Muriel and Burt, Jr. Politically Mr. Beverly is independent, and religiously both Mr. and Mrs. Beverly are members of the Christian Church.

FRANK L. BATES. Not only does the Bates family belong to the pioneer citizenship of California, but preceding generations were also identified with the early colonization of the east, so that both on the Atlantic shores and on the Pacific coast they have borne a share in transforming primeval conditions into an environment of progress and prosperity. It is a tradition in the family that Orin Bates was born in the house that was also the birthplace of the celebrated "Jim" Fisk. Asa, a brother of Orin, was the father of Asa, Jr., who was born at Pownal, Vt., in 1813, and became a California pioneer of 1849, crossing the plains with oxen and wagons. After a trial experience as a miner at Yankee Jim's, he went to San Francisco, purchased a small steamboat and began to freight up the Sacramento river. Later he held the offices of postmaster and justice of the peace at San Pablo, Contra Costa county, from which point he removed to a farm near Watsonville, and after a time moved to Antioch, Contra Costa county, where he engaged in teaming. In 1868 he was appointed lighthouse keeper at Point Conception, off the coast of Santa Barbara county, but resigned the position after three years and turned his attention to business pursuits in the city of Santa Barbara. On disposing of his interests there he went to Lower California and became interested in prospecting and mining, but soon transferred his headquarters to the Gold Basin of Arizona. At the time of his death in Pomona, September 25, 1889, he had attained the age of seventy-six years.

When Asa Bates came to the Pacific coast he was a single man, but a few years later, in 1854, he established domestic ties, his marriage in San Francisco uniting him with Rachel Patterson Taylor, who was born in Vermont, a daughter of John L. and Susanna (McGarr) Taylor, and a sister of Hon. James M. Taylor.

The family of Asa and Rachel Patterson (Taylor) Bates comprised five children, namely: Clarence A., who died at Pomona, Cal.; Ida E., who married Cornelius E. DeForrest of New York City (a great-nephew of Commodore Vanderbilt) and died in San Francisco; Frank L., whose name introduces this sketch; Algernon Valentine, who was drowned in the Colorado river at the age of twenty-one years; and Mabel V., Mrs. J. B. Osborne, who was president of the Los Angeles Equal Rights League, treasurer of the Women's Press Club, and secretary of the board of directors of the Association of Pioneer Women of California, and who died in Los Angeles September 8, 1905, at the age of thirty-nine years, and was buried at Pomona. The mother, who is now seventy-five years of age, is still active and mentally well preserved, a well-informed woman, interested in the work of the Pioneer Women of California, to whose association she belongs, and an entertaining conversationalist, whose narratives of early days in the west are not only pleasant but instructive as well.

While the family of Asa Bates were living at Watsonville, Santa Cruz county, Cal., his son, Frank L., was born October 22, 1861, and he received a fair education in the Santa Barbara schools. From an early age he has been a student of mines and mining, and few surpass him in knowledge of the industry. For four years he engaged in mining, milling and operating a cyanide plant in Death valley, after which he spent three years in Eldorado canon on the Colorado river, and then went to the mining district of San Bernardino county, removing to Julian in 1898 and operating a mill at that place. For eight years he operated a mill at Perris, Riverside county, and later engaged in gem mining in the foothills of Smith mountain, where he now owns several claims. Recently he came to San Diego county to operate a cyanide plant two and one-half miles northeast of Escondido, as a member of the firm of Bates & Timmerman. In politics he votes the Republican ticket, while in religious affiliations he holds membership with the Congregational Church. His marriage took place in Los Angeles May 22, 1892, and united him with Alice Simmons, who was born at Barnes, near Julian, San Diego county, and has passed her life within the limits of Southern California. The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Bates is Orin, a bright boy now eleven years of age.

CHARLES O. HUMPHREY. When Mr. Humphrey came to California in 1901 the thought uppermost in his mind was to find a climate less harsh than that which prevails in the state of Washington, where he formerly resided, and where his wife's health was becoming impaired. His first location in the state was in the vicinity of Los Angeles, where he purchased a ranch of twenty acres devoted entirely to the raising of small fruits, but two years later he disposed of his property there and came to Long Beach. After residing here long enough to satisfy himself that the climatic conditions were such as he was in search of he determined to establish himself in business and to this end purchased the livery stable then owned by F. M. Jones. During the two years which Mr. Humphrey has had the business in charge he has outgrown the quarters which it formerly occupied and is now in a leased building on American avenue, which accommodates forty horses, besides a large variety of vehicles.

Knox county, Ill., was the scene of the early life of Charles O. Humphrey, and he was born near Galesburg, June 6, 1867. The parents, Samuel and Harriet (Herrold) Humphrey, were pioneers of Knox county, settling on a farm in the vicinity of Galesburg when that now thriving town was little more than a hamlet. The father passed his remaining days in Illinois, dying on his farm in 1873. Some time after the death of her husband Mrs. Humphrey went to Washington, and her death occurred there in 1891. Only six years old when orphaned by the death of his father, the school advantages which he otherwise might have enjoyed were a thing of the past, and aside from the training which he obtained in the district school near the farm his knowledge has been gained in the broad school of experience. As soon as he was old enough he worked on the homestead farm and thus relieved his mother of much of the responsibility which had fallen to her upon the death of her husband.

Leaving the middle west in 1887, Mr. Humphrey located on a farm of four hundred acres near Spokane, Wash., which he had purchased for $5 per acre, remaining there until 1901, when, as previously stated, he came to California on account of his wife's ill-health. The family home at No. 936 Cedar avenue is presided over by Mrs. Humphrey, who prior to her marriage was Molisa Donnelley, a native of Iowa, and who is now the mother of one daughter, who bears the name of Alice. Both Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey are members of the Baptist Church, toward the support of which they contribute generously, also aiding in the furtherance of the various benevolent societies connected with that body. Politically Mr. Humphrey is a Republican, although he takes no active interest in the party aside from casting his vote, and fraternally he is identified with the Eagles and the Woodmen of the World.

JAMES CLOYD JOHNSTON is a native of the east, he was born on a farm on the Ohio river where for some years resided his parents, Cloyd and Diana (Bruce) Johnston, the father from that point carrying on his work as a stock-buyer and drover and shipping and driving cattle in large numbers to the Cincinnati markets. The farm was situated near the river town of Powhatan Point in Belmont county, Ohio, and there he was born August 27, 1842, and there he passed the uneventful years of early youth. On leaving home he took up the task of earning his own livelihood, in which pursuit he traveled through various parts of our country. Ultimately he extended his travels to other lands. At the close of four years of travel he came to California and settled at what became known as Johnston's Landing on Catalina Island. Later he was the first to take flocks of sheep to San Clemente, where his success proved the possibilities of the occupation on the island.

Coming to the mountains of San Bernardino county in 1890, Mr. Johnston established his home at Doble and has since bought mining interests in this section. At this time he ranks among the most prosperous miners in the Holcomb valley and owns a large number of claims immediately north of his home place; these claims he values at $200,000. Since coming to this locality he has taken up one hundred and sixty acres of land from the government and has transformed an unimproved tract into an attractive homestead. The residence forms a comfortable home for the family and possesses architectural attractions, in addition to harmonious interior furnishings. The walls are adorned with oil paintings from the brush of Mrs. Johnston, who is a keen lover of nature and possesses the rare faculty of being able to reproduce on the canvas many of the beauties of sky and water, mountains and woods. Mrs. Johnston was born in Grass Valley, this state, and was Jessie E. Doney, a daughter of Loren and Amelia (Platt) Doney. Two children bless their union. The son, Bruce, receives $250 per month for his services as chemist, assayer and mining engineer at Searchlight camp. The daughter, Pearl, is the wife of Oscar Witt.

Politically Mr. Johnston is a Republican, and since 1905 he has filled the office of postmaster at Doble. Formerly he owned three hundred and twenty acres where Hollywood stands, and also owned various unimproved lots in and near Los Angeles, but the majority of these he has disposed of and has invested the proceeds in his present valuable mining claims.

CHARLES BRADFORD HUGHES. The gold fields of Southern California are well known to the mining world, and have been the means of drawing many expert miners and prospectors to the state. It may not be as universally known, however, that the district in and around Lytle creek is especially rich in the ore that has given the state its name. Comparatively speaking this is one of the newer mines opened up, and as yet its true value is not known, although facts and figures at hand suffice to warrant the statement that in a few years, when proper machinery for handling has been installed, the output will be doubled and trebled.

Charles B. Hughes, a native of New York City, made his advent into the state in 1887, locating first in the San Joaquin valley, where he carried on general ranching and wheat raising for four years. From there he went to Fresno county, where for the same length of time he was engaged in the nursery business, meeting with a fair degree of success in the undertaking. It was during the year 1895 that he came to San Bernardino county, and after looking around for a time for a suitable location he finally came to Lytle creek, with which locality he has been identified ever since, as miner and prospector. While he has several valuable prospects in other parts of the county, his interest is chiefly centered in his mines along Lytle creek. While he has a number of low-grade prospects here, the most important one, and the one which has claimed his attention most continuously, is a solid body of ore six hundred feet wide, three thousand feet long. Mr. Hughes holds this mine worth $100,000, which would be a cheap investment for capitalists, for with a proper cyanide plant hundreds and even thousands of tons could be handled daily. As it is, Mr. Hughes has put a shaft of one hundred and twenty-five feet into the ledge, besides which he has made cross-cuts therein.

In this connection it would perhaps not be out of place to mention briefly some of Mr. Hughes' co-laborers in the gold-fields around Lytle creek. P. Perdue, Dr. Shepherd and Dr. Dickey have struck a very rich vein of ore which they are developing, and which is running from $10 to $100 per ton. William W. Carlile has a large body of copper ore which runs across the face of Berneita Falls. James Washington is operating a placer mine from which he has taken more or less gold since 1889, besides which he has a large quartz ledge of low-grade ore passing through his placer. William Jones, who located here in 1887, has both placer and quartz prospects from which he is taking both silver and gold. At Middle-fork James and Thomas Baird, of Colton, have gold, silver and copper properties, the gold assaying as high as $60 per ton.

EDGAR MILLARD KNICKERBOCKER. San Bernardino county has many valuable mines within its borders which are making large fortunes for their owners, and one of those now in successful operation and being rapidly developed to a still greater extent is that owned by the Three Friends Mining and Milling Company, which firm is composed of E. M. Knickerbocker, Long and Miller. The milling plant is located in Van Dusen canon, a tributary to Bear Valley, and about thirty miles from the city of San Bernardino, and is fitted wth a twenty-five horsepower engine with forty horsepower boiler. These have in operation five stamps of their ten-stamp mill and within a few months the proprietors expect to have the other five stamps in working order.

On October 26, 1876, Edgar Millard Knickerbocker, son of Charles Henry and Susan (Robbins) Knickerbocker, was born on a farm in Potter county, Pa., and at an early age went to work in the oil fields of that state. After nine years spent in this employment, and during which time he had charge of thirty pumps, he went to New Mexico with a surveying party sent out by the Lackawanna Lumber Company and remained in the employ of this firm for five years. He subsequently took a trip through Montana, Washington and Oregon, then came to Los Angeles, where he remained some time, and finally settled permanently in his present location. In 1901 he spent six months operating the Alberta mills in Kern county, and also worked in the Yellow Aster mines for a time, in 1902 taking up his claims here. After three years spent in the mills at Gold Mountain he resolved to work these claims and for thirty days leased a two-stamp mill of C. L. Metzer to test the ore. Finding that it had a value of eight dollars per ton in 1905 he installed a two-stamp mill of his own, but heavy snowfalls prevented its operation. In 1906 he then installed the machinery he is now operating, the five stamps being run to their full capacity.

In 1900 Mr. Knickerbocker was united in marriage with Miss Hilma Johnson, a native of Sweden and a daughter of Peter Johnson.

WILLIAM JUSTICE. The native place of Mr. Justice is Ozark county, Mo., and the date of his birth, October 22, 1843. His parents, Amos and Susan (Barker) Justice, were natives of Missouri, where the father died in 1844. Later the mother moved to Arkansas and from there to the frontier regions of Texas, after a time settling in Milam county in the more settled portion of the same state. Coming to the Pacific coast, she arrived in Los Angeles county March 27, 1867, and settled near Norwalk, where she died in 1881 at sixty years of age. There were three sons in the family, John, Thomas and William, the last-named being only a year old when his father died. From the first Misfortune seemed to mark the lads for her own. The death of their father and the poverty of the family prevented the sons from attending school, and they received little education save such as was gathered from observation and reading. While still living in Missouri John was killed by a log accidentally falling upon him. Thomas passed through a youth of struggle, married, and at the opening of the Civil war joined the Confederate army. While in active service he was wounded at Milliken's Bend, thirty miles above Vicksburg, and died at Monroe, La., June 20, 1863, from the effects of the injury. The youngest of the brothers, William, was hit by a ball when at school at the age of twelve years. The ball penetrated the hip bone and caused erysipelas to develop, rendering him a cripple for life. For this reason he was unable to enlist in the war. Remaining at home, he supported himself by working for neighbors and farming for himself in a small way. Shortly after the close of the war he and his family decided to remove to the Pacific coast, and with a wagon and four mules drove along the southern route via San Antonio, El Paso, Tucson and Yuma to San Bernardino, settling one mile south of Downey in Los Angeles county, where he engaged in farming.

With a team Mr. Justice returned to Texas in 1873 and remained for sixteen months, but his health failed and he returned to Downey, arriving there October 9, 1874, and again taking up life at the old home. From there he again went to Texas March 1, 1882, but soon sold his Texas farm, and in September of the same year came once more to California, where he bought land near Artesia and took up ranching. December 22, 1885, he arrived in what is now the Richland school district near the site of Escondido, where he has since made his home. The name Richland was given to the little hamlet and a postoffice was maintained until the establishment of the rural free delivery, since which time Escondido has been his postoffice town. Very soon after his arrival he bought one hundred and twenty-four acres of government land and set out a portion of the tract in walnuts, while the balance was devoted to pasturage of stock and raising of grain. Eventually considerations of health led him to relinquish ranch work, and October 15, 1904, he moved into the town of Escondido, where he gives attention to his duties as supervisor. While at Richland he organized the school district, selected the site of the schoolhouse and serve as clerk of the school board until 1894, meanwhile taking an active part in the erection of the school building.

The marriage of Mr. Justice took place in Hill county, Tex., November 8, 1863, and united him with Margaret A., daughter of J. B. Merchant, who was a native of Mississippi. Eight children were born of their union, namely: Hulda J., Mrs. J. W. Isbell, of Escondido; John B., who is engaged in the manufacture of carriages at No. 208 East Seventh street, Los Angeles; Charles W., of Escondido; Sue, Mrs. S. E. Edwards, of San Diego; Maude, who resides in Los Angeles and is a stenographic reporter; Viola, who is an instructor in Highland Park school in Los Angeles county; Ruth, who remains with her parents; and J. Amos, a graduate of 1906 from the Southern California Dental College in Los Angeles. The family are connected with the Escondido Christian Church and are contributors to the religious and educational progress of their community.

J. THOMAS KERR is one of the younger farmers of Riverside county, and one of the most enterprising and resourceful. At this writing he acts as vice-president and manager of the Kerr Farming Company, farmers and contractors, at Armada in the Perris valley; the ranch comprising seventeen thousand acres, of which eleven thousand acres are in grain and six thousand acres are sheep pasture.

There are two steam-threshing and harvesting outfits; and when not needed for the grain, the threshing engines are utilized for other purposes, as street work at Corona, and hauling from the mines. A warehouse is now being erected at Alessandro. In addition to farming and threshing contracts, he is a stockholder in the San Jacinto Water Company and the C. C. C. Cattle Company of the San Jacinto valley, besides aiding other local enterprises by his influence and co-operation.

Louisville, Ky., is the native city of Mr. Kerr, and September 15, 1871, the date of his birth, his parents being John Thomas and Betty A. (Porter) Kerr, natives respectively of Missouri and Kentucky. They removed to Kansas, settling on a stock ranch near Arkansas City, where the father had fourteen thousand acres of range. Later they moved to Winfield, Kans., and in 1884 came to California, settling in Riverside county. In company with G. D. Compton and James Kerr, under firm title of Kerr, Compton & Kerr, he laid out and started the town of San Jacinto, and founded the Vallevista postoffice. In 1896 he came to the Perris valley and here died in January, 1905, aged sixty-eight years. His widow now fifty-nine years of age, resides at Riverside.

While still a young lad J. Thomas Kerr accompanied his parents to California and settled in Riverside county. In 1887 he secured employment in a factory at Colton, and one year later engaged as fireman on the Southern Pacific road, in eight months' time winning promotion to engineer, which he filled for eighteen months on that road and the Santa Fe.

In 1891 he took up farming in the San Jacinto valley, remaining there for three years. Taking up contract threshing, he removed to Yucaipe, and in 1893 took contract to thresh ten thousand acres in Bear valley. In 1894 he spent nine months in moving the stamp mills to the desert for the Gold Canon Company. He then returned to the ranch. In 1896 he took a contract to haul motors and pumps for a mining company, and the following year he had a contract to haul to Randsburg for the Atlantic and Pacific Company. The steam-threshing and hauling business provides a gratifying income. In 1901 he put in six thousand acres of wheat on the Chino. He gives much attention to the management of the ranch of the Kerr Farming Company near Armada. In ownership of which property his partners are: R. J. Waters, president, and A. W. Wright, secretary. The equipments of the ranch are complete. A bookkeeper is employed on the ranch to take charge of accounts.

Mr. Kerr is a Democrat and always votes the straight party ticket in general elections. He holds fraternal relations with the Woodmen of the World at San Jacinto. Socially he is a welcomed guest in the select circles and the aristocratic families of Riverside county. Enterprise, justice, industry and intelligence place Mr. Kerr in his present high standing in business circles.

HENRY L. MAHAN. Among the native Californians now resident in Ventura county mention should be made of Henry L. Mahan, the son of John Mahan, an old and honored pioneer of the west, and himself a large agriculturist of the Simi valley, where he owns and occupies a fine ranch of two hundred and ninety-five acres and in addition leases and superintends eleven hundred acres of valley land.

Elsewhere in this volume will be found a sketch of John Mahan, in which appears the history of the family. During the residence of his parents in Sonoma county, Cal., Henry L. Mahan was born and at an early age he came to Ventura county, where he received a fair education in the common schools. Later he had the privilege of attending the University of Southern California. Upon starting out for himself he took up ranch pursuits, for which work he was well qualified through previous experience under his father's training and oversight. During the greater part of his active career as a ranchman he has lived in Simi valley, where he settled in 1886, and four years later he purchased the property which he still owns and occupies. Under his oversight a number of important improvements have been made and the value of the ranch thereby has been increased, as well as its productive capacity. Few men are better fitted than he for ranching, as his experience and his inclinations qualify him for successful work. In order to properly cultivate his own land and his leased holdings he finds it necessary to keep a large number of horses and also to utilize many acres in raising feed for the animals. Besides the horses he has other stock on the ranch and a considerable acreage is under pasturage. The ranch buildings are neat and adapted to their varied uses, and are kept in excellent repair under his personal supervision.

The marriage of Mr. Mahan took place at Camarillo October 31, 1886, and united him with Nettie, daughter of John Been, a California pioneer represented on another page of this work. The only daughter of their union, Hazel, has been the recipient of excellent educational advantages, for Mr. and Mrs. Mahan are thorough believers in the value of a good education. The interest which he feels in schools led him to accept a position as a member of the Simi school board, of which he has been a member for thirteen years and now holds office as president of the board. In addition he has filled the office of road overseer. During the existence of the Hueneme Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West, he was among its members, and now affiliates with the Fraternal Aid.

GEORGE MIDDLETON. Many of the traits noticeable in the character of Mr. Middleton and contributory to his high standing among the people of San Diego come to him from a long line of Scotch ancestors of recognized worth and integrity. His father, James, was born in the shire of Banff, Scotland, and was a son of George Middleton, a sailor upon the seas adjacent to his native Scotland. From Banff James Middleton removed to the shire of Forfar and engaged in business at Montrose, where he had a photographic gallery as well as a shop for the manufacture of watches. When somewhat advanced in years he died at Dundee. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Margaret Ingles, was like himself a member of an ancient Scotch family, was born in the vicinity of Montrose, and spent her entire life in that part of Scotland. Thirteen children were born of their union, but only two sons are now living, and both of these are in the United States.

The eldest of the family was George, a native of Montrose, Scotland, born December 4, 1835, and reared in Montrose, where he was a pupil in a private school for a short time during childhood. When only eleven years of age he was put to work in a linen factory and two years later he was apprenticed to the trade of house painter, decorator and grainer, at which he served for five years. On the expiration of his time he began to work as a journeyman, first at Glasgow and then at Grennoch on the Clyde. During the Crimean war in 1853 he spent six months on board a British gunboat in the capacity of a painter, thence returning to Grennoch and from there to Montrose. Next he settled in Arbroath on the shores of the North sea in the shire of Forfar, where he followed his trade in the railroad shops. While living in that city he was married, June 10, 1860, to Miss Ann Barnett, a native of Arbroath and daughter of James Barnett, a merchant of the city.

Crossing the ocean to the United States the year after his marriage Mr. Middleton settled in Detroit, Mich., where he worked as a salaried painter for three years and then began to take contracts for painting. For many years he followed his occupation with diligence and skill in Detroit and was rewarded by the accumulation of a competency. During 1887 he came to California and settled in San Diego, where for nine years he owned and operated a paint store on the corner of 4th and A streets, and meanwhile filled many contracts for important jobs of painting. When his store was burned down in the fall of 1905 he closed out the business and since then has limited his attention to contract work, having since 1894 been the senior member of the firm of Middleton & Son, painters. After coming to this city he built the residence he yet owns at No. 1953 India street, and here his wife died January 10, 1905, after a happy wedded life covering almost forty-five years. Their only child, James, was born in Arbroath, Scotland, and received a high school education in Detroit, after which he learned the painter's trade under his father's oversight, and since 1894 he has been the active member of their firm. In addition he holds office as president of the Master Painters' Association, in the organization of which both he and his father bore an active part. Both are stanch believers in Republican principles and always vote the ticket at national elections. While living in Detroit the father was made a Mason and later transferred his membership to San Diego Lodge No. 35, F. & A. M., besides which he has been prominent in San Diego Court No. 28, Foresters of America, having formerly acted as chief ranger of the court and holding the office at present of deputy chief ranger. Father and son occupy a high place in their circle of acquaintances and business associates, and both are respected for integrity of life, energy of disposition, geniality of temperament and faithfulness in the filling of contracts.

JOHN GEORGE LONG. Many years of busy activity have come to Mr. Long since he first arrived in California on Thanksgiving day of 1874, and in the interval he has traveled through the greater part of the state and acquired a thorough knowledge of its leading industries. Throughout much of the time since he landed in the west he has made a specialty of mining and still retains an active connection with this occupation, of which he has gained an expert knowledge by practical experience and close observation. On coming to San Bernardino county Mr. Long took up mining in the Holcomb valley at Doble.

While claiming Missouri as his native commonwealth, Mr. Long has spent little of his life in that state, where he was born in Cass county, August 20, 1854. At an early age he was taken to Kansas by his parents, William Alfred and Margaret Matilda (Armstrong) Long, where he remained until eighteen years of age, meanwhile receiving such advantages as country schools afforded for the training of the mind. On leaving home to earn his own way in the world he drifted to the mines of Wyoming, where he worked as a laborer for a year. Next he took up railroad work and secured employment as a brakeman on the Union Pacific system. When he came to California during the latter part of November, 1874, he spent a week at Truckee, Nevada county, and thence proceeded to Rocklin, Placer county, where he worked in the mines for a short time. On leaving that locality he proceeded to Chico and secured employment at the Jackson claim. Later he engaged in mining at Butte creek. The year 1877 found him a resident of Los Angeles, where he remained for a considerable period. After one year at various occupations he was engaged as foreman of Engine Company No. 3, in which capacity he remained for nineteen months. On resigning from that position he became an employe on the street-car line, where he continued for seven years, eventually resigning in order to resume mining, and since then he has been a partner in the company whose development owes much to his energy, acumen and progressive spirit.

JOSEPH MORETTI, one of the largest and most successful dairymen in Santa Barbara county, was reared in a family of ten children, all dependent upon the resources of a small Swiss farm. He was born September 1, 1858, a son of John E. and Constancia (Phillipine) Moretti, the former of whom attained to sixty-nine and the latter to sixty-eight years of age. Mr. Moretti's independent life began at the age of fourteen, when he came to America in a sailing vessel, and to California by railroad during the summer of 1873. Along the Sacramento river he worked for a dairyman for nine months, and for the next seven months was employed at the same occupation in Sonoma county. At Half Moon Bay he conducted a dairy for two years, and another dairy in Petaluma, Sonoma county, engaging his attention for the next six months. In another part of Sonoma county he conducted a dairy for five years, and in 1881 came to Santa Barbara county, where he ever since has lived. At the present time he owns eleven hundred and sixty acres of land near Santa Maria, a large part of which provides pasture for eight hundred head of cattle. His chief dairy product is butter, and for the making of this he has the most modern appliances. On the land not devoted to pasturage he raises grain, beans and beets.

In Santa Cruz, February 15, 1891, Mr. Moretti was married to Flora Regetta, a native also of Switzerland, and they have three children, Renaldo, Allen and Irene. Mr. Moretti is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Guadaloupe, and with his wife is a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

ELMER ELLSWORTH MOORE has been identified as a promoter of the principal industries contributing to the material development of his chosen place of residence, for his interests have been manifold and important. At this writing he is engaged in promoting a new town, to be known as Lengo, lying three miles north of Compton on the Santa Ana electric railway line, and opened to the public November 1, 1905, for the sale of town lots. As vice-president and general manager of the Sterling Milk Company of Los Angeles, the plant has been brought to a high degree of perfection, and the capital stock of $200,000 has been utilized in such a manner that assured profits are brought to the holders of stock. He has introduced into Southern California a high grade of Jersey cattle, among these being a registered animal that won the world's record test (showing eleven and four-tenths per cent of butter fat) at the thirty-second agricultural fair of Santa Ana district in 1902, under the tests instituted by Professor Anderson, a government official, connected with the California State University. Within three years this cow netted the present owner seven hundred and thirty-five dollars over and above the purchase price and expense of feeding.

The Moore family is of eastern origin and Mr. Moore is a native of Ohio, born in August of 1866, his parents having been Silas and Susanna (McCoy) Moore. His maternal grandfather, John McCoy, who was a member of the old militia prior to the Revolutionary war, lived to be eighty-six years of age. After the death of his wife Silas Moore came to California and in 1893 purchased a tract of forty acres on Signal Hill near Long Beach, where he died two years later at seventy-nine years; his wife was seventy-eight at the time of her death.

Early educated in country schools in Ohio, Elmer E. Moore had the supplementary advantage of attending the Ohio Normal University at Ada, from which in 1888 he received the degree of Bachelor of Science. Immediately after his graduation he took up school-teaching, in which he continued for five years. In April, 1893, he came to California taking charge of the ranch purchased by his father. Two years later he was elected chairman of the Long Beach school board, and in that capacity aided in securing the establishment of the high school on American avenue, being president of the board at the time of the erection of that building. In the organization of the bank of Long Beach he took a warm interest and officiated as a member of its first board of directors. He was actively interested in the Long Beach public library, and he was chosen the first president of that organization.

Exchanging his ranch at Long Beach for a tract of forty acres three miles north of Compton, he removed to this latter property, which he yet owns. Since coming here he has promoted various important enterprises, including the Bank of Compton; the Compton Home Telephone Company, in which he was a member of the first board of directors; the Compton Water and Lighting Company, of which he officiated as vice-president; and the Glen Holly Dairy Company, of which he acted as general manager for ten months and is now a director. He is a man of progressive spirit, great enterprise, shrewd foresight, with the enthusiasm and judgment necessary to all who promote important industries.

In Ohio, Mr. Moore was married, December 24, 1888, to Miss Callie Martin, and they have six children, namely: Hazel, a student in the Los Angeles high school; Wallace, who is interested in the dairy business and owns five registered Jersey cows; Mabel, Emmett, Bruce and Helen. The family are identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the campaign of 1840 Mr. Moore's father supported William Henry Harrison and rallied around the slogan of "Tippecanoe and Tyler too." Mr. Moore himself has always been a firm believer in Republican principles and votes the ticket in both local and general elections. Fraternally he is associated with the Uniform Rank No. 29, K. of P.; Anchor Lodge No. 273, F. & A. M., at Compton, and Long Beach Commandery No. 40, K. T., to all of which organizations he gives his hearty allegiance.

S. B. NIVERTH, who conducts a blacksmith, general repair and wagon making shop in the Santa Maria Valley, has been identified with this locality for many years. Its earlier part included an apprenticeship to a blacksmith, and subsequent employment in different shops of the town, his own business having been established about fourteen years ago. He also carries a line of feed, grain and hay. At certain seasons of the year he employs several assistants, and his patrons come from many miles of the surrounding country.

Mr. Niverth was born in Austria August 2, 1866, and is one of two surviving sons in a family of six children. When fifteen years old he accompanied his parents, Antone and Barbara (Ullman) Niverth, to the United States, locating in Brown county, Kans., where his mother died at the age of forty-six, and where his father still engages in general farming and stock raising. S. B. Niverth spent three years with the family in Kansas, and then contracted the western fever with the results mentioned above. In 1889 he married Rachel Bradley, daughter of one of the early pioneers of the county, and the first girl born in Santa Maria Valley. To Mr. and Mrs. Niverth have been born four daughters: Alice, Barbara, Mary and Louise. Mr. Niverth is a popular addition to the social life of the town, and a member of the Hesperian Lodge F. & A. M., and the Fraternal Brotherhood of Los Angeles.

LOUIS A. PFEIFFER, a native of California and clerk of San Bernardino county, was born in Vacaville, Solano county, September 1, 1864, a son of Joseph Pfeiffer, whose birth occurred in Alsace (then France), and whence he was brought by his parents to America when a child. He was reared to young manhood in the state of Illinois, engaging with a mercantile firm for his first independent venture in life. In 1849 he crossed the plains to California and for a few years following engaged in mining in both this state and Idaho, in the latter state being one of the organizers of the General Custer mines, in which he was associated with George W. Grayson and J. B. Hoggin. This embraced extensive interests and after its sale to an English syndicate proved a valuable property. Because of impaired health Mr. Pfeiffer then came to San Francisco and in 1887 to Redlands, San Bernardino county, the latter place in the interests of property he owned here, and during his residence here he contracted a cold which resulted in his death in 1898, at the age of sixty-seven years. He left a considerable estate, in which was a ranch of two hundred and forty acres in Redlands, upon which he had himself set out an extensive orange orchard. He was a man of spirit and enterprise and always found foremost in all movements which had for their e[illegible] the general welfare of the community in wh[illegible] he resided. During the Bannock Indian wa[illegible] of 1877 he was active in his participation for the white man's interests. Mr. Pfeiffer is survived by his wife, Sophia, who now makes her home in Los Angeles.

The youngest child in a family of three daughters and one son, Louis A. Pfeiffer was reared to young manhood in the Santa Clara valley, receiving his education in the public schools in the vicinity of his home. In 1878 he entered the Santa Clara college and took a three years' course, following which he went to Idaho where his father's mining interests were located, and shortly afterward entered the store in Bonanza and also worked in the store at Custer, eventually becoming manager of the two. He occupied this responsible position until 1890, when the firm disposed of their interests, at which time he came south to Redlands, where his father was engaged in horticultural pursuits. From the year 1893 to January, 1895, he served as deputy county recorder under J. B. Goodwin, and in January, 1895, was appointed deputy county clerk under Col. J. W. F. Diss; the latter resigned his position in 1898 to participate in the Spanish-American war, being sent to the Philippines as first lieutenant of Battery D, Heavy Artillery. Mr. Pfeiffer continued to serve under the new appointee, J. B. Parzett, until the following fall, when he was nominated on the Republican ticket for the office of county clerk, and in the election that followed receiving the preference of the people by a majority of one hundred and seventy-eight votes over the Fusion candidate, J. Stanley Brown. Taking the oath of office January, 1899, he entered upon the duties incumbent upon him and has since discharged them with an efficiency that won for him a renomination and subsequent election in 1892, by the increased majority of eleven hundred and fifty-nine votes over the Democratic candidate, Robert T. Curtis.

In Bonanza, Idaho, Mr. Pfeiffer was united in marriage with Miss Kathyrine Spahn, a native of that state, and a daughter of Michael Spahn, formerly a cattle and mining man of Idaho. She is a woman of culture and education, being a graduate of an institution of Salt Lake. Besides his official interests Mr. Pfeiffer is the owner of a sixteen acre orange grove. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Elks, being a charter member of the Redlands Lodge No. 183, B. P. O. E.; was made a Mason in San Bernardino Lodge No. 348, F. & A. M., now holding membership with Keystone Lodge No. 56, R. A. M., San Bernardino Commandery No. 23, K. T., and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles. He is a member and past president of Redlands Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West.

E. RIGHETTI is one of the many Swiss-Americans who represent their mother country's aptitude along dairying lines in Santa Barbara county. He was born in Switzerland, May 8, 1865, a son of Peter Righetti, who had the good fortune to achieve political and general influence, as well as to hold all of the local offices of importance in his home town. He married Mary Tognazzi, reared a family of nine children, all of whom are living, and five of whom are in California. He attained the age of seventy-five years, his wife living to the age of seventy-eight years.

E. Righetti was sixteen years old when he immigrated to the new world, coming to San Luis Obispo county direct from New York, which he reached during the summer of 1881. After four years of training under a well known San Luis Obispo dairyman he moved to Santa Cruz and engaged in the same occupation about three years, or until locating on the ranch he has occupied for the past thirteen years, near Orcutt, Santa Barbara county. This property contains three thousand acres, of which about one hundred acres are under grain, and the balance in pasture. Of the five hundred head of cattle, one hundred and fifty are milch cows, and the raising of hogs also adds to his income. In addition to dairying and stock raising, he manufactures one hundred and forty pounds of butter daily.

Fraternally Mr. Righetti belongs to the Odd Fellows' lodge at Guadaloupe. In 1890 he joined the Guadaloupe lodge of Masons, since absorbed by the Santa Maria lodge, and of which he has served as junior warden. In 1893 he became a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. In 1893 Mr. Righetti was united in marriage to Lelia Pezzoni, a native of San Luis Obsipo county, and of the union there are five children: Alfred, Edith, Tilden, Ernest and Leo.

WILLIAM RINEBARGER, of Ventura county, is now engaged in farm pursuits near Somis. Wayne county, Ohio, is Mr. Rinebarger's native place, and December 27, 1847, the date of his birth. His parents, Michael and Susanna (Miller) Rinebarger, were natives of Ohio and spent their entire lives in that state, where the father industriously engaged in farm pursuits. His wife died in 1869 at sixty-nine years of age, but he was spared to the age of eighty-three years. In his large family he had sons who were unusually courageous, self-reliant and patriotic, and he was proud of their faithful service in the Union army during the Civil war. Two of the sons, George and Lee, enlisted in the Forty-sixth Ohio Regiment and served practically through the entire period of the struggle. Thomas was a member of the Fifty-fifth Ohio Regiment and Henry also served with a company of Ohio soldiers. Nor was the fifth son, William, less patriotic than his brothers, for he, too, offered his services to the Union, was accepted as a member of the One Hundred and Forty-sixth Illinois Infantry in which he rendered faithful service for one year and three months, being honorably discharged at Springfield, Ill., the expiration of his term of service.

Immediately after his discharge from the army William Rinebarger secured employment as a brakeman on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, and in due course of time was promoted to be conductor on a through freight from Fort Wayne to Crestline. At the expiration of five years he resigned from the railway employ and turned his attention to farm pursuits in Illinois, later removing to an Iowa farm and still later becoming a resident of Kansas. In many respects the climate of these states proved unsatisfactory and for that reason he was led to remove to California in 1889, since which time he has engaged in ranching in Ventura county. Before leaving his early Ohio home to make his way in the world he had formed the acquaintance of Miss Mary E. Spoon, an estimable young lady who was born and reared in Ohio. When ready to establish a home of his own they were married at Wyandotte, July 3, 1867, since which time they have shared each other's joys and sorsows and have labored for their mutual welfare. They have two children. The daughter, Daisy E., married J. F. Fulkerson and lives in Fairview valley; the son, Oscar James, at this writing is in the Santa Paula high school. During the period of his residence in Iowa Mr. Rinebarger was initiated into Allerton Lodge No. 310, I. O. O. F., at Allerton, Wayne county, and for thirty-three years or more he has affiliated with that fraternity.

WILLIAM NEWEL SEAMAN. The business interests of Long Beach have in Mr. Seaman an able representative, his connection as president with the Peoples Ice & Storage Co. resulting in the material development of this enterprise. He is a native of New York City, his birth having occurred in that place September 20, 1862. His father, Luther Seaman, was born in Central, N. Y., and died in New York City, as did also his mother, formerly Lide Thompson, whose death occurred in 1905. They were the parents of two children, Myron D. being a horticulturist of Yates county. William N. Seaman was reared in Yates county, N. Y., receiving his preliminary education through an attendance of the public schools, after which he attended Watkins academy at Watkins Glenn, then known as Penn Yan. In young manhood he engaged in the bakery and confectionery business, in which occupation he continued until 1899; disposing of his interest at that date he located in Marshall, Minn., where he purchased hotel Atlantic and successfully conducted the same for a period of four years. Deciding to locate upon the Pacific coast he came to Los Angeles in 1893 and followed the confectionery business at No. 322 Broadway. After five and one-half years he became interested in the real estate business, and in June, 1903, located in Long Beach, where he has since remained, a prominent factor in the upbuilding enterprises. He not only organized this company known as the Peoples Ice and Cold Storage Company, but through him it has been built up to its present lucrative proportions, their work at the beginning being carried on with one horse and wagon, while they now operate five large wagons and three single rigs, with a pay roll from $1,000 to $1,500 per month. This enterprise was incorporated in 1904 with W. N. Seaman as president, P. Gallagher as vice-president, and W. L. Beach as secretary. The following year they erected an ice plant at a cost of $19,000, thoroughly modern and up to date in every particular, well equipped, and capable of producing twenty tons of ice per day. They also bought out the Long Beach Ice Company in 1895, adding its patronage to their own. The entire plant of this firm is valued at $50,000, their business, which is constantly increasing through shipments to San Pedro, Wilmington, Terminal and other adjacent points, requiring an increase in capacity each year.

Mr. Seaman resides in Los Angeles, his home being presided over by his wife, formerly Lizzie Emery, a native of Adrian, Mich., with whom he was united in marriage in Yates county, N. Y. She is a sister of Robert B. Emery of Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Seaman are the parents of one daughter, Bessie M. Mr. Seaman is a member of the lodge No. 440, W. O. W., of Long Beach, and is also affiliated with the Knights of Pythias lodge of Marshall, Minn. He is a member of the Episcopal Church in his religious connections. He is a progressive and enterprising citizen, taking a deep interest in all matters of civic importance. He votes the Republican ticket, but in local affairs seeks the development of the men and measures he considers best calculated to advance the general welfare.

J. D. RUIZ was born where he now lives, near Santa Maria, March 19, 1870, and is one of the nine surviving children in a family of eleven. His parents, Juan B. and Rita (Ontiveros) Ruiz, were born in California, and the latter is a native of Los Angeles county. The parents own and live on the old homestead where the greater part of their married life has been spent. J. D. first attended the public schools of Santa Barbara county, afterward entering St. Mary's College, at Oakland, from which institution he returned to the ranch. The land is adapted to fruit, grain and beans, and for many years these products have been regarded as its stable output.

In 1891 J. D. Ruiz married Dolores Yorba, a native of Orange county. The two children of Mr. and Mrs. Ruiz died in infancy. Mr. Ruiz is an active Republican, and has held the office of constable for four years. He is a member of the Catholic Church.

WILLIAM G. WATSON. Numbered among the respected and esteemed citizens of Glendale is William G. Watson, a man of undoubted ability and integrity, distinguished for his honorable record as a brave soldier in the Civil war, and for his upright and honest business transactions. Industrious and thrifty, he has labored with diligence in the various occupations with which he has been identified, and has met with signal success. A native of England, he was born December 4, 1842, in Yorkshire, where his father, James Watson, and his grandfather, were life-long farmers.

Growing to man's estate in his native land, William G. Watson received but limited educational advantages. When young he learned the glass blower's trade, which he followed a few years, but the work did not agree with him. Giving it up, he came, in 1863, to America on account of his health, and for a few months after his arrival was employed in the coal mines of Mauch Chunk, Pa. In 1864 he enlisted in Company M, One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. With his company he was at the front in the siege of Petersburg, and with it was the first over the line when the entrenchments were captured. He was subsequently present, with his regiment, at the surrender of General Lee, after which he took part in the Grand Review, at Washington, D. C. Being shortly afterwards mustered out of service, he resumed work at the coal mines in which he had formerly been employed. Subsequently going to Texas, he was for a time engaged in shipping fruit from Houston and Sherman. In 1876 he came to the Pacific coast, locating in Pasadena, where he bought land, and for eight years conducted a meat market. Going from there to Elsinore, Riverside county, he took up a government claim, proved up on it, and afterwards sold at an advantageous price. He subsequently lived for a few years in Verdugo, owning a farm there, and for eleven years being engaged in ranching and in mercantile pursuits, owning and operating a meat market, of which he subsequently disposed. With his sons he is now engaged in raising nursery stock, mostly citrus trees and palms. Another profitable venture was the erection of a business block at the corner of Fourth street and Glendale avenue.

In Texas Mr. Watson married Alice Nelson, and of their union seven children have been born, namely: James Joy, Thomas W., Mrs. Emma J. Reed, Mrs. Ida Ella Jones, Mary, Alice and Nettie. For forty-five years Mr. Watson has been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been superintendent of the Sunday school for many years and is now teaching a large Bible class. Politically he is a strong Prohibitionist. Coming to the state on account of lung trouble in 1876, Mr. Watson has completely overcome the difficulty and is now well and hearty.

GEORGE A. WILLIAMS. The commercial enterprise of which Mr. Williams is the sole proprietor ranks among the most important in San Pedro. The establishment of a furniture and general house-furnishing store here has proved a fortunate undertaking, and he now carries the largest stock in this vicinity, it being valued at $5,000. In connection with the store there is also a warehouse for the storage of surplus goods.

George A. Williams was born in Kendallville, Noble county, Ind., October 27, 1859. His father, William Williams, was a New Englander by birth, born in Massachusetts, and by trade was a machinist and foundryman. Removing from the east to Indiana before the birth of his son, he carried on his trade there for awhile, but during the early boyhood of the latter located for a short time in Missouri. Still later he crossed the plains to Colorado, which was his last earthly home. His wife, who bore the maiden name of Lydia Drown, was a native of Michigan, and died when their son was an infant. The other child born of their marriage was a daughter, who is now the wife of J. K. Christie, of San Pedro.

As his parents removed from Indiana before he was of school age, Mr. Williams attended the schools of Missouri after the family located in that state, and subsequently took a course in Adrian College, in Michigan. After his graduation he mastered telegraphy, and for about nineteen years thereafter followed it in connection with railroading, his duties taking him to points all over Missouri, Kansas and Colorado. It was not until November of 1903 that he first touched foot on California soil, going at that time to San Jose and remaining for three months. His identification with San Pedro dates from December, 1903, when he purchased the nucleus of his present large and flourishing store. He has demonstrated his satisfaction with the town as a place of residence by the purchase of a home for his family, besides which he owns a number of vacant lots.

A marriage ceremony celebrated in Missouri in 1882 united the destinies of George A. Williams and Lida Burns, the latter a native of the Empire state, and two children have been born to them, Clarence A., who assists his father in the store, and Agnes. Mrs. Williams is a communicant in the Roman Catholic Church, toward the support of which her husband contributes. As a Republican he is true to the principles which he believes to be right and votes for the candidates of that party at each and every election. Various fraternal organizations claim Mr. Williams' membership, among them being the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

JOHN A. VAN WINKLE of Hemet was born October 14, 1844, in Carthage, Hancock county, Ill., the son of John A. and Annie Miller Van Winkle, both parents being of Holland Dutch descent and members of old New York families. The father located in Hancock county, Ill., where he died when his son was six months old, and at nine years the lad was also deprived, by death, of a mother's care. Of the seven children in the family four sons are now living, the oldest, Abraham, having served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil war.

The school advantages of John A. Van Winkle were exceedingly limited, for upon the death of his mother he was obliged to make his own way in the world. He was an ambitious youth, however, and spent his evenings in study, thus acquiring a very considerable amount of book knowledge at the same time that he was learning the broom maker's trade. When nineteen years old he joined an overland party, which after encountering the Indians and driving them away landed Mr. Van Winkle safely in Montana, where for over three years he engaged in gold mining, pursuing operations at Helena, Virginia City and Boise City, Idaho. He then returned to Illinois and after his marriage located in Nebraska, where he bought school land in Johnson county and endeavored to farm. This was, however, during the grasshopper years in that state and his crops were destroyed completely by these insects. Accordingly he left the country and settled in Clinton, Mo., and engaged in the manufacture of brooms at that point and for twelve years carried on the business very successfully. For the two years following he worked in the lead mines at Joplin, Mo., but met with unsatisfactory results and again decided to take up the broom manufacturing business, this time locating a factory at Beloit, Kan. After five years he decided to build a steam plant and as his health was poor he took a partner to assist him with the work. In this respect he was very unfortunate, for while Mr. Van Winkle was sick the man secured the money that was in the bank, sold the factory stock and left a five hundred dollar debt for Mr. Van Winkle to pay.

For a time he engaged in clerking, but was advised by his physician to employ himself at outside work, and he secured employment on the section for a time at a dollar and a quarter a day. Finally a neighbor sold him some broomcorn at one cent a pound. As he had one machine saved from the wreck of his former business he succeeded in making two dozen brooms a day, his wife sewing them, and thus they managed to get along until fall, when he was made foreman of the section gang. Upon the occasion of the big washout at Downs he was sent to that point, but the position requiring Sunday labor he resigned, and although importuned by his employers to remain refused to sacrifice his principles in the matter for the sake of the work. Again engaging in the broom manufacturing, backed in the venture by the banker of his home town, he built up a large trade, shipping brooms to many different points, and managed to accumulate considerable money. Finally removing his factory to St. Joseph he operated it there for eleven years and then sold it to go to Auburn, Neb., and engage in merchandising.

His arrival in California dates from 1895, when he bought a twenty-acre fruit ranch on the mesa near San Jacinto, which he lost after two years of unsuccessful work on the place. Still possessing a small property in the east he traded this for a twenty-acre ranch on Florida avenue, Hemet, then valued at twelve hundred dollars, and he has been residing on that place ever since. He gradually improved the holding and it is now considered one of the finest places in that section. In 1900 he started a general merchandising business in Hemet, located on Harvard street under the name of The Van Winkle Mercantile Company, but two years later he disposed of this business and has since devoted his whole time to the conduct of his ranch, having added thirty acres to his original purchase. He has a large variety of fruits, including oranges, apricots, peaches, etc., and grows some general farm crops. He raised the first broomcorn ever grown in the Hemet valley and also manufactured the first brooms ever made there.

Mr. Van Winkle was married in Illinois to Miss Emily J. Clark, who was born in Virginia, and they are the parents of two children: Louis Elliot, living in Canada; and Alva C., of Hemet. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and politically affiliates with the Prohibitionist party. He is an active member of the Methodist Church.

COL. WILLIAM JOEL WITHERS. Early in the period of the development of the south the Withers family became prominent in its history and influential in its material development. The plantation of Wyatt Withers in Virginia was the scene of many delightful gatherings of family, friends and men and women of note, and beneath the shadow of its broad galleries wit and humor, beauty and charm gave wings to the swift-passing hours. In this home was born and reared Lewis, a son of Wyatt; educated amid such influences and surroundings it was natural that he should become a musician, a litterateur and a cultured southern gentleman, whose society was sought by men famed in art and literature. For many years he made his home at Hopkinsville, Christian county, Ky., but his death occurred at Egg's Point, on the Mississippi, where his brother-in-law, Ned Richardson, had a cotton plantation that was the largest in the world, with the sole exception of one owned by the Khedive of Egypt.

The marriage of Lewis Withers united him with Janette Smith, daughter of Joel Smith, a planter of Pittsylvania county, Va., where she was born and reared. Her death occurred in Virginia. The only child of that union was William Joel, born at Danville, Va., October 1, 1842, and reared on a Kentucky plantation. While he was a student in Woodward University in Kentucky the Civil war began and he promptly enlisted in the First Regiment of Kentucky Cavalry, serving in Tennessee and Virginia until the close of the war. Shortly after the close of the war he married Miss Sallie Polk Shipp, a native of Kentucky, and they established their home in Christian county, Ky., where he engaged in agricultural and business pursuits. His service in the war and his ability as a man led to his becoming a prominent factor in local Democratic politics, and three terms his party triumphantly elected him mayor of Hopkinsville, which office he filled satisfactorily to all, irrespective of party ties.

After having spent the year 1887 in Pueblo, Colo., Colonel Withers came to California the following year, and visited for a few weeks in San Diego. From there he removed to Redlands, where he bought and sold real estate. Shortly after the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands he and his son went to Honolulu and embarked in the business of shipping fine horses, cattle and all kinds of domestic animals, as well as machinery, from the United States to Hawaii. At the expiration of thirteen months he effected the organization and incorporation of the Honolulu Stockyards Company, to whom he sold his interest in the business, and then became their Pacific coast agent, with headquarters in San Francisco. A year later the plant was destroyed by fire, entailing upon himself and son a loss of $47,000, and bringing a sudden termination to a previously profitable enterprise.

Returning to Redlands Colonel Withers bought several orange groves and he still owns a grove there of eighteen acres, where he makes his home. During 1905 he embarked in the manufacture of cement block, and artificial stone, establishing a factory at San Bernardino, where he operates the plant with a Model block and concrete machine and an electric motor. Since starting in business he has built several residences and the Cudahy cold storage plant at San Bernardino. The factory is an important addition to the commercial and manufacturing enterprises of the region, and its steady growth is predicted by those who are familiar with the owner's energy and superior mental qualities.

Through all of his life stanchly devoted to the Democratic party, Colonel Withers still takes an active part in local political affairs and at this writing acts as vice-chairman of the county central committee. Reared in the Episcopalian faith, he long has been a generous contributor to that denomination and now officiates as senior warden of St. John's Episcopal Church in San Bernardino. His wife was a daughter of Col. William Shipp, a personal friend of Andrew Jackson and James K. Polk, and she was named in honor of Sarah Polk, with whom she spent considerable time in her girlhood. Two children blessed the union of Colonel and Mrs. Withers. The son, William Shipp Withers, is a graduate of Cumberland University, the University of Virginia and the University of Michigan, and now is a member of the firm of Zombro, Payne & Withers, dealers in stocks, bonds and real estate, in Los Angeles. The daughter, Jennie Elizabeth, was graduated from the Stanford University and is the wife of F. S. Stowell, of Hopkinsville, Ky.

JERRY SHEEHY, an extensive dairyman, stock and bean raiser has occupied and managed his present ranch near Nipomo, San Luis Obispo county, since the fall of 1878. His entrance upon the really promising part of his career dates from the summer of 1870, when he arrived in New York harbor in the steerage of an Atlantic liner, a youth of twenty-two. His educational chances had been meager, and his knowledge of agriculture confined to the old time methods in vogue on the small tenantry farm of his parents, James and Elizabeth (Reggan) Sheehy, where he was born December 12, 1848.

From New York Mr. Sheehy came to Monterey county, Cal., having crossed the continent on the overland railroad which proved one of the signal achievements of 1870. Finding work on a ranch he remained in that county five years, then going to near Guadaloupe, Santa Barbara county, where in due time he rented land and ranched on his own responsibility. In the fall of 1878 he rented the property, which he now occupies, and to the ownership of which he eventually succeeded, the ranch comprising twelve hundred and fifty acres. His average yield of beans is about ten sacks a year, and he breeds high grade stock, and conducts a model dairy.

In 1883 Mr. Sheehy was married in Ireland and to himself and wife nine children were born; John, Lizzie, Gerald, Daniel, Annie, Katie, Ella, Edward and Clara. A Democrat in politics, Mr. Sheehy has served as a member of the board of education, and has otherwise contributed to the local success of his party. In religion he is identified with the Roman Catholic Church at Nipoma.

JAMES SWINFORD of San Pedro, a son of John and Margaret (Martin) Swinford, both natives of Scotland, the father died in that country when James was a lad of three years; the mother later came to the United States, her death occurring in this country several years ago. James Swinford was born May 28, 1845, in Glasgow, in which city the first ten years of his life were spent. At that age he went to sea, shipping as cabin boy, the vessels upon which he sailed being engaged in Mediterranean and African trade. He met with many exciting and some distressing experiences having at one time been on a vessel which was wrecked in the Bay of Biscay.

In 1864 Mr. Swinford came to the United States and located in Wayne county, Pa., later removing to Luzerne county, where he followed mining for several years, subsequently engaging in lumbering at Lehigh Summit. Attracted by the opportunities said to be found in California in 1868 he decided to come to this state and traveling via Panama reached San Francisco in that year. For several years he was occupied as a bridge builder on the Southern Pacific railroad and later secured a position as engineer on a steamboat. Following this he entered the employ of the Pacific Coast Dredge Company in 1882 coming to this point with them and continuing the connection for fifteen years during which time he was superintendent in charge of the machinery. Resigning from this work he next engaged in business for himself and began dealing in lime and cement, continuing until 1898 when he disposed of the business. He is now the owner of considerable property and possesses a nice home on Fifth street. His marriage in San Francisco united him with Miss Catherine Nihan, a native of Ireland, and they have become the parents of one child, John, who now resides in San Francisco. Mrs. Swinford is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and an enthusiastic worker in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of which she is a member. Fraternally Mr. Swinford affiliates with the Redmen lodge, and politically is independent in principles and the casting of his ballot.

THOMAS STEWART. About thirty-three miles from Highland, San Bernardino county, Holcomb valley lies nestled among the mountains. Judged by those who are in a position to know this is conceded to be one of the richest mining regions in the state, the entire valley being rich in placer gold, which averages eighty-five cents to the cubic yard. The fact that Mr. Stewart, who is an expert on mines and mining, and knows the value of ore of all kinds, has remained here for twelve years speaks more eloquently than can words of the real worth of mining values in this part of the country. With his partner, W. E. Pedly, he is interested in both placer and quartz mining, the former being under the special charge of Mr. Pedly, while the quartz mining is Mr. Stewart's special interest. Adjoining Holcomb valley on the north Mr. Stewart has developed four mines on the Big Bertha mountain, and south of the valley he also has mining property on Big Bear Creek lake. While the rock averages from $10 to $14 per ton, assays made from the different holes in it have run as high as $100 per ton.

Thomas Stewart is a Canadian by birth, born in Ontario in 1868. He was given a good education in the public schools of his home town, after which he attended a business college for a time. His school days over, he began to till the soil, a vocation to which he had been trained from his earliest years, and this he followed until 1894, the year with which he became identified with California and more particularly with Holcomb valley. His course lay along the southern route, to Mohave and from there to Colton, and finally to Victorville, in Holcomb valley, which has ever since been the scene of his active labors. With his partner he first bought one claim, in the mountains, and later located three more, all of which prospects have been developed sufficiently to prove them of considerable value. The Cressida has been bored to the extent of one hundred and fifty feet in the hill, while the shaft of the Roosevelt measures sixty-five feet. The Troy mine is in about eighty feet and the Herlick has been bored to the depth of one hundred feet. All of the foregoing are under the direct supervision of Mr. Stewart, besides which he has three other prospects under way, though they have not been developed to the same extent as those mentioned. When Mr. Stewart and his partner came here in 1894 they employed fifty men in their mines, and judging from present indications the season of 1906-07 will find a force twice as large necessary to carry out the plans which they now have in view.

Mr. Stewart has never married, and is living alone on his property in Holcomb valley. He is a son of Andrew and Jessie (McFarlane) Stewart, both of whom were born in Canada.

ROBERT TALLMAN of San Diego, a son of William Tallman, was born August 22, 1860, in Albany, N. Y., the fourth child in order of birth of a family of six children. A native of the Empire State, William Tallman learned the trade of a carpenter when young, and for several years was employed as a contractor and builder in Albany. He subsequently removed to Michigan, settling in Cheboygan, where he lived a short time. Not satisfied with his prospects in that place, he returned to New York state, and from that time until his death, which occurred in 1866, he was a resident of Watertown. He married Mathilda Boyd, who was born in Ireland, and died in New York state, in 1901, at the age of seventy-four years.

Brought up by his widowed mother in New York state, Robert Tallman began as a boy to earn his living, working chiefly on a farm. In 1878, before attaining his majority, he went to Minnesota in search of a favorable opening, and having learned the lathing trade followed it in the cities of Brainerd, Saint Paul and Minneapolis, living in that state seven years. Coming to the Pacific coast in 1885, Mr. Tallman remained in San Francisco a year, and then, in 1886, located in San Diego. Resuming his trade, he has since carried on a thriving business as a contracting lather, in the busy seasons keeping from eight to twelve men busily employed.

In Brainerd, Minn., Mr. Tallman married Cora Mays, who was born in New Hampton, Iowa, a daughter of John Mays, now a resident of San Diego, and of their union three children have been born, namely: Florence, Maude and Burton. Politically Mr. Tallman is a stanch supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Fraternally he united with the Odd Fellows at Salt Lake, and is now a member of Sunset Lodge No. 328, I. O. O. F.; of San Diego Encampment; of San Diego Canton; and of the local lodge of the Daughters of Rebekah, of which Mrs. Tallman is past grand. He also belongs to San Diego Court, I. O. F.

GEORGE E. THOMPSON. Since coming to California in the fall of 1889 George E. Thompson has not only recognized the opportunities by which he has been surrounded, but he has taken advantage of them, to the end that he has become known throughout the southern part of San Bernardino and Los Angeles counties as a contractor and builder of considerable note. Upon locating in Long Beach in 1902 he started a planing mill at Nos. 6 and 7 East Third street having purchased the latter property. From the beginning Mr. Thompson's business increased so rapidly that it soon became evident that he could not handle it alone with justice to himself, and in May, 1905, he admitted H. George Cooley as a partner, the latter purchasing a half interest in the business. While Mr. Thompson was alone in the work he gave his attention more especially to contracts in the business district of the town, but since his association with Mr. Cooley the residence district has received an impetus along building lines which has made the name of Cooley & Thompson well known. Some idea of the scope of business may be gathered from the fact that the last half year's work in 1905, the twenty-five jobs which they handled involved a money transaction of $37,000.

Mr. Thompson was born in Burn, Wis., a village of the Fox river, October 26, 1871, but while he was still a young child his parents removed to Iowa, and he was therefore reared in Belle Plaine, Benton county, that state. After a brief education in the public schools, at the age of twelve years he became an apprentice to the carpenter's trade, and in due course of time was pronounced a competent journeyman. However, he did not take up work at his trade at once, but instead was interested in the photographing business for a year. From time to time he had heard considerable about the glowing prospects in California and he determined to look into them for himself before deciding to settle in business permanently in the middle west, where his chances for success did not seem as glowing. Going to Ontario, San Bernardino county, in 1889, he worked as a journeyman carpenter for five years, after which, with a partner, a flourishing contracting business was carried on for eight years. During this time he assisted in the erection of one hundred and twenty buildings in that town. In all Mr. Thompson was interested in Ontaria as a contractor and builder for thirteen years, coming to Long Beach at the end of that time.

He has erected three brick blocks in the mean time, the Wingard block, and the Gaines block besides two churches and a cannery, in all of which he has used sixteen car-loads of lumber. While in Ontario he had owned a planing mill, which he found to be quite an essential adjunct to his business as contractor, and he established a mill in Long Beach in 1902, upon property which he had purchased at Nos. 6 and 7 East Third street.

While a resident of Ontario, San Bernardino county, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage with Miss Ida Arnold, a native of Oregon, and one daughter, Ruby, has been born to them. The family have a pleasant residence at No. 711 East Third street, this being the second house which Mr. Thompson has erected for his own use. Politically. he favors Republican principles, and he is a member of the Fraternal Aid.

OZRO C. TRIPP, one of the earliest settlers in Riverside county, came to San Jacinto when but two families, the Picos and Estudilloa, were living there and when there was but one small store in that section. He has been one of the prime movers in the development of the country and owns a fine home and six or seven hundred cattle. His parents, Samuel Valtumer and Rosa (Ramsey) Tripp, the former a native of New York, and the latter of Ohio, came to California in 1846, having crossed the plains by pack train and locating in Shasta county. Mr. Tripp running a pack train from the mining camps located there to San Francisco. He was a bricklayer by trade, and in Los Angeles worked at that employment. In 1860 he went to San Bernardino and built the first jail there, constructed of stone, and located where the court house now stands. He also worked on the old brick winery and many other first brick buildings at that place. Twelve years later moved to San Jacinto, which was then a cattle, horse and sheep country, and settling in the upper end of the valley with Colonel Hamner assisted in constructing the first ditch from the San Jacinto river. He removed to Temecula and engaged in farming, his death occurring at San Jacinto in 1892 at the age of sixty-four years. Mrs. Tripp died at San Bernardino.

March 21, 1859, Ozro C. Tripp was born in Los Angeles and was educated through the medium of the public schools of San Bernardino and San Jacinto. There were four children in the family, his oldest brother, S. A., being a blacksmith at San Jacinto, a younger brother, W. B., who is engaged in the butchering business at Hemet and San Jacinto, and Edith, a sister, who is married to Putman Reed a cattleman of Sage. Mr. Tripp is engaged in the cattle business, and owns a slaughter house at San Jacinto, where he conducts a butchering business. The country in which he spent the greater part of his lifetime has been made famous through Helen Hunt Jackson's novel, Ramona, many of her scenes being laid in this section, and Mr. Tripp feels a special interest in the incidents of the story, because he was the first man on the grounds after the killing of Alessandro, and he owns the valley in which the tragedy occurred. His father was justice of the peace at that time and went to the scene of the crime to hold an inquest over the body of the dead man, but it had been buried before his arrival. He was designated as Judge Wells in the story, and the man who did the killing was Sam Temple, in the book called Farrer. The marriage of Mr. Tripp occurred in San Jacinto, in 1884, when Miss Martha Logston, a daughter of J. M. Logston, an early settler who still lives in San Jacinto, became his wife. They are the parents of three children, Walter, Chester and Clyde. Mr. Tripp is a director in the National Bank of San Jacinto, fraternally affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America, and politically is an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, being at the present time a nominee of his party for supervisor of the Fifth Supervisoral District. He is a man who is popular in the community and takes a leading interest in all matters relating to the public welfare.

JACQUES TISNERAT, was born in Bellocq, Basses-Pyrenees, France, January 23, 1852, the oldest of the eleven children born to his parents, Jean and Anna (Dartigueperyron) Tisnerat, who as farmers spent their entire lives in France. Seven of their children are living, and of these five are in the United States.

The eldest of his parents' large family, Jacques Tisnerat was well trained in the duties of farm work and proved a valuable assistant to his father in the management of the homestead farm. During his boyhood he was privileged to attend the common schools in the vicinity of his home, interspersing his studies with work on the farm, until in later years, having formed domestic ties he established a farming enterprise of his own. Leaving his wife and children in France he came to the United States in 1886, his object being to establish a home in the new world and then send for his family. He first went to St. Peter, Minn., there as in other points in the middle west to which he went, being employed at any honest labor that presented itself. Thus far his prospects had not been very bright, and upon his arrival in Pomona in 1887 he could lay claim to but thirty cents. However, his removal to the west was the beginning of a brighter dawn, and though as heretofore he had to accept the first work that offered, the prospect of an advance in position was an incentive to renewed efforts. After working as a farm hand for some time on the ranch of Mr. Coney, who was then consul to Mexico, he was finally made superintendent of the ranch, a position which he held for seven or eight years. A desire to become an independent land-holder was the means of his relinquishing this position and about the same time he purchased the nucleus of his present ranch near Pomona. On this one acre tract he set out a small garden and also established a winery, later adding to his acreage by the purchase of twenty-nine acres on East Cemetary avenue, two miles east of Pomona, and just over the line in San Bernardino county. Here he set out a fine vineyard, and notwithstanding the fact that he is not exempt from frost, picks one hundred tons of grapes per season from his vineyard.

In France Mr. Tisnerat was married to Miss Maria Serres, who was also a native of Basses-Pyrenees, and five children have been born to them, Peter, Eunice, Jennie, Eugene and Annie, all of whom are at home with their parents, on South Thomas street. The family are members of the Reformed Church of Pomona, and in his political affiliations Mr. Tisnerat is a Republican. While in his native country he served in the French army for five years as a member of the Eighth Cavalry, Fifth Squadron.

JOHN B. B. LELONG. The life which this narrative sketches began in the city of Los Angeles May 11, 1852, and closed in the county of the same name May 11, 1905. The LeLong family is of French extraction, Martin LeLong having been born and reared in France, whence he came to America in early manhood and settled in the then Spanish town of Los Angeles. After coming to this city he met and married Miss Josephine Alinez, a native of California, but of direct Spanish descent. The remaining days of his life were passed in this locality and here he passed away at the age of forty-nine years. Among his children was a son, John B. B., whose name introduces this article, and who remained a lifelong resident of the county of his birth. Educated principally in St. Vincent's school in Los Angeles, he gained a knowledge of both French and Spanish, and used these languages in preference to the English language, with which he was less familiar.

When a young man and ready to start out for himself, Mr. LeLong received from his mother thirty-two acres of bare, unimproved land, then of little value. Through his efforts the land was made attractive, the soil produced excellent crops of their various kinds, improvements were made that greatly added to the desirability of the place as a homestead, and all in all the tract was transformed from its original appearance to an abode of comfort and simple content. Immediately before settling on the ranch he was married, February 8, 1875, to Miss Julia Ruiz, who was born in Los Angeles January 25, 1855, and received a fair education in the Spanish tongue. Her father, Martin Ruiz, was a native of Chihuahua, Mexico, and a son of a Spanish gentleman who came to the new world as a representative of the king of Spain; her mother, who bore the maiden name of Florence Raildez, was a native of Los Angeles and a member of a Spanish family.

Always interested in educational matters, Mr. LeLong officiated as a school trustee for years and maintained a warm interest in the building of schools. Politically he stanchly supported Democratic principles, while in religion he was an earnest Roman Catholic, and all of his family adhered to the same faith. Fraternally he was a member of the Foresters of America. Surviving him are his widow and the following children: Conception, Mrs. Joseph Cyprien, of Fullerton, this state; Constance, widow of Joseph Toussau, also of Fullerton; Alexander, at home; Jossie, who married Joseph W. Reve, of Los Angeles, her wedding and that of her eldest sister being solemnized on the same day; Charles, who makes his home at Sherman, this state; Ortense, at home; Henry L., who is employed in Los Angeles; Vernie, Mary, Josephine and Barnaby, who remain with their mother on the home ranch.
